Third Ward Member Says He Doesn't Believe In Giving Away Rights —Petition of Neighbors.

When Chairman Gloak, of the street committee, at Monday night's meeting of the Common Council, introduced an ordinance and filed a map which provides for the vacating of Dunham street, a strip of land near the Unitarian church, which has never been opened, the project was stubbornly opposed by Mr. Tyler, who stated that in his opinion there had been too much of that kind of work this year. Mr. Tyler wanted to know what the city is getting for giving away these rights which may some day be very valuable, and which the city would probably have to pay for dearly.

The member from the Third ward said that the fact that the question does not happen to be a live one, doesn't alter the situation, and if these rights are of value to property-owners they are certainly equally as valuable to the city. He said that unless it could be demonstrated to him that there is a good sound reason for giving away the land, he would oppose the ordinance. He further stated that if an individual owned a similar strip of land and some one wanted to acquire it, there would have to be a consideration or there would be no change of ownership.

Mr. Montgomery arose to explain the situation as he understood it. He said that he had been informed that adjoining property-owners were planning to build and that Mrs. J. R. Truell, of Truell inn, contemplated an addition to that building, but that she was not willing to make a move as long as there is any doubt as to the use of the strip of land in question. The petition to vacate the street was made by Mrs. J. R. Truell, Miss Elvira Lemyre and the Unitarian church, each one owning adjoining property.

Mr. Tyler seemed to be satisfied with the explanation, although he still believed that the Common Council should not be too accommodating in that the improvements are to be made before a right is given. He said that while in this particular instance the vacating of the street might not make much difference, he was opposed to the indiscrimination giving away of such rights.

Mr. Gloak said he was sorry that he was not better informed on the subject, but Mr. Daniel, who was not present, had had the subject in hand and he was willing to stand by his better judgment. At the request of Councilman Charles Randolph, Street Commissioner Gavett made a few remarks, explaining that he understood that there was a flaw in the title to the strip of land in question, the street had never been opened and probably never would be.

Mr. Tyler moved to refer the whole matter back to the street committee for further consideration, but Mr. Gloak objected to this and upon his motion the ordinance was adopted on first and second readings and ordered advertised, Mr. Tyler alone voting no. Monday night, November 5, was the time fixed for a public hearing before final adoption of the ordinance.

The strip of land proposed to be vacated and known as Dunham street, extends between West Seventh and West Eighth streets. It was set apart as a street in 1853, but during that time there was never any effort made to open the street, and at present the fence and buildings on the property are built over the street.

THUM GETTING BETTER; CASE STILL A MYSTERY.

Man Found Unconscious on Greenbrook Road in the Hospital Yet.

Otto Thum, aged forty-two years, employed as a truckman for John Geary and a resident of Plainfield, is still at Muhlenberg Hospital, where he was found in an unconscious condition at Greenbrook road and West End avenue Sunday night by Louis Miller. Miller reported the case to Chief Marshal Weiss, of the borough. The man was removed to the hospital, where he soon regained consciousness and is now reported to be improving.

Thum has no idea how he happened to be at the point where he was found, neither can he give any account as to how he became unconscious. There is not the slightest mark on the man's body to indicate violence or that he was struck by any one. Since entering the hospital he has been perfectly rational and he will probably be discharged soon.

Wheelman Run Down.

John Manley, the insurance man, was run down by a careless coachman, as he was riding his wheel on Park avenue near Fourth street, early this morning. He was thrown beneath the carriage and his left arm was badly bruised. One of the wheels also passed over his right foot and nearly tore the shoe from it. He was assisted to a drug store for treatment.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

GIFTS FOR MR. MANNING

And For the Retiring Secretary's Wife Too at Y. M. C. A.'s Reception.

CO-WORKERS ADDRESSES

William D. Murray, J. W. Gavett and Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck Express Their Appreciation of His Services.

Twenty years of devoted service to the local Y. M. C. A., on the part of J. Harry Manning, who recently resigned his position as general secretary, was appropriately recognized at a farewell reception given in the large hall of the association building, last night. Despite the stormy weather conditions the hall was filled with friends and well-wishers of Mr. Manning, who rejoiced with him in what has been accomplished during his long term and regretted that he has given up his position.

There was a pleasing programme of music by Martin A. Korff and Robert Spier, violins, and Charles Spier, pianist, during the evening, interspersed with short addresses by association workers and the presentation of a handsome gold watch to Mr. Manning, and also one to Mrs. Manning, as tokens of appreciation. The social features of the affair were greatly enjoyed, and the fact that the wives of members were present lent a charm to the reception.

Joseph W. Gavett had charge of the programme, and after a selection by the orchestra, he made a few remarks expressing his appreciation of Mr. Manning and what he had done for him. He also paid deserving tribute to his earnest work for the association, and to prove how vigorously he employed his time he cited an instance at a ball game, in which the association boys were playing an outside team. It was at a critical stage in the contest. Two men were out and the association team wanted one run to win, when Mr. Manning approached Mr. Gavett and asked him if it was time to pass the cards advertising the Sunday afternoon meeting for men.

Mr. Gavett said that he was glad that Mr. Manning was going to remain on the board of directors and still continue his interest in the work. He introduced some pleasantries of a personal nature which were enjoyed by all.

Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, of Trinity Reformed church, was then introduced as representing the pastors of the city, many of whom were present. Dr. Schenck said it gave him great pleasure to speak on behalf of the ministers. He had never considered the association a rival or competitor, but the church at work. He was also pleased to speak of Mr. Manning because of his character; always kind, courteous, obliging and a true Christian with the spirit of the Master. He thought Mr. Manning excelled in the respect that in his faith was found the efficacy of Christ to save. He possessed a good character and a clean, pure noble life and he hoped that God would bless him in the future even more than in the past.

General Secretary H. A. Cozzens, of the Newark Y. M. C. A., was called upon and said that he considered it a privilege to speak concerning Mr. Manning, whom he had known so long, and he extolled his many excellent traits, impressing upon all that he was a manly Christian.

Perhaps the greatest interest was shown in the remarks by William D. Murray, who expressed the joy and sorrow of the occasion; joy that Mr. Manning had rendered such a noble service and sorrow that he had resigned. He was especially able to speak of the retiring secretary because of the twenty years' service he had been president of the association eleven years. He referred to Mr. Manning's self-sacrificing devotion to young men, and also that it was largely due to his efforts that the present building was erected, and he considered it a testimonial to his work.

He said that in his opinion one reason why Mr. Manning had been so successful was that first and foremost he always considered the spiritual work. The work for men was dear to his heart and he knew that everyone would agree with him. At this time Mr. Murray presented to Mr. and Mrs. Manning each a watch and a check for a substantial amount. Both watches are of solid gold handsomely engraved and bear the monogram of the recipient on the outside case. On Mr. Manning's watch was also the association triangle engraved and inside was this inscription: "1889-1906. Presented to John H. Manning by his friends and fellow-workers as a token of their esteem and in recognition of his faithful services for nearly twenty years as general secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, of Plainfield, N. J." This inscription was on the case presented to Mrs. Manning: "Mrs. Clara D. Manning, from the friends and members of the Young Men's Christian Association, Plainfield, N. J., October 9, 1906." Mr. Manning in responding to all the kind words and the gifts, thanked one and all heartily on behalf of his wife and himself. He said that he had heard that if a man could read the inscription on his tombstone he would swear that he had been buried in the wrong grave. He wanted everyone to know that he was very much alive and that it was due to the directors and workers that success had attended his efforts, as well as to Him who giveth power. He paid a tribute to the new general secretary, Kenneth Robbie expressing confidence that the work would be well done in the future.

Then followed a social time and during the evening Mr. and Mrs. Manning attended by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Gavett, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Murray and Dr. Henry M. Maxson, received their many friends and congratulations for future success.

The hall was prettily decorated for the occasion, all of the regular seats being removed and in their place comfortable rockers were used. The platform was decorated with palms, ferns and flowers and large vases were placed about the hall, together with an arrangement of cozy corners and banquet lamps. This work was in charge of the Women's auxiliary which also arranged for the light refreshments. The committee from the association had charge of the reception consisted of William D. Murray, A. B. Beers, O. S. Rogers, Dr. Norman H. Probasco and George M. Rittenhouse. Among those present was Elkanah Drake, of Newark, a veteran worker in the association.

RELATE FUNNY STORIES.

Novel Form of Entertainment at Faith Chapel.

Under the auspices of the King's Daughters and Ladies' Aid Society of Faith chapel, a social and entertainment was held last night. U. B. Crane, chairman of the social committee, was in charge of the programme and he introduced some novel features. He proposed that each one present tell in five minutes a funny story, something that they had read or seen, and the result was very funny. The various stories kept the audience in a perfect uproar of laughter, especially when one of the young men passed up a lemon as his part of the entertainment.

During the evening there were musical selections by Percy Cannon on an ocarina, anthems by the choir and piano duets by Miss Jeter and Miss Conger. After the entertainment refreshments were served by the women, under the direction of Mrs. Valentine Utzinger.

VERDICT, $7,645.13.

L. V. R. R. Must Pay Damages to Fanwood Man.

After six hours' deliberation the jury in the damage suit of James E. Goodman, of Fanwood township, against the Lehigh Valley Railroad, came in at Elizabeth at 11 o'clock last night with a verdict of $7,645.13 for the plaintiff.

Mr. Goodman sued the railroad company, claiming that as the result of sparks from a locomotive his barns were set on fire and destroyed and he sought to recover damages. The trial lasted several days and was bitterly contested.

Report of State Conference.

The October business meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union will be held in the rooms on Madison avenue, on Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at which time Mrs. T. C. Bodine, who attended the recent State convention of the Union, will give a report of that conference.

Will Conduct Bowling Alleys.

"Lou" Wiltse, of this city, the well-known baseball pitcher, has leased the bowling alleys connected with the Somerset Hotel, Somerville, and will conduct them during the winter. As a result of his change in business Mr. Wiltse will move to Somerville.

Mrs. Charles C. Tomkinson and her son, Hoyt, of Grove street, have gone to Harrisburg, Pa., to visit friends.

STEWARDS ELECTED BY WATCHUNG HUNT CLUB

NEW CLUB HOUSE NEAR ISELIN WILL OPEN TOMORROW.

Most of the very long session held by the Watchung Hunt Club at its annual meeting, at the Casino, last night, was devoted to the reading and adoption of new by-laws. The following board of stewards were chosen:

Charles D. Freeman, Iselin; S. A. Cruikshank, Plainfield; Henry A. Bourne, Westfield; Eads G. Schmidt, Morristown; C. E. S. Bellows, Plainfield; Louis G. Treadwell, New York; Chauncey B. Sayre, South Orange; Charles W. Fisk, Plainfield; George C. White, Glen Ridge; Lewis E. Waring, Dr. M. O'M. Knott, Plainfield. The stewards will elect their officers at the next meeting.

The new club house, at Iselin, will be opened tomorrow, for the reception of members and guests. A tea will be held after a run. L. G. Treadwell, E. S. Savage and W. de la R. Anderson are on the house committee.

The club stables will be completed in a short time. Competent men will have them in charge, and hunters will be cared for and exercised there. A shed will be provided for traps, and a separate entrance and parking space for automobiles.

When things get to running according to the full plans of the club, a bus will be run by the organization between the club house and Iselin station, which is about a mile away.

LOCAL HORSE SHOW WILL NOT BE HELD

LACK OF INTEREST AMONG HORSE-OWNERS KILLS THE PROJECT.

Convinced that the exhibition could not be made as big a success as was at first hoped for, the Riding and Driving Club abandoned its plans for the local horse-show, last night. Lack of sufficient interest among horse-owners was officially stated as the reason for the death of the project.

The exhibition was voted out at a meeting of the directors held at the Casino. There was a long discussion before definite action was taken, but early in the session it was seen that no other step would be wise.

The show was to have been held Saturday. There were entries enough after a fashion, but they were scattered in such a way as to kill the prospects of the show as a spectacle. Between forty and fifty entries were filed, but they were not sufficiently diversified to promise any interest at the ringside. The same horses were entered in several classes, and the spectators would have found a monotonous sameness about the exhibition that could only have evoked criticism.

With the local show off their minds, the members have turned all their thoughts to plans for the fourth annual big show next spring. The show will be even bigger than the one of last spring. In anticipation of it, the club has begun to plan the erection of more stables.

Fine Performance by "Gossip."

In the story of the Morristown Field Club horse-show on Monday, reference was made to the hunt club competition in which two teams were entered by the Watchung Hunt Club, of this city. There was an impression that the local horses made a poor showing, when in fact "Gossip," ridden by C. E. S. Bellows, was the only horse that took the jumps clear and clean. He was the rider and horse received favorable comment for the performance. The muddy condition of the ring was a barrier to good work on the part of some of the horses entered.

Young Couple Quietly Wedded.

Samuel J. Bowden, Jr., of West Front street, and Miss Bertha Mercier, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Mercier, of Bergen street, were quietly married, yesterday noon, by Rev. L. R. Howard, pastor of Hope chapel. The ceremony was performed at his home and was attended only by the necessary witnesses. Following a short sojourn at Atlantic City, Mr. and Mrs. Bowden will make their home in the West End. The groom is a machinist by trade.

Franklin Council to Celebrate.

Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., will celebrate its seventieth anniversary in Junior Hall tomorrow night, with a special programme. The council, the oldest in the city, was organized on October 6, 1887, and has steadily increased in membership and influence ever since. Owing to the fact that the anniversary date this year fell on Saturday, it was decided to celebrate on the next meeting night.

ANOTHER VICTIM AT THE FANWOOD "HOODOO" SPOT

MAN BELIEVED TO BE JOHN PINTON KILLED BY ROYAL BLUE EXPRESS.

Stepping out of the way of a freight train directly in front of a Royal Blue express, John Pinton, of either Newark or Berwick, Pa., was instantly killed at the "hoodoo" spot near the Fanwood station, at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. He was struck by the engine and thrown beneath the wheels almost before he realized his danger. The head was severed from the body and it was otherwise badly mangled.

The name of the victim was learned from cards and lodge books found in the pockets of his clothing. They showed that he had recently lived at Berwick and that he had been resident of Newark. He had been there but a short time ago. He wore a gray suit of good material, nearly new patent leather shoes, two suits of underwear and other clothing of good material. Because of the decapitation it was impossible to tell anything about his age but from a picture taken recently and found in the clothes it has been judged at forty.

Pinton was seen walking up the track carrying an umbrella over his head, as it was raining at the time, just when about 100 yards east of the station, he noticed the freight approaching. Without looking about to see what he was doing he stepped over to the west bound passenger track and was hit. The spot is where four men have been killed in less than a year.

SOMERSET FREEHOLDERS HOLD ROUTINE MEETING.

Favorable Report On Application to Mark Line Between North Plainfield and Warren Townships.

At the regular meeting of the Somerset county Board of Freeholders, yesterday, the committee entrusted with the application to establish the line between North Plainfield and Warren townships, reported that favorable action had been taken. At its request, it was ordered that the county road board proceed to have commissioners appointed to survey and mark the division. This action will be taken at once.

The New York and New Jersey Telephone Company applied for permission to lay conduits for cables under the Raritan river at Bonhamtown. Messrs. Bunn, Philbower, Baird and the counsel were appointed to have a contract drawn up for adoption by the board. The application of the same company to lay conduits on the Elm street bridge, this city, was reported favorably. The committee on the Somerville and North Branch road reported favorable action on the Somerville Water Company's application to lay pipes along the thoroughfare.

The bill of $10 from J. H. Cooley, of the borough, for clerical services to the County Board of Taxation, was tabled. The board will meet Friday morning at 10:30 at the Abrams bridge in Montgomery township.

HERSH & BRO. TO BUILD IN PARK AVE. NEAR R. R.

Grocers Purchase Strip of Land from Bolce, Runyon & Co.

L. F. Hersh & Brother, wholesale grocers of Elizabeth and this city, have purchased a strip of land of the Bolce, Runyon & Co., on Park avenue, adjoining the railroad, and they propose to erect a four-story building on the site where they will conduct a wholesale grocery business. The firm originally purchased the property at West Second street and Central avenue, and had plans prepared for the erection of a building there. Difficulty in arranging for a railroad siding led to a change of location.

It is understood that the West Second street property is part of the consideration in the deal with Bolce, Runyon & Co. Inquiry at the office of the company brought forth a denial that it had any dealings with the grocery firm, but that it sold a foot of land, but from another source it was ascertained that the deal was effected by John G. MacLaughlin, who was also the agent for The Plainfield Trust Company, adjoining the Stirling building, where the office will be moved and a driveway to and from the coal and lumber yards will be located.

Judge Cut Claim Down.

A six-man jury in the District Court awarded Aleck Kane, the second-hand lumber dealer, $17 in his suit against William Bohl. Kane sued for $46.05. S. S. Swackhamer appeared for Kane and F. J. Huff for the defendant.

—Lieutenant Berald Ollis, U. S. N., who has been spending several weeks of shore leave at the home of his wife's mother, Mrs. H. M. Runyon, of Arlington avenue, left for his new port at Newport, R. I., yesterday.

RAHWAY WELCOMES VOLUNTEER FIREMEN

CROWDS APPLAUD THE LADDIES IN GREAT PARADE.

Sixty-five exempt firemen from North Plainfield took part in the firemen's parade held at Rahway, yesterday, and it is estimated that several hundred Plainfielders were among the spectators. It was the first parade of the kind Rahway has had in eleven years and the town did everything in its power to make it a banner affair. There were distinguished guests from far and near and Rahway did itself proud in providing such a fine demonstration.

There were firemen from Somerville, Raritan, Allentown, Pa., Perth Amboy, Passaic, Atlantic City, Newark, Bound Brook, White Plains, Elizabeth and other nearby towns and the parade was one of the most creditable ever seen in Rahway or vicinity. Each division was headed by a band, while the Independent Fife and Drum Corps, of this city, had a place in line. It is estimated that fully 10,000 guests of private families were in town for the day and the decorations were very elaborate, every house and store along the line of march being handsomely decorated in honor of the firemen. At noon the general committee entertained the officials and guests from out of town in the Woodruff building, where Mrs. Cowie, wife of Admiral Cowie, and Miss Sara Esterbrook acted as hostesses.

After the parade Protection Hose Company served a banquet in the Rahway Opera House; Lincoln Hook and Ladder Company entertained its guests in a large tent and Franklin Hose Company served a banquet in a hall on Hamilton street. Last night Franklin Hose Company celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary, when a concert was given by the Seventy-first Regiment Band, of New York.

Another feature last night was a Venetian festival on upper Main street, which was held in Cherry street. It is seldom that such a grand display of illumination has been seen and Rahway presented a sight never to be forgotten. There are five volunteer companies in the city and united in arranging the parade and celebration, while George D. Wilson, chief of the department, had general direction of the arrangements.

The borough exempts were under the leadership of Foreman L. B. Bodine and they made a very natty appearance in their neat blue suits.

JOSEPH M. HAWKINS ENDEAVORERS' PRESIDENT.

Park Avenue Baptist Society Elects Officers at Annual Meeting.

Election of officers, reports for the past year, combined with a social hour were the features of the annual meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society held last night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wheaton S. Lowry, of Sherman avenue. The reports were very encouraging, showing an increased membership and growth in interest in the work. The finances for the year were also satisfactory and the prospects for the ensuing year are promising.

These officers and committees were chosen for the coming year:

President, Joseph M. Hawkins; vice-president, Mrs. W. S. Lowry; corresponding secretary, Miss Cora R. Brokaw; recording secretary, Miss Florence G. Hawkins; treasurer, Miss Bessie M. Giles; intermediate superintendent, Mrs. W. S. Lowry; Junior superintendent, Miss Alice Brown.

Lookout Committee—Mrs. W. S. Lowry, chairman; Miss Cora R. Brokaw, Charles VanWinkle, Fred V. L. Goodwin, Miss Jeanie Giles, Miss Elizabeth VanWinkle. Prayer Meeting—Miss Elmira C. Runyon, chairman; William F. Richards, Mrs. Hattie Peney, Miss Mabel A. Treadwell, Nelson VanWinkle. Missionary—Mrs. Charles P. Dayton, chairman; Mrs. A. B. Finn, Miss Louise Harral, Mrs. Nelson VanWinkle, Miss Margaret Moore, Rev. A. E. Finn. Social—Miss Mary Giles, chairman; Irving VanWinkle, Miss Grace Chamberlin, Miss Bessie M. Giles, George E. Hall, Miss Nellie Miner. Flower—Mrs. Charles VanWinkle, chairman; Miss Ethel Lorton, Miss Ethel VanWinkle, Alfred Harral, Miss Nana I. Neilsen, Oliver Ulmer. Music—Miss Violet VanWinkle, chairman; Miss Ethel Lorton, Roland C. Treadwell, Miss Florence G. Hawkins and Charles F. Dayton.

After the business of the evening, the Endeavorers had a social time and refreshments were served.

Society Wedding at Westfield.

Miss Gertrude Wittke, of Westfield, and G. Harold Whitney, son of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. G. H. Whitney, of this city, will be married this evening at the home of the bride in Westfield, by the groom's father. A large number of invitations have been issued to the affair, and many Plainfielders will attend.

LARGE AUDIENCE GREETS MACK AND 'ARRAH-NA-POGUE'

COMEDIAN AFTERWARD ENTERTAINED BY THE KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS.

The efforts of Watchung Council, Knights of Columbus, to bring Andrew Mack to the city, were rewarded by a capacity house at the New Plainfield theatre, last night, when the popular singing comedian appeared with his big company in "Arrah-Na-Pogue." The play deals with life in Ireland at the time of the English oppression and struck a responsive chord in the hearts of sons and daughters of the Emerald Isle who applauded enthusiastically again and again. Mack's singing of "The Wearin' of the Green" with a humming accompaniment, and several other Irish songs was greatly enjoyed.

Following the performance, the council tendered a reception to Mack and members of his company at Knights of Columbus Hall. It was attended by 250 of the Knights, their wives and friends and two hours were passed in a social way. The comedian rendered several songs, Miss Anna Daley also favored, Father Bogan made an address and Armagh O'Donaghed and Earle C. Simmonds, of the company, sang and recited. Miss May Smith acted as accompanist.

The committee from Watchung Council which arranged and had charge of the performance consisted of John J. Kenney, chairman; H. P. Greenwood, Francis J. Blatz, John Traynor and Arthur A. Cannon.

OVER $150,000 RAISED BY WOMEN'S AUXILIARY

MISS EMERY SPEAKS AT HOLY CROSS ON P. E. MISSION WORK.

Despite the stormy weather, twenty women of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, Holy Cross church, met yesterday afternoon in the parish house. The meeting was opened by the rector, Rev. George A. Warner, all joining in the litany for missions.

Miss Emery, from the Church Mission House, New York City, was introduced and spoke at length on the inception of the Woman's Auxiliary, its small beginning and its remarkable growth, as well also of its present strength. The first year's special offering of the women at General Convention was $72; at the last General Convention this united offering was over $150,000. Miss Emery pointed out that the antagonism to and the ignorance concerning missionary effort was in large degree due to lack of information.

The Woman's Auxiliary is now doing its best work, not in packing and sending of missionary boxes, nor in contributing large sums of money, but in the educational sphere where it teaches the need of missionary effort, what has been done and the opportunities to be seized. In this connection Miss Emery spoke of the church publication, "The Spirit of Missions" with its wide grasp on the missionary field—a publication which a prominent Presbyterian has declared to be the finest missionary magazine published.

At the conclusion of Miss Emery's talk a letter from a worker among the Mountain Whites was read. The contents appealed to the women present in such manner that it was decided to obtain a list of hospital supplies needed and the auxiliary attend to furnishing the same.

It was announced that Mrs. J. Bloomfield Beach had accepted the presidency of the auxiliary with freedom to select her own vice president. Miss Nettie Davis has been selected for the position of recording and corresponding secretary with Miss Pearson as assistant. The treasurer has yet to be chosen in place of Mrs. Beach, resigned.

Wheel Wrecked by Track.

With one of the wheels of his wagon caught in the high guard rail of the trolley tracks opposite Voehl's bakery on West Front street, yesterday afternoon, one of Expressman A. E. Hoagland's drivers turned sharply to avoid an approaching rig. The wheel was ripped to pieces and the driver was thrown out, injuring his shoulder. Mr. Hoagland will file a claim for damages with the P. S. C.

Jury Disagreed.

After a two hours' consideration of the evidence, the jury in the case of the Siche Gas Company against W. Warnock, a report of which, up to the time of the counsels' summing up, was in yesterday's papers, were discharged yesterday afternoon, unable to agree. It is said the jury stood seven to five for the defendant. The case will be tried again in two weeks.

THE COMING OF SULZER

What the Appearance of New York Congressman in 5th District Campaign Means.

A REPUBLICAN VIEW

Number of G. O. P. Votes In Plainfield For Farmer Orator Not Likely To Be Unsignificant.

The Newark Evening News, Republican, said editorially yesterday:

"Congressman Sulzer, of New York, is coming to New Jersey to add voice, vigor and vivacity to the campaign in the Fifth Congressional District. He has sent his congratulations to James E. Martine, the Democratic candidate for Congress against Charles N. Fowler, and has offered to speak for him. 'Command me,' he says in the way that Sulzer alone can say it, 'to do anything in my power to further your success in this fight. It is my sincerest hope that you may at last be rewarded for the inestimable and self-sacrificing work on behalf of the party these many years.'

"Mr. Sulzer has given an advance outline of his remarks. He will be delighted to tell the people of the Fifth district Mr. Fowler's record in Congress, and Mr. Martine has promptly accepted Mr. Sulzer's offer. That this subject will be treated in a way to delight the Democratic voters there can be no doubt, and it is even possible that some few Republicans will feel inclined to attend the mass-meetings and hear what the New York Congressman has to say.

"For it ought to be remembered that Congressman Sulzer is a Jerseyman. He was born at Roselle and got his schooling in Elizabeth. He was a Republican in his earlier days, and remained so until he got his eyes open,' and then he became a Tammany Democratic politician. He came very near being an anti-Hearst candidate for Governor of New York State at the recent Buffalo convention, and came out of that disgraceful scrimmage with much more credit than almost any other delegate.

"There is abundant evidence that the Democrats are going to make a very vigorous contest in the Fifth this year, whether with success or not remains to be seen. There is in some parts of the district, and particularly in Plainfield, the home of Mr. Martine, a mingled feeling of sympathy and admiration for the man who has so often and so courageously taken up the burden of hopeless candidacy. They think him to be worthy of better treatment than he has thus far received and do not hesitate to say so. How many actual votes this will obtain for him cannot be foretold, but the number is not likely to be insignificant. The coming of Sulzer, with his impassioned eloquence and burning invective, will undoubtedly add interest to the campaign, and will compel actively on the Republican side."

VETERANS ENTERTAIN WOMEN'S RELIEF CORPS.

Musical Programme and Addresses Combine to Make a Pleasant Evening.

Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. G., provided an entertainment and social for its auxiliary, the Women's Relief Corps, last night, and there was an unusually large attendance of veterans, their wives and sisters. Past Commander I. L. McVey was in the chair and had charge of the programme.

There was stirring addresses by Past Department Commander Lawrence, of New Brunswick, and Past Commander Samuel W. Reese, of Westfield. There were vocal solos by Mrs. John Manley, her sons, Alfred and Raymond Manley, and Miss Mary Smith. Mrs. Manley accompanied the vocalists on the piano. A feature were several popular selections by an orchestra in charge of Dr. Berg. There were several encores.

After the entertainment refreshments were served by a committee of women from the Relief Corps and a social hour followed.

MR. COLBY'S PROGRAM

Leader of Defeated "Idea" to Remain Silent During the Present Campaign.

HE WILL STUDY LAW

Says He Would Vote for Stokes for U. S. Senate If Governor Is Caucus Choice—Record Not a Candidate?

Senator Everett Colby, the new idea representative of Essex county in the New Jersey Senate, in an interview Thursday outlined his plans for the future and explained the stand he will take on issues that will be before the next Legislature, where he will be the lone representative of the reform movement in New Jersey. Mr. Colby announced that from the Newark headquarters the leaders of the new idea will continue their fight for representative government and as soon as the Legislature convenes literature containing brief and succinct information that voters will be interested in will be sent out regularly. Senator Colby will go on extended tour next Monday and will return in two weeks and take up study which will enable him to qualify for admission to the New Jersey Bar. He will study in Sheriff Frank Sommers' office and announced his purpose to practise law in Newark.

"I will take no part in the coming campaign," said the Senator. Asked if his followers would be quiescent, Mr. Colby replied:

"We are all Republicans. It does not follow that a Republican will necessarily vote a straight ticket. Every man will vote as he thinks is right."

As to his stand in the coming session of the Legislature, Mr. Colby said it did not make any difference to him, that he would stand alone. Asked how he would vote in the caucus for United States Senator he replied, "I will not vote for Senator Dryden."

He answered further that he did not think George L. Record was a candidate. Asked for his opinion of Senator Dryden's possible success, he replied: "I suppose if the Republicans win in Essex county, in view of the assistance which I am informed was rendered to the other counties, Senator Dryden's election is assured."

Senator Colby when asked about Governor Stokes' chances of election to the United States Senate said that he felt that if Essex county should go Democratic "the Governor would undoubtedly obtain the Republican caucus nomination." When asked whether if Governor Stokes was the choice of the caucus he would vote for him Senator Colby said he would.

Asked what his course would be in the Legislature, Senator Colby said:

"Every member in the Senate will have to go on record on the planks in our platform. I shall make an effort to get a rule adopted compelling the chairman of every committee to report any bill on the request of twenty per cent. of the members of the Senate. I shall make a special effort to have the promoter's liability act repealed. I shall also try to get a bill passed to allow the people to vote directly for United States Senators and will also try to pass a bill providing for the direct primary."

Asked his opinion of the future of the New Idea in the Republican party, Senator Colby replied:

"The Republican party cannot live on money. It must live through the soundness of its ideas and principles, and the object of the New Idea movement is to make the party once more a party fighting for a principal rather than a party being used by the few who do not, as a rule, represent it."

Speaking of the recent defeat sustained at the primaries, Senator Colby said the people do not understand what a tremendous vote was polled. In Elizabeth, in Senator Kean's home, no district was carried by the regulars by more than twenty majority. "And so far as I know, not a cent was spent by us. The result came from work done by men interested in the New Idea movement. We will continue the fight in every county," he continued. "Already many districts have organizations. Many young men have come forward and offered their active support for next year's campaign."

Senator Colby said that the feature that reached strongest against the New Idea was, in his opinion, the Bishops' bill, "which I voted for on the Senate, and which the machine made me responsible for. I believe in this bill, and I am glad that I voted for it."

Asked as to statements that Democrats had voted at he Republican primaries against the reform movement, Senator Colby replied: "That statement is made after every primary contest, just as the cry of fraud is always raised. You can have his opinion regarding these things without being able to prove positively. That many Democrats voted at our primaries I believe to be a fact. Of my own knowledge, in my district, twelve voters in one house each attempted to vote were challenged on the ground that they had not a year before voted the Republican ticket, and when challenged had been pursued in every district in the county every hour during which the primaries were open and the same percentage of Democrats was found voting in the Republican box you can figure roughly what the results would have been. As to the use of money, I don't care to discuss that phase of the situation more than to say I believe that it is one of the serious dangers to our institutions."

"I feel that our fight in Essex has already produced splendid results in that it has advertised the primary and has taught voters they can have a say in party affairs if they wish. You may recall that last year as intelligent friend of mine was asked what I was trying to do, making speeches all summer. He replied that he thought I wanted to go to Albany.' That shows how little some intelligent people knew about primaries before the fight of a year ago. Every one knows now what they are and is taking an active interest in them. Again, I believe we will be able to force from the machine some advanced legislation in the interests of the people."

SONS OF TEMPERANCE SIXTY-FOUR YEARS OLD.

Howell Division Fittingly Observes Order's Birthday at Rescue Mission.

The sixty-fourth anniversary of the Sons of Temperance was observed by Howell Division at the Rescue Mission, Thursday, when a special programme was presented. Worthy Patriarch William Ayers presided and delivered an address of welcome. Congressman Charles Sylvester De Scribner, of Somerville, and John B. Oakley, of Elizabeth, both having been identified with the cause of temperance for many years, were features of the rally.

Following the speeching there were selections by Quest's orchestra, recitations by Miss Try Mattox, vocal and instrumental selections by the Misses Edgar, of Westfield, and the Misses Ackerman, of this city. There were also vocal solos by Alfred and Raymond Manley and William Vanarsdale. Mrs. John Manley accompanied the vocalists on the piano. After the rendition of the programme refreshments were served. The committee in charge of the anniversary exercises consisted of Mrs. Sarah Mattox, Mrs. Andrew Cox, Mrs. John Manley, Mrs. W. E. Gibbons and Mrs. William Angleman.

MISS EDITH MANNING AN OCTOBER BRIDE

DAUGHTER OF DANIEL MANNING WEDDED TO CLARENCE BROUARD.

Miss Edith Manning, daughter of Daniel Manning, of Dunellen avenue, and Clarence Brouard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Brouard, of West Seventh street, were married Wednesday night at the home of the bride's father, Rev. E. E. Roberson, pastor of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church, where the bride and groom are attendants, performed the ceremony, in the presence of about 100 guests.

The bride was gowned in white silk, trimmed with lace, and carried a bouquet of bride roses. The couple was unattended. After the ceremony a reception was held, during which congratulations were offered and supper was served. Later Mr. and Mrs. Brouard left for Buffalo and Niagara Falls. Upon their return they will reside in a new house which the groom is building on Hobart avenue.

The groom is employed as a draughtsman at the Pond Machine Tool Works, and both he and his wife are active workers at Monroe Avenue M. E. church.

PETER BLIMM'S FUNERAL.

Rev. George Bower, of Warrenville, In Charge of the Services.

The funeral of Peter C. Blimm, who was killed Monday afternoon by falling beneath a wagon at the Smalley stone quarry, was held at the home of his parents on Somerset street, Wednesday afternoon. It was conducted by Rev. George Bower, of Warrenville, and was attended by a large gathering of relatives and friends. Mr. Bower had known the young man all his life and his remarks were in the nature of a personal talk.

There were numerous floral tributes, among them set pieces from the Ladies' Aid Society, of the German Reformed church, of which Mrs. Jacob Blimm is a member, and from the employees at the Woodhull & Martin store, where Harry Blimm, a brother, is employed.

Interment was made in the North Plainfield cemetery, the pall bearers being Walter Lane, Harry Werner, Herman Keller and Lawrence Scheelein.

Roller Skating at Co. K.

The members of Co. K are preparing to introduce roller skating as their winter sport in West Front street. A large number of skates have been purchased and the members propose to make the pastime popular again. Three nights a week will be given up to roller skating and the company expects to see a revival of interest in skating.

The Pharisees.

"Did I understand you to say that the people who choose the narrow path only are the most narrow-minded?"

"Not exactly: I say the people who think they, only, choose the narrow path are the most narrow-minded."

BOROUGHITES CAN VOTE FOR UPTON SINCLAIR

THAT'S PROVIDED THEY WANT 'JUNGE' AUTHOR FOR CONGRESSMAN.

Upton Sinclair, author of "The Jungle," accepted the Socialist nomination for Congress in the Fourth Congressional district, which includes Somerset, Mercer and Hunterdon counties, in a letter made public Thursday afternoon. He says the prophecies of the party are beginning to come true, recalling that ten years ago he was helping to raise money in a reform movement in New York. Now he sees with wonder even the "slum proletariat of that city of unrighteousness beginning to stir and the pirate chieftains of Tammany Hall beginning to talk of the rights of the people."

Mr. Sinclair urges his comrades not to be discouraged. He says that the politicians steal their thunder; that Mr. Bryan has boldly walked off with one-third of their programme and lapelled it "individualism," while Mr. Roosevelt is claiming two-thirds of it under the title of Americanism. The people, he says, will no longer be deceived by names. He decries New Jersey as a traitor State which has sold out to corporations and urges a united struggle against concentrated wealth.

The letter declares that corporation Senators and Congressmen who fought President Roosevelt's efforts to regulate predatory corporations at every step have the impudence to come before the country decked out in his feathers.

BOYS' CLUB OPENS UP FOR NEW SEASON

CLASS WORK SOON TO BEGIN UNDER NEW TEACHER.

The Boys' Club on Sycamore street was opened Monday for enrollment. In the neighborhood of thirty names were registered, and a day or two will probably see the lists closed. It is hoped to accommodate a few more boys this year than were admitted last season.

Classes in mechanical drawing, molding and manual training will be organized and started at work just as soon as things can be set to rights. W. H. Butts will be in charge of the mechanical drawing, C. W. Bostwick will teach manual training and John F. Gray will be the instructor in molding.

The general supervision of the club will be invested in Secretary Kenneth Robbie, of the Y. M. C. A. Social evenings, free from classwork and most of the discipline, will be enjoyed by members on Saturdays. H. W. Barrows, of the Y. M. C. A. department, will be in charge of them.

Later in the season, arrangements will be made for a public exhibition of the work of the club members. Some of the boys have been trained for two or three seasons and their work will be of an advanced character this season.

VOTERS TO HELP MARTINE

Friends of Farmer Orator in Both Parties Will Strive For His Election.

CAMPAIGN CLUB LIKELY

Plans Are Now Being Laid for Non-Partisan Organization—Many Republicans May Join.

That the selection of James E. Martine as the Democratic Congressional candidate has struck a popular chord among Plainfielders, irrespective of party, is evident by talk heard on the street yesterday and today. The talk is especially noticeable among Republicans who express dissatisfaction over the fact that Representative Fowler has been present at few sessions during his last two terms.

Plans are now being discussed among the friends of the farmer orator for the organization of a James E. Martine Club, which will have for its sole aim, the election of Plainfield's favorite son. Republicans as well as Democrats will be eligible for membership. Although the plans are yet in an embryonic state definite steps to organize the club will be taken immediately.

Hundreds of independent Republicans have openly declared that their ballots will be cast for Martine and if present sentiment counts for anything it is not an insane possibility that the Democratic warhorse may carry his home city.

One of the promoters of the proposed club said to a Daily Press reporter last night that if the organization is perfected it will be the aim of every member to get out and work for the candidate from now on until election night.

Early today, Mr. Martine communicated with the chairmen of the Democratic party in Morris, Warren and Union counties asking them to map out an itinerary for him. The "farmer-orator" proposes to make a whirlwind campaign through the district, which he says will be more thorough than the one he made in the last congressional campaign.

"I am going into the highways and meet the voters," said Mr. Martine today. "I want to come face to face with them and tell them where I stand and why I stand there. My campaign will begin early next week. From then on until November 6, I shall not rest. I purpose to let them know just how their district is being represented, or rather not represented, at Washington."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS REMEMBER MISS BUTLER

FIRST BAPTISTS PRESENT BIBLE TO A DEPARTING TEACHER.

Following a business session of the Sunday-school teachers of the First Baptist church, Thursday, Superintendent George H. Batchelor, on behalf of the officers and teachers, presented a handsome teacher's Bible to Miss Linda Butler as a testimonial of their regard and esteem. He referred to her long and faithful service and the regret of the school that the tie of many years would be broken by her departure from the school. Miss Butler is planning to sail for Mexico, where she will make her home with friends.

During the business session of the evening the reports were received the reports of the various committees. Discussion followed on matters relating to the library, an additional room for the primary department and the advisability of changing the hour for the Sunday-school session. It was decided to have the old books of the library rebound and a new catalogue published. The questions of additional room for the primary department and changing the hour of the session from afternoon ta 12 o'clock noon, were laid on the table for further consideration, both being considered too important to decide last night. The treasurer's report showed a balance of $55.

The meeting was concluded with the serving of refreshments and the enjoyment of a social half-hour.

DeWitt C. Flanagan Named.

Lee DeForest, the inventor of a wireless telegraphy system, has brought suit for divorce against his wife, Mrs. Lucille DeForest, naming as co-respondent, DeWitt C. Flanagan, of Morristown, who ran for Congress on the Democratic ticket in this district four years ago. DeForest has also commenced action for $50,000 damages against Flanagan for alienating his wife's affections. Mrs. DeForest and Flanagan flatly deny the accusations and both state that the true facts of the case will be given at the proper time. The wife declares she was compelled to leave her husband because of his cruel treatment.

Her Judgment.

He—no, the governor doesn't pay me more than I'm worth.

She—How in the world do you manage to live on it?—Ally Sloper's Half-Holiday.

SNAKE STORY RE-UNITES SOME LOST RELATIVES

MICHIGAN MAN HEARS OF PLAINFIELD KIN AFTER MANY YEARS.

A snake story appearing in The Daily Press three weeks ago, which told of Mrs. Harry Kesselring, of North Plainfield, hitting a red-eyed adder with a baseball bat, in an exciting combat, has resulted in uniting long lost relatives. The story was copied by other newspapers and found its way into the editorial rooms of a weekly in Hillside, Mich., where it was put into print. In Hillside resides a Grand Rapids, Mich., retirement, he having made a comfortable fortune as a merchant. Forty years ago he came to this country from Bavaria with other relatives to make their fortune. After a stay in New York the family scattered to all parts of the country. One of Gustav's brothers went South, one remained in New York for a time, afterward going West, while one settled in New Jersey. For a time the family kept track of one another by letter, but as the members died off the letters ceased. Gustav Kesselring made many efforts to locate "Kesselring" families, but was unsuccessful in his attempts. Finally he happened to read the snake story from Plainfield and at once wrote to Mrs. Kesselring, and succeeded in establishing his relationship. It has now turned out that Mrs. Kesselring's husband is a grandnephew of Gustav Kesselring in Michigan, and that George Kesselring's father, who is proprietor of a barber shop here, *is Gustav's nephew. Gustav is over*joyed over the fact of tracing the branches of the family tree, and is planning for a trip to this city to spend the holidays.

SALES AND RENTALS OF LOCAL PROPERTY

E. M. FRENCH AGENCY REPORTS MANY TRASFERS AND NUMEROUS LEASES.

The Elston M. French real estate agency reports a number of sales and rentals of large properties in this city, and has located quite a few prominent out-of-town people permanently here.

The beautiful property formerly owned by Duncan L. S. Macharen on the corner of Central avenue and Randolph road has been sold to C. L. Campbell, a prominent New York business man, who will move here with his family shortly. Mr. French has sold Frank W. Runyon's property on the corner of Union avenue and West Sixth street to Charles E. Bonwell, of West Virginia, who will also locate here permanently.

E. Warren Henck, a New York lawyer, has purchased the property formerly owned and occupied by Matthew H. Brandon, No. 1028 Dunellen avenue. This property contains about two acres of land and is one of the prettiest places in that section of teh town. The house formerly owned and occupied by Dennett J. Galbraith on the corner of Spooner avenue and West Sixth street, has been sold to James Hyslop, of Newark, who is now living there. One of the important rentals made this fall in Plainfield is that of the property owned and occupied by Mrs. Clara A. Stelle, No. 981 Central avenue, to Washington avenue "homesteader," to C. P. Wildey, of New York. He has been living in Morristown, but will now make Plainfield his home.

Other rentals of importance are as follows: House formerly occupied by G. Stewart Simons, No. 1405 Watchung avenue, has been rented by Alfred Rose, of New York; house on Madison avenue near Randolph road rented to Miss Margaret C. Holly, of this city; 32 Myrtle avenue rented to George A. Randel, formerly of Truell Court; 937 Union avenue rented to E. I. Tropley, of New York city; house No. 50 Washington avenue rented to Dr. John R. Westervelt, who has recently returned from Europe; house corner Delacy and Fairview avenues rented to G. Harold Whitney. The property formerly occupied by Mrs. Edward Lewis, known as "The Towers," No. 20 Rockview avenue, has been rented to Warren G. Horton, of New York; M. S. Shapleigh, of Staten Island, has rented the house No. 932 West Sixth street; Frank G. Alden, of New York, has rented the property No. 927 West Seventh street, formerly occupied by Mr. Blackmore; Bayard Hawthorne, of Front street, has rented the property No. 132 Martine avenue.

The property formerly owned by Mrs. Sarah M. Shepard, No. 1143 South Second street, has been sold to John M. Nicholson, of New York. Mrs. E. J. Berrien has rented F. A. Pope's house, No. 110 East Fifth street.

The handsome property owned by P. V. R. VanWyck, corner Plainfield and Cleveland avenues, has been rented by T. W. Bakewell, a prominent New York lawyer. H. L. De Forest, formerly residing in Wisconsin, has rented the property No. 1028 Park avenue. Wm. G. Osgoodby, a New York lawyer, has rented Miss Abercrby's house corner Grant avenue and West Eighth street.

FIREMAN WILLIAM ROSS LAID TO REST TODAY

DETAIL FROM CITY DEPARTMENT ESCORTS BODY TO THE GRAVE.

The funeral of Fireman William A. Ross, who died from injuries received by falling from a trolley car at Bound Brook, Tuesday afternoon, was held at his late home on East Second street, Friday. It was attended by a gathering that filled the house to overflowing and included firemen from the local department and others from nearby cities.

Rev. Charles H. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, was in charge of the service and he delivered a strong address filled with personal reminiscences. At the same time he took occasion to pay a tribute to the faithfulness of the departed who had spent the greater part of his life in the city fire department and who had been one always ready to respond to duty's call. Two selections were sung by Mrs. John Manley.

Following the service, the body was taken to the North Plainfield cemetery for interment, a delegation of firemen in uniform acting as escort. It comprised Captain William Addis, of the truck company; Howard Manning, Charles Graves, Sylvanus Hoffman, Wesley Dunn, Patrick Neylon and James McLean. The pall bearers were also members of the department and were G. H. Freeman, L. S. Kelley, William Yaeger, Joseph Clark, Adolph Karman and William Chamberlain.

Relatives and friends contributed a large array of floral tributes, while an especially handsome set piece was presented by the city firemen. It was in the form of a firemen's badge and bore the figure 4, William Ross' number, and the inscription "Our Brother."

PRIEST ANSWERS EPISCOPAL RECTOR

FATHER O'NEILL, OF NEWARK, PUBLISHES OPEN LETTER TO REV. WASSON.

The Rev. F. C. O'Neill, of the Roman Catholic church of the Blessed Sacrament, of Newark, has published a long open letter attacking the Rev. E. A. Wasson, of St. Stephen's Episcopal church, who, in the parish leaflet, "The Crown," has expressed extremely liberal views on saloons which he regards as "poor men's clubs." Father O'Neill says in part:

"You, no doubt, for a few days past have been enjoying a pipe dream, in the contentment of your own heart, doubtless, you are imagining that the robust manhood and the chested, sturdy armed mechanic and the toilers of the town are lauding you. Chase away the dream; the honest toilers is not lauding you. The corpulent, deep-souled rum distiller is applauding you. The blear-eyed grog-shop keeper classes you with the 'all rights.' The leprous and vicious concert hall keeper will blend your name with his shouts of glee. The devil himself, whose cause you are abetting by fostering the divekeeper's interest, would now hand you out a red-hot diploma, but your time is not yet come, but soon.

"You mop your brow, Mr. Wasson. You should, for remorse bites like a scorpion when it does bite.

"I may be elder, I may be younger than you; I don't know. I'm thirty-five, deep-chested and got a good right. I'd like to be your bishop for the fleeting space of five minutes. I presume he has authority over you.

"I don't know much—only a few things—about your antecedents, but I do know this—that a vigorous course in logical thinking, and a high school course in English composition would do you more good than the cheap notoriety which you are getting now till do you.

"You are not cut out for the ministry, Mr. Wasson, give it up. I have never met you, sir, but I hear you are still a young man. 'Tis never too late to repent. Be a Peter rather than a Judas. Move. Move. Moving day is here. Go into some distant city with your pack, and your bitter recollections tier together. Seek some legitimate calling. Bow down under its kindly shade and think it all over."

Condemn Voting Machines.

Seabright, Oct. 5.—At the meeting of the Mayor and Council Wednesday night a resolution was offered by Councilman Magill and unanimously passed condemning the use of the voting machines and calling upon the State authorities to remove the machine from here. The Council voted to return to the old-fashioned ballot-box, and the clerk was directed to notify the State authorities of the action taken. Just what percentage of the voters here favor the discontinuance of the voting machines is not known. The result of the action taken will be watched with interest.

Political News.

Ascum—I wonder how the primaries went up in Jay county. The last time I was up there State Senator Cookit told me he was out for a renomination.

Newitt—Well, he's out, but I don't know how much.

COST OF COURT HOUSE

Statement Filed With Freeholders Board Which Discharges the Commission.

THANKS ARE EXTENDED

Congratulatory Speech Made by W. R. Codington—Resolution On Mr. Wood.

The final report of the Court House Commission presented at the October meeting of the Union County Board of Freeholders, Thursday, was filed and the commission was discharged with thanks after the county property was turned over to the board. All the bills are paid and a detailed statement of expenditures and receipts received. It follows:

Bonds authorized, $585,000; bonds issued, $569,000; bonds not sold, $16,000, making a total of $585,000. Bonds sold at a premium, $545,000; premium received on same, $36,256; bonds sold to sinking fund, $24,000; cash from old county building, $701.50, making a total of $605,957.50. Disbursements—Cost of new jail, $35,367.20; miscellaneous, printing and incidentals, $1,939.79; ventilating and heating, $1,600; furniture, $14,725.68; fixtures, $6,580; prize money for plans, $1,000; construction of Court House building, $489,248.38; architects' fees, $27,739.68; consulting architects and electrical engineers' fees, $885.50; metal furniture, $5,467.54; building commissioners' fees, $9,113.85; unexpended balance, $4,272.88, making a total of $605,957.50.

After the presentation of the detailed staement, which was filed, congratulatory speeches were made by Jacob Bruchlacher, of Elizabeth, and John Farrell, of Rahway, members of the Court House Commission, and County Attorney W. R. Codington, of this city. Reference to his death of Frank Hubbard, of this city, was a member of the commission, and had a great deal to do with the erection of the new Court House.

Resolutions on the death of the late County Collector Edward M. Wood were presented, adopted and ordered engrossed. The question of installing an independent electric light plant in the new Court House was discussed and the freeholders decided that owing to the number of lights used in the building it would not pay the county to expend $10,000 to install such a plant and the matter was dropped.

TENDER OF RENT TOO LATE, AFTER DEMAND

SOME IMPORTANT DECISIONS IN A LANDLORD AND TENANT CASE.

A Supreme Court case of interest to land-owners and their tenants was tried Thursday before Judge Vail. The court decided that the words of a lease reading "rent payable quarterly in advance" mean payable on or before the first day of each quarter. The court also decided that when the case provides that if any rent shall be due and unpaid, the landlord may re-enter the premises and remove all persons therefrom, and further that it is too late to tender the rent after a proper demand made according to law, and after suit in ejectment has been brought under the covenants of the lease.

In the case was that of Mrs. Lambert and other heirs of John Lambert, deceased, in David R Dunn. Craig A. Marsh appeared for the Lamberts and S. S. Swackhamer for Mr. Dunn. On Mr. Mash's motion, the court directed the jury to bring in a verdict in favor of the Lambert heirs, which will give them the possession of the farm, although the lease had more than two years yet to run, and Mr. Dunn had tendered the rent and fifty dollars costs in open court.

Annoyed by Prayer Chain.

Hackettstown, Oct. 5.—Within the last few days a number of people have been annoyed by copies of an endless prayer chain, purported to have been originated by Bishop Lawrence. Along with the prayer is an explanation, requesting that the prayer be recited and sent to nine persons, beginning on the day it was received and sending one each day. It further sets forth that whoever will carry out these requests will, on or after the ninth day, receive great joy and be delivered from all trouble. But those who do not obey are likely to be afflicted by some misfortune. In some cases where these anonymous epistles have been received much anxiety has been experienced. They are principally received by women and young ladies who are active in church work and are not pleased with this method of communication. Local criticism loudly denounces the prayer and efforts will be made to ascertain its circulators unless it as at once abated.

—The New York and New Jersey Telephone Company yesterday began the work of extending the underground conduits on East Third street and Watchung avenue.

PERSONAL NOTES.

Democracy's Mixed Pickles.

The split of 1896 was widened by the episode of 1904. As a consequence the return of Mr. Bryan, triumphant victor, is by no means welcomed by all the groups except the Hearst group. There was a hope that Bryan might achieve the required union. That hope is not yet extinct. But the Bryan uprising is met by the Hearst demonstration; and Hearstism in Democracy crossed on Socialism, with strong paternal leanings. Thus, in New York the campaign becomes an affair of mixed pickles, the label on neither jar disclosing the contents, and, in case the Hearst label wins, the trade in mixed pickles will extend itself all over the Union.—The Louisville "Courier-Journal."

Guessing at It.

"Tomorrow's Mr. Lovvett's birthday," said Bobbie.

"Yes," said Elsie, "and sister Edith says she sent him a pair of military hairbrushes. Say, what are they, anyway?"

"Give it up," replied Bobbie. "I don't even know what 'military hair' is. Somethin' fierce and red, I guess."

Want Pure Power.

Samples of the water of various rivers are being sent to Washington, where they will be analyzed to see if they are valuable for industrial purposes. Why is Chicago slighted? We should at once fill a milk bottle with the energetic fluid from our versatile stream and ask the Senate and scientific government to give it a careful analysis for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is good water to make power before we proceed to spend millions in developing the works at Lockport.—Chicago News.

WOMAN WHO THINK PEOPLE ARE TALKING ABOUT THEM.

Of all egotistical creatures none equals the woman who thinks that people are always talking about her.

None of us are so important that our whole neighborhood discusses us eternally.

People have other things to take up their time. Gas bills to consider, shoes for the baby and a lot of other important affairs.

A woman who it wretched all the time on account of what her friends may think or say is certainly lacking common sense.

As wives or sweethearts these women never take a man's love, once expressed and loyally acted on, as a certainty, unless constantly repeated.

They are always pouting and bemoaning their loveless condition, getting up pathetic scenes of tender accusation or of sorrowful acceptance of coolness and desertion.

These little poses may at first have a certain charm to a man, because flattering to his vanity, but they pall on him after a time, and end by annoying and boring him.

Thus, by their own attitudes, they bring about the catastrophe which was deprecated before it existed.

They are the sort of women one has to live with in a fool's paradise of perfection, or you are made to feel yourself a contemptible brute.

You hurt their feelings so completely, so continually and so unconsciously, that you might as well be living in a region of steel-traps and spring-guns, and set to walk blindfolded among pitfalls and deep water holes.

You express an opinion without attaching particular importance to it, but you hurt their feelings because they do not think the same way and if you don't want them to howl like a hurricane you must retract or apologize, the latter the worst temper always carries the day.

These are the sort of women who boast of their fine feelings, supremely unconscious that they are boasting of their little, mean natures.

The oddest part of the whole business, is the supreme deep contempt which these women have for other people's patience and endurance, and how much more refined and touching they think their own puerile sensibilities.

They are the women who, though yet young, be overwhelmed with serious work, while they have no weightier burdens strapped to their back than their social duties, yet you must render point for point with them, keeping an exact tally with not a notch too many on their side if you wish to retain their acquaintance.

And the pitiful part of it is that women of this type cannot be made to realize their own foolishness. They cannot recognize the simple truth that supersensitiveness and whining never found happiness, and that they certainly never help to keep it.

These women should be taught to begin each day with a clean slate. And to write upon it only the things that are pleasant to remember.

They should be taught to see that they have to live but one day at a time and acknowledge to themselves that there has never yet been a day that has not ended.

They should know the great value of an enemy's criticism—the criticisms that should teach them more about themselves than would the sweetest compliment of a friend.

They should early recognize that these unpleasant remarks of times do a lot of good, and that flattery rarely does much else than mischief.

When they hear a comment that has been made about them, even if it is decidedly unpleasant, let them ask themselves:

"I wonder if there is any truth in that?"

Others know us better than we know our own minds and our weaknesses. How often are we often like our back coiffures; we never have really seen them and we never will.

Then they should learn to perfume the inside of their heads with beautiful, big, tender thoughts and recognize that they would have to live ten thousand years to become so wise that they could no longer learn something from every mortal they meet.

They should notice how harshly they judge others and with what gentleness they judge themselves and their own motives.

How the angels must smile at the childishness of such women. They should make themselves see that after all this is a mighty fine, big, sweet, old world, and that all one has to do to be happy and helpful is to stir up and take hold.

They should study out how unhappy these insatiable cravings that continually require reassuring and allaying are going to make their lives.

And women who live their lives as these they can according to the laws of good, and with the common decency need never worry about the opinions of her neighbors.

WHAT THEY READ IN RIO.

That the inhabitants of Rio stay at home does not imply that the are great readers, for there are four or five book stores on the Rua do Ouvidor, but except here books are not seen in shop windows, nor even in private houses. The serious student will find good material in only two of the eight libraries here, these are the Portuguese Society Library and the National Library. This last is a fine collection of over two hundred and fifty thousand volumes, with many manuscripts and original documents, especially rich in the historical literature of the country. The newspaper seems to supply fully the mental requirements of the dweller in Rio; he has the newspaper habit as thoroughly developed as has the New Yorker, and from morning till night he can obtain the latest news or opinion in any fashion he likes. There are nine dailies in the morning and two in the afternoon, and they keep the newsboys busy crying the contents and selling them at 3½ cents. Any extraordinary event is illustrated by a photograph, but as a rule they do not insert pictures and almost never use cartoons, this last species of entertainment and enlightenment being still considered the function of the comic weeklies on the Punch and Puck order. The newspaper is a de facto free press, saying anything it pleases unrestrained by any censorship except by public opinion, which I am sure is swayed by the newspaper to a greater extent than is usual in Latin countries. The papers are owned by statesmen, street car conductors, students and peddlers, but I rarely saw one in the hands of a woman. They are thoroughly upto-date, too, in most things, but their news from the outside world is more limited than is that from Russia. Their editors are men of brains and of affairs who say what they say because they believe it.—Albert Hale, in the October Reader.

TRICK WITH NUMBERS.

This is a good trick, as it seems like a quite remarkable thing to be able to do when in fact nothing could be simpler; that is, when you know how. There are several ways of doing it.

Ask a girl to think of some number, and then tell her to double it. Tell her to multiply the sum by five and then to tell you the product, and you will tell her the number thought of in the beginning. This product will of course be so much larger than the number started with that she will be sure you have read her mind. If you take off the last figure of the product, which will always be a cipher, you will have the number thought of in the beginning.

For instance, suppose she started with the number 17. Doubling it would give 34, and multiplying it by five would give 170. Striking off the cipher you will have 17, the number thought of in the beginning.

LITTLE ODDITIES.

The perfect human figure should be equal in height to ten faces.

A whole field of buckwheat blossoms often turns red during the passage of a thunderstorm.

It is estimated that nearly 4,000 acres of cedar trees are cut down annually to provide the material for lead pencils.

The largest election of which the numbers polled have been preserved is that at Lincoln, Eng., in 1547. At this 84 "voices" were cast.

Japan is connected with the continent of Asia by a submarine bank, over which the water is nowhere more than 100 fathoms in depth.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Brigadier General Picquart, the defender of Dreyfus, has been promoted to the rank of general of division.

—Giovanni Luchini, of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, has returned from Italy after spending three months in that country in research work.

—The Duke of the Abruzzi has asked of the Minister of Foreign Affairs permission to head the expedition which in this year's season is organizing with the object of establishing Italy's zone of influence in Benadir.

—W. Morgan Shuster, the young Washington lawyer who has been appointed by President a member of the Philippine commission, is just past 29 years of age. His appointment carries with it a salary of $15,000. Mr. Shuster was formerly a stenographer in one of the departments in Washington.

—The late Robert R. Hitt had a knowledge of stenography which was of great value to him in debate. He has been known to rise with his hand full of short-hand notes of a speech just delivered by which he was about to reply, and woe to the man who accused Mr. Hit of misquoting him. He was the patron saint of the stenographers of the House.

—An unusual honor has been conferred on Charles F. Chandler, a professor of chemistry at Columbia University. Fifty years ago he received the degree of Ph. D. from the University of Gottingen. At the expiration of a half century the same university reawarded the degree of Prof. Chandler. Dr. Knapp, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, is the only other Columbia professor who has received a like honor.

URGE THE STATE TO BUY PROPRIETORS RECORDS

SPECIAL COMMISSION FILES REPORT ADVISING EARLY PURCHASE.

A commission appointed by Governor Stokes to consider a method by which the State should take over the antiquated records and other property of the East and West Jersey proprietors filed a preliminary report with the Governor Wednesday, in which it was urged that the State acquire the documents as expeditously as possible and place them in a place for safe keeping.

The commission is composed of John D. Bird, Franklin Briggs, son of the State treasurer, and Jennings Lippincott, and was appointed under authority of a resolution of the last Legislature. The preliminary report says:

"Your commission on the East and West New Jersey boards of proprietors, named by you to consult with authorized representatives of the respective boards, visited the office of the East New Jersey board of proprietors June 8, where they were met by a committee of three, consisting of the following members of the East Jersey board: Willis K. Howell, surveyor general; Andrew L. Cobb, vice-president, and Adrain Lyons, registrar. After listening to the mission of the commissioners the committee expressed the willingness of the proprietors, who are 50 in number, to part with their records and rights to the State for a consideration to be hereafter fixed at the regular annual meeting of the East Jersey board of proprietors.

"Your commission then made an examination of the most important records contained in the vaults of the proprietors at Perth Amboy. These documents date back to 1685 and comprise 22 books of surveys, dating from 1719; 12 books of conveyances, dating from 1685; three books of warrants and grants, the oldest of which dates from 1685, thus antedating the present organized board of proprietors. Besides these there are in the vaults at Perth Amboy, which did not appear to be reasonably fireproof, 25 miscellaneous books of grants, wills, etc., as well as 146 excellent maps. There is also a practically complete set of original surveys since 1800."

The report then goes on to tell of the work of the commission in Burlington, where many valuable documents were found. Among these was the old grant and release issued by James Duke of York, afterwards James II of England, to Lord John Berkeley and George Carteret, for the entire province of the Jerseys, dated June 23-4, 1664.

Of the manner in which this, along with the other deeds in the possession of the West Jersey council the report says:

"In order to effect a sale of these records to the State, communications must first be had with the general hereditary proprietors who elect the council, as they alone have the right of disposal. Such communication can only be established according to the time-honored precedent by advertisement in many newspapers, some of them in England, others in France and Holland, as the exact number of the general hereditary proprietors is not known."

"In accordance with the request of your commission the following advertisement has been prepared and inculated and the commission is authorized to expect a definite answer from the West New Jersey council on or before January 1, 1907:

"NOTICE.

"To the General Proprietors of the Western Division of New Jersey:

"Notice is hereby given to those holding or claiming shares or parts of shares in unlocated lands of the proprietors of said division that a meeting will be held at the office of the surveyor general in the city of Burlington, December 5, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, to consider a proposition made by the State of New Jersey to acquire the title to unlocated lands still remaining in the proprietors, and the records now contained in the office of the surveyor general, in the city of Burlington. To entitle a proprietor to vote upon the matter, documentary proof of title in him must be exhibited.

"Order of to be published.

"T. SNOWDEN HAINES.

"Clerk of Council.'

In conclusion, the report tells of the present almost inaccessible position of the records, and urges that something be done. Many titles to land in New Jersey must be traced to the records of these corporation, and urges the State to acquire them.

1,500,000 Postcards a Day.

No fewer than 1,500,000 picture postcards were delivered daily in Paris during July and August—an average of one per head for the entire adult population. The normal number delivered daily is 700,000, but this was swollen by cards sent home by holiday-makers.

His Extensiveness explained.

"Scribbell tells me he writes exclusively for 'Cheapley's Magazine' now."

"Yes, 'Chealey's is published here in town, you know."

"I know, but I never see any of his stuff in it."

"No, but still he writes for it, and he confines his exclusively, because he can deliver his monuscripts in person and thus save postage."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 14.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—Who are foolish and who are wise?—Matt. xxv. 1-13.

The parable of the virgins was spoken in connection with an address of Christ concerning His second coming. The day of His second coming, the time of His absence from the earth is summed up in two parables—the virgins and the talents. The former teaches the necessity of waiting and watching for Christ's coming, and the latter the importance of working for His coming. The chief business of Christians during the absence of Christ is to wait and to watch for Him, since no one knows the day nor the hour of His coming. But we are not to wait and watch in idleness. The talents which He has given us are to be used in His service. We are to wait and watch, and while we are doing so we are to work.

In the parable of the virgins there are ten characters. In most respects they are all alike. They were all invited to the same wedding feast. All had the lamps accustomed to be carried upon such an occasion. All desired to participate in the wedding festivities. But in one vital point they differed. Five of them "took their lamps and took no oil with them;" the other five "took oil in their vessels with their lamps." The five who took lamps without oil are called foolish, and the five who took lamps and oil are called wise. And they did not all go together, for when the Bridegroom came those who had oil entered in with him, while the others were excluded from the feast. The wisdom of having oil and the folly of neglecting to procure it are thus clearly seen.

The application of the parable of the virgins is easily made. Christ, the Bridegroom of the church, is absent for a time, but He is coming again and His union with the bride is to be celebrated with festivities. All are invited to enter in and to enjoy these heavenly blessings. The foolish are those who are postponing complete preparations for this great event; the wise are those who are fully prepared for it at all times. The foolishness of the foolish virgins lay in the fact that they had opportunities to procure oil, but did not do it. When the announcement of the Bridegroom's coming was made they speedily procured oil, but then it was too late. While they went to buy, the Bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the feast, and the door was shut." They had had their day of opportunity, but neglecting it, they lost it. Lost opportunities cannot be recalled. Those who are following in the footsteps of the foolish virgins. They are living in their day of opportunity. Christ is freely offered to them now, but they are postponing acceptance of Him. They want to be saved. They intend to be saved, but not today. But how foolish. Today alone is ours. Christ may call for us at any moment, day or night. Let us therefore be fully prepared.

"Ordered of the Lord."

Just as the plowman takes furrow by furrow, one ended before another is begun, so our duties come to us, not in battalions, but singly. Our life's plan, if we read it aright, is beneficently designed. We are not abandoned to blind chance. Confusion and entanglement can come only by our choosing to refuse guidance and to shape our lot for ourself. It will not be until we when we have come to the end of it and can look back, a divinely ordered whole, which even our failures cannot mar, for God only asks of us our best and sincerest effort, that we shall know we need not grieve overmuch if some of the furrows refuse to run straight. The failure may be success after all, so far as our discipline is concerned. Our very failures may be an answer to our petitions, even though other than we had planned for. EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Oct. 14: "Who is My Neighbor and What of Him?"

By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D.

A Jewish misconception corrected.—Luke x. 29-37. The sum of obligation to my neighbor.—Rom. xiii. 9-10. Setting a good example.—I Pet. ii. 12. Behaving wisely.—Col. iv. 5. "Pray for him."—I Tim. ii. 1-4.

In the Levitical law it was written, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." In the law as found in Deuteronomy it is added that regarding Ammonites and Moabites that they should never be allowed to become Israelites, nor should the Israelite seek their peace or prosperity (Deut. xxiii, 3-6).

This seems to have been in the mind of the Lord Jesus when He said in the sermon on the mount: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you."

The old Deuteronomic law was the high water mark of ancient ethical attainment. To hate an enemy was as much a moral duty as to love a friend. This was not alone the code of Israel, but was the practice and teaching of the best nations of the world and of the most advanced teachers of that time.

At a single stroke Jesus overthrows this whole conception of human society and the relations of man to man. Men are brothers. God is the Father of all. Human destiny is to be worked out in unity. Every other conception of mankind has failed in the testing to establish society on an enduring foundation. It will take time to adjust men's thinking and still longer to conform their practices to this new theory. But the kingdom of God is among men. The leaven of righteousness has been hid in the meal, and the whole mass is leavening slowly, but surely.

The whole world is neighbor. Would that the world knew it! Would that the world would be neighborly! How good it would be to live a few days on this old earth with everybody acting and speaking as friends! Can you imagine how great the change would be? No anger, no envy, no hate, no fraud, no jealousy, no seeking gain for self at the loss of another—just kindness and helpfulness on every hand. What a change! Dream over it a bit in the daytime! Imagine how it would work! Work, a little yourself just as an experiment. Be courteous, be kindly affectioned and show it. Neighbor folks a little more and see how they will take it.

Perhaps some will be suspicious and think it an alone for an evil purpose. Some may resent it as a reflection on them. Others may treat it all with contempt and pass you by. Don't be discouraged. You have gained the essential point, you have made of yourself a good neighbor, and if you keep at it you will find others are coming to like it and will soon or late take it up and follow your example.

The hard thing is not to get the other fellow to do as he ought, but to get yourself to the point of neighbor and keep steadily at it when the trials come. It is easy to be nice to nice folks. The difficulty comes in being nice to the disagreeable ones. But remember they will find it easy to change and be nice quickly if you show the pattern. Find or create in others something likable, then like them and show it. They will end by loving you.

How We Get Rest.

Of course there is a sense, and a very wonderful sense, in which a great personality breathes upon all who come within its influence an abiding peace and trust. Men can be to other men as the shadow of a great rock in a thirsty land. Much more Christ; much more Christ as perfect Man; much more still as Saviour of the world. When Christ said He would give men rest, He meant simply that He would put them in the way of it. By no act of conveyance could He ever hope to make over His own rest to them. He could give them His recipe for it. That was all. But He would not make it for them. For one thing, it was not in His plan to make it for them. For another thing, men were not so planned that it could be made for them. And for yet another thing, it was a thousand times better that they should make it for themselves.—Henry Drummond.

Using Our Privileges.

The eldest brother in the parable of the prodigal son was his father's child, but he did not act what he might from that relationship. His father said, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine." Yet he had never taken a kid. There is much more for us in being children of God than we have ever appreciated. Heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ" and yet living on the husks of an unworthy life—"children of God" and yet fretted and anxious about the provision for our needs or because we cannot have more.—Rev. Emmet W. Hunt, D. D., President of Dennison University, Granville, O.

A Good Gardener.

God is a good gardener. He plants no root or seed in a barren soil. Where God has set us there is always room for our growth and fruitage. We may think not, but that is not because we are wiser than God, but because of our profound ignorance.—Forward.

Your Purpose.

Set yourself earnestly to see what you were made to do, and then set your memory to do it: and the loftier your purpose is, the more sure you will be to make the world richer with every enrichment of yourself.—Phillips Brooks.

STOLEN PAINTINGS SMUGGLED TO NEW YORK.

Valuable Collection Hidden for Twenty-eight Years By "Fence" in Europe.

A cable despatch from Paris yesterday announced to the New York police and Secret Service agents that a gigantic smuggling case is now before them. The story is about as romantic as burglary, plain stealing and smuggling can be. An art collection, among which are paintings by Rembrandt, Boucher, Rubens, Sir Joshua Reynolds and Nattier will soon be sold in some American city and the pictures are said to be now in the United States, and perhaps in New York.

The belief of the Paris police is that the paintings were got to New York by way of New Orleans, from Havana. There is no record of their entry through any American port. The pictures were accumulated by a celebrated "fence," and have been held from the public gaze for more than twenty-eight years, so that the statute of limitations relieves the "collectors" from the fear of the law. The prizes so many to be enormous, and they will be bid for enthusiastically when the auction begins.

Many art lovers will not fail to love the old paintings just a little more because of their interesting experiences in the hands of thieves and robbers for so many years.

"Jack" Carr, who was at the head of the plot which resulted in the theft of Reynolds' Duchess of Devonshire portrait, and who died worth $300,000 in a prison at Copenhagen, one of the lovers of art for mere money's sake, is said to be at one of the leaders in the securing of the present collection. Carr was known to the New York and Scotland Yard police as one of the slickest of the "collectors."

No trace of the stolen paintings has yet been found in America, but developments are expected soon that may be important.

West to Seashore.

There was an incident which happened last summer which give some faint idea of the mystery of a theatrical manager's suite of offices. A newspaper man who had an appointment with the manager, but no time to waste over the office boy, hastily entered the reception room.

"Are you ready to go out to lunch?" he called to the manager through the transom of the private office.

"Yes," came the answer, "I'll be out in a moment."

Then the visitor turned to the office boy and said in the way of satire, "Could you tell me if your boss is in?"

"Well, really," said the boy, without any sign of emotion, "I couldn't say positively, but in my impression is that he went down to the seashore about noon time."—The Outing Magazine.

Memorial Service.

In honor of the late William Brown, of Greenbrook, who died last week, a memorial service will be held at the Dunellen Presbyterian church next Sunday morning. Mr. Brown was an elder of the church and a liberal giver to its funds. His home was on the old William Marsh Rice place.

The Telegram Game.

The head of each paper must bear ten letters selected at random by the hostess, each paper bearing the same letters. Within a given time, usually five or ten minutes, each must write a telegram of ten words whose initial letters shall be those at the head of the paper. For example, given the letters T, T, P, A, W, I, N, R, D, S, one telegram might read: "Take two pellets aconite; wire immediately no relief. Dr. Snow."

If Charles J. Fisk, the Republican candidate for the Mayoralty, is elected in November, he will have to resign the presidency of the Board of Health, an office he has held for some time. It is a source of regret on the part of the other members of the board that they will lose Mr. Fisk as a member, but they are assured of his continued interest and support.

The Constitutionalist.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms: $2.00 per year.

A. L. FORCE, Editor and Proprietor.

THURSDAY, OCT. 11, 1906.

TO UPHOLD ROOSEVELT.

It is amusing to hear the arguments being used by some Republican politicians who seem to think that the average voter is a blockhead pure and simple. The stock story about the necessity of voting the party ticket straight to "uphold the hands of the President" is being worked to death as it usually is in every campaign, particularly when there is a Senator or Congressman to be elected. Representatives who have done little while at Washington except to draw their salaries suddenly awaken to the fact when renominated that the country is in peril and that it is absolutely necessary for its welfare that they be reelected. Their aim is to fool the voters and ride into office on a shallow pretense, just as they have in the past. Whether they will be allowed to do so this time depends entirely on the good sense of the people.

On this pertinent subject, the Newark Evening News, Republican, said incidently on Saturday:

"Practically every Republican who wants to go to Washington in an official capacity this year wants to go there to help Roosevelt. It seems to be the universal impulse of candidates of all degrees. The junior United States Senator wants to be returned to help Roosevelt. Every Republican candidate for Congress is eager to get into the House of Representatives to help Roosevelt. The Senatorial and Assembly candidates want to go to Trenton to hold a joint session which will select a Senator who will help Roosevelt. The candidates for county offices want to get elected in order to strengthen the Republican party, which is the party to help Roosevelt, and the city and ward aspirants want to perfect the organization which strengthens the party which elects the Assemblymen which cause the Senator who is to help Roosevelt.

"It doesn't follow, however, that these candidates who are now seeking votes for themselves through Roosevelt's unprecedented popularity will be so extremely zealous to help Roosevelt when the next two years. He is not a candidate for re-election. He will not be so much of a power by and by as he is now. He seems inclined to further restrain the trusts, to control the corporations, to limit the accumulation of wealth in fines, and to do other things that will help the people to restore and maintain their sovereignty. Not all the United States Senators are in favor of these Rooseveltian experiments; not all the Congressmen like to hear about nothing the trusts, yet all of them are now exceedingly profuse in their declarations of friendship for Roosevelt and exceedingly desirous of being elected so as to help him.

"It would be wise for the people to inquire why Roosevelt needs so much help, and also to investigate the records and see who helped Roosevelt and who didn't. There are men today who are extolling him to the skies who have recently sought to defeat him ever since he has been in Washington. They are exploiting their records as if the votes they cast were conscientious and voluntary, when in fact they only made a virtue of necessity. To help Roosevelt is all right; but to merely hold fast to his political skirts so as to be dragged into office is quite a different matter."

MARTINE FOR CONGRESS.

Without a doubt, the Democrats Wednesday placed before the people the strongest candidate they could name when they nominated James E. Martine for congress. It is safe to say that there is no man in the district who can command as many Republican votes as the "farmer-orator," for he is almost as well and favorable known in Morris and Warren counties as he is in Union, where he has been the leading figure in the Democratic ranks for years. As a citizen he holds the respect of everyone and as a party worker he has the esteem if not the support of all who admire a consistent, loyal, devoted and sincere advocate of definite political principles.

Notwithstanding that the Roosevelt landslide swept Fowler, the able ex-state-representative back into office again in the last congressional campaign, the run made by Martine was surprisingly good in this county, where both reside. Even Mr. Fowler's own home, Elizabeth, was carried by him. It may be said now that Fowler will have no cause to be ashamed as he is introduced in a Republican stronghold. That is very true but one only has to go about the county to hear what the voters generally think of the Elizabeth "statesman." The arguments used against him are that he does not represent the district; that he spends little time in Washington and that he has never been known to do anything during the twelve years that he has sat in Congress except to waste time over a banking bill that few people take any stock in. While supposedly representing his district, the congressman has spent much of his time reaping wealth from a marble quarry in Vermont.

If the Fifth district want a representative who will devote his time to its interests James E. Martine is the man. He is one who would be heard from in the halls of congress and one who would at all times reflect credit on his constituents.

The Brisbane-American is keeping up its record for logical argument by laying stress on the distorted fact that a vote for Willis is a vote against Chinese labor. Evidently the "editor" in hisown mind—Brisbane's—must be thinking that he is running for congress again.

Because they have not made the Bishops' bill an issue, the Trenton True American says that "the Union county Democrats" are entitled to be ranked with the "wise ones." Had they done otherwise, they would certainly be counted as "dead ones" in Plainfield at least.

The irrepressible Noah W. Pike has issued a circular letter addressed to the Republican mayoralty nominee signing himself "Tax Payer." A big red apple is offered anyone who can tell what Mr. Pike is driving at in his epistle.

A "full dinner-pail" for the policemen and firemen will be an issue of the local campaign unless the Common Council decides to grant the city employes' petitions for higher wages.

Personal note from the Elizabeth Daily Lemon—Mr. C. N. Fowler, of Vermont, is in our midst. The affable gentleman promises to make this his home until November 6.

Something more strenuous than a fierce political campaign is keeping the aged senior Senator of New York awake at night. "A woman scorned" is the cause of all the fury.

No matter how much his fellowtownsmen may disagree with him sometimes, everyone in Rahway will give Further credit for being a real mayor.

Newark man wrote to his wife and ten took poison. Whether he mentioned her mother is not stated in the press dispatch.

AUTO AND HORSE IN CRASH; NONE SERIOUSLY HURT.

"Diamond Jim" Brady's Machine Hurled Animal Against Tree and Held It There.

"Diamond Jim" Brady, of New York city, who met with an automobile accident, near Rockville Centre, Long Island, on April 19, 1906, in which one of his party, Miss Harriet Waters, an actress, was so badly injured that she died a day later, had another narrow escape yesterday when his big machine, going at a speed, did much the same thing to the conveyance of H. H. Haight, at Main and Wall streets, in Raritan. Brady owns a farm along the Raritan river, two miles north of the estate of James B. Duke. He was making the trip from New York to his farm yesterday in his big Mercedes machine, accompanied only by his driver.

As he neared Main and Wall streets in Raritan the Haight conveyance carrying Mr. Haight, his son and several women to church came down Wall street and turned into Main directly in front of Brady's machine. Mr. Haight's young son, who was driving the spirited horse, made the turn on the wrong side of the street. Brady's driver swerved his machine to the opposite side of the street to escape him, and at the same instant young Haight started out to rectify his mistake and turned his horse directly in front of the automobile.

The machine struck the horse broadside, lifted it from its feet and stood it up against a tree. The automobile crashed into the tree with a force that threw Brady and his driver in the street and crusher in the front of the machine. It was necessary to back the machine off in order to allow the horse to regain its feet. Had it not been for the tree holding the horse up the Haight conveyance would have been overturned and the occupants thrown out. The frightened horse was seized before it had a chance to bolt and the occupants of the carriage, Brady and his driver, escaped with slight injuries.

O. F. C. vs. Clark Club.

The Orange Field Club eleven will play its first regular game of the season at Crescent Oval on Saturday, when the team from the Edward Clark Club, of Elizabeth, will be the opponents. The Elizabeth eleven has previously laid claim to the 150-pound championship of New Jersey, but the Orange Field Club boys have defeated the county seat players three years in succession. The Elizabeth team is much stronger this year and feel confident of winning Saturdays' game, as does also the local eleven. The Orange Field Club players are urged to be at Concert Park at 8:30 o'clock tonight for heavy practice.

Missionary to China Will Speak.

J. W. Crawford, who is in charge of the boy's school in Shanghai, China, under the auspices of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, and who is in this country on a furlough, will speak at the Seventh-Day Baptist church Saturday morning. He is accompanied by his wife and two children and will remain in this country for several weeks.

AMUSEMENTS.

Astor Theatre Inaugurated.

The inauguration of the Astor theatre, and the presentation there of a new Shakesperian star, is the dramatic event of the season of New York. The star is Annie Russell, for the first time as Puck, in a production of Shakspere's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," with a company of 172 players. Miss Russell is greeted with the greatest enthusiasm. Her characterization of the part is the embodiment of grace, delicacy and daintiness. The play, abounding in light and sunshine, in revels of fairies, the wooing of lovers, the play within a play of Bottom and his fellows, charmed with its delicacy and the perfection of detail. The company surrounding Miss Russell at the Astor, is an unusually strong one, including Edwin Mordant, Atkins Lawrence, Oswald Yorke, Lionel Adams, Edward Longman, Thomas Coffin Cooke, William Gilmore, John Bunny, Richard Lee, Wilmer Dame, Hubert Osborne, Edith Chapman, Catherine Proctor, Laura Howard, James Young, Ina Brooks, Beesie Shrednecky, Leon Strauss, Vinnie Burns, William Brown, Bertram Strauss, Belle Fairchild, Jennie Urwin, Elizabeth Doddridge, Dortea Deveney.

A Society Circus.

New features are bing added weekly to "A Society Circus," the famous New York hippodrome's next to nothing production, which continues to amuse and delight thousands at 50th daily performances. That success makes for success was never better illustrated than in the case of "A Society Circus," which has established a specialized position, because of its intrinsic worth, its wonderful stage pictures, and the one hundred and one incomparable features which go to make up the greatest theatrical programme ever offered to the amusement seeking public. "A Society Circus" is not a circus; it is not an opera; it is not a musical comedy; it is not a drama or a spectacle, but the best of each has been incorporated into it so deftly and happily that the spectator keenly appreciates and relishes all the emotions aroused by these various forms. The great circus programme includes the world's leading champions in acrobatic work; daring equestrianism; thrilling feats leading up to the sensational climax, motoring in mid-air, the thrilling act of the Tom Davies Trio. Matinees are given daily.

JUDGE ORDERS A VERDICT OF SIX CENTS.

In Case Against Thomas McBride Arising Out of Property Sale.

Shortly before noon yesterday the case of Klementena Baturs and Joseph Batura, her husband, against Thomas McBride, was brought to a close by Judge Vail, in Elizabeth, who directed the jury to return a verdict of six cents damages in favor of the plaintiffs.

The Baturas, who were represented by John J. Stamler as counsel, sued to recover damages for alleged false representations made by McBride to them through his agent in the sale of a piece of property in the city of Elizabeth, No. 228 and 230 First street, Elizabeth, for which the Baturas paid McBride $16,000. Adolph Reitman, the agent, it was alleged, gave the Baturas to understand that McBride had informed him that the property was bringing in a monthly rental of $152, and that one of the tenants, the George W. Wiedenmayer brewing Company, had a lease on the premises occupied by Frank O'Neill, which had four years to run at a monthly rental of $125. It developed, after buying the property, discovered that the lease held by Wiedenmayer had expired and that the rental of the place had been $25 instead of $25 per month as had been represented by McBride, whereupon they at once brought suit.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS SOCIETY ELECTS OFFICERS.

Christian Work Society Chooses Mrs. David E. Titsworth President.

The Women's Society for Christian Work of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, at its annual meeting held on Sunday, elected these officers for the ensuing year:

President, Mrs. David E. Titsworth; vice-president, Mrs. Henry M. Maxson; treasurer, Mrs. F. A. Dunham; corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. C. Hubbard; recording secretary, Mrs. O. S. Rogers; chairman of the refreshments committee, Mrs. W. C. Hubbard; chairman of the entertainment committee, Mrs. J. E. Kimball; chairman of directresses, Mrs. W. C. Hubbard.

The reports for the year were received, showing that the society has had a very successful twelve months of endeavor in Christian work. There has been increased interest in all departments and the prospects for the year are bright. The society will meet on Wednesday, October 17, to plan the winter's work.

Deny They Were to Elope.

Trenton, Oct. 9.—Told by Mrs. Lizzie Woolverton that her husband was about to elope with Mrs. Matilda Bowerman, the police of the Second District shadowed the railroad stations Saturday night and, it is said, witnessed a meeting between the man and the woman, the latter being accompanied by a girl friend. The couple were at once arrested and locked up, although they emphatically denied that any elopement was intended. They will be allowed to explain in court today.

ALIS ELEVEN DEFEATS PLAINFIELD HIGH SCHOOL.

A Safety Constituted the Only Scoring in the Two Halves.

The Alis football eleven defeated the Plainfield High School team, Saturday, by a score of 2 to 0. This was the first contest of the season between the two teams. The playing was not particularly fast, because of the radical changes in the rules of the game. The forward pass, however, worked successfully for Alis. No trick plays were tried and the score was made on a safety. The thirty yard run of Douglass, of the High School eleven, was the feature. Following is the line-up:

P. H. S.		Alis.
Tilltonson	right end.	L. Manning
Fisher	right tackle.	Echert
Bogardus	right guard.	Gideon Fountain
Caldwell, Dorothy	centre.	Bogart
Todd	left guard.	Stewart
Brakeley	quarterback.	Taylor
Lyness	right half.	J. Manning
Mahaffey	full back.	J. Douglass

Referee, Lindsey Best. Umpire, William Flanders.

Wedded at Parsonage.

Miss Sarah Lawing Ammerman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Ammerman, of East Fourth street, and George Walter Emmons, of East Second street, were quietly married Saturday night by Rev. Dr. Schenck at his home. The ceremony was witnessed only by the groom's parents. Following a short trip Mr. and Mrs. Emmons will make their home on West Second street. The groom is employed by Neuman Brothers.

Ordered to Cuba.

Lieut. Col. James Parker, 13th Calvary, son of Cortlandt Parker, has been detached from his regiment and ordered to Cuba on special duty with Gen. Funston, commanding the U. S. troops in the occupation of that island.

STOVER INCREASES LEAD FOR COMMITTEE CUP

SATURDAY'S RESULTS AT COUNTRY CLUB AND PARK GOLF CLUB.

Charles A. Stover returned to the Plainfield Country Club course Saturday afternoon and by winning first honors and three points for the Golf Committee cup, increased his lead for this trophy. He now has a total of 12½ points, while C. B. Morgan, who finished second, broke his tie with Arthur Murphy, who failed to get any points, and he is a close second with 12½ points, with Murphy in third position with 10½.

As usual at this time of the year the course was crowded with players, but a majority of those who competed for the Golf Committee cup did not post their scores, either because they were too high or did not have a chance to be up among the leaders.

The leading scores returned were as follows: Charles A. Stover, 93, 10—73; C. B. Morgan, 80, 2—78; Hugh F. Fox, 97, 18—79; S. D. Lounsbery, 89, 7—82.

In the competition for the October Handicap cup, there was a tie between Frank Goit Reinhart and W. Lester Glenney. Each playing from scratch, returned a score of 81. The tie will be played off this week.

There were a half dozen players who returned their scores for the President's, club and Hydewood cups at the Park Golf Course on Saturday, the play for the Hydewood trophy being a new event for October only. For the President's cup, Charles A. Reed, Leon R. Thurlow, John L. Watson and Alexander Gilbert were the point-winners, while for the Hydewood cup, "A. Reed, 5," was the only name. Mr. Reed, Rev. J. O. McKelvey and Mr. Thurlow. Mr. Reed also scored a win for the Hydewood cup, which is offered by Mrs. Charles Hyde.

These scores were posted for the three cups:

Charles A. Reed, 97, 5—92; Leon R. Thurlow, 105, 10—95; John L. Watson, 114, 18—96; Alexander Gilbert, 113, 17—96; Rev. J. O. McKelvey, 104, 0—104; Rev. C. L. Goodrich, 115, 2—112.

Among the latest enthusiasts to enter the game is Rev. L. R. Howard, who played his first game at the Park Golf Club on Saturday. Although a novice, he made a score of 130, doing very well. As yet the handicap committee has not given him a handicap and his scoreidid not count in the weekly competitions.

A social event at the Park Golf Club in the evening was a dinner given to a number of friends by the Misses May and Hattie Shreve. Covers were laid for twelve and the affair was a delightful one.

Entertainment at Hope Chapel.

Under the auspices of the ways and means committee, a musical entertainment will be given at Hope chapel, Friday night, for the benefit of the music fund. A splendid array of local talent has been secured and it will include favorite readings by Mrs. G. S. Simons; Scotch ditties by Mrs. L. R. Howard; mandolin and banjo selections by the Sagamore Club; vocal and instrumental selections by Judge William N. Runyon; novelty musical numbers by Musical Stewart and baritone selections by Frederick J. Pope.

Plainfielder Was Scrappy.

The serenity of Scotch Plains was disturbed late Saturday night by a belligerent Plainfielder, who had done two kinds of skating, entering one of the hotels and attempting to clean house. He mixed with a bartender and the latter got the worst of the argument. It is said that a warrant has been issued for the Plainfield man and his arrest will follow.

Honors for Plainfield Student.

Joshua Loizeaux, Plainfield High School, class '07, has entered Webb's Academy of Shipbuilders in New York. He is one of a class of twenty-two, chosen by competitive examination from 150 candidates.

ONE MORE FAST GAME BEFORE SEASON CLOSES

WASHINGTONS, OF NEWARK, WILL PLAY A WILTSE COMBINATION.

While the excitement of the post season games in the big leagues are stirring the blood of fandom, the Plainfield fanatics will have another chance to see a fast game at home. Arrangements have been completed for a contest on Crescent Oval next Saturday, between the Washington A. A., of Newark, and a swift local combination.

Lou Wiltse is at the head of the scheme to organize the Plainfield aggregation, and will be seen in the strongest representative line-up. The Washingtons are the champions of the semi-professional clubs of Newark, and hard, fast playing will be necessary to lower their colors. Jimmy Montross' plays with the Washingtons, and will be seen in the game on Saturday. Jimmy took the place of Reeves, who went Manager Daab, several weeks ago, on the pitching staff. Kelly, who pitched several games for Daab early in the season, is also on the twirling staff of the Washington club.

Wiltse has arranged a tentative line-up that looks good for any pace the Washingtons may set. Lou himself is slated for first. Phil Smith will probably twirl and there is every likelihood of getting Jack O'Neil to receive his stunts. Brit Martin at second and Joe Alberts at third, complete the plans for the infield. A snappy shortstop—Jack Martin has been thought of—will be signed in a day or two. Harry McLoughlin, who is back from New England, has agreed to play, and will care for the outfield with George Allen and some other heavy sticker.

It is understood from the Washington's end that Jimmy Montross will start for them in the box, and Kelly will take up the burden in a middle inning. The Washingtons play great ball, and a contest to warm the cockles of the long-denied fans is sure to be seen.

POPULAR YOUNG COUPLE PLIGHT THEIR TROTH.

Quiet Ceremony Unites Miss Mary J. Duckworth and Walter F. Emmons.

Miss Mary Josephine Duskworth, of North avenue, daughter of the late John Duckworth, and Walter Frederick Emmons, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter A. Emmons, of Jackson ave., were quietly married Saturday afternoon. The ceremony was performed at 2:30 by Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck at his home on West Front street and was witnessed only by the near relatives of the bride and groom. Miss Duckworth was attired in a becoming travelling gown of blue material.

Following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Emmons left for Atlantic City, where they will spend a week. On returning they will make their home on Bank place for the winter. They were the recipients of numerous presents of a useful nature, among them a substantial check.

Both Mr. Emmons and his bride are widely known locally and for several years have been prominent in the social affairs of the younger people. The former is an employe of the Woodbull-Martin Company.

Usher at Newark Wedding.

Lucius Koons, of Sanford avenue, was one of the ushers at the wedding Friday afternoon of his cousin, Miss Eleanor Savery Benjamin, daughter of Alfred Benjamin, to Daniel H. Crane, both of Newark. The marriage was solemnized at the Benjamin home, 144 Wakeman avenue, in the presence of seventy-five guests.

Teaching In Newark.

Miss Ada Westphal, daughter of Freeholder William Westphal, graduate of the Plainfield High School, class '05, is now teaching in one of the Newark Public Schools, preparatory to returning to the Newark Normal School to complete her course of study.

Car Shops for Harrison.

Plans for the large terminal and power station to be erected in Harrison by the Pennsylvania Railroad are completed, and active operations will be begun at once. The plans provide for a more extensive system than at first proposed. In addition to building a large terminal station and a large power-house there will be a large power-house and repair shop with laths, boring mills, bending rolls and other machinery. There will also be a blacksmith shop, coach shop, storage houses and pattern shops.

So Aggravating.

"Ma," said Mrs. Schoppen's little boy, looking up from his book, "what's a 'counter-irritant?'"

"A 'counter-irritant'!" repeated his mother, who had been in among the department stores all day. "That's what most every salesperson is these days."

A Noted Violinist.

Rudolph Rissland, one of the leading members of Walter Damrosch's New York Symphony orchestra, has been prevailed upon to give lessons in this city in the winter on the violin and the theory of music. Mr. Rissland became interested in Plainfield through Charles M. Suhr, leader of the New Plainfield theatre orchestra, who has sought for a long time to have him enter the local field.

RALLY DAY EXERCISES

Special Services Were Held by Three Baptist Congregations Yesterday.

1st M. E. CHURCH, TOO

Promotions at Park Avenue Baptist —Dr. Chambliss Speaks at First Baptist.

The members of the Park Avenue Baptist church and Sunday-school enjoyed all-day rally services Sunday, which were largely attended by members and friends. In the morning the pastor, Rev. A. E. Finn, preached a rally day sermon. There was an anthem by the choir, assisted by an orchestra consisting of G. W. V. Moy, Arthur S. Mosher, Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, Miss Arline Brown and Miss Marjorie Brown.

In the afternoon at 2:45 o'clock the Sunday-school rally was held. Superintendent George E. Hall presided, and this programme was given:

Selection, orchestra; responsive reading, prayer, Rev. A. E. Finn; selection, "Forward," intermediate school; cornet duette, "The Lord is My Shepherd,' Whitney C. Frazee and Benjamin Allen; offertory, roll call; selection, "Forward Ye Soldiers," intermediate school; solo, "My Prayer," with cornet obligato, Benjamin Allen; remarks, "The Lions in Iur Pathway," Rev. A. E. Finn; cornet solo, "Not Half Has Ever Been Told," Benjamin Allen; selection, "I Surrender All," adult class; address, Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, of the First Baptist church; hymn, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds;" benediction, Rev. Dr. Chambliss; postlude, orchestra. Miss Mary Clark was the pianist, and an orchestra consisting of G. W. V. Moy, Arthur S. Mosher, Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, Martin Stutsman, Miss Arline Brown, Miss Marjorie Brown, Whitney C. Frazee and Benjamin Allen, of Cranford; Charles L. Lewis led the singing.

Superintendent Hall presented every one with a pretty souvenir in the shape of a celluloid pin containing the words, "Park Avenue Baptist Sunday-school, Plainfield, N. J.," with an American flag in the center. The roll-call of the entire membership of the school was a pleasing feature. This was arranged by Mr. Hall and consisted of a large frame work hung upon the wall. Within the frame had been written the names of the entire school and as their names were called by the superintendent, a small red seal was affixed to the names of each absentee. This exercise held the close attention of the school, for not until the last name had been called, was it noticed that the blocks when put in places, contained very large figures "1906."

In the address by Dr. Chambliss he spoke of how all should rally around the Sunday-school, the Bible and the Cross. His remarks were helpful and held the attention of every one. The committee arranged the programme: George E. Hall, Miss Florence G. Hawkins, Miss Cora R. Brokaw, Mrs. W. S. Lowry, Miss Mary Clark and Miss Elmira C. Runyon.

Promotions were a feature of the rally day in the primary department. The following were promoted from the beginners' to the primary class: Francis Hale, J. Wesley Johnson, Jr., Arthur Dayton, John Thompson, Percy Stelle, Virginia Gary, Irene Moy, Milton Shoemaker. These children were promoted from the primary to the junior department: Madeline Moy, Edison Middlekauf, Chester Chamberlain, Isabelle Harvey, Ida Odam, Jessie Odam, Frank Gary, Ethel Gary, Leonard Lewis, Katherine Lee, Mary Hale, Willie Watts, Edith Lowry, Marion Thompson, Hilda VanWinkle, Randolph Stelle, Edgar Dean, Philip Schuyler and Lyle Smith. During the exercises Rev. A. E. Finn addressed the children.

The primary department exercises were in charge of Miss Elmira C. Runyon, superintendent.

First Baptist.

Rally day exercises were held at the First Baptist church yesterday afternoon under the auspices of the Sunday-school, of which George H. Batchelor is the superintendent. The programme opened with a violin solo by Miss Florence Wohlfert, followed with devotional exercises by Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss. There was songs by the beginners' class and the primary department, another violin solo by Miss Wohlfert and a vocal solo, "Just for Today," by William Holmes.

Then followed the roll-call and short talks by Superintendent Batchelor and Dr. Chambliss. The latter urged every officer, teacher and pupil to rally to the Sunday-school and be laid emphasis on the importance of parents attending Sunday-school. In his remarks Superintendent Batchelor referred to the fact that Miss Linda Butler, who has been connected with the school for thirty-five years, is soon to move to Mexico, and he expressed the regrets of the entire school in losing such a valuable member. Another feature of the programme were the recitations by Lawrence French.

Faith Chapel.

Under the auspices of the Sunday-school of Faith chapel rally day services were held Sunday afternoon, with a special programme. L. W. Randolph, the superintendent, was in charge. After the opening exercises including a song, and Scripture reading by Assistant Superintendent Frank Stewart and prayer by the pastor, Rev. J. W. Musson, the superintendent gave an address of welcome.

Then followed songs by the primary department. A feature was the recitations by Miss Justine Roberts, of Brooklyn. She gave "Luther's Cradle Hymn," "A Little Fellow's Sunday," "The Oak of Geisman," and "Seein' Things at Night," by Eugene Field.

There were also songs by the school, responsive reading and selections by an instrumental trio, violin, cornet and piano, and the calling of the roll. Mr. Randolph reported the following number in the school: Primary department, 50; cradle roll, 15; intermediate and Bible school, 100; Home department, 68. At the close of the exercises the superintendent distributed souvenirs to each one present in the form of motto cards large enough to frame and hang on the wall.

First M. E. Church.

Musical selections, recitations, promotions, awarding of prizes and an address, by Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, comprised the features of the rally day exercises of the First M. E. church Sunday-school in Vincent chapel, Sunday noon, following the morning preaching service. Superintendent Nelson A. Miller was in charge.

There was a welcome address by Alice Joy, songs by the school and recitations by the members of the beginners' department. These children were promoted from the beginners' department, with which Mrs. Arthur E. Crone is the superintendent, to the primary department, which is in charge of Mrs. Thomas MacDonald: Caryl Dunavan, Harold Seal, Harold Vail, Earl DeNise, John Bolstervn, Mildred Rathbun, Constance Swackhamer, Charles Carson, Cora Bender, Lillian Apgar, Frank Tallman, Jr., Harold Hartpence, Mabel Bolton, George Reed, Louise Snowden, Ruth Carver.

Those promoted from the cradle roll to the beginners' department are the following: Bertha Starbuck, Charles McKinley, Jr., John McVoy, Walter Dawe, Carry Greager and David Flammer.

In the beginners' department Margaret Evans, the youngest child in the school being three years, received the first prize for the best attendance, the next best attendance was awarded to Frank Rowley, Jr., and Harold Hall and Harold Seal and Loren Pope received honorable mention. The prize was "Huribut's Story of the Bible." In the primary department the prize for best attendance was given to Margaret Little.

A feature of the programme was an address by Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, who has just returned from a trip abroad in the interest of missions. He gave the pupils an interesting short talk on missions, telling something of his trip.

CHIEF KIELY GETS A STATEMENT FROM JONES

REMEMBERS NOTHING CONNECTED WITH THE SHOOTING.

John L. Jones, the man who was shot by William Smith Terry last week, was examined at the Isenburg hospital by Chief of Police Kiely, Sunday afternoon. He spoke freely, and the statement he made, together with things favorable to him that developed from the investigation carried on by the police, removed any lingering doubt in Chief Kiely's mind that the nigger was engaged in anything but the senseless escapade of a drunken man when he climbed into Terry's bedroom.

Jones told the chief he remembers nothing of his actions on the night of the shooting after travelling about West End saloons for a couple of hours. He drank heavily, he says, and his recollections end with a visit to Clark's saloon at Liberty and Third streets. Now street, where the Terry house is located, is only a block above Liberty.

Jones says he was born in Rockland, N. Y., where his mother and two sisters live. His brother, Griffin Jones, is manager of a livery stable in Yonkers. This part of his statement was confirmed Monday morning by a visit to the Chief from the livery stable manager himself. He had cards and other credentials ample to prove he was what he represented himself to be. He came here in response to a message the police sent to Yonkers.

As soon as he is strong enough, Jones will be arraigned before Judge Mosher to plead to a charge of breaking and entering. The case will be laid before the grand jury, but it is expected that the body will take no action on it. It is the opinion of the police that Jones has been punished more than enough for the disorder involved in his drunk, and the grand jury will undoubtedly regard the case in the same light. Jones is rapidly recovering from the effects of the bullet wound.

Sea Eats British Land.

It has been estimated that some 3,000,000 tons of detritus—mud, sand and shingle—are eroded each year from the Holderness coast between Bridlington and Spurn Point, and the great probability is that much of this material contributes to the silting up of the Humber estuary and the Wash.

A. H. SOUTHWICK NAMED

Trenton Man Nominated by Fourth District Congressional Convention.

AN UNANIMOUS CHOICE

Swackhamer Withdrew Before Convention—A Boom for Frech —All Harmony.

Upon a platform that demands the abolition of bribery in elections and corruption in politics, advocates the election of United States Senators by direct popular vote, the gradual reduction of the tariff upon certain products and the necessaries of life, and the development of the American merchant marine, the Democrats of Mercer, Somerset and Hunterdon counties, in convention assembled at Masonic Hall, Trenton, Saturday afternoon, nominated J. Allan Southwick, of that city, for congress from the Fourth Congressional district.

The nomination of Mr. Southwick, who is a councilman in Trenton, was somewhat of a surprise. It had been confidently expected that either Robert L. Stevens, of Bernardsville, or former Assemblyman Samuel S. Swackhamer, of North Plainfield, would be nominated. However, both Mr. Stevens and Mr. Swackhamer declined the honor just prior to the opening of the convention, and after a short conference a committee appointed to select a candidate announced that Mr. Southwick was their choice.

Thunderous applause and cheering that lasted a full minute followed when former Prosecutor Bayard Stockton, of Princeton, placed Mr. Southwick's name in nomination. The nomination was quickly seconded by the Somerset county delegation, and at the instance of the Hunterdon contingent it was made by acclamation.

In a short, terse speech, Mr. Southwick accepted, and thanked the delegates for the honor they had conferred upon him. His remarks were punctuated with displays of enthusiasm that made the hall ring, and left no doubt of the popularity of the convention's choice.

These were the delegates who conferred on a candidate: Mercer delegates, J. Allan Southwick, Dr. Walter Madden, Harry C. Hopper; Hunterdon delegates, Paul A. Queen and Jacob Dilts, Flemington; Robert T. Heath, Locktown; Somerset delegates, F. C. Sutro, Basking Ridge; T. C. Gibson, Franklin Park, and Martin Ryckel, Millstone.

Upon the convention approving the congressional committee, which is composed of H. L. Stout, of Flemington, Frank S. Katzenbach, Jr., Trenton, and John A. Frech, Somerville, the Fourth congressional convention of the Democratic party passed into history.

NOMINEES COMPARED.

Summit Record Tells Why It Prefers J. E. Martine.

"The Democratic nominee for Congress in this district is one whom every citizen should be glad to vote for except of course the hidebound Republican organization men who believe in their party right or wrong. James E. Martine is too well-known in every city and hamlet in the Fifth Congressional District to require any extended review of his work as a public-spirited citizen or the ideals he has always tried to maintain in every capacity. An eloquent speaker and deep-read student of national and State questions he would make such a representative in Congress as Union county has not had in generations.

"Contrasted with Charles N. Fowler it is impossible to see how any citizen having the welfare of the district at heart could have in doubt about which candidate to support. Mr. Fowler has had no interest in the district for years. He has never visited it except when he deemed it advisable to come here to attend to his political fences and these occasions have been rare because his lavish use of money for political purposes has been enough to hold the organization in line for him. During the sessions of Congress the time of Mr. Fowler has been spent looking after his private business or in attending to the work of the corporations in Wall street with which he has always been so closely identified. It is about time that the voters of the Fifth Congressional District secured a Congressman who will represent them and not one who is so wrapped up in the affairs of the Standard Oil and Typewriter Trusts that he can give no thought to New Jersey."—Summit Record.

The Extent of His Love.

The Count declared, with graceful tact,
She was the sweetest thing on earth,
He loved her very much; in fact,
About a million dollars' worth.

Trifles of Interest.

The world's production of wine amounts to 4,000,000,000 gallons annually.

In the forest land fifty per cent. more rain soaks into the ground than in open country.

There are about 185 inhabited British isles, of which Scotland claims over one hundred.

HOOLEY STABLE WINNINGS

Second Only to Otto Kahn at Three Days Horse Show at Morristown.

TOOK SEVEN FIRSTS

"Quaker Maid" and "Darthea" Received Three Blues On Saturday in Rapid Succession.

Still further honors were won by Plainfield horses in the closing of the Morristown Field Club horse show on Saturday. The feature of the afternoon was the hunt club competition, in which three teams took part. In this event the riders were hunting costumes and presented a pretty sight. The Watchung Hunt Club, of this city, entered two teams, and the Essex Club one. The riders were Messrs. Freeman, Fisk and Bellows for Watchung No. 1; Messrs. White, Howard and Schmidt for Watchung No. 2, and Messrs. Pfizer, Hyde and Wilderding for Essex. The Essex Club was an easy winner on performance, as the Watchung horses could not go in the mud, even though sawdust was spread freely about the jumps.

Mrs. Edwin S. Hooley's chestnut team, Quaker Maid and Darthea, started off the day by capturing three first prizes, but the going was so heavy they soon lost their form. The Hooley stable was a close second to Kahn during the three days, taking seven firsts, three seconds and three thirds. Saturday's results:

Class 32—For local harness horses over 15 and not exceeding 15.2 hands. First, "Quaker Maid," Mrs. Edwin S. Hooley.

Class 3—Pair of roadsters. First, Miss Banahan and Miss Westcott, W. J. Banfield.

Class 28—Local horse and runabout over 14.3 and not exceeding 15.2 hands. First, Darthea, Mrs. Edwin S. Hooley; fourth, Quaker Maid, Mrs. Edwin S. Hooley.

Class 26—Local lady's phaeton and horse, not over 15.2 hands, ladies to drive. First, Quaker Maid, Mrs. Edwin S. Hooley.

Class 27—Hunt Club competition for three hunters from one club. Second, Watching Hunt Club.

Class 41—Local pairs of horses not exceding 15.3 hands shown before a victoria, cabriolet or brougham. Second, Quaker Maid, Mrs. Edwin S. Hooley.

SERVICE IN MEMORY OF JOHN G. WHITTIER.

His Life Reviewed and His Poems Sung By Grace M. E. Church Congregation.

The memory of John Greenleaf Whittier, the poet, was honored by the congregation of Grace M. E. church Sunday night, when a special service dedicated to him was given. It was conducted by Dr. Parsons and was greatly enjoyed by the large gathering.

In an address dealing with Whittier's life and works, Dr. Parsons paid him a glowing tribute and dwelt especially on his patriotism. He compared him with Longfellow and Lowell and pointed out how in many ways his poems reached the hearts of the people more than did those of his contemporaries. Seven of Whittier's poems are in the new Methodist hymnal and all were sung by the congregation.

Another poem by the some author was sung as a solo by Miss Winifred Carroll, contralto, accompanied by Miss Alice Carroll, organist, and Dyckman Winckler, violinist.

A service for reception of members was held in the morning and seventeen persons joined the church, fourteen from probation and three by letter.

Mr. and Mrs. Hall Home.

Mr. and Mrs. David Prescott Hall have returned to Plainfield, having spent several weeks with Mrs. Hall's mother, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, at her place near Newport, R. I. They report Mrs. Howe as being in excellent health, and busy on articles on current topics. Miss Louise Hall line Minturn Hall will remain with her grandmother until the end of October, in order to complete the landscapes which she is now painting, as also a portrait of Mrs. Howe.

Y. M. C. A. Basketball Team.

Re-organization of the Y. M. C. A. basketball team has not been completed yet. An unexpected hitch has set back the re-formation. Several changes in the line-up will be made, but Physical Director Listman expects to put a team in the league that will bring honor enough to the association standard.

Suing Mrs. Sanford.

Another suit has been started against Mrs. Alice H. Sanford, of New Market. She is being sued for a medical bill by Dr. T. H. Platt, of Dunellen. The case is set for October 15, before Justice Von Minden, of New Market. Deputy Sheriff Robert Pierce served the papers.

Miss McLaughlin Entertains.

Miss Hattie McLaughlin, of Somerset street, gave a "blind" euchre at her home, Saturday night, to a party of friends. Thirty in all were in attendance and there was spirited play for prizes. Refershments were served at a late hour.

THE "LITTLE CHURCH" CELEBRATES ITS BIRTH

EDIFICE MADE FAMOUS BY JEFFERSON IS 58 YEARS OLD.

"The Little Church 'Round the Corner," New York, had a birthday Sunday. It celebrated its fifty-eighth anniversary in the edifice that has grown as the big city grew around it, and yet stays small and hidden away between much more lofty piles of stone and brick. Special services were held in commemoration of the event, and old parishioners, many of whom live far uptown, flocked to the church until all the seats were filled and men and women were standing at the back of the nave.

The Church of the Transfiguration, which is the proper name of the church, was founded by the father of the present rector, George Hendric Houghton, S. T. D. The first services were held on the first Sunday in October, 1848, in the parlor of the home of Mr. Lawton Carter at 48 East Twenty-fourth street. It was on Mid-Lent Sunday, 1850, that the first services were held in the church itself. It was a very small edifice then, even in comparison with its proportions today, for the present Little church at that time is now only the west end of the nave adjoining the chapel.

When the first congregation came out into the sunlight on that Mid-Lent Sunday they had an unobstructed view to the south across Madison Square and northward to the crest of Murray Hill. To east and west there were a few scattered buildings of mean architecture, but the church stood quite alone; a low brown structure, not unlike the parish church of some English village.

It was through the late Joseph Jefferson that the church gained the name of "The Little Church 'Round the Corner," and the incident that led to the application of the name also endeared the church to thousands of the theatrical profession.

An actor had died. Jefferson, then a comparatively young man, had been nursing him, and when the end came he sought a minister, believing that his fellow-actor would wish to be buried from some church. Jefferson made application at the parsonage of a large church in the neighborhood, but he was told:

"I am very sorry, but I have not the time at present to bury an actor. However, there is a little church 'round the corner where it is possible that you will find a minister there willing to do as you wish."

Jefferson found Dr. Houghton, who gladly officiated, and the actor, who afterward became the dean of the theatrical profession in this country, spread the story, and frequently attended the church.

When Dr. Houghton, the founder of the church, died, his son, the Rev. George Clarke Houghton, took up the charge and he has conducted the church strictly on the lines laid down by his father. The church is kept open at all hours, and, with its green trees and wide church yard hemmed in by apartment houses and residences, it is one of the sights of the city. From the number of runaway marriages that have taken place there it has come to be regarded as a sort of Gretna Green of New York city.

What "The Little Church 'Round the Corner" stands for and what has made it so popular with so many classes of people is possibly best shown in the late Dr. Houghton's words:

"In the personal ministry of mercy and blessing, no sin, no degradation, no sickness, no poverty should be a barrier to that ministry; there must be no man or woman hesitating to seek it in time of need; and, thanks be to God, in five and forty years not once has the foot of that personal ministry withheld itself from crossing any threshold through fear of possible personal peril."

SMALL BOYS LOSE THEIR PUTTY BLOWERS.

Jackson Avenue Parents Become Active After Little Louis Jeffrey Cuts His Mouth.

Because 6-year-old Louis Jeffrey was foolish enough to have an accident where his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John P. Jeffrey, of Jackson avenue, couldn't see it, all the small boys in the neighborhood lost their putty blowers Saturday afternoon. Louis fell with the tin-tube in his mouth, and when the parents of Jackson avenue heard of the painful result they made a raid on the stores of their neighborhood and confiscated all the putty blowers in sight. Wherefore, the small boys of Jackson avenue are nearly as sore on Louis as his mouth, which is full of pain.

Louis' accident occurred in the house. He was using the putty blower between his teeth, when he fell and struck the end of the tube on the floor. The other end was driven into the flesh along the side of his mouth, gauging out a half an inch in it. The tube barely missed the palate.

Dr. A. H. Dunham was called in and dressed the wound. The injury is not serious.

—"Dolph" Giles, formerly of this city, who has been in the U. S. Navy for several years, is now located at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, after having traveled around the world. He has a clerical position.

UNION WORKMEN FORM A STATE ASSOCIATION

PLAINFIELDER MADE FIRST VICE-PRESIDENT IN ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

Union workmen from all parts of New Jersey assembled at Montclair, Monday, and formed a State association of the International Laborers' Union. In the election of officers that followed, James Brown, of this city, was made first vice-president. He is connected with the local machinists' union and has represented it in numerous conferences and conventions.

The other officers elected were State President Thomas Healey, of Montclair; second vice-president John Somerville, of Dover, secretary and treasurer John McKee, of Montclair. The places represented by delegates were Newark, Montclair, Dover, Phillipsburg, Plainfield, Long Branch, Red Bank, Passaic, Paterson and also Boston, Pa. W. J. Crichtlow, of Dayton, O., the international president, was to have been present, but was prevented by sickness.

The session was called to order by John McKee, who previously had been appointed State representative by the national president. He gave an address on organized labor and its objects. James Beirne, president of the Montclair local union, then took the chair. The objects of the union were explained and a committee was appointed to draw up a set of by-laws, in conformity with the international by-laws, and another committee was named to select the officers.

Dover was selected as the place for the next meeting, which will be held Sunday, January 6, 1907.

MISS UHLER IS WEDDED

Charming Young Woman is the Bride of Philip Cuyler Langdon.

CEREMONY AT GRACE

Society Folk Throng Episcopal Church to Witness the Ceremonial—Reception Follows at Fanwood.

Grace church was the scene Saturday of one of the prettiest weddings that has occurred here for a long time, when Miss Marie Celine Uhler, a very attractive blonde, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Martin Uhler, became the bride of Philip Cuyler Langdon, of Brooklyn. Mr. Langdon is the son of Mrs. P. C. Langdon, of 130 South Elliot place, Brooklyn, and of the class '02 of Princeton.

The church was very prettily decorated with palms, ferns and white potted plants. William E. MacClymont presided at the organ and rendered some charming selections before the bridal party arrived. While the organist played the grand march from Lohengrin the bridal party entered the church, preceded by William E. Greene, of Newton, Mass., as head usher, and James Argesinger H. McClord, of Greenwich, Conn., classmates of the groom, and C. B. Farnell, of Baltimore, Princeton '94, and A. E. Cummings, of Brooklyn.

The maid of honor, Miss Lilla Cornell, of East Orange, preceded the other bridesmaids, who were Miss Jessie Douglass, of Brooklyn; Miss Arline Marshall, of Newton, N. J.; Miss Beulah Bailey, of Newton, Mass.; Miss Lillian Fancher, of Fanwood. Following them came Mrs. William Crane, of Newton, Mass., as matron of honor. Then came the bride, leaning on the arm of her father, who gave her in marriage. They were met at the chancel by the groom and best man, Fred Langdon, brother of the groom. The Rev. E. Vicar Stevenson performed the betrothal ceremony. Rev. Morris Kemp, of New York, an old friend of the family, solemnized the marriage service.

The wedding party left the church to Mendelssohn's wedding march.

The bride was gowned in white chiffon cloth, simply made, trimmed with Duchess lace worn by the bride's mother at her wedding. She wore a tulle veil and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and bride roses. The matron of honor wore a gown of pale blue silk radium with baby Irish lace and pale blue ostrich plumes and carried a bouquet of tea roses and autumn leaves. The maid of honor and other bridesmaids wore pale blue silk radium, the skirts with clusters of tucks, the waists with insertion and medallions of baby Irish lace. With these they wore pale blue felt hats, faced with velvet with pale blue tulle and ostrich plumes. They carried American beauty roses tied with green tulle. The bride's mother wore a handsome violet cloth gown, the waist trimmed with Irish lace and hat with wings to match her costume. She carried a large bunch of violets.

A wedding reception took place, following the ceremony, at the home of the bride's parents in Fanwood. The house was tastefully decorated by Stanley. The hall and stairway were strikingly attractive in autumn boughs, and red blossoms. The library, where the bridal party received, was decorated in palms and white potted plants. The dining room in bride's roses and asparagus vine. The piazzas were enclosed and lighted with electric lights in Japanese lanterns. The music was furnished by Wittan's orchestra and Maresi served the wedding supper.

The bride presented her matron of honor, maid of honor and bridesmaids with pearl pendants designed by Tiffany, while the groom gave his ushers amethyst scarf pins.

The bride's gift to the groom was a pearl and diamond scarf pin and Mr. Langdon presented his bride with a pin in the shape of a crown of pearls and diamonds. The couple were the recipients of many handsome presents.

The bride's going away costume was in chestnut brown with hat and ostrich boa to match.

Mr. and Mrs. Langdon left for Aiken, S. C., for a long honeymoon, after which they will take up their residence in Fanwood.

Special Service of Sermons.

The topics will be as follows: October 14, What God Says to Me as a Child; 21, What God Says to Me as a Young Man; 28, What God Says to Me as a Young Woman; November 4, What God Says to Me in My Marriage Relation; 11, What God Says to Me About My Home; 18, What God Says to Me About My Business; 25, What God Says to Me About My Church; December 2, What God Says to Me with Respect to My Ambition; 9, What God Says to Me as a Christian; 16, What God Says to Me in My Old Age; 23, What God Says to Me About Heaven.

MINORITY PARTY TICKET

Desmond, Hague and Coulter Are Nominated For the Assembly.

MARTINE IS CHEERED

Wild Enthusiasm When "Farmer-Orator" Is Escorted to Platform—His Ringing Speech.

For Member of the Assembly, James E. Desmond, of Elizabeth. Joseph T. Hague, of Elizabeth. Harry C. Coulter, of Rahway.

For Coroner.

Dr. F. Otto Wagner, of Elizabeth.

These are the candidates nominated by the Democrats at the county convention in Elizabeth Friday night. Old-time Jacksonians declared that the gathering was the liviliest convention held by the Democrats in many moons. In the last few years the shattered Democracy has experienced hard times in getting candidates enough to fill their ticket, but last year, it will be remembered, that the roll was called seven times before any one was found loyal enough to make a run for Senator until Mr. Nugent volunteered.

But last night matters were different. Alfred Judson Hancock, the big delegate from Clark township who has went through many gales with the ship of Democracy without flinching, and who proudly boasts of a record of attending thirty-seven Democratic conventions as a delegate in his career, was boiling over with enthusiasm over the return of old democracy, and adjournment he gave vent to his feelings by prophesying that Jim Martine and the whole ticket would go through the golden gates of success with a ripping old majority.

Instead of there being a scarcity of candidates, there was enough names mentioned before the convention convened to fill half a dozen tickets. Only five got in the race, however. In addition to the nominations of Messrs. Desmond, Hague and Coulter, LeRoy Gibbs, of Summit, presented the name of Mayor George W. Baldwin, while John F. Callahan, of Roselle, named George Reiss, of Roselle Borough. James E. Desmond, was placed in nomination by Joseph Anderson, of the First ward, of Elizabeth. Mr. Desmond is a young man, a plumber by occupation and a member of the Elizabeth Board of Education, and has the endorsement of the Union County Trades' Union. William Eckerson, of the Ninth ward, Elizabeth, nominated for Assembly Chairman Joseph T. Hague, and Harry E. Coulter, of Rahway, was placed in nomination by R. D. Gibbe, of the same place.

Messrs. Reiss and Baldwin received only a few scattering votes and before the roll was half called it was evident that they hadn't a chance for nominations, and both candidates gracefully withdrew the nominations of Desmond, Hague and Coulter being made unamious.

A platform embodying the following principles was adopted; declares emphatically against campaign contributions coming from the corporations; favors the elections of United States Senators by the direct vote of the people; favors the assessment of railroad properties at local rates; denounces the Republican policies of government in vogue at Washington and at Trenton; favors a modification of the high prohibitive protective tariff; favors an amendment to the primary law for direct nominations by the people, and enters a vigorous protest against all forms of boss rule.

The platform was presented to the convention by J. J. Lane, of Summit. It originally included a clause endorsing William J. Curtis, a Summit lawyer, as the choice of the Union County Democrats for United States Senator. This called forth a vigorous objection from Walter L. Hetfield, Sr., chairman of the Plainfield delegation. Mr. Hetfield in stating his opinion declared he was not the business of the convention to go into that question for it was a matter for the Legislature to decide. The Plainfielder declared that he favored the platform with the exception of this plank.

This was a cause for a verbal cyclone which waged hot while it last, and made the proceedings look like a real convention. Station Agent Lane jumped to his feet and extolled Mr. Curtis in glowing terms.

After the eloquence of the Summit man had died away, William Atkinson, a young lawyer of Elizabeth, who sat with the delegates of the Twelfth ward of that city, arose and requested to be heard on the subject. The chairman consented. Atkinson got started in his speech and backed up the contentions of Lawyer Hetfield. In flowery language he paid a great tribute to Colonel Stevens and told the convention that it was the duty of the Democrats to stand by a man who had stood for Democracy through thick and thin. Atkinson carried his hearers to all parts of the continent in his eulogy of the Hudson county man. "Go where you will," he declared, "from Greenland's icy mountains in the north, to Georgia's sunny climes in the south, to California's golden gate in the west, to Maine's rock bound coast in the east, you will not find a more loyal Democrat than Col. Stevens, and it is men of his calibre that we need in the Senate."

After this expounding Atkinson gave a gasp, and started out anew. Judge Mahon rapped for order several times, but Atkinson stood his ground and finished his speech. The crowd was with him and his sentiments, and yelled its approval. After he had been quited, the endorsement clause was stricken from the platform, Hetfield had won his point. Station Agent Lane naturally went home feeling very sore. This incident proved one of the most exciting periods, several of the old time war horses of the party looking around in wonderment over such a big commotion at a Union county Democratic convention.

A resolution, introduced by Colonel Collins, of Elizabeth, endorsing the candidacy of James E. Martine for Congress went through like wildfire and was adopted with a grand hurrah.

At this juncture of the proceedings Delegate Gibbe, of Rahway, arose and suggested that the "farmer orator" be escorted to the platform. Col. Collins and J. J. Collins, of Elizabeth, and P. J. Reveille, of this city, were appointed a committee to perform the act.

When Plainfield's favorite son mounted the platform he was greeted by a storm of applause which did not subside for four minutes. Delegates jumped on their feet and frantically waved their hands and hats in the air, and the walls and foundations of old Turn Hall literally shook. It was a great ovation for the Democratic war horse. The farmer orator's voice was in fine fettle and he was propounded his Jeffersonian doctrines just as vigorously as of yore.

"It is not strange for me to be here in old Turn Hall," he started off, "and it is not strange that I am running again for office. I really think a Democratic ticket in Union county would be a very funny affair without Martine on it. Defeat has no terrors for me, but because I have lost, it did not mean that I did not want to conquer. I always wanted to win, and I have always used fair and legitimate means to win, and I can truthfully say that I have never done a mean or dishonest thing to make a vote." (Applause and cries "Your right, Jim.")

"Fowler has been your representative twelve years. In that time how has he represented your interests? It is a notorious fact that his seat has been vacant eight-tenths of that time. I hold that when a man is elected to office he takes an implied obligation that he should represent his constituents. If he fails in this duty he is guilty of a grave wrong. Two years ago I charged Fowler with being present but five times during his last term, and he never denied it. I put him on trial again today for neglect of duty, and with the constituency of the Fifth Congressional district is the jury that is trying him.

"Your district in Congress has not been misrepresented, but non-represented. If elected I'll be there and it won't be necessary for any of you to take off your hat and wipe your shoes before you can see me. I want to teach Fowler a lesson in geography. He is supposed to represent in Congress, Warren, Union and Morris counties, but instead of doing that he spends his time among the marble quarries of Vermont. I declare that he has no right or claims to represent you in Congress under these conditions.

"I charge Fowler with not being in sympathy with organized labor. It is the only hope of the workingmen to organize trade associations. Organized labor has a right to appeal to Congress and the halls of legislation to ask reasonable hours for labor. I believe the God of human kind meant twenty-four hours to be divided in three parts; eight hours for work; eight hours for recreation and eight hours for rest. If it is my privilege my vote will always be cast on that side.

"It is unjust and unholy for railroads and corporations to have their rates fixed specially for their benefit. Roosevelt found it necessary to press upon his party the necessity for a rate bill, and was assisted by those great Democrats, Ben Tillman and Billy Sulzer. Where was Fowler in that controversy?"

Mr. Martine also reviewed the equal taxation matters and other questions and expressed his opinion that the Democrats will have a Joint majority in the next Legislature.

Following Mr. Martine the Assembly candidates were introduced and made brief addresses.

The convention was called to order by Judge Mahon who was after elected permanent chairman. Fred Zior was chosen secretary.

These committees were named and served: Committee on Credentials—C. L. Hughes, Elizabeth; Charles Clark, Westfield; Frank Trunsler, Rahway.

Committee on Organization—John J. Collins, Elizabeth; Alfred Hancock, Linden; Stephen Schlief, Plainfield.

Committee on Rules—George B. Cladets, Rahway; James H. Laughlin, Elizabeth; P. J. Reveille, Plainfield.

Committee on Resolutions—J. J. Lane, Summit; Philip Donohoe, Elizabeth; John M. C. Marsh, Westfield.

Committee on Vacancies—Col. D. F. Collins, Elizabeth; Jacob Bruckhasher, Elizabeth; Walter L. Hetfield, Sr., Plainfield.

Mrs. Arthur J. Sullard and daughter, of Bound Brook, have returned home after a visit with friends here.

TRIBUTE TO MR. MARTINE

State's Foremost Republican Daily Sizes Up Democratic Congressional Nominee.

IS A GOOD CITIZEN

"Possibility That Office Having Sought the Ban, Has at Last Found Him," Says Newark News.

The Newark Evening News, recognized as New Jersey's leading daily, paid a splendid tribute to James E. Martine Friday night. Its editorial, headed, "The Office Seeks the Man," follows:

"James E. Martine, the farmer-orator of Union County, the personal friend of William J. Bryan, the most loyal Democrat in the State and one of the best all-round citizens to be met with in a month's march, has again been nominated for Congress in the Fifth District, and will make a second fight for the seat, now held by Congressman Charles N. Fowler. And when it is said that he will make a fight, the term is used advisedly. When Mr. Martine enters upon a campaign he fills it so full of strenuosity and aggressiveness that it is a fight from beginning to end. There is no skirmishing, no tactical retreat; nothing but hand-to-hand fighting all along the line.

"When the district Democratic convention met at Morristown there were two candidates in the field. One of these was John Moody, of Cranford, the fierce denouncer of the Democratic State committee, the corporations, the trusts, the treacherous, traitorous methods of the leaders and the irrepressible advocate of reform in the party. He had made too many enemies by his frankness and was laid on the shelf to cool. The other was William Jr. Wilson, an Elizabeth lawyer; but he was not considered aggressive enough. In the emergency, who? Then, as on many similar occasions before, the eyes of the delegates turned with one accord toward James E. Martine, and he was nominated by acclamation.

"What he did for the ticket this honor. He has never sought office. Though he has been a candidate, in years past, for county clerk, for State Senator, for Congress and for pretty much everything that the Democratic party could offer him, the office has come to him in this free ing elected, all these ephemeral honors have been thrust upon him. He has freely given his whole political life to the Democratic party and has received in return nothing but broad smiles, a minority vote and the consciousness of having done his whole duty.

"It is a long lane that has no turn. For twenty-five years Mr. Martine has involuntarily borne the brunt of hopeless candidacy, and has willingly taken up the task and wipe your shoes before you can see me. I want to teach Fowler a lesson in geography. He is supposed to represent in Congress, Warren, Union and Morris counties, but instead of doing that he spends his time among the marble quarries of Vermont. I declare that he has no right or claims to represent you in Congress under these conditions.

"I charge Fowler with not being in sympathy with organized labor. It is the only hope of the workingmen to organize trade associations. Organized labor has a right to appeal to Congress and the halls of legislation to ask reasonable hours for labor. I believe the God of human kind meant twenty-four hours to be divided in three parts; eight hours for work; eight hours for recreation and eight hours for rest. CONGREGATIONALIST C. E. HOLDS ANNUAL MEETING.

After Election of Officers a Novel Entertainment Is Provided.

Officers were elected at a social gathering held by the Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational church at the home of the Rev. and Mrs. Charles L. Goodrich, on West Seventh street, Friday, when plans were discussed for the winter. It being the annual meeting, the pastor invited the young people to meet at the parsonage, and in connection with the business a novel programme was provided.

These officers were elected:

President, Rolland D. Rice; vice president, Cari Steiner; secretary, George Bentley; treasurer, Stanley *Fisher; chairman of the prayer meet*ing committee, Miss Lulu Fuller; chairman lookout committe, Harold Millar; chairman of the missionary committee, Miss Alice Morgan; chairman of social committee, Miss Myra Emmons; chairman of the music committee, Miss Jean Millar.

After the business the young people engaged in what was called a "track tournament," several yards of tape were provided, and the subject was to see who could cut the strips in two from end to end first. The young people were paired in twos and the affair was conducted similar to a tennis tournament, there being the various rounds, with the semifinals and finals. The contest made fearfully lots of fun for all. Stacy Raynolds won the event. After the game, refreshments were served by Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich.

JAMES BOY COMMITTED TO STATE REFORMATORY.

Somerset Grand Jury Indicted Him for Breaking Into King's Daughters' Baby Camp.

Willie James, the thirteen-year-old borough boy who broke into the King's Daughters' baby camp and destroyed property worth $200, was committed to the Jamesburg reformatory by Judge Schenck in court at Somerville, Friday. The lad was arrested two days after the crime was committed and testimony against him was at once submitted to the Grand Jury, then in session. An indictment was returned and as James is a first record delinquent he was deemed the reformatory the best place for him.

Six Italians from Peapack, charged with assault and battery with intent to kill on a fellow-countryman, in which the latter's head was cut open with a razor, pleaded not guilty at the session of court, yesterday afternoon, and were released in $1,000 bail each for trial October 29.

J. K. Arnold, Jr., Now Chief Clerk.

The Public Service Corporation has decided not to put anyone in the place left vacant by the resignation of Assistant Superintendent Ralph E. Bache, who has gone to Colorado Springs, but Superintendent H. S. Richardson, of Metuchen, will have general oversight of the district formerly looked after by Mr. Bache, while James K. Arnold, Jr., who has been with the company for several years, has been made chief clerk with headquarters in this city. This will mean that Mr. Arnold will be in charge of the district including Plainfield and extending to Somerville, under the general supervision of Mr. Richardson.

A Scent on the Trail.

The reason Mr. Halloway decided to purchase a second auto was because some of his friends complained that he had been using a new brand of gasoline in his other machine, but on investigation it was learned that he had accidentally run over a skunk. —Oskaloosa (Iowa) Globe.

Tired of Leading a Dog's Life.

Sunday morning Joseph Beck found a large black dog that had committed suicide by hanging himself on the garden fence. The owner can have the carcass by calling.—Whitestown Co. Lebanon (Ind.) Pioneer.

A Cheerful American to Return.

Charles Battell Loomis, the author of "Cheerful Americans," and "More Cheerful Americans," will return to Fanwood early this month. It is rumored that he has had a great success in England.

C. P. Fulmer Sued.

William Kelvie has brought suit against C. F. Fulmer, on contract, in the District Court, for $200. The case is set for Tuesday, October 16. F. J. Blatz is the plaintiff's lawyer.

Acres of Love.

TO INCULCATE IDEALS IN PLAINFIELD BOYS

PURITY AND MANLINESS OBJECTS OF HOLY CROSS BOYS' CLUB.

The members of the Holy Cross Boys' Club met Friday night for the purpose of electing officers and planning for the activities of the coming season. After roll-call a temporary secretary was appointed and the club proceded to the consideration of the constitution and by-laws submitted by the committee.

The liberal policy of the club was recognized by the first clause in the constitution which reads: "The object of the club shall be to bring together, without regard to religious belief, boys who are willing to work for the common ideals of honesty, purity and manliness and who will strive for mutual helpfulness and self-betterment."

The nominating committee reported the names of boys selected as suitable for club officers. Twelve names were proposed and out of the number these were chosen:

President, Ira Vail; treasurer, Bert Miller; secretary, Russell Vail; librarian, Edward Schorb.

The committee on athletics met and *arranged for a field day competi*tion, open to members of the club, to be held Saturday afternoon, October 21, at 2:30 o'clock on the Cricket Field, North Plainfield. A football game by the club eleven against a visiting team will follow the sports. Tickets will be issued next week.

The entertainment committee decided on a social to be held Saturday night, November 4. Report was made of the new books, magazines and other gifts to the club. Three new names of applicants for membership were reported favorably by the membership committee and by majority vote of the club were elected to membership. The athletic committee reported three games scheduled for the football team and other games in prospect.

ARABIAN MISSIONS THEME OF TRINITY MISSION BAND.

Young Women Start the Season's Work With Promises of Renewed Effort.

The Young Women's Mission Band of Trinity Reformed church held its first meeting for the season in the church parlors, Friday afternoon, and judging by the activity of the organization, the coming year will be a successful one in the cause of foreign and home missions. After the regular business session, which was of a routine nature, Miss Margaret Leggett read an interesting paper on "The Story of a Missionary Barrel." This was followed by the distribution of questions regarding the Arabian missions, and the members were supposed to answer them for the enlightenment of all as to what is being done in that country toward the advancement of Christianity.

A letter from Miss Lillian Hart, M. D., who is stationed at the Ramapetti Mission in Arcot, India, gave an exceedingly instructive story of the work there.

It was reported that during the past year thirty-five articles were made and sent to foreign mission fields and that a Christmas box is now in course of preparation to be sent to Wisconsin in a short time. Three new members were elected and the band begins the new year hopeful of accomplishing very much. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served and a social time enjoyed.

INTRUDER GOT A BULLET

He Was Climbing Into a New Street Bedroom at 3:30 A. M.

DROPPED BY QUICK SHOT

Supposedly Tipsy Workman Got Reception That William Smith Terry Has On Tap For Burglarious Visitors.

A noise from outside awoke Mrs. William Smith Terry, who lives with her husband in the upper part of the house at 211 New street, at 3:30 o'clock a.m. Friday. She thought it was made by a heavy rain, and woke her husband to tell him about it. Terry looked toward a side window and saw a man climbing in from the roof of the porch; he was half-way in, with his right foot poised over the floor. Terry pulled a .32 calibre revolver from under his pillow and fired. The man dropped outside, without uttering a sound.

Terry jumped up and went downstairs with his wife to arouse his uncle, who lives on the lower floor. The uncle met the bedroom with his uncle, and a groan reached their ears from the porch roof below the window. Terry knew then that the affair hadn't been a dream, and he hurried across the street to the office of Undertaker Partick Casey to telephone to the police.

Sergeant Frederickson hustled Officers McCarthy, Messler and Keetle to New street in the patrol wagon. They surrounded the house and started a round-up. Terry's target was not in sight anywhere about the grounds, and they went inside. In Terry's bedroom they found the object of their search. He lay on the floor, with a bullet hole in his left breast. He was conscious, but very weak. He must have crawled back into the room almost as soon as Terry and his uncle left to telephone for the police. He was partially undressed, and had apparently tried to prepare to go into the bed.

On the way to the house, the officers had gotten Dr. C. B. Lufburrow, the city physician, from his house on West Front street, and he took charge of the wounded man at once. He told the officers the man was too badly hurt to be questioned, and had the ambulance summoned for his removal to the hospital.

Chief Kiely was notified of the case as soon as the men had left headquarters, started an investigation at once. He had learned this morning that the injured man was known as John L. Jones, and had been in this city for three weeks, employed at the cement-block machinery factory on South Second street. He is a man of about 35 years, and has been living at McVey's Hotel, West Front street and Clinton avenue.

Chief Kiely was convinced this morning that Jones was not a crook, and that his presence at the Terry house was the result of a half-drunken act. Absolutely nothing of a burglarious nature was found about the house, the grounds, or his clothes, and Dr. Lufburrow found many evidenced that he had been drinking too much. An empty flask was found on the porch roof. He did not return to his hotel after supper last night. A search of his clothes yielded only a small sum in change and two letters, apparently from a sister living in Yonkers, N. Y. The letters were signed only by a first name.

Jones will recover. The bullet struck about two inches from the apex of the heart, but followed the line of a rib, and lodged in his side. It was extracted by the doctor, and at noon he was resting comfortably. Chief Kiely will give him a day or two in which to recover his strength before subjecting him to an examination. In the meantime, the sleuths will seek to learn where he spent last night before reaching the Terry house.

Mrs. Terry told the police this morning that she noticed a man hanging about the street opposite her house yesterday afternoon, and she thought he looked as if he was watching her place of residence in the house next door. The police doubt if the man had any connection with Jones, but the clue will be followed up.

The Handy Time-Table.

The ever-awake Plainfield Trust Company is distributing Plainfield-New York time-tables. The table includes the express trains that stop to let off passengers and is the most handy thing of its kind ever issued here. The tables are up to the minute up to date, and they are all contained in a neat little folder that can be placed in a vest pocket.

"Old Home Week" at Elizabeth.

*The Elizabeth City Council has en*dorsed the resolution the movement for "Old Home Week," to be held in Elizabeth during October, 1907, and within a few weeks Mayor Berry will issue a proclamation calling upon all the citizens to unite in making the event a success.

It Would Never Do.

Mr. Newlywed—Why not make Thursday your "At home day?"

Mrs. Newlywed—Gracious, no! That would never do. People would think then that we have only one girl and that I have to stay in to let her go out.

AGAIN PIT J. E. MARTINE AGAINST C. N. FOWLER

CHARLES A. MILES WEDS MISS ROSETTA ACKOR

CEREMONY WITNESSED BY A LARGE GATHERING OF FRIENDS.

In the presence of a large gathering of friends, Miss Rosetta Allen Ackor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip H. Ackor, of Westervelt avenue, and Charles Albert Miles, of Somerset street, were married at the home of the bride's parents, Wednesday afternoon. The ceremony was performed at 5 o'clock by Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, pastor of the First Baptist church.

Miss Beaulah F. Lightfoot, of Westfield, was maid of honor, and Alfred F. Egan, of this city, was best man. Miss Ackor was gowned in white silk mulle over taffeta and carried a bouquet of white roses. Her attendant wore pink silk and carried pink roses. The bride entered the parlor leaning on her father's arm and walked to the center of the room where she was given in marriage beneath a floral bell. The decorations throughout the various rooms and hall were decidedly pretty.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held and later a wedding supper was served. Early last night Mr. and Mrs. Miles left for a wedding trip that will embrace visits to several points of interest in New England. On returning they will make their home at 236 Somerset street. They received a large and attractive array of presents.

The guests present included relatives and friends from New York, Newark, Jersey City, Boston, New Haven, Somerville, Flemington, New Market and other places.

BIRDSALL—PATTERSON.

Miss Isabelle Patterson Becomes Mrs. G. C. Birdsall.

Miss Isabelle Patterson, daughter of Mrs. Andrew Stuart Patterson, formerly of this city, and Dr. Gregg Curtis Birdsall, of Washington, were married at 12 o'clock Thursday, at the home of the bride's cousin, Mrs. William Richards, in New York. The event was witnessed by a number of relatives and friends from this city, and guests were present from Washington, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and New York. A reception followed the ceremony and this afternoon the couple left on a wedding journey.

The bride is a sister of Edward J. and Stuart H. Patterson, of this city, and is well-known in society circles here and New York. The couple will be at home on Wednesdays in December at 1330 Massachusetts avenue, Washington.

Recruiting Station Opened Here.

Under the direction of First Lieutenant W. New Brunswick, of the Fifteenth Cavalry, Sergeant Walsh has opened a recruiting station in the Marsh building on Park avenue. He will be here for an indefinite time recruiting for all branches of the army service. Sergeant Walsh came here from New Brunswick, where he was stationed several weeks.

Bolts His Party's Ticket.

Mayor J. B. Purchase, of Rahway, announces emphatically that he will not support Councilmen George Van Sant or G. E. Galloway, Republicans, in their candidacy for re-election. The trouble is an outgrowth of their stand on not taking the part of the city in the Councilman Bernhard trial for using his influence against the city's interests.

To Deliver Historical Address.

Hugh Hastings, of this city, historian for the State of New York, has been secured to make an address at the unveiling of a soldiers' monument at Rome, N. Y., early in November.

Farmer Orator Unanimously Named by Democrats of 5th Congressional District.

A GENERAL SURPRISE

In Response to Appeals of Solid Delegations of Warren, Morris and Union Plainfielder Accepts Nomination.

James E. Martine is again the opponent of Congressman Charles N. Fowler in his campaign for re-election.

There was only one name to be presented, said Mr. Dunn, and in a highly eulogistic speech he placed the farmer-orator's name before the convention. It was greeted with hand-clapping and cheers that made the opera house walls ring.

Morris county, through Irving Salmon, chairman of the delegation, heartily seconded the nomination, and Wm. H. Stryker, former prosecutor of Warren county, who had himself been mentioned for the nomination, declared for his delegation that Warren county would consider only James E. Martine in the matter before the convention. He referred to Mr. Martine's campaign last year, and said his name had become a household word, and his figure as familiar as that of a friend among the people of Warren.

Mr. Martine addressed the convention after the nomination. He realized the responsibility confronting him, he said, but he accepted the trust and would go out and make the battle again.

The district had been carved out for the Republican party, he continued, and he knew the fight that was before him. Still, he believed the people had become disgusted with the Republican party and that they were beginning to look askance at Mr. Fowler. He (Martine) believed that there was a distinct agreement by a candidate, when accepted the nomination, that he would represent his constituents in the deliberations of Congress. He charged Mr. Fowler with being lax and derelict in the discharge of that obligation.

Mr. Martine appealed to all the constituency to help him reach every school district in his campaign. With their help, he would keep Fowler busier as a candidate than he ever had been as a Congressman; he would keep him busier with politics than with his marble yard in Vermont. He realized, he said in closing, that Mr. Fowler was a man of great mind and wealth, and that the great corporations would stand behind him, but he had faith in the good sense of the people, and he knew the unspeakable power of the ballot.

UNION CO. S. S. TEACHERS' CONVENTION ON THURSDAY.

Three Sessions to be Held in Westminster Church in Elizabeth.

Sunday-school officers, teachers and workers in general will be interested in the announcement of the twenty-sixth annual convention of the Union County Sunday-school Association which will be held in the Westminster Presbyterian church, Elizabeth, on Thursday, October 5.

Sessions will be held at 10 o'clock in the morning, 2:15 o'clock in the afternoon and at 7:30 o'clock in the evening, with some special conferences between the sessions, conducted by the officers of the State Sunday-school Association.

Some of the principal addresses will be given by Rev. George H. Trull, assistant minister of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York; Rev. Pascal Harrower, rector of the Episcopal church at West Brighton; Rev. W. H. Morgan, of St. Paul's church, Newark, and Rev. E. Morris Fergusson, general secretary of the New Jersey Sunday-school Association. A special feature will be the music under the direction of Messrs. Tullar and Meredith, of New York. Miss Edith Cairns, of this city, will take a prominent part in the programme.

The first half-hour of each session will be devotional in charge of Grant Colfax Tullar, who will lead a special choir of many of the best singers in the Elizabeth churches. Isaac H. Meredith is a well-known soloist and will sing at each session. Delegates are to be appointed by each of the 126 schools in the county, representing the various departments. A full programme of exceptional interest has been prepared that cannot fail to interest all Sunday-school workers, from the cradle role to the home department. A collation will be served to delegates from 6 to 7 o'clock by the women of the Sunday-schools in the vicinity of Westminster church.

Prime Cuts Dearer.

According to the usual custom at this time of the year, there is a slight increase in the price of prime cuts of meat and the local wholesale houses have notified the retail butchers of the change. The increase applies only to the choicest cuts. The prices remain the same on other cuts. The increase on the whole carcass amounts to about a half a cent a pound, but in order to get a fair price for the poorer cuts, as well as the better cuts, the total advance in price will be nearly two cents. With this condition it is said, will exist until the prime quality of beef is more plentiful. The retail butchers accordingly, it is announced, will be obligeu to make a slight increase for the choice meat to their customers.

May Organize a Choral Society.

J. Edmund Skiff, organist and choirmaster at the First M. E. church, is considering the advisability of organizing a choral society of about one hundred voices for the purpose of giving several concerts during the winter season.

CASTING BROUGHT DEATH

Chain Holding It Slipped and Projection Struck Foreman Kneeland at Pond Shop.

DIED IN FEW MINUTES

Victims' Spinal Column Was Crushed—Employed by the Company Over Eighteen Years.

Within five minutes of the time that he was to quit work for the day, Patrick Kneeland, foreman of the helpers at the Pond Tool Works, was almost instantly killed in the shop Wednesday. The chain holding a heavy casting that was being lifted up by a crane, slipped as he stood beneath it, and one end of the mass of metal struck him a crushing blow on the back just above the shoulders. The spinal column was broken and he sank to the floor unconscious, death ensuing within ten minutes. Dr. P. B. Cregar and Rev Father Bogan were hurriedly summoned, but the man was beyond all aid before they arrived.

Kneeland had been in the employ of the Pond Company from the time the local shop was built in 1885, coming to Plainfield with the concern from Worcester, Mass. He had charge of the men in the machine department who are kept at the call of machinists who want castings lifted or heavy work done. Shortly after 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, one employe asked to have what is known as a "worm gear" lifted to a planer. It weighed about 5,000 pounds and Kneeland assumed charge of the job, directing the placing of the "sling" leading from the crane.

As the gear was being slowly raised, the foreman followed its course, frequently standing directly under it, his long experience making him oblivious to danger. The heavy weight was above his head and being swung over him without an instant's warning, the binding chain slipped and Kneeland was struck by a projecting part. Several other men who were standing by had narrow escapes as none of them had any time to jump. The 5:30 whistle for quitting time blew as the victim was breathing his last and the sight of the inert form unnerved many of the employes as they walked by on their way out.

Superintendent MacMurray said today that an investigation was being conducted but so far as could be learned the affair was purely accidental. Every precaution had been taken to avoid any mishap and Kneeland had placed chains so many times no one dreamed of a slip.

The foreman was about forty years old and was one of the best known men in the Pond shop. He was married and lived with his wife and two children on Lee place.

The funeral was held at St. Mary's church Saturday morning and interment was in St. Mary's cemetery.

REWARD ON POISONER.

New Marketer Takes Steps to Search Out Slayer of Valuable Dogs.

Edmund L. Mac Kenzie, a wealthy New Market man, has offered $100 reward for information leading to the conviction of the dog poisoner who killed two deerhounds belonging to him early last month. Mr. Mac Kenzie was abroad when the dogs were poisoned, and has just returned to his place in Piscataway. He was strongly moved when informed of the dogs' death and immediately took steps to run down the poisoner. The reward offer was posted yesterday.

The deerhounds were canines of the bluest blood and worth hundreds of dollars apiece. They were fine specimens of the kind and Mr. Mac Kenzie is determined to trace out and punish the author of their death. They were not vicious dogs, and pure maliciousness or the jealousy of another dog fancier appear to be the only motive for their poisoning.

Gave Out Unclean Books.

Hackettstown, Oct. 4.—Geo. Edward Reeves, of Newton, was arrested here Wednesday by Chief of Police Johnny Wire, for distributing an indecent pamphlet, entitled "Castles in the Air." It was the production of a so-called New York medical institute. The booklet was distributed promiscuously about town and parents complained to Mayor Van Syckle that their children had been given the literature without restraint. The Mayor immediately ordered his arrest. A few months ago Reeves was in town and distributed a similar booklet, but escaped before he could be arrested. When interviewed by Mayor VanSyckle, he confessed ignorance as to the contents of the pamphlet he was distributing. His occupation, he said, was that of a nightwatchman, and he was distributing the printed matter as a side line, receiving $4 per thousand. It was found that he told the truth, and upon promising not to distribute such literature in this place again he was let go.

RATE ON FUNERAL COACHES ADVANCES

LIVERYMEN'S AGREEMENT MAKES OVING MORE EXPENSIVE THAN EVER.

Rates for the carriages used at funerals were boosted by the four principal liverymen of the city Wednesday. After a conference a new schedule was prepared in which coaches were made $5 apiece for funeral service, instead of $4. The wagonette, in which the pall bearers ride, will cost $6 now, instead of $4.

The advance in coach rates here was practically the only change in the schedule. There was a rumor that the liverymen intended to raise rates on wedding carriages, but the nuptial coach was not tampered with. It may still be hired for the old rate, $5.

The liverymen represented at the conference were Albert Hedden, Adam Blair, the Plainfield Cab Company and the Central Livery Stable. They practically control the livery business in the city. They met at Mr. Hedden's office, East Fourth street. The matter had been talked over among them, and the schedule was quickly agreed upon.

The undertakers of the city and borough were notified of the change Thursday, and furnished with copies of the schedule. They had received intimations of the proposed action and were not surprised. The Plainfield rates apply to New Market, Dunellen, Fanwood and Scotch Plains. South Plainfield must pay $6 for its funeral coaches, as hitherto.

The liverymen say the increase was demanded as a matter of self-conservation. They say the old rate was so low as to leave practically no profit in funeral business.

WARNING NOTE AGAIN SOUNDED AGAINST TREES.

Heavy Shade Is Making Plainfield Malarial and Rheumaticky It Is Said.

Interest is again being aroused among householders in the campaign against over-shading of the streets. For several years, the street department has sought to secure united and much-needed action among tree-owners to cut down the leafage and tree growth to a point where it will not menace the health of the community, but with little or no success.

Time and again Street Commissioner Garrett and other sanitary authorities have stated that too much shade is unhealthful, and that Plainfield, in many sections, and at many points in other sections, was too heavily shaded. Doctors here have taken note of the conditions here, and now outside doctors have begun to mark the danger to health that lies here, and the city's advancement is threatened with a setback.

Not more than a few days ago a woman in New York was advised to change her place of residence for the betterment of her health, and hit on Plainfield as her new home. She asked her physician if it was all right. He promptly shook his head.

Too much shade," he said. "Malaria and rheumatism lurk in that town."

The incident came to the knowledge of Commissioner Gavett, and he gave it out as a pertinent object lesson on the tree-thinning question, in which he has always been interested.

The public might be so many druids, for the reverence in which they seem to hold trees. The average tree-owner throws a fit every time a city employe approaches one of his trees with a saw or a pruning instrument, and the bare suggestion that he cut down one or two of his trees is received as if it were bearful sacrilege. Mr. Gavett still has hopes of bringing tree-owners to a sensible view of the subject, and securing a systematic control of shade areas.

Plans to Remodel Building.

Henry Haurand, the proprietor of the Central Bottling Works, who has just had erected a large concrete block building in rear of his establishment on Somerset and Chatham streets, has had plans drawn up for further improvement to the property. The first floor of the original structure at the corner is to be lowered to the street level and the front is to be remodeled to conform with the new building. When this has been done the partition now dividing the plane into two stores will be knocked out and the whole thrown into one. The front is to be graced by large plate glass windows and interior improvements will be added to conform with the rest. When completed the changes will make the property one of the best appearing in that section.

First Opera In January.

The Plainfield Operatic Association has decided to give its first opera, "The Chimes of Normandy," during the week beginning January 14, and not February 14, as previously stated. The association will give a concert prior to that time and before January 1, at some place to be decided upon later.

Glee Club Rehearsals.

The first rehearsal of the Mandolin and Glee Clubs, of the Plainfield High School, will be held on Monday under the direction of S. B. Howe, Jr., who was faculty director of the musical clubs last year.

JUNIOR C. E.'S ELECT.

Trinity Church Organization Starts New Year With Bright Prospects.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society of Trinity Reformed church, held its first fall meeting in the parlors of the church, Wednesday afternoon. The prospects for a successful year were evidenced by the large attendance, about young people being present. All appeared to be very enthusiastic to take up the work for the fall and winter and do all that they can to increase the efficiency of the society. The offering for missions amounted to seventy-nine cents.

These officers were chosen for the year: Superintendent, Mrs. William Tunison; assistant superintendent, Mrs. William Krimey; president, Miss Margaret VanDeventer; vice-president, Miss Helen Woolley; recording secretary, Lawrence French; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Cornelius Schenck; treasurer, Miss Kate Layton.

CAMPAIGNING AT $50,000 PER DAY.

Manager of International Policyholders' Committee Estimates N. Y. Life Officers' Outlay.

New York, Oct. 5.—The published letter of Vice President Buckner, of the New York Life Insurance Company, in which he stated that no part of the company's funds was being expended in any way for the purpose of influencing or advocating the election of the administration or any other ticket, stirred up George R. Scrugham, manager of the International Policyholders' Association, yesterday. Mr. Scrugham had this to say:

"This published statement form Vice President Buckner is interesting in view of the fact that thousands of agents and special representatives are making a desperate effort to elect the administration ticket, a fact proved by the many hundreds of original letters sent us from all sections of the country, and reports made to us by policy-holders who are interested in placing trustees in control of these great trust funds who represent the policy-holders and not other interests. We believe that there are now engaged in campaigning for the administration ticket over 5,000 agents and special representatives. One who is familiar with campaign work knows that it is impossible to keep a man in the field for less than $10 a day. This would make an aggregate of $50,000 a day that is being spent to elect the administration ticket—exclusive of postage, stationery and circulars that are being sent out.

"If this campaign is being conducted at the expense of the individual members who put candidate for trustees of the power behind the administration ticket it would be interesting to know it. It is ridiculous to suppose that such is the case, but the fact is the policy-holders themselves are asked to help provide the enormous campaign fund that is being used to defeat them in their earnest effort to gain control of their own properties."

WEDDED AT ST. MARY'S.

Quiet Ceremony Unites Thomas F. O'Keeffe and Miss Theresa Hess.

The wedding of Miss Theresa Hess, daughter of Mrs. Theresa Hess, of Jackson avenue, and Thomas F. O'Keeffe, of West Fifth street, took place in St. Mary's church at 7 o'clock this morning. Father Bogan officiated and only the immediate relatives of both families were in attendance. The bride was attended by Miss Mary Casey and the groom's cousin, James J. Flynn, acted as best man., Following the ceremony, the wedding party adjourned to the bride's home where supper was served.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Keeffe left last night for a trip to be spent in the New England States. On returning they will reside on Jackson avenue.

No Work for Him.

After country funeral held in the forenoon, the ministers, bearers and friends, as is the custom, had returned to the bereaved household to partake of tendered hospitality, a dinner, before returning to their homes. While waiting, a conversation started concerning different ideas of heaven. One of their number expressed his belief that if all people were earnest, consistent christians this beautiful world would be a heaven. This was overheard by the minister, who nodding his head, said: "But, tut, Brother S., is that your idea of Heaven. Would you expect to follow your usual occupation in Heaven?" "I would," responded Mr. S., "if there were need of them; but feminine nature so abounds in that you would have to go to some other place and preach."

W. C. T. U. State Officers.

These officers were elected by the W. C. T. U., of New Jersey, at its annual meeting in Camden Thursday: Mrs. Emma Bourne, of Newark, re-elected president; Mrs. I. H. Demarest, of Closter, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Eva M. Blake, M. D., of Pleasantville, recording secretary, and Mrs. H. F. Cominade, of Camden, treasurer. In all cases the selection of officers was unanimous. There were 208 delegates in attendance. The alternates and delegates to the national convention at Los Angeles will be appointed.

Two Opinions.

"Most of Rimer's poetry is pathetic, isn't it?"

"Well, that's what he calls it, but the editor says it pitiful."

IRA WOOD RENOMINATED

Fourth District Congressional Convention Solid For Mercer Co. Man.

MUCH ENTHUSIASM

No Opposition In Delegations Representing Somerset, Mercer and Hunterdon Counties.

Ira W. Wood, the present congressman from this Fourth New Jersey Congressional Dist., was Wednesday renominated for another term in the nation's lawmaking body. The renomination took place at Flemington in one of the most enthusiastic conventions the Republicans of this district ever held. The entire borough was ablaze with Republican enthusiasm from the instant the Republican Club, of Trenton, made its appearance, headed by Winkler's band, until the last delegate from the counties of Mercer, Hunterdon and Somerset left the pretty Hunterdon county borough.

Delegates to many conventions said that the enthusiasm was of the most spontaneous character ever seen in the county of New Jersey at any convention.

The solid speech of Candidate Ira W. Wood, the nominating speech of Assemblyman Alfred N. Barber and the speech of former Democratic Congressional Candidate Lewis Perine were the features of the convention. Astonishment of the delegates was divided between the three masterly efforts.

The congressional committee nominations of those respective conferences, which were ratified by the convention later, makes the new congressional committee as follows: General C. Edward Murray and Elijah C. Hutchinson, the Mercer members; Kennett Sheley, Bernardsville, and George A. Dilts, Bridgewater, the Somerset members, and S. K. Large and John Foran, the Hunterdon county members.

At noon General Murray called the convention to order and James L. Griggs, of Somerville, former prosecutor of Somerset county, was elected temporary chairman, with Walter G. Callis, editor of the Flemington Republican, secretary. William Atkinson, of Trenton, and Newton E. Flack, of Lambertville, were elected vice presidents, and then the several delegations nominated the following committeemen, which nominations were ratified by the convention: Permanent organization, D. H. Scranton, of Mercer; George W. Neff, of Somerset, and James Wyckoff, of Hunterdon; credentials, William R. Leddom, of Mercer; J. H. Schomp, of Somerset, and Thomas Jardine, of Hunterdon; rules, Harry Haveson, of Mercer; N. W. French, of Somerset, and Theodore Moore, of Hunterdon; resolutions, Ammi R. Schanck, of Mercer; H. K. Gaston, of Somerset, and William E. Simpson.

Recess was then taken until 2 o'clock in order to allow the committees time to do their work. Winkler's band after lunch played a concert on the porch of the Hunterdon county court house, in which building the convention was held.

As soon as the convention was reconvened and the permanent organization committee had reported in favor of the temporary officers being made permanent, which was done on motion of Sheriff William L. Wilbur, a Mercer delegate.

Hunterdon being called, and the county having no nomination, Mercer was called and then the cheering broke out, for Assemblyman Barber rose to nominate Congressman Wood. Again and again the cheers resounded for Barber and Wood. When order was restored Mr. Barber made the nominating speech, being frequently interrupted by bursts of applause for the sound sense in his talk.

The call of the convention resulted in no other name being put in nomination. When it came to the call of Somerset, Mr. Suydam said that Somerset had no nomination, but seconded the nomination of Congressman Wood, feeling sure that he had been an ideal candidate, taking care of the business of the people of the whole district.

The vote was: Hunterdon, 40 votes for Ira W. Wood; Mercer, 143 votes for Ira W. Wood; Somerset, 49 votes for Ira W. Wood.

The Inventor of Tours.

The sailor of the galley who had begun to murmur grew more than matched by the wily Ulysses.

"Want to go home, do ye?" he roared. "Why, ye miserable swabs doncha know you're takin' a personally-conducted mid-winter Mediterranean cruise, health and education combined—all points of interest visited—in charge of old experienced traveller—pleasant company—references given and required—no extras! Watcha growlin' about?"

The oarsmen now ceased up perceptibly and at the next stop several were observed buying souvenir postal cards.—Puck.

Rocky Transfer.

Mrs. W. A. Freeman has sold her property, 28 Sandford avenue, to Mrs. Sarah Robinson, of East Front street, who will take possession about October 15.

IMPORTS ARAB STEEDS

A. G. Hooley Part Owner In Splendid Shipment of Horseflesh.

MR. DAVENPORT'S TRIP

Backed By the Sultan, Contractor Succeeded In Getting Eight Arabian Mares From Bedouins of Syrian Desert.

Under an irade such as had never been issued before by the Sultan of Turkey, A. G. Hooley, of Rockview terrace, in partnership with Homer Davenport, the famous cartoonist, and Peter B. Bradley, a Boston millionaire horse enthusiast, has become possessed of the finest lot of Arabian horses ever brought to this country —and that means the finest lot of equine emigrants the horsemen of America have ever had a chance to see. Davenport, who is a personal friend of Mr. Hooley and Mr. Bradley, went to Arabia, himself after the animals. He landed in Boston last Wednesday, and on Saturday the horses, twenty-seven in all—stallions, mares and colts—were taken ashore at New York from the steamship Italia.

It was only through an autocratic decree of the Sultan, induced by a special letter given to him by President Roosevelt, that Mr. Davenport was enabled to get his horses. The Arabas are as jealous of their steeds as they are fond, and never before has Ang Occidental been permitted to take such a number of Arabian horses out of the county. Eight splendid mares are in the lot, and that fact is the most noteworthy thing in connection with the importation. Before Davenport's coming, no Arab mare had ever been allowed to go out of the country. Much has been written of the Arab horses and the love of the Nomads for them, but the people of this country can scarcely realize the exact light in which the Bedouin regards his horse. The jealous love of a man for his wife or children is said to be a feeble affection compared with it, and something of what the result of Davenport's visit meant to the tribes of the Syrian desert and to the horsemen of this country may be only faintly imagined by the average person.

The twenty-seven horses arrived in excellent condition, and were passed by the veterinarians of the Bureau of Animal Industry, as healthy, sound and entirely free of any disease or ill effect from the long journey.

Davenport made his word good beyond all expectations. He started upon his long journey with the avowed intention of bringing over the handsomest and purest-bred Arabians that came from the Bedouin tribes, and as one after another of the magnificent animals were hoisted from the upper deck of the Italia and taken out of their stalls on the pier, after a voyage of more than a month, the big group of horse fanciers who were present, pronounced them the most magnificent lot of horses ever landed in this country.

In a letter from Naples printed some days ago in a New York paper, Davenport said that he was bringing over a white stallion which would make a sensation among horsemen of the country. This horse was one of the first to land Monday, and it ever there was a beautiful Arabian steed in history or poetry, this white animal is he. In all respects he is a most perfect individual and that is oughbred representative of the famous Arab breed.

The brown stallion Haleb, which was presented to Davenport by the Governor-General of Aleppo, is also a grand individual, and the pick from the Gomussa tribe of the desert. He has a long pedigree attesting his pure breeding from a long line of blooded ancestors.

Haleb is a 5-year-old Manaka—Sebelie, one of the most highly valued strains among Arab breeders.

Special care had been taken in the selection of the mares, for which the cartoonist carried a special permit from the Yildiz Palace, Constantinople, to the friendly sheiks of the desert, and through this secured and brought over a grand lot of high class mares.

Two of the mares, purchased at great cost, have each a colt about 4 months old, and are certainly beautiful individuals.

The majority of the horses landed Monday are chestnuts of a beautiful golden color, while there are several grays and bays, every one bearing the marks of pure breeding, as recognized by the Arab breeders.

The handsome bay mare, of perfect conformation, bears several sword marks over her neck and haunches, showing that she has passed through many bloody battles and has been a war trophy of the tribe that exchanged her for American gold.

The horses were separated Sunday morning (as the young stock and the two mares with colts at foot will be shipped to Boston, and from there to the Arabian Stud Farm of Peter B. Bradley, at Hingham, Mass., while all the rest go to Davenport's farm at Morris Plains.

Mr. Bradley has been a breeder of Arabian horses since he purchased a lot of them at the close of the World's Fair in Chicago. Mr. Hooley stated to a Daily Press reporter last night that the horses would be used solely for breeding. "Not one of them is for sale," he said.

Next in interest to the horses are some of the sketches which Davenport has made in the desert. They represent the different types of the Bedouins, from the sheiks down to slaves, and are most true to the real life of the desert.

Among this collection is a sketch of the Sultan, who never had a picture taken or painted. The sketch was made immediately after the cartoonist was presented to the Sultan, and another one he saw Hs Majesty going to Friday prayers. One of them represents the potentate talking to his two favorite sons, another receiving strangers, and a third driving a pair of spirited horses to the mosque.

Throughout the journey his sketches produced a most profound sensation among the Bedouins, most of whom looked upon *him as a pos*sessor of divine power or magic.

One of Davenport's most highly valued souvenirs is a picture which was taken in conjunction with all of the leading sheiks of the Anaseh tribe, an honor perhaps never before accorded to any other "infidel" by the religious heads of the greatest of all nomadic tribes.

This special honor was due to the fact that the cartoonist carried a personal card from President Roosevelt, the "Great Sheik" of all America, as the Arabs called him.

A most pathetic cartoon is one in which an old Bedouin is bidding farewell to his mare, which he was ordered to sell to the "American guest" of the tribe.

Much to the disappointment of his friends Davenport is still confined to a sick bed. After boasting on young roast camel, eating boiled lamb stuffed with rice and nuts, and drinking gallons of camel's milk, he landed in Boston last Wednesday in fine condition, but got a dose of potmaine poisoning by eating oysters at the "Hub." He will soon be out and tell more of his Holy Land experiences.

MARKS ON WIFE'S CHIN START SUIT.

Husband Says They Were From Another Man's Kisses—She Says Elbows Stain.

Black finger marks on the chin of young Mrs. Kate A. Schorr were one of the causes of a divorce suit called yesterday before Vice Chancellor Garrison in the Jersey City Chancery Chambers.

Her husband, Henry Schorr, saw the marks when Mrs. Schorr returned home the evening before New Year's, 1904. He said then, and still believes, according to his affidavit, that the spots were made by a railroad man who had kissed his wife.

Mrs. Schorr's answer is that they came from a black kid glove she wore, and on which she rested her chin.

Mrs. Schorr is suing for a separate maintenance. The couple were married February 12, 1899, and, after a very discordant life, separated last January. They formerly lived at No. 82 Clinton avenue, Jersey City. Mrs. Schorr now lives with her parents in Jersey City. She charges cruelty and neglect.

Her husband became jealous within ten days after their marriage and often accused her of improper associations.

She always was a dutiful wife, her answer says. He struck her and made it impossible for her to live with him.

Schorr's answer denies many of his wife's specific charges, but admits that he struck her once when she attacked him with a carving knife, and another time when she placed a knife into his shoulder. A week after their marriage she punched him in the face and formed a habit of throwing dishes at his head.

The affidavit of Mrs. Tilen Huber, of No. 82 Clinton avenue, says that Schorr was intensely jealous, but that Mrs. Schorr acted like a good wife. Mrs. Huber's husband, Philip Huber, furnished an affidavit for Schorr that a letter came to Huber's house for Mrs. Schorr addressed to Mrs. Huber. Huber opened the letter and found a note addressed to a man boarder in Huber's house, in which Mrs. Schorr wrote:

"I will skiddoo my Coney Island company and meet you."

The Vice Chancellor ordered Schorr to pay Mrs. Schorr a week until a decision is reached. The date for the trial was not fixed. Neither of the principals was in court. The couple have no children.

In the Insurance Business.

Former Y. M. C. A. Secretary J. H. Manning has become an insurance man. He will begin writing for the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company, next Saturday, this week. Mr. Manning expects to take up other work in connection with insurance.

Teaching at Astoria, L. I.

Miss Bertha Mitchell, of Grant avenue, who was kindergarten teacher in the Plainfield Public Schools, last year, has taken a position as teacher in the public schools at Astoria, L. I. She returns home once a week, on Friday, remaining here until Monday morning.

No Tidings from Missing Man.

No tidings have as yet been received of Burton Quipp, the young man from Hoboken, who suddenly disappeared at Midland Beach, a month ago. He was a relative of J. V. E. Vanderhoff, of Prospect place. Mrs. Burton is still in Canada, where she will remain for an indefinite time.

ISOLATION WARD NEXT

Building For Contagious Diseases to Be Erected at Hospital.

GIFT FOR INSTITUTION

Directors Have $4,200 At Hand for Purpose—Reports for the Month.

An important step was taken by the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, at the October meeting, Monday, when the committee on buildings and grounds was authorized to erect at once a building for the reception and care of contagious diseases. The action was made possible by a donation of $4,000 by one of the members of the board and his wife, which has since been increased by accrued interest to $4,200.

The building, which will be especially designed for the use to which it will be put, will be intended chiefly for the treatment of scarlet fever and diphtheria and although at present the city is almost free from such diseases and rarely has many at any one time, yet the opportunity for the isolation and suitable care under most favorable conditions of the cases it is said will bring great relief and satisfaction to the residents of Plainfield and especially to physicians and to the Board of Health.

The Medical Board reported the number of patients treated at the hospital in September as follows:

Remaining at date of last report, 39; admitted, 42; discharged cured, 41; improved, 5; died, 1; remaining, 25; hospital days, 895; operations, 21; dispensary patients, 59; visits, 125; operations, 18.

The board elected Percy H. Stewart as a member to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Charles E. Brooks, but no action was taken regarding the vacancy in the medical board caused by the resignation of Dr. W. H. Boone. The meeting was held at the Casino.

LONG JURY CASE IN THE DISTRICT COURT.

Siche Gas Co. Against W. W. Warnock Takes Up Almost All the Session.

The suit of the Siche Gas Company against W. W. Warnock, the West Front street baker, on contract, took up practically all the session of the District Court Tuesday, and was just closing when the noon adjournment was taken. The company sues for payment on a machine installed in Mr. Warnock's shop, which he will have nothing further to do with. Mr. Warnock claims that Louis Arnett, manager of the Siche Company, guaranteed the machine to reduce his light bills, and that, as it didn't, he was not required to keep or pay for the outfit. Mr. Arnett claims he did not guarantee a lower bill, and that the excess in the cost came, not from the machine, but from the antiquated system of piping in the Warnock place.

The case was tried before a jury. Both sides had finished at noon, and when court reconvened at 2 o'clock, the lawyers, former Judge W. A. Codington, for the plaintiff, and V. W. Nash, Jr., for the defendant, summed up.

The cases disposed of are as follows: Anna A. Ginn against George E. Collins, on contract, judgment for plaintiff; Millswood Farms Dairy against C. A. Lord, on contract, judgment for plaintiff; Niles-Bement-Pond Co. against Michael Armstrong, on contract, judgment for plaintiff; Antony Morelli, agent, against Emma L. Codington, landlord and tenant, settled.

DR. CARROLL'S CENSUS OF THE METHODISTS.

In Proportion to Population, Greatest in Delaware.

The Rev. H. K. Carroll, of North Plainfield, statistician for the Methodist Episcopal church in America, has just completed a compilation of the census of Methodists in this country. The result, Dr. Carroll says, shows that Delaware "is the most Methodistic State in the Union, having one Methodist to every nine persons in the State."

In New York State, on the basis of the Conference reports on membership, there are 312,135 members of the denomination—more in point of membership than in any other State of the Union. Pennsylvania has 309,122, Indiana 203,307, Iowa 152,260, Michigan 114,398, New Jersey, 105,529, Kansas 104,358 and Illinois 225,266.

Plan Young People's Work.

During the coming winter the Young People's Society of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, expect to have addresses by Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, the pastor, and Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, of the Brick Presbyterian church, New York, in connection with its study of missions. The social committee is planning for four meetings. Definite arrangements will be given later.

Tax Bills 'Most Ready.

Collector George F. Brown is busy on the last of the borough tax bills. In all probability they will be issued the latter part of the week.

CONGRESSIONAL NOMINEE WILL GO ON THE STAGE

UPTON SINCLAIR, 4TH DISTRICT CANDIDATE, TO APPEAR IN "JUNGLE."

Upton Sinclair, of Princeton, who has been nominated for Congress in the Fourth district by the Socialist party, and for whom North Plainfielders can vote, has decided to go on the stage. He is the author of the novel, "The Jungle," which led to the Chicago stock yards' investigation, and it is being dramatized. He will play the role of "Ostrinsky," a young Lithuanian workman in a Chicago packinghouse, and the part is one that will call for exceptional dramatic ability.

Sinclair is a young man but one of many talents and his admirers assert that he will make a name for himself as an actor. He was originally a newspaperman and graduated from the ranks to a novelist. He wrote several books before "The Jungle," but it required the latter to bring him fame and fortune. It is considered the most widely read work of the day and the demand for it shows no sign of decreasing. It would doubtless mean a new publication for the betterment of the working class in Chicago and the Socialists look to him as their leader, his nomination for Congress being one of the honors accorded him. He has gone ahead with his plans for a stage career, however, and will appear in the production of "The Jungle" no matter how the election goes.

JERSEY CENTRAL MAY HAVE ONE BIG PARK

MAKES OFFERS FOR MORE PROPERTY ON SOUTH SIDE OF STATION.

The extensive real estate operations in Park avenue property, between the railroad and Fourth street, has given rise to considerable talk as to the purpose of the New Jersey Central in its attempt to acquire additional land adjoining that it now owns. The company has given notice to V. W. Nash, Sr., whose building occupies a site next to that owned by Miss Lincoln, the florist, that he must remove the same by December 8. It was also desired that Miss Lincoln move her building, but her lease runs for another year and nothing can be done until then.

The company has also offered John Manley $16,000 for his property on Park avenue, and it is said, that an offer of $25,000 has been made for the Miller building at Park avenue and Fourth street. Overtures are said to have been made for the Bird property, adjoining that of the telephone office.

It is reported that the company desires to lay out this property in one big park, extending from Park avenue back to the Eastbound Station.

Mr. Nash has planned to tear down his old buildings and store the material, and it is quite likely that he and William Clausen, the barber, who occupies one of the stores in his present building, will lease one of the vacant stores in the Marsh building on Park avenue, opposite The Plainfield Trust Company.

Another improvement planned by the railroad company is the removal of the brick building formerly used as a city jail and the water pumping station close by, and the land will be converted into the large park proposed.

SOMERSET CO. G. O. P. CONVENTION ON OCT. 20.

Chairman Joseph S. Frelinghuysen Issues the Usual Call.

Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, chairman of the Somerset County Republican Executive Committee, has issued the call for the county convention, which will be held in Somerset Hall, Somerville, on Saturday, October 20, for the nomination of candidates for Member of Assembly and Coroner.

There are several Assembly aspirants, although there is a sentiment in some parts of the county for the renomination of Irving W. Hoagland, of Franklin Park, who has served two terms. It is understood he can be the candidate if he desires the honor. If not, William W. Smalley, of Bound Brook, and Clarence E. Case, of Somerville, may get it. Mr. Case is the law partner of former Congressman Alvah A. Clark.

Peter's Pence Collection.

Father Logan, in conjunction with all the priests of the Newark Diocese, read last Sunday Bishop O'Connor's circular on the Peter's Pence Collections. This collection will be taken up next Sunday in every church and chapel in the Roman Catholic diocese of Newark, for the purpose of giving substantial aid to other Catholics of France. This does not apply to St. Joseph's church, which belongs to the Trenton diocese. Bishop McFaul, of Trenton, has not issued his circular as yet.

On New York Committee.

On the Non-Partisan Committee of 2,500 lawyers of New York formed to secure the election of independent, upright and capable judges are Isaac L. Miller, of Watchung avenue, and J. Evarts Tracy, of West Eighth street.

FARMER-ORATOR'S PLANS

The Democratic Congressional Nominee to Invade Warren County on Thursday.

ATTACKS HIS OPPONENT

He Declares That Mr. Fowler Voted Against Eight-Hour Law and Opposed Roosevelt Measures.

James E. Martine will begin his campaign for the Congressmanship of the Fifth district tomorrow night at the New Plainfield theatre, when he is scheduled to speak at the Democratic mass meeting. On Thursday morning he takes leave of Cedar brook farm and will spend the rest of the week in Warren county where he hopes to interest the farmers in his candidacy. His first stop will be Dover where it is expected he will speak at night.

After covering Warren county, Mr. Martine will move on to Morris county. There several big meetings will be held and a whole week of straight talks to voters will be put in. When that task is finished, the farmer-orator will devote his attention to Union county. Arrangements are now being made for a mass meeting in Jacobs' theatre in Elizabeth. Among the speakers will be Congressman William Sulzer, of New York, who promises to tell Mr. Fowler's record in Congress.

Mr. Martine says that he will devote his speeches largely to Mr. Fowler and his record. In an interview with a reporter this morning, he declared that Mr. Fowler had voted against the eight hour law and that his whole course in Congress had been inimical to the workingman. He also declared that instead of supporting President Roosevelt, the Elizabeth statesman had voted time and again in opposition to measures supported by Roosevelt.

Mr. Martine will wind up his campaign with a series of earl-light meetings at the big manufacturing plants in this city and in Elizabeth.

SOMERSET MAY VOTE TO ABOLISH FREEHOLDERS.

Proposition To Be Submitted to the People at the Coming Election.

The voters of Somerset county will be called upon at the next general election to decide whether the old Board of Freeholders is to be abolished and the county governed by commissioners. A petition has been filed with the County Clerk, demanding that the question be submitted to the voters. It is argued that several counties of the State have tried the new form of governmen with success.

The Board of Freeholders, as now constituted, is composed of eleven members, elected at the proposition to abolish the board is indorsed only three commissioners will be chosen.

Children's Home Leads.

The contest being conducted by V. W. Nash, Sr., the Park avenue coal dealer, is exciting considerable interest among the members and friends of the various religious organizations in the city and borough. In this contest the purchaser of a ton of coal is allowed a vote for his favorite religious institution, and the one receiving the greatest number of votes will get five tons of coal free. The vote to date is as follows: Children's Home, 1,716; Muhlenberg Hospital, 50; Warren chapel, 15; St. Mary's Alliance, 27; Bether Mission, 6. The contest will close January 1.

NEW MINISTER.

Rev. Mr. Short Succeeds Rev. Mr. Doupe at Heavenly Rest.

Rev. Charles H. Doupe, formerly in charge of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, has been succeeded by Rev. Charles L. Short, who has been sent here from the Mission House, Trenton, by Bishop Scarborough. He has already entered upon his new duties. The parish regret the departure of Mr. Doupe.

Bishop Scarborough transferred Mr. Doupe to New Brunswick, where he will have charge of a larger parish.

Mr. Short has been given a hearty welcome and the prospects for successful Christian work are promising.

Buyer Has Seller Arrested.

Herman Michaelson was arrested in Trenton Monday, on a warrant sworn out before Justice Mosher by Peter Zimmerman, a grocer, whose store is at Watchung avenue and Fourth street, charging him with the larceny of $32 worth of goods, including a dozen brooms, canned peas and evaporated cream. Zimmerman bought his store recently from Michaelson, and he charges the latter with taking out goods that should have been turned over to him. Michaelson gave bond before a Trenton Justice for his appearance before the Union County Grand Jury.

Company K to Resume Drills.

Company K will resume its regular Fall schedule of drills next Monday night. They have been suspended during the summer. The officers have received notice from the factory that their order of roller skates will be delivered by Saturday in order to allow them to begin skating Saturday night.

GRACE CHURCH MEN'S CLUB OPENS SEASON

MAGICIAN AND MUSICAL COMEDIANS FURNISH ENTERTAINMENT.

The Men's Club of Grace P. E. church held its first meeting of the season, Monday, and a most enjoyable programme of entertainment marked the occasion. There was a large attendance.

In the absence of President H. B. Coombe, who is in Europe, Vice President Howard Fleming welcomed the members back to active club life. He read a cablegram of greeting from Mr. Coombe, from Oxford, England.

The entertainment was furnished by professional talent. Irving the Magician turned off a lot of mystifying tricks, accompanied by bits of foolery that were as amusing as the sleight-of-hand and magic, and Haley & Bond, musical comedians, tickled the ears and the risibilities of the audience mightily. The performers made hits that would mean much money on Broadway and they had as good a time as their audience.

Refreshments were served during an Intermission. The sub-committee of the Programme committee, in charge of the affair, was made up of J. P. Nolting, Owen Fleming and A. Willis West. The programme committee is made up of J. P. Nolting, chairman; L. A. Williams, Jr., A. Willis West, H. B. Coombe, Charles Du Bois, F. R. Severin, Arthur Murphy and Owen Fleming.

The next special event on the club programme is an illustrated lecture on Sicily, by John M. Whiton.

DRYDEN TROPHY PLACED IN THE STATE CAPITOL.

Testimonial of Jersey Soldiers' Expert Marksmanship Stationed In Rotunda.

The Dryton trophy, which was won by a team of eight of New Jersey's crack marksmen on the State rifle range at Sea Girt, September 1 last, was installed in the rotunda of the State Capitol at Trenton yesterday.

The trophy is of bronze and of handsome design. The army and navy are represented by statues of a soldier and a sailor. Between this is a tablet on which are fastened a number of medallions, some of which bear the names of teams that have won it.

The prize will remain on exhibition at the Capitol for the period of one year when it will again be placed in competition under the auspices of the New Jersey State Rifle Association.

The trophy is the gift of United States Senator John F. Dryden, who presented it in 1903.

The same year a team representing the army infantry won the trophy, which New Jersey won by the successful competitor. Last year Ohio marksmen won it.

It was by a magnificent exhibition of long distance shooting that the Jerseymen won the trophy this year. Although the weather was hot in the country the local marksmen were invulnerable at the 1,000-yard stage. The members of the team who won the trophy were: Major Arthur Rowland and Lieutenant Herbert L. Smith, of the First Regiment; Captain William B. Martin, Lieutenant Silvester and Sergeant John R. Williams, of the Second; Major Winfield A. Price, of the Third, and Captain William A. Lewes and Lieutenant William A. Baker, of the Fourth Regiment.

Mayor and Council Indicted.

Hackensack, Oct. 9.—Mayor Bayles and the members of the Borough Council of Arlington went to Hackensack a few days ago to have the Bergen County Board of Chosen Freeholders indicted because the board would not grade and macadamize that portion of the Belleville Turnpike that passes through that borough. This portion is about a mile long, and it would cost $25,000 to put it in good condition.

Rally Day at Bethel Mission.

Under the direction of A. W. Duxbury, superintendent, interesting rally day exercises were held at Bethel Mission Sunday afternoon. There was an address by Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, an organ selection by Miss Carrie Dewey, a solo by Walter Sampton and the singing of appropriate songs by the school. There was a large attendance of members. Rev. F. D. Tildon, pastor, also had a part in the programme.

Where He Was Dry.

The Rev. Mr. S—— was by many considered somewhat tedious in his delivery. On one occasion, after being hooked to speak at a camp meeting, he was caught in a sudden shower. He appeared at the appointed time quite wet.

As he was excusing himself to the camp manager, a waggish clerical brother said:

"Oh, just up in the pulpit. You'll soon be dry enough there."—The Bohemian for October.

Decidely Lively.

"Well, old man," said Nupop's bachelor friend, "he's the dead image of you."

"Don't you believe it," replied Nupop, who had been up half the night with the youngster. "He's the living image, if he's anything."

FORMED 5-CLUB LEAGUE

Amateur Baseball Combination Permanently Organization at 2nd Meeting.

J. W. GAVETT, PRESIDENT

Y. M. C. A., Clinton Avenue, Dunellen, Scotch Plains and Bound Brook to Contest for Pennant.

Permanent organization was effected by the promotors of the amateur baseball league, Monday. Representatives of the clubs that will figure in the pennant chase met at the Y. M. C. A., and before the session closed officers were chosen, a name adopted and rules framed.

Five clubs will make the pennant fight, under the name of the Inter-city Amateur League. The nines are Y. M. C. A., Clinton Avenue, Dunellen, Bound Brook and Scotch Plains. Somerville's application was denied on account of the distance. Westfield dropped out because prospects for the organization of a team there were very, very faint. It was felt, anyway, that a five-club league was desirable, and the committee after giving each club an open Saturday now and then for outside games. The Suburban A. C., which claims to be faster than the Clinton Avenue combination, applied for membership, but it was decided that two Plainfield teams filled out the desired representation for this city.

Joseph W. Gavett, president of the Y. M. C. A., was elected president of the league. Physical Director Listman is secretary and George Johnston, of Scotch Plains, who managed the Alls team, is treasurer.

Rules governing the registration of players were among the first to be adopted. Each club is allowed fifteen players, names of whom must be registered thirty days before the season opens, with the league secretary.

A player may not leave one club and sign with another without his manager's permission, and no transferring player may go into action with his new mates for fifteen days after the change is allowed.

Each club will post a $25 forfeit to insure the completion of its schedule. Besides the pennant, prizes for the highest batting average, for fielding and for stolen bases will be offered.

A committee composed of the club managers and the league officers will make out the schedule. Each club will play four games with every other club, two at home and two abroad. The same committee will sit on all protests and designate the official umpires. A stringent rule against paying any player a single cent for his services in a game will be strictly enforced.

At the next meeting, which is to be held Monday, November 5, the schedule will be adopted. It is planned to start the season about the middle of May. It cannot be gotten underway earlier because of the thirty-day registration clause, which will make the managers hustle for players early enough to keep them on the anxious seat through March and the first two weeks of April.

The five clubs will be managed by the following: Y. M. C. A., Physical Director Listman; Clinton Avenue, J. H. Krisey; Dunellen, J. L. Ayers; Bound Brook, J. P. Hawk; Scotch Plains, Brian Johnston. The five managerial lights were at last night's meeting.

Taken Unawares.

"Why, James!" exclaimed the slum-worker, on a visit to the prison, "how did you get here?"

"O!" replied Jimmy Tuff, "I was tryin' ter crack a crib an'——"

"The idea! I'm surprised at that."

"So wuz I; dat's why I'm here."

In One Braid.

"She has grown to be a very beautiful girl," said Jigley. "Her hair is positively golden."

"Indeed? That's odd," said Kidder. "I knew her when she was a little girl."

"Well?"

"Well, it was merely plaited then."

An Apt Quotation.

"Yes," said Marryat, "I'm pretty busy these days. Getting ready for my wedding, you know."

"Ah! that's a reminder of what Washington said," remarked Hennipeck.

"What was that?"

"'In times of peace prepare for war.'"

His Most Accurate Counterfeit.

The genial Mark Twain complains that he has a most surprising number of "doubles." Only the other day a gentleman wrote to him from Florence, saying that he had been taken so often for Mr. Clemens that he thought it a matter of duty to send his photograph to the real original.

The likeness, as shown by the picture, was certainly remarkable—so much so, indeed, that Mark sat down and wrote the following reply:

"My Dear Sir:—I thank you very much for your letter and the photograph. In my opinion, you are certainly more like me than any other of my doubles. In fact, I am sure that if you stood before me in a mirror one frame I could shave by you."—October Lippincott's.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

SYNOD STILL AT WORK

Eighty-Fourth Annual Meeting of Presbyterians at Asbury Park.

BLAUVELT MODERATOR

Leander Lovell a Member of Important Committee—Want a Local Option Law.

Leander N. Lovell, of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, has been appointed a member of the committee on Synodical Home Missions, at the eighty-fourth annual meeting of the synod of New Jersey now in session at Asbury Park. The sessions are being held in the First Presbyterian church.

At the opening session on Monday Rev. Dr. I. Alstyne Blauvelt, of Roselle, was elected moderator to succeed Rev. Dr. George Swain, of Allentown, Pa. There was a great surprise in store for the delegates when it was announced that Dr. Swain would not be present to preach the customary sermon, because of illness. He was stricken in the pulpit two weeks ago and has since been sent to a sanitarium and given two months' vacation. There is every reason to believe he will recover. In electing Dr. Blauvelt as moderator, it was stated that he holds the record for the longest pastorate in the Elizabeth Presbytery, and Dr. John T. Kerr, of Elizabeth, in seconding the motion to make Dr. Swain moderator, added that eighty years ago Dr. Blauvelt's father was elected to the same office in the synod of New Jersey.

The presiding minister at the administration of the Lord's Supper was Dr. Robert Hamill Nassau, of West Africa, a missionary, and he was assisted by Rev. George L. Richmond, of Boonton, and Rev. Armond W. Wright, of Barnegat.

Yesterday the moderator appointed the various committees, which was followed by reports. Rev. Henry C. Cronin, of Jersey City, made the report of the committee of Sabbath-school work, drawing attention to the progress made during the year. Rev. W. W. Casselberry, of Dunellen, reported for the committee on systematic beneficience, and Rev. V. Loudenbough, of Nelem, presented the report of the committee on temperance. He called attention to the fact that the synod made no mistake last year in appointing a committee to co-operate with representatives with other religious bodies, and with the state temperance organizations in the State for legislative work and especially to promote the enactment of a local option law by the Legislature.

Continuing, Dr. Loderbough said: "We believe that the bishops' bill would not have become a law, even in its much modified form, had not the demand for a local option law been pressed upon the Legislature with great zeal by the temperance forces of the State. Our temperance committee was indefatigible in its efforts to arouse public sentiment and gather the supporters of the bill at Trenton."

In the absence of Dr. Allen H. Brown, of Atlantic City, chairman of the committee on historical materials, the report of that committee was presented by the vice-chairman, Rev. Joseph F. Folsom, of Newark. A number of churches were reported as holding anniversaries during 1906, which appears to be peculiarly an anniversary year from top to bottom.

LETTER TO UNION.

James E. Martine Acknowledges the Endorsement of the Typos.

Acknowledgement of the endorsement of his candidacy has been received by the Typographical Union from James E. Martine, Democratic nominee for Congress. The farmer-orator wrote as follows:

"Typographical Union, No. 399.

"My dears sirs:

"I read with pleasure the kind and flattering resolution passed by you. I assure you it is most pleasing to be esteemed by one's fellow citizens.

"As I have often said, I believe in labor unions. I believe they have advanced the well-being of every member connected with them, and through them the community has been a gainer.

"Again thanking you, I am,

"Respectfully,

"J. E. MARTINE."

Fun Cost Him $5.

George Cooper, the young man who startled Somerset street Monday night, by driving furiously up and down the thoroughfare, was fined $5 by Mayor Smalley last night. He was warned that a repetition of the offense would result in his being sent to jail for a long term.

Colored Panhandler.

William Robinson, colored, was arrested yesterday for vagrancy. He was released by Judge Runyon this morning under suspended sentence.

HOPE CHAPEL MEN'S CLUB EXPRESSES ITS SYMPATHY

PASSES RESOLUTIONS ON THE DEATH OF HENRY C. SQUIRES.

The Hope chapel Men's Club, one of the most progressive organizations of the many in the West End congregation, met last night, and by resolutions expressed sorrow over the death of Henry C. Squires. The chapel's late superintendent was always an advocate of men's and boys' clubs and the present Men's Club had his advice and support from the time of its inception. It pleased him greatly to see it increase in membership and the officers were encouraged by his presence among them whenever he could possibly do so. Following the passing of resolutions, last night, the meetings adjourned out of respect to his memory. The sympathy of the club was expressed as follows:

"Our friend and superintendent, Mr. Henry C. Squires, having suddenly been taken from us by death our hearts are sad but we cannot fail to be grateful for the strength and beauty of his influence and we hereby make simple formal expression of our gratitude that we have been so long permitted to enjoy that influence.

"We further desire to express our feeling of fellowship in sorrow and deep sympathy with the bereaved family of our good friend. We know a little of the greatness of their loss because ours is beyond expression.

"Be it resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Plainfield daily papers and to the family of Mr. Squires."

TO CELEBRATE BIRTHDAY OF THE CATHOLIC DIOCESE.

Elaborate Exercises to be Held On November 27 and 28 at Trenton.

Pastors of the Catholic churches in Trenton met yesterday afternoon at the Cathedral rectory in that city to plan for a fitting observation of the 25th anniversary of the diocese of New Jersey, to which St. Joseph's church, North Plainfield, belongs. This diocese came into existence November 1, 1881, and the exercises incident to the celebration of its quarter century birthday will be November 27 and 28. The commemoration ceremonies will include a pontifical high mass at the Cathedral on the morning of the 27th, a public meeting in Taylor opera house in the evening and a demonstration by the children of the parochial schools the following afternoon. This demonstration will likewise take place in the opera house, although this has not been definitely decided.

The feature of the celebration will be the meeting in Taylor opera house the first day. This meeting will be addressed by prominent divines from this and other dioceses. Bishop McFaul, as the head of this diocese, will take a prominent part. In addition to the addresses there will be a musical programme.

At the pontifical mass priests from all the nearby dioceses will be present and the priests of this diocese will participate in the ceremonies. Monsignor O'Grady, of New Brunswick, will preach the sermon.

TROUPE DIDN'T APPEAR.

Minstrels Disappoint New Market and Piscataway First Nighters.

Amusement lovers of New Market and the Piscataway plantations were disappointed by a minstrel troupe last night. The troupe was to have appeared at Friendship Hall, but it didn't show up.

The combination, billed as the Eureka Minstrels, placarded the village and the township several days ago, announcing its coming, and there was a good sized crowd at the hall. Never a sign of the troupe appeared, however, nor even a word of explanation. It is supposed they learned that Primrose was to come to the New Plainfield theatre, last night, and decided that it wouldn't be worth while trying to draw a crowd. The first-nighters of Piscataway are very indignant over the affair.

Butterfly Lecture.

Charles Mathewson, instructor in biology in the city High School, delivered a stereopticon lecture yesterday afternoon to the biology classes on the life history of the butterfly and moth. With the aid of these views Mr. Mathewson explained mimicry and protective coloration better than the classes have been able to understand them before. The slides were a very fine collection loaned by Dr. M. A. Bigiow, of the Teachers' College, Columbia University.

Perkins to Be Speaker.

A change has been made in the slate for the reorganization of the incoming Legislature. Assemblyman Randolph Perkins, of this county, is likely to be made Speaker of the House, instead of Assemblyman Alfred H. Barber, of Mercer, as was originally intended.

DISTINGUISHED KNIGHTS AT FREEDOM CASTLE

ONE OF THEM, WHO IS EDITOR, GETS NIFTY COPY.

Eagle Knights of high degree were the guests of Freedom Castle, K. G. E., at its meeting last night. Supreme Chief John D. Harger, of Detroit, Mich., head of the order, was there, and Grand Chief William B. Kirby, of Bridgeton, head of the New Jersey knights. They were greeted by a large number of members. It was hoped to have delegations from New Brunswick and Somerville present, but Supreme Chief Harger's visit was planned only a few days ago, and the notice to the other castles of the district arrived too late for response in person.

Mr. Harger and Mr. Kirby came early in the meeting, and saw the degree team initiate two candidates in the third degree. They both warmly complimented the Castle on its team The Supreme Chief said he had never seen the work better performed.

In his greeting as Supreme Chief, Mr. Harger spoke strongly for a militant campaign for the advancement of the order. He dwelt on the ambition of all good knights to bring it to the highest possible plane as to personnel and to the maintenance of that standard.

The Grand Chief spoke on the same line, urging the members to do valiant service in spreading the high and ennobling principles of the order.

Past Grand Chief Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, of Freedom Castle, also made a forceful speech on the same text. He gave the members an inspiring motto, "Smile and push," under which to work. Short addresses were made by various other members.

A resolution thanking the Bridgeton Evening News for much helpful publicity in the cause of the order was passed. Grand Chief Kirby is editor of the News, and he has been known to discard seven or eight live pieces to make room for news of the order. Greater sacrifice than this can no Eagle Knight editor make, and the members were made to understand that by Dr. Buchanan, who introduced the resolution. Editor-Chief Kirby made no mention of this resolution, but after the session he was heard to murmur, "Double-leaded and a two-column head."

An informal reception was tendered to the visitors after the meeting. Music by Dr. Buchanan, DeWitt C. Fraser and M. A. Korff was enjoyed.

LEWIS WILLIAM DRAKE WEDS MISS JENNIE DE CAMP.

Ceremony Performed Last Night by Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss at His Home.

Lewis William Drake, of West Third street, and Miss Jennie DeCamp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin DeCamp, of Linden avenue, were quietly married by Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss at his home last night. The ceremony took place at 8 o'clock and was witnessed only by the bride's parents. Miss DeCamp wore a gray traveling suit and held a bouquet of roses.

Returning to the home of the home of the bride after the marriage, the young couple were tendered a reception at which a large number of relatives and friends were present. Both have many acquaintances in the city and borough and the fact was attested by an array of presents comprising silverware, cut glass and bric-a-brac. They will spend a few days in New York State on a wedding trip and returning will make their home in the borough.

The groom is a machinist in the employ of the Pond Tool Company. He is a member of Benevolent Council, No. 256, Jr. O. U. A. M., and Court Watchung, I. O. F. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Drake, well known West End resident.

QUIET WEDDING.

Miss Nellie Marie Miner and Frank Quass United.

Attended only by two friends, Miss Nellie Marie Miner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. P. Miner, of West Front street, and Frank Quass, were married this morning at the home of Rev. A. E. Finn, pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist church. The ceremony was performed at 9 o'clock.

Miss Estelle M. Sofield, of New Market, and Wilbert Pennington, of this city, attended the bride and groom. Mr. and Mrs. Quass left after the ceremony on a trip through New England. They will begin housekeeping on their return.

Attended Conference.

A number of New Marketers attended the East New Jersey Sunday-school Union conference at Newark, yesterday. Rev. Frank Fletcher is secretary of the organization.

—Letter-carrier Charles B. Stephens, of Duer street, will remove to 334 East Fifth street, tomorrow.

WOMEN'S MISSIONARY MEETING AT WESTFIELD

SOME PLAINFIELDERS PARTICIPATE IN THE PROGRAMME.

The semi-annual meeting of the Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Society of the East New Jersey Association, held yesterday at the Baptist church, Westfield, was one of unusual interest. The devotional service was led by Mrs. Charles Conant, of the Westfield church, and the greeting was given by Mrs. F. E. Bruton, also of Westfield. The response was made by Mrs. J. M. Dudley, of Elizabeth, president of the association. "Our Educational Work" was the theme of Mrs. B. J. Shreve, of Plainfield.

In the afternoon an address of deep interest was given by Miss Anna Linker, of Madras, and two enthusiastic addresses followed by Miss Hattie Stelle, of Elizabeth, on "Our Summer School at Northfield," and on the motto of the Farther Lights Society, "Forward," by Miss Elizabeth R. Dimock, of Elizabeth, junior State secretary.

A telegram was sent Mrs. Alonzo Pettit, State president, who was absent on account of illness.

Among the delegates from the Baptist churches of this city were Mrs. A. M. Pond, Mrs. Harry Miss, Mrs. Charles Steiner, Mrs. Compton, Mrs. Theodore Runyon, Mrs. James S. Pray, Mrs. Utzinger, Mrs. Baker, Miss Linda Butler, Mrs. Chandler, Mrs. Ryno, Mrs. B. J. Shreve, Miss Ida Yerkes, Mrs. James Manning, Mrs. Judson Bonnell and Miss Mary White.

A delightful collation, artistically arranged, was served at the noon recess by the women of the Westfield church.

FAMOUS EVANGELIST COMING TO PLAINFIELD.

H. W. Wharton, Co-Worker With Late Dwight L. Moody, to be Heard Here.

Arrangements have been made for special religious services covering a week or more, to be held at the First Baptist church, under the leadership of one of the most widely known and successful evangelists living. Dr. Wharton was the chosen companion and fellow-laborer of D. L. Moody in many of his meetings, and is said to be much like Mr. Moody in his spirit and manner. He has been constantly engaged in revival work for twenty years past in all parts of the United States, though chiefly in the middle west and the south. A few years ago great meetings were conducted by him in New York and Brooklyn and in New England. Many thousands have been led to the Christian life through his marvellous power.

It is believed that the entire community, and pastors and members of all the churches will as far as possible unite in the meetings. Dr. Wharton will reach Plainfield the last of next week, and begin his work here Sunday, October 28. Services will be held every evening, and possibly at certain hours of the morning and afternoon.

As crowds are sure to be in attendance when once Dr. Wharton has been heard, the main audience room of the church will be used. Five hundred copies of a special hymn book have been provided, and a large chorus will lead the singing.

Will Fight for Bishops' Bill.

Under the auspices of the Plainfield Christian Endeavor Union a mass meeting will be held in the Congregation church tomorrow night at 8 o'clock. The meeting will be addressed by Rev. Hervey Wood, of Orange, who has recently moved to this State, to lead the fight against the repeal of the Bishops' bill. Liquor organization, both State and National, are going to concentrate their power against the bill this year and the churches have been asked to unite and enter the fight. The Christian Endeavor Society will be an important factor in defense of the temperance measure.

Gallerytes Disturbed Audience.

During an intensely dramatic scene in the performance of "Macbeth" at the New Plainfield theatre, Monday night, the audience was disturbed by a cat-call from the gallery. Manager Counihan and his attaches made every attempt to learn the identity of the hoodlum but without success. An action of this sort at a high class production is deplored by Mr. Counihan and he has taken steps to prevent a recurrence. In the future a policeman in plain clothes will be seated in the gallery at every performance and any disorderly conduct will result in the prompt arrest of the offender.

Rink Opening Tomorrow.

Skating will begin in Plainfield tomorrow night. It was announced this morning that Company K's rink would positively open at that time. The floor is in excellent condition and there is full equipment on hand. An orchestra will play.

MR. CASE A V. P. OF AMERICAN BANKERS ASSN.

HIGH HONOR BESTOWED ON PLAINFIELD TRUST COMPANY OFFICIAL.

A much prized honor has been bestowed on J. Herbert Case, secretary and treasurer of the Plainfield Trust Company, by the American Bankers' Association now in session at St. Louis. According to a telegram received by him today he has been made vice-president for New Jersey, the sixty-five delegates from the New Jersey State Bankers Association making him their unanimous choice. As there is only one vice-president for each State and as it is a much coveted position among the big bankers, the distinction awarded the Plainfielder has brought him warm congratulations from friends about the State.

When the Plainfield Trust Company was organized a few years ago, Mr. Case, then connected with a banking house in New York, was sought out by the incorporators to take charge of its affairs. He became its secretary and treasurer and subsequently a director. Through his efforts largely the institution has already taken its place among the leading banking concerns in the State. Its building on Park avenue is considered one of the finest banking homes in New Jersey. Mr. Case is an officer of the Plainfield Library, the Plainfield Riding and Driving Club, the First Baptist church and other local institutions.

MRS. ROGERS SUES.

Harry L. McGee Defendant in Action for Damages.

Mrs. N. Pendleton Rogers, of East Front street, is complainant in the Supreme Court, Elizabeth, today, in an action brought against H. L. McGee, of North Plainfield. In July, 1903, Mrs. Rogers claims she took a Victoria auto to Mr. McGee's garage, which is situated on East Fourth street, for repairs, Mr. McGee promising to put the machine in first-class condition.

Mrs. Rogers claims that she has been unable to use the machine since the repairs were made and she seeks damages. Mr. McGee has filed a set-off, which he claims is due him for batteries and other supplies. Taggard & Thompson, of New York, represent Mrs. Rogers and Charles A. Reed is Mr. McGee's counsel.

Presented With a Set of Resolutions.

Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M., presented, last night, Junior Grand Warden W. D. Wolfskeil and his successor as district deputy, George Townley, of Elizabeth. Jerusalem Lodge has a warm spot in its heart for Mr. Wolfskeil, who was District Deputy of the East Masonic District for several years, and in appreciation of his past services, Worshipful Master George Caskie presented Mr. Wolfskeil, on behalf of the lodge with a handsome set of resolutions. They were gratefully received and Mr. Wolfskeil expressed his high regard for Jerusalem Lodge in thanking the members for the beautiful gift. Later in the evening the visiting officers were entertained at a banquet.

Primrose Scores Again.

George Primrose and his minstrel troupe again pleased a large audience at the New Plainfield theatre last night. The show is practically the same as when organized and presented here last June, with the exception that everything moved like clockwork and the comedians and dancers were funnier than ever. The roster has been added to by the engagement of the Groman brothers who are well known to Plainfielders through frequent local appearances at the head of their own shows. The Primrose company now goes direct from here to the South, thence across to Texas and California.

Faithless Husband Indicted.

Lambert R. Edmonds, a plumber, of West Front street, who was arrested considerably over a year ago after his wife had tracked him and exposed his engagement to a Metuchen domestic, and blocked his plans for an elopement, has been indicted by the Middlesex County Grand Jury on a charge growing out of his relations with the girl. Constable Robert L. Pierce, of New Market, has been given a bench warrant to serve on him.

Cannot Install "Ys."

Being unwilling to meet the requests of the councilmanic street committee in return for privileges asked, the Public Service Corporation has failed in its purpose of installing "Ys" at certain points in this city for the use of the single-end trolleys of the new type. However, the company is operating a number of these cars on the main line and expect to use them all together when their barns at Lincoln are completed.

PREACHER TELLS OF HIS ESCAPE FROM A MOB

RELATED STORY OF NEW IBERIO, LA., RIOTS SEVENTEEN YEARS AGO.

Rev. Byron Gunner, whose home is in Newport, R. I., but who has spent the greater part of his life in the South, lectured before a large audience at the Mount Olive Baptist church, last night, on "Five hours in the hands of a mob." It was in reality the narration of a personal experience and was used by him as a timely subject in view of the fact that race disturbances have been prevalent in Georgia.

Mr. Gunner was pastor of a church at New Iberia, La., seventeen years ago when a colored boy killed a white man and an uprising of the whites followed. They attempted to drive all the negroes from the town and in the excitement no one was exempted. Mr. Gunner's church and home were burned and he himself was taken by the mob and narrowly escaped with his life. Several men were killed and it was only out of respect to his calling that the minister was spared. The government had to send troops to the scene before the disturbance was quelled.

Mr. Gunner expressed the belief that troubles of this kind are becoming less frequent and gave an optimistic view of conditions in the South. He declared it to be the duty of every colored man to use every influence in maintaining law and order and have the confidence of the white man, not his distrust.

The lecture was given under the auspices of the Baptist Young People's Union of the church.

EDITOR POTTER SUED FOR $10,000 DAMAGES.

School Principal Thomas Grieves Over Publication of a Report.

In the Circuit Court, Elizabeth, today, Prof. Wendell P. Thomas, formerly principal of the Cranford Public Schools, is the plaintiff in a suit for $10,000 damages instituted against J. Alfred Potter, editor and owner of the Cranford Chronicle.

The plaintiff claims that on June 3, 1903, there were published, without comment, in the Cranford Chronicle a set of charges preferred by the Board of Education of Cranford against Prof. Thomas. The following year the principal failed in a reappointment and he claims that as a result of the published charges he has been unable to get another position teaching school.

By way of defense it is stated that in the same publication, June 3, 1903, the Editor Potter published two letters from women whose children attend the schools at Cranford, urging that Prof. Thomas be supported and retained as principal of the schools, and furthermore that the Chronicle has frequently since then published articles upholding Prof. Thomas.

The plaintiff is represented by Herbert W. Knight, of Newark, and the defendant by City Attorney James E. Connolly, of Elizabeth.

Bridget On a Spree.

Bridget Coleman, who has a fondness for the cratter, succumbed to its temptations yesterday and was gathered into the police net. She escaped under a suspended sentence this morning.

DEMOCRATS FOR MR. FISK

Minority Party Endorses Republican Candidates For Mayor and Collector.

A STORMY CONVENTION

Messrs. Schlelf and Homan Named for Freeholders—Rev. Dr. Rodman for School Trustee.

By a vote of eight to five, the Democratic City convention in the law offices of Walter L. Hetfield, Sr., last night endorsed Charles J. Fisk the Republican candidate for Mayor, and John W. Murray, Jr., the Republican candidate for tax collector.

Rev. Erskine M. Rodman was nominated for member of the Board of Education; Stephen Schleif and James P. Homan for members of the Board of Freeholders and the councilmanic ticket is as follows: First ward, John P. Owens; Second ward, Peter Lafarette; Third ward, William Harding; Fourth ward, Albert Lederer.

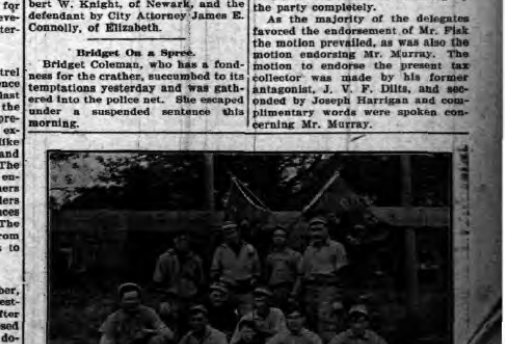
The endorsement of Charles J. Fisk and John W. Murray, Jr., was not secured without a heated argument on the part of the minority. Several delegates were particularly bitter, declaring that the Democratic party here would completely lose its identity by such a course. Others declared that it would not be a wise thing to nominate a mayoralty candidate in opposition to Mr. Fisk.

When a vote was called for from the thirteen delegates to the convention, the following favored the endorsement of Mr. Fisk and Mr. Murray: Walter L. Hetfield, Sr., Edward T. Lynch, J. V. F. Dilts, Joseph Harrigan, William Harding, Stephen Schleif, Albert Lederer and John Casey. Those voting against the proposition were Frank McCabe, Frank Shattle, Clarence Walden, Edward McCue and Patrick Reville.

Walter L. Hetfield, Sr., was chairman of the convention and Edward T. Lynch was the secretary. The credentials of the delegates were accepted without a protest, after which the question of placing a candidate in nomination for Mayor was taken up.

Stephen H. Schleif at once moved that the convention endorse Charles J. Fisk for the nomination, and this motion was seconded by Edward T. Lynch. The chairman of the convention, as well as Mr. Schleif and Mr. Lynch expressed their high regards for the Republican nominee, and spoke in glowing terms of his past record as a citizen and office-holder, and they said that it would be a deserved compliment to Mr. Fisk to have the Democratic party endorse him. Remarks in opposition to this action was made chiefly by Patrick Reville, who predicted all sorts of trouble for the party if the endorsement was made. It was estimated by him that there are 1,200 Democratic voters in Plainfield and the proposed action by the convention would be the means of breaking up the party completely.

As the majority of the delegates favored the endorsement of Mr. Fisk the motion prevailed, as was also the motion endorsing Mr. Murray. The motion to endorse the present tax collector was made by his former antagonist, J. V. F. Dilts, and seconded by Joseph Harrigan and complimentary words were spoken concerning Mr. Murray.



Scotch Plains' Winning Baseball Team.

The Scotch Plains baseball team, which closed its season on Saturday, played twenty-nine games with a record of twenty-five victories and four defeats. The results of the team work are remarkable for a strictly amateur aggregation, not one penny having been expended during the season, for the services of players.

The only expense has been for guarantees and in maintaining the grounds, which have been met by the contributions of the club's supporters. The club was organized as an experiment. Some of the players had been out of the game for several years and baseball at Plainfield and Johnston and dead. Manager [illegible] had an uphill Captain George [illegible] arousing the interest of the [illegible], but they succeeded, the attendance gradually increased and the team was soon paying for itself.

The members of the team are as follows: J. Albert, 2b; Reick, lf; Kellogg, c; Baldwin, ss; A. Frentz, p; Fisher, c; Baldwin, rf; G. Frentz, 1b; Albert, c; Vanderbilt, rf; G. Frentz, captain and 1b; Schrienbeck, 3b; Johnston, manager and pitcher; "Mascot," Willie Stanberry.

MISSIONS OF THE SYNOD

Mrs. W. E. Honeyman Elected President of Presbyterians' Home Society.

AT ANNUAL MEETING

Auto Money for Heathen Suggested By Missionary at Meeting in East Orange.

A number of women of the Presbyterian congregation in this city were in attendance at the twenty-ninth annual meeting of the Woman's Synodical Societies for Home and Foreign Missions, which was held in the Munn Avenue Presbyterian church, East Orange. There was a large gathering of mission workers, representing nearly every section of the State. During the day Mrs. William E. Honeyman, of North Plainfield, was elected president of the Home Missionary Society.

A devotional meeting, led by Mrs. J. T. Kerr, of Elizabeth, opened the session at 9:30 o'clock. After the opening hymn, "The Morning Light is Breaking," and a Scripture reading, Mrs. G. W. H. Cushing, of East Orange, offered prayer. The reports of the several secretaries followed the devotions, Mrs. Walter Condit, of Jersey City, corresponding secretary, leading.

A feature of the morning session was the address of the Rev. Dr. John Fulton Patterson, pastor of the Central Presbyterian church, Orange.

"You also are aware of the fact," said the speaker, "that this is the centenniel year of the foreign missionary idea in the foreign field, and we are also about to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of our foreign board, and while we are in the midst of these celebrations, has it occurred to you what those brave pioneer missionaries would say should they arise from their graves and face the marvelous conditions today?

"They would see twenty-seven main mission stations that are fostering more than 2,000 other smaller stations. They would see 889 American missionaries and 2,606 native workers associated with our people in the work of evangelizing the dark sections of the foreign lands. They would see those 434 organized churches, with 63,480 attendants and 1,001 schools with an enrolment of 32,512 native children. There are 104 hospitals that give relief to the sick and the suffering that had last year 486,000 patients. Eight printing presses are busy day and night pouring out literature to an enormous extent, $67,492,203 pages being the record for the past year, and best of all, 10,000 souls were won for Christ.

"One serious drawback our board has to contend with is the lack of money to send hundreds of young men and women, who today stand ready to enter the field to aid in the restoration of last souls for Christ.

"The Presbyterian church is the richest religious denomination in the world today and is doing its share toward evangelizing the world. The many members of religious organizations would contribute proportionately toward this great cause, instead of investing in automobiles, what a great evolution in mission work would take place."

The preacher dwelt at length upon the good that mission work accomplishes for the country, whether home or foreign, and closed his school address summing up his appeal with three points:

"First, we can all be at least in sympathy with the great work; second, we have money to give, and third, and lastly, we can pray."

Mrs. W. E. Hall, of Perth Amboy, gave an interesting resume of the young people's work, Mrs. L. B. Coddington, of Murray Hill, secretary of literature, reported on the extensive and systematic work of distributing Bibles and other religious works. Mrs. H. F. Van Meter reported a substantial balance in the contingent fund.

Mrs. Hall presided over young people's conference, telling of the year's work, and the society's president, Mrs. W. E. Honeyman, told of prospective work. Joseph E. Moore made an address. These officers were elected by the Home Missionary Society:

Mrs. W. E. Honeyman, of North Plainfield, president; Mrs. J. H. Owens, Paterson; Mrs. Harvey C. Olin, East Orange; Mrs. R. B. Gibson, Newark; Mrs. D. C. Blair, Belvidere; Mrs. S. B. Ketcham, Pennington; Mrs. H. D. Zandt, Jamesburg; Mrs. W. J. Paulding, Dartown; Mrs. A. S. Crane, Elizabeth, vice-presidents; Mrs. E. C. Wiles, corresponding secretary; Miss M. D. Paxton, Princeton, recording secretary; Mrs. Wilbur La Roe, Perth Amboy, secretary of literature; Miss Mary M. Harding, Bridgeton, secretary Young People's Work; Mrs. David Harvey, Asbury Park, secretary of Freedmen; Mrs. J. H. Wanning, of this city, treasurer of contingent fund.

Miss Clara H. Jackson Weds.

Miss Clara Helen Jackson, youngest daughter of Mrs. Estella Jackson Schenck, of Newark, and Chancman Lewis Weber, of the Newark Police Department, were married Sunday afternoon, October 7, at the residence of the officiating clergyman, Rev. Robert Scott England, 30 Walnut street, Newark.

TORN FROM HIS HORSE ATTENDANT GOES CRAZY

OFFICIALS DEPORTED HIM AFTER BRINGING ARABIAN STEEDS TO THIS COUNTRY

So great is his attachment for Vadoda, one of the Arabian mares recently imported by Cartoonist Horace Davenport, and a favorite of Hooley, the latter of this city, that when Soulia Aboud, a young Syrian who had been the caretaker of the mare for years, was told yesterday that he would not see the Arab steed again, he became ferocious and had to be put into a straightjacket by the Ellis Island officials.

It had been discovered that Aboud was afflicted with trachoma, and so far had this contagious disease of the eye developed that he could not even be accorded a last look at his favorite charge before his deportation.

Aboud was one of five Arabs who accompanied the Davenport and Hooley horses as a caretaker, and those in the charge were the Seglawi-Al-Abed mare Vadoda (meaning love in Syrian) and the 2-year-old colt Commusa, both highly bred animals.

The mare is known as the "War Mare" because she was captured by the Anazeh tribe in a war with the Shamar and is highly valued for the blood she carries in her veins. She has many scars, showing that she has passed through many battles. Aboud had been her caretaker since the mare became the property of the Anazehs, and up to last Saturday night had slept in her stall. He had cared for the colt since its birth.

Last Saturday medical examiners found that the young man was suffering from trachoma, and after he had left the men in hand the horses on the pier from the steamer Italia he was taken to Ellis Island to be deported.

Nothing would console him, although he received several presents and his wages were handed to him in sparkling gold. Up to Wednesday night he was made to believe that there was a good chance of his going to see Vadoda, but when the officers appeared to take him to the steamer Sicilia he became violent and had to be subdued.

MUSICALE AT HOPE CHAPEL.

DELIGHTS LARGE AUDIENCE.

Judge Runyon Among the Contributors to a Delightful Programme.

A musicale and entertainment of exceptional merit delighted a large gathering at Hope chapel, Friday. The affair was given under the auspices of the Ways and Means committee of the chapel and was for the benefit of the music fund.

The various numbers on the programme were well rendered and the contributors were heartily encored. Judge William N. Runyon gave two new songs that pleased greatly, Mrs. G. S. Simons held the rapt attention of her audience with a delightful reading and Fred J. Pope earned applause by his baritone solos. Mrs. L. R. Howard sang and with Mrs. Lewis Randall, of Medina, O., gave a piano duet that was one of the features of the programme. Other instrumental numbers were given by Musical Stuart, who extracts music anything, and the Sagamore Mandolin and Banjo Club. Henry C. Squires was in charge during the evening and introduced the artists. Miss Bertha Jones made a very able accompanist for Musical Stuart.

The Ways and Means Committee, which arranged the affair, comprises Philip Branston, Walter Bradford, Mrs. William Jones and Mrs. Donald McInnes.

YOUNG BUTCHER DIES.

Walter Brokaw, of Dunellen, Succumbs After a Brief Illness.

Walter Brokaw, 26 years old, died at the home of his brother-in-law, John Van Middlesworth, Washington avenue, Dunellen, Saturday, after a brief illness. Kidney trouble and rheumatism are said to have been the cause. He was taken ill Tuesday.

The funeral was held Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, from the Van Middlesworth house. The young man's mother, Mrs. Virginia Brokaw, two sisters and a brother are living. The latter, William Brokaw, is a member of Perseverance Lodge, K. of P.

MRS. LOUISA P. DAVIS.

Died at Her Home Yesterday at the Age of Ninety-three Years.

Mrs. Louisa Peck Davis, widow of P. Davenport Davis, died yesterday at her home on Clinton avenue. She was in her ninety-third year and death was occasioned by the infirmities of old age, hastened by a fall which she sustained a week ago.

Mrs. Davis had resided in Plainfield or Dunellen practically all her life and was quite well known in both places. There are surviving five daughters, Mrs. P. W. Brakely, of Dunellen; Mrs. J. O. Stevens, and the Misses Margaret, Ida and Cynthia Davis, all of Plainfield, and one son, James W. Davis, formerly manager of the Plainfield Cab Company stables.

ELIZABETH DEMOCRATS NAME RYAN FOR MAYOR

"FARMER ORATOR" RECEIVES OVATION AT THE CITY CONVENTION.

Patrick J. Ryan, who has twice been Elizabeth's chief executive and who was defeated for the office two years ago by Samuel J. Berry, was nominated for mayor by the Democratic party Friday. He was the unanimous choice at the city convention and the mention of his name was received with great enthusiasm. John J. Donahue, Thomas J. Pierson, J. Logan Jones and Robert D. Maurer were named for freeholders.

Congressional Nominee James E. Martine attended the meeting and his entrance to the hall was received with a burst of applause. The "farmer orator" has never been more warmly welcomed at the county seat and he received assurance of support from every man present. During the convention Mr. Martine was formally introduced and gave one of his ringing speeches. He devoted much of it to attacks on Mr. Fowler's record as a Congressman and reiterated his promise to serve the district faithfully in the event of his election.

WHACKS BARE LEGS.

Teacher Invents Remedy to Stop Tripping.

Atlantic City, Oct. 13.—"Put out your leg! Turn down your stocking! Whack! whack!! whack!!!"

Boys in the New Jersey Avenue Public School who persisted in projecting their feet into the aisles so that the tight-kneed trousers of almost old acrobatic stunts, have been conquered by the teacher's ingenuity and wit.

After the teacher had tripped several times she hit upon a remedy for the evil. A big boy who had offended was commanded to roll down his stocking, and then with a ruler she whacked his shins until, smarting under the humiliation and pain, he solemnly promised to "be good." A half dozen other boys, guilty of the same misdeeds, were treated to similar punishment.

School authorities, while at first amazed at the young teacher's temerity, are said to have congratulated her after an investigation of the circumstances.

RICHARD MORGAN, WHO BUILT MONITORS, DEAD.

Was Superintendent of Yard Where the Mary Powell Was Constructed.

Jersey City, Oct. 13.—Richard Morgan, eighty-one years old, for many years superintendent of the Allison Drydock Company, died Thursday in 220 Union street, this city, from pneumonia. He was superintendent of the company when it built the Hudson River steamer Mary Powell, for years known as the "Queen of the Hudson."

He supervised work on the monitors made for the Civil War and had a prominent part in the building of the yacht America, which first won the Queen's Cup.

Want Whiskerless Milkers.

Los Angeles, Oct. 15.—The Southern California Veterinary Association has declared war on bewhiskered dairymen. If it has its way carefeakers, milkers and milk deliverers in this county will have to go clean shaven. In a paper which was read before the association last night, whiskers were denounced as the favorite rendezvous and abiding place of germs. Legislation was demanded to force those who handle food to dispense with "microbe harboring parks" on the chins. Dr. Young declared that germs thrive on farms where milkers wear whiskers.

Umpire Won't Run.

Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 15.—John D. Lynn having declined the Democratic nomination for Senator from the Forty-sixth Senatorial district, the committee appointed to fill vacancies made choice of Francis O'Loughlin, known throughout the county as "Silk O'Loughlin," a base ball umpire. He is in Chicago, umpiring the world's championship series. O'Loughlin was nominated for Senator in this district two years ago, but owing to the boom for Roosevelt he was defeated. Late Friday night he telegraphed that he would not accept the nomination.

Chemist's Grim Experiment.

New York, Oct. 15.—"You have often heard me tell you what prussic acid will do. This is it." This was the wording of a note crushed in the clenched fist of Dr. Eugene VanNess, a manufacturing chemist, when he was found dead on a lounge in his laboratory, on the top floor of a three story building at No. 151 West Thirty-first street, at about eight o'clock Friday night. On the floor where he had evidently had it after swallowing half its contents, was a large goblet filled with a strong solution of prussic acid.

Lower Fare on Flat Line Trolley.

The Trenton and New Brunswick "Fast Line" Trolley Company has reduced its fare between the two cities from eighty to sixty cents a round trip. The single fare is reduced to forty cents, and there are corresponding reductions between intermediate stations. The company will carry on an hour schedule during the winter months.

LITERARY.

In her novel, "Where the Apple Reddens," which is the chief feature of the September Smart Set, Edna Kenton deals in a powerful way with the subject of divorce. No social question of the day is more vitally interesting, and no recent writer has treated the theme in a more masterly way. The story is unusually dramatic, and moves rapidly to its logical climax. E. F. Benson, of "Dodo" fame, contributes to this number a remarkably graphic little sketch, which reveals great insight into human nature. "Gare du Nord" is the little he has given it. Gouverneur Morris, always a clever story-teller, is represented by "The Itching Palm," a delightful satire on the modern craze for wealth. "The Ralahoos of Monseigneur," by G. F. Burnley, is so perfectly conceived a little tale that one almost imagines it to have been written originally in French.

One of the newest stories of Queen Alexandra is told in the August Interior Decoration, and credits her with having charts of the various rooms in her castles. The position of every stick of furniture is exactly marked on these. She also has had charts made of the various cabinets with their enclosed treasures—the dressing tables with their toilet articles, and the desks with their writing paraphernalia. When the housekeepers clean these rooms a chart is given to them, and no matter how the room is disarranged in renovating it, the chart insures the return to their proper places of the various pieces of bric-a-brac and furniture.

Lippincott's October number opens with its usual complete novel which, it will be remembered, was a strong feature with this Magazine long before other periodicals discovered its value. The novel for October, "Lips That Were Sealed," is amply fulfilled in this story of men and women of today. The author's types are vigorous and fresh; besides, she has a "pretty wit" all her own. The crux of the plot leaves the reader in exciting doubt until the last—an evidence of good art. There is motion rapid enough to please the most exacting; and there is emotion a-plenty without lapsing into soft sentimentality.

An interesting phase of the present situation is that American investors are unwittingly responsible, to some extent, for the outbreak of revolutionary sentiment at this time. So long as uba was prosperous and the Army of Liberation still unpaid, the mere fact that a great number of Cubans all over the island were financially interested in their claims for war service was an excellent check upon any ebullition of a warlike spirit which would weaken the paying power of the government. Led thereto by the prospect of a large profit, American investors, as well as Cubans, have discounted these claims, so that the veterans of the war no longer have a personal interest in the payment of the war vouchers, and are in a position to join another Army of Liberation, which, if successful, will provide them with a new crop of war claims. In the meantime, the American purchasers of these claims, at figures showing as much as 100 per cent. to 200 per cent. profit, are waiting the payment in the balance of their money which now lies in the Cuban Treasury, and is being used to suppress the revolution.—From "The Cuban Republic on Trial," by Atherton Bownell, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for October.

A permanent representation to be maintained at Washington during the sessions of Congress, is the latest device of the people of the United States, to oppose the lobbies maintained by the "special interests," is the proposition put forth in Success Magazine for October. The editors of this magazine have outlined plans for the formation of such an organization, and have secured acceptances from a number of prominent men to act as a governing committee. Henry Beach Needham describes the need for such a lobby as this at Washington, in an article, "The People's Lobby." The plan of the editors is the great difficulty in obtaining beneficial legislation to the obstructing efforts of the corporation attorneys, whose arguments are welcomed by legislators to the exclusion of pleas on behalf of the people.

"The October Good Housekeeping is a feast. Besides containing the opening chapters of Truthful Jane, a serial story based on the servant problem, by Florence Morse Kingsley (author of The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia, the Singular Miss Smith, etc.), it is rich in live, practical articles, beautifully illustrated. A Peter Pan Party, by Mary Blackwell Stedling, is a practical application of the Peter Pan idea to entertainments of various kinds, with charming illustrations. Engaged Girls is the title of a symposium of counsel and discussion from a group of young matrons, illustrated from photographs in that by W. Coleman Clarke. Books for fairs, designed for Good Housekeeping readers by F. Chouteau Brown, architect and designer of stage scenery, are attractively pictured in colors. The story of a remarkable achievement in music is told by Mrs. Vance Cheney, a woman of extraordinary powers and personality. One of Lafcadio Hearn's magical oriental sketches, The Tradition of the Tea Plant, is illustrated in color by Genjiro Yeto. And these are not half the good things in the October number which deserve especial attention. Fifteen cents a copy, one dollar a year. The Phelps Publishing Co., Springfield, Mass., New York, Chicago.

The Popular Science Monthly for October contains the following articles: "The Earthquake Rift of 1906," by President David Starr Jordan; "The Value of Science," by M. I. Pupin; "Francis Bacon and the Modern University," by Professor Edward O. Sisson; "Briticisms versus Americanisms," by Professor Edwin W. Bowen; "Difficult Boys," by Dr. J. Madison Taylor; "Genius," by Dr. Robert Morris Ogden; "The Birth of the Stars," by Professor T. J. J. See; "Francis Bacon and the Baconian Theory," by President Mary Mills Patrick; "The Scientific Aspects of Luther Burbank's Work," by Professor Vernon L. Kellogg; "The Effects of Immigration on Homicide," by Professor Morris Loeb; "The British Medical Association and the University of Toronto;" "The National Pure Food Law."

The Century promises at least seventy-five short stories throughout the coming year, besides the three serials by Frances Hodgson Burnett, Elizabeth Robins, and . E. W. Mason. Among the noted writers who will contribute stories and novelettes to The Century during 1907 are Harry Stillwell Edwards, author of "Two Runaways and Other Stories;" Charles D. Stewart, author of "The Fugitive Blacksmith;" Norman Duncan, author of "Dr. Luke of the Labrador;" Harvey J. O'Higgins, author of "Don-a-Dreams;" Irving Bachelier, author of "Eben Holden;" Elizabeth Jordan, author of "May Iverson, Her Book;" and Anne Warner, author of "Seeing France with Uncle John."

Every American business man has reason to be interested in the leading article in the Atlantic for October: "Commercial Panics, Past and Future," is the title, and the author is A. B. Noyes, Financial Editor of the Evening Post. Just at present, when we are riding on the top wave of prosperity, it is well worth while to take a look ahead. Another panic year will be due before long: Mr. Noyes believes that if we can find out the cause that brings such a disaster, we can control them,—at least to some extent. The same number contains a timely political article by John H. Latane on "Forcible Collection of International Debts." Precisely what the "Drago Doctrine" stands for, what the situation was which forced it into being, and what our position should be in future crises of the same character,—these are some of the important points covered.

A notable prize contest, open to all artists, is announced in the Woman's Home Companion. That magazine offers for the best covers, in color, five prizes aggregating $2,500—the first prize being $1,500; the second prize, $1,000; the third prize, $500; and the fourth and fifth, $250 each. There are no restrictions as to subject, style, number of colors, or medium of expression, and competitors may submit any number of designs.

The Burr McIntosh.

The cover of this magazine will first attract attention. It is a reproduction in photograph of Miss Marie Doro, the embellishments being printed in a number of colors and gold and it is unquestionably the best magazine cover of the month. The inside color work, both in portraiture and scenes, is unusually attractive, while a portrait form has reproductions of such prominent people as Campanari, Plancon, Margaret Dale, Blanche Walsh, Edna McClure, of the stage, and such prominent people as Luther Burbank, the plant wizard of California; Mrs. Carlyle, the late Mrs. Craigie, the novelist, and Princess Cantacuzene, daughter of Gen. Grant. Clara Morris contributes one of her imitable stage reminiscences entitled "A Dressing Room Reception," with the portraits of herself, Wilson Barrett and Madam Mojeska. All newsdealers handle the Burr McIntosh Monthly. Burr Publishing Company, New York.

Campaign Postals Barred.

New York, Oct. 15.—Postmaster Wilcox Friday issued an order holding up and excluding from the mails all campaign postal cards "designed to obviously reflect upon the conduct or character of any individual." This order excluded what are known as the "H. H." cards—"Hughes, Hearst, Heaven or Hell" postal cards. Another with the candidates in a hearse and several others of a like nature were also deemed unmailable.

Balloon Unveils Statute.

New York, Oct. 15.—In Sherman square, at Broadway and Seventy-second street, there was unveiled Friday afternoon a monument to Giuseppe Verdi in the presence of a multitude estimated to number at least ten thousand persons. More than one hundred Italian societies were represented and more than a score of bands stood within two hundred yards of the statue. To lift the drapories of the statue a captive balloon was utilized, and shrouded as it ascended shedding hundreds of leaves of paper upon which were printed excerpts from Verdi's best known works. Several pigeons were released at the same time.

FANTAIL PIGEONS HIS HOBBY FOR 20 YEARS

B. M. WILLIS RAISES SO MANY PRIZE WINNERS HE SCARES RIVALS OFF.

Ben M. Willis, of Stone street, has one of the finest groups of fantail pigeons to be seen anywhere. Mr. Willis is not a professional breeder, but he has been raising fantails since boyhood, twenty years or more, and he has had remarkable success with them.

He has taken prizes with the birds at Albany, Rochester, Syracuse and Baltimore poultry shows, and among his much valued trophies, is a handsome silver cup won at Albany last year for the finest display of fantails.

Mr. Willis has been so successful with his fantails that all the other exhibitors in Upper New York State drew out and gave him a clear field last year. He could find no entries against him at Syracuse. He has about twenty white fantails on hand now.

Mr. Willis has been here since last March. He is business representative of the Compressed Air Cleaning Company.

WEDDING RECEPTION.

Mr. and Mrs. William Waglow Entertain Friends in Findlay's Hall.

Celebrating their recent wedding, Mr. and Mrs. William Waglow held a reception to their friends, Friday night, at Findlay's Hall.

There was a large attendance. The affair was informal and the guests had a most enjoyable time. Refreshments were bountifully served.

The Timbo Social Club attended in a body, and presented Mr. and Mrs. Waglow with a handsome chair. City Judge William N. Runyon made the presentation speech.

Singing and dancing were features of the evening. Solos were sung by Judge Runyon, William Doud and John Todd.

The refreshments were of a tempting nature, Thomas Timbo was the caterer.

Complimented Borough Exempts.

In reviewing the Labor Day firemen's parade, held last Tuesday, the Rahway Advocate complimented the North Plainfield Exempts on their appearance. It declared them to be "a fine drilled body of men," a statement which has followed their every appearance in parade. The borough has only had the advantage of instruction in drilling by Captain W. C. Smith and they always "make good" under his direction or Foreman L. B. Bodine. The latter was in charge at Rahway.

Presbyterian Society Elects.

The twenty-ninth annual meeting of the Woman's Synodical Society of the Presbyterian church was held on Thursday in the Munn Avenue Presbyterian church, East Orange, on Thursday. Mrs. W. E. Honeyman, president of the Home Mission Society, told of past and prospective work. Among the officers elected for the ensuing year were Mrs. W. E. Honeyman, president, and Mrs. J. H. Manning, treasurer of the contingent fund, both of this place.

Firemen's Prizes.

The prizes to the companies that participated in the demonstration at Elizabeth, Thursday, were awarded as follows: Best appearing company, Jersey City Veteran Volunteers; company having largest number of uniformed men in line, Pacific Engine Company, Bridgeport, Conn.; company having handsomest hand engine, Newark Exempt Firemen; company having handsomest steamer, Phoenix Engine Company, of New Brunswick; company having handsomest hose carriage, Centennial Hose Company No. 4, Peekskill, N. Y.

Band's Masquerade Ball.

The Plainfield Band has arranged to hold a masquerade ball in Central Hall, Park and North avenues, Election Day eve. The band has changed the schedule for its weekly dances from Tuesday and Saturday evenings to Wednesday and Friday evenings.

Head of N. Y. S. P. C. A.

New York, Oct. 15.—Announcement was made Friday that at a meeting of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals on Thursday Alfred Wagstaff had been elected president of the organization. Mr. Wagstaff has been acting president since the resignation of John P. Haines. Mr. Wagstaff was formerly a State Senator and is now clerk of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department.

Rahway Pastor to Marry.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Henry Russell, of Cambridge, near Boston, Mass., have issued invitations for the wedding of their daughter, Adelaide Eloise, to Rev. Charles Franklin Shaw, the pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Rahway. They will be married Wednesday, October 24, at 8 o'clock, in the Prospect Street church, Cambridge.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Liefke, of West Front street, spent Sunday with relatives at Morristown.

Miss Lulu Randolph, of West Eighth street, has been visiting Miss Frances Clark, of Bound Brook.

TYPOS ENDORSE MARTINE

Union Passes Strong Supporting Resolutions at a Special Meeting.

PLEDGE ENTHUSIASM

Democratic Candidate Hailed As Labor's True Friend and Supporter—Action Greatly Helps Martine's Campaign.

In unequivocal language, the local typographical union endorsed James E. Martine, the Democratic candidate for, at a special meeting Friday night, at a special meeting last night. The resolution adopted hails "Mr. Martine as the true friend and warm supporter" of the workingman. Support is pledged to him, and all union workmen are urged to work and vote for him.

The resolution was enthusiastically received. The unanimous vote by which it was passed was marked by sustained applause.

The resolution in full, reads as follows:

"Whereas, It is of vital importance that our representatives in Congress shall be men who have the best interests of the workingman at heart, and are at all times friendly to his welfare; and

"Whereas, It is most important that our representative be a champion of the rights of the workingman, and that he be an avowed advocate of organized labor; and

"Whereas, By reason of our intimate acquaintance with and knowledge of the public and private utterances and acts of James E. Martine, we believe him to be our true friend and warm supporter, we, Typographical Union, No. 399, of Plainfield, N. J., do

"Resolve, That the best interests of this union and of organized labor throughout the Fifth Congressional District will be best served by the election of James E. Martine to Congress, and that

"Therefore, we endorse the candidacy of James E. Martine for that office, pledging him our support and recommending that all union workmen work and vote for him at the election.

"(Signed) L. W. Niles, President.

"James Kermode, Sec."

Mr. Martine has made it plain that he will make Mr. Fowler's record on the labor question one of his chief points of attack, and the endorsement of the Typos will be timely news on his charges along that line. The Typographical Union is a conservative body, and its action in support of Mr. Martine will undoubtedly have great weight with all the other union organizations not only here, but throughout the district.

LOVING CUP GOES TO ALLENTOWN FIREMEN.

Gift of Charles Engelhart Awarded To Pioneer Company.

Rahway, Oct. 13.—The handsome gold-lined silver loving cup, which was purchased by Charles Engelhart, the new proprietor of Taylor's Hotel, on St. George avenue, and placed in the hands of the committee on firemen's parade, to be presented to the finest appearing and best equipped section of the line in Tuesday's parade, has been awarded to Pioneer Engine Company, No. 9, of Allentown, Pa.

While the Allentown company is a remarkably fine looking body of men, much dissatisfaction is expressed over the award. The judges ought no apparatus. They were accompanied by the noted Allentown band, and their uniforms were attractive, but several other out-of-town companies made an equally fine appearance and had with them their engines and full paraphernalia.

Jap Peril in Hawaii.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 15.—"Between depression and Asiatic competition, the whites are being driven out of Hawaii and the Asiatics are succeeding. It is a struggle for survival, with the white element slowly and steadily losing ground." This observation, contained in a bulletin issued yesterday by the Bureau of Labor, summarizes the results of an investigation of the plantation conditions of Hawaii. With the advantage of their lower standard of living and protected from competition in their own class by the Chinese exclusion law, the Japanese, according to this report, "have secured a preponderance of the plantation work, which creates serious difficulties of administration, renders plantations liable to great loss by strikes, and to a certain extent takes out of the hands of overseers and managers the control of administration."

Bicyclist Meets with Accident.

Bound Brook, Oct. 15.—Thomas Egan, of Somerville, was found laying in the road near Finderne Wednesday night in an unconscious condition. Charles Ambrose, a farmer, who was walking to his home in Somerville. Egan, who is a telegraph operator, employed in the Lehigh signal tower near Bound Brook, came to his grief while returning home from work on his bicycle. The machine struck an obstacle in the road, throwing Egan to the ground, the force of the blow rendering him senseless. Meyers took Egan to a nearby farmhouse, where he speedily recovered.

MAN ON WOMAN'S HAT.

"Lids" Looked Like Pancake, Peak, and Mountain Range.

There is no denying that woman at times neglects details of her toilet, either those she cannot see or those she has not yet thought of. She has been considered bird's eye view, as well as worm's eye view fashion. The latest critic writing anonymously in the New York Tribune, believes in beginning at the top.

But he is quite able to speak for himself. This is what he says:

"If I was a woman I'd pay more attention to the way my hat looks from the top," said a man about town yesterday. "Not that I have any particular regard for the birds, angels or telephone linemen, but a top view of some of the feminine headdress is enough to drive a man to Bellevue before his time.

"I ride in the subway about eight times a day and seven out of those eight times I stand. It is impossible to read standing and hanging to a strap, and about teh only thing left for me to do is to scan the tops of the heads before me.

"When you look at a woman from the front and you are likely to get a very good impression of her hat. The lace, ribbons, flowers, fruit and what not are arranged for an effective front view, profile, or, often, rear view; sometimes all in one. But not many women consider the top. And this is strange, too, when you figure out that about 35 per cent. of the patrons of the Interborough have to stand up, and about one in every fifteen of that 35 per cent. is a man, all opinions of some women to the contrary notwithstanding.

"The other day I was standing before three women with big hats. The first one looked like an overdone pancake. It was brown and soiled, it was flat and homely. Washerwoman! was my thought. Then that one to the rear was peaked to the most ugly extreme. Housemaid! she went in my catalogue. The third looked like a relief map of the Rock Mountains. There were great long stitches of thread of a different color from the straw, and a most disagreeable red bow reposed in the midst of the mountain ranges, to hide a hole, I thought. And I thanked her for that much consideration anyway, but she went down in my list as a cook.

"I was about to turn to the other side of the car to see if I could not find a nice, well-aged bald plate as a relief from so much ugliness, when the three 'servants' got up.

"'Why, Mr. Brown-Jones so glad to see you! When did you get back from Saukum Vale?' the leader hurled at me.

"I couldn't escape them. They had me foul, and swept me out of the car ahead of them. They had spent the summer at the same resort I had, and I came to know them very well, one of them quite well, indeed, in fact.

"And there I was, tied to all that hidden ugliness all the afternoon. I took it to dinner, I bought it to cream soda, and no one probably knew just why I did not look as though I enjoyed myself, for they were certainly in the class of pretty girls. When I took them home in the elevated a man I knew slightly stood, by chance, in front of us. He looked down, he looked up, and then finally went into another car. I am sure he thought I was entertaining some one's house servants and he didn't want to make it uncomfortable for me.

"Now, why, in the name of suffering manhood, don't women pay attention to the top view of their skypieces?"

Marked Superiority.

"Who was the best man?" inquired the able editor of the Polkville (Ark.) Weekly Clarion.

"Well, I reckon, all things considered, the groom was," replied Mr. Lab Jackett, from out at 'Possum Trot, who had percolated into the sanctum with the news of a wedding which had been solemnized in his bailiwick upon the previous evening.

"The groom?" repeated the scribe, in some surprise.

"Re-yah you is," tennyrate, that's the way he 'peared to me. He got the bride's father so drunk, before the ceremony, that the old gentleman had to say hid in the hay mow all night and was seeing green dogs and such like, when I came by this morning. The groom also throwed the bride's two brothers out of the window for objecting to their sister's flinging herself away on him, and talked her mother to a gasping standstill when she sorter started in to remonstrate with him—and she's never been to what you'd call an unable lady, that-a-way, herself. Yep!—looking the gent up on one side and down on the other, I shorely reckon the groom was the best man present upon that interesting occasion."—Puck.

In the Mountains.

"Better come along with me, our hotel is patronized by all the nice girls of our set."

"Isn't there another hotel that is patronized by all the nice men?"—Houston Post.

That Stuck in His Memory.

"Why, you were at the club last night when I sang my new campaign song, weren't you?" asked Howjett.

"Yes," replied Knox, "I was there, but I couldn't tell what you were singing about."

"Don't you remember? It was: 'Why Should Discord Rend Our Ranks?'"

"Oh, yes, I remember the 'discord.'"

PERSONAL NOTES.

William J. Hopkins, formerly professor of physics at the Drexel Institute, is doing considerable literary work at his home in South Dartmouth.

Robert F. Thompson, who has been connected with the Indian service of the Government for the past thirty years, has resigned owing to ill health.

Meyer Hiller, a Boston newsboy, has been named by President Eliot to be the first holder of the scholarship in Harvard University founded by the Boston Newsboys' Union.

Mr. Arthur T. Ballentine, the only daughter of the late Hon. Thomas B. Reed, has gone into politics in the extreme West, and as editor of "The Yellow Ribbon" purposes to lend her aid to the cause of women's suffrage.

Lieutenant Soley, U. S. N., in charge of the hydrographic office at ...ew Orleans, has been making investigations and has reported to the Government that the Gulf Stream has an existence oin the Gulf of Mexico, a fact which has hitherto been in dispute.

Senator Allison, who for some time before the adjournment of Congress was in poor health and went to his home to secure a complete rest, has so completely recovered that he expects to take his old place in the Senate Decoration and to attend to his duties as usual.

Rev. Charles Scadding, for ten years rector of Emmanuel church, La Grange, Ill., on Sunday was consecrated Episcopal bishop of the diocese of Oregon in the presence of thirteen bishops and more than 500 clergymen representing almost every important diocese in the United States.

Harry B. Wolf, who is running for Congress in the Third Maryland District, began his career as a newsboy in that city. He subsequently was a fighter, office boy, law clerk, student, lawyer and politician. He is still little more than 26 years of age and in his canvass is known as "The Newsboy Candidate" and "The Man With the Grip."

FOR THE TOILET.

Little white spots on the fingernails are usually caused by contact with steel manicure instruments, the slight bruises causing the fluids of the nails to form in tiny masses. When lifting the cuticle away from the nail never use a steel instrument, but the end of a quill pen, orange wood stick or a bit of ivory. It is said that a compress of spirits of camphor will remove the spots, but this is doubtful. Time is the only cure for this trouble—as for many others.

A light tan that comes and goes—like rent day and other sorrows—can often be removed by home-made preparations, but when the brown coating is good and substantial it sometimes happens that nothing less active than a proprietary bleach will do the work. Of either one of these formulas: One pint of rose water, one-half ounce of pulverized borax, one ounce of strained lemon juice. Use freely after being exposed to the sun, and apply creme marquise and antiseptic powder before exposure.

Second formula: Ten grains of borax, two ounces of lime water, two ounces of oil of sweet almonds. If there is a slight peeling of the skin while using this lotion, sooth the surface by anointing it with "The peach" cream or orange flower skin food." Formulas for these delightful preparations appear here frequently. They will be mailed to anyone sending a request and a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

It is a bad plan to rub the face harshly with a coarse towel. Dry it with gentle pats. A course of electric massage treatments would do you a world of good, specialists in these lines are not all fakirs, as some of the scoffers imagine. There are women who have made a careful study of the care of the complexion, and few cases are so bad that they cannot bring a decided change for the better.

Useful Knowledge.

They had been talking about the Marquis Townshend.

"I didn't know a marquis ranked so high," said a girl in white.

"Dear me," said an Englishman, "didn't you? Why, a marquis ranks next to a duke."

He paused to sip his tea and take a foie gras sandwich.

"Marquess, not marquis," he went on, "is the more accurate use of the word. As applied to a peer pronounced in Burke, shall I tell you the degrees of the English aristocracy? The knowledge may be useful to you when you come to contract an international alliance, eh?

"After royal dukes come dukes. The premier duke is Norfolk, the fifteenth of his line. After dukes come marquises. After marquises come earls. After earls come viscounts. After viscounts come barons. After barons come baronets. After baronets come knights.

"This, then, is the order: Duke, marquis, earl, viscount, baron, baronet, knight. I don't mention lords. A lord is an earl—the Earl of Craven, for instance, is often called Lord Craven—or else the title is only the courtesy one accorded to the younger sons of dukes—as Lord Randolph Churchill, second son of the Duke of Marlborough."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

A WORD IN PASSING.

John S. Parsons, of Beverly, Mass., accomplished a novel feat in order to get ahead of the Salem city government, which had refused to allow him to move some buildings from Salem to Beverly. Not to be undone, he sawed up his house into pieces and carted it as lumber to its destination, where he had it set up as good as new.

When the water of the Canton river is low the Chinese catch the gobies which lie on the mud. They use a board four or five feet long and a foot broad, slightly turned up at the front end, where a piece of wood is provided for a hand rest. They rest on knee on the sledge and propel themselves along the mud with their other foot.

A woman applied to an Eastport (Me.,) overseer of the poor for assistance recently, but as she had been a steady beneficiary the official said she would have to enter the poorhouse or further aid would not be forthcoming. "eM enter the poorhouse!" she indignantly exclaimed. "Never! I'll work first!" And out she went in high dudgeon.

A net bonus of $1.75 per head is given by the Canadian government to every emigration egent in Great Britain sending out emigrants to settle the land. To the continental agent a gross bonus of $3 is paid, as a matter of fact, each British agricultural emigrant averages a total of $13 to the Canadian government, and each continental emigrant costs $5.

The requirements of height at West Point for new cadets will be changed so as to keep out of the military service boys who are undersized. The minimum height is slightly increased so that a candidate for a cadetship must not be less than five feet four inches at sixteen years of age and not less than five feet five inches at the age of eighteen and upward.

Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema, the distinguished painter, is a strong believer in the luckiness of numbers. His wife declares she was seventeen when he first met her, the number of the house he first took her to when married was the same, his present house bears the same number doubled, the first spade was put to work on August 17, and they took possession on November 17.

Recent experiments show that the crystals of ferric alum in a saturated solution with so much force that they are not repressed in their natural growth by a heavy weight. In like manner the crystals of pyrites forming in slate rock have been known to split layers of slate without in any way changing the form of the crystals which exert the separating force.

The hundredth aniversary of the birth of Johan Snellman, who devated his life to the advancement of the Finnish language, was the occasion of a demonstration in Finland in opposition to the efforts of the ruling classes to force the Swedish tongue on the people. To the number of 35,000 they honored the day by dropping names of Swedish origina and assuming purely Finnish patronymics.

A Melbourne (Australia) clerk has just achieved a great feat of penmanship. With a steel pen and without the use of a magnifying glass he has inscribed on a post card no fewer than 4,000 words. The writing consists of selections from the works of Shakespeare and Dickens, a chapter from Genesis and the song, "Home, Sweet Home." The work is so beautifully done that many people have been able to read the writing with the naked eye.

HOW MUCH PEOPLE EAT.

In finding a unit for the food consuming power of each family it was assumed as generally true that—

Husbands consume a like amount of food.

The wife consumes 90 per cent. as much as the husband.

A child from eleven to fourteen years of age consumes 90 per cent. as much food as the husband.

A children from seven to ten years of age consumes 75 per cent. as much food as the husband.

A child from four to six years of age consumes 40 per cent. as much food as the husband.

A child of three years or under consumes 15 per cent. as much food as the husband.

Children of fifteen years of age and over are considered as adults so far as the consumption of food is concerned.—Boston Transcript.

Italian Train Brigands.

One of the most remarkable features of the widely organized system of train robberies in Italy has been the impunity with which they have been committed. The police, however, have at last succeeded in striking a blow which, if properly followed up, may for a time cripple the brigands.

On no line of railway has the pillaging of passengers' baggage been more persistents than on the Rome-Naples line in the touring season. At last, however, the head centre and organizer of the band has been arrested.

Dog Carries Water for Chickens.

A noble specimen of Irish particular breed of dogs is Elcho, a Great Dane, standing, approximately, 33 inches high and weighing 125 pounds, which is the property of former Senator John Conness, of California, and who is now a resident of River street, Mattapan, Mass.

Elcho four years old, bred in a Medford kennel, and he is of a race that is extensively cultivated by both American and English dog fanciers. While the Great Danes in their early history were noted for their ferocity, Elcho, to the members of the Conness household, is as gentle as a house cat, permits a young boy connected with the place to ride upon his back, and he is sometimes harnessed in a dog cart for a trial of speed about the premises.

On one of these occasions, however, a fleet-footed "cottan-tail" rather interfered with the comfort of the occupants of the dog cart, for Elcho forgot both his dignity and the comfort of his passengers as he sped with all the power of those great muscles in the forelegs after the nimble-footed rabbit.

Elcho is also used as a common carried. He transports water in a pail to the chicken coops, and he is likewise entrusted with a lighted lantern about the premises, and, when someone is present, in the stables.

But Elcho's greatest achievement was the finding of the trial of two fleeing calves that belonged to the dairy herd, tracking them for half a mile through the home yard and safely driving them to the enclosure from whence the two little animals escaped.—Boston Globe.

EPWORTH LEAGUE

Oct. 21: "Studies in Church Benevolence." Beginning Oct. 14.

By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D.

Our business in the world.—John xx, 21. The world dependent upon us.—Rom. x, 14. Commanding all our resources.—I Cor. viii, 1-7. The investment of the whole life.—II Cor. viii, 5. Our resources administered not by impulse, but wisely.—II Tim. i, 12.

If this world is ever to go rightly it will be because it has found out God's plan regarding it and is carrying out that plan. This holds good of the individuals, of society at large and of nations also.

God's plan to develop men in society as brothers has been made known to us. It appears to us as the only possible way for human peace, happiness and prosperity. The Master has given us commandments and has lived the life which is pattern and much more than example. He has promised the Spirit to guide into all truth, to give wisdom and strength. Wonderfully has the Spirit manifested His power of transforming men and lifting them into newness of life.

Now comes the task of making all men know the mystery of this fellowship which for the ages has been hidden. This task Jesus has placed on us. It is not enough to tell men about it in words, not enough to say it with the lips and pen. It must be told in deeds. It must be in a voice and look and gesture. It must be on the heart until the constant desire of soul is for the uplifting of the world from its sin and sorrow and shame into the peace and purity of God.

This will tax all our resources. We can do little alone, but we are not called to do alone. We are united in the great church of Jesus Christ. When the great churches would assist the Jerusalem Christians they did not send their gifts singly, but collected all together and sent special messengers with Paul to present their offerings in the best manner.

So now we are organized, and our gifts are put with others in the work, but our responsibility does not end when the contribution box has passed or our subscription has been paid. We need to know what the church is doing and where and how.

Do you know what lands we have missions and what has been and is now being done? Can you tell of our fellow members in China or Japan or India, in Africa or Mexico or South America, in the Philippines or Porto Rico? Do you ever give them a thought or prayer? Do they get any hold on your sympathies? Are they as foreign to you and as impersonal as the man in the moon? Not if you are a Christian.

The great trouble with many is that they have never invested enough in church benevolences to expect any dividend and so have never followed their investments with prayers and inquiries. Put in enough cash to know what it is to have a share in the work. Then insist on knowing what your money is doing.

Study the church benevolences to see what the need is, where it is greatest and where you can best invest with surest prospect of greatest returns. Learn what others are doing, and you will know better what to do yourself.

Be a living, constant giver, but by an intelligent giver also. Be liberal, but be wise in your liberality.

A Warning to Parents.

Parents are often sorely tried over the choice of their sons or young women when they do not approve for wives or over the disposition of their daughters to accept attentions from young men whom they consider unfit for husbands. Parents, however, are often responsible for placing their children in circumstances or conditions of life where just the event they deplore has come in a natural course of development. It may be possible at an early stage to so shape a child's mind that he or she will form a mental standard of judgment in thought before the time of sentiment and action comes. It may be that the place of residence, the circle of society, the educational institution, may be so selected that the child will naturally form an alliance that is acceptable on the whole. Many parents have chiefly their own previous carelessness or thoughtlessness as the cause of the alliance which they regret so greatly and try too late to break up. Foresight and preparation a long way ahead might have averted the disaster. Cross currents may affect the best laid plans, but many a parent will find upon reflection that there was a time when he might have anticipated the influences that affect his child.—Watchman.

Old Fashioned.

The air is old fashioned; it circles the earth
The same as it did before Abraham's time;
Gives beauty and vigor and cleansing of breath
As it did to the sojourns before Noah's flood.
The Bible, old fashioned, giveth health
But do not reject it because it is old.

The light is old fashioned; it painteth the flowers
The same as it did in Eden's sweet bowers;
The gems that reflect it bear many a name,
But light in all ages gives beauty the same.
The Bible, like light, has a glory untold.
But do not reject it because it is old.

Water's old fashioned, which springs from the hills
And flows to the valleys in life giving rills;
The same as it flowed on its way to the sea,
To kiss Jesus' feet as they trod Galilee.
God's word, like the river, rare blessings doth hold,
But do not reject it because it is old.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 21.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—Faithfulness.—Luke xvi, 10; I Cor. iv, 1-2; Rev. ii, 10.

Christian faithfulness is fidelity in the performance of all our Christian duties and obligations. It is apparently a very commonplace word, and yet it is a word that should be written large in all the relations of our lives. No greater eulogy could be pronounced upon any man than to declare that he was faithful—the employed faithful to his employer, the patriot faithful to his country, and, above all, the Christian faithful to his Saviour and to his God. On the other hand, to be failing in life is to be despised as faithlessness. Let us therefore be faithful and not unfaithful.

Faithfulness in little things is expected of us. Christ so taught in the parable of the unjust steward. "He that is faithful also in that which is least is faithful also in much." The tendency to treat faithfulness in little things lightly is a very common one. Many patriots could easily die on the field of battle for their country, yet they fail to be true in the faithful performance of the duties and obligations of citizenship. Martyrdom would readily be welcomed by many Christians, who find the daily routine of the Christian life hard to conform to. But faithfulness in little things is demanded of us, and he who is faithful in the comparatively minor duties of life will prove faithful in a great crisis if it should come. The master of details is also master of great events. "He that is faithful in that which is least will be faithful also in much." Despise not the little things of life. They may seem to be trifles. "Trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle."

Faithfulness to God is the chief thing demanded of us. It is required in the words that a man be found faithful." No other virtue in a steward would compensate for unfaithfulness. A trust is committed to his care, and, no matter what else he may be or may not be, nothing will cause unfaithfulness to be forgiven or excused. We are the stewards of God. We ourselves and all that we are and have belong to God. Every gift we possess is a trust from God, for which we must some day render an account unto Him. Let us therefore be faithful stewards.

Faithfulness should continue throughout our entire lives. There is no command that we should be faithful until we are twenty-five or fifty years of age. "Be thou faithful unto death" is the divine command. He which is one there is a rich reward, a crown of eternal life. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

BIBLE READINGS.

Dr. Sheldon on Christian Endeavor.

The distinguished author of "In His Steps" is a stanch friend of Christian Endeavor. In a recent number of the Endeavor Spirit he has the following to say about "The Influence of Christian Endeavor Societies":

"There is no element in the church of which they are a part. It almost goes without saying that a church which has any future in it must have young people who are actively at work. It would be safe to say that if all the young people's societies were cut out of all the churches in America the churches themselves would sustain a tremendous loss, even those churches which are indifferent to the organization. The direct influence of an Endeavor society on the pastor of a church is noticeable in many directions. The pastor gets his inspiration from various sources. He draws it from the spiritual atmosphere in which he is supposed to live, from the everlasting promises, from his reading, from prayer, but by far the largest source of his real inspiration must be the knowledge of enthusiastic co-operation in Christian work among his young people.

"This influence is so large and powerful that the man in the ministry who has no experience of it is a man to be pitied, and it is doubtful if any leader in Christian work can do faithful service and remain encouraged unless he has the consciousness of sympathy and enthusiastic fellowship which the Christian Endeavor societies always furnish.

"In the second place, the influence of the Christian Endeavor societies is a recognized factor in the social and political life of the world. There are those who have denounced, for the utmost, whose claims were advanced by Dr. Hyslop, is actually the more intolerable nuisance may be a question of individual experience; but the amazing thing is that these wildcat schemes are not more tolerated at all in a modern civilized capital. Dr. Hyslop, the senior physician at Bethlehem Hospital, Southwark, stated, it may be noticed, that the wear-and-tear on the brain of continual noise not only wrecks the nervous system, but may actually affect a child's physical growth.—London Globe.

MODEL PRIVATE DAIRY.

Absolute Cleanliness In Barn and Dairy House Pays in Very High Prices.

The necessity of having a specially clean place where milk is to be handled has prompted Mr. R. V. Lindabury, of Bernardsville, N. J., to build for himself one of the finest private dairies to be found anywhere in the State of New Jersey, and it would be safe to say almost anywhere in the United States. It is an ideal place for the handling of clean milk. If any stranger should walk into it he would wonder whether he had not blundered into somebody's residence.

The building itself is constructed of stone with a plaza on the outside for keeping the dairy utensils in the sun as much as possible. The inside is divided into two compartments, *one having a subdivision for the re*frigerator room. Over the ceiling of this room are laid heavy coils of pipe through which water runs, and on the top of these coils ice is kept during the warm months of the year. This ice serves a double purpose. It keeps the refrigerator room cold and at the same time it cools the water flowing through the coils, which is used for the milk cooler.

One room contains the engine, separator, churn, butter worker, aerator, etc.; the other holds the boiler, washtubs, milk tester, etc. The floors and half way up the walls in both rooms are made of white tile, while the other half of the walls and ceilings are plastered, having a hard surface finish to it. All the woodwork, of course, is painted a pure white. All the pipes, valves, shelf brackets, churn bodies, and, in fact, all that ironwork is nickel plated. The boiler is covered with a coat of asbestos, making it look white. All the machinery, such as separator, churn and butter worker are run by steam power.

The milk, just as soon as it reaches the dairy, is immediately put through an aerator and cooler. It is then put into quart bottles and put into the refrigerator room, where it is kept until distributed. The surplus milk is run through a separator, and the cream is put into the refrigerator until ready for shipping. Part of the cream is also bottled. This cream contains 45 per cent. of butter fat. Cream is churned into butter three times every week. Some of the dairy products are sold to some millionaires nearby and a very high price is obtained.

Special attention is given to cleanliness wherever the milk is handled, in the barn as well as in the dairy.

—J. Ratner, Bernardsville, N. J.

MAN AND HIS TAILOR.

The evening suit for autumn brings few changes from that of a year ago. The approved fabric is still black unfinished worsted or English twill, and the surface of the cloth should be rough, rather than smooth. Square, notched lapels are newer than peaked. The evening coat must fit snugly about the waist and should be rather tightly shaped to the wais to dend that trim, well knit appearance so desirable. Trousers are cut loose, to give ease in dancing and lounging. Many men choose too heavy a fabric for the evening suit, with the result that it does not "drape" well, nor adjust itself readily to the curves of the figure.

A bow tie always helps to make a thin face look plumper, and we advise you to wear a wide tie in preference to a narrow one. Long-headed "Toothpick" shoes were never in fashion among the discerning, however often you may have seen them displayed in shop windows.

Don't adopt a fashion merely because it is pronounced "the thing." from first to last, you must be wholly unbecoming to another. Study your face, figure, coloring, and cast of figures, and strive to adapt rather than to adopt. Vivid colors are not usually suited to the man below normal height, and the tall, thin man in voolen cloth "checks" is a blot on the landscape.

Wild Beasts In London.

Many persons will earnestly support from their own experience the protests against London's curse of noise which were put forward by high medical authorities at yesterday's meeting of the Sanitary Congress. Whether the bantam, as described by Sir James Crichton-Browne, or the tomcat, whose claims were advanced by Dr. Hyslop, is actually the more intolerable nuisance may be a question of individual experience; but the amazing thing is that these wildcat schemes are not more tolerated at all in a modern civilized capital. Dr. Hyslop, the senior physician at Bethlehem Hospital, Southwark, stated, it may be noticed, that the wear-and-tear on the brain of continual noise not only wrecks the nervous system, but may actually affect a child's physical growth.—London Globe.

L. FORCE, Editor and Proprietor.

THE BISHOPS' LAW.

Any candidate who attempts to make political capital by stirring up sentiment against the Bishops' bill should be repudiated at the polls. The measure, one of the best that has been enacted by a Legislature in years, is a moral one. It was so framed and is so intended. At a conference in Trenton the other day, the bishops and clergy of the State passed resolutions urging the people to keep the issue out of politics. There is only one way to do it. Defeat the man or party who dares to advocate its repeal.

While there was never any need of this measure so far as Plainfield is concerned, its provisions in the main having been rigidly enforced here long before such a law was suggested. One does not have to go very far, however, to see the change wrought by it. Scotch Plains, for instance, furnishes a good illustration. Before the enactment of the law, a drunken man was a common sight there on Sundays. That liquor was sold on the prohibited day was a matter of general knowledge. Many times in the Plainfield police court on a Monday morning a man has pleaded guilty to getting drunk at a Scotch Plains resort the day before. In other words Scotch Plains of Plainfield a similar condition existed. Now all this is wiped out, and it behooves every law-abiding citizen to use his efforts in seeing that such a law is kept on the statute books.

AN IDEAL CANDIDATE.

The eleven Essex county candidates for the General Assembly on the Democratic party have had the good sense to pledge themselves in the event of election to vote for an ideal candidate for United States Senator. The man they have agreed upon for that exalted office, Dr. Woodrow Wilson, has very few peers and no superiors among the many who have been suggested by both parties. To quote the resolution of endorsement, he is a citizen who would "bring to the Senate the purity of purpose and the high intellectual powers which would add honor and prestige not only to New Jersey but to the entire nation." Were he elected it would be New Jersey's proud boast that it had as a representative in the highest law making body a scholar and not a mere money-bag; not one who had purchased his way into public life.

It is all the more creditable to the Essex men that they have sought out the man; one whom despite his own declarations to the contrary not want to take such an office they are determined to force it upon him if within their power. They have made it a case of the office seeking the man and not the man the office. If the party's Assembly candidates in Union county are true they will lose no time in following the example of the Essex men.

MR. SQUIRES' MONUMENT.

The death of Henry C. Squires is a severe blow to Hope chapel, in whose welfare he consecrated the last eighteen years of a well spent life. When the west end was but sparsely settled, Mr. Squires had the foresight to realize that the presence of manufacturing plants in that vicinity furnished a need for religious activity. The Christian toiler that he was, Mr. Squires took up the work and pursued it with all his characteristic zeal from that day until he was suddenly called to his Master. It was an uphill task at first, but under his guidance and leadership the parish struggled along. Year by year the fruits of his labors were to be seen in an increasing membership and a more encouraging financial support. Neither chilly blasts of winter nor the inclement weather of the year *round, ever prevented him from tak*ing part in whatever happened to be going on in either the church edifice or the Sunday-school room. No matter who else might be absent, he was there; and he was there at work.

What Hope chapel has done and what it is doing is due largely to the persevering efforts and able advice of the man who was foremost among its founders. Hope chapel is his monument.

In the death of Mrs. Mason W. Tyler, Plainfield has lost a benevolent woman. Her painstaking and self-sacrificing work in the Relief Association and the Children's Home work especially endeared her to the community.

Raise $46,000 in One Day.

In connection with the opening of the Sunday-school room of the new Sanford Street M. E. church, Orange, on Sunday, several collections were taken up, so as to raise an amount sufficient to warrant the completion of the church, and $46,025 was raised. It was announced that as a result work will probably be immediately started on the auditorium, and the new edifice, it is expected, will soon be completed.

HOME FROM CONVENTION

Chief Doane Reports Profitable Discussions at Gathering of Firemen at Dallas, Tex.

TOOK AN ACTIVE PART

Rendered Report on Proposition for Standard Hose Thread—Meet at Washington Next Year.

Chief T. O. Doane, of the city fire department, returned home Sunday after attending at Dallas, Texas, what he describes as "one of the most important and instructive conventions" yet conducted by the International Association of Fire Chiefs. Three hundred delegates from all parts of the United Ctaes and Canada were present and during the three days that meetings were held a large amount of business was transacted.

Chief Doane was accompanied to and from Dallas by the chiefs from Newark, Paterson, Jersey City, Elizabeth, New Brunswick and other places and all took an active part in the discussions. Chief Doane was appointed a member of a committee last year to inquire into the plan to adopt a standard hose thread in the United States and Canada and he made a lengthy verbal report on the subject, the chairman being absent. It is the opinion of the committee that a standard should be adopted and the manufacturers are rapidly falling into line. No action was taken but the committee was continued and will report again next year.

An interesting discussion followed the reading of a paper by former Chief Hendricks, for twenty-five years the head of the New Haven, Conn., department, on "Should fire departments be called out to quell riots." He spoke in the negative but the majority of the convention did not concur with him. In recent years fire departments have frequently rendered great service to cities by quelling riots with streams of water and it has been found a most effective method. There were other discussions on "The modern construction of buildings" and "The best means of fire protection for small cities."

The convention lasted from Tuesday until Thursday and what little time there was outside of meetings, the delegates took advantage of in entertaining the delegates. The death of Mrs. Stagg, wife of Chief Stagg, of Paterson, who is president of the Association, affected all the firemen. When the casket holding the body was placed on the train to start for New Jersey, it was heaped high with flowers placed there by the Dallas department. When Shreveport, La., was reached and a change of cars had to be made, members of the Shreveport department acted as pall bearers and added more flowers. The same action was taken by the firemen at Roanoke, Va.

Chief Doane reached home in excellent health and he has nothing but words of praise for the citizens of Dallas and the people of Texas as a whole. While in the convention city he met Herbert Stover, of Plainfield, who has been south on business, and the chief had him accorded all the honors at the convention.

The association will meet next year at Washington, D. C.

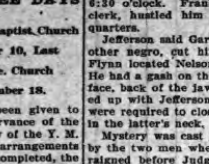
AMUSEMENTS.

The Prince of India.

Klaw & Erlanger are presenting their stage production of Gen. Lew Wallace's historical and religious story, "The Prince of India," at the Broadway theatre. This great play scored a success never before achieved except by "Ben-Hur," and proved a worthy successor to that wonderful drama in interest of story, portrayal of character and scenic investiture. The best description of the effect of the play on the minds of the first-night audience was written by Edward S. Pidgeon, dramatic critic of the New York Press, who said: "The audience make the roof ring with enthusiastic approval of the nerve-tingling climaxes that mark the close of the prologue and every one of the five acts, the last of which had four scenes that for magic of stagecraft, enthralling interest and melodramatic moderation never have been equalled. It is in this act that the great scene of the play comes. It is the assault of the Islamite horde upon the walls of Granada and its Byzantine defenders under the Emperor Constantine. When they finally force a breach and come pouring in seemingly by the thousand, there is presented a picture wonderful to behold. Another scene, less sensational but equally dramatic in the inner sense, when the Prince of India, played with distinction by Emmett Corrigan, struck the Emperor on his throne and defied the court to inflict upon him the death that for a thousand years had been denied him, fairly took the audience by storm and inspired it to a pitch of enthusiasm rarely seen in a New York playhouse."



Kenneth Robbie.

Sam Houston.

The limited engagement of Jesse Lynch Williams' newspaper play, "The Stolen Story," will close at the Garden theatre, New York, Saturday night, to be followed next week by Clay Clement in the American historical drama, "Sam Houston." Mr. Clement is regarded as one of the coming great American actors. Owing to fortunate investments he retired from the stage and spent a number of years in travel in Africa, Australia and Alaska, where he accumulated large mining interests. One of his investments is a big ranch in Texas where he has also spent a few years and where he became fascinted with the dramatic story of the life of the famous Sam Houston. General Houston, the close personal friend of Andrew Jackson, and who selected upon as the logical White House successor of the great Democratic President. This was in the early days when he was Governor of Tennessee. He, however, sacrificed his political career and ambitions and emigrated to Texas, where he soon he loomed up as the greatest political figure of the South. Mr. Clemeat is the author of "An American Gentleman," "The New Dominion" and other successful plays, and, in collaboration with John McGovern, the well-known Chicago newspaper man, and Jesse Edson, he dramatized Sam Houston's life story in a four act play which had its first production three weeks ago in Minneapolis.

Princess, Broadway and 29th street. Telephone 2848 Madison. Evenings, 8:15; matinee Saturday 2:15. Margaret Anglin and Henry Miller in William Vaugh Moody's "The Great Divide."

Embarrassment of Successes.

Henry B. Harris is undergoing the unusual experience of too much success. "The Lion and the Mouse," contrary to all expectations, continues to test the capacity of the Lyceum theatre. The hit scored by Charles Frohman's production of "The Hypocrites" at Mr. Harris' Hudson theatre, has worked the way for the New York opening of Charles Klein's play, "The Daughters of Men," which has duplicated at the Colonial theatre in Boston, the success of "The Lion and the Mouse." Rose Stahl in "The Chorus Lady" has been compelled to move from the Savoy to the Garrick and from there to the Hackett theatre ,and in order to continue the run of "The Daughters of Men," Mr. Harris has arranged for a series of matinees at the Park theatre in Boston where "The Lion and the Mouse" Company B is filling an eight weeks' return engagement. "The Lion and the Mouse" on Saturday, September 29th, established the world's record for receipts for one day's performances of a play. The box office takings for Company A at the Lyceum theatre, New York, were $2,96?.50; for Company B, at the Park theatre, Boston, $2,419; for Company C, at San Claire, Wis., $1,245; and Company D, at Middletown, Conn., were $1,189, making a total of $7,??9.??.

Y. M. C. A. ANNIVERSARY

Long List of Church Meetings and Speakers Is Announced.

SERVICES THREE DAYS

First At Seventh-Day Baptist Church Saturday, November 10, Last at the Crescent Ave. Church On Sunday, November 18.

Definite shape has been given to the plans for the observance of the thirty-ninth anniversary of the Y. M. C. A. Although the arrangements have not been entirely completed, the general outline of the celebration has been fixed, and this was announced this morning by Secretary Robbie.

The observance will be wholly of a religious nature. A group of representative evangelical churches will take part, and services of thanksgiving and uplift will be held on November 10, 11 and 18.

The chief date will be Sunday, the eleventh, when services will be held at the following churches: First Baptist, Grace M. E., Congregational, Warren chapel, First M. E., First Presbyterian, Trinity, and Park Avenue Baptist. The Seventh-Day Baptist church will be the scene of one on Saturday, the tenth. The Crescent Avenue church, which could not give over its pulpit on the eleventh, will lend its home for a service on the eighteenth.

Strong speakers of the Y. M. C. A. forces in this section will speak. They are: E. T. Carlton, associate of John R. Mott in the Foreign Department of the International Committee; C. W. Deitrick, general secretary of the Brooklyn Central branch; W. B. Millar, secretary of the Army and Navy branch; F. W. Pearsall, secretary of New York City; Charles A. Warburton, secretary of the Railroad Department, New York; F. B. Hoagland, secretary at Paterson; J. T. Sproull, of Arlington, president of the State Christian Endeavor Union; and Ben M. Lewis, secretary of the East Side branch, New York. The speakers have not yet been assigned.

In connection with the celebration a theatre meeting will be held on the eighteenth. President Gavett's review of the year's work, and his survey of the work to come will be read at all the services.

No social affair will mark the celebration. It has been decided that the observance is more fittingly to be marked by religious meetings. Next year, when the two-score mark shall have been passed, something in the way of a public reception will probably be held.

HOLY CROSS BOYS' FIELD DAY SATURDAY.

Track and Field Events to Precede a Football Game.

The boys of Holy Cross Club met Saturday evening and transacted business of considerable interest to the forty or more members present at the meeting. The report from the treasurer showed the club to be in fine shape financially, all bills up to date paid and a comfortable balance on hand.

Of most interest to the boys was the plan submitted by the committee on athletics and adopted by the club, for the holding of a meet at the Cricket field, Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The events are: 100-yard dash, running broad jump, standing high jump, 60-yard dash, shot put, pole vault, three-legged race, sack race and midget race. Entries are for club members only. The winners in the various events will constitute the club's track team. Admission to the events is by ticket, the number being limited to 150. A football game between East Orange and Holy Cross will follow the track and field sports.

Several candidates were reported for admission to the club.

Dr. Degenring Sails for India.

Dr. Anna Degenring, of Elizabeth, who addressed the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the First Baptist church last month and who sailed soon after for India as a medical missionary, has arrived in England and after a short stay in London sailed for Nellore, India, October 4, where she will have charge of the Woman's Hospital at Nellore.

COMBATANTS SUFFER MYSTERIOUS SLASHING

QUEER LACK OF TESTIMONY ON CUTTING IN COLORED ROW.

Andrew Jefferson, colored, went into Powers' drug store on Somerset street at 6:30 Sunday night, with a three-inch razor slash across the back of his neck and a bad cut on the back of his left hand. He said he got them in a fight on Rock avenue at 5:30 o'clock. Frank Denecklaw, the clerk, hustled him to police headquarters.

Jefferson said Garfield Nelson, another negro, cut him. Roundsman Flynn located Nelson an hour later. He had a gash on the left side of his face, back of the jaw. He was locked up with Jefferson. Four stitches were required to close up the wound in the latter's neck.

Mystery was cast over the cutting by the two men when they were arraigned before Judge Runyon Monday a. m. They both acknowledged fighting alone, but each swore earnestly that he did not cut the other and had nothing with which to cut on him. Each was positive, however, that the other cut him, although neither could swear to having seen a weapon in the other's hand.

"It was too dark when we mixed up," said Nelson.

Mrs. Nelson, who witnessed the fight, further deepened the mystery by swearing that Jefferson was not cut when he left the scene of the row.

"I found that Garfield was cut after Jefferson went," she said. She saw no knife or razor in Jefferson's hand.

The police found no weapon on either man. Judge Runyon tried unavailingly to get either of the men to acknowledge that he had used a knife or razor. They stuck to their declaration that nothing of a cutting nature was on them when they fought.

"Well something happened to disturb the peace of the Sabbath," said the magistrate forced to fall back on the only provable thing in connection with the case; "it will cost you $3 or 20 days."

The fines were paid.

COUNTRY DANCE NEXT.

Newspapermen Plan for Old-Fashioned Soiree Thanksgiving Eve.

"Rube" and his best "gal" will own the town on Thanksgiving Eve. On that festive evening the Pad and Pencil club will once again plunge into the social whirl and run its fourth annual country dance. On this occasion "blied" shirts and stiff collars, silk hats and crepe de chine creations will be relegated to a back seat giving way to the aypical dress of the cornfield districts. All efforts of the scribes in past dances were crowned with success and this year the news writers will try to outdo all of the fashions carried out under their direction.

The committee is now at work arranging its invitation list and will decide on the hall and place this week. The date is definitely decided on—a night before a holiday being an ideal time for such a frolic.

Honor for Dr. Buchanan.

Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, past grand chief of the Knights of the Golden Eagle, returned home Saturday, from the four days' meeting of the Supreme Castle at Atlantic City. He took a prominent part in the sessions and was appointed on the finance committee of the Supreme Castle. The next session of the Castle will be held in Huntington, W. Va. Dr. Buchanan has planned to attend it.

Evangelistic Services.

Rev. E. E. Roberson, pastor of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church, is planning to conduct evangelistic services the latter part of the month, for two weeks. For some time there has been unusual interest in religious affairs in that part of the city and the pastor believes the time has arrived for a series of special services. There will be special music at each meeting.

BLAZE IN BRICKYARD CAUSES $500 DAMAGES

OUT OF CITY LIMITS BUT LOCAL DEPARTMENT FOUGHT THE FLAMES.

One of the wooden sheds that cover the kilns at Albert Rajotte's brickyard on Jefferson avenue, caught fire Sunday afternoon and subsequently took the Plainfield fire department out of the city limits to fight the blaze.

The dividing line between Plainfield and Dunellen runs through the center of Jefferson avenue and the Rajotte plant is located on the Dunellen side. The owner's home is on the Plainfield side directly opposite, and when Mrs. Rajotte discovered the shed in flames at 12:59 she turned in an alarm from box 98 at Jefferson and Dunellen avenues. An alarm was also given in Dunellen and that department was soon on the scene, but not having sufficient hose could only fight the blaze from one side. When the city department arrived Acting Chief Jennings ordered the steamer stationed at the bridge over Green brook and 1,200 feet of hose were laid up to the Plainfield side of the burning structure.

With the combined force at work, the fire was soon extinguished. It was one of those "might have been" blazes as there are a succession of large sheds all over the yard and once they got going Dunellen would have had the biggest conflagration it has seen in years. The city recall was sounded at 2:05.

Though it is not known definitely it is the belief that the blaze started from the fire in the kilns where bricks were baking. Rajotte and his employees got the wagons and lots of material out before the departments got busy and while the firemen were working, tore the boards away from adjoining sheds to prevent the flames spreading.

The owners places the loss at about $500. It is fully covered by insurance in companies represented by William A. Woodruff.

PATERSON'S FIRE CHIEF'S WIFE DIES SUDDENLY.

Fatally Stricken at Dallas in Presence of Chief Doane and Other Jerseymen.

Seated in the Oriental hotel at Dallas, Tex., with her husband, Chief T. O. Doane and other members of the New Jersey delegation attending the Inter-National Fire Chiefs' Association, Mrs. John Stagg, wife of Paterson's fire chief, was stricken with uremic coma and died a few minutes later, Thursday morning. The attack came without a moment's warning and before a hand could be raised in her assistance had no idea of its serriousness. Her death cast a gloom over the entire convention, as Chief Stagg is president of the International Association, and out of respect to her memory no meeting was held that day.

Mrs. Stagg and three of her children accompanied the husband and father to Dallas and made the entire journey with Chief Doane and the

C. E. Society Elects Officers.

The Christian Endeavor Society of Faith chapel has elected these officers for the ensuing year: President, Edward Baker; vice-president, Mrs. J. W. Manson; secretary, Miss Marie Viehrick; treasurer, Miss Elizabeth Frank. The president will appoint the committees later.

Noted Speakers Coming.

James E. Martine, the Democratic candidate for Congress, is making arrangements to have W. G. McAdoo, former police commissioner of New York and at one time Assistant Secretary of the Navy, speak in this city in the near future. He has also arranged for the appearance here of Congressman William Sulzer, of New York.

Hallowe'en Tea.

The Silver Circle of King's Daughters will give a Hallowe'en tea at the home of E. T. Wilson, 42 Sycamore avenue, Wednesday night, October 31.

H. BIRD

Coat for Girl.

The heavy blue material will make a good coat for a young girl. Cut it straight to reach end of skirt and fasten double breasted with black bone buttons. Add collar and cuffs of velvet. Get a dull red hat of felt trimmed with red wings and folds of black velvet ribbon. Make skirt of black serge by nine gored plaited pattern and finish with three-inch hem. Get China silk for blouse and line it if necessary for warmth. Black pongee is also good. Make with unstitched plaits, stock of same, and six-inch plain cuffs fastened in white with silk buttons. There is a thin white plain muslin which is very atractive for curtains in a study. Use a two-inch hem and edge with one-inch Cluny lace.

Prune Pudding.

Wash and stone half a pound of prunes, cut them into pieces and put them in a basin.

Add two ounces of chopped peel, four ounces of flour, four ounces of breadcrumbs, two ounces of almonds chopped finely, one teaspoonful of baking powder, four ounces of cleaned currants, two ounces of butter, a pinch of salt, one well-beaten egg and enough milk to moisten.

Pour into an oiled mold, covered with a paper, and steam for three hours.

Serve with sweet sauce.

HENRY C. SQUIRES PASSES AWAY SUDDENLY

Hope Chapel's Founder and Friend Succumbs After Few Hours Illness.

A CHRISTIAN WORKER

Heart Trouble the Cause—Proprietor of Famous Sporting Goods House.

Henry C. Squires, one of the best known residents of the city, died suddenly at his home in Watchung avenue, Monday, from an attack of heart trouble. He was taken ill at 3 o'clock in the morning and despite the best medical aid he grew rapidly worse, until noon, when he breathed his last.

Mr. Squires was born at Kirkwood, N. Y., seventy years ago, where he spent his boyhood days. Later he lived in Jersey City and then in Bergen, prior to moving to this city thirty-five years ago. For twenty-seven years he lived in the house in which he died. Soon after coming to Plainfield he united with the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church and for thirty years was an elder and most active member. There was no more earnest worker and he was always doing everything in his power to advance the interest of the cause of religion.

Perhaps his greatest work was in the founding of Hope chapel, which was opened January 1, 1888, on West Fourth street, and which ever since has been an active branch of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church. Mr. Squires was impressed with the urgent need for a place of worship in the West End of the city, and at that time arrangements were being made to erect a new building for Bethel chapel on East Fifth street. Mr. Squires secured the old chapel building and had it removed to the present site of Hope chapel.

Under the faithful guidance of Mr. Squires, who was the first superintendent, the chapel congregation steadily grew in membership and it was not long before the quarters were far too small. An addition was built to the structure and even this in time was inadequate to accommodate the large congregations. About six years ago the present Memorial chapel was built and it stands as a monument to the unceasing labors of Mr. Squires and his faithful co-workers, who were instrumental in interesting others in the religious work being carried on in this section of the city. Not only did Mr. quires devote a great deal of his time, but of his means as well, in the support of the work and this he maintained to the end of his life. He was always faithful in his attendance, and it was a rare thing for him to be absent from the Sunday or mid-week services. Only yesterday he attended the services as usual.

Not only at Hope chapel but at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church will Mr. Squires be missed. While he was chiefly identified with the religious enterprise in the West End, he never allowed his interest in his home church to lag. He always kept in close touch with all departments of the work and could be depended upon to do even more than his share when necessary.

Aside from his Christian work, Mr. Squires was well-known in business circles. For forty years he was engaged in the sporting goods' business in New York, the present store being 147 Nassau street. Two of his sons, George Harry Squires and Walter Squires, were engaged in business with him. The house was one of the best known in the country." Mr. Squires was always interested in the growth of Plainfield and in his quiet manner never lost an opportunity to advance it.

He is survived by a wife and five sons: George Harry, Walter S., Louis and Fred Squires, all of this city, and Dr. Charles A. Squires, of the Presbyterian Hospital, New York.

The Ringless Bell.

"What!" exclaimed Mr. McBluff, "hasn't the landlord sent any one to fix the front doorbell? I'll go right down and see him—"

"Don't do it, George," interrupted his wife. "Just wait a week or so: it's about time for the installment collector to come around."

A New Kink of Funeral.

Our janitor appeared the other morning with the request that he be allowed to do his work early in the day, as he wanted the afternoon off.

"What's the matter, Fritz?" inquired my mother.

"Vell, you see, I vish to go ofer to Jersey City vid mine vife to see a friendt git hissel buried."—October Lippincott's.

The Way He Looked.

"See here," complained Mr. Crabbe, "your shopping is too extravagant. You should never take anything just because it looks cheap."

"Indeed!" exclaimed his wife. "If I had followed that advice when you proposed to me I wouldn't be Mrs. Crabbe now."—Philadelphia Press.

PILE-DRIVER PULLS DOWN BUNCH OF WIRES

FIRE ALARM, POLICE AND 'PHONE CIRCUITS IN THE SNARL.

The New Jersey Central is about to build a new bridge at Berckman street and in order to put up false work for the support of the tracks, will drive a lot of timbers into the roadway. A pile-driver on wheels was brought to that point, Sunday morning, to begin operations and while it was being drilled around for position, one of the men raised the "tower" that guides the weight up and down.

A mass of telephone, police and fire alarm wires crossed the tracks at that point and the top of the "tower" caught the bunch, bringing them down in a bad tangle before the engineer realized what had happened. The fire alarm wires got in contact with the others and as a result the steam whistle and the tappers in the houses began a healthy racket. The firemen thought a box had been pulled somewhere and were on the anxious seat until the trouble was located.

A gang of linemen was hurried out and the fire alarm was put in shape inside of an hour. The police and telephone circuits followed soon after, all being placed in a cable suspended under the bridge to avoid a recurrence of the trouble.

TRIP OF CONDOLENCE WINDS UP IN JAIL

KEIDERLING'S PAINFUL EXPERIENCE WITH REIGN OF LAW IN DUNELLEN.

George Keiderling, of this city, went to Dunellen Saturday night to condole with the family of a dead friend. He didn't get to the house, but before the night was over he needed condolence himself, and his trouble reached a climax Monday when he was sentenced to ninety days in jail for disorderly conduct and was held in $100 bail each on two other charges.

Keiderling was accompanied by Robert Anderson Kelly, also of this city, on his trip. Unable to see the dead body of their friend, they sought consolation at a hotel. Kelly became very drunk, and when he staggered to the street shortly after 9 o'clock, Marshal Owen Mohan placed him under arrest. Keiderling ordered the marshal to release him, and made a rush at the office. Mohan seized hold of him with his disengaged hand and tripped him up. Kelly fell at the same time.

As Mohan stooped over to grasp the collar of each man, Keiderling kicked him in the face, cutting open his cheek. Mohan put on steam and yanked both men to the borough jail in short order. Then he went before Justice Von Minden and swore out three charges against Keiderling, one for interfering with an officer, one for disorderly conduct and one for assault.

The court gave Keiderling short shrift Monday morning. He was sentenced to ninety days in jail at New Brunswick on the disorderly charge, and held in $100 bail on the grand jury on each of the other complaints. Justice Von Minden told him the imprisonment sentence would be remitted if he could raise $20 as a fine, but the money was not forthcoming by noon and the commitment papers were made out.

Kelly was arraigned before Borough Recorder D. S. Campbell on a charge of plain drunkenness. He escaped with a fine of $5.

P. H. S. IS OVERWHELMED BY EAST ORANGE TEAM.

Local High School Boys' Eleven Trounced—Score Being 29 to 0.

The football game Saturday at East Orange between the high school of that place and the Plainfield High School resulted in the defeat of the local team by a score of 29-0. The East Orange team was a much heavier aggregation. Mahaffey, of the P. H. S., distinguished himself by clever tackling and blocking kicks. Tillotson also played a good game for the local eleven and broke up the opposing team's interference most effectually.

There were no long end runs made, line buck being mostly played.

Following is the P. H. S. line-up: Tillotson, re.; Todd and Morris, rt.; Bogardus, rg.; Caldwell and Dority, c.; Fisher, lg; Fountain, lt; Rafferty, le.; Brakeley, qb.; Lyness, rhb.; Mahaffey, lhb; Loiseaux, fb. Lindsay Best umpired the game.

Banana Tride.

Peel and slice six bananas. Slice a small sponge cake and spread each piece with strawberry jam. Lay them in a glass dish, add one orange peeled, sliced and cut in small pieces, the grated rind of one lemon and half a pint of custard. Then add the bananas.

Whip up half a pint of thick cream, heap it on the top and serve cold.

COL. TYLER'S WIFE DEAD

Much Beloved Woman of Distinguished Lineage Passes Away Suddenly.

BENEVOLENT WORKER

She Was a Granddaughter of Former U. S. Senator and a Descendant of William Bradford.

Mrs. Eliza Margaret Tyler, wife of Colonel Mason W. Tyler, died suddenly Sunday morning from heart failure at her home on West Seventh street. She had been enjoying her usual health until Friday morning when she complained of feeling ill. The members of her family did not think it was anything serious and were not prepared for the quickly fatal development.

Mrs. Tyler was a daughter of the late Rev. John Frederick Schroeder, D. D., formerly of Trinity Parish, New York city, and granddaughter of Elijah Boardman, formerly United States Senator from Connecticut. She was also a lineal descendant of Governor William Bradford, of the Mayflower. Her grandmother was an own cousin of Jeremiah Mason, the distinguished constitutional lawyer and United State Senator from New Hampshire.

Mrs. Tyler was a member of the New York and New Jersey societies of Mayflower descendants. Her lineage could be traced to twelve Colonial governors, among them General John Mason, who took part in the Pequod War, and Lieut. William Bradford and Lieut. Whitney, prominent in the siege of Louisburg and the massacre at Bloody Pond. She was born in New York city and was married to Colonel Tyler on December 28, 1869. They moved to Plainfield two years later and built the home where they have since resided.

Mrs. Tyler was always known as a woman possessed of sympathy for the sick and unfortunate and her acts of *kindly benevolence can be num*bered by hundreds. She told but little about them, only infrequently asking the advice of her husband and family, but she had keen perception and no case of need that came to her notice passed without investigation. She was a member of the executive committee of the Plainfield Relief Association and ever since its organization has been prominent in its work. The Children's Home is another institution that felt her kindly presence and for years she had contributed to its support.

She was at one time a member of Holy Cross church but afterward became identified with Grace church. In both congregations she was connected with the various societies and was ever ready to participate in social or religious affairs. She took great interest in Episcopal missions and aided in their support from her own purse and by other means. Her personal acquaintances were to be found in every part of the city and borough and her sudden demise has elicited widespread sympathy for members of the family.

Mrs. Tyler is survived by her husband and two sons, Councilman William Seymour Tyler and Cornelius Boardman Tyler. The funeral will be held at her late home Wednesday afternoon at 2:30. Interment will be at the convenience of the family.

VANDALS IN DUKE PARK CAUSE MUCH ANNOYANCE.

Ten Arrested on Tobacco Man's Threat to Close Grounds.

James B. Duke, president of the American Tobacco Company, has threatened to close his two thousand acres park at Raritan unless the authorities succeed in suppressing gambling and acts of vandalism on the estate.

Prosecutor John V. Reger and County Detective George D. Totten, in an effort to save the park to the public, Saturday night rounded up ten boys of Raritan, who are charged with committing numerous depredations on the Duke estate. Peter Leibig, Frank Frayer, James Bourke, Frank Farrell and John Burns, Jr., were arraigned before Justice Suthphen on a charge of shooting craps at night in the shadow of Mr. Duke's $30,000 fountain by the light of two electric torches, held aloft by statues. Peter Leibig was also charged with breaking fifty electric lights along the boulevard in the park. He explained that he had not broken the lights from malice, but because he was "tearing mad" after his companions had cleaned him out at a game of craps. The prisoners were held under $100 bail each, to await the action of the Somerset Grand Jury. The bail was furnished.

Nicholas Pascale and Barney Black, who were charged with stealing a boat and staving a hole in its side; Andrew Rizzo and Daniel Evangelo, charged with destroying seats and carving up the interior of one of the spring houses, and Frank Rizub, accused of breaking apple trees and stealing apples, were also kept out of jail by the intervention of their parents, who furnished $100 bonds each. It is expected that the prisoners, if convicted, will be severely dealt with.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF Y. M. C. A. BOYS

ELABORATE PROGRAMME TO MARK MEETING AT MONTCLAIR.

Preparations for the annual conference of the boys' departments of the Young Men's Christian Associations at Montclair, October 26, 27 and 28, are being made. Representative members of the local boys' department will be among the 200 or more delegates. Eighteen associations will be represented.

An elaborate programme will begin with a social hour and reception in Association Hall, on Friday afternoon, between 5 and 6:30 o'clock. This will be followed by a supper served in Trinity Presbyterian church at Claremont and Midland avenues, at 7 o'clock, under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Montclair Association.

The opening session will be held in Trinity church at 8 o'clock on Friday night, when the Rev. Allen A. Stockdale, of Berkeley Temple, Boston, will deliver an address, his subject being "The Man I Made." The meeting will be presided over by George A. Hall, of Montclair, and will consist of a song service led by H. O. Knight, who will be assisted by the Boys' Orchestra, of which Mark Andrews, of Montclair, is the leader.

Saturday morning devotional services will be held in the First Methodist Episcopal church, on North Fullerton avenue, at 9 o'clock. Randolph Merrill, of Paterson, will preside and the services will be conducted by Walter H. Wones, of Newark.

Conferences will be held Saturday afternoon and evening. These conferences will be divided into six different sections, to be presided over as follows: Grammar school boys, by Ira E. Lute, Camden; High school boys, by Wilfred W. Fry, Trenton, and Melvin Jackson, Madison; business boys, Lewis E. Hawkins, Orange; county and small town, Joseph N. Brown, Haddonfield; Leaders' corps conference, Noble F. Randal, Montclair. Others who will address the sectional conferences are Charles W. Gilkey, and William Wheeler, of New York; Elmer P. Hopper, and Charles R. Smeaton, of this city; Charles F. Dittmar, of Freehold; Henry S. Park, of Paterson; Fred H. Rindge, Jr., of New York, and the Rev. E. M. Fergusson, State secretary of the New Jersey Sunday-schools. An opportunity will also be given the boy delegates to take part in the discussions.

The delegates will be given an opportunity of visiting the Montclair High School on Saturday afternoon, after which denominational services will be held in the First Methodist Episcopal church. The Rev. John Fulton Patterson, D. D., of Orange, will address the delegates in the First Methodist Episcopal church on Saturday night.

Church services will be held in the various churches on Sunday morning, and Charles R. Scott, State secretary for boys' work, will address the delegates in Association Hall on Sunday afternoon. There will be a mass-meeting for boys in the Auditorium of the Montclair High School on Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, and farewell services in Association Hall at night.

O. F. C. SHUT OUT EDWARD CLARK CLUB

SCORE 6 TO 0—VISITING PLAYER CUT HIS TONGUE.

The Orange Field Club played its first game of the season on Crescent Oval, Saturday afternoon, with the Edward Clark Club, of Elizabeth, and won a hard-fought game by a score of 6 to 0. The locals scored *in the first half, Lester Dodge mak*ing the touchdown and Harry Embleton kicked the goal. While the Orange Field Club boys did not play up to their usual standard, they made a fine showing in the initial contest.

The visiting team was not as strong as usual, but nevertheless played good ball throughout. The ball was held by the O. F. C. most of the time and their goal was not in danger at any stage of the game. The game in the last half, George Winchester, of the visiting team, playing half-back, met with a painful accident. He had a habit of sticking out his tongue, and while in a scrimmage one of the local players bumped him in the chin with his knee. One of his upper teeth penetrated the tongue, meeting a tooth from the under jaw and making a clean hole through the tongue. The young man was taken to the hospital and after treatment was able to go home. The local team lined up as follows:

MacLaughlin, center; J. McCullough, right-guard; Harry Embleton, right-tackle; O. Dodge, right-end; Bert Banks, left-guard; Harry Joseph, left-tackle; C. Heilyer, left-end; George McVey, quarterback; F. Sheppard, right-half; Lester Dodge, left-half; Embleton and Banks, fullback.

Next Saturday the club will play either Trinity Club, of Brooklyn, or Flemington A. C., on Crescent Oval.

MORGAN PASSES STOVER

Leads in Standing For Committee Cup at Country Club.

SCORES ON THE LINKS

Results of Play On Country Club and On Park Golf Club Courses On Saturday.

The delightful weather on Saturday attracted a large field of golfers to the Plainfield Country Club, larger in fact than on any preceding Saturday for several weeks.

While Morris J. Dumont won first honors for the Golf Committee cup, with a net score of 76, there was considerable interest in the fact that C. B. Morgan in winning two points, with a net score of 78, now is in the lead for the trophy with 14½ points, passing Charles A. Stover, who has 13¾ points. Stover failed to win any points in the weekly competition and with two more Saturdays play, Morgan has an excellent chance of winning the cup, if he can continue his present game. The best scores for the Golf Committee cup are as follows:

Morris J. Dumont, 83, 7—76; C. B. Morgan, 81, 2—79; George F. Shoonmaker, 87, 7-80; Henry D. Hibbard, 89, 5—84.

Another event of interest was a four ball foursome, which was won by Charles A. Stover and Morris J. Dumont with a score of 80, 7—73, which was the best one returned throughout the day. A number entered this competition, but Stover and Dumont were playing a strong game and won out quite easily.

In the play for the October Handicap, J. A. Lane won a leg with a score of 84, while he was closely followed by C. C. Burke, Sr., and E. E. Ironmonger, each returning a score of 86. The scores:

J. A. Lane, 95, 11—84: C. C. Burke, Sr., 98, 12—86; E. E. Ironmonger, 99, 13—86.

Besides the play on the course there was a large number of private dinners given at the clubhouse in the evening. The social features at the club this fall have been the means of attracting an unusually large number of members and friends, especially automobile parties, as the accommodations are ideal. The usual Saturday night dances have been given up for the rest of the season.

An unusually large number of golfers visited the Park Golf Club Saturday to take part in the weekly competitions for the President's, Club and Hydewood trophies. A. W. Kenworthy won the former and the President's cup, while J. L. Watson and Reuben Knox were tied for second place. For the scratch trophy, Rev. J. O. McKelvey won first honors and Mr. Kenworthy and Charles A. Reed were tied for second place. John L. Watson now leads in the competition for the Hydewood cup with six points.

These scores were returned:

A. W. Kenworthy, 99, 20-79; John L. Watson, 108, 18—89; Reuben Knox, 101, 12—89; Rev. J. O. McKelvey, 96, 3—93; George A. Chapman, 111, 18—93; Leon R. Thurlow, 105, 10—95; Charles B. Morse, 105, 10—95; Alexander Gilbert, 113, 18-95; Charles A. Reed, 99, 3—96; Rev. L. H. Hord, 111, 15—96; Rev. C. L. Goodrich, 102, 5—97; D. H. Rowland, 107, 7-100; Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, 112, 10—102.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

If choking, get down on all fours and cough.

After the use of a mustard poultice on any part of the body rub that part with camphorated oil to avoid the possibility of taking cold.

At the first indications of a sore throat try a gargle of one teaspoonful of salt and one of carbonate of soda to half a glass of water.

If stung or bitten by an insect, make a paste of starch powder with chloroform and put on the poison and apply to the affected part at once.

Persons predisposed toward erysipelas should avoid wines, strong tea and coffee and highly spiced or seasoned foods. The more laxative and cooling the diet the better.

When the youngsters burn their fingers, apply oil of peppermint. It is a wonderful remedy. If the skin is bruised, this cannot be used. In case of that kind apply a solution of baking powder or borax.

Matches.

"Who are those young people in that box?" asked the man in the parquet.

"There's Elsie Blugore and her fiance, and Maxie Rich and hers, and Belle Browne and hers. They're all to be married next month."

"Indeed? Quite a boy of matches, eh?"

To Remove Grease Stains.

Turpentine will remove grease stains. Blotting paper should be placed underneath the spot to be cleaned, then turpentine is applied and a second piece of blotting paper is laid on and the whole well pressed with something hard. The fat is dissolved, then absorbed by the paper, the stain disappearing. If you fear the material to is delicate for the turpentine treatment, cover the spot with French chalk for twelve hours. Shake off and, if the stain is still visible, press with a warm iron between blotting paper.

DUNELLEN LOST FIRST BIG GAME OF SEASON

STRONG HAMILTON LYCEUM ELEVEN HELD TO ONE TOUCHDOWN.

Battling gamely all the way, Dunellen went down in defeat before the Hamilton Lyceum eleven, in their first game of the season, Saturday afternoon, by a score of 6 to 0. The game was played in Dunellen.

The Dunellen eleven was outweighed by thirty pounds and was confronted by strong team work, but it put up a remarkable game of defense. The ball was taken and held several times, and quick rushes kept it zig-zagging up and down the field.

O'Rourke scored the visitors' one touchdown in the first half by an electrifying run of eighty yards. He kicked the goal neatly. After that Dunellen held doggedly to her defenses and blocked every attempt to add to the score:

The line-up:

COLBYITES WILL GO ON

Central Committee Enthusiastically Plans to Strengthen the Organization.

THANK COLORED MEN

Their Work Among Voters of Their Own Race Is Felt to Have Raised Standard of Citizenship.

Satisfied with their showing in the primary contest, the Colbyite central committee took steps Thursday, at the first meeting since the party battle, to continue the organization and extend its work. The meeting was held in the Camera Club rooms, and a large attendance marked the continued interest of the leaders in the movement for party reorganization.

The committeemen winced optimism. They were pleased with the measure of success attained by the league here, and spoke as with unabated enthusiasm.

Howard C. Tracy, of the Second ward, the chairman, presided. Considerable routine business was done, arrangements being made to wipe out all the indebtedness remaining from the campaign. Treasurer Frost's report was satisfactory, and the members left the meeting with the assurance that all bills would be met.

A full discussion on the work, both local and county, was held, and out of it plans for perfecting the organization were formed. The principal action taken was a recommendation to the various ward branches to change their constitutions in such wise as to strengthen the central committee. Some of the committees of the ward branches interfere with the efficiency of the central committee sub-committees, and their elimination is felt to be desirable.

A vote of thanks was given to Richard Norwood and Arthur Venable, the colored member of the committee, for their work among their own race. It was the committee's conviction that their efforts among the negroes had raised the citizenship of colored voters to a new standard.

It was decidedly the consensus of opinion that the league continue its efforts along the lines originally set down. Every effort will be agreed, was to be bent toward spreading and extending the influence of the league in the cause of good government, and to help in the election of good and able men to office.

FIRST FALL SOCIAL AT FIRST M. E. CHURCH.

Informal Programme at Ladies' Aid Society Entertainment.

The fall rally social under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of *the First M. E. church, held in Vin*cent chapel, last night, attracted nearly 200 members of the congregation. The affair was in the nature of an old-fashioned auto social, and everyone contributed his mite during the evening toward of the work of the society. Mrs. J. H. Howell was chairman of the committee of arrangements and directed the details. She was assisted by Mrs. Geo. W. Pike, Mrs. J. C. Peck, Mrs. Henry A. McGee, Mrs. L. M. French and the president of the society, Mrs. Nelson A. Miller.

The chapel was simply, but appropriately decorated with autumnal foliage and potted plants. The programme was an informal one, comprising vocal solos by Mrs. Stephen H. Tugwell and piano selections by Miss Frances Rittenhouse. Most of the evening was occupied with what was called an "observation party." This was arranged and conducted by Mrs. Judd Stewart. Fifty different articles were placed in one of the rooms and those present were supposed to walk through the room and after passing out write down the names of as many articles as they could remember. This furnished lots of amusement. After the entertain*ment a committee of women served* refreshments.

CHARMING LUNCHEONS AT PLAINFIELD COUNTRY CLUB.

Mrs. Francis Hyde and Mrs. E. H. Booth Entertain.

Two charming luncheons were given at the Plainfield Country Club, Wednesday, one by Mrs. Francis De-Lacy Hyde for twelve and the other by Mrs. E. H. Booth for nine. Especially attractive were the decorations, autumnal foliage being used with good effect. The prevailing colors were red and green. After the luncheons the afternoon was spent in social chat.

Those present at Mrs. Hyde's luncheon, including herself, were Mrs. Elliot T. Barrows, Mrs. Edward H. Ladd, Jr., Mrs. Walter M. McGee, Miss Munger, Miss Stewart, Mrs. Weir, Mrs. Daniel F. Ginna, Mrs. B. A. Heusser, Mrs. Bidwell, Mrs. James R. Joy and Mrs. Augustus V. Heely.

Those at Mrs. Booth's luncheon were Mrs. A. H. Atterbury, Mrs. De-Witt C. Irving, Mrs. Frederick G. Mead, Mrs. John R. Dumont, Mrs. William E. Lowe, Mrs. R. S. Corlies, Mrs. W. Brown and Mrs. Waite.

BIG DAY FOR EXEMPTS

Martine Headed Plainfield Marchers in Parade and Had Great Reception.

PLAINFIELD PRIZELESS

Old Amity Cart Was Rumored to Have Won, But It Didn't—Local Veterans Stood Long March Well.

No bigger volunteer firemen's parade has ever been seen in New Jersey than the one held at Elizabeth Thursday. Fully 5,000 mene were in line, and no less than seven States were represented. Seventy organizations were in line.

The Plainfield exempts went through it all. They stuck to the line and covered every inch of the march, looking no whit less martial and like veterans of real service at the end of the march than at the beginning.

"We walked all of ten miles," said D. W. Littell, head of the State exempts, to a Press reporter after the parade.

There was a rumor after the line line disbanded that the old Amity hose cart had been awarded the prize for the finest looking piece of hand apparatus, but it was learned later that the prize went to Newark. The Plainfield relic looked splendid, however, and many of the spectators picked it as the best in its class.

The Plainfield company was headed by James R. Martine. He is not an exempt, but the company asked him to lead them. He marched the whole distance bare-headed, bowing constantly to cheering friends and supporters who recognized him everywhere. The Plainfield delegation was frequently in the midst of Martine ovations.

The ideal weather conditions had much to do with making the pageant the brilliant affair that it proved to be.

Never did the city present a prettier spectacle than it did yesterday. The work of decorating for the parade began last week, and the principal business thoroughfares, Broad street, Elizabeth avenue and First street, were a waving mass of flags, banners and bunting, while on several buildings were life-size portraits of volunteer firemen. On top of Washington engine house was a stuffed figure of a fire chief, fully equipped and holding in each hand a large American flag.

All through the city were mottoes bearing the words "Welcome, Brave Boys." "Welcome Vetran Volunteer Firemen."

The visiting delegations were regaled after the parade at Y. M. C. A. field. A big fireman's ball was held in Turn Hall Thursday night.

A Church Bazaar.

Under the auspices of the Ladies' Sewing Circle of the Swedish Lutheran church an entertainment and bazaar will be given in the W. C. T. U. rooms, Saturday night, November 10. Refreshments will be served and a literary programme will be rendered by students of Upsala College. The proceeds will be for the benefit of the Swedish Lutheran church.

Mrs. Wiggs Delightfully Refreshing.

Seldom does a play present such fresh and striking types as those seen in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" at the New Plainfield theatre Thursday. The Mrs. herself, "Mr. Stubbins," "Miss Hazey" and "Lovey Mary" were remembered, by name, to come by every member of the big audience that laughed and cried by turns at their homley joys and sorrows. While the play differs some*what from Mrs. Rice's book it has* been bettered by the change and without doubt will be by the generation. Mrs. Madge Carr Cook's interpretation of the optimistic "Mrs. Wiggs" was splendid while Charles Carter, as "Mr. Stubbins," gave the cleverest character impersonation that has yet graced the local stage.

Great Men's Childhood.

"Many great men," said a psychologist, "gave signs of greatness even in their childhood. Mozart at the age of five composed a piece of music and while that is rather a precocious musician, had some trouble in playing it.

"Macaulay before he was eight wrote the 'Compendium of Universal History, Being an Account of the Leading Events From the Creation Down to the Present Century.'

"Hartley at seven wrote a long and abstruse essay on the 'Nature of Man.' Bacon at nine finished a work on philosophy. Milton at twelve wrote two epics.

"On the other hand, Goethe, Steele, Dr. Johnson, Wagner, Voltaire, Tennyson, Poe and Fenimore Cooper were deemed stupid in their childhood."

Want Voting Machine Back.

The secretary of State has ordered the voting machine consigned to Dunellen sent to Woodbridge. Last year a petition was circulated and signed by the voters of Dunellen, to have the machine removed, but without effect. Now that it is to be taken away, some of the voters are talking of getting up a petition to have it restored. The dreaded machine proved to be more satisfactory than was supposed before election day.

NEW YORK MAN WEDS MISS ANNA A. TEXIER

CEREMONY PERFORMED BY FATHER MILLER IN ST. JOSEPH'S CHURCH.

In the presence of only relatives and near friends, Miss Anna A. Texier, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Texier, of Watchung, and John J. O'Connor, of New York, were married in St. Joseph's church, Wednesday afternoon. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Miller at 4 o'clock.

Miss Emma Kiehl, of New York, was Miss Texier's attendant, and John Nolan, also of New York, was best man. The bride was gowned in white liberty satin with embroidery trimmings. She carried bride roses. Miss Kiehl's gown was of blue silk and she carried carnations. The ushers were William Heath, of New York, and Edmund Texier, brother of the bride. The wedding march was played by Mrs. A. E. LaPorte.

Following the wedding, the bridal party and guests adjourned to the home of the bride's parents, where Mr. and Mrs. O'Connor were tendered a reception. A wedding supper was served and several hours were passed in a social way.

The young couple left Wednesday on a wedding trip that will include Niagara Falls and other points in that vicinity. O'Connor woke their home in the Bronx, the groom being engaged in the hotel business in New York. Both received many handsome presents and there was an exchange of gifts among the bridal party.

Loyal Legion Visits West Point.

Hugh Hastings, Captain S. C. Peck, Dr. Frank S. Wells, Major W. D. W. Miller, Rev. Dr. Hubbell, M. C. Dobbins and John Stewart, of this city, were among the 500 members of the New York Commandery, Military Order Loyal Legion and the commandery-in-chief, which visited West Point, Thursday, as the guests of Col. H. L. Scott, commandant of the Military Academy. After visiting the various sights of interest at the academy, the Loyal Legion witnessed a special *mixed drill of the cadets and a re*view by Col. Scott, commandant of the entire battalion after dress parade. The trip to and from West Point was made by boat and was enlivened by music by the band from the Twelfth Infantry, now stationed at Governor's Island.

Attended Conference.

Rev. Lawrence R. Howard, pastor of Hope chapel, attended the "Haystack Centennial" in celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Foreign missions held at Williams College Wednesday. Dr. Howard is a Williams man, having graduated in the class of '98.

REV. G. KENNEDY NEWELL NOW AT WEST ORANGE.

Has Been Installed as Pastor of the Cloud Presbyterian Church.

Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, former pastor of Hope chapel and for many years one of the best known clergymen in the city, is now the fully established pastor of the St. Cloud Presbyterian church, West Orange. He was recently called by the congregation and left his labors in Brooklyn, where he had been since leaving Plainfield, to accept it. His installation, the sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Williams Adams Brown, of Union Seminary, at which Mr. Newell prepared for the ministry. Rev. Dr. Erdman, of Morristown, Mr. Newell's father-in-law, delivered the charge to the congregation and Rev. G. R. McGregor the charge to the pastor.

The St. Cloud church is a strong organization and it is situated in a field that will permit Mr. Newell to keep up the work he began in Plainfield and carried on in Brooklyn. The congregation includes some of New ersey's best known men and all are highly delighted at having secured so worthy an occupant of their pulpit.

UNION S. S. CONVENTION

All Day Meeting of County Sunday-School Workers in Elizabeth.

MANY ADDRESSES MADE

Plainfielders Take Part in the Programme—Sessions in the Westminster Church.

Plainfield was largely represented at the twenty-sixth annual convention of the Union County Sunday-school Association, held at the West*minster Presbyterian* church, Elizabeth, Thursday. Sessions were held in the morning, afternoon and evening and an unusually attractive and helpful programme was presented by leading Sunday-school workers throughout the county and State.

The morning session opened at 10 o'clock with a song service, followed with an address of welcome by Rev. Dr. Henry Elliott Mott, with a response by Walter M. Irving, of Cranford, president of the association. Rev. William B. Hamilton, of Elizabeth, presented the recording secretary's report, and R. P. Greaves, of Westfield, gave the county secretary and treasurer's report. Miss Edith Cairns, of the First Baptist church Sunday-school, presented a report of elementary work in the county.

Miss Rose Scott, State elementary superintendent, gave an address on the subject of "Making the Lesson Real." Following the announcement of committees, Rev. George H. Trull, assistant minister of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York, made an address on "Missions in the Sunday-school." The closing of the session was in charge of Rev. Dr. Henry Hale Sleeper, rector of Grace church, Elizabeth. An adjournment was then taken for dinner.

The afternoon session began at 2:15 o'clock with a song service, followed with a discussion on "Model Training Class Lesson," in charge of Rev. E. M. Fergusson. The Home Department report was given by William S. Wells, and "Home Department Ideas," was given by Mrs. Almer W. Karnell. The presentation of certificates and recognition of district secretaries occupied considerable time.

"The Salvation of Our Scholars" was the subject of an address by Rev. W. H. Morgan, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. church, Newark. Rev. W. H. Litsinger closed the session with prayer, after which there was an adjournment for supper.

The feature of the evening session was an address on "Some Phases of the Modern Sunday-school," by Rev. Dr. Pascal Harrower, rector of the Church of the Ascension, West Brighton, N. Y. The convention closed with singing and benediction.

During the afternoon and evening there were numerous conferences in charge of Miss Edith Cairns, Miss Scott, Rev. E. M. Fergusson, Rev. H. K. England, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church, New York.

FRANKLIN COUNCIL'S NINETEENTH ANNIVERSARY.

Juniors Have a Good Program of Music and Vaudeville.

Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., celebrated its nineteenth anniversary, Thursday in Junior Hall, on West Front street. The affair was planned for the members and women friends and a programme of music, together with vaudeville, was greatly enjoyed. During the evening were selections by Andrew Carpenter's orchestra and later it furnished music for dancing which was continued until a late hour.

John G. Bicknell was in charge of the programme, which was made a few remarks of welcome in opening. A trio of entertainers from New York gave a fine exhibition of clog dancing and the dialect stories were amusing. After the entertainment ice cream and cake were served. The committee on arrangements consisted of Roy DeCamp, Ephraim Compton, George Wilson and Harry Knight.

Franklin Council was organized on October 6, 1887, and from the first continued to increase in membership and influence. At present there are 327 members and next year the council will be entitled to another representative to State Council. Franklin Council is the oldest of the order in town and it has always been conducted along conservative lines. Frank Platis is the present councilor and at nearly every meeting new members are elected and plans are now underway for a busy winter season. Prior to the entertainment last night, a short business session was held and one proposition received.

In College Choir.

Harold C. Fenno, of Watchung avenue, has been taken on by Williams College choir. Fenno, who sings tenor, got the place in the competition this fall, when several new men were elected to the choir.

Approaching Wedding.

Miss Ella Serrell has issued invitations to the marriage of her niece, Miss Ella H. Serrell, and William O. Briggs, of Milwaukee, Wis. The event will take place at the home of the bride's aunt on Tuesday, October 22. Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, pastor of the First Baptist church, will perform the ceremony.

35,000 PEOPLE IN ORGANIZATION LENDING SUPPORT TO EXCISE MEASURE

The State Christian Endeavor Union Friday at Millville passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the delegates of the Christian Endeavor Union of New Jersey, humbering between thirty-five and forty thousand members among the young people, assembled in convention at Millville October 12, 1906, petition the Senators and Assemblymen from the State of New Jersey not to repeal the bishops' bill, but maintain the same, and lend their good offices for the enforcement of it in its present shape, particularly the portion of the law referring to screen in front of saloons.

The afternoon session's main speaker was Dr. Clark, president of the Endeavorers of the world.

The Committee on Resolutions made a lengthy report, which in condensed form was as follows:

"The convention urges the preservation of the Bishops' bill; that the work among the junior societies be pushed more aggressively, as the life of the Christian Endeavor Union depends upon the young recruits; that the evangelistic work be strengthened and made more prominent feature in the meetings of the *societies; that the citizens of Mill*ville be thanked for their hearty hospitality."

The report of the nominating committee recommended as follows:

Honorary vice-presidents, Sprout, Arlington; vice-presidents, Rev. W. D. Stults, Manasquan; Rev. A. W. Anderson, Canton; Rev. W. P. Greenway, Jersey City; secretary, Miss I. B. Stephens, Hackettstown; associate secretary, Misses Anna M. Woodward, Newton; treasurer, A. W. Abbott, Orange; Advisory Committee, Rev. R. T. Pockman, D. D., New Brunswick; Rev. W. L. Steiner, Millville; Rev. Charles Condit, Liberty Corner; J. K. Harriman, Jersey City; Rev. Adelbert Chapman, Hackensack.

This was ratified by the convention.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASS'N ELECTS NEW OFFICERS.

Miss Edith Cairns Continues as the Elementary Superintendent.

The Union County Sunday-school Association elected these officers at the annual convention held in Elizabeth on Thursday:

President, Walter M. Irving, of Westfield; first vice-president, the Rev. Nelson A. Miller, Plainfield; second vice-president, the Rev. H. H. Sleeper, Ph. D., of Elizabeth; third vice-president, the Rev. O. J. Shoop, of Cranford; secretary and treasurer, Richard P. Greaves, New York City; recording secretary, the Rev. William B. Hamilton, Elizabeth; home department superintendent, Mrs. A. W. *Karnell, Connecticut Farms; ele*mentary superintendent, Miss Edith Cairns, Plainfield; member of State executive committee, G. M. Hall, Plainfield; members of the executive committee—the Rev. William R. Muirhead, Fanwood; Elias D. Smith, Elizabeth; Wm. D. Porter, Summit; Mrs. Alonzo Pettit, Elizabeth; Charles H. Howard, Rahway; O. S. Rogers, Plainfield; Wellington Morehouse, Westfield; George G. Teller, Cranford.

The Sunday-school eligible for certificates, having contributed three cents per capita to the association, include the following Plainfield Seventh-Day Baptist, Trinity Reformed, First Presbyterian, Park Avenue Baptist, St. Stephen's Episcopal and Friends. Those from nearby places include All Saints' Episcopal, Fanwood; Scotch Plains M. E. and Baptist, Willow Grove Union, Methodist Episcopal, New Providence.

Resolutions were adopted by the convention approving the Bishops' bill as being the most satisfactory temperance legislation thus far enacted.

School Teachers Protest.

Jersey City, Oct. 15.—More than 500 school teachers attended Friday night's meeting of the local Board of Education to protest against a new rule compelling teachers who absent themselves from school on account of illness or for any other good reason to pay a substitute $2 a day. Heretofore they were docked $1 a day for substitutes. The teachers met at Public School No. 9, and marched in a body to the city hall. A resolution passed at a meeting of the Teachers' Association protesting against enacting $2 as the pay for substitutes was read by the clerk, and then Miss Marvin and Miss Van Winkle, principals, and two teachers made short speeches. Mr. Ridgeway, president of the board, said the matter would be left under advisement and the teachers filed out.

the family in a summer resort on Long Island. He placed the butt of the rifle against the mirror and the muzzle agaist his forehead. The boy had suffered from chronic stomach trouble and had made threats when melancholy which had led the family to take precautions against his killing himself.

Borough Couple Engaged.

Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Daudt, of Grove street, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Rachel Daudt, to F. Mortimer Slater, Jr., of Jackson avenue. No date has been set for the ceremony.

WILSON HIT BY FAILURE

Plainfield Man Member of Ceballos & Co. Which Went to the Wall.

LOSS IS ONE MILLION

Havana Agent Said to Be Defaulter—Anderson C. Wilson Resides in West Seventh Street.

J. M. Ceballos & Co., Wall street commission merchants and bankers of more than fifty years prominently identified with American trade with Cuba, Puerto Rico and Spain, announced their failure, Wednesday, owing to a defalcation amounting to $1,000,000, alleged to have been stolen by the firm's Havana agent, Manuel Silveira, head of one of the largest banking and commission houses in Cuba. The crash involves a Plainfield man, Anderson C. Wilson, of West Seventh street, a member of the Ceballos firm and one of its most potent directors. He is not widely known locally from the fact that he and his family have lived quietly since coming here five years ago. His wife was questioned about the failure this morning but declined to say anything, informing the reporter that it was a matter that concerned her husband and he was absent from the city.

A sensational feature of the failure is that Silveira chartered a steam*ship, the Carmelina, a Norwegian* cattle carrier, and sailed from Havana on October 2 last with $1,000,000 in cash and property for parts unknown. Aboard the vessel is Silveira's wife and family.

News of the failure of J. M. Ceballos & Co. was a great surprise to the banking and commission houses in the financial district, where the head of the house, Juan M. Ceballos, is known as a director in many corporations and was regarded as the most aggressive merchant and banker in Cuban-American trade.

In a statement issued from the office of the banking house it was said the liabilities would amount to between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000. The assets consist mainly of sugar enterprises, plantations in Cuba and railroad enterprises of embyronic character. The firm was not a member of the New York Stock Exchange, although ten years ago their name was on the Stock Exchange connections.

The assignment was made to William V. Rowe, of the law fiam of Sullivan & Cromwell, and William Nelson Cromwell is named as counsel to the assignee. Mr. Cromwell said the firm had decided to place its affairs in the hands of an assignee in view of the heavy loss sustained by the defalcation of Silveira.

The firm's New York offices are located in Lord's Court, 27 William street.

ENTERTAINMENT OF M. E. MEN'S ASSOCIATION.

A Well Balanced Programme Interests the Monroe Avenue Church People.

The Men's Association of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church held an in*teresting* entertainment last evening. Robert Randall Delhi, of Bound Brook, was the reader of the occasion. Comprehending every phase of his author's meaning he portrayed in an admirable manner the different characters.

A piano solo was played with good expression by Miss Grace Rooney, of Elizabeth. "Peter Sorgan in Lane," recited by Mr. Delhi, was a humorous account of a countryman's struggles for self possession at the critical moment of proposal. He responded *to an hearty anchore with "The Ham*liton," a humorous poem of unsuccessful matrimony. A mandolin solo, entitled "The Corporal's Guard," was played by Charles Leland, accompanied with the piano by Mrs. C. Lewis. The encore was a violin duet by Charles Leland and William Hahn. This was followed by Mr. Delhi's reading of "The Whistling Regiment," showing the devotion of a soldier's lover. Miss J. Martin, accompanied on the piano by Mrs. George Whitley, rendered a vocal solo entitled "Under Southern Skies." Male quartette, their voices mingled in an adjoining room, sang the chorus, producing a string effect.

Mrs. William Granet, Sr., read a selection in negro dialect entitled "How Jake was Transformed." She was heartily encored and responded with a humorous story in Irish dialect. She is equally good in both of these and received loud applause.

The male chorus, composed of Messrs. Whitley, Pound, Thompson, Burger, VanSyckle, Dayton and Prayed, sang the well known comic song, "The Monk." A reading of "The Bell of Atri," the Sicilian's tale in Longfellow's "Tales of a Wayside Inn," was then given by Mr. Delhi. Messrs. Leland and Hahn rendered a much appreciated violin duet, and the entertainment concluded with a selection by the male chorus entitled "Good Night."

The success of the affair is due largely to the management of John Prasch, president of the Men's Association, and to Mrs. George Whitley, who had a large part in the musical rehearsals.

Mrs. J. P. D. Kirch, of Tarrytown, N. Y., who has been visiting relatives and friends here, has returned home.

RIVAL CANDIDATES MEET

And Congressman Fowler Secures a Promise From "Farmer Orator."

A DUEL OF WORDS

Martine Will Disabuse the Public Mind—An Incident of Firemen's Parade.

"Farmer Orator" James E. Martine and his congressional opponent, Representative Charles N. Fowler, met Thursday for the first time since their amusing encounter at Denville in the last congressional campaign. As a result of their conversation, the Plainfield nominee will tell the next audience he addresses that the Elizabeth nominee is not "Mr. Fowler, of Vermont," despite flippant reports to the contrary. Mr. Fowler, himself, says that he has not spent three weeks during the last two years at his marble quarries in the "Granite State."

When Congressman Fowler was leisurely strolling down Broad street, in Elizabeth, the "farmer orator," who carried that town against his opponent in the last campaign, swept by him on the way to take his place *at the head of the Plainfield Ex*empts, to which he had been invited. The two saluted and went on in the even tenor of their ways. Suddenly the congressman retraced his steps.

"Look here, Martine, I want to see you," said the Elizabethan.

"What can I do for you, congressman?" responded the genial Plainfielder.

"I want you to be truthful and honest in this campaign," said Fowler, "I don't know what you mean, but I'll guarantee that I'll come as near to it as you will," retorted Martine.

"You are going around saying that I spend my time in Vermont. That is unqualifiedly and absolutely false. I have not been in Vermont three weeks during the last two years."

"I'll take your word for that, congressman, and I'll be glad to tell the people that you say so. But the fact remains that wherever you have been, you were not in Congress. I have the records and the Congressional Record shows that you were not there."

Then they parted; Martine to lead the Plainfield Exempt firemen in the parade and his opponent to witness the spectacle.

"I shall take pains to tell my audiences what Mr. Fowler has said. I think I ought to set him right. He was not in Vermont. He was not in Washington. I don't know where he was." Thus spoke the "farmer orator" today.

OLD HOME WEEK.

Will Begin October 6, 1907, in Elizabeth.

The Elizabeth Board of Trade at its regular meeting in the Hersh building, Thursday night, considered the Old Home Week celebration for next year. The special committee appointed to make arrangements for the celebration reported its decision to have the celebration begin on the morning of Sunday, October 6, and end at midnight on the following Saturday. The report was received and the committee assumed the official title, of "The Old Home Week Executive Committee." The members are W. S. Bate, chairman; P. J. Ryan, vice chairman; Charles A. Trimble, corresponding secretary; W. F. Groves, recording secretary, and C. H. K. Halsey, treasurer.

Y. M. C. A. Theatre Meetings.

Five meetings at the New Plainfield theatre have been planned by the Y. M. C. A. One will be held each month during November, December, January, February and March. Speakers of note will address them.

Will Spend the Winter South.

C. B. Clifton, of the firm of Clifton & Campbell, is making preparations to leave for his winter home at Bradenton, Florida, within the next two weeks. He is now planning his affairs so that he can spend the winter in the South, where he has many interests, and he is likely to spend next summer away from Plainfield. Harry Campbell, the other member of the firm, will also spend a part of the winter south. Both Mr. Clifton and Mr. Campbell will be accompanied by their wives.

Will Attend Juniors' Convention.

The State Council of the Jr. O. U. A. M., will hold its annual convention in Trenton on October 24, and each one of the four local councils will have one representative present. T. E. Curvin, Jr., will represent Franklin council, and Peter Bennett will go from Plainfield council. The delegates from the other two councils, Benevolent and Somerset, will be announced later.

Boy Suicide.

New York, Oct. 15.—Standing before a mirror, in his home in the Greystock apartment house, No. 56 Orange street, Brooklyn, William Coleman, thirteen years old, son of a prosperous tailor, committed suicide Friday afternoon by sending a bullet into his head. He used a small bore rifle, about three feet long, with which he had become expert and used almost daily while with

DEMOCRATS FIRE OPENING GUN OF CAMPAIGN

Stevens, Hamill, Minturn and Martine Pour Shot Into Enemy's Camp.

CHEERS FOR MARTINE

Good Sized Audience At Mass Meeting in the Theatre—Attacks on Dryden and Fowler.

Flanked by heavy political ordinance from his home county, Col. Edwin A. Stevens, of Hoboken, appeared before the Plainfield public, Wednesday, as a candidate for United States Senator, at the Democratic mass meeting in the New Plainfield theatre. It was designed as a Stevens meeting, but it looked at one time very much like a Martine ratification.

There was a large attendance. The orchestra was solidly filled, and City Chairman Walter L. Hetfield, Sr., and his lieutenants expressed great satisfaction over the size of the audience and the cordiality displayed toward Democratic doctrine. It was not by any means, a solidly Democratic audience, as Mr. Martine, who was the only speaker thoroughly conversant with local affairs, readily acknowledged in opening his speech but there was a general air of friendliness about the crowd that warmed the hearts of the speakers.

Four speeches were made. Col. Stevens spoke first, and was followed by James A. Hamill, candidate for Congress in the Tenth District, State Senator James F. Minturn, of Hoboken, and Mr. Martine. Mr. Hetfield presided.

In his brief opening speech, Mr. Hetfield said the meeting was the result of a suggestion from the Col. A. Stevens association, of Hoboken, which is booming the Colonel for the Senate. Col. Stevens, he said, was holding meetings all over the State to meet the voters and talk to them frankly of his aims and political ideals.

Col. Stevens simply and earnestly, without any attempt at eloquent flights. He won the close attention of his audience. In part, he said:

"I am before you tonight as a candidate for the United States Senate. I am asking for your votes for the Democratic nominees for the Legislature, and for such endorsement of my candidacy as shall make it clear to the voter how, in the event of Democratic success, the vote of your representatives in the Legislature will ultimately be cast for this most honorable and important office.

"There could be no greater victory of Democratic principles would vote the Democratic ticket next month; there can be likewise no doubt of the result if only the Strictly Democratic vote can be relied on.

"Let us face the facts. It is not beyond question that if the party commanded the confidence of the people, Democratic victory would be assured, and is it not because the party has not in the past commanded this confidence that it has met with defeat? Why this lack of confidence? Here is one reason. There have been repeated demands in the platforms of the party for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people. There is no doubt today but that the people in casting their vote for candidates for the Legislature want to do so with the knowledge as to how these candidates, if elected, will stand as to the United States Senatorship, and yet to date the party has given no assurance, and has provided or attempted to provide no means for giving it. I ask you does such failure invite confidence? An endeavor is being made to secure such action as would make the party mind clear in this matter.

"Whether I be or be not the candidate chosen matters but little. I can assure you that my candidacy will not be a cause for disunion. The Democracy owes it to the people to name its choice before asking for their votes, and no interest of mine will impede the party in discharging this duty.

"It has been said, and with justice, that I am not so well known throughout the State as to command the confidence of the people. A word, therefore, as to my views is fairly owing those whose support I am asking.

"I favor an immediate and progressive revision of the tariff. I hold the tariff question to be the Republican party directly responsible for much of the corruption in public life. This is enough to make its revision mandatory, not by the friends of this system of corruption, plunder and deceit, but by the friends of the Constitution. I ask you whether a system that can produce one such result as our gross injustice to our island possessions and to every consumer of sugar in this land at the dictation of one interest, is justified by its results. Does it not threaten our liberties?

"The Dingley schedules are the growth of years. It has become, whether we like it or not, a part of our financial life which we cannot root out without financial disaster.

"It will take years to restore the tariff to the correct Constitutional basis. The people do not want hasty experiments, but there can be no doubt that there is a strong popular feeling demand reform.

"There is one matter which can hardly be classed as a national issue, but of which I want to speak to you tonight; one that is closer to my heart than any other, and that is the use of money in politics. Were it not that I believe that through my candidacy I can give some prominence to this matter, it is more than doubtful whether I would be before you tonight. To me it seems that our scandalous and corrupt method of electing United States Senators is the worst abuses of the tariff, the control of the government by the trusts, the failure to enact and enforce proper and progressive labor laws will all be to a great extent removed were this one matter properly regulated.

"It has come to be the usual and proper thing in every campaign to have the Republican party announce that the country must be saved; an enormous fund has to be raised to do this saving. We can only guess as to the sources. We know nothing as to the purposes. How the fund is raised and expended by State and local committees we cannot even guess, and yet in every campaign we hear the same old cry, and we know that the same old means are being adopted for raising the fund to save our friends tell us, to save the Republic. Where such vast sums of money are handled in politics, it is impossible to prevent bribery and corruption. Every candidate for office is expected to 'put up.' Often he is called upon for sums greatly in excess of the salary that he will receive. Can you wonder then that there should be corruption and rumors of corruption?

"But that is not all of the evil. Government by parties, in order to fulfill its purpose, demands that there should be an intelligent, honest and active opposition to the party in power. How can you expect to secure such opposition under the present conditions? How can you expect that men will run on the minority side to a hopeless overthrow, when they would be surely called upon to 'put up' money in a losing fight? Prevalent abuses in politics have created an atmosphere from which none can escape. The stench of an Augean stable rising to Heaven, and a whiff of it now and then blows across the nose of the great American people when some legislative investigation unearths a Yellow Dog Fund.

"If a candidate has not the means to pay for his own campaign, he or the party boss naturally turns to those interests that will probably be affected by the result of the canvass that is being carried on, and appeal to them for help. Do you, therefore, wonder, that you have to complain of Legislatures dominated by corporations?

"I urge upon you most earnestly the importance, nay the necessity, of committing the Democratic party upon this subject, so that the people may understand most clearly, that as far as they entrust the necessary power to its hands, the Democratic *party will enact such laws as will ef*fectually prevent not only bribery and corruption at the polls, but the more scandalous expenditure of money in political campaigns. The people have a right to know whose money is paying for the bands of music and the fireworks that attract the crowd to a political meeting. They have a right *to know before they vote for a candi*date that he is not untitled for office by reason of gratitude to any person or corporation. They have a right to know how much money is being expended in a campaign, from whence it comes and whither it goes, and this information should be accessible at any time prior to an election, not merely published after the event.

"The law must be changed so that convictions for bribery and corruption can be secured. The punishment for bribery must be made so severe, the difficulty in securing a conviction must be so reduced, as to make the commission of that crime one of the greatest risks that a man could take. But besides we must have such conditions as well not exclude a self-respecting poor man from seeking office.

"In every address that I have made in this campaign I have pledged myself, and I again pledge myself, that I will not now or at any other time expend more money in this or any other campaign than a relatively poor man might be expected to contribute in my stead. I say this knowing full well that this pledge will prevent the full presentation of my candidacy and the issues on which I have spoken to you, and which I have deeply at heart, to the people, but, paraphrasing the words of Henry Clay, 'I would rather be right than win.' (Applause.) We must not tolerate the existence of a system which prevents a poor man from having an equal chance in politics with the rich, for the Constitution, and the Democratic party which is founded thereon, mean, if they mean anything, a square deal, and the square deal must begin in politics." (Prolonged applause.)

Mr. Hamill won warm applause early in his speech by praise of Col. Stevens' appeal to the people. The election of United States Senators by Legislatures, he said, was the result of Alexander Hamilton's ultra-conservatism. It was fine in theory, but the practice had resulted in the bilking of *the people out of true repre*sentation in the upper house of their Congress. That some of such a pass that scandals filled the air whenever a United States Senatorship was being considered by a Legislature. The choice of senator lay rightly with the people, and to doubt their ability to choose well was to doubt the wisdom of the system of government itself.

Touching on National issues, Mr. Hamill said the Republicans were taking credit for meritorious measures conceived and planned by Democrats. He instanced the rate legislation. It was proof of the eternal soundness of Democratic doctrine.

Mr. Hamill spoke strongly in favor of the general enforcement of the eight-hour labor law, and in favor of holding all government contractors strictly to it. He charged the Republicans in the State with gross neglect of the duty imposed on them by the people in the matter of equal taxation on the statute books.

The speaker aroused the audience to cheers by a cordial reference to James E. Martine. The latter, he said, was a gentleman such as all civilized communities delighted to honor. He was capable, honest and enlightened. Mr. Hamill in closing declared the party was corrupt, and they proved the charge. He knew personally the leaders in the movement for the purification of the Republican party, and he knew them to be honest and earnest men. And they now said their recent defeat was due to money.

The victory of the regular Republican party with being self-accused of incompetence and corporation ownership. The Colbyites, the best people in the party, had boldly declared the party was corrupt

MRS. LOWRY PRESIDENT

Mrs. Herring's Successor is Chosen by the Monday Afternoon Club.

DELEGATES SELECTED

Resolutions On Death of Mrs. Mason W. Tyler Adopted — Papers Read by Mrs. White and Miss Osgood.

An unusual feature of the programme of the Monday Afternoon Club at this season was the election of a president at its meeting Monday afternoon at the Casino. This action was made necessary by the resignation of Mrs. Frank O. Herring, who will spend the winter with her husband in the Adirondacks. One of the vice presidents, Mrs. James E. Joy, presided. The result of the ballot was the unanimous election of Mrs. Robert Lowry, whose previous term of office for two years' length, expired in May, 1905. Mrs. Lowry gracefully accepted the position with a few words of thanks.

Resolutions were adopted in recognition of the worth of the late Mrs. Mason W. Tyler, a valued member of the club. An expression was given to the club's appreciation of the services of the corresponding secretary, Miss Julia Seribner, who is ill in the hospital. The expression of sympathy to her included the gift of flowers from the club.

Interesting papers were given on "The Plays of Victor Hugo" by Mrs. Henry C. White and "Victor Hugo's Character As Portrayed in His Poetry" by Miss Ellen Louise Osgood. Discussion followed.

Delegates appointed to the State Federation of Women's Clubs meeting at Asbury Park, October 26 and 27, were the president, Mrs. Robert Lowry, Mrs. James E. Joy and Mrs. D. M. Van Vliet. Alternate, Mrs. James W. De Graff.

Hubbard; secretary, William C. Hubbard; finance committee, H. M. Maxson, J. A. Hubbard, D. E. Titsworth, W. M. Stillman; auditing committee, J. D. Spicer, W. M. Stillman, C. C. Chipman; counsel, W. M. Stillman.

The American Sabbath Tract Society has elected these officers:

President, Stephen Babcock, Yonkers, N. Y.; vice-presidents, Jos. A. Hubbard, David E. Titsworth, Plainfield; Charles C. Chipman, Yonkers, N. Y.; corresponding secretary, Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, Plainfield; recording secretary, Arthur L. Titsworth, Plainfield; assistant recording secretary, W. M. Stillman; treasurer, Frank J. Hubbard, Plainfield.

Park Club Reception.

Invitations have been sent out by the Park Club for its opening reception on Thursday evening, October 25, at 8:30 o'clock. An entertainment will be given at 9 o'clock and dancing will begin at 11 o'clock.

CHOIR GUILD FORMED BY EPISCOPALIANS

TO INCLUDE CHOIRS OF CHURCHES IN UNION AND SOMERSET COUNTIES.

For the purpose of developing choir singing in the Episcopal churches and interesting singers in the study of high-class music, the rendition of which is possible only by large choirs, the Episcopal Choir Guild was organized Monday. The meeting was held in the office of Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson, in Grace church parish house. There was a good attendance and considerable interest was shown in the new organization.

At present the guild includes Grace and St. Stephen's churches, of this city, and Holy Cross church, of North Plainfield. It is proposed to admit into membership the choirs of Episcopal churches of Union and Somerset counties as they make application.

It is also proposed to hold the first musical service at the Feast of the Ascension next year and the time for holding rehearsals will be fixed by the music committee, composed of William E. MacClymont, organist of Grace church; Frederick Lacey, of St. Stephen's church, and Organist Luhr, of the Holy Cross church.

Rev. John H. Egar, of North Plainfield, was elected president of the guild, William E. MacClymont the precentor, and Rev. A. R. Peck, of St. Stephen's church, secretary and treasurer. The guild will meet subject to the call of the president.

MRS. DAVIS' FUNERAL.

Service at Home of Mrs. J. O. Stevens Largely Attended.

The funeral of Mrs. Louisa P. Davis, widow of P. Davenport Davis, was held Monday afternoon at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. O. Stevens, of Clinton avenue. It was conducted by Rev. George A. Warner, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, and was attended by a large gathering of relatives and friends.

A quartette composed of Miss Edith Boice, Mrs. Louis O. Barton, E. E. Runyon and William N. Runyon sang several selections. There was a profusion of floral tributes from friends, many of them being set pieces.

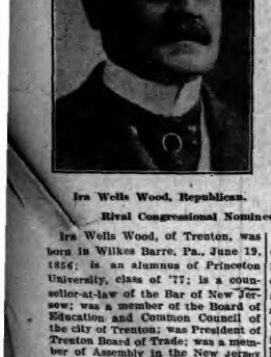
Interment was made in Hillside cemetery, the pall bears being six grandchildren, George O. Stevens, Malcolm Davis, Archibald, Maxwell, Paul and Hugh Brakeley.

BOOK CLUB ELECTS.

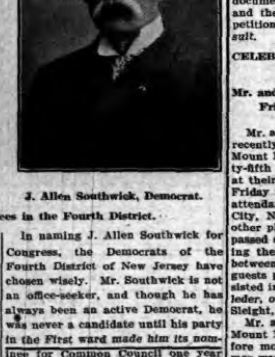
W. L. C. Glenney Chosen Secretary-Treasurer.

The annual meeting of the Watchung Book Club was held Monday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Yates, of Kensington avenue, when arrangements were perfected and officers elected for the coming year. The club, whose membership is limited to twenty-five, purchases a certain number of books each year and these are exchanged among the members. The club was organized four years ago and it has but one officer, W. L. C. Glenney, secretary and treasurer, and an executive committee consisting of two men and two women.

Mr. Glenney was re-elected secretary and treasurer last night and Dr. W. H. Murray, Henry B. Newhall, Mrs. John Doul Miller and Mrs. J. S. Zelie were chosen as an executive committee.



Ira Wells Wood, Republican.



J. Allen Southwick, Democrat.

Rival Congressional Nominees in the Fourth District.

Ira Wells Wood, of Trenton, was born in Wilkes Barre, Pa., June 19, 1856; is an alumnus of Princeton University, class of '77; is a counsellor-at-law of the Bar of New Jersey; was a member of the Board of Education and Common Council of the city of Trenton; was President of Trenton Board of Trade; was a member of Assembly in the New Jersey Legislature, 1899 and 1900; was appointed by Governor Murphy a Commissioner for New Jersey to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition; was elected to fill the vacancy in the Fifty-ninth Congress caused by the resignation of the Hon. William M. Lanning, who was appointed United States District Judge for the District of New Jersey, vice Hon. Andrew Kirkpatrick, deceased, and also for the full term in the Fifty-ninth Congress.

In naming J. Allen Southwick for Congress, the Democrats of the Fourth District of New Jersey have chosen wisely. Mr. Southwick is not an office-seeker, and though he has always been an active Democrat, he was never a candidate until his party in the First ward made him its nominee for Common Council one year ago. Then, as now, he fought the man, and the man as an American patriot responded promptly to the call.

Mr. Southwick's Democracy is not of the questionable variety denominated Democracy because of its opposition to the party in power. His democracy with him stands for certain well defined governmental policies outlined by Jefferson and defended by all true Democrats from that day to this.

"WORST BOY" CONFINED

David Freedman Sent to the Reform School at Jamesburg.

ONLY 12, BUT A TERROR

Has a Long String of Crimes, Including Horse-Thievery and Burglary to His Credit.

Twelve years old and glorying in his crimes, David Freedman, rated by the police as the worst boy in Plainfield, has been committed to the Reform school at Jamesburg by Judge Atwater.

Freedman is said by the police to be a perfect type of degeneracy. For years he has been leading work for them, stealing at every opportunity, and shrinking from nothing in the way of thievery. He stole horses several times with the cunning daring of old rustlers, and burglary seemed like literal child's play to him.

Several times Chief Kiely was on the point of having him sent away, but his mother, Mrs. Lena Freedman, begged successfully to have him saved. She herself, however, was finally accounted one of the worst influences by which the boy could be subjected, and after her place had become an object of constant police surveillance and she was convicted of running a speakeasy, her influence as a saving factor in the boy's case was lost.

The boy himself seems to be a hopelessly instinctive criminal. He has the appearance of a dull boy, but into his eyes and his speech flash, every little while, a hint of the slyness and cunning that mark his police record. At no time has he shown either a realization of moral wrong or concern over the consequences of his acts.

Since his incarceration in the county jail Freedman, as if not realizing the serious nature of his offenses, has confessed to having some months ago entered and attempted to rob a coal dealer's office here. He says that assisted by a companion of about his own age he effected an entrance by smashing in the panel of a door with an ax. Evidently with much pride, he told how he ransacked the back room of a real estate office without being detected, the proprietor being seated at his desk in the front office while he was at work. In order to deaden his footfalls he said he took the precaution to wear stockings outside of his shoes.

"When that boys grows up he will probably be as thorough a crook as any police wants to handle," said Chief Kiely commenting on him.

"REV." JONES SONSUITED; PASTOR'S SALARY CASE.

Failed in Attempt to Recover Alleged Claim from Calvary Baptist Church.

Because of his failure to produce a copy of an alleged contract in writing, which he claimed existed between the Calvary Baptist church and the late pastor, Rev. Scott Wallace, "Rev." George Jones, a step-son of the dead pastor, was non-suited at Elizabeth Monday. The action was brought by Mr. Jones against the church to recover $1,918, which he claimed it owed his step-father. H. C. Runyon, Esq., was counsel for the church and assisting him was W. S. Angleman, Esq.

"Deacon" Spencer Conway was the first witness called and he maintained that there was a written contract between the church and the late pastor, Rev. Scott Wallace. He said that he was chairman of the board of trustees at the time and was sure of it, but when asked to produce the document he was unable to do so and the court promptly granted the petition of the defendant for a non-suit.

CELEBRATE SILVER WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

Mr. and Mrs. Harris Entertain Fifty Friends—Enjoying a Large Inheritance.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester B. Harris, who recently removed to Plainfield from Mount Pleasant, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding at their home on West Front street, Friday night. Fifty friends were in attendance from New York, Jersey City, Newark, South Plainfield and other places, and several hours were pleasantly delightfully. During the evening there was an exchange of gifts between Mr. and Mrs. Harris and the guests present. Mrs. Harris was assisted in receiving by Miss Lizzie Soleder, of Jersey City, and Mrs. Kitty Sleight, of Greenville.

Mr. and Mrs. Harris resided at Mount Pleasant for eleven years before moving to Plainfield. The former was for many years a gauger in the government service but is now living a retired life, having recently inherited a large fortune from relatives. Mrs. Harris has also received large bequests from relatives and the combined amounts reach six figures.

Engagement Announced.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Stewart, of West Seventh street, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Elizabeth Stewart, to William Fleet Tallaferro, of New York.

PROPERTY OWNERS WANT BRIDGE ON DUER STREET

FREEHOLDERS TO BE ASKED TO BUILD ONE OVER STONY BROOK.

Property owners on the upper part of Duer street which was recently accepted by the borough, are circulating a petition for presentation to the Somerset county Board of Freeholders, asking that a bridge be erected on that thoroughfare over Stony brook. The steam crosses at a point just above Greenbrook and at the present time is practically impassable owing to the need of an adequate structure. The street has been placed in first class condition and the section is rapidly building up.

Elston M. French has taken the initiative in the matter and a large number of names have already been secured. It is hoped to have the petition in shape so that it can be in the hands of the freeholders at the next regular meeting. It is said that the members of the board have been broached on the subject and feel inclined to grant the request when it is formally received.

He Knew.

A young gentleman with an unmusical voice insisted upon singing at a social gathering.

"What does he call that?" inquired a disgusted guest.

"The Tempest,' I think," answered another.

"Don't be larmed," said an old sea captain present. "That's no tempest. It is only a squall, and will soon be over."—London Tit Bits.

Modest Fellow.

"Your friend Pompus has been writing a lot of letters to the papers denouncing all these public abuses. He signs them all 'Vox Populi.'"

"You don't say! It's a wonder he doesn't sign his own name. He's that sort of man."

"Yes, but he says he's afraid if he did the public would come to his house and serenade him, and he dislikes that sort of thing."—Philadelphia Press.

JUSTICE FORT AS EDITOR

Got Out Lakewood Paper During His Son's Honeymoon.

HIS HUMOROUS NOTICE

Printer's Devil Shows His Disregard of Judicial Dignity— An Old Timer.

Supreme Court Justice J. Franklin Fort temporarily abandoned his judicial duties last week to take up the profession of editing a newspaper and with somewhat doubtful but withal interesting results at least to his son, who is the real editor of the paper his distinguished father was monkeying with.

It is scarcely probable, in view of the results, that Leslie R. Fort, editor of the Times and Journal of Lakewood, will leave the affairs of his paper in charge of his father.

When Justice Fort arrived at the State House after his short career as editor and walked into the conference room of the Court of Errors and Appeals he was in high glee and it was not long before he gave his associates on the bench an account of his brief journalistic career.

The Times and Journal is a weekly. Justice Fort went to Lakewood and climbed upon the editorial tripod. From all accounts, the whole office shivered for an hour until they got used to him. The "devil" regained sanity first.

"Copy!" he shouted from the composing room door.

"Copy for what?" asked Justice Fort.

"Editorial copy, and get a move on, too," said the boy from force of habit, forgetting whom he was addressing.

Justice Fort thought a great while and wrote a little. He was not in a serious turn of mind and informed the readers, in a humorous vein, that the paper might be a little dull this issue, and asked that the dullness or other shortcoming be excused, as the real editor had been married and was away on his wedding trip when the office "devil" demanded editorial copy.

When Justice Fort viewed his handiwork he was pleased—so much so that he sent for the foreman and instructed him to have the notice set up in the most conspicuous type in the establishment. He was informed that it would appear in "12-point."

Justice Fort told the other judges that he did not know exactly what 12-point was, but was assured that it could be read without the aid of a magnifying glass. When Editor Fort receives a copy of the last issue of the Times and Journal he will recognize the fine hand of his father in a notice at the head of the editorial page, which was printed in big type, so large as to be highly suggestive of the "yellows." It read:

"Married—The editor of this paper this week on Wednesday. As he is away as this issue comes from the press, if there are any errors they must be charged to the printer's devil, as must this paper, which is not written by, or with, the approval of that same editor. If we are discharged for this presumptuousness, we ask for the condolence of the public."

In his younger days Judge Fort owned the Newark Morning Times, but he did not like journalism so well as law, and sold the paper.

MRS. HALLOCK DEAD AT AGE OF SEVENTY-THREE.

Mother of Mayor Jenkins' Wife Passes Away After Two Months Illness.

Mrs. Charlotte E. Hallock, widow of James Hallock and daughter of Mary and the late Issac M. Mead, died last Monday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. O. L. Jenkins, of East Front street. She had been ill for the past two months with a complication of troubles.

Mrs. Hallock was seventy-three years of age and had been a local resident the greater part of the time. Her husband was for many years teacher of penmanship in the city schools and both were widely acquainted. She was a member of the First M. E. church and was always interested in religious work.

Mrs. Hallock is survived by another daughter beside Mrs. Jenkins, Mrs. W. H. Bryant, of New York, and four sons, George and Willard Hallock, of this city; Fletcher Hallock, of Pittsburg, and Dr. Frank Hallock, who is now abroad. Mrs. Hallock's mother, Mrs. Mead, resides at Dr. Jenkins' home and is in her ninety-third year.

A Wedding Gown.

Make the wedding gown of net over taffeta with full skirt of the former slightly gathered at belt. Put three wide tucks above hem. Make it long and sweeping. Drape blouse over tight silk lining in sprplice effect; run with bands of white satin ribbon. Put in a deep yoke, with stock of Val. lace and finish edges with pleating of lace and ribbon. Add two large white satin rosettes at point of surplice. Make sleeves quite wide and loose cut circular and edged with pleatings. Under this put a tight elbow sleeve finished with scarf of satin. Make fourinch belt of satin ribbon laid in folds and feather boned front and back.

MOTORISTS TO DEMAND CHANGES IN AUTO LAW

WHILE NEW BILL HAS MANY GOOD POINTS IT IS FAR FROM SATISFACTORY.

Despite all denials there is every reason to believe that the automobile people from this section of the country will combine their forces during the coming winter in an effort to compel the Legislature to make some change in the automobile law so that it will be less drastic. The principal question among the enthusiasts is just what they may demand shall be stricken out in reason and justice.

There is practically no possibility that any pressure, however great, could induce the Legislature to change all the provisions of the motor vehicle act, so it remains merely to decide what the motorists may with reason and a fair show of success ask of the lawmakers.

The drivers of automobiles in this State are not satisfied with the law as it now stands, and they have a right to demand that certain changes be made in it. No one would be willing to say that the Freilnghuysen law has proved an utter failure, but it has without doubt developed some weaknesses that were unforseen, the law does not so provide for its own enforcement as to require that every motorist passing through the State be licensed under its provisions, and herein lies one of its gravest defects.

For a law to make a complete success, the users at least make certain of the carrying out of its own provisions, or it might as well not be on the statute books. The Freilnghuysen law has failed in this, and the fault must be remedied if there is to be any real enforcement of its other provisions. This licensing of all cars is practically the cornerstone of the law. Through it the State obtains a hold upon the motorist that will restrain him from committing an act of recklessness and then leaving the State without a chance to make pay for his lawbreaking.

Under the present state of affairs a motorist may place a number pad on his machine and go on his way, practically without fear of arrest for violation of a section of the law for which the most severe penalty is provided, and this condition will remain so long as the motorist may equip himself with number pads, purchasable at any garage and about which there is no uniformity.

No motorist ever thinks of entering the bounaries of Pennsylvania without first procuring a license. The reason is simple. In Pennsylvania the licenses and the pads as well are furnished by the State. These pads, which the motorist must at all times display prominently on his machine, are uniform and distinctive in design. It is a misdemeanor for any person, aside from the proper State officials, to manufacture these pads, and their design is so different than that of any other that any policeman may tell at a glance whether or not the machine is properly registered.

Then there is provided that a new license must be obtained every year. In 1906, for instance, the pads were of blue enamel with the letters "1906" prominently displayed. The pads which motorists must obtain in 1907 are to be of red enamel, so there will be one distinct thought in the mind of any officer as to whether the Pennsylvania automobilist is properly registered.

The advantages of this system are manifold. If motorists are to be registered—and there are now few who cannot really see the logic in it—the law should provide for uniformity, so that the dishonest motorist as well as the conscientious one will be compelled to register his machine.

As to the reason whether the State can justly tax the automibility more than a nominal fee for registration, and as to the restricting of speed by the law, that is another story.

MME. MODJESKA PLAYS LAST LOCAL PERFORMANCE.

Great Polish Actress Presents "Macbeth" as Her Farewell.

Mme. Helene Modjeska, who in her best days was considered one of the foremost actresses in the country, bade farewell to Plainfield Monday in one of the performances that is to mark her retirement from the stage. She chose "Macbeth," in which she has appeared thousands of times, as her vehicle and her work shows that advancing age has placed its hand lightly upon her. She played "Lady Macbeth" with much of her old time spirit and the large audience frequently brought her before the footlights to bow acknowledgment of their appreciation.

Modjeska's supporting company has been selected with much judgment and both Charles D. Herman as "Macbeth" and Frederick Montagu as "Macduff" won deserved applause. The costumes and scenic equipment as provided by Manager Jules Murry for the production were handsome and appropriate.

AN AGED FRIEND DEAD

Miss Catherine Webster a Venerable Spinster Dies After a Week's Illness.

LEAVES A FORTUNE

Nearest Relatives Are Cousins—Funeral Services Friday Afternoon at Late Home.

Miss Catherine Webster, one of the oldest members of the Religious Society of Friends in this city, died at her home in East Second street, Monday afternoon at 4:45 o'clock, following an illness of about one week. She attended the meeting of Friends on Sunday, October 7, after which she visited Hillside cemetery. There she contracted a cold which undoubtedly caused her death. During the past two days she was unconscious.

Miss Webster was a remarkably active woman for one of her years. She was born in a house at Hillside and Watchung avenues, nearly eighty-two years ago. Her parents were Martha Webster and Catherine R. Vail. Her mother died three weeks after she was born and her father was killed two years later. Miss Webster then lived with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Webster, in the old home in which she was born until twelve years ago, when she moved to the house in which she died.

During her life Miss Webster made eight trips to California, where nearly all of her near relatives reside, and she always took the journey across the continent alone. Her last trip to the Pacific Coast was about three years ago. Up to within the last few days of her death Miss Webster's mind was as clear and active as at any time during her life. For many years Miss Mary Terry was her companion.

Miss Webster was a birthright member of the Religious Society of Friends and was a regular attendant at the Plainfield Meeting. She was a generous contributor to charity, and especially to needy members of the Society of Friends. Her interest was taken by her in the Children's Home and in Muhlenberg Hospital. She was considered one of the wealthiest Friends in New Jersey, owning much property here. It is said that her estate is worth over $100,000.

Her nearest relative in this city is Miss Agnes Vail, daughter of the late Mahlon Vail, who is a first cousin. Edward and Walter Vail, the former of Arizona and the latter of Los Angeles, brothers of Miss Vail, bear the same relationship. She also has numerous second and third cousins in California.

The funeral services will be held from the late residence on East Second street, Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock and interment will be in the Friends cemetery. W. W. Williams, a leader in the Plainfield Meeting, will probably have charge of the service.

TRAVELS ALONE AT 71.

Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Schomp Are a Hardy Couple.

Although over 71 years old, Mrs. G. D. Schomp, sister of C. Q. Dolliver, of Fairview avenue, started all alone on her way back to her home in Kansas Monday, after a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Dolliver.

Mr. and Mrs. Schomp came East four months ago, and have been spending that time in visiting friends and relatives in Somerset and Hunterdon counties. Mr. Schomp is an old Somerset resident. A son, Victor Schomp, lives in New Market. A son-in-law, John Brewer, lives on Stone street.

Mr. Schomp is a representative of the American Bible Society, and will sail, on its business, for Porto Rico Saturday. He was in Porto Rico on the same mission three years ago. He joined the Bible Society forces six years ago, and, despite his great age, learned the Spanish language to widen the field of his work.

Gift of Cotton Plants.

Counsellor Nelson Runyon received by express from Anderson, S. C., Saturday, a box of cotton plants loaded with buds and blossoms. They were sent him by John M. Hubbard, a jeweler in that city, and are considered among the best specimens that have been seen in Plainfield. Mr. Runyon and Mr. Hubbard met and became fast friends while both were spending their vacations at Asbury Park the past summer.

Big Stars Coming.

Time is being held at the New Plainfield for Richard Mansfield, Maude Adams, Anna Held and several other stars of equal prominence. Manager Counihan has also been promised the first performance outside of New York of Richard Carle in "The Spring Chicken."

Special Delivery.

Mrs. Uptowne—I purchased some socks and a drum for my boy. How does it happen that you have brought only the drum?

Driver—You see, ma'am, I'm the driver of the band wagon; the socks will come along in the hose cart.—Woman's Home Companion for October.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

CUT IN LIGHTING RATES AND TROLLEY FARES

Public Service Corporation Makes Substantial Reductions to All Its Patrons.

EFFECTIVE ON JAN. 1

Schedule Applies to Five Year Contract for Gas and Electricity—Reasons for the Decrease In Price.

The Public Service Corporation makes an important announcement today of a reduction in electricity and gas rates and trolley fares, it being the result of the completion of extensions, betterment, rebuilding and consolidation of electric and gas plants and trolley lines. The changes relate to a reduction in public and commercial electric rates and in the price of gas to the $1 standard; also providing for the extension of the five cent fare zone and transfer system of the street railway department. The changes are to take effect January 1, 1908.

Resolutions have been adopted by the Board of Directors authorizing the president, Thomas N. McCarter, to announce that all biddings after January 1, 1908, on renewals of public are lighting contracts shall be made according to the following schedule for five year contract:

In cities of the first-class, a maximum rate of $75 a year for each light of 2,000 candle power. In all other cities, including Plainfield, a maximum rate of $80 and in all municipalities other than cities, including North Plainfield, a maximum rate of $85. The base rate for commercial light and power shall be reduced to ten cents per kilowatt hour throughout territory served by the company and subsidiary companies, except Bergen county, where the rate shall be reduced to twelve cents and to ten cents in 1910. It has also been decided that in such municipalities where the price of gas exceeds $1 net per thousand cubic feet the price shall be reduced to that price, and in the meantime the annual reduction of five cents per thousand cubic feet shall continue.

The announcement is made at this time because of the approaching election when several municipalities will vote to authorize the adoption of municipal lighting plants. The company believes such action undesirable, as it considers the present rates very satisfactory and when the new schedule is put in effect, the company will challenge comparison of its rates with those of any other company.

The re-arrangement of the trolley fares provide for a five cent fare from any point in Hudson county to any point in that county reached by the lines of the company on a continuous trip, with a single transfer. From any point in Hudson county to any point in Essex county, (except Eagle Rock, Caldwell and Verona), reached by the lines of the company on a continuous trip, with a single transfer in each county, and conversely, ten cents. From any point in Essex county, (except Eagle Rock, Caldwell and Verona,) on a continuous trip, with a single transfer, to any point in Union county, as far west as Cranford, and conversely, ten cents. From any point in Hudson county with a single transfer on a continuous trip, to any point in Union county, as far west as Cranford, and conversely, fifteen cents. At the time the acquisition by the Public Service Corporation of the nine different street railway companies, now comprising its street railway department, no company transferred with any other company; now all the companies transfer at all intersecting points. The change in rates of fare will go into effect November 1, 1906.

The company also declares that it is doing all that is possible to abate the smoke nuisance from the chimneys of its plants and pledges to abolish it as soon as practical.

Jury Cases On.

Isaac Lockman's suit against Ann Kane, for $100, was started before Judge Swift and a jury in the District Court this forenoon. It was still on at 2 o'clock. Lockman sues for the recovery of a payment on a piece of property, title to which he claims was found to be imperfect. F. J. Blatz is his counsel. William G. De Meza is the defendant's lawyer.

Contract Case Settled.

The contract suit of William Keivie against Charles Fulmer, which was to have come up in the District Court this morning, has been settled. Francis J. Blatz, for the plaintiff, and Charles A. McNabb, for the defendant, were the opposing lawyers.

STEELE FOR ASSEMBLY IN PLACE OF STEVENS

HE IS SELECTED AS DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE IN SOMERSET COUNTY.

Former Prosecutor William V. Steele, of Somerville, was selected yesterday to take the place on the Democratic ticket of Somerset county made vacant by the refusal of R. L. Stevens, of Bernards, to accept the nomination for Assembly. Mr. Steele was chosen unanimously by the convention's committee on vacancies, which was composed of David J. Carney, chairman, of North Plainfield, and F. C. Setro and T. J. Ryan.

Mr. Steele is one of the best known men in Somerset county. For years he has been active in the councils of his party and has always been loyal to the ticket. At present he is serving as Federal commissioner in bankruptcy for New Jersey. He has made many friends throughout the State and particularly in Somerset county. It is said that Mr. Steele has a very good chance of election. His father was a Congressman.

KNACKER'S WAGON HIT.

Glaser Tumbled Off But Load Wasn't Injured.

On its way to the glue and fertilizer center with a subject, the dead horse wagon of Theodore Glaser, of Alton, was struck by a Netherwood trolley car on Richmond street, near Sixth street, at 10:15 o'clock last night. Glaser, who was driving, was thrown off and buried, and the pole of his wagon was broken. The contents of the cart were not damaged.

Glaser complained of severe pains in his left leg, and a citizen rang up the police patrol. Glaser was removed to headquarters, where Dr. A. H. Dundon examined him. The doctor said there was nothing much the matter with him, and sent him home in a hack. One of Glaser's men removed the dead horse later.

H. Warman was the motorman of the car. He claims Glaser drew across the track in front of him.

Friendship Lodge.

Friendship Lodge, No. 4, Daughters of Rebekah, met last night, received two applications, elected two new members and two candidates were initiated by the new degree team. The initiatory work was highly praised by the captain of the team, the officers of which are: Noble grand, Mrs. Mary Anne Ford; vice-grand, Mrs. Mary Ludgate; conductor, Mrs. arah Higgins; chaplain, Mrs. Annie Kettering; past noble grand, Mrs. Latourette; banner bearers, Mrs. Elizabeth VanFleet, Mrs. Welsh, Mrs. Rittenhouse and Mrs. Jennie Berdan. Tomorrow night the lodge will hold a sociable at the home of Mrs. Peter VanFleet, on Liberty street.

Democratic Meeting in Elizabeth.

The Democratic candidates will be present and address a meeting of voters to be held at Democratic headquarters, 78 Broad street, Elizabeth, Friday night. The Union County Democratic Committee will have a meeting preceding the public gathering. County Chairman Judge Owen P. Mahon will preside at the mass meeting and among the speakers will be James E. Martine, candidate for Congress. The Assembly candidates will also speak.

Peddler's Misrepresent.

Alfonso Saranso, an Italian peddler, was arrested yesterday for selling without a license. When he was arraigned before Judge Runyon this morning, the latter suspended sentence, but he said that so much misrepresentation was being done by peddlers about town the time was fast approaching when fines would be the rule.

Fred Randolph Fined.

A fine of $3 was imposed on "talkative" Fred Randolph in the borough court, last night. He was also warned by Mayor Smalley to confine his pinfeasts and noisy orations to some other place beside North Plainfield, otherwise he might have to stand higher rates.

MISS SERRELL A BRIDE

Pretty Romance That Began in Hospital Culminates at the Altar.

WEDS A WESTERN MAN

Ormsbee Briggs, of Milwaukee, the Groom—Ceremony at Home of Bride's Aunt.

Miss Ella Harold Serrell, of this city, and William Ormsbee Briggs, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, were married last evening at the home of the bride's aunt, Miss Ella Serrell, of Plainfield avenue, in the presence of about one hundred guests from New York, Brooklyn, Milwaukee, Passaic and this city. Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, pastor of the First Baptist church, of which the bride is a member, performed the ceremony.

The bride was attended by her two sisters, Miss Minnie B. Serrell and Miss Josephine I. Serrell, as bridesmaids. Dr. Norman H. Pronson was the best man and the ushers were Edgar J. Skelle, of Passaic, and Chas. Burkett, of Milwaukee.

As the guests arrived they were received by Miss Serrell, the bride's aunt, Miss Ella Serrell, a sister of the former. While the orchestra seated in the inclosed porch, was playing the "Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin, the bridal party descended the stairway and entered the parlor. The bride was accompanied by her brother, Frederick E. Serrell. The ceremony was performed in front of a large bank of palms, where an improvised altar was placed. The Episcopal form of service was used, and the bride was given in marriage by her aunt, Miss Serrell.

The bride's gown was of white messaline satin, trimmed with a Duchesse lace Bertha, and she carried a shower bouquet of lilies-of-the-valley and bride roses. The bridesmaids were dressed in white silk chiffon and they carried chrysanthemums.

After the ceremony supper was served. Later Mr. and Mrs. Briggs departed for a honeymoon trip, which will terminate at Milwaukee, where they will reside.

The home was very prettily decorated throughout with smilax and clematis, there being a profusion of the vine arranged along the main stairway and about the table in the dining room, in which the supper was served.

The bride was the recipient of a wealth of gifts of great value, including silverware, cut-glass, linen and bric-a-brac. There were gifts from London, Paris, and Seattle, Washington, and various nearby points. The groom's gift to the bride was a diamond crescent. There were also favors for the bridesmaids, best man and ushers.

The marriage is the culmination of a romance, which began about a year ago, when the bride was a pupil nurse at Muhlenberg hospital. Mr. Briggs, who was obliged to undergo an operation, expressed a wish that his friend, Dr. Norman H. Prqbasco, perform it. He became a patient at the hospital and Miss Serrell was selected by the matron as his special nurse. Their acquaintance grew into friendship and led to their betrothal and marriage. Mr. Briggs after returning home, visited Miss Serrell several times and last summer she spent a number of weeks in Milwaukee.

Mr. Briggs is the general agent for the New York Life Insurance Company at Milwaukee, and occupies a high social position in that city. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Briggs, of Briggsville, Wis., and the family is wealthy and highly respected.

Bank Clerks' Bowling League.

The prospects are very bright for a big season at the Casino. Already Major Maze Edwards is besieged with various bowling clubs and other societies for dates, while a number of private receptions will be given. It is likely that the bank clerks of the city will soon organize a league and make arrangements to use the Casino alleys. Similar bowling clubs have been organized in the larger cities among the bank clerks and already plans are underway for an organization here. H. H. Coward, of the City National Bank, formerly a bowler, is at the head of the movement.

Letter-Carrier Resigns.

Owing to a gradually defective vision, Letter-Carrier Edward T. Dunn has tendered his resignation to Postmaster E. H. Bird to take effect within a short time. Mr. Dunn has been employed as a letter-carrier for a number of years and has always been regular and faithful to his duties, in rain or shine he has always been at his post and he will be greatly missed by his fellow-employes. He has been in poor health for some time and his eye-sight has given him considerable trouble.

RELIEF ASSOCIATION FOR CONSOLIDATION

VOTES TO MERGE ORGANIZATION WITH ORGANIZED AID ASSOCIATION.

The Plainfield Relief Association at its annual meeting held at the rooms on West Front street, unanimously decided to consolidate the association with that of the Organized Aid Association. The same question will be considered by the Organized Aid Association at its annual meeting the first week in November and if decided favorably then the two associations will arrange for a meeting to perfect the details of consolidation and election of officers.

The various reports were presented at the meeting this morning. Miss Pierson, the secretary, giving a review of the past year's work, showing the progress. The report of the visitor showed that 582 visits were made and eighty-two families assisted. Among those helped were eight nationalities, German, Polish, Jew, Swedes, Swiss, American, Italians and colored.

Through the courtesy of the Plainfield Retail Druggists' Association free drugs and medicines were supplied to the association, which was greatly appreciated. Another source of help was the distribution of useful articles and toys to 450 children and the entertainment of 500 children on December 23 at Reform Hall by the Plainfield Lodge of Elks.

FANWOOD COUNCIL WILL NOT SURRENDER CHARTER.

Fanwood Royal Arcanum Organization Votes to Continue Its Existence.

Fanwood Council, No. 744, Royal Arcanum, held an important meeting at Fanwood, last night, when the question of disbanding or continuing the lodge was thoroughly discussed. It was finally decided to continue and the old-time enthusiasm was shown by the large body of members out.

For two months it has been almost impossible for the Council to transact its regular business, owing to the non-attendance of the members. Finally, it was decided to issue a special call for a meeting last night to decide whether the Council should surrender its charter and the members join either Fireside Council, of Westfield; Plainfield or Greenbrook Councils, of Plainfield.

New interest was manifested, the financial condition was shown to be excellent and the only thing to bet met was the dues of non-attending members. Fanwood Council was hit very hard by the change in the rate and plan of insurance. It was enjoying an era of prosperity, its membership having increased 12 per cent. From a membership of 122 it dropped to sixty-seven, due to the change of rates and the attendance grew smaller each week. During the evening there was an address by Chairman Weiss, of the Grand Council good of the order committee.

Funeral of T. A. Oakley.

The funeral of Thomas Armitage Oakley, who died suddenly in New York, Saturday, was held at his late home on West Fourth street, yesterday afternoon. It was conducted by Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, pastor of the First Baptist church, and was attended by a gathering of relatives and friends, which included business associates. The pall-bearers were F. M. Robbins, John Sergeant, Herman Fritz and W. J. Ladd, all connected with the Sergeant Manufacturing Company, New York. Interment was made at Hillside.

Mr. Rose's Sad Mule.

Martin A. Rose, of Terrill road, is hunting for a mule. The mule he is looking for is the mate of one he bought at an auction at Lambert's Mills last week. The team had never been separated before, and Mr. Rose's purchase has been hee-hawing disconsolately, as is the way of mules, ever since, keeping Mr. Rose and all his neighbors on edge. He wants to buy the mule, but he can't locate the purchaser. Probably the other mule is carrying on in the same way, and its owner is longing for the relief Mr. Rose can offer.

Real Estate Agent Loses Suit.

William Jeffrey, the real estate agent, failed in an action to recover a commission alleged to be due on a real estate deal from Rosa Preston, in the District Court this morning. The case was tried before Judge Addison Swift, who sat in Judge Newcorn's place. Charles A. Reed, the defendant's lawyer, secured a non-suit.

WHEELER IS UNDER BAIL

Counsel Furnishes $1,000 Bond to Insure His Appearance Before Grand Jury.

CONFLICTING STORIES

Tale of Non-Union Men Makes Jacobson the Aggressor—In Mosher's Court.

Eugene Wheeler, who shot Alexander G. Aitken in the groin in a quarrel between union and non-union men on East Second street Saturday night, was held, yesterday afternoon, for the grand jury, Justice Mosher, before whom the examination took place, fixed bail at $1,000. It was furnished by the prisoner's counsel, G. W. V. Moy.

Wheeler and his witnesses told a story diametrically opposed to that told by the complainant and Arthur Jacobson, the special agent, after the shooting. Wheeler's witnesses were Charles Gordon, Geo. A. Nelson and F. W. Fenton, fellow-strike breakers at the Scott shop, who were with Wheeler when the row began. According to their account, in which all of them agreed in the essentials, Jacobson, Aitkes and other union men halted them on East Second street. Jacobson is alleged to have attacked Gordon, who, as he admits himself, was drunk. Wheeler, it was alleged, interfered against an assault on a drunken man, and was assailed himself. It was said that he was thrown down and kicked, and that only then, after warning his assailants to let him up, he drew his revolver. He swore that he fired into the ground, and that Aitken pulled the revolver toward himself in seizing it from him. Aitken, he testified, had a knife in his hand at the time.

Charles Beerman, seventeen years old, who works in Scott's and knows Wheeler, saw the fight from the lunch wagon, and he corroborated the story of the non-union men as to Jacobson's aggressions.

Jacobson and Aitken stuck to their original story of the trouble, laying all the blame for it on the non-union men. Francis J. Blatz appeared for them, opposing Mr. Moy, the counsel for the prisoner.

The warrants sworn out by Jacobson against Nelson and Gordon the day after the shooting, charging assault, were not served. It has been agreed by both sides that the whole matter, including Jacobson's alleged strong-arm tactics, be laid before the grand jury for action by that body.

WORKMEN'S NEGLIGENCE CAUSES BAD ACCIDENT.

Charles Geer's Rig Plunges Into Unguarded Gas Trench on Park Avenue.

Failure on the part of Public Service employees to place lights along the big gas ditch on Park avenue, Saturday night, caused an accident that all but resulted seriously for Charles Geer, the local horse and carriage dealer, who was driving to ward Plainfield.

Turning out of the way for a large automobile, his horse plunged into the opening, dragging the carriage part way after him. Geer was thrown headlong and beside getting a severe shaking and minor injuries, his costly artificial arm was broken. The horse was imprisoned in the trench and finding that it was impossible to get him out, he went to the nearest residence to telephone for assistance. Captain William Hunt responded with a force of men, bringing block and tackle and the animal was finally lifted to the road. Though no bones were broken it is badly hurt and is unfit for service.

Mr. Geer also telephoned for Craig A. Marsh immediately after the accident and the lawyer was quickly on the scene. He saw that the trench had been left unguarded and was a menace to vehicles. While Geer's horse was being lifted out, one of the company's men came along with lanterns and placed them to warn other drivers. Mr. Marsh will commence suit against the Public Service Corporation in Mr. Geer's behalf.

Scarcity of Pipe May Delay Work.

Even though the Common Council awards the contract for the construction of the southside sanitary sewer within a short time, it will probably not be possible to begin work right away, as it will require some time to get pipe and prepare for the installation of a pumping station. There is scarcely any doubt but that the city will undertake the building of this extension.

Big Line Nearly Completed.

The Harrison Construction Co., of Newark, which has the contract for laying a large gas main for the Public Service Corporation between this city and Camden, has all but about two miles of main laid. There has been some delay owing to the trouble of getting pipe.

GRIGGS DENOUNCES THE AMERICAN SLANDERBUND

SPLENDID CONCERT IN GRACE M. E. SERIES

HIGH-CLASS ARTISTS FURNISH AN ENJOYABLE PROGRAMME.

A large audience in Grace M. E. church, last night, heard a musical and literary concert of unusual excellence. It was the first in a series of three entertainments that have been planned and was keenly enjoyed by a large gathering of music lovers. The artists were Miss Caroline S. Doll, soprano, soloist at the Old First church, Elizabeth; Mrs. Elizabeth Lambert Von Neer, reader; William Nelson Searles, Jr., basso cantante, St. Paul's M. E. church, Newark; Otto Schill, concert violinist; John H. B. Conger, pianist, organist at St. Paul's M. E. church, Newark.

The programme had been arranged with diversity in view and comprised ten numbers in all. They were not sufficient for the audience and hearty applause resulted in numerous encores being given, the artists proving very liberal in this respect. A solo by Mr. Searles, "Blow, Blow Thou Winter Wind," (Cargent), and a violin solo by Schill, his own composition by Mr. Schill, were the favorites and proved the feature contributions of the evening.

Mr. Searles is a singer of power and range and he has the proper conception of expression, all combined making his vocal work a delight. Miss Doll is also an artist of ability, her voice possessing sweetness and strength, and her solos were all too few. Her hearers were loath to let her retire even after she had given unannounced numbers. A duet by her and Mr. Searles, "I Feel Thy Angel Spirit," (Graben-Hoffman), closed the programme and made a very fitting ending.

As a violinist, Mr. Schill has a wide reputation and it was sustained by his renditions last night. He has a technique claimed by few artists of his class and his selections were stamped with individuality. The readings of Mrs. Von Neer were delivered in a happy vein and caused plenty of spontaneous laughter. One of them, "The Actor Out in London Theatre Pit," was the essence of humor and figuratively "brought down the house."

The artists at various times were presented with bouquets of flowers and they evidently appreciated the efforts of the donors. The platform had also been decorated tastefully with autumn foliage.

The next entertainment in the series will be given on December 13 and will be furnished by the Criterion Hand Bell Ringers and Concert Company.

ST. STEPHEN'S PARISH HOUSE ALMOST COMPLETED.

Various Contractors Putting the Last Touches on the Building.

The remodeling of the parish house at St. Stephen's church is nearing completion. The heating system is yet to be installed, but this work will be finished soon. The electricians and the painters have completed their work and the carpenters expect to get through this week. The contractors and the various prices for this work are as follows: Fred H. Bowe, the new auditorium, painting, plumbing, tinning, $2,200; John Leahy, steam-heating plant, $585; John Heesy, painting, $125; Henry H. Apgar, electric light, $100. Mr. Bowe sub-let the plumbing contract to Louis Morel, of Scotch Plains. Mr. Stuart, of Netherwood, had the contract for the mason work.

On the third floor of the house, two of the semi-circular windows have been changed to ordinary two-sash windows, thus adding to the attractiveness and utility of that part of the house. On the second floor, at the rear, two small windows have been cut in the pantry and kitchen of the rector's part of the house. Electricity has been introduced throughout the entire building.

Preparing for Revival.

Special services will be held at the First Baptist church tonight in preparation for the evangelistic services which begin Sunday morning under the direction of Rev. Dr. Wharton. Tonight there will be singing from the new revival hymn books and it is expected that many of those who are to sing in the large chorus choir will be present to learn the hymns. Another similar service will be held Friday night.

Will Visit Orient Chapter.

Jerusalem Chapter, No. 34, R. A. M., will pay a social visit to Orient Chapter, of Brooklyn, on Friday night, November 9. Orient Chapter entertained the local chapter last year in Brooklyn and was afterward entertained here.

Statesman Fiercely Arraigns Hysteria Manufacturers and Eloquently Defends Party Leaders.

A MASTERLY SPEECH

Voorhees Talks for a Few Minutes —Senator Kean On Platform —Ackerman Chairman.

The answering roar to the opening gun of the Democratic campaign in this city sounded at the New Plainfield theatre, last night. The artillery corps was more impressive than that of the Democrats, including, as it did, two ex-governors and a State Senator. And close to the firing line, where it is proper for field marshals occasionally to go, was United States Senator Kean.

Although this happened entirely by accident, the meeting was even more of a one-man affair than the Stevens rally. Practically but one speech was made, former Governor John W. Griggs being the orator. Former Governor Foster M. Voorhees spoke also, but he talked only about seven minutes.

Franklin Murphy sent a telegram of regret at the last moment. None of the party managers knew what had made it impossible for him to come. State Chairman F. O. Briggs, who was to have presided over the meeting, also sent his regrets at a late hour. City Chairman Charles J. Fisk said he knew nothing of Mr. Briggs' change of plans, excepting that he was called suddenly to Norfolk, Va.

The meeting was attended by an audience of about 800. Women were largely in evidence. The house was hung with bunting, and large pictures of Washington, Lincoln, McKinley and Roosevelt inspired the speakers as they looked toward the balcony and the boxes.

The audience was enthusiastic. It applauded the names of party leaders and heroes with warmth and spontaneity; the designation of President Roosevelt as the party leader evoked a sustained burst of applause that lasted for nearly a minute.

The meeting opened promptly at 8 o'clock. Mr. Fisk introduced Senator Ernest R. Ackerman as chairman, in a brief speech. The people desired a clear and sane presentation of the arguments on the issues of the campaign, he said, and that was what it was intended to give them. If they felt that the aims and the promises of the Republican party were what they sympathized with, their ballots were to be cast for the candidates of that party. To give them a clear idea of the issues at stake, the party would lay its case before them frankly and plainly.

Mr. Ackerman introduced Mr. Griggs without loss of time, after the applause that greeted him had died away. Mr. Griggs caught the close attention of his hearers early in his speech, and held it all the way. He spoke for almost an hour and a half, and the audience showed no sign of weariness when he finished. He spoke, as is his custom, without notes, and with no attempt at oratorical flourish.

But one brief reference was made to Congressman Fowler's candidacy. His speech was a defense of the party in New Jersey against the charges of boss control and corporation domination, and a warning against what the speaker termed the national slanderbund. He used a very sharp stick wherewith to poke the muck-rakers, and whacked Senator La Follette with no pretense of gentleness.

The campaign, this year, were entirely local, Mr. Griggs said in opening. There were no national platforms to which the local organizations could pin their faith, but the Kansas Republicans had evolved one which struck him as a model for all communities, both as to brevity and wisdom. It was "Resolved, That we let well enough alone." That was sound sense both as a platform and maxim.

The Republican party had been criticised recently by members with great severity. The criticisms had been made as suggestions of reform. The speaker said he liked the idea of advancement, betterment, but he didn't like to be called a reformer at all times. Reform was the wrong word to apply to some strivings for betterment. There were cases where only imperfections were to be remedied, where the term "reform" was too strong in its implications.

SAYS NO SALOONKEEPER IN AMERICA OBEYS LAWS

Rev. Hervey Wood Makes Some Startling Statements at Endeavor Union Meeting.

REGULATION IS WEAK

According to Speaker, Prohibition is Only Solution—Drinking Among Women Increasing Very Fast.

In defense of the Bishops' Bill and for the purpose of stimulating an interest in the general fight that is being made throughout the State to keep the measure on the statute books, Rev. Hervey Wood, of East Orange, addressed the Christian Endeavorers and others Thursday in the Congregational church. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Plainfield Union of Christian Endeavorers and it was also attended by several pastors of local churches. Fred Lounsbury, Jr., president of the Union, presided and Rev. C. L. Goodrich conducted the opening exercises after which Mr. Wood was introduced.

The speaker's subject was "The Irrisible Conflict Between the Church and the Liquor Traffic." At the outset he explained what he meant by the Church, which was all members of Christ's body, wherever found and who love Christ in sincerity. His definition of the liquor traffic was the sale of liquor in any form.

Mr. Wood described the saloon as a modern institution, distinctly American. He said that abroad they have what are called inns and public houses. In explaining why there should be a conflict between the church and the saloon Mr. Wood alleged the two are diametrically opposed one to another. The saloon stands for all that is vile and bad, he said, while the church stands for all that is good and above all the sanctity of the home, which the saloon threatens to destroy.

Mr. Wood said he believed it is now generally recognized that the works of the devil are the results of the liquor traffic and that it is a detriment to Christianity, that it degrades and shuts a man out of Heaven. He alleged that the Archbishop of Canterbury once told him that the worst enemy of the grand old Church of England was the liquor traffic.

The speaker quoted Dr. White, a leading Baptist clergyman of Atlanta, Ga., who in speaking of the recent uprising between the whites and blacks of that city, attributed the trouble to the liquor traffic, and he also cited an instance of where a Jersey City saloon-keeper committed suicide because of the enforcement of the Bishops' bill. He alleged that it is now recognized that the liquor traffic cannot be properly regulated, but that the proper way to treat it is through prohibition and he believes the time would come when the Government would realize this and adopt laws for the prohibition of it.

He said he believed that the church should drive out the liquor traffic, the same as it has the race track with its gambling from New Jersey. Mr. Wood felt indignant that the people would submit to having the saloon interests dictate to them and tell them what they should and should not do. He asked his audience if it knew any saloon-keeper that respects the laws, declaring that of the proprietors of the 250,000 saloons in the United States not one had any respect for the laws.

Mr. Wood quoted a recent article in the Newark Evening News which said that the German-Americans of the State are going to demand the repeal of the Bishops' bill and that permission be given to have saloons open on Sundays from 1 o'clock in the afternoon until 11 o'clock at night. In arguing against such concessions Mr. Wood cited the good features of the Bishops' bill, which provides that no liquor shall be sold on Sunday and all screens must be removed from the front of saloons that day. He said that the bill was drawn by the bishops of the Episcopal and Catholic churches and intended to preserve the sanctity of the home and he hoped that every effort possible would be made to prevent its repeal.

He deplored what he said was a fact that during the past ten years drinking on the part of women had increased sixty per cent. He declared that ninety per cent. of the saloon keepers are foreigners and if they do not want to abide by the laws of this State or country they can go back to where they come from as the steerage rates are cheap. In speaking in favor of a local option law, he said that forty States now have such a law and he hoped that New Jersey would eventually have such a measure.

Mr. Wood has been engaged to travel throughout New Jersey to speak and work for the Bishops' bill and do what he can to have it remain a law.

CITY JUDGESHIP PLUM

If W. N. Runyon Resigns, W L. Hetfield, J., Likely to Be Appointed.

CANDIDATES LIKELY

Huff, Gallup, H. Runyon and DeMeza Are Also Rounded—Salary $600 a Year.

In the event of his resigning the office on January 1, when according to his plans he will remove from Plainfield, William N. Runyon's successor as city judge of Plainfield is all probability will be Walter L. Hetfield, Jr. That he is a candidate for the place, Mr. Hetfield, himself, denies, but it is a pretty safe forecast to say that he will be appointed. There are others seeking the job already, it is reported, and there is apt to be a lively scramble when the present incumbent's resignation is placed in the hands of the Common Council.

Among those who are said to have their eyes on the position are four other local barristers. Friends of William G. DeMeza have already gotten together to boom him for the place and it is said that they have some promises from politicians to use their influence. Just as hard are the friends of Fred J. Huff working for him, while Carlos Gallup and Harry C. Runyon are both being strongly boomed. There are others who would not refuse an appointment, but so far as can be learned none of them have "seen" the leaders.

Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., is a member of the Union County Board of Elections and is an active party worker. He is classed as a "regular."

The salary attached to the office is $600 per year.

Tribute to Fisk.

According to despatches from Plainfield, N. J., the Republicans of that city have decided upon Mr. Charles J. Fisk, of the well known banking house of Harvey Fisk & Sons, of New York city, as their candidate for Mayor. It is hardly necessary to say that the editor of this paper that no better choice than this could possibly have been made. Mr. Fisk has been a resident of Plainfield since 1885 and has always been active in movement for its welfare, and has always been looked up to and respected by everybody. He is a man of very high standing in the councils of the Republican party, a member of the Union League Club, of New York, of the Republican Club, of the Lawyers' Club, and of various other influential organizations, and is a director of the Delaware and Bound Brook Railroad Company, etc. The announcement of the selection of Mr. Fisk was made by ex-Mayor Alexander Gilbert, chairman of the Republican Advisory Committee, who is himself a banker. It was stated that Mr. Fisk was selected as the only man who could make a formidable opponent to the Colby party. The campaign was one of the hottest ever known in Plainfield, a great deal of personal feeling having been engendered. But with a clean, strong and able man such as Mr. Fisk the indications are that the Republicans will win a sweeping victory. It is but rarely that this paper takes any part in political contests, but on the present occasion it seems to us nothing less than a plain duty to state the facts of the case and to express the opinion that the Republicans of Plainfield will be doing the best and wisest thing possible under the circumstances in giving Mr. Fisk all the support and influence they can possibly bring to bear.—New York Financial and Commercial World.

AMITY ROSE VETERAN

MARCHED WITH PRIZED RELIC.

Gustavus Isaacs Manned Rope of Silver Hose Carriage in Elizabeth Parade.

At the firemen's parade held in Elizabeth October 11, 1906, one of the interesting features was that presented by the Exempt Association of this city, who marched with the "Silver Hose Carriage," formerly belonging to Amity Hose Company, No. 38, of New York city, Volunteer Fire Department.

Gustavus Isaacs, a former member of the famous Amity Hose Company, viewed the most interesting display of the fire apparatus of the land other States, and for a number of blocks "manned the rope" of his old hose carriage, renewing associations of days gone by. He was a member of Amity Hose Company up to the time it was disbanded. He participated in the last parade, in New York city, in 1860, at which the carriage appeared. This was the parade given in honor of the visit of Albert Edward Prince of Wales, now King Edward VII of England.

The Exempt Association of Plainfield are the fortunate custodians of this valuable relic, which as far back as "the fifties" was the pride of the annual parade of the New York volunteer fire department, and was always made one of the principal features in matter of decoration at the annual ball given by the Metropolitan department at the Academy of Music in that city.

ANOTHER CITY PUT IN MAY

Willie Berkowitz Caught Trying to Steal Theatre Money.

BROKE RECENT P

Forged Father's Name On $50 Check and Barely Escaped the Police Station at the Time.

Caught in the act of trying to steal money from the gallery box office at the New Plainfield theatre last night, Willie Berkowitz, a fourteen-year-old forger on parole, was sent to Elizabeth through order by Judge Runyon to await commitment to the Reform School.

Assistant Treasurer Leonce Texier, who has charge of the gallery box office, discovered Willie's attempt. Texier turned from the window to say some papers, and that was the chance Willie seized to thrust his hand through the window from the outside and reach for the pile of change that lay on the desk beneath it. Texier heard the noise his straining made, and turned in time to see the outstretched hand. Willie jerked his hand out and ran, but not before Texier had been his face at the glass. He was captured in front of the theatre a few minutes later by Patrolman Payne to whom the attempt was reported.

Willie tried to make Judge Runyon believe this morning that he had not gone near the box office, and was wrongly accused, but Texier positively identified him, and Willie had no alibi handy.

"There is only one thing to do with that boy," said Capt. Irwin, of the probation officer's staff, who was in court for his weekly examination of probationers. "He will be better off in the Reform School. He needs it."

"I agree with you," said the magistrate, and Chief of Police Kiely said the same thing. Willie's commitment was made out at once, and he was taken back to his cell weeping loudly.

The boy's first serious crime, for which he was arrested several months ago, was unusual in several features. Willie taught his father, who is a Polish emigrant, how to write his name in English. The father's signature was naturally, a copy of Willie's hand, and the boy learned to forge to fake his name on a check for $50. He took the money to New York and had a high old time for a few days. He was arrested when he came back here, penniless.

Capt. Irwin and Mr. Berkowitz had completed arrangements to have the boy sent away there, when the father's heart changed, and he begged another chance for Willie. The latter changed his ways for a time, but he drifted back to his old associates, and his relapse followed.

PLAN TO ORGANIZE A LOCAL ORCHESTRA

Preliminary Meeting and Rehearsal in G. A. R. Hall Last Night.

Preliminary steps were taken last night by B. A. Paroubek and Louis Clauss to organize a local amateur orchestra to be known as the Plainfield Philharmonic. A combined meeting and rehearsal was held in G. A. R. hall and it was attended by a gratifying number of musicians. Among them was a good-sized delegation from the Elizabeth Philharmonic which has taken an interest in the movement.

The rehearsal was in every way satisfactory to the promoters and they feel greatly encouraged by the start. The orchestra will be made one of the best that has yet been seen in the city, is the plan of Mr. Paroubek and Mr. Clauss to give a series of high class concerts. Both are skilled musicians and those who join are to be given the benefit of their experience. More members are needed and those who are interested are invited to attend the next meeting and rehearsal to be held at G. A. R. hall next Wednesday night at 8 o'clock.

JUDGE GENTLE WITH

FATHER'S SCHOOLMATE.

Patrick Muldoon Was Drunk, But He Was Not Scolded by City Magistrate.

Patrick Muldoon, fifty-five years old, 671 West Front street, was arrested yesterday afternoon for drunkenness by Doorman O'Gorman. The officer saw him clinging to the iron post before Henry Windham's cafe.

Muldoon told Judge Runyon in court this morning that he was waiting for a Fourth street car, and passed over a transfer to corroborate the statement. The transfer was dated Thursday afternoon.

"You've been waiting some time," commented the magistrate. "You were a schoolmate of my father, weren't you?"

"Yes, sir," answered Muldoon with a smile. "Forty years or more ago, we went to school together at New Market. Theodore Vail was the teacher then."

Muldoon hadn't been in court for a year and the magistrate suspended sentence. He is well-to-do.

BAN ON FAMOUS HYMNS

Interdict Against "Nearer My God to Thee" and Restrictions on "Lead, Kindly Light."

ORDER OF BP. O'CONNOR

Father Bogan and All Other Priests of the Diocese Formally Notified of the Episcopal Mandate.

Bishop John J. O'Connor, of the Newark Catholic diocese, has placed a interdict on the hymns "Nearer, God, to Thee," and "Lead, Kindly Light." The first hymn is tabooed altogether, while the latter may be sung only after services. Bishop O'Connor has sent this order to Father Bogan of St. Mary's church and all other rectors of the various churches in his diocese, Newark.

When seen at his Episcopal residence in South Orange yesterday the bishop said:

"The rule of the church forbids the singing of any hymn or anything else that is not part of the liturgical service; and, of course, 'Nearer My God, to Thee,' is no more part of the service than is 'In the Sweet Bye and Bye.' Aside from the church rule, this hymn is purely sentimental, and I can see no reason for its rendition. 'Lead, Kindly Light,' is a appeal for spiritual light, but then there is no cause for singing it in our churches."

The liturgical service is in Latin, but the singing of an English translation of a part of the liturgy or a hymn, which is not in accordance with iron rule of the church not to allow songs not included in music receiving the approbation of the proper authorities.

DEMOCRATS PICK STEVENS

Scion of Famous Jersey Family, Somerset, Nominee For Assembly.

MR. SOUTHWICK SPEAKS

Congressional Candidate Addresses Convention at Somerville—

Bowers for Coroner.

Robert L. Stevens, of Bernards, was nominated by acclamation as the candidate for member of Assembly by the Somerset county Democratic convention in session in Germania hall, Somerville, late yesterday afternoon. Isiah B. Bowers, of Basking Ridge, was unanimously nominated for coroner. After the noon recess, F. S. Butts, of Basking Ridge, was made permanent chairman, having been the temporary selection, and E. V. Cruser, of Belle Mead, was chosen secretary in place of the temporary selection, Walter C. Linbarger, of North Plainfield.

The committee on rules of convention were: Chairman, John W. Reed, J. D. Barnaman, William Mills, Lawrence Hickey, M. W. Scully; Resolutions—George E. Pare, Horace McWilliams, E. V. Cruser, H. VanZandt, James L. Hall; Rules—C. H. Tiger, Wilbur Voorhees, Stoven Jackson, Stephen Brokaw, Frank Allerton. Permanent Organization — David Philhamer, Thomas Ryan, William J. Duffield, John W. Kuhl, Thomas Hildebrant.

Resolutions endorsing the last National and State platforms of the Democratic party, and for equal taxation, condemn the county tax boards, bribery of voters and corporations, and pledges support to the Congressional nominee for the Fourth district and to the nominees selected by the convention.

J. Allen Southwick, of Trenton, the candidate for Congress in the Fourth district, addressed the convention. He was followed by Irwin S. Marshall, chairman of the City Executive Committee of Trenton.

The appointment of a member of the Executive Committee for the Second district of North Plainfield borough brought forward the old scrap, which has been on hand since Walter C. Linbarger and L. D. Townley for some time. When the former appeared in the convention with the two delegates from his district favoring him it looked as if he would be appointed to the position. However, when the call was made for the names of Executive Committee to be handed in to the secretary that of L. D. Townley was sent up as well as Linbarger's. Both of the delegates from the Second district of North Plainfield declared they favored Linbarger and the latter claimed his seat on the committee, addressing the convention.

There was much discussion over the matter and it was finally left to the Executive Committee to decide which of the two men is entitled to the position. Linbarger claimed that the presentation of Townley's name was an effort of David J. Carney, the Democratic leader in North Plainfield borough who lives in the First district to keep him out of the Executive Committee. Linbarger made a plea for the matter to be settled on the floor of the convention. The delegates voted against the proposition.

Senator Frelinghuysen Calls Delegates to Order—Nominations Smalley by Heady Borough Delegation.

W. W. Smalley, of Bound Brook, received the nomination for the Assembly, and Dr. Fred A. Wilde, also of Bound Brook, the nomination for coroner, at the Somerset County Republican convention held at Somerset Hall, Somerville, this morning. Both nominations were made by acclamation, there being no opposition or contest of any kind.

The convention was called to order at 11:30 o'clock by Senator Joseph F. Frelinghuysen, chairman of the Somerset County Republican committee, and Assemblyman Irving Hoagland, of Franklin Park, was made temporary chairman. John C. Cooper, of Warren township, was chosen temporary secretary. Mr. Hoagland made a short speech, thanking the convention for the honor conferred. He referred to the perfect harmony now existing in the party and predicted success for the tickets at the coming election.

Mayor Newton B. Smalley was in charge of the delegation from North Plainfield. There were two vacancies, A. G. Hooley and C. W. McGee from the First district, of the borough being unable to attend. Assemblyman Irving Hoagland was seated to fill one vacancy and the one other was allowed to go by default. The delegates from the borough were Thomas Doud, J. V. E. Vanderhoef and Irving Hoagland from the first district, and Alonzo Brokaw, Peter A. Emmons, William C. Smith and L. B. Woolston from the Second district.

Chairman Hoagland appointed the usual committees, Mayor Smalley being put on the committee on resolutions. After this business the convention proceeded to nominate a ticket. It was generally known that Assemblyman Hoagland, now serving his second term, did not want a re-nomination, and W. W. Smalley, of Bound Brook, was agreed upon by the delegates. He was nominated by Fred M. Voorhees, of Bound Brook, and received the honor by acclamation, as did also Dr. Fred A. Wilde, of Bound Brook, for the office of coroner.

After the nominations the convention adjourned to 1:30 o'clock, when the resolutions and various reports of committee will be received and Congressman Ira W. Wood will make an address. Among those who attended the convention but did not remain throughout was Former Senator Charles A. Reed.

DUTCH MINISTER SPEAKS

AT LOCAL CHURCH SERVICE.

"Grand Old Man of Holland" Addresses Seventh-Day Baptists.

Rev. G. Velthuysen, of Haarlem, Holland, known as the Grand Old Man of that country, who is the leader of the Seventh-Day Baptists in his native land, addressed a large congregation at the Seventh-Day Baptist church this morning. He is a broad minded, big hearted man, and a speaker of commanding personality. He spoke in terms of deep appreciation of the denomination and particularly of the people who first came to him in Holland from Plainfield.

Dr. Velthuysen illustrates in his own life that the "open throne of grace, and love of the Heavenly Father gives one the most supreme happiness." The value of prayer was emphasized by him and he also made an earnest appeal that all serve God with a whole heart. "He shall have no other Gods before Me."

Rev. Mr. Velthuysen will speak this afternoon to the Junior and Senior Christian Endeavor societies, and tonight he will speak at the Second church. Tomorrow he will preach in the New Market church of that denomination.

Real Estate Changes.

Several changes in real estate have been reported in the West End during the past few days. C. Compton has sold a lot on West Branch street to Mowbray W. Forney, a civil engineer and contractor, and he will erect a handsome home for himself. Mr. Compton has also sold a lot on Compton avenue to Peta Manger, of New York, and he will build a house there for himself. Matthew Brandon, of Dunellen avenue, has sold his residence to a New York man and possession will be taken soon.

MYSTERY IN HIS DEATH

Unknown Man Found Near B. & O. Trolley Crossing May Have Been Murdered.

MAKING INVESTIGATION

Thought at First That He Had Been Struck By a Trolley Car, But Circumstances Point Otherwise.

Officials of the Public Service Corporation are making a determined effort today to unravel the mystery of an unknown man's death at the B. and O. crossing near Cranford, last night. It was at first supposed that he was killed by a trolley car that passed over the bridge at 7 o'clock, but later developments tend to show that it may have been a case of murder. The victim had a fractured skull and several bad gashes about the head, otherwise there were no marks on the body, and everyone of his pockets had been turned out. The remains were brought to Cole's undertaking rooms in this city and the police are assisting in the investigation.

The trolley car was in charge of Motorman Fred Skillman, of Elizabeth, and the conductor was no one in front of him or noticed anything unusual until he had gone some distance beyond the bridge. Then a man suddenly sprang toward his platform and throwing a derby hat directly in his face called out, "You've killed a man." Motorman Skillman reversed his controller he noticed the fellow turn and run off in the darkness.

As soon as the car was brought to a stop, the crew hurried back and found a body alongside the tracks. They carried it off the road and sent the usual telephone calls in accident cases. Skillman was positive from the start that no one had been struck by his vehicle and he so informed the company officials when they arrived. Credence was lent to his story when the pockets were found turned out as if they had been hurriedly rifled. In one of them was a small notebook having the address "George M. Forbes, Providence, R. I., printer," but beyond this nothing was found.

Public Service detectives searched about the spot this morning and met several of the employes who work around the terminal and cut from the trolley bridge. They stated that they had noticed four or two man hanging about the structure yesterday and the description of the dead man tallies with one of them. From this and other data the theory has been advanced that the victim was first struck on the head with some weapon which caused death and that after the pockets had been rifled the body was placed beside the car tracks. One of the things which tends to bear out the suggestion or murder is the fact that there is not a mark on the body below the head, almost an impossibility when a person has been struck by a car. The authorities of the county are to be asked to take hold of the case.

The victim was about fifty years old, thick-set and weighing 190 pounds. He had a gray mustache and gray hair. The clothing was in good condition but of cheap material.

BACK FROM CANADA.

Miss Hansen Surprised by Friends in Honor of Her Return.

In honor of her return from a long stay in Canada, Miss Kennena Hansen was surprised by a number of her friends at her home on Watchung avenue last night. The affair was much enjoyed.

During the evening Harrison Fahn and Monroe Staats sang, and Miss Edna Dilks and Miss Elsie Dunavan played piano solos. Refreshments were served.

The party was arranged by Mrs. M. Hansen and the Misses Elsie and Myra Dunavan. Among those present were: The Misses Myra Dunavan, Elsie Dunavan, Eva Dunavan, Edna Dilks, Marie Hahn, Hattie Giles, Mr. and Mrs. Tucker, Mrs. Alfred Dunavan, Mr. and Mrs. George Walsh, Irving Walsh, George Simon, Harrison Fahn, Monroe Staats.

First of Y. M. C. A. "Pops."

The Southern Jubilee Singers will appear at the Y. M. C. A. tonight in the first of a series of popular entertainments arranged by the Star Course Committee. They will also sing at the religious meeting tomorrow afternoon.

Chairman of Committee.

Edward R. Finch, of New York, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Finch, of Park avenue, is chairman of the Republican Club's finance committee which is prosecuting throughout New York city very vigorous work at the present time.

Reading Engine Breaks Down.

The Reading engine which usually draws the express train which passes through this city every morning about 8:— going east, broke down at Pound Brook, this morning, and the engine which takes the 8:45 train to New York, was pressed into service, another engine being secured for the local.

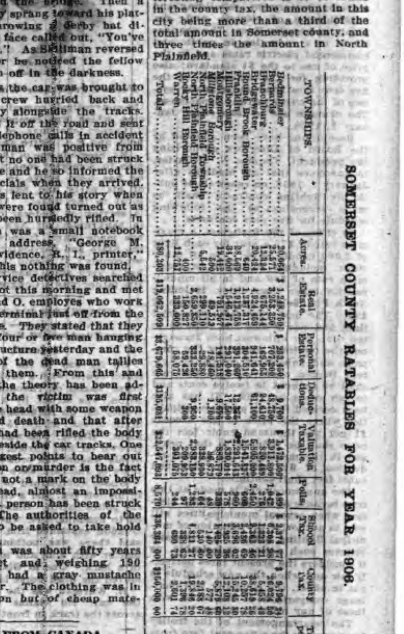
Official Figures Show City's Taxable Valuation About Equal to Neighboring County.

TIMELY COMPARISONS

Found in Table of Ratables of Union and Somerset Counties for 1905—The Figures.

The valuation of taxables as equalized by the Somerset County Board of Taxes furnishes an opportunity for some timely comparisons. For instance, the ratables for 1906 in Somerset show that the combined valuation of both realty and personalty in that county is but $7,582,118 more than the valuation in Plainfield alone. The valuation in Somerset county as officially announced is $32,587,093, while in the city of Plainfield it is $20,963,975.

The school tax in Plainfield is more than half what it is in the entire county of Somerset, the latter being $36,564, and the former being $19,488. It is also four times what it is in North Plainfield. Another interesting comparison is to be found in the county tax, the amount in this city being more than a third of the total amount in Somerset county, and three times the amount in North Plainfield.



The table of ratables for 1906 for Union county as compiled by Clerk of the County Board of Taxation William Townsend, was published exclusively in these columns yesterday.

To Renew Old Friendships.

Charles W. Allen, who is the father of Viola Allen and managing her present tour of "Cymbeline," was for many years associated in theatrical affairs with Edwin Varrey, whose home is in Washington Valley, where Mr. Allen reached Plainfield today, almost his first thought was for his old friend and when he learned his whereabouts he planned a trip to the actor's home. He and several members of the "Cymbeline" company, who also knew Mr. Varrey when he was on the stage, will pass part of tomorrow with him.

Draw-Head Pulled Out.

The draw-head of a freight car on a long train, pulled out just as it passed over the Park avenue bridge this morning. A part of it hung down and tore up the track ballast. Traffic was delayed about an hour.

Railway Cancelled Game.

The Railway High School football eleven cancelled its game scheduled for this morning with the North Plainfield High School team. As a result there will be no game in Plainfield today.

Enlarge Ice Field.

The Natural Ice Company are having a strip of land that puts into their pond at Watchung cut out to increase the ice-forming area. The strip was several hundred feet square and they will have that much more in their ice field this year. The pond is about fourteen acres in extent.

CLERGY'S AID IS ASKED FOR PURE BALLOT BOX.

Anti-Bribery League Seeking Reform Wave to Get Honest Vote of the People.

That the Anti-Bribery League intends to prosecute a mist vicorous campaign in an effort to stamp out corruption at the coming election was evidenced at a meeting of that body in the Y. M. C. A. building Trenton, Monday night. Committees were appointed and organized for a big mass meeting, and one of the principal efforts of the committee will be toward securing the promise of Governor Edward C. Stokes to address the meeting, which is planned for the near future.

Believing that through the pulpit the people of the city can be appealed to with considerable effect, resolutions calling upon the clergy to lend their assistance to the cause were adopted, and these, with a plea for personal corporation, will be sent to the Ministerial union of this city. A copy of the resolutions follow:

"To the Ministerial union of the city of Trenton:

"The Mercer County Anti-bribery league, which was organized largely through the efforts of members of your body, to check the evils of vote buying, so flagrantly manifested at the last election in the city and county, respectfully suggests for your consideration the desirability of some action looking to a general expression by the clergy of the city on some Sunday preceding the coming election, of condemnation of the practice of bribery and in behalf of conducting elections and of calling upon all citizens to aid, so far as they may be able, in enforcing the laws designed to suppress bribery at elections.

"The league also asks personal cooperation of all members of Ministerial union and that they attend our meetings and help in the work of suppressing corruption in elections.

"Respectfully submitted,
"MERCER COUNTY ANTI-BRIBERY LEAGUE."

RUMBLES OF THE RAIL.

In Spain no one enters or leaves a railway carriage without bowing politely to the occupants.

Wireless telegraph apparatus has been installed on many trains in Italy on Prof. del Vecchio's system, which renders it easy for trains to communicate with stations and with each other.

A watchmaker of Ontario has made a remarkable working model of an engine. It weighs only four grains, and is of gold and steel. It would take 120 of these engines to weigh an ounce.

The Great Northern Railway have issued the following notice to trainmen and staff: "In order that the smartness in the appearance of the staff should be maintained, Mr. Broussen requests that the members of the staff should wear white collars, and the practice of wearing colored collars must, therefore, be discontinued forthwith."

A Roumanian leper was at Frankfurt placed in a railway carriage, every door and window of which was securely fastened and sealed, for removal to his native country. The Austrian authorities, however, refused to permit it into Austria-Hungary, so the poor man, still imprisoned in his sealed compartment, remained in the goods yard at Passau for several days, his food being conveyed to him through a small window. Finally the German authorities decided to bring him back to Frankfurt, where he is now in a hospital, strictly isolated. The man, who speaks eight languages, is said to have contracted the terrible disease in Abyssinia, where he was at work on the railway.—Globe's Railway Exchanges.

SUPT. KREBS' ADDRESS AT CITY HIGH SCHOOL.

Speaks to Pupils On Influence of Heredity and Environment.

Superintendent H. C. Krebs, of the North Plainfield schools, addressed the students of the Plainfield High School Friday on the influence of heredity and environment and the power of the will to overcome both of these. "To blame our ancestors for our own shortcomings," he said, "is not a legitimate excuse, for by our own will power we are enabled to rise superior to our environment and to our inheritance."

"We are the architects of our own fortune," said he, "and are what we want to be." Illustrating this point he quoted Hawthorne, John Foster, Napoleon, Gladstone, and Sir Robert Peale. "Dreaming in youth is a good thing, if only it results in action; for boundless ambition, when directed aright, will result in complete and gratifying success. What is really worth while is the development of power. To quote Whitman, 'Henceforth I ask not good fortune; I myself am good fortune.'"

Colonial Courts of Somerset County.

The Somerset County Historical Society and the Public Education Society will hold a joint meeting on Monday evening, November 5, at Somerville, when Vice Chancellor James J. Bergen will make an address on the "Colonial Courts of Somerset County." The lecture will be free to everybody at the assembly room of the public school.

Merchant—So you want the job as office boy?

Boy—Yes, sir.

Merchant—Any previous experience?

Boy—No, sir; nothin' previous about me and I don't whistle.

MAN AND HIS TAILOR.

London offers two models for winter suits — a two-button and a three-button coat. Both are supplied with extra long collars and lapels. They fasten with a single row of buttons, and in the case of the two-button style the coat is rounded away slightly in front. The three-button style comes straight down the front, and is square across the bottom, with a very slight falling off at the corners of the fronts, which, however, meet all the way down from the top button. Pocket flaps are a feature of these new coats, and the number depends on individual taste. The two-button coat sometimes has two side pockets, while the rival has an extra one above the right pocket.

Cuffs there must be if a man makes any pretence of keeping up with the times. Every business or lounge suit has its natty cuffs, scarcely more than two inches wide and rounded at the corners. Trousers are put on the sleeves, the first one fastening through an end of the cuff.

With a coat cut as low as either one of these models the waistcoat must be high enough to show two inches or more above the opening of the coat. This may be made to match the coat and trousers, or it may be of a contrasting material and color. One of the smarest combinations from the hands of a Bond street tailor is the black and white mixture which gives a gray effect in the suit illustrated and which will be worn by Mr. Frank Delcun in the forth-coming production of "The House of Mirth." The coat and trousers are of the mixture and the waistcoat is of fawn suede cloth, with pearl buttons to match. This combination of gray and fawn is very modish at present in men's haberdashery.

The Inverness overcoat is rarely worn nowadays, though it is perfectly good form for the opera and the play. Elderly men are very partial to it, as it has about it an Old-World air which is very pleasing. Furthermore, it is a very handy garment, can be slipped on and off with ease, and will resist a really incredible amount of mussing. It is made only of black fabrics, and cut quite long. Young men prefer the Chesterfield and the frock overcoats, which, while more modern, yet lack the aristocratic grace traditionally associated with the Inverness.

Combinations of brown and tan with an indistinct overplaid in red or green is one of the smartest weaves. Now and then one sees a brown and white mixture with a blue thread running lengthwise of the cloth. Other materials that promise to become fashionable for morning suits are gray-blues, navy blue with white underplaid or stripe and a few salt-and-pepper mixed effects.

For somewhat out-of-the-way garments an English model shows a shaped Chesterfield coat and a movement was on foot in London and New York to make evening dress coats in blue worsted cloth, but like the fad of wearing knee breeches after the manner of our forefathers it did not "take." Fancy waistcoats, it is said, will be very largely worn this season, most of which will be double-breasted and made of French flannel in a large variety of patterns.

The "frock cutaway" or the "cutaway frock" has come into fashion again and is a very popular suit in New York. For afternoon wear the coat and waistcoat are made of black or gray worsted and are worn with striped trousers. For morning wear or for men who prefer it as a business suit it is made in ordinary tweeds. In the first case, of course, a top hat is the correct thing, and a soft hat or derby when pattern cloth is used.

A waistcoat of the same material as the coat and trousers is the correct thing, but fancy flannels are much to the fore at present, and there is no doubt that buttons in widely different materials will hold supremacy over self suitings.

PLAINFIELD COUNTRY CLUB HAS SUCCESSFUL SEASON.

Active Membership List Almost Filled and Will Not Be Increased.

The Plainfield Country Club held its monthly meeting at the Casino, last night. Routine business was acted and a discussion followed regarding the condition of the organization. It was stated that the club had had a very prosperous season, and now than the usual number of members had taken part in the various golf contests and handicaps, thus making the social life of the club a success.

The active membership is limited to 400 and there are now 292 in that class, leaving only eight vacancies to fill. It is doubtful if the limit will again be increased for some time, *owing to the expense it would in*crease. New members are now constantly being received, those joining now being charged but a half a year's dues. So long as the weather permits the clubhouse and course will be kept open, which it is hoped will be as late as December 1.

A Pongee Blouse.

Keep pongee blouse perfectly plain, with unstitched plaits and without side pocket. Wear turnover collar of embroidered ecru linen and a tie of Roman ribbon. Get other blouse of some more conventional material for dress. You can dip pongee white in strong coffee and obtain this color. Make it like a lingerie one without lining, and with elbow sleeves. Fasten down back.

HARMLESS SOLUTION TO WHITEN CLOTHES.

It is never necessary for harmful washing solutions to be used in order to facilitate the laundering of clothes, for there are several things that can be added to the water which will quickly eradicate dirt, make the washing easier and will not injure the fabric.

Kerosene is one of the best clothes whiteners and perfectly safe to use. It is especially good for clothes that have been hanging for a long time and become yellow.

For ordinary purposes use but a tablespoonful of kerosene to a gallon of water.

In the event of garments being very much soiled, and emulsion made from equal parts of kerosene, clear lime water and turpentine shaken until creamy, is invaluable.

Only one cupful of the mixture should be added to a boilerful of clothes. It should be kept over the fire for half an hour.

In the case of men's jumpers, overalls, working shirts or children's stockings or trousers, this emulsion is invaluable.

Make a very hot soap suds and add a small portion of the emulsion to the water. Allow the clothes to remain for about five minutes in the water and rinse with hot water thoroughly.

For in the latter case when the emulsion is used so strong, it is quite necessary that every particle should be removed.

Borax soaps which are free from alkali are good for laundry purposes.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

Stand your pans on a damp cloth immediately after taking them from the oven, and the cakes will come out without sticking.

To produce steam-rosettes on the mirror and windows, try rubbing them over with thin, cold starch and wiping off with a soft cloth.

Try making a new dress out of a faded one by washing it in boiling cream of tartar water. It will become perfectly white.

If a piece of baking soda the size of a pea is added to each quart of gooseberries before cooking it will materially reduce the amount of sugar required to sweeten them.

In the case of fruit which jam or preserves is to be made over the sides and bottom with a piece of tissue paper saturated with olive oil, and it will prevent the fruit from sticking.

To make rubber shoes wear longer, trim the tops of old rubber shoes and put around the heel. Smear these pieces on the lining side with thick mucilage, or any sticky sub*stance, and place in the heels of rub*bers, pressing down firmly. These protectors prevent the rubber from coming in contact with the floors of the boot heels, and can be renewed when they show the least signs of wear.

To make my rubbers last much longer by doing this.

In running ribbon through beading half the time adn annoyance will be saved by fastening the safety pin to the beading until the last hole is reached. If the ribbon is fed in straight it will not turn in the beading by this method.

A Girl's Party.

It is very possible that you will not have as enjoyable a season as you might if the girls intend to give parties to each other and exclude all the boys. Such parties usually result in a great deal of fun. Your suggestion for an evening entertainment is good, but you should have the cards and music very quickly after lunch in order to keep the afternoon from dragging. You might find a chafing dish good fun if you know how to cook on it. The other girls will enjoy helping. Make scrambled eggs with chopped tomatoes and slices of green pepper as a hot dish and serve it on hot buttered toast. Then make coffee or chocolate and have ice cream with hot sauce or maple syrup and chopped nuts, sandwiches, and layer cake. If the girls are determined to stick *together in all the winter's entertain*ments, try not forming a Tableau Society or a Chorus Class that will give you something to do.

Gown for Wedding.

A young girl's dress may be of dotted white net over lining of rose pink silk. Cut skirt in three circular ruffles edged with two inches of white lace. Let it sweep floor. Make bodice of net over pink silk and trim net to form a round effect. Under this put a yoke of unlined white lace without lock. Across this yoke at lower edge put a wide scarf of rose satin ribbon ending in long loops and two long bows. Make sleeves from three ruffles of lace on a net foundation edged with a wide scarf and bow of pink ribbon.

David Shay Will Return.

Arrangements have practically been completed whereby David Shay, the present secretary at the Plainfield Country Club, will return to the same position next year. His work this year has been satisfactory and helping to make the season at the clubhouse one of the most successful in its history. Mr. Shay has not yet decided where he will spend the winter, having several plans under consideration.

House from European Trip.

Frank Carusa, a well known West Ender, has returned home after a three months' visit with relatives in Italy. While away he made short trips to Norway, Sweden and other European countries and brought back numerous souvenirs for his local friends.

REFRIGERATION RULES.

Use clean, flat dishes to hold whatever is on the lower shelves.

Buy your ice in pieces as large as can be accommodated. This is much more economical than to buy small ones.

Be careful not to fill dishes too full so that they will spill over. If anything is spilled, don't fail to wipe it up immediately.

Pack the ice well together and do not wrap it in paper or cloths; instead, keep the door of the ice chamber shut as much as possible.

Do not put food of any sort directly on the ice. If it is absolutely necessary to place it near the ice, see that it is in glass or porcelain.

Empty the refrigerator at least once a week; scrub the interior thoroughly, then scald the ice chamber and drainpipe with boiling water in which a lump of soda has been dissolved; follow this with clear boiling water; wipe dry and let it air for twenty minutes.

CLOSE TO THE PEOPLE.

Spell Stirs Oklahoma Natives.

Mrs. J. E. Jones has issued invitations to a "spelling match" for Friday evening of this week, when she will entertain the teachers of the city. The invitation is a clever one and reads as follows:

Der jentl folk, by way of rim
Ur hostes thinks it proper tim
That we respond unto the cawl
Of our der president, and awl
The men who have been thinking
Its organizin's a mistake,
It was divinely instituted and who can accept a position that rests upon the intimation that God erred? Hypocrisy in the church is another excuse frequently given for not joining it. But we are not responsible for others. The faithlessness of others will never excuse us for failure to perform the obligations that rest upon us. Furthermore, if some are false this fact should stimulate the others to increased fidelity. Instead of shrinking church membership should swell the ranks of those faithful to it in order that we may offset the harm done by false professors of Christianity. The expensiveness of church membership is always used as an argument against it. The church must, of course, be financially supported, and in our country this is done principally, as it should be, by the members of the church. But the church only expects its members to give in proportion to their ability. This principle makes it possible for all to support the church and at the same time not to burden themselves in so doing. No valid excuse was ever given for failure to join the church where the opportunity exists. The logical result is therefore that we should unite ourselves with it.

2. Church membership is a duty. Confession of Christ is one of the requirements in the salvation of the soul. "If thou with confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus and shalt believe in thine heart that God raised Him from the dead thou shalt be saved." The place where this confession is made is in the church. It is undoubtedly the place where it should be made. To neglect to unite with the church, therefore, is to fail to perform the duty of confessing Christ.

3. Church membership is beneficial. It throws around us safeguards against evil; it brings to us the inspiration and joy of Christian fellowship; it provides the best possible opportunities for serving Christ; through membership in the church our influence for Christ is enlarged. The world decides whether we are Christians or not by our relation to the church. If we are not members we are usually not usually looked upon as Christians, and the influence of our example is against Christ, no matter what we may think of Him in our hearts. Christ Himself loved the church dearly. It is His bride. His disciples should love it, be enrolled among its members and be faithful both to Christ and the church.

The Pledge a Bridge.

To itself or as a fetich it is no more than any other collection of 178 words. A bridge, apart from the stream it spans, from bank to bank, is nothing but a pile of lumber. You couldn't live in it or do business there, but as a highway from where you are to where you want to go the bridge is immensely important. The pledge takes you from where you are to where Christ's strength by putting you in that dependent, trustful relation which enables Him to work in you. The pledge is not so much something for you to keep as something to keep you. You could not keep it an hour in your own strength, but when you take it in all your weakness it not only commits you to Christ, but to the same extent commits Christ to you.—John F. Cowan, D. D.

An Easy Service.

The Endeavorers of the Circus Street Congregational Mission church in Nottingham, England, held annual egg services, at which they bring eggs for distribution among the poor and the sick and at the hospitals. They have held five of these services now and have given away in all about 30,000 eggs. These were brought this year more than 7,000 eggs.

It Gives Full Scope.

Bishop Hasse, in his president's address before the British Christian Endeavor union, quoted a remark made recently by a Nonconformist minister. "What I like about Christian Endeavor," he said, "is that it gives full scope for the working of the spirit of God."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 29.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE

Topic—Why every one should join the church.—Rom. xii, 4-8.

That every one who has accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as his Saviour and is trusting in Him for eternal salvation should unite with the Christian church would seem to need no argument. The church is a divine institution. Christ Himself was its founder. Its mission is to carry forward the work of Christ in the world, and nothing seems more natural and reasonable than that those who are saved and are interested in the salvation of others should be openly identified with the church and actively engaged in its work. Yet in spite of these facts there are many to whom church membership does not appeal, and various excuses are offered for not uniting with and joining the church. The necessity, therefore, frequently arises of presenting reasons why this step should be taken.

1. The weakness of the arguments against church membership should convince us of its importance. If it were not necessary and desirable it would certainly be possible to produce some convincing reasons to this effect. But such is not the case. The excuses offered for neglecting this duty are weak and valueless. Some excuse themselves on the ground that they can live Christian lives out of the church as well as in it. If one Christian can do this all could, and therefore the church is not a necessity and its existence a mistake. Certainly it was divinely instituted and he who can accept a position that rests upon the intimation that God erred? Hypocrisy in the church is another excuse frequently given for not joining it. But we are not responsible for others. The faithlessness of others will never excuse us for failure to perform the obligations that rest upon us. Furthermore, if some are false this fact should stimulate the others to increased fidelity. Instead of shrinking church membership should swell the ranks of those faithful to it in order that we may offset the harm done by false professors of Christianity. The expensiveness of church membership is always used as an argument against it. The church must, of course, be financially supported, and in our country this is done principally, as it should be, by the members of the church. EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Int. Sch. "A Christian's Friendships" By REV. WALTER A. YARDLEY, D. D.

The highest friendship.—John xv, 13; James ii, 23. Friendship need for safeguarding.—Acts x, 24. The best type of friendship.—Luke x, 38-42. Love the test of perfectness.—Col. iii, 14. The value of friendship and how to maintain it.—Prov. xviii, 24.

"Have many wellwishers but few intimates" is excellent advice for most people to follow. There is much misunderstanding as to the nature of true friendship. So there is much which goes under the name of friendship which has no right to claim the title. In our study of this lesson it is well to begin with the consideration of what we call "the highest friendship." This is the relation Jesus sustains toward us. He says that He does not call us servants, for the servant does not know what the master does. His does not take such into intimate counsel and reveal his plans to them, asking their cooperation in the part assigned to the work he is doing. But he commands them and pays wages for work. The friend is taken into inner confidence and communion. Jesus declares that He has revealed to His friends all He has learned of the Father. He has no secrets concealed from us.

But there can be no friendship where there is not mutual confidence. If God confides in us, we must likewise confide in Him. If He tells us His plans and asks us to work with Him, we must also make known to Him all our plans and desires. There must be nothing kept back on our part. Here is the failure of so many who never come to perfect oneness with God. Weak minded people who they know will not bear the sight of God not meet His approval. Some love or longing for unworthy things keeps them from confiding all to God's direction and control, and so they never come to full harmony with Him and His service. But perfect peace in believing and utter rest of soul.

Here is found the greatness of Abrahm. In an age when men had not learned God as we have been taught Him, this man took God into his confidence and trusted Him utterly in all affairs, and merited the title "Friend of God."

Here lies the beginning of all real fellowship. Whoever finds God an intimate and constant companion will find the clew to all other friendships of value.

There is another element of moment in real fraternity which needs attention. It costs. One must give, and that not merely of his abundance all he has which the other can share. God gives us through Jesus Christ all He has which we can in anywise appropriate. So we must give to others the real affection and interest of intimates. When we have known of salvation through Christ he calls his friends together to share with him the instruction of an apostle, and the Holy Spirit falls on them because He did invite them to be there.

Martha fails because the highest ideal because she was cumbered with the attention to mere bodily needs and was lacking in appreciation of the more worthy needs of spirit. Jesus was in her house for a little while only. Soon He would be beyond the reach of hand and voice. He who had tasted forty days in preparation for his life work cared more for heart to heart talks than for the kind of supper He was to eat. Many make the same kind of mistake now. Some of those with whom you are in the habit of meeting frequently have never heard a word from you as to your trust and hope in Christ. Their souls may be hungering for the encouragement of a kindred heart in their struggles with the world and temptations of the world. They would give more for five minutes' genuine heart talk than for all the other benefits you could confer, yet you hesitate to broach the topic of religion to them.

How often are you defeated? By sitting more at the Master's feet until you catch His spirit and learn His methods.

Sermon in Brief.

We prepare ourselves for sudden deeds by the reiterated choice of good or evil.—George Eliot.

Get to work! Get to work! Be sure 'tis better than what you work to get.—Browning.

The sun-man takes the old circumstances, and, praising God to them, makes of them the new life.—Phillips Brooks.

Life is noble in proportion to the nobleness of faith. It is successful in proportion to the fixedness of faith.—La Conte.

On every occasion of uneasiness we should retire to prayer, that we may give place to the grace and light of God.—John Wesley.

Never tell evil of a man if you do not know it for a certainty, and if you know it for a certainty then ask yourself, "Why should I tell it?"—Lavater.

He who knows not himself is judged by those who know me best that I always plucked a thistle and planted a flower when I thought a flower would grow.—Lincoln.

Do today's duty, fight today's temptation, and do not be weaken and disheartened yourself by looking forward to things which you cannot see and could not understand if you saw them.—Charles Kingsley.

The humble, meek, merciful, pious and devout souls are everywhere of one religion, and when death has taken off the mask they will know one another though the diverse livories they wear here make them strangers.—William Penn.

Not Unreasonable.

Congregations who borrow money for the building of a shrine do this with the idea that those who contribute to it should also have a share in the income, and that is not unreasonable.—Jewish Voice.

COLORS THAT MAKE ONE LOOK YOUNG.

It's the color of a woman's frock and hat that makes her look either young or old, and if more of them realized this there would be more becoming gowns worn.

For them, instead of selecting a green that would not be suitable, simply because it happened to be a fashionable tint, a color that showed *the eyes, hair and complexion to ad*vantage would be decided upon.

Following this idea in choosing materials for this dresses, women would be more harmoniously clad and there would be individuality in their wardrobes that nowadays few women possess.

Besides making a difference in the apparent age of the wearer certain shades give the impression of smoothness or slenderness and this should also be studied by a woman who wants to dress artistically.

Colors that a fair-blue-eyed woman can wear with utmost effect would not do for one with a sallow complexion and gray eyes. A shade that would make a decided brunette with black hair and eyes and a clear olive skin look young would add at least ten years to the appearance of one who was neither a blonde nor decidedly dark.

A fair woman, with a florid skin and well rounded body, should choose gowns in pale blue if she is under 30, but if older the pastel shades in soft blue, pale green and faded heliotrope will be more becoming worn next to the face.

Below the waist line any dark colored cloth will not interfere with the general effect because it is too far away to cast shadows on the face and the breaK of light green between this and the light hair and eyes to advantage.

White and cream next to the face are, of course, desirable, as is a pale yellow.

Dark materials for street wear should be dull rather than shiny, and navy blue will make the wearer look less old than black. If it is necessary to wear the latter it should be relieved about the neck with a white or cream colored piece of lace, or a ribbon in any of the soft pastels, green, blue or yellow.

Dark women who have no color in their face should avoid any bright shades, for these bring out their lack of freshness and make the wearers look older than they would with softer tones.

Brown grays, ivory and dainty old blues, are decidely becoming for this type of women unless she is stout, in which case dull black materials relieved by ivory about the neck and bust should be worn.

Brunettes with plenty of rich coloring look stunning in strong golden browns, reddish tans, deep rich garnet and soft but pronounced crimson.

Grays, unless they are too cold, are also effective for this dark type of beauty.

Choosing Tailor Suit.

Get a ready-made suit of gray and black plaid to serve you for every day. Have right pony jacket and plain or knife plaited skirt. Add removeable collar and cuffs of London gray. Wear with this a small black green wing and wide rosette of black satin ribbon. Put fold of black ribbon around crown.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms: $2.00 per year.

A. L. FORCE, Editor and Proprietor.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1906.

THE CANDIDATES.

For the information of the voter the list of Congressional candidates of the various parties in the Fifth, Fourth and Third districts is published:

Fifth District (Union, Warren and Morris counties—Charles N. Fowler (Rep.), James E. Martine (Dem.), Harry Vaughan (Pro.), George B. Whitesell (Soc.), James E. Martine (Ind. Democracy).

Fourth District (Hunterdon, Somerset and Mercer counties)—Aaron Wood (Rep.), J. Allen Southwick (Dem.), William Lunger (Pro.), Upton Sinclair (Soc.), C. J. Wolff (Soc. Lab.)

Third District (Middlesex, Monmouth and Ocean counties)—Benjamin F. Howell (Rep.), David Harvey, Jr., (Dem.), R. Bruce Crowell (Pro.), Frank Rapp (Soc.-Lab.)

The Assembly nominees follow:

Union county—Republican, R. S. Perkins, Peter Tillman and John R. Moxon; Democratic, H. C. Coulter, Joseph T. Hague and James E. Desmond.

Somerset county—Republican, W. W. Smalley; Democratic, R. L. Stevens.

Middlesex county — Republican, Frank Crowther, Wm. R. Drake, E. E. Haines; Democratic, Dr. Hugh Ramsey, Thomas Haggerty and Alfred Kerr.

GIVE THEM THEIR DUE.

No opposition is likely to be made on the part of the taxpayers to the proposed increase of pay for the policemen and firemen and if the Common Council takes favorable action tonight on the petitions filed, it is safe to say it will be carrying out the wishes of the community. The city employees in these two departments are poorly paid for the services they render and the hours they devote to the work. If the municipality desires the best sort of men as its servants, it must pay for them. This applies to the patrolmen and the firemen just as much as it applies to the tax collector or street commissioner. In their places the policeman and the fire laddie have proportionately as responsible positions as the men higher up, and proportionately they deserve just as much reward.

BOUND TO SHINE.

The Newark Morning Star shot into existence bright and early Monday. It's a cent paper; independent in politics and sparkling with fresh and reliable news and brilliant comment. That it is destined to shine eternally is a sure thing for what better guarantee could there be than the name of James Martin, which graces the head of the editorial column?

The voters of Somerset county will have to choose between two good men for the Assembly. The Democrats have named R. L. Stevens, of Bernards, a member of the old Jersey family of that name, and the Republicans have placed W. W. Smalley, of Bound Brook, in the field as his opponent. Mr. Stevens will be remembered as a recent candidate of the Democracy for congressional honors. He is a man of much refinement and of marked ability. His opponent, Mr. Smalley, is a good solid everyday business man, who, although not like his rival, "born to the purple," has earned a goodly share of the world's goods and the undivided respect of his neighbors where he has spent the best days of his life.

It is to be expected that John W. Murray, Jr., will get a rousing big vote for tax collector. Re-cognizing his fitness for the office and the impartial and satisfactory way he has discharged its duties during the short time he has served in that capacity, the Democratic party properly added their endorsement to the Republican nomination given the Third warder. Mr. Murray is the type of man needed for respectable positions and there is no more onerous office than that which he is destined to fill for some time to come.

If its Board of Excise keeps up its good work, Elizabeth's saloons are destined to be as well regulated as those of Plainfield. It is proposed now to compel the saloonkeepers there to close their places between the hours of midnight and 5 o'clock in the morning. For some years, an ordinance has been in effect here, prohibiting the sale of liquor between 11 o'clock at night and 6 o'clock in the morning; and the best part of it is that the regulation is rigorously enforced.

Insurance is a mighty good investment, but the flood of printed literature sent out by the multitude of committees fighting to control the companies is enough to hasten the death of the man who pays the premiums.

It is moved and seconded that the City Clerk cast a ballot for Charles J. Fisk for mayor. Vox Populi has it and it is so ordered.

MR. GILBERT IS RIGHT.

Mr. Gilbert's suggestion that the powers of the present Plainfield commission be widened is most sensible. It would be absurd to have a vote taken on so important a proposition without a full understanding of what it means to the taxpayers of both Plainfield and North Plainfield. To go into the matter blindly would be sheer folly. It would be like buying a cat in a bag, and would probably be the cause of endless trouble.

As Mr. Gilbert says, the commission should be empowered not only to arrange the plans for the election and such other details as may be necessary in case a referendum is resorted to, but it should probe the subject fully. A thorough and exhaustive investigation should be made of every phase of the proposition and facts and figures complete in detail should be laid before the people before any further action is taken. By that means, and that means only, will an intelligent vote be possible.

PLACE THEM ON RECORD.

The idea on the Christian Endeavor Union to place the Assembly candidates on record as to their views on the Bishops' bill is a capital one. It is only fair to the voters that the nominees of the two parties state explicitely what position they would take regarding that splendid measure were they chosen to represent Union county in the Legislature. There is no doubt that some of the candidates will dodge the question put to them by the Endeavorers, and in such event there is only one course for the Union to pursue. That course is to vote against the evasive or dilatory office seeker.

Ex-President Palma will soon reach the point when he'll have to patronize the "Situations Wanted" column of the newspapers.—Elizabeth Journal.

Mr. Martine declares that his opponent is a "mere cipher" in Congress. Well, at any rate, Mr. Fowler cuts a bigger figure than that in the world of finance.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

"The time of year has come when, in accordance with the wise custom of our forefathers, it becomes my duty to set aside a special day of Thanksgiving and praise to the Almighty, because of the blessings we have received, and of prayer that these blessings may be continued. Yet another year of widespread well-being has passed. Never before in our history or in the history of any other nation, has a people enjoyed more abounding material prosperity than is ours; a prosperity so great that it should arouse in us no spirit of reckless pride, and least of all a spirit of heedless disregard of our responsibilities; but rather a sober sense of our many blessings, and a resolute purpose under Providence not to forfeit them by any action of our own.

"Material well-being, indispensable though it is, can never be anything but the foundation of true national greatness and happiness. If we build nothing upon this foundation, then our national life will be as meaningless and empty as a house before the foundation has been laid. Upon our material well-being must be built a superstructure of individual and national life, lived in accordance with the laws of the morality, else our prosperity itself will soon become a curse instead of blessing. We should be both reverently thankful for what we have received and earnestly bent upon turning it into a means of grace and not of destruction.

"Accordingly, I hereby set apart Thursday, the twenty-ninth day of November next, as a day of thanksgiving and supplication, on which the people shall meet in their homes or their churches, devoutly acknowledge all that has been given them, and to pray that they may in addition receive the power to use these gifts aright.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the city of Washington this twenty-second day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and six, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-first.

Former Plainfield Pastors to Speak.

Anniversary week at the Scotch Presbyterian church, New York, began yesterday, and during the week the services will be shared by two pastors formerly of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, of this city. Rev. Dr. John C. Bliss will speak on Wednesday evening at the anniversary of the prayer meeting and Rev. Dr. William R. Richards, moderator of the Presbytery of New York, will be among the speakers Friday evening, when many representations of societies and institutions will be present.

Mrs. A. R. Lewis is visiting friends in Chicago.

AMUSEMENTS.

ASTOR THEATRE, NEW YORK.

Viola Allen as Imogen in "Cymbeline."

The second attraction at the new Astor theatre will be another splendid Shakespearean production by a woman star of unusual talent and prominence. Viola Allen, whose beautiful presentation of "Twelfth Night" and "Shakespeare's Lady" will be remembered as being among the most important Shakespearean productions of recent years, will make her first New York appearance as Imogen in "Cymbeline," Monday, October 22. The role of Imogen is one of the most lovely and least acted of the heroines of the great bard, and is said to exactly suit Miss Allen's talent which is peculiarly well suited to the portrayal of pure and womanly women. It is a character whose strength lies in its complex simplicity and appealing beauty, and although such actresses as Mrs. Siddons, Adelaide Neilson and Helen Faucit have played this sweet and alluring role it has not been seen on the local stage for the last ten years. The production is said to be one of the most massive and beautiful Shakespearean revivals of the day. It was staged by Frank Vernon, the noted producer of classic dramas, and is pronounced historically correct even to the most minor detail. The scenery, of which there are twelve different sets, is from the studio of Emens and Unitt. The costumes are by Messrs. Van Horn and Madame Preisinger, and the incidental music is by Hamilton Clarke. The company is the largest and best with which Charles W. Allen has ever surrounded his star. Important parts are played by J. H. Gilmour, Sidney Herbert, C. Leslie Allen, Fuller Mellish, Jefferson Winter, Henry J. Hatfield, Myron Calice, Alison Skipworth and other players of note. There will be a Saturday matinee beginning at 2 o'clock.

Chauncey Olcott in New Play.

Chauncey Olcott, the popular comedian, will begin an engagement of two weeks at the New York theatre Monday evening, appearing as Richard Temple in his new Irish drama, "Eileen Asthore," a romantic play written for him by Theodore Burt Sayre. The scenes are laid in and about Dublin in 1804. The story concerns the fortunes of a warm-hearted, hot-headed young Irish gentleman. Richard Temple, who has squandered his fortune. Just as he is planning to enlist in Napoleon's army, he falls in love with Eileen O'Donnell, a dainty Irish maiden, decides not to go to the French war, determines to reform, and, after months of probation, regains his character and wins the girl of his choice. There are several other complications of romantic interest. The scenes of the play show Richard Temple's lodgings in Dublin, The Harp and Shamrock Inn near Dublin, and the picturesque grounds of Terrance O'Donnell, also near Dublin. During the performance Mr. Olcott will sing the following songs, written and composed by him for this play: "Day Dreams," "Wearers of the Green," "Olcott's Love Song" and "Eileen Asthore," which, in the Celtic language means "My Treasure." Augustus Pitou, the manager of Mr. Olcott, has given the production a magnificent mounting and surrounded the star with a very competent cast which includes Geo. A. Lessey, Richard J. Dillon, Arthur Jarrett, Daniel Jarrett, Charles Ogle, John Deane, William Walters, Neal Reardon, George Brennan, Quincy C. Bass, Jr., Florence Lester, Mildred Beverly, William Keys, Gertrude D. Stanley and Olive McVine. Matinee performances will be presented Wednesday and Saturday during Mr. Olcott's stay at the New York theatre.

Little Hip.

"Little Hip," the baby elephant at the New York Hippodrome, climbed five flights of stairs one day last week to have tea with Edna Wallace Hopper and a number of her professional and social friends in her New York apartment. Among the distinguished guests was Sir Francis Otter, an English baronet visiting New York. "Little Hip" had his first highball from Sir Francis, and seemed to enjoy the after-effects. The baby elephant paid this visit to Mrs. Hopper in return for her kindness in christening him at the Hippodrome several weeks ago. The visit was not made without police interference, however, and the elephant was placed under arrest as he marched down Fifth avenue, on the ground that he was parading without license. When taken to the station house, "Little Hip" was released, as the desk sergeant said that he did not believe an elephant on his hands. "Little Hip" arrived at the pink tea somewhat late, but, after climbing the five flights of stairs, he exhibited a healthy appetite for cake, popcorn, peanuts and highballs. He was noticed at the Hippodrome that night that the baby elephant went through his performance with great verve and enthusiasm, this exhilaration undoubtedly being due to his first fall from the water wagon.

It has been said the party had become subject to the domination of selfish and unprincipled bosses. If that was true the party needed a severe remedy. Whether it was true was to be determined by looking over the party leaders. If the statement was true only so far as it applied to certain localities, the charges should not have been made against the party generally. It was admitted that local bosses existed. They always grew up in great parties. But the remedy for them was to be applied locally.

Leaders, as leaders, were not hateful. The question was, What kind of leaders are they? If they were patriotic and heartwhole in the service of the party, he honored them and took off his hat to them (applause). But there he stopped. If the leader was bad and tried to advance himself or use the party for personal vengeance or personal foes, he said, "Down with them." The boss was not self-constituted; the people made him and the people could unmake him. But the judgement must be by the people of the vicinage; not by outsiders who did not know the facts or understand the situation.

In the recent primary battle he believed a gross injustice had been done by the general denunciation of the party leaders, and he was of the opinion that that fact had led to the failure of the movement. The party had done well, and all was right by what had been done, were all right. There was nothing in the record to condemn. Take them by individuals. Would anyone, in the quiet and sane atmosphere of their own closet, charge Senator Ackerman with being a corporation tool? Some months hence would he be classed as a representative citizen, ready to stand by the party and uphold it, so long as it was right? He so classed him. Assemblyman Perkins had been put in the black category, improperly, he thought, because he had said and talked with people so designated and would not join the new movement. And there was Major Briggs. The speaker knew him, as the most untiring and unselfish State chairman the party had ever had; a man who would scorn to do an improper or unpatriotic act. The people knew Foster M. Voorhees, Franklin Murphy and Edward C. Stokes. Were they to be called bosses? (Applause.) From such men had the party received its honors, its Governor and Power? Great power, yes. But always used as deemed best for the party and the State. He called that leadership to be desired. (Applause.)

Corporation domination, whatever that might mean, had been charged. So much had been said about corporations that the speaker had begun to wonder what sort of a disease the anti-corporation mania had become. It was to be understood that he did not believe improper corporations should be tolerated. One thing had come out clearly, and that was that corporations had got to obey the laws made for their regulation. Hereafter, they must not only respect, but render due obedience to the law. (Applause.) What he referred to was the constant, hysterical cry that went up from Democratic and Hearst platforms on the mere catchword of "corporation." Corporations were merely bands of individuals, who had their everyday characters to live up to. Republicans should not give way to the wave of hysteria, but should judge and recognize the need of corporations; recognizing that the country could not get along without them. They should not be classed as graft-seekers or robbers without evidence.

There was a spirit abroad in the land which the speaker deplored, and believed dangerous, a spirit which was seeking to create in the minds of the people the idea that no public man, no man of influence or power was honest or true, but that all were corrupt and unworthy of confidence. He referred to the newspaper and magazine writers, who for mere paltry pay, had been writing up such things. Nearly every member of the Senate had been charged with being under the domination of money. Such men as the venerable Senator Fry, of Maine, and Spooner, of Wisconsin, who was as high-minded as George Washington, were not spared. Muckrakers like Steffens and Phillips appeared to think that the only honest man in the Senate was La Follette, of Wisconsin. In which opinion La Follette heartily concurred (laughter) because, forsooth, the rest of the Senators would not rise up and vote for his crazy bill.

It was not a nice spirit to prevail. He classed it as a kind of hysteria. The speaker did not at all actually believe what they read. The spirit was like that of a lynching. "Lynch him! Lynch him!" came the cry, and the people rushed for the rope, and the stake, led by the slanderbund, to wreak vengeance on some victim, unknowing whether he was innocent or guilty.

It was true, as had been admitted, that there were corrupt men in public life. They always grew up out of the conditions surrounding political organizations. But the question was, Was the party as a party dominated by corrupt influences? Could the people's will be stifled? Results should form the basis of judgement. The speaker instanced the franchise limitation bill to indicate the independence of the Republicans where corporation influence was likely to be shown. The railroad taxation law had met the extremest demand of its advocates. Did that indicate corporation domination?

The demand for a legislative rule compelling the committees to report all bills within a certain time was the outcome, the speaker felt, of the hotheaded desire of young members in the legislature to have every bill they presented brought to light and enacted into law. It would be a foolish self-governing body that allowed itself to be flooded with a clogging rush of bills by speaker fiat, or with the business of the committees to sift the good and desirable bills out, to determine what ought to be considered.

For a picture of bad bosses, the people could turn back to the days of Democratic supremacy, when conditions were so bad that if a clerk of a district could in a city like Plainfield was to be appointed, the applicant could not get the place until he had seen Allen McDermott at Trenton and promised to pay a percentage of his salary into the Democratic treasury. That was a government by bosses, for bosses, and it led to peculation, embezzlement and scandal, until the people, awakened by the Voorhees investigation, arose and said "No more of this!" And they put the Republicans in power and there had been "no more of it ever since.

Since 1896 the Republican party in New Jersey had been as clean as a hound's tooth. It had not only been built, it had been unselfish. It had filled the coffers of the State with corporation tax money, relieved the people of all State tax, and paid over $1,000,000 a year for public schools.

Well, should there be reform? By all means, but not reform when reform was not needed. The Republican party could not be extreme; it was compelled by its record to be sincere. It must carry out its promises, and it could not seize on every "ism" that arose. It was the party of deliberation, and tried out all things, holding fast only to those which were good.

The speaker urged his hearers to strengthen the hands of the administration, after he had said that the weakness of the opposition was to be deplored, and that the Republican party had become too big for peaceful and united existence. C. N. Fowler, he said, was an able man, and wielded much influence in the House in his specialties, finance and banking. His opinion on such subjects was always sought, and he was as highly regarded as any representative. Mr. Fowler's name was greeted with applause.

MORGAN ONE POINT AHEAD OF MURPHY

CLOSE CONTEST FOR CUP ON COUNTRY CLUB LINKS.

C. B. Morgan failed to win any points for the Golf Committee cup at the Plainfield Country Club on Saturday, and he still holds the same position, leading with 14½ points. Arthur Murphy won first honors with a net score of 80 and he strengthened his position by three points. He now has a total of 13½, while Charles A. Stover in second place has 13½. There remains but one more Saturday to play for this cup and the competition this week will be watched with great interest.

The point-winners on Saturday were Arthur Murphy, 87, 7—80; Henry D. Hibbard, 90, 5—85; J. A. Lane, 96, 11—85.

An extra event of interest was a mixed foursome. This was won by C. B. Morgan and Mrs. N. Pendleton Rogers with a score of 87. The scores:

Mrs. N. Pendleton Rogers and C. B. Morgan, 88, 1—87; Miss Edith Tracy and W. Lester Giesney, 96, 4—94; Miss Margaret Goddard and Frank O. Reinhart, 100, 4—96.

Saturday was the last day for qualifying for the October Handicap cup, but there were no contestants. On Saturday Frank O. Reinhart and J. A. Lane who have each won a leg on the trophy, will play off for it.

There was a large field out at the Park Golf Club on Saturday and many scores were returned in the weekly competitions. Miss Lyda Loizeaux led the field with a net score of 84, which counts only for the Hollywood cup. Her's was the lowest net score for the day, but a fairly good handicap helped her considerable. However, she deserves much credit for such an excellent score.

Miss Lyda Loizeaux, 102, 19—83; Leon R. Thorlow, 102, 12—90; John L. Watson, 108, 17—91; A. W. Kenworthy, 105, 13—92; Rev. L. R. Howard, 109, 27—82; Alexander Gilbert, 113, 30—83; Charles A. Reed, 101, 5—96; Rev. C. L. Goodrich, 104, 7—97; Reuben Knox, 109, 10—99; Rev. J. O. McKelvey, 102, 3—99; Charles B. Morse, 112, 12—100; Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, 117, 13—104.

There will be skating at Deegan's rink tonight.

Revival at Monroe Avenue Church.

Despite the very stormy weather there was a large congregation at the Monroe Avenue M. E. church last night to attend the first of a series of revival meetings, Rev. E. E. Roberson, the pastor, is in charge. He preached an eloquent sermon last night to which was listened to with great interest. There was also special music by a quartette choir. These meetings will be held every night, except Saturday, until November 4. During the two weeks the Epworth House Library will be open Saturday evening instead of the customary time on Friday night.

Married at St. Mary's.

Michael J. Devine, the Liberty street tonsorialist, and Mrs. Mary Nugent, of West Third street, were quietly married in St. Mary's church Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Hogan and was witnessed by a small gathering of friends. The couple were attended by John F. Casey and Mary Casey. Mr. and Mrs. Devine will make their home on West Third street.

IN MR. SQUIRES' MEMORY

Ministers and Laymen Pay Tribute to Founder of Hope Memorial Chapel.

DR. RICHARDS' LETTER

Rev. Dr. Zelie and Revs. L. R. Howard, F. D. Tildon and J. O. McKelvey and L. N. Lovell Speakers.

Hope chapel Sunday-school assembled as usual Sunday afternoon but instead of devoting the customary hour or more to the study of the Scriptural lesson, the time was spent in a service dedicated to the memory of Henry C. Squires. He who had been superintendent for eighteen years and whose sudden death last Monday cast a gloom over every member of the institution was spoken of again and again in words of tenderest praise by those who knew him, who had worked with him and realized as did no one else what a life of devotion his had been. His fidelity, his perseverance, his strength of character and his individual idea of Christianity were extolled in a manner that made the hearts of his people glad but brought keener realization of the loss that they had suffered.

Leander N. Lovell, who was formerly superintendent of Warren chapel and a co-worker of Mr. Squires for years, had charge of the service, and it was in a way as simple as the life of the departed official. On the platform were Dr. Zelie, of the Crescent Avenue church; Rev. J. O. McKelvey, pastor of Warren chapel; Revs. F. D. Tildon, of Bethel chapel; Rev. L. R. Howard, of Hope chapel; Rev. H. J. Cochran, superintendent of the Crescent Avenue Sunday school; E. E. Parvin and A. W. Duxbury, who occupy the same office as Mr. Squires and Bethel chapels respectively, and Assistant Superintendent Ira W. Travell, of Hope. In the congregation were Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, Henry B. Newhall, S. H. Whitney, Major W. H. Sayre and Mr. Otis Newman. The singing was led by Frederic H. Andrews, who was Mr. Squires assistant superintendent in the chapel's infancy, and Judge William N. Runyon presided at the piano.

Mr. Squires was always proud of Hope chapel's singing and for the first few months after the service began the hymns that he liked to hear were sung. Judge Runyon contributed a solo and prayer was offered by Mr. Tildon, after which Mr. McKelvey made the first address. He spoke as one who had weighed every word and had given utterance only to that which he knew to be so from personal knowledge, not from hearsay or observance from a distance.

"To you," he said, "Mr. Squires would not only be felt in his immediate family but in the large parish which includes the parent church and the three chapels. The work at Hope was always his foremost thought and though he knew the malady that caused his death was upon him, he kept at it with fortitude akin to heroism. He virtually died with "his harness on his back." Continuing the speaker declared that Mr. Squires had left something to Hope chapel—that great love of his which it always had enjoyed.

"You have a rich inheritage in many ways," said Mr. McKelvey, "and may the heir—Hope chapel—prove worthy of its inheritance."

Rev. L. R. Howard, pastor of Hope, spoke in a similar vein and said, stress on the fact that Mr. Squires never let any obstacle interfere with his attendance at Hope. When at one time he was compelled to move to New York and lived there for a year, he came to Plainfield every Sabbath for worship. He did so against the advice of friends as the journey served to aggravate the heart trouble from which he suffered. But he was always happy serving Christ and this was the way in which he sought to do it. He brought the chapel through many dark periods, his perfect faith and confidence accomplishing what others thought was practically impossible. In closing Mr. Howard expressed the belief that if Mr. Squires could have left a message to Hope chapel he would have been "Believe in God and all will be well."

Previous to his address, Mr. Howard read two letters, one from Rev. Dr. William R. Richards, of New York; and the other from Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, Hope chapel's first pastor, now located at West Orange. Both regretted their inability to be present but expressed themselves in sympathetic and reminiscent tones in the communications. Dr. Richards' letter was as follows:

Lockport, N. Y.,
Oct. 18, 1906.

Mr. Howard:

Your telegram has just reached me. I should love to be with you at the memorial service at Hope chapel Sunday afternoon. But my own service is which I must be present comes at 4 o'clock.

It has been a great sorrow to me that I cannot be in Plainfield at this time. Today I think of the many friends meeting at the Crescent Avenue church, which Mr. Squires had served for many years as elder with the greatest fidelity. And on Sunday you will be gathering at the chapel; the chapel really grew out of his mind and heart. It was he who conceived the thought of moving down that little chapel which used to stand on East Fifth street. Hence the first he was put in charge of the Sunday-school which began to gather in that building. And from that day to this he has given himself to the service of Hope chapel with a completeness of devotion such as we have rarely seen in any department of Christian work.

It always seemed to me that the wisdom which he displayed in this work was no less remarkable than his devotion in it. I think he saw as deeply as any one that I have known into the principles which should govern us in our effort to reach the public who have been outside, and to make our religion serviceable in meeting all the various forms of human need.

I believe that the example of his patient experiment along those lines has been most instructive and helpful far beyond the limits of Plainfield or the State of New Jersey.

If I could have been with you on Sunday, I should have tried to express my sense of what we owe him; but I know that I should have failed to put it into words.

Except for other duties which I could not escape, I should certainly be with you. Very sincerely yours,

WILLIAM R. RICHARDS.

Mr. Newell knew of Mr. Squires' work at Hope probably as did not other of his assistants, as it was he who labored with him when the chapel had its hardest days. An inkling of what the late superintendent believed and accomplished was gained from the letter which Mr. Howard read as follows:

St. Claire Terrace,
Orange, N. J.,
October 20, 1906.

Dear Mr. Howard:

I am very sorry that I cannot join in the memorial service to do honor to the memory of Mr. Squires.

How can I express all that I feel about this great loss? It is because I have known Hope chapel so well that I appreciate the greatness of the loss. One purpose moved Mr. Squires —Hope chapel. It was his faith that moved the old chapel through the streets of Plainfield. It was his faith that tore down the old walls and built the additions. It was the faith of Mr. Squires that built the new chapel. He believed that the Hope chapel people could carry and pay the $2,000 mortgage.

The chapel stands free of debt today because the people did just what Mr. Squires believed they would do. "Memorial chapel" as a name, has a new significance today—it is a memorial of Mr. Squires' faith.

I must add a word about our superintendent's influence in this great Fourth ward. Other men have served longer in the Common Council than Mr. Squires did, but A doubt if any men has exercised a stronger influence in that council than he, during the past twenty years. His uncompromising stand against every form of evil was a tremendous power in this ward.

That the West End is so largely safeguarded against the saloon and other vicious influences is due in a great measure to his leadership among the hundreds of men with whom he came in contact, and whom he led in petition and active opposition against the inroads of harmful influences.

Mr. Squires believed in the bowling alley and the gymnasium but his great strength among us lay in his simple faith in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He never dreamed that a gymnasium could cure a man or that freedom from saloons meant the regeneration of a community. These were means to an end—the great end of bringing men to Christ.

The man shone in his greatest power when he would gather the teachers about him and lay before them the burdens of his heart and ask they to pray. No one believed in prayer more sincerely than our superintendent—and no one will ever forget the teachers' prayer meetings.

You know how Mr. Squires' large sympathy made him the especial friend of the unfortunate, the forsaken, the despairing. How well I remember the meeting, in '93, during the panic when he called us together to devise means of helping each other in the hard times. Over $1,000 was placed at the disposal of Hope chapel for those hard days, all because of the confidence men had in the policies of Hope which Mr. Squires directed.

My own personal loss cannot be fully described. I cannot feel, yet, that Mr. Squires is not in his old place. What his devotion to Hope chapel meant no one but the chapel minister can known. I thought I appreciated his singular consecration while it was my privilege to labor with him, but separation from such unsparing faithfulness has made my appreciation of it grow deeper.

May the benediction of this life rest upon us, calling us to a like faith and consecration.

Yours very sincerely,
O. K. NEWELL.

A third address was made by Dr. Zelie in which he declared that Mr. Squires' work at Hope chapel had enhanced the idea of Christian service everywhere. He never departed from this self-imposed task, the gaining of his livelihood was a small thing in comparison.

"We speak of it as a sacrifice," said Dr. Zelle, "but to him it was the great enjoyment of his life. Think of how many of the Beatitudes he could claim and you of Hope chapel have verily him. As his memory keeps coming back to you I want to give you a watch-word to go with it: "Not as in my presence but in my absence also."

Judge Runyon sang another solo and the fourth and last address was made by Mr. Lovell. In it he referred to the taking away of three great workers for Crescent Avenue church and its chapels, Mr. Ginna, Mr. Casboone and Mr. Squires. All had devoted their lives to the Master, he said, and were ready to go at His call. Their places in memories had been filled but their memories lingered and were an inspiration to those who had been left behind to take up the work. Of Mr. Squires he spoke in the same loving terms as did those who preceded him and in closing he declared he would be with his beloved people in spirit as long as Hope chapel existed.

The congregation sang "How Firm a Foundation" and the benediction was pronounced by Pastor Howard.

JOHN W. KEAN CONFIDENT

United States Senator Says Union County Will Go Republican.

THE LIQUOR AGITATION

Sage of Ursino Does Not Believe Bishops' Bill Will Prove All-Important Factor.

United States Senator John Kean, in an interview Saturday, declared that the political situation in the State boded no ill for the Republican party, and so far as he could see the party would be victorious this year in the same measure at it has been in the past. He said that he did not consider the Bishops' bill the foremost issue in the State and expressed himself as being of the opinion that the Independent ticket in Essex was in the main brought into the limelight by Prohibitionists, and while it might have a tendency to take votes from the Republican candidates, would prove an important factor in the campaign. He predicted a comfortable victory for the Republican ticket in Union county.

Senator Kean was approached by a newspaper man. "What do you think of the present political situation in the State, and what are the Republican chances for success?" he was asked.

"Well," replied the Senator, "I could tell you much better at a little later date."

"But what is the outlook at the present time?"

"The situation is improving, and, to my knowledge, the chances of Republican victory in the State are just as good this year as they have been in the past."

"Do you think that the Bishops' law has materially injured the Republican party and that it will affect the party's chances of success at the polls this election?" was asked.

"No," replied the Senator.

"Do you not think that the Bishops' bill is the foremost issue in the campaign, and that the success of the Republican party depends materially upon how they regard the issue?"

"No, I do not consider the Bishops' bill by any means the all-important issue."

When asked whether he thought the Colby movement was a thing of the past or whether there was still some chance of the "New Idea" movement winding out, the Senator smiled and asked his interviewer just what he thought of it. When the newspaper man said that it did not look as if the Colby movement would really pan out successfully for a few years to come, Senator Kean nodded his head and said, "Well, that's it."

"What do you think of the situation in our own county?" the Senator was asked.

"Union will go Republican," he said. "The Republican Assemblymen will all be elected."

Senator Kean was asked whether he thought that the passage of the Perkins and the Avis bills had settled permanently the question of railroad taxation in the State, to which he replied in the negative. He intimated that there was a probability of the local boards of assessors being given the power to tax railroad main stem property at local rates and that a law to this effect might be enacted in a short while.

Miss Ida M. Tier Surprised.

Miss Ida May Tier was given a delightful surprise at her home in Bank place, Saturday night. It was planned by the family to have Miss Tier remain away from home for the day, and in the meantime the house was elaborately decorated with autumn leaves and Japanese lanterns. The affair was a unique one. The guests were masked and dressed in Japanese costumes. At midnight supper was served, covers being laid for thirty. There were guests from New York, Brooklyn, Montclair, Fanwood and this city.

Martine On Two Tickets.

A separate nomination paper for James E. Martine, the Democratic congressional candidate, has been filed by the Independent Democracy. The Democratic party leaders forgot to file their Congressional nomination papers Saturday, but it is said that Mr. Martine's name will appear on the party ballot.

NOTED INVENTOR DEAD

Friederich Schreiner Developed the Manufacture of Stereotyping Machinery.

HAD MANY PATENTS

Was Associated for Years With Potter Press Works But Recently Erected His Own Plant in the East End.

Following an illness of one month with bronchial pneumonia, Friederich Schreiner, of West Sixth street, died at his home Sunday. He had been a resident of this city for the past sixteen years and was widely known.

Mr. Schreiner was born in Germany fifty-four years ago and came to this country when a young man. He located in Philadelphia and took up the manufacture of printing press supplies. Being of an inventive turn of mind he devoted considerable attention to stereotyping and soon patented some valuable labor-saving devices and improvements over the old style of machinery. Later he developed the stereotyping process to such an extent that he became known both in America and Europe as an expert in this line.

On coming to Plainfield, he entered into a partnership with the Potter Press Company and was there a number of years before attempting for himself. He recently built a plant for the manufacture of his patents at North avenue and Berckman street, where the business rapidly increased. It required so much of his time that he found it necessary to form a partnership with David Huston, of Louisville, Ky., who travels for the firm.

Mr. Schreiner has also been widely known in manufacturing circles as the first man to make a success of the cold stereotyping process. His inventions enjoyed a wide sale both at home and abroad and are used by the foremost papers in America. His latest invention was a stereotype pressing machine, which was added at the Potter Press Works, and which Mr. Huston has been introducing among the big printing plants of the country. He was a member of the German Reformed church.

There are surviving a wife and two sons, Berthold J. Schreiner, the druggist, and Robert Schreiner, who is head clerk at L. W. Randolph's pharmacy. The funeral will be held at the late home, Sixth and Division streets, Wednesday afternoon at 2:30.

A LIVELY CLIMAX TO A CHURCH ROW.

Rev. Gideon M. Shott's Church Has a Stormy Session.

Dissensions has broken out in the Lyons Farms Baptist church as a result of differences dating back a long time and which culminated last night in a stormy congregational meeting. For two years, it is said, there have been two factions in the church, one of which was led by the pastor, Rev. Gideon M. Shott, formerly pastor of the Scotch Plains Baptist church.

A month ago Mr. Shott appointed a committee, consisting of Isaac Hedden, John Winans, C. C. Bailey, John Davidson, W. G. Muller and Taylor Jeffreys, to consider the standing of delinquent members and to report last night. The meeting was largely attended and the committee recommended that twenty members be deprived of the "right of fellowship" for a year, and in the event of their failing to pay church dues by that time to be suspended.

The report caused an uproar, and the faction opposing Mr. Shott charged that every one of the twenty members was arrayed against the pastor and that they were being discriminated against. Motion after motion was made, but each was lost sight of, it is said, in the heat of discussion.

Mr. Shott admits that angry words had been exchanged. He also says a good deal of the bad feeling was caused by his refusal to allow festivals in the church. But the origin of the trouble within the organization he adds, dates back many years. Mr. Shott declared the report of the committee was a fair one.

BURGLAR IN BOROUGH HOME.

Got $123 Worth of Loot from Servant's Room.

Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Barkalew, of Lincoln place, retired early last night, but were awakened shortly after 8 o'clock by the noise of someone passing down a rear stairway. Mrs. Barkalew, at the head of the flight just in time to see a man make his escape by way of a door. An investigation was made and it was found that a burglar had visited a servant's room and stolen a gold locket, clothing and other things valued in all at $125. The servant was not home at the time.

The matter was reported to the borough police and they were quickly on the scene but so far have gained no clue to the identity of the intruder.

Grand Regent Will Be Here.

The grand regent and other officers will pay an official visit to Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, Thursday night. It is hoped that there will be a representative gathering. The grand regent will distribute souvenirs of the occasion.

PISTOL IN LABOR FIGHT

Union Man Grazed by a Non-Union Man's Bullet.

SATURDAY NIGHT CLASH

One Non-Union Man Charged With Homicidal Assault, Two Others With Assault and Battery.

Gunplay, which has been threatening for several weeks, broke out in the conflict between the union men and the non-union men among the machinists, Saturday night. In a row between two union sympathizers and four non-union employes of the Scott Press Works on South avenue, Alexander G. Aitken, twenty-five years old, employed at the Watson & Stillman plant in Aldene, one of the union men, was slightly wounded in the left groin by a bullet alleged to have been fired by Eugene Wheeler, one of the Scott quartette. Wheeler was arrested after the shooting, and was remanded this morning, by Justice Mosher, for a hearing tomorrow morning.

Aitken and Jacobson clashed with Wheeler and his companion in front of Aleck Findlay's saloon on East Second street, at 9 o'clock. Jacobson, who is a special agent of the Machinists' Union, claims that the fight started with an attack on him by Charles Gordon and George A. Nelson, two of the non-union men. Wheeler, it is reported, came to the support of his companions, and the fight became general. The fourth non-union man was Frank W. Fenton.

A few minutes of tusseling was climaxed by three shots. One of the bullets struck Aitken in the groin, inflicting a flesh wound. He saw a revolver in Wheeler's hand, it is alleged, and closed with him, wrenching the weapon away.

Wheeler broke from the group and ran down the street. He turned up Park avenue, toward Front street, and ran into Chief of Police Kiely on the corner.

"I've been shot," he cried, and the chief opened a question box immediately. As soon as the chief caught the drift of Wheeler's story, he chased him into police headquarters and hustled to Second street. The row ended just before the Chief got to the scene, and the men scattered. Nelson and Fenton were caught on West Second street, near Park avenue. They were locked up as witnesses, and Gordon was added to the bag latter, at his boarding house, 440 West Sixth street. Aitken surrendered himself, and was put into the hands of Dr. R. B. Barkalow, the city physician. The bullet was found inside his trousers leg, to where it had glanced.

He was allowed to go after swearing out a complaint of assault with intent to kill against Wheeler. Gordon, Nelson and Fenton were released after a hearing before Mayor Buckle last night.

Wheeler was represented before Justice Mosher, this morning, by G. W. V. Mor. The lawyer demanded either an immediate hearing or the release of his client on bail. Chief Kisly was not ready to proceed with the State's case, and the court re*manded the prisoner as he requested.*

Mr. Moy repeated his demand for bail, but the justice said he did not believe he had authority to grant it. He took the request under advisement.

In a statement made to Chief Kiely, Wheeler declared that he drew a revolver in self-defence. He pleaded not guilty to the charge made by Aitken.

After the hearing, Jacobson swore out complaints of assault against Gordon and Nelson.

This is the second time within two weeks that a revolver has figured in a clash between union men and non-union men. Wheeler, it is said, was one of the men who was involved in the gunplay at Henry Windham's cafe. The trouble between the machinists grows out of strikes that the union is trying to maintain at the Scott Works and the Krom Machine Works. The management of both plants deny that there is a strike, and insist that the men were discharged.

Francis J. Blatz has been retained to represent the complainant in the shooting case.

Captain Hand's Narrow Escape.

George Endicott, the young son of Dr. Endicott, was driving an automobile on Park avenue, this morning, when Captain William Hand, riding a wheel, attempted to cross on Second street. Young Endicott saw a collision was inevitable and applied his emergency brake, lessening the power of the machine, that it stopped just as it struck the wheelman. Captain Hand was knocked over but the force was not sufficient to hurt him.

Louisa Mast.

Louisa Mast, daughter of the late Bernard Mast, died at her home on Watchung avenue, this morning. Although ill for some months her health had improved greatly during the summer and her death came as a great shock to her friends. She had been a resident of this city but a short time. The funeral service will be private and interment will be made in the Lutheran cemetery, Brooklyn.

VIOLA ALLEN PORTRAYS SHAKESPEARE'S "IMOGEN"

GIFTED ACTRESS AT HER BEST IN THE DIFFICULT ROLE.

Charles W. Allen's new production of "Cymbeline" with Miss Viola Allen in the role of "Imogen," held the boards at the New Plainfield theatre, Saturday night, and drew a large gathering of Shakespearean lovers, the second of the week. Artistically it went far beyond anything that has been seen at the playhouse since its opening and the work of Miss Allen and her company established a local standard that will remain for many days to come.

Although the drama was introduced in 1633 and presented repeatedly when Shakespearean productions were the rule rather than the exception, few stars have essayed the part of "Imogen" in America during the past fifty years. The last was Adelaide Neilson, who appeared in New York shortly before her death in Paris. The action calls for the barbaric splendor of the early Britons contrasted with the luxury and elegance of the patrician Romans twenty-five years after the Roman invasion of Britain and has given the stage managers opportunity for remarkably picturesque settings. There are in all fourteen massive scenic sets and for the Allen production there is an unusual entire act drop. The costuming has been done with accuracy in mind.

Those who had seen Miss Allen last season in "The Toast of the Town" and also at various times in "The Christian", and "The Eternal City" were enabled to note the capabilities of the accomplished actress. She imparted to the role of "Imogen" the combinell grace, delicacy of conception and womanly tenderness that are so necessary for the proper intrepretation of this most exacting of Shakespearean heroines. Miss Allen is still a young woman and when the occasion demanded, she gave to her lines the fire and enthusiasm that have stamped her as an artiste of the first rank and confirmed the fact that she has a role well suited to her temperament and talent.

Miss Allen's supporting company is the best she has ever been given and includes such well known players as J. H. Gilmour, Sidney Herbert, C. Leslie Allen, Fuller Mellish, Jefferson Winter, Margaret Montrose and Ivia Denton.

GERMANS FOR MARTINE

Farmer-Orator Captures German-Americans at Saengerbund Gathering.

SPEAKS OF HIS KINSHIP

His Mother Came From the Rhenish Country—Great Execution in First Attack on the Ten Pins.

James E. Martine took a few minutes off from campaign hustlings last week to roll his first bowling game. He was introduced to the sport at the Saengerbund.

Mr. Martine was the guest of the organization. There was no special event on, but the coming of the farmer-orator made the evening something of an occasion.

Bowling was on when he got to the hall, and he became interested in the sport. But little urging was necessary to get him in the game. Taking off his coat, he rolled up his sleeves, seized the biggest ball within reach and hurled it with Democratic fervor at the pins.

The veteran bowlers prepared to chuckle, but they had to choke the chuckle off and cheer. For the ball, possibly surprised at the force behind it, the alley hand, fell against the pins with a mighty bump and laid them all low. Mr. Martine was the only one who was not amazed.

"Well, is that all there is to it?" he said. "If it was as easy to knock over the Republican ticket we Democrats would never be licked."

Mr. Martine took another ball and hurled it down the alley. The vets cheered again as every pin tumbled down.

"Oh, I tell you, my German blood will show!" said Mr. Martine, as he took another ball in hand.

Then in quick succession he rolled eight balls expertly down the gutters. And the vets were courteous enough to refrain from laughing more than ten minutes at a stretch.

In his particular field, however, Mr. Martine upheld his record. He made a speech that warmed the hearts of all the German-Americans present.

He was glad to be present, he said, because his audience was of German descent. He had acquired his fondness for Germans in the most natural way, for the mother from whose breast he drew the milk of love and liberty came from Germany, near the Rhine.

He admired the traits and the virtues of the Germans, he continued, more especially their thrift and genius. He believed that the Germans had done more to advance athletics in this country in the past twenty-five years, with their gymnastic exercises, than any other group of men. Their enjoyment of life had done much to give a healthy tone to the National activities, for the native American, unaffected by such an influence, was too intense. Their *devotion to stag*ing and music in general was a particularly fruitless influence.

He was not there to campaign, he said in closing, but it was useless for him to try to obscure the fact that he was a candidate for office. He would be less than human if he did not like the complimentary plaudits of his fellows, and less of a man than he thought himself if he did not desire their endorsement. He asked that they help him to make a gratifying showing in his contest. They called him Jim Martine and hailed him as a friend. He asked them that after the election, whether he was successful or not, he would be the same old Jim Martine. Should he be elected he would represent not only his constituents, but, so far as he might with propriety and propriety be permitted, he would represent all the people of the community.

A supper was enjoyed in the visitor's honor. There was a large attendance of members.

Photogravures of Candidates.

Two handsome portraits, genuine photogravures, such as sell in art stores at $2 each, the subjects being Edwin S. Stuart and Lewis Emory, Jr., candidates for the Governorship of Pennsylvania, will be issued as supplements to the Sunday North American for October 21 and October 28. The Stuart picture will be issued on October 21 and that of Mr. Emory on the following Sunday. The editor of this paper has secured advance copies of the two portraits, and announces them works of art of the highest class. Nothing so good has ever been issued as a special supplement. As the editions of the Sunday North American for these two dates will be limited and the demand unusually large, it will be necessary to order the paper in advance to insure delivery.

First Meeting of Creditors.

William N. Tier, of this city, having been adjudicated bankrupt in the District Court of the United States, Atwood L. DeCoster, referee in bankruptcy, has given notice that the first meeting of Mr. Tier's creditors will be held at the referee's office in the Corry building, 1004 Broad street, Elizabeth, on Wednesday morning, October 31, at 10 o'clock. At that time the creditors will have an opportunity to prove their claims, appoint a trustee, examine the bankrupt and consider such other business as may come before the meeting.

MR. FISK'S NAME ON BOTH TICKETS

REPUBLICAN MAYORALTY CANDIDATE ACCEPTS DEMOCRATIC ENDORSEMENT

Former Mayor Charles J. Fisk has issued the following letter, which is self-explanatory:

"October 17, 1906.

"Walter L. Hetfield, Esq.,
"Chairman Democratic City Convention.
"Plainfield, N. J.

"Dear Sir:—

"I am in receipt of your communication notifying me of the action taken by the delegates at the Democratic City Convention, endorsing my nomination for Mayor of the City of Plainfield. I appreciate the confidence you have in me to justly and fairly administer the affairs of the city. I have already been nominated and accepted the nomination from the Republican party in accordance with the platform adopted by the Republican City Convention, on which platform I have agreed to stand. On these same conditions, without pledge to any party affiliations, I accept your endorsement.

"Thanking you and your associates for the compliment, I remain,

"Yours very truly,

"CHAS. J. FISK."

City Collector John W. Murray, who was endorsed for re-election with Mr. Fisk, has also accepted the honor. He informed Mr. Hetfield of his acceptance verbally.

MISS FULLER BRIDE OF A DUNELLENITE

CHARLES M. FEDDERMAN THE GROOM AT PRETTY WEDDING.

Amid a profusion of autumn leaves and flowers and surrounded by a large gathering of relatives and friends, Miss Carrie Florence Fuller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd D. Fuller, of Arlington avenue, and Charles Meunson Fedderman, of Dunellen, were married Wednesday. The ceremony was performed at 7:30 at the bride's home by Rev. Charles L. Goodrich, pastor of the Congregational church. It was one of the prettiest weddings of the fall season and was witnessed by guests from New York, Brooklyn, Elmira, Elizabeth, Fanwood, Dunellen and other places.

Miss Fuller was gowned in a pretty creation of white crepe de chine, trimmed with bridemaids lace, sent her by her brother, George Fuller, of Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic. She wore a veil caught up with Riles-of-the-valley and carried a bouquet of the same flower and bride roses. Her attendant was her sister, Miss Lulu Harriet Fuller, who as maid of honor, wore white net and carried carnations.

The best man was D. J. Kilketts, of Brooklyn, and Ray Webster Fuller and Frederick Fedderman acted as ushers. The latter wore pink ribbons girls, Ruth Fuller and Thelma Curtis, attired in white over pink, and Roberts Earl Fuller, nephew of the bride, was page. Miss Louise Mygrant, of Fanwood, a cousin of the bride, played the wedding march while the bridal party was assembling and presided at the piano during the ceremony. Miss Fuller entered the room leaning on the arm of her father who gave her in marriage. The young couple and the officiating clergyman stood beneath a canopy of greens and upon a rug of Patagonian guanaco skins, also sent by the bride's brother.

A reception followed the pronouncing of the words that completed the nuptial bond and later a wedding supper was served. Mr. and Mrs. Fedderman left last night for a trip as far as Old Point Comfort at which place they will spend a short time. On returning they will make their home in Brooklyn where a furnished flat awaits them. The groom is employed in Brooklyn as an expert accountant.

Both young people received a large number of handsome presents which included silverware, pictures, furniture, china and checks. In the exchange of gifts in the bridal party, the groom gave his best man and ushers pearl stickpins and the maid of honor received from the bride a pretty pearl brooch. The groom's gift to the bride was a string of gold beads.

TO INSTALL NEW BOILER.

Change to Be Made at the New Plainfield Theatre at Once.

Manager W. S. Counihan, of the New Plainfield theatre, has contracted with George J. Tobin to install at once in the basement of the playhouse a 60-horse power Manger Company's high-pressure tubular boiler. It will be used in heating the building, the present apparatus having been found inadequate. It supplied sufficient warmth for the auditorium but the proscenium was not enough for the stage or lodge rooms.

The new boiler will be equipped to run a motor as it is Mr. Counihan's intention to have an independent electric lighting plant next season. He proposes to have a system capable of caring for 800 or 1,000 globes, thus giving him increased lighting facilities. The new boiler will represent an outlay of $1,600 and will care for the house for years to come.

ARCADE FOR NORTH AVE.

David T. Kenney Purchases Taylor Stores and Will Tear Them Down.

TO ERECT A BUILDING

Deal Includes Numbers 153 to 163 North Avenue, Running Through to Second Street.

David T. Kenney, of North Plainfield, president of the Vacuum Cleaner Company, has made another big realty purchase, this time his operation being in the very heart of the business section of the city. The deal includes seventy-two feet on North avenue, half way between Park avenue and Watchung avenues, running through to East Second street, a depth of 200 feet. It is his intention to build a handsome arcade facing on North avenue and running through Park through to Second street.

The deal includes the buildings occupied by the Postal Telegraph Company, Clevely's restaurants, Lister's bicycle store and the real estate offices of Abbott and Manning. These buildings are numbered 153, 155, 157, 159, 161, 163 North avenue. The lots in the rear for the most part are unoccupied.

For many years, Rev. J. P. Taylor, a retired Episcopal minister living on Park avenue, has owned these buildings. He is a large owner in valuable realty in the business section, which has enhanced greatly in value during the last few years. The price paid him by Mr. Kenney is not revealed.

In speaking of his plans this morning, Mr. Kenney said: "The papers have not been signed but I expect that they will be today. It has been my idea that a handsome arcade would be a nice thing in that locality. There has been much talk of the need of a thoroughfare through from North avenue to Second street, between Park and Watchung avenues. My plans will bring it about. I am not prepared to give any definite outline of the plans as yet, but I may do so in a few days."

It is understood that Mr. Kenney will erect a three or four story building of arcade style on the plot. The present buildings, old wooden structures but one story in heighth, have been somewhat of an eyesore. Being directly opposite the Jersey Journal's main station, these structures have conveyed a false impression of the progressive spirit and uptodateness of the city. The various leases on the buildings it is said have not long to run, after which they expire the buildings will be torn down.

Only recently, Mr. Kenney bought a big tract of land on the southern slope of the Watchung mountains between North Plainfield and Scotch Plains. A good part of it he subsequently gave to the Trenton diocese for an institution to be known as St. Mary's College.

NEW JERSEY IS SURELY ADVANCING.

Federal Census Shows This State Is Becoming Great Industrial Centre.

According to the report of the federal census taken last year of the manufacturing industries of this State and forwarded to the bureau of statistics of labor and industry here, New Jersey is showing great gains as a manufacturing centre.

The total number of industrial establishments in the State in 1905 was 7,011, as compared with 6,415 in 1900. The capital employed was $716,946,545, against $477,380,065 in 1900, showing an increase of fifty per cent. The number of wage earners increased 24.5 per cent. from 213,975 to 266,387; while the wages increased from $95,164,913 to $126,182,633, an increase of 34.7 per cent. The cost of material rose from $234,749,904 to $378,554,560, and the value of the finished articles from $553,005,634 to $774,618,029.

In Camden the number of wage earners increased from 7,742 to 12,661, the wages from $3,216,943 to $4,087,812 or 69.6 per cent. Capital increased from $15,593,565 to $31,992,487 or 105.2 per cent. The value of the products increased from $17,969,954 to $33,587,273, or 36.9 per cent.

The report shows that the wages have increased far in advance of the increase in the number of employes along all lines of industry and that the past half decade has been the most prosperous in the history of the State.

A BIBLE DRAMA.

To Be Presented at Congregational Church Sunday Night.

Novelty will mark the service at the Congregational church Sunday night. Under the auspices of the Sunday-school, a Biblical drama, entitled "Moses the Liberator," arranged by the Pilgrim's Press, will be presented.

There are nine characters in the drama. It will begin at 7:30 o'clock.

A Birthday Surprise.

Walter Chandler, of Manning avenue, was tendered a birthday surprise at his home last night. Friends from New York, Brookly and this city were in attendance.

WARREN CHAPEL SOCIETY HEARS PLEASANT NEWS

GETS $100 CHECK AND PROMISE OF MORE BY DUPLICATING AMOUNT.

The Missionary and Aid Society of Warren chapel held an all day sewing meeting, yesterday, during which garments were prepared for the Christmas box and for Ellis Island. The members assembled at 9:30 and from then on until 1 o'clock they plied their needles as busily as the proverbial bee. At the latter hour adjournment was made while a luncheon was served, consisting of cold boiled ham, baked beans, creamed potatoes, pickles, sliced tomatoes, hot rolls and coffee, pumpkin pie and cheese. It was served under the direction of a refreshment committee composed of Mrs. J. H. Snyder, Mrs. F. C. Burner, Mrs. John Higgins and Mrs. William Demarest. The tables were prettily decorated with cut flowers and plants and fifty members of the society sat down.

Mrs. Shaw was in charge of Mrs. Gibson Smith and Mrs. J. W. Gavett and matters had been so arranged by them that a very gratifying number previous to the luncheon, the society was addressed by Mrs. J. O. McKelvey who announced that she held a check for $100, the gift of a friend who had promised it in the event of the Missionary and Aid raising a similar amount for the new Warren chapel furnishing fund. This has been done and the diners were made happy by the receipt of the additional money.

When the last course had been served, Mrs. McKelvey made another announcement that brought equally as much pleasure to everyone of the members. She stated that the same friend would give another $100 under the same conditions and almost immediately $20 was pledged. The society has already raised about $600 for the fund and every effort will be made to get the promised check which will bring the total up to $800.

STATE SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION ON NOV. 13 TO 15.

Annual Meeting of New Jersey Association Will Be Held in Somerville.

A preliminary programme has been completed for the annual meeting of the New Jersey State Sunday-school Association, which will be held in the Second Reformed church, Somerville, November 13, 14 and 15. Nearly all of the county associations have elected their delegates, and the Somerville Sunday-schools are making elaborate plans for the entertainment of the guests.

Each Sunday-school has the privilege of being represented, but only those presenting official credentials will re ceive badges admitting them to the body of the convention.

Two workers of the International Sunday-school Association will have a place on the programme. One is Mrs. J. Woodbridge Barnes, of Newark, principal junior secretary, and the other is Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner, of Illinois, international field worker. Mrs. Barnes will speak Thursday afternoon, and her subject will be "Our New Ideals." Mrs. Bryner will talk Friday morning on "Sunday-school Work Under Difficulties," and the same afternoon on "Reaching the Child We Teach."

An effort is being made by the Young People's missionary movement to have introduced into the Sunday-school sessions, leave being granted, periodical Bible lessons on missions. In line with this movement the New Jersey society has invited Rev. Dr. A. Woodruff Halsey, of New York, one of the secretaries of the Board of Foreign Missions, to be the speaker Tuesday night, November 13. His topic will be "The Teaching of Missions in the Sunday-school."

A feature of the gathering will be the sixth annual banquet of the New Jersey Sunday-school Superintendents' Union, which will be held Wednesday night. Charles Madison, of Newark, is making arrangements for the dinner. Prosecutor James L. Griggs, of Somerville, who is the State president, will be the chairman. The chorister will be Rev. B. C. Lippincott, Jr.

The convention will open at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. After devotional exercises there will be a home department institute and an institute for elementary field workers. An exhibit of Sunday-school materials will be held, and Rev. Dr. Milton S. Littlefield, of New York city, will explain some of the modern innovations in teaching Sunday-school lessons.

CELEBRATED HER BIRTHDAY.

Miss Dorothy Martin Entertains Company of Playmates.

In celebration of the ninth anniversary of her birthday, Miss Dorothy Martin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph C. Martin, of Duer street, gave a party yesterday afternoon. The house was prettily decorated, red and green being the prevailing colors. Supper was served. Miss Martin received some gifts. Those present were the Misses Madeline and Marion Blair, Gertrude King, May Bennett, Jubilee Bowley, Edna Force, Helen Woodruff, Blanche Stout, Catherine Day, Lucy and Mabel Douglass, of this city, and Miss Frances Speer and Luther Speer, of Bangor, Pa., cousins of Miss Martin.

SHAW FAILED TO DRAW

A Slim Crowd at Elizabeth Meeting Upsets the Party Leaders.

ONLY ABOUT 600 THERE

Treasury Secretary Went to Elizabeth from Here, After Dinner at the Home of Charles J. Fisk.

Following a dinner in this city, Wednesday, ecretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw went to Elizabeth to speak at a Republican mass meeting that disappointed the party leaders. Mr. Shaw's speech was a splendid one, but the meeting was so thinly attended as to set grave lines in the faces of the Republican campaign managers this morning.

Not many more than 600 people were in Jacobs' theatre when the meeting began. They all remained until the end, and they made a commendable showing as earnest cheerers for the party of Lincoln, McKinley, Roosevelt and protection, but the captains of the host were faced by the unexpected gaps in their ranks.

Secretary Shaw was the drawing card counted upon to fill the theatre for a rousing meeting for Republicanism and Mr. Fowler. Mr. Shaw went to Elizabeth from this city shortly after 7 o'clock in company with Charles J. Fisk, whose guest he was at dinner. Mr. Fisk and Mr. Shaw came here from New York early last evening with just about time for dinner.

Ex-Governor Foster M. Voorhees presided at the meeting, while on the stage were Senator Kean, Congressman Fowler, Mayor Berry, Mr. Fisk, County Chairman Frank H. Smith, and most of the party leaders in Union county. The stage and theatre were elaborately decorated with American flags.

Secretary Shaw received a warm welcome when he was introduced, and sustained applause when he finished his address. His speech was mainly devoted to an exposition and defence of the protective tariff, and he dwelt on the benefits derived by the American workingmen from this policy. His remarks were sprinkled with humorous illustrations which pleased his hearers immensely. He praised the administration of President Roosevelt, and made an eloquent plea that its policy be sustained and the President sustained in his work for the people, by the re-election of a Republican House of Representatives.

The speaker paid a tribute to the work done in Congress by Representative Fowler, and ridiculed the Democratic candidate's argument that Mr. Fowler should not be sent back because he had steadily failed to answer rollcalls. He declared that it was always the Congressman most prompt in answering rollcall who did the most legislative work, and mentioned the late Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania, and Senator Allison, of Iowa, as examples of hard workers at Washington who were conspicuous for absence from rollcalls, but who kept in close touch with all legislation enacted and helped to frame a large part of it. Chas. Newell Fowler, he said, was another such quiet, effective worker, and richly merited a re-election. These references to Representative Fowler were applauded.

Ex-Governor Voorhees followed the Iowan in a speech which pleased the audience, and which was roundly applauded.

IN MEMORIAM CATHERINE R. WEBSTER.

"The Gospel of a life like hers
Is more than books or scrolls.
From scheme and creed the life goes out
The saintly fact survives—
The blessed Master none can doubt,
Revealed in holy lives.

Several days before Miss Webster passed away, she seemed to be constantly thinking of the friends who had departed a half century since.

The Quaker poet wrote:

"When on my day of life the night is falling,
And, in the winds from unsunned places blown,
I hear far voices out of darkness calling,
My feet to paths unknown,
Be near me when all else is from me drifting,
Earth, sky, home's pictures, days of shade and shine,
And kindly faces to my own uplifting,
The love which answers mine."

Trinity Reformed's Election.

The annual election of three elders and three deacons for Trinity Reformed church, took place last night in the lecture room of the church after the prayer meeting. George L. Van Emburgh, Robert Clark, Jr., and H. S. Gayle were unanimously re-elected elders, and A. K. Willett, William F. Oliver and William Krimey were elected deacons, the two first mentioned being re-elected and the latter taking the place of T. R. Van Zandt, who refused a re-nomination. Elder F. E. Smith was chosen chairman of the meeting and Deacon Edgar F. Sheppard was chosen clerk. The tellers were John Hofman and F. S. Cutter.

PRELATE OFFICIATES AT MRS. TYLER'S FUNERAL

BEAUTIFUL MUSIC BY SOLOISTS OF CHURCH OF TRANSFIGURATION.

The large attendance of relatives and friends at the funeral services of Mrs. Elizabeth Marcuret Tyler, wife of Col. Mason W. Tyler, held from the late home in West Seventh street, Wednesday afternoon at 2:26 o'clock, was an impressive tribute to her life and character. Among the mourners were many who have been associated with Mrs. Tyler in church and charitable work, also many old friends from out of town and who learned to love and admire her for her many excellent qualities.

During the services there were four selections by a quartette from the Church of the Transfiguration, New York, composed of R. Craig Campbell, J. R. Bolton, Willett Seaman and R. L. Barnhart. Their selections were "Abide With Me," "Son of Sorrow," "Art Thou Weary," and "All Ye Saints."

Although it was requested that flowers be omitted, there were a number of beautiful floral tributes which surrounded and covered the bier. The interment was in Hillside cemetery, the pall-bearers were Alexander Gilbert, John B. Dumont, J. Evarts Tracy, Orville T. Waring, Charles Matthews and W. F. Merrill.

STRIKE AT OIL TRUST LIKEWISE RAILROADS.

Senator Minturn Outlines Work He Has Prepared for Legislature During Winter.

Senator James F. Minturn, of Hudson county, intends to introduce at the next session of the Legislature a bill to abolish the State riparian board and to establish a newly constituted body, with enlarged powers. Mr. Minturn will also introduce a bill to establish a railroad and canal commission that will not only provide for general and close supervision of the railroad business of this State but will also regulate the rate of the Standard Oil pipe line traffic here, and for putting a large tax thereon.

Senator Minturn says these bills will be introduce early in the session so that ample time will be had in which to give the measure thorough consideration and prevent their being stalled in committee.

Speaking of his plans, the Senator from Hudson had this to say:

"Unfair rates are stunting the growth of many of our larger towns to an extent that can hardly be appreciated until one has made a careful study of the matter. There are places in our State, not more than 30 miles apart, between which the fare charged is greater than to New York city, three times farther away. I consider the manner of selling excursion tickets to such points as unfair to many localities.

"And the siding privilege, in the granting of which the grossest discrimination is sometimes practiced, is a matter over which the State should have control.

"I also intend that the bill shall contain a provision for regulating trolley fares in cities and suburban districts, a casual study of which subject will show there now exists no uniformity whatever. I think, too, trolley companies should have the right to carry freight in competition with steam roads.

"But perhaps one of the most important features of the bill will relate to the control of the pipe line traffic of the Standard Oil company in this State.

"I propose that this traffic shall be regulated as are other carriers, and that their pipe line properties and business shall be taxed in accordance with their value, so that the State may receive a proper annual return for the privilege enjoyed by the Standard Oil company in crossing the State with their lines."

TWELVE YEARS WEDDED.

Mr. and Mrs. James R. Blair Celebrate Event.

Mr. and Mrs. James R. Blair, of Duer street, informally celebrated the twelfth anniversary of their wedding, Wednesday, by entertaining a company of forty relatives and intimate friends. There were selections on the piano by Mrs. Edward Craig. Mr. and Mrs. Blair were remembered with many handsome gifts, including cut-glass and silverware. Later in the evening a fine supper was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Blair were married twelve years ago at Duer street and Lincoln place by Rev. Charles E. Herring, of the First Presbyterian church, and they have always resided in the borough. They have three children, two daughters, Madeline and Ruth Blair, and one son, Robert James Blair.

"Marty" O'Loughlin, the "pro" at the Plainfield Country Club, and Harry Dills, of this city, appeared at an entertainment given by the Eagles of New Brunswick, last night. They gave clever bag punching exhibitions.

H. C. SQUIRES AT REST

Concourse of Friends Gather About His Bier while Ministers Pay Him Tribute.

DR. BLISS' EULOGY

Impressive Services at Crescent Avenue Church—Church Officers Honorary Pall Bearers.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Henry Chadwick Squires were held at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church Thursday afternoon. The edifice was filled with members of the church together with a large number from Hope chapel, of which he was one of the founders and of which he was superintendent for years.

Rev. D. J. S. Zelie, pastor of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, was in charge of the services, which began with the reading of Scriptures, followed with prayer by Rev. L. R. Howard. After the quartette sang "Abide With Me," Dr. Zelie and Mr. Howard both read Scripture selections.

Rev. Dr. John C. Bliss, of New York, who made the address, was well acquainted with Mr. Squires and his religious work in the church, while he was pastor, and in Hope chapel. Dr. Bliss spoke feelingly of the departed, dwelling on the friendship he had with Mr. Squires and how he had grown and developed him and what a help he was in the cause of religion.

Dr. Bliss said that Mr. Squires had a heart full of sympathy for others and his death was the going out from a home where the ties were sacred. He spoke of the great loss to the church, where he made such noble sacrifices and worked so earnestly and faithfully as an elder and as a teacher of the young men's Bible class. He referred impressively to the blessed work at Hope chapel, and said that he never met him but that Mr. Squires did not mention the work at the chapel and refer to the good work being done by the different members. He had a very personal relationship with his workers.

The speaker said that his heart was full of sympathy with those who will miss Mr. Squires. He considered it no small matter to have such a worker taken away and it was not surprising to him that to bereaved ones it seemed as though all the light had gone out of the skies when such a sorrow comes. He spoke of the many noble lives it had been the privilege of the church to have as workers and of the call of honor might be made. There is rejoicing, however, to know that they are with the Lord, that they have been called to that far better land with all the redeemed of the Lord.

In conclusion Dr. Bliss said that there was nothing that would give Mr. Squires more joy than to know that all his friends had given their hearts to Christ and would try and serve Him. He made an earnest appeal to those present to emulate the life and character of him who had gone before and to serve Christ with all their hearts.

Following the address, the quartette sang "Lead Kindly Light," and Rev. Dr. Bliss pronounced the benediction. Former pastor of Hope chapel, but now pastor of the St. Cloud Presbyterian church, West Orange, offered a fervent prayer. The benediction was pronounced by Dr. Zelie.

At the close of the service the remains were placed in the vestibule of the church and as the congregation passed out they took a last look at the face of one who for thirty years had been an elder of the church and an earnest worker for all its interests.

There were many beautiful floral tributes, comprising cut flowers, wreaths of flowers, bunches of chrysanthemums and galax leaves, which completely covered the casket. Wm. E. McClymont was the organist. A quartette choir consisting of Miss Etta Rayhert, soprano; Miss Grace Carroll, contralto; Elmer D. Cutting, tenor, and Charles L. Lewis, bass, sang two selections, "Abide With Me," and "Lead Kindly Light."

The interment was in Hillside cemetery and the pall-bearers, members and active workers at Hope chapel, were Donald McInnis, David Bowden, Fred Wharton, Robert Storal, Walter Bradford and Thomas Heddon. Deacons H. C. Newman, T. P. Budlong and S. H. Whitney, together with all the elders of the church, escorted the body in and out of the church.

Hope chapel sent an ivy wreath, and there were cut flowers and wreaths from the Men's Class, the Men's Bible Class, the Ladies' Aid Society and the Women's Bible Class.

QUERY FOR CANDIDATES.

Liquor Law Quiz by President of Christian Endeavor Union.

Fred C. Lounsbury, Jr., president of the Christian Endeavor Union, announced this morning that he intended to write to the assembly nominees of both parties and question them as to their attitude toward the proposed modification or repeal of the Bishops' law.

The union has not taken any action in connection with the subject, but Mr. Lounsbury feels that he is acting in the spirit of the organization. The replies of the candidates will be placed before the Union.

POLITICAL PEN PICTURES

A Millionaire and a Farmer Rival Candidates For Congressional Honors.

THEIR WAYS AND VIEWS

C. N. Fowler Almost Unknown at Home—J. E. Martine Beloved By His Townspeople.

In his characteristic and delightfully entertaining way, H. B. Walker, the Washington correspondent of the Newark Evening News, pictures the rival candidates and accurately describes the situation in the Fifth Congressional district. The story as it appeared Wednesday in the Newark Evening News, with its splendid tributes to James E. Martine, is here with reproduced:

Two men who started in life as farmers boys are running for election to Congress in the Fifth District of New Jersey. One of these farmer boys went to college, studied law, became a great corporate and lives in a magnificent modern mansion. The other left school at fifteen to help support the family, remained on the farm and today is still poor. Has not a million dollars and is not interested in clearing schemes, but walks the streets of his home city, Plainfield, and chats with its inhabitants. The other, sticking to the farm and giving his life to the exposure of political frauds, never made a dollar, though they proved unsuccessful, is known almost by every man, woman and child in the town which he has seen grow from a village to a city.

The Fifth Congressional District consists of Union, Morris and Warren counties. One, Charles N. Fowler, is prominence, banker, millionaire and orator, has been a Republican leader for years. The other, James E. Martine, the Democratic nominee, is a farmer, lawyer, banker and political office, although he is one of the most prominent and picturesque figures in the Democratic party of the State. Fowler, in eleven years of service in Congress, has voted with the Republicans all and regular. Martine is as much of a party man as his opponent, but he voted to that wing of the party which the conservatives call radical. Fowler loved and sportingly fought Roosevelt, but he loves Roosevelt as a great man, but possibly no apostle. Martine is a warm and personal friend and admirer of Bryan, likes Hearst and believes in his sincerity and principles, but has never failed to vote the partisan regularity in giving equal support to Champ Clark and Woodrow Wilson, a close friend of George R. McClellan.

Fowler has called to his aid in his effort to secure re-election Secretary of the Treasury Leslie R. Shaw, a standpatter, who has always voted with the party's

SANITARY SEWER BIDS

Corporation Counsel to Decide Whether Montclair Man's Bid Should be Accepted.

NEWARK FIRM NEXT

Tusco's Bid May Be Irregular—Ingersoll-Rand Co. Bids On Pumping Station.

The most important business considered at the adjourned meeting of the Common Council, last night, was that in reference to the proposed building of the southside sanitary sewer, an addition to the present system, intended to cover a certain section which cannot be sewered by gravity. Contrary to expectations there were a number of bids, twelve in all, received for doing the work. Some concerns bid for the sewer work alone, others for installing the pumping station, while still others bid for the whole work. In several instances the Ingersoll-Rand Company figured in the bids for the pumping station, one bid being offered by the company, through its representatives, Charles B. Morse, and in other instances the company's system was included in the bids offered by other contractors.

It was impossible last night to ascertain exactly the lowest bids, there being a question about the regularity of the lowest one offered by James J. Tusco, of Montclair. It will be submitted to the corporation counsel for a decision as to whether it should be accepted.

The next lowest bid was that of the Harrison Construction Company, of Newark, approximating $26,000, while the next lowest bid was that of Peter Morgan, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., which was about $27,000. The exact figures will be determined today. The highest bids were ordered returned, pending the awarding of the contract.

The bidders were as follows: James J. Tusco, Montclair; Peter Morgan, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; E. A. Matthews, East Orange; The Ellis Company, New York; Antonio Costa, Orange; Harrison Construction Company, Newark; W. B. Travell, Plainfield; Callahan & Chamberlain, Elizabeth and Westfield; Sloan & Lutz, Newark; Ansonia Manufacturing Company, New York; Manolo & Klinberg, Newark, and the Ingersoll-Rand Company, New York.

The Ellis Company offered to put in the entire system for $5,000, and the bid of the Ansonia Manufacturing Company was $5,471.42 for the whole contract. The Ingersoll-Rand Company's bid for installing the pumping station was $4,671. It is said that the last named company's system will be adopted.

In connection with this matter, Mr. Gloak offered an ordinance which was read only for information, it being the intention of the Common Council to act on the same after a public hearing on Monday night, November 12. This ordinance provides for the appropriation of land necessary to establish a pumping station, and the land desired is that owned by Clifton & Campbell and located on Randolph road, south of Arlington avenue, adjoining the property of John Wierengs. It has a frontage of 250 feet, a depth of 500 feet and is twenty-five feet wide in the rear and runs to a point near the bridge crossing Cedar brook. The Common Council will give parties interested an opportunity to speak for or against the proposed ordinance at the meeting on November 12.

DIME SAVINGS INSTITUTION

LETS BUILDING CONTRACTS.

Concern To Remove to Temporary Quarters on Saturday.

The directors' building committee having charge of the remodelling of the Dime Savings Institution has decided on all the contracts, but those for carpenter work and furnishing.

J. J. Spurr & Sons, of Harrison, have received the contract for the stone work; William N. Pangborn, of the borough, that for the mason work; Woolston & Buckle for painting and A. M. Clifton for the heating. The Manganese Steel Safe Works will furnish the new vault.

The Dime Savings Institution will change its place of business on Saturday, moving to the building formerly occupied by The Plainfield Trust Company, and next week the work of remodelling the old building will be started. William F. Arnold, cashier of the City National Bank, is chairman of the building committee, and A. I. C. Marsh is the architect.

SCHOOLBOY GAMESTERS.

Dunellen Board Forgives Them and Offers Reinstatement After Suspension.

The case of Russell Runyon, Ray Huff and Peter Mohan, the Dunellen schoolboys who were suspended last week for playing poker in the basement of the Whittier school, Dunellen, was considered by the Board of Education of that place last night. The board decided that the boys could return to school if they wished.

Russell Runyon is the only one who will accept re-instatement. Ray Huff has entered business college and Peter Mohan has gone to work. The episode has made a lot of talk in Dunellen.

WILL SMALLEY VOTE FOR JOHN F. DRYDEN?

THAT'S WHAT GEORGE T. ROGERS WANTS TO KNOW

George T. Rogers, a prominent Republican in North Plainfield, has sent the following letter to W. W. Smalley, the Republican Association candidate in Somerset county:

"Mr. W. W. Smalley,

"Republican Candidate for Assembly, Somerset County,

"Bound Brook, New Jersey.

"Dear Sir:

"If the law provided for the election of United States Senator by popular vote, I would not cast mine for Mr. Dryden; neither will I knowingly support a candidate for Assembly who, if elected, will vote for Mr. Dryden for United States Senator. If publicly assured that you will not support Mr. Dryden, my vote will be for you; if not, it will be against you.

"I am sending a copy of this letter to the Plainfield press.

"Yours very truly,

L. W. GAZETT HEAD OF COLLEGE CLASS.

Plainfielder Is Chosen President of Class In Cornell University.

At the annual election of the junior class at Cornell last week, Leonard Whitney Gavett, son of Street Commissioner and Mrs. Andrew J. Gavett, of West Fifth street, was elected president. Although there was no electioneering, Gavett received a majority of 178 votes over his competitor, E. T. Gibson, of Brooklyn.

Gavett has been closely connected with university activities throughout his college career. In his freshman year he rowed on the 1908 crew, which was victorious over Syracuse in the intercollegiate regatta at Poughkeepsie. Last year he rowed No. 5 on the Cornell 'varsity eight, which won first place in the intercollegiate regatta, an dwhich also was victorious over the Harvard eight. Gavett has the typical build of an oarsman, standing six feet and weighing 178 pounds.

Gavett is a junior in the Sibley College of Mechanical Engineering. He is a member of the Delta Kappa Epsilon, the Sophomore Honorary Society Dunstan, the Junior Honorary Society Alep Samach and the 1908 Cornellian Board. He is also a member of the New Jersey Club. The choice of Gavett as president and leader of one of the upper classes gives evidence of his popularity among the faculty and students.

JAMES E. CHURCH IS A HUSTLING AGENT.

For Thirty-five Years He Was a Telegrapher and Station Agent.

"Good Housekeeping," in illustrated monthly magazine, is represented by James E. Church, of 242 Somerset street. He moved to North Plainfield from Hackensack about eighteen months ago, where for thirty-five years he was a well-known resident, telegraph operator, station agent and real estate broker.

Mr. Church began his work for "Good Housekeeping" in Hackensack in the spring of 1902. After making a successful canvass of his home town he was induced to take a general agency for the same magazine for three counties. This territory was quickly increased and soon he was asked to cover the State. He is now in charge of the entire subscription work for the magazine in New Jersey.

Mr. Church moved here to get a more central location and for the reason that he believed this the center of the largest resident class of intelligent housekeepers in the State. On coming here he at once identified himself with the religious work of the city by becoming an active member of the First Baptist church, and a teacher of a class of young men in the Bible school of that church. He is also a member of the Y. M. C. A.

A BRITISH JAG.

Englishman With a French Name In the City Court.

John Journeau, an Englishman in spite of the Gallic termination to his name, was found by Patrolman Overbaugh on the street Monday afternoon in a state of complete souse.

"I am an Englishman, your Honor," said the prisoner with dignity when arraigned this morning.

"Well, whatever you are, Journeau," said Judge Runyon, "you collected a good old American jag."

Journeau said he didn't know how it happened. He said he quit work last week to prepare to visit his mother in Southampton, England, and was all ready to go. The magistrate said he didn't want to interfere with a laudable trip like that. He suspended sentence and wished Journeau bon voyage.

Y. M. C. A. Circus.

The annual circus at the Y. M. C. A. will be held on February 12. Preparation for it, which will involve a lot of work and many weeks of time, will begin shortly.

MINOR MATTERS IN THE COMMON COUNCIL

ROUTINE BUSINESS AT ADJOURNED MEETING OF CITY FATHERS.

Among the minor matters considered at the adjourned meeting of the Common Council, Monday, was a petition from Joseph T. Vail for permission to erect a dwelling at Putnam and Carlton avenues, partly of brick and partly of frame. Mr. Mellick, chairman of the fire and building committee, moved that the petition be granted, provided it met the approval of the building inspector as to details, and the motion prevailed. The petitions of Elston M. French and others for electric lights on George street, east of Leland avenue, and on East Second street, east of Leland avenue, were referred.

The $1,000 bond and petition of Charles H. Hand, offered in connection with his request to move a dwelling house in the Second ward, were approved, the bond was given to the city to indemnify it against damage while the house was being moved. The dwelling has been transferred and the bond was ordered returned. Mr. Hibbard presented a communication from Tax Collector W. M. Murray, in which he asked for help to distribute tax bills, and on Mr. Hibbard's resolution Mr. Murray was authorised to employ such assistance as he may need, the expense not to exceed $150.

Another communication was received from the Board of Assessors, in which the members asked for an increase in salary. They cited the fact that the new tax laws revised last winter by the Legislature imposed more arduous duties, which include the making of an extra tax list, and the new system of taxation requires a great deal more time. The matter was referred to the finance committee.

Mr. Mellick reported back the petition of I. H. Boehm for permission to build a vestibule to the main entrance to his store on West Front street, and moved that it be refused. He said that the committee had decided that it would be unwise to grant permission for the erection of such a vestibule on the sidewalk.

RALPH LURIA SUED.

New York Firm Press Claim for $123 Against Him.

Only one case was contested before Judge Newcorn in the District Court Tuesday, the contract suit of Ralph Luria, a dressmaker, of New York, against Ralph Luria, of Spooner avenue, on a book account for rugs and furnishings. The case was tried before a jury, and took up most of the session.

The plaintiffs claim a balance of $123 is due. Luria submitted several checks in evidence, claiming that they should be credited to his account. The plaintiffs contended that the checks were for goods bought on a cash basis. The case went into the hands of the jury at 11:15 o'clock, and it became apparent very soon that the jurymen were not at all of one mind.

After an hour and three-quarters of deliberation, the jury returned a verdict in full for the plaintiffs. Francis J. Blatz represented Podlesh & Greenberg.

NEW SCHOOL BUILDING.

Bedminster Township to Have One Costing $23,000.

The Board of Education of Bedminster township, Somerset county, met at Bedminster on Saturday afternoon and issued a call for a special school meeting to be held at Larger Cross Roads on Saturday afternoon, November 10th, at 2 o'clock, for the purpose of voting on a proposition to erect a new school building at Peapack. The cost of the building will be $23,000. There will be four rooms on the first floor and two class rooms and an assembly room on the second floor. The assembly room will later be divided into two classrooms by means of a folding partition.

The Board expects to furnish the new building from the proceeds of the sale of the present one. Quite a lot was purchased last spring. The whole school plant will probably be worth $27,000.

Special Preparation for Revival.

Special religious services will be held at the First Baptist church tonight, Wednesday and Friday nights, to make preparation for the coming revival of which Evangelist Overton, the evangelist, who will begin his services on Sunday morning. There will be special music and congregational singing from a new revival hymn book and at the meetings this week these books will be used to acquaint the people with the hymns. There will be a large chorus choir during the revival. The people of Plainfield generally are invited to attend these meetings and will be made welcome.

Somerset Club Plans Celebration.

The Somerset Club held an important business session, last night, and decided to hold a Hallowe'en celebration. It will take place in the headquarters of the club at Somerset street and Manlier avenue and David J. Carney and the other officials have been delegated to get upon suitable programme. There will be no street parade, as was given last year, but the entertainment will be one of the best the club has yet conducted.

NO MORE VOTE BUYING

Declaration of Candidates That Has Cast a Chill in Somerset County.

MR. STEVENS DECLINES?

Rumored That Democratic Assembly Nominee Refuses to Run and Party is Without a Candidate.

The stringent law against bribery at elections passed by the last New Jersey Legislature, which makes a candidate or poll worker liable to two years imprisonment for even giving a box of cigars to influence a vote, has had a salutary effect on the fall campaign in Somerset county. It is conservatively estimated by politicians that two local candidates, both wealthy men, spent at least $10,000 each among the 10,000 voters in Somerset county in an attempt to secure the election in a heated campaign last fall.

The free use of money to secure the election of a candidate, while unlawful, has heretofore been openly countenanced by the executive committees of both parties, but it is rumored that Prosecutor John V. Reger will take a hand in enforcing the new law, irrespective of parties, in the present campaign.

A wave of reform has suddenly swept over the campaign orators on the stump. Allan G. Southwick, the Democratic candidate for Congress, in a speech before the county Democratic convention at Somerville last Friday denounced the system of bribery at elections and announced that he would not spend one dollar to secure his election, and if elected he would refuse to accept the office if it could be proved that any one else had paid a voter a dollar to cast a ballot for him.

W. W. Smalley, the Republican candidate for Assemblyman, in a speech before the Republican county convention held at Somerville Saturday stated that he had no sought the nomination and was free from alliances and would refuse to spend money to secure his election. Ira W. Wood, the Republican candidate for Congress, and other prominent politicians also denounced bribery at elections in strong terms before the convention.

This wave of reform has had a remarkable effect on political aspirants and ward workers. Heretofore there have been a number of candidates clamoring for the nomination for assemblyman. This year it has been a difficult matter for either the Republican or Democratic parties to get men to accept the nomination.

The county Democratic convention nominated Robert Livingston Stevens for Assemblyman. Stevens is a man of wealth who was a former candidate for Congress. He was not present at the convention, and it was stated by his friends that he would not accept the nomination. It is said that Mr. Stevens positively refuses to accept the nomination and the Democratic party is now without a candidate for Assemblyman.

The public announcement by candidates that no money will be used in the campaign has caused a chill to pass down the spinal columns of the ward workers and floating voters and there is no enthusiasm in the campaign.

Moris Rosenthal Recital.

Moris Rosenthal returns to America after an absence of eight years, and one of his recitals is to be given in the Krueger Auditorium, Newark, Tuesday evening, November 27. The mere mention of the name of Rosenthal should interest all lovers of music, and the fact that he is to give a recital in Newark will be a musical treat. The great pianist, for great he is, was born at Lemberg, and at the early age of four he showed unmistakable musical ability. Before he reached the age of ten he appeared in public and the beginning of his wonderful successes was established. Lovers of music, and especially those of the piano, should take advantage of hearing the wonderful virtuoso. Mail orders, which are arriving at this early date, indicate a large gathering at this recital. Orders are being received by Frederick N. Sommer, 794 Broad street, telephone 270, Newark. The regular sale of seats will open at the piano warerooms, 657 Broad street, Newark, Thursday, November 22.

ANOTHER ENDORSEMENT.

State Typographical Union Supports J. E. Martine.

James E. Martine, Democratic candidate for Congress, was endorsed at a meeting of the New Jersey State Eight Hour Committee of the International Typographical Union, held Saturday afternoon at Orange. James E. Desmond, of Elizabeth, the Democratic candidate for Assembly, was also endorsed.

Martine was endorsed on Friday night by the Union County Trades Council at Elizabeth. A week previously he was endorsed by Plainfield Typographical Union.

In celebration of the anniversary of her birthday, Miss Etta Raybert, of East Second street, entertained a company of twelve at her home last Monday. The affair was an informal one.

MEN WHO OVERDROVE HORSE HEAVILY FINED

CITY JUDGE RUNYON SCORES THEM SEVERELY IN PASSING SENTENCE.

Swift punishment fell on the two Newark men who were arrested Monday for driving an overworked horse to the point of exhaustion, in the city court Tuesday morning. The prisoners, Thomas Ball and George Gay, were fined $25, or 30 days in jail, apiece.

Chastened, subdued and sober, the pair presented an apologetic air when arraigned before Judge Runyon. They pleaded guilty and threw themselves on the mercy of the court. They said they hired the horse at 5 o'clock Monday morning, in Newark, to go to a funeral. Somewhere along the road they filled themselves with exciting drinks and started for here under an imaginary stress to get a friend. They picked up a third man, who escaped Bicycle Policeman Higgins when he made the arrest Monday, in Cranford, but the added load made no difference in the pace to which they forced the racked horse. They insisted that the escaped man was unknown to them by name.

Judge Runyon lifted the lash severely in passing sentence. He said they were little better than wife-beaters, and rated the latter as pure dogs.

BISHOP TO DEDICATE THE PARISH HOUSE

SENATOR COLBY EXPECTED TO ATTEND CEREMONY AT ST. STEPHEN'S.

Bishop Scarborough will have charge of the dedication of the new Parish House of St. Stephen's church on All Saints' Day, Thursday, November 1. There will be two celebrations of the Holy Eucharist on All Saints' Day, and one on All Souls' Day. At the reception to be held on Thursday night, November 1, Bishop Scarborough will speak informally and it is expected that Senator Everett Colby, a benefactor of St. Stephen's church, and others, will speak.

On All Saints' Day there will be holy communion at 6:45 and 10 o'clock in the morning. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon there will be the service of benediction and at 8 o'clock in the evening the reception will be held. On All Souls' Day there will be holy communion at 7:30 and 10 o'clock in the morning and a school entertainment in the evening at 8 o'clock.

SAM EDWARDS EARNS THE RIALTO'S PRAISE.

Assumes Unknown Part in Big Production in Little More Than an Hour's Notice.

Already known along the length and breadth of the Rialto as a comedian equal to any emergency or occasion, Sam Edwards, brother of Maze Edwards, of the Casino, added to his laurels, last week, by proving himself "Johnny on the spot." Without any previous preparation and only one rehearsal, he jumped into the cast of "The Little Cherub," one of Broadway's leading productions, and "made good" in a part being bungled by an understudy.

The role is opposite to Miss Hattie Williams, who is the star, and was held by Thomas Wise. He was taken suddenly ill, Tuesday night, and his understudy was put on. The latter played like an amateur and preparations were made to get someone else but without success until late Wednesday afternoon, when the management located Sam Edwards. The matinee was then on and Sam was hurried to the Criterion theatre where he saw the last act, this much being sufficient to give him an idea as to what was expected. He assumed the part Wednesday night and made a hit of the largest variety, the members of the cast even giving him a "hand" from the wings. Wise has since returned to his place but Edwards has been signed by Charles Frohman to stand in line for a "fat" part.

Death of Mrs. A. H. Burlingham.

Mrs. Emma Starr Burlingham, widow of the Rev. Dr. A. H. Burlingham, died on Sunday in Mount Vernon, N. Y., on Sunday. Her husband, who died in March, 1905, was one of the best known Baptist ministers in the United States. She is survived by two sons, Mrs. Burlingham was a sister of the late Mrs. Charles H. Stillman, of East Seventh street and an aunt of Mrs. J. Kirtland Myers, of East Seventh street, and William M. Stillman, of West Seventh street.

CATHOLICS TO BUILD.

South Plainfield Members of the Denomination Want a Church.

Energetic efforts to gather money enough for the erection of a church are being made by the Catholics of South Plainfield. They worship now in Washington Hall.

Plans are shaping for a fair to be held in aid of the project, and the prospects for its successful execution are very bright. There are many Catholics in South Plainfield and the surrounding country, and the church would be prosperous from the start.

100 yard dash—Senior—First, Little; second, Stine; time, 11 2-5.

INVESTIGATION IS NEEDED

Mr. Gilbert Suggests That Consolidation Commission's Powers Be Enlarged.

FOR INTELLIGENT VOTE

Former Mayor Will Accept If Commission Plans Be Changed—Letter to Common Council.

Following his appointment as a commissioner in the matter of the proposed consolidation of city and borough, which fact was recently communicated to him, former Mayor Alexander Gilbert presented a communication to the Common Council, the Common Council, Monday, was follows:

"I am in receipt of a communication from the city clerk under date of October 2, informing me that at a meeting of the Common Council held on the 1st inst., I was appointed a commissioner in the matter of consolidation of the City of Plainfield and the Borough of North Plainfield. At the same time I received an extract from the minutes of the Common Council and copy of resolutions adopted at a meeting of the joint committee of the city and borough Councils and Board of Trade with reference to the matter of consolidation.

"I find in the report of the joint committee that it is the intention to appoint a commission consisting of two citizens of Plainfield and two from North Plainfield who, when appointed, shall choose a fifth member who shall be a citizen of Plainfield.

"The powers of this commission as I find them expressed and set forth in the report of the joint committee of the city and borough Councils and the Board of Trade are to take charge of and arrange all the details involved in the proposed merger and to prepare Legislative acts if such be found necessary or desirable. In other words the commission is to prepare a plan of consolidation to be submitted to the voters at an election to be held in the near future.

"My own views as to the wisdom of consolidation are so uncertain that it would be necessary for me to investigate very carefully the pros and cons involved in the proposed merger in order to determine what my attitude would be with regard to the matter; and I do not think the voters of the city or borough will ever be prepared to vote intelligently on the subject until a thorough investigation has been made and the advantages and disadvantages are clearly set before them. For this reason I think the commission in addition to the powers expressed in the resolutions should be clothed with power to investigate and determine as to the wisdom of consolidation and to consider and set forth in its report to the Common Council the advantages and disadvantages of such consolidation so that the voters when asked to vote on the question may be prepared to vote understandingly.

"If it be the pleasure of your honorable body to widen the scope of the commission in conformity with these suggestions I will accept the appointment, otherwise I shall feel obliged to decline.

"Very truly,
"A. GILBERT."

AMEDEO AND THE CHIEF.

Chianti, Some Liquid Syllables and An Official Umbrella.

Chief Kiely saw Amedeo Ciocci, who had absorbed fabulous quantities of Chianti and other Latin booze, misbehaving at Park avenue and Front street at 10 o'clock Monday. He ordered Amedeo to desist, and Amedeo said sassy things in liquid syllables. The chief bereft poor Amedeo with his umbrella and told him to dry up. Amedeo waxed sassier and shed liquid syllables in increased measure, whereupon the Chief turned him over to Patrolman McKeon.

Amedeo was humble and penitent when he appeared before Judge Runyon Tuesday. The Chief bore no ill-will, and the magistrate suspended sentence. Amedeo bowed to the Chief before he left, and assured him that his umbrella would ever be held in admiring remembrance.

Schoolboys' Dangerous Practice.

Trolley crews on the Arlington avenue and West Fourth street lines have entered protest to the division superintendent regarding the practice of schoolboys who steal rides on the cars. While the conductors are inside they catch hold of the rear platform and are frequently unable to get off without risking life and limb. One boy a few days ago was thrown on his face and quite severely cut and bruised. The matter is to be taken up with the school authorities.

Twenty Years for Dittmar.

One of the strongest murder trials on record in the Somerset county court, at Somerville, was that of William Dittmar Monday for the murder of David Howard on June 10. Dittmar was convicted before he was actually tried, and after the conviction the court heard the testimony of nearly a score of witnesses to determine the punishment to be imposed, after which Dittmar was sentenced to twenty years at hard labor in the State prison.

COLORED G. O. P. RALLY

Dryden, Fowler and Other Party Chieftains Lauded By Colored Speakers.

A BANQUET FOLLOWS

Everything Moved Smoothly—Local Leaders Much Pleased—Colored Men Had a Fine Time.

With an impressive array of speakers, the colored voters held their big mass meeting of the campaign at Reform Hall, last night. The audience filled the floor of the auditorium, and applauded Republican sentiments and candidates evidently. Also it manifested unbounded delight at every jab at the Southern Democracy, which was denounced vigorously as the arch enemy of the colored race. Women were much in evidence, and swelled the applause.

The distinguished politicians on the platform were former Congressman George H. White, of North Carolina; former Register of the Treasury Judson W. Lyons, of Washington; Jesse Lawson, of the Pension Department; Eugene Gregory, of the Chancery Court clerk's office, Trenton; A. C. Hewlett, Cranford; F. R. Moore, of New York, editor of the Colored-American Magazine; and C. B. H. Hawkins, of Elizabeth. Also, there was a brass band—an Elizabeth contribution. William T. Vernon, register of the treasury, was to have been present, but he sent a telegram of regret from Canada.

C. W. Jackson was chairman of the meeting. The speakers were Jesse Lawson, who is a Plainfield resident at election time; J. W. Lyons, Eugene Gregory, G. H. White and C. B. H. Harwkins. Mr. Lawson began the speechmaking with a eulogistic roll of the distinguished visitors. The glad hand was not so readily thrust out to the colored race, nowadays, as it was in the years immediately following the Civil War, he said, and J. W. Lyons was now the only member of the race on the Republican National Committee.

The speaker said the party represented the State in Trenton and at Washington as it had not been represented before. In the Senate at Washington, the dignity of the State was strikingly upheld, Senator Kean often presiding over the deliberations of the body and Senator Dryden, being consulted very often as to business methods by his colleagues. Among the several chairmanships conferred on Jersey Congressmen, that of Charles N. Fowler, on the Banking and Currency Committee, was pre-eminent.

The Legislature was the best on record in New Jersey. The speaker urged his hearers to return Randolph Perkins, leader in all the good works, to his post, and to send the other candidates to keep him company. He believed that by that time next Tuesday they would have done it.

Mr. Lyons made an appeal to the loyalty of his people. The enemies of their party and their race were active throughout the country, he said, and he urged them to stand together to defeat the foe. Colored disfranchisement was a Democratic scheme, he said.

New Jersey had good Senators at Washington, he continued. Senator Dryden was the first man in the Upper House, he said, to give him an unequivocal pledge of support in his fight against a Jim crow car amendment to a railroad bill. The speaker said he had known C. N. Fowler for several years. His defeat would be a distinct loss to the nation.

The speaker begged the voters to keep their tickets straight. If they sent a Democratic Congressman to Washington he would be compelled to respond to the lash of the Southern Democracy, and support measures against the negro.

Mr. Gregory warned the colored voters to remember that this was not an off year. It was never an off year, he said, when there was the remotest chance of Democratic success. The Democrats, controlled by the arch enemies of the negro in the South, was the party of anti-colored legislation. All Democrats would come under the pernicious influence if they were sent to Washington. The only way t okeep good Northern Democrats good was to keep their home.

Congressman Fowler did not leave his post of duty, Mr. Gregory declared. The business of Congress was done mainly in committee rooms and not on the floor of Congress, and in his committee room, arduously at work, Mr. Fowler would doubtless have been found by visitors to the Capitol during the session.

Mr. White was the humorist of the orators. The Northern Democracy was only the tail of the dog. The snapping, snarling, vicious portion of the animal was in the South. "Kill it dead," he said, "kill it and bury it face downward, so that if it should revive and start to scratch its way

SENATOR KEAN IS DOUBTFUL OF ESSEX

"IF WE GET THE VOTERS TO THE POLLS WE'LL SCORE USUAL VICTORY.

United States Senator Kean declared yesterday that the Republicans will have a sweeping victory in New Jersey next Tuesday. He was among the group of State leaders who met at Trenton yesterday at the last "Governor's Day" before the battle of the polls.

When asked for his opinion concerning Republican prospects, he said he was confident that the party would carry the State as usual, and that the only danger was in the "off year" apathy of the rank and file.

"If we can get the voters to the polls, we will score our usual victory. We are certain to win, anyway, in a general way, but it would be better if we could get out the full vote and have an old-time victory," he said.

Senator Kean said he thought the Republicans were sure to win in all the Republican counties, with the possible exception of Essex, where the result would be close. It was his opinion that possibly Newark would go Democratic and the county Republican. He was confident that the Republicans would have a safe majority in the Legislature and that United States Senator John Dryden would be his own successor.

MUTUAL AID ELECTS.

Beneficial Society at Potter Press Works Holds Annual Meeting.

At the annual meeting of the Potter Press Works' Mutual Aid Society held a few days ago, reports were read by the secretary and treasurer, showing the society to be in a prosperous condition, numerically and financially. These officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, George Dufford; vice president, William St. John; secretary, F. L. Burke; treasurer, T. C. Smith. Finance committee, Joseph Brown, Frank Whitley, Harry Shirley; auditing committee, Albert E. Matthews, Thomas Force.

After the election of officers, a social time was had. Songs were given by Thomas Roddy, Signor Tagliero, John Bishop, George Zeiss and others. The newly-elected officers will be installed at the first meeting in January, 1907, when a banquet and vaudeville will be enjoyed by the members.

LODGE SUPPER.

Knights of Golden Eagle Enjoy Results of German Cuisine.

One of the pleasantly informal suppers for which Freedom Castle, K. G. E., is noted in local lodgedom, was enjoyed by the members, last night, after the meeting, in the lodge banquet room in the Babcock building. The menu was German, sauerkraut, sausage and coffee, with long-stemmed pipes to follow with soothing effect on overtaxed digestive apparatus.

Songs and stories, and music by members of the lodge orchestra, M. A. Korff, Dr. J. H. Buchanan and De Witt C. Frazee, were features of the social hour. The committee was made up of Albert Arthur Caleen, John Gaub, L. A. Hummer, Jr., and John Bicknell. W. E. Day was toastmaster.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

First of McIntyre Annual Musicales at Casino November 16.

Within a day or so the regular announcements will be made of the McIntyre chamber music concerts to be given at the Casino this winter. Four concerts will constitute the series, the first coming on Friday, November 16, and the other three on the following Friday evenings, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 8. Mr. McIntyre's excellent trio will be assisted at each concert by vocal artists of the highest merit.

The first concert will be the young French tenor, Paul Dufault, who needs no introduction to the musically well informed. The list of patronesses to these concerts is long and includes everybody prominent in social and musical circles in Plainfield.

Miss Lillian Clarkson Weds.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Clarkson, of Elmwood place, announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Lillian Clarkson, to Arthur Kelderling, of East Front street. The ceremony was performed on Monday by Rev. William Edward Meeker at his home in Highland Park and was witnessed by a few persons. The couple will reside here.

No Prayer Meetings.

There will be no prayer meeting at Trinity Reformed church or the First Presbyterian church, tonight, on account of the revival services being held at the First Baptist church.

—There are lots of good things in White Label canned goods. Corn and asparagus are among them—ask Neuman Brothers about it.

COLBYITES REBUKE HIM

Ex-Governor Voorhees Remarks Meet With "New Idea" Men's Protest.

FORMAL ACTION TAKEN

Address to the Voters of Plainfield Issued—Signed by Colbyite Ward Chairmen.

Still smarting from the remarks made by former Governor Voorhees at the mass meeting in this city on October 23, the Central Committee of the local Colbyites met in the Babcock building, last night, and discussed the matter for three hours. The entire ground was thoroughly threshed over and it resulted in a resolution being passed, authorizing the issuance of the following statement:

To the Voters of the City of Plainfield:

At the mass meeting held on Tuesday evening, the 23d instant, ostensibly in support of the Republican as opposed to the Democratic ticket, the speakers made use of the opportunity to indulge in slurring remarks concerning the movement represented in the recent primary campaign by the Union County Republican League for Equal Taxation. One of the speakers was particularly offensive, making some deliberate misrepresentations of the principles advocated by the League, and some statements which were absolutely false.

As representatives of the Plainfield Branches of the League and in justice to the large body of citizens who supported us at the polls, we feel it our duty to express publicly our sentiment of the course followed by these speakers. We deem their conduct a gratuitous affront to those voters of Plainfield who supported our ticket, the more so as we had, since the primary election, in fulfillment of our pledges made during the primary campaign and as a token of the sincerity of those pledges co-operated in every way with the Republican City Executive Committee in the present campaign, certain of our supporters even having consented to act as vice presidents of last Tuesday's meeting and a number of them having occupied seats upon the platform.

We realize that under such circumstances the course adopted by the speakers at the meeting referred to was not calculated to increase party harmony or to attract voters to the support of the Republican ticket further than to make it more unpalatable and severely criticised. We have no apology to make for the principles which we supported during the primary campaign. On the contrary we reaffirm our adherence to those principles and our determination to renew at the proper time the struggle which we feel sure will be ultimately crowned with success. We are not unwilling to endure such criticism and attacks as are naturally incident to an active campaign. Our resentment is directed against attacks made of one member from each ward, was appointed to watch the proceedings of the city council and also the State Legislature. The New Idea men believe that the people of the various municipalities should know fully all that their representatives do and in best way to secure the information is by "keeping tabs." There was a full representation of the committee present.

Thrown From Breaking-Cart.

Mrs. Edward Wilcox, of Somerville, was slightly injured on West Front street, late yesterday afternoon, through the wheels of her breaking-cart catching in the car switch opposite Prudence alley. She was pitched headlong to the street and was picked up partially dazed by Patrolman Charles Flynn. The officer had her assisted to Randolph's drug store, where she received temporary treatment. She was afterward taken home by her niece, who was with her.

THIS WESTFIELD WIFE ASKS FOR ALIMONY

SUED BY AUGUST C. BLUME FOR DIVORCE.

FORMAL ACTION TAKEN

Vice-Chancellor Stevens at Newark yesterday heard argument on an application for alimony and counsel fee made in behalf of Mrs. Mary L. Blume, of Westfield, whose husband, August C. Blume, is suing for a divorce. Craig A. Marsh, of this city, counsel, in association with Paul Q. Oliver, for the husband, opposed the application.

Mr. Marsh urged that in the event of alimony being allowed the sum be not based upon the hope that the petitioner, who is a racetrack man, might succeed in his future gambling operations," but upon his lawful pay of $50 a month.

A Westfield policeman is named as corespondent, and the name of a married sister of the defendant is also mentioned in the papers. Jeremiah Kiernan, of Elizabeth, counsel for Mrs. Blume, in refutation of the allegations concerning Mrs. Blume's sister, read from an affidavit that the latter was living with her husband. Mr. Marsh thereupon produced a petition for divorce and accompanying affidavit, both of which papers Mr. Oliver informed the court he had prepared at the request of the woman's husband.

LAMBERT GOT LITTLE.

Jury Awarded Him $4.95 In Suit Against D. R. Dunn.

The suit of S. W. Lambert against D. R. Dunn, of Alton, for $150 alleged to be due on the hire and use of ice-cutting tools and supplies, was given to the jury in the District Court yesterday afternoon at 2:10 o'clock and after a half-hour's deliberation the jury returned a verdict of $4.95.

The defense claimed the supplies and tools were not up to the mark, and contended that only about $5.50 was due. A tender of that sum was made in court before the trial, and the court attaches wondered at the reduction even on that by the jury.

Lawyers criticized the verdict as contrary to the weight of evidence and the judge's charge. S. S. Swackhamer represented the defence. W. L. Hetfield, Sr., appeared for the plaintiff.

District Court.

Two cases were tried and one discontinued in the District Court yesterday afternoon, after the Lambert-Dunn case was disposed of. Decision was reserved in both the cases of Leonard Bartlett against Abram Wolf and the Dunham Grocery Co. against Paul Thum. Bartlett sued for damages alleged to be due for the loss of trousers cleaned by defendant and delivered to the wrong man. The Dunham Company's action was a retrial, to which J. Henry Crane, counsel for the defendant, consented several weeks ago after winning his case.

Trinity Benevolence.

The Ladies' Christian Work Society of Trinity Reformed church on Thursday of next week will pack a box for a missionary in Iowa and also a barrel to be sent to the Schofield School, Aiken, S. C., and one to McKee, Kentucky, for the Mountain Whites. Contributions of clothing and household goods are solicited from members of the church and congregation and may be left at the church next Monday afternoon or Wednesday night.

Bridge Work Closes Streets.

Because of reconstruction work being conducted by the New Jersey Central on the bridges over Berckman street and Leland avenue, those thoroughfares have been closed to wagon traffic between North and South avenues. The false work needed to hold the structures while the repairing is accomplished completely blocks the roadways.

One Fined; One Freed.

Ira Bowers, arrested yesterday afternoon for hitting a man on Second street while drunk, was fined $3 by Judge Runyon in the city court this morning. Hugh Lamb, who was thrown out of the District Court for drunkenness yesterday morning, was released under suspended sentence.

Campaigning With Fowler.

C. J. Fisk was with Charles N. Fowler in Morristown last night. The candidate spoke to a large audience. Mr. Fowler will be in Rahway and Westfield tonight. Mr. Perkins will speak at the same places in reverse order to Mr. Fowler's appearances.

Edward Mattox Arrested.

Edward Mattox, 18 years old, was arrested yesterday by Patrolman Stilwell, charged with disorderly conduct. He will be arraigned before Judge Runyon tomorrow morning.

Will Teach You How to Vote.

One of the voting machines is now at the city clerk's office on North avenue, where anyone can become familiar with the system of voting up to election day.

RECOVERED STOLEN RIG

Quick Detective Work By Chief Kiely For Passaic Cops.

LOCATED $1,308 TEAM

But Crooks Were Sharp and Slip Through Net Carefully Spread For Their Apprehension.

Discovering the trail within twelve hours after the police of Passaic had asked him to help in the search for a team and truck stolen from that city, Chief of Police Kiely located the rig in Fanwood Sunday. He made the case public this morning after he had become convinced that a trap set for the thieves was not likely to work.

The team, which is valued at $1,300, was stolen by a young man, who hired with the owner for the purpose of getting a chance at it. He disappeared Saturday afternoon and the Passaic police traced him as far as Newark. They lost the trail there and telephoned Chief Kiely for help in picking it up. The next morning the Chief learned that the team was in the barn of Stelter's Hotel, just over the line in Fanwood. He made certain the rig was there and then posted shadows about the place. The young man had prospective buyers look over the horses Sunday morning but he faded from view after that and he hasn't been seen since. The place has been carefully covered by sleuths, but nothing of the young man or his pals has been seen. It is presumed the crooks watched the police before the police started watching them, and blew away in due season to slip the coil drawing about them. Chief Kiely thinks they are Michael Curtin, the owner of the team, was notified this morning by Chief Kiely and he hurried here to claim his team. He reached headquarters shortly after noon. The rig was turned over to him without delay.

7TH-DAY BAPTISTS HALLOWE'EN PARTY.

Held Under the Auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society Last Night.

Under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, a Hallowe'en social was held last night. The church parlors were appropriately decorated with autumn leaves, while the tables were garnished with harvest products.

Two special features were a comb chorus and a topsy-turvy chorus. Those in the former were Irving Davis, Clark Green, Miss Mary Ross, Charles Beagle, Miss C. H. Dunham, Miss Mildred Green, Miss Avalois St. John and Miss Mary A. St. John. They were hidden behind a curtain and gave several selections.

Those in the topsy-turvy were the Misses Helen Rogers, Ethel Rogers, Helen Ford, Mabelle Ford, Grace Stillman, Evalois St. John and Frances Mosher, and they sang coon songs. Afterwards the young people took part in playing various games, including Three Dishes of Fate. This comprised bobbing for apples, diving for fortunes in water and alcohol and stabbing the pumpkin blind-folded.

A part of the affair was the mask. As the young people arrived at the church they met many persons dressed as ghosts who led them through dark and devious paths, made ghastly by unearthly sounds and curious lights, into the large room, where the festivities were held. Later in the evening refreshments were served. The committee in charge consisted of Miss Mary A. St. John, chairman; Mrs. Charles H. Dunham, Orra S. Rogers, Miss Eva Rogers, Clark Green and Miss Etta Randolph.

Defacing Letter Boxes.

Postmaster E. H. Bird's attention has been called to the fact that mischievous boys about the city are defacing the letter boxes by cutting the printed signs on the letter boxes denoting the time collections are made from each box. The law provides a penalty of $1,000 and three years in State Prison for anyone found guilty of destroying or defacing such boxes. Postmaster Bird is investigating the matter.

Entertainment and Sale at Church.

Grace church offers at the parish house next Wednesday and Thursday afternoons and evenings, a variety of good entertainments, a clever magician in the afternoons, a hot supper served from 6 to 8 o'clock. A play, well worth seeing, will be given each evening at 8 o'clock; also a sale of candy, useful and attractive articles.

Former Plainfielder Dead.

James Henderson, formerly of this city, died suddenly at the home of his brother in High Bridge, following an illness of a few days.

MR. COLBY EXPLAINS CAMPAIGN POSITION

REGLLRR, BUT DOES NOT FAVOR DRYDEN OR BISHOP'S LAW REPAL.

State Senator Everett Colby, of Essex county, made a statement yesterday defining his position in the campaign. Attempts, he said, had been made to represent him as supporting the regular nominees of the Republican party, placing him in the light of standing for the candidacy of United States Senator John F. Dryden and the Republican plank with regard to a repeal or modification of the Bishops' law. He said, in part:

"We made our fight in the primaries as Republicans, and for that reason, and no other, I am compelled by the rule of ordinary political honesty to remain in the Republican party and support for and support a majority of the nominees on that ticket. That does not mean that I uphold the attitude of the Assembly nominees on the Bishops' law, nor does it mean that I am in favor of Mr. Dryden's re-election. If there is any interest as to how I stand, and the attempts to misrepresent me and my attitude seem to indicate that there is, the people might as well get it straight. I am going to vote for a majority of the Republican nominees, not because I believe in the repeal of the Bishops' law, because I don't; not because I believe Senator Dryden should be elected, because he don't, and not because I stand for Major Lentz, because I don't; but because we began the fight within the party as the most useful way to work and gave our friends to understand that if defeated, we would still remain in the party. We cannot now, after our defeat in the primaries, play double with any of our supporters, even though our attitude does not meet with the approval of some of our most loyal friends."

The Senator, when asked if he intended to vote for any of the nominees on the ticket of the Citizens' Independent party, said:

"I shall give credits to the Independent candidates as often as I scratch the regular Republican nominees."

SUSPICIOUS PAIR.

Alleged Canvassers Arrested and Held For Investigation.

On a technical charge of drunkenness, but under strong suspicion of being highwaymen, two well-dressed men, two young men who gave their names as Thomas Bevier and John Brankes were locked up this morning at police headquarters. The attention of the police was called to the pair by George Kesselring, a barber, whose shop is on Park avenue.

Kesselring told Chief Kiely, a few minutes after the young men left his place, that they were canvassing for subscriptions to a new daily. He didn't like the way they went about it. Chief Kiely met Higgins out after them, and then he went for the promoter of the new paper. The promoter denied any connection with the men. Bevier, he said, applied at his office yesterday, but was drunk at the time and he refused to have any dealings with him.

The Chief decided the pair had better stay awhile and ordered them to cells. Both of them were under the influence of liquor.

Kesselring told the Chief a third man traveling with Bevier and Higgins was sent out to look up No. 1. The prisoners had papers on them that indicated they were at one time canvassers for a supposed "Art-Photography" concern.

Another Colored Church.

Plainfield is to have another colored church, the congregation of "The Church of God and Saints of Christ," or, as they are commonly known, "The Feet Washers," having decided to build. Ground has already been broken for a structure on West Fourth street, midway between Liberty street and Plainfield avenue, where a suitable structure will be erected. It will be seventy feet long by twenty-five feet wide and will be of frame construction, one story in height. The congregation hopes to occupy it soon after January 1.

Donation to Rev. Mr. Bowers.

The annual donation party was tendered Rev. and Mrs. Bowers, of Warrenville, last night, when the members of his church and congregation as well as the neighbors for miles around gathered. Mr. Bowers received a gift of $60 and many useful things for the house. Among those present were Sheriff Edward Cooper and Freeholders Coddington and Fitzgs.

Injured Men Will Recover.

Stephen Fitzgerald, who fell off a trolley car coming from Scotch Plains, Monday night, is improving from his injuries, while his companion, John Conway, was reported today as not being quite so well. Neither one is in a serious condition and both will recover.

ASK FOR THEIR PRAYERS

Dr. Chambliss Announces that People Are Seeking Help from Evangelistic Meetings.

DR. WHARTON SPEAKS

Mrs. L. R. Howard and the Revivalist Render Solos—Chorus Choir at Work.

The deep workings of the Spirit were manifest at the revival held at the First Baptist church, last night, under the leadership of Rev. Dr. Henry M. Wharton, and there was a larger attendance than on the preceding night. The service of song led by the chorus choir under the direction of Charles L. Lewis, was a feature and the congregation sang the hymns with earnestness. An impressive feature was a solo by Mrs. L. R. Howard, who sang, "I Will Go Where You Want Me to Go, Dear Lord."

Rev. Dr. Chamblias, pastor of the church through whose efforts Dr. Wharton came to Plainfield, took charge of the first part of the service. The two divines have known each other for many years and it was because Dr. Chamblias was aware of the work his fellow-minister was doing in different parts of the country, that he planned to have the latter here for a brief period. Both are natives of the South and have been engaged in the ministry for years with marked success.

Dr. Chamblias stated last night that several requests for prayer had been received and he asked all to earnestly remember the petitions. Rev. Dr. W. C. Parsons, of Grace M. E. church, offered prayer before Dr. Wharton began to speak.

In selecting passages of Scripture to read from the ninth chapter of St. Luke, beginning at the forty-ninth verse, Dr. Wharton said, in referring to John's remonstrance that he had to St. John's remonstrance when he had seen someone casting out devils in Christ's name, that it reminded him of a time when people believed that they couldn't get religion except in the church of their own faith. If they should see Baptists holding a meeting, they would protest because they were not Methodists and vice versa.

"I don't like these kind of matches you have to strike on the box they are in," said Dr. Wharton, "because it is often difficult to find the box. I like the kind of matches you can strike anywhere and will make a big blaze.

I had a foolish notion once that when I joined the church all temptations would disappear, when as a matter of fact they just began."

After Mrs. Howard sang a solo, Dr. Wharton spoke of the absence of children from the meeting and urged their attendance. He said that he noticed on Monday night that nearly everyone present was a Christian and he appointed each attendant a committee of one to bring an unconverted one to the meeting tonight.

The evangelist said:

"My text tonight will be the nineteenth chapter of St. Luke and the first seventh verse: 'And it came to pass, that as they were nigh unto Jerusalem and was preceded by the disciples, who proclaimed Him coming. When they arrived at a certain man said unto Him, Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.' I like the way that sentence reads. It has the right ring to it. Christ was on His way to Jerusalem and was preceded by the disciples, who proclaimed His coming. When they arrived at a village of the Samaritans, the disciples told Christ that not one would let Him stay in his house. Then St. John lost his temper and wanted to call down fire from Heaven to consume the people. Preachers sometimes lose their tempers. I remember one day myself, who was so out of patience with his people while I was conducting services at his church that he gave them a terrible rebuke because they were not re-

VENERABLE FRIEND ENDOWED

By Her Will, Catherine Webster Left Big Part of Estate For Institution.

BEQUESTS TO RELATIVES

Muhlenberg Hospital Gets $1,000 and Friends Meeting $1,400—Grandfather's Estate Disposed of.

By the provisions of the will of the late Catharine Webster, Plainfield is to have a home for aged and infirmed ladies. The probable cost and style plans for the institution can not be told at this time for the trustees named by the venerable Friend are first directed to distribute certain bequests among relatives and friends. It is roughly estimated, however, by some intimate with her affairs that there will be at least $75,000 to be used for the object.

Joseph B. Coward and John H. VanWinkle, the executors appointed by her in her last will, are designated as trustees for the proposed institution. The will was placed on file in the office of the Surrogate in Union county at Elizabeth today. By its provisions all of Miss Webster's relatives and many of her friends will receive bequests either in the shape of realty or money. The Friends Meeting and Muhlenberg hospital are also objects of her benefaction.

To Muhlenberg hospital Miss Webster gives $1,000. To the trustees of the Friends Meeting, in Watchung avenue, where she was a life-long member, $900 is donated. The sum is to be placed in trust and the income to be used for the care of the burial ground in East Third street. An additional $500 is bequeathed to the same trustees for the purchase of books for the First Day school of the Meeting. This sum will be available after the payment of her debts.

Among the larger bequests to relatives is one of $5,000 to Agnes Vail. A similar amount, $2,000, is given Lizzie H. Vail. Mary E. Carey, her housekeeper, is remembered, $1,000 being left to her for faithful services. Athesi Vail and Mary Vail are each bequeathed $200.

After making these bequests, Miss Webster in her will directs the disposition of her personal effects, such as household furniture, heirlooms, wearing apparel, books and the like be distributed among friends and relatives. The list of those whom she remembers in this way includes about fifty Plainfielders.

She then directs that all the rest, residue and remainder of her estate, real, personal and mixed, be used for the establishment of a home for aged and infirmed ladies. The residue of the real estate is to be sold for this purpose and the proceeds used to buy a piece of ground as a site for the home and for its erection and maintenance. After the home is erected, the remaining fund will be placed in trust, the income to be used in running the proposed institution. She does not direct where the home shall be located but in any event a site either in Plainfield or North Plainfield will be selected. The affairs of the home will be in the hands of the executors, Messrs. Van Winkle and Coward, who are the trustees of the estate.

Miss Webster will also disposes of the estate of her grandfather, Joseph Webster. His will was drawn long before Union county was created; when the territory now within its confines was a part of Essex county. Joseph Webster left his granddaughter a life estate in his property; almost entirely real estate. The remainder was given to his relatives, nearly a hundred in number, and Miss Webster in her last testament directs her executors to have these lands divided among the intended objects of his benefactions and their heirs. Some are left as much as an eighth and other a sixteenth of the estate. Joseph Webster's property, it is said, is worth about $50,000.

Men's Club Entertainments.

The entertainment committee from the Men's Club of the Congregational church has arranged for the following well-known professional entertainers for the club meeting nights: November 12, Prince W. Rogers, conjurer and wonder-worker; December 4, Charles F. Laggart, "The Man from Vermont;" February 5, Joseph Lorrain, entertainer and music; March 5, Judge W. B. Green, reader and storyteller; April 2, Frank G. Raynolds, of Boston, an entertainer who entertains.

Barf Company Heavily Fined.

Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 27.—Because of the refusal of the Hammond Packing Company to produce witnesses and records before Special Commissioner Lyle D. Taylor, in Chicago recently, Judge Winfield, in the Pulaski Circuit Court, on motion of Attorney General Rogers, has ordered the answers of the company stricken from the record. Judgment is entered against the company for $10,000 for violating the Arkansas anti-trust law.

CONGREGATIONALISTS TO CONFER AT CHATHAM

ANNUAL NORTHERN NEW JERSEY GATHERING TO BE HELD NEXT WEEK.

The annual meeting of the Northern New Jersey Congressional Conference will be held in the Stanley Congregational church, Chatham, on Thursday, November 4. Hayes, president of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association of New Jersey; 3:50, business; 4:00, address, "Our Own Land," John L. Scudder, of Jersey City, and Rev. Thomas Travis, of Montclair; 5:00, adjournment.

SENATOR COLBY AND WIFE ENTERTAINED BY PRESIDENT.

New Idea Leader Went to Washington to Look After "People's Lobby."

Senator Everett Colby is back from Washington, enthusiastic over the People's lobby, which he went to the National Capitol to help organize. Plans for the work of the lobby, Mr. Colby said, were fairly well laid, and the scheme would be in good working order by the time Congress meets.

The idea of the People's lobby, as it is to be worked out, is to keep careful men at the Capitol during each session of Congress, to watch the pending of legislation, keep tabs on the votes and actions of members and through the newspapers, magazines and other medium, keep the public informed on how their Representatives and Senators vote on various subjects.

The Senator was accompanied by Mrs. Colby, who was formerly Miss Hyde, of this city, on the trip. During their stay in Washington they were entertained at the White House by the President, and the latter and Mr. Colby talked over, in a general way, the situation in the country and in New Jersey. That Senator also talked politics with Secretary of War Taft and Secretary of State Root during his stay in the Capitol. He declined to divulge anything that was said.

Perth Amboy to Vote On Increase.

Perth Amboy is said to have taken advantage of the new law which grants the policemen and firemen an increase of salary. This is the same law which the Common Council of this city has declined to adopt for the benefit of the firemen and policemen. However, it is believed that the Council will grant an increase of pay to these men commensurate with that provided in the new law.

Dr. Johnson at the Hospital.

Dr. S. H. Johnson, of Califon, who was brought to Muhlenberg Hospital last week suffering with paralysis of the lower part of the body, appears to be improving. He was first afflicted with what was supposed to be rheumatism and this was followed by paralysis. Dr. Johnson is a well known physician at Califon.

Drank to Prevent Bends.

John Wilson, the colored man who was taken from a train at the North avenue station Friday morning in a very drunken state, appeared before Judge Runyon Saturday and pleaded his work as conformination for the condition in which he was picked up. He is a worker in one of the Pennsylvania tunnels under the North river, and he told the magistrate he had "to keep a little somthin' on his stomach to keep away the bends." Sentence was suspended.

MOTHER RESCUES CHILD WHOSE DRESS IS ABLAZE

SMALL JERRY CASH FOUND MATCHES WITH USUAL RESULT.

Playing with matches taken from his father's vest, two-year-old Jeremiah Cash, Jr., son of Special Policeman Jeremiah Cash, set fire to his dress Friday afternoon, and was severely burned. His mother suffered painful burns in rescuing him.

Little Jerry found the vest with the matches in it hanging on the fence in the yard of the Cash home at 717 South avenue, at 3 o'clock. Cash placed it there before starting to work about the place. Little Jerry, turned into the yard under his mother's eye, to play, gravitated toward it almost as if he was a small piece of iron and the vest a magnet. The matches were about the first thing Jerry found in the pockets, and he promptly fished them out and started in the ever-popular juvenile game. The usual result happened very quickly.

Before Mrs. Cash, who saw the flames burst out, could reach the child, Jerry's dress was all ablaze. Mrs. Cash, without regard for her own safety, seized the child and beat out the flames. Her hands and arms suffered severely.

Jerry was burned on one side under his arm, and about his face. Dr. Zeglio, summoned hurriedly, said the condition of neither mother nor child was serious. He dressed the burns and made them comfortable.

MORE PAY PROBABLE FOR THE P. O. CLERKS.

Hitchcock's Plan Includes $3,000,000 Extra for Next Year.

First Assistant Postmaster-General Hitchcock intends to ask Congress to increase the salaries of the great majority of the clerks in first- and second-class postoffices. He has issued a statement explaining his estimates covering the compensation of clerks for the next fiscal year. The sum recommended is for the general promotion of about 75 per cent. of the clerks in the grades below $900, 50 per cent. of the clerks receiving $900 and $1,000, 40 per cent. of those receiving from $1,100 to $1,200, and about 30 per cent. of those receiving over $1,200.

The appropriation of $25,700,000 is urged for the compensation of clerks in first- and second-class offices. This is an increase of $2,000,000 over that for the current year. The $3,230,000 and the $1,270,000 is for the employment of additional clerks, and $1,630,000 for the promotion of clerks now in the service, the latter being more than three times that provided for the current year.

There are at present 28,500 clerks in first- and second-class postoffices. As the estimates provide for 16,300 promtions, it will be possible to raise the salaries of more than half of the clerks now employed. While the department plans to increase very generally the salaries of clerks in the lower grades in order to establish a more liberal scale of compensation for the great army of postoffice employes throughout the country, the appropriation will be ample to promote also the more efficient clerks in the higher grades.

First Assistant Postmaster-General Hitchcock has had under consideration for several months the plan of proposing an increase of salaries for postal clerks.

In explaining his purposes Mr. Hitchcock said:

"The large increase carried by the present estimate was decided upon only after a careful inquiry regarding the adequacy of the salaries paid postoffice employes. For several months the department has been accumulating evidence on this subject, and the information obtained showed clearly the necessity of a radical advance in compensation. The frequent resignations of trained clerks and the appointments in their places of inexperienced men have seriously hampered the service. The department is convinced that a higher scale of salaries must be paid postoffice employes in order to ensure the efficient conduct of the postal business."

The department also has under consideration an amendment to the present law covering the salaries of letter-carriers that will permit the payment of a higher rate of compensation. This is a matter now regulated by statute, and Mr. Hitchcock had only by securing from Congress the necessary amendment to existing law.

Jones Taken to Elizabeth.

Chief Kiely decided yesterday afternoon that John L. Jones, held under a technical charge of burglary, would be better off in the county jail than at the station house, so he took him to Elizabeth. Jones' rib, which was shattered by Terry's bullet, is still sore, a few days more of simple regimen will do the rigger good. The grand jury will reach his case Tuesday.

Approaching Wedding.

Invitations have been issued for the wedding of Miss Laura Rupert and Isaac Hoagland, both of East Millstone, which will take place at the home of the bride Wednesday night, November 7. The couple are well known here, where they have many friends.

STEVENS HITS CRITICS

Minority Senatorial Candidate Trying to "Reform Incurably Insane Democracy."

REPLIES TO EDITORIALS

Says He Doesn't See Why Dryden Should Worry Over His Running in New Jersey.

Colonel E. A. Stevens, Democratic candidate for United States Senator, has given out the following interview in reference to editorial attacks made upon him, and also seizes the opportunity to take a fling at Senator Dryden.

"I really had no idea," said the colonel, "that my poor little boom had become so dangerous as to draw such a terrific attack. My ignorance of all State and national matters as set forth by partisan newspapers is really a very serious drawback. It is lamentable to contemplate the mere possibility of New Jersey being represented in the Senate of the United States by other than a great statesman, such as we have had of late.

"And to think that I should insist upon the passage of a real corrupt practise act, not knowing of that measure called by that name, passed by the last Republican Assembly; still I must persist in my purpose, in spite of my ignorance.

"Like the other shams which the Republican party has foisted upon the State, the corrupt practise act of last winter deserves no notice, unless it be to condemn it. As the present campaign is abundantly showing, it is not preventing corrupt practises, and was not intended to stop them, and I have no doubt that it will not reveal anything of interest to the voters after the election.

"As I have never made a secret of my object in accepting what seemed at first a forlorn hope, my newspaper critics must be so kind as to overlook the fact that I am going to push my corrupt practise ideas on my own party. I don't see why Senator Dryden should worry over my voting to ruin the State of New Jersey, myself included.

"If I am elected, I may apply to my critics for instruction in national affairs. With such an instructor and guide I will probably be safe.

"In view of my well-known love for society and its influences, I trust that Senator Dryden will not tremble at the expected loss of his modest savings, however he may dread the loss of that social position with which, it is said, a United States Senator is clothed. That would be too bad.

"But as I am only trying to reform the horrible and incurably insane Democracy, and am not going outside of the fold, I trust I will be allowed to pursue my way in peace. I am going to pursue it, anyway, provided I am not interrupted, by being required, to the neglect of personal and political business, by attending 'pink teas.'"

VETERAN MACHINIST DEAD.

Jacob Grieb Succumbs to Long Illness at the Age of 70.

After an illness of severe illness, Jacob Grieb, seventy years old, one of the best known older machinists of this vicinity, died at his home in Dunellen, Friday, at eleven o'clock. He is survived by a widow and six grown children.

Mr. Grieb lived in this city for twenty-five years before he moved to Dunellen, about eighteen months ago. He is a native of Germany. For thirteen or fourteen years he was an employee of the Potter shop. His funeral will be held from the Plainfield alumin plate and press plant at Dewey Park. The family liver on West Third street and Sponer avenue for nearly twenty years in a house built for them.

The children are George Grieb, of Newark; Alfred Grieb, of Elizabeth; Charles Grieb, of Newark; Albert Grieb, of Brooklyn; Miss Ella Grieb, who lives at home, and a married daughter in England.

The funeral was held Monday afternoon. The service was private.

FAST DRIVER FINED.

Stonewall Jackson Caught By Bike Cop on Park Avenue.

Stonewall Jackson was fined $5 in the city court Saturday for fast driving on upper Park avenue yesterday. Special Policeman McGinley had a chase before he overhauled Jackson.

The horseman was said by the police to have been racing. He collided with a rig coming in the opposite direction, just how the collision got him. The other man's wagon was damaged. Jackson has agreed to pay for the repairs.

Prizes For Best Designs.

The drawing competition arranged by The Oracle, the Plainfield High School paper, for the best designs for headings of the different departments has closed. Several excellent drawings were submitted and the pupils have certainly exhibited the most original and suggestive ideas in the most artistic style, and thus winning a free subscription to The Oracle, are: Miss Grace Weeks, exchanges; Miss Clara Hallard, literary; George H. Fisher, jr., school notes. The competition for the continued story closes January 3.

MURDERER BEGINS TWENTY YEARS' TERM

WILLIAM DITTMAR, OF SOMERVILLE, HAS BEEN TAKEN TO TRENTON.

William Dittmar, foreman of the Somerville Iron Works, who killed David Howard, one of his fellow-workmen, on June 10 last, was taken from the Somerset county jail at Somerville to the State prison at Trenton Thursday by Sheriff Edward Cooper to serve a sentence of twenty years. There was a pathetic parting between Dittmar and his wife and his twelve-year-old daughter at the county jail.

Mrs. Dittmar, who left her husband a few hours before he murdered Howard and returned to him shortly after the crime and has been devoted to him during his confinement in jail, is said to have sacrificed her own good name at his trial. Mrs. Dittmar and little daughter will give up their home at Somerville and live with Dittmar's brother, in Baltimore.

VICTIM OF BURGLAR MAKES GENEROUS OFFER.

Will Give $10 and a Drink to the Man that Robbed Him.

Chatham, Oct. 27.—It is seldom that the victim of a burglary has cause to feel grateful to the burglar, but that is the position Councilman Frederic A. Boyle feels regarding the burglar who broke into his house Wednesday night and robbed the place of articles valued at about $50, or perhaps more. Mr. Boyle says, furthermore, he will not prosecute the thief, or if he will call at his house during the day, he will give him a "ten spot" and a drink and call it square. The reason for this unusual attitude on Mr. Boyle's part is that he hopes never to have his eman business so quietly that no one in the house was disturbed. Mrs. Boyle is dangerously ill and Mr. Boyle fears that any shock might do her great damage, if not cost her her life. To this end the dogs have been taken away from the premises where their barking will not be heard, and every precaution taken to insure absolute quiet. Is it to this fact that the burglar owes his easy task. Mr. Boie says that Wednesday was the first night in three weeks that he has been able to sleep all night, but he was completely tired out and slept like a log all night. His man heard some one walking around, but took no notice, thinking it was either one of the nurses moving about or else Mr. Boyle. The burglar made his entrance by forcing one of the front windows. He took a revolver, a watch, a locket, some money, tableware and other things, but Mr. Boyle says he can easily get enough and he would like the locket returned on account of the associations connected with it—and the thief can have a $10 bill and a drink if he will go back and make himself known. He refuses to take any steps toward the arrest and punishment of the offender.

PRIESTS VISITS PRESIDENT.

Full-Blooded Indian and Filipino in the Delegation.

Washington, Dec. 27.—An interesting delegation of Catholic missionaries called on the President at the White House Wednesday to pay their respects. They were introduced by the Rev. William H. Ketcham, director of the Bureau of Catholic Indian missions in Washington.

The delegation included Father Albert Segalquen, a full-blooded Pottawatomie Indian from Oklahoma, a student at the Apostolic Mission House, near the Catholic University; Domingo Dikit, a Filipino from Pitilla, Luzon, who is about to return to the Philippines after having completed a course of four years study in Maryland and Pennsylvania; the Rev. J. O'Hara, of Kingfisher, Okla., and the Rev. Father Vincent, a Benedictine monk from Sacred Heart Abbey, Okla. Fathers O'Hara, Van Der Aa and Vincent are also students at the Apostolic Mission House, which trains missionaries for the conversion of non-Catholics to Roman Catholicism.

Other interesting members of the delegation were three young Belgian brothers, who have become Catholic priests.

Papers on Missions.

The monthly meeting of the Young Ladies' Missionary Society of the First Baptist church, was held Friday afternoon at the home of Miss Shreve, of Grove street. The devotional exercises were led by Mrs. J. B. Probasco. Miss Kinsman read a paper on "Settlement Work in Large Cities," and Mrs. Kenneth Robbie read a paper entitled "A Glimpse of the Island World," telling of the principles of the island and describing their people. Tea was served at the close of the exercises and the meeting adjourned to the church to pack some boxes of clothing for needy white people in the mountains of Kentucky.

Short Line Trolley Across the State.

Work is being rushed on the New Jersey short line trolley which is to run from Trenton to Elizabeth. The new steel bridge over the Rahway river just north of East Rahway is now nearing completion. The new line will cross the county road to Roosevelt and Port Reading, and will run under the Port Reading railroad south of the county road.

SOCIETY FOLK FLOCK TO PARK CLUB OPENING

PROGRAM INCLUDED SOUTHERN SONGS AND RECITATIONS AND DANCING.

The opening reception, marking the resumption of the annual social season at the Park Club, Thursday, was a great success. There were about 300 society people from this city, the borough and out-of-town present. The clubhouse, always attractive, seemed even more so last night, with its pretty decorations of clematis and chrysanthemums, while an arrangement of large palms on the stage, behind which the orchestra was seated, was quite effective.

The patronesses for the affair were Mrs. Henry A. McGee, Mrs. B. VanD. Hedges, Mrs. J. B. Betts, Mrs. H. C. White, Mrs. Edwin S. Hooley, Mrs. Joseph B. Yerkes, Mrs. George D. Hallock, Mrs. Townsend Rushmore and Mrs. John L. Watson.

During the early part of the evening there was a reception, during which the guests were received by the entertainment committee consisting of Mrs. Charles A. Reed, chairman; Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. McGee, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Watson, Dr. and Mrs. B. VanD. Hedges, Mr. and Mrs. Edward S. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. George D. Hallock, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel St. John McCutchen, Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. McCutchen and Charles A. Reed.

Additional pleasure was afforded during the reception by popular selections by the orchestra, and at 9 o'clock Miss Lucine Finch entertained the guests for an hour with southern dialect stories and songs. There was a peculiar charm about her for the reason that she is a southern woman, being a native of New Orleans, and she related many of the stories and sang many of the songs that were told and sung to her by her old "Mammy." Miss Finch won her audience from the first and she received a flattering ovation, being recalled again and again. Miss Finch is a friend of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Watson, of the borough, and she is their guest.

After the entertainment dancing was enjoyed for the rest of the evening. Music was furnished by von der Heide's orchestra, of Newark. It was noticed that many unable to come for the reception and entertainment arrived in time for the dance.

Whitehouse Couple Celebrate.

Whitehouse, Oct. 27.—The home of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Harsel, in this place, was the scene of a merry gathering yesterday, when the aged couple entertained about sixty friends from Easton, Newark, Lehighton, Readington, South Branch, Lamington and Whitehouse. The occasion was the celebration of their golden wedding. The guests were mostly children and grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Harsel. A dinner was served at 1 o'clock by the late Rev. Dr. Van Amburgh. The couple have five children, Samuel P. Harsel, of Stanton; William Harsel, of Bedminster; Mrs. John B. Smith, of Stanton; Mrs. David Perrine, of Lamington, and Mrs. Silvania A. Harsel, of Westfield. There are twelve grandchildren.

Big Simian Breaks Loose.

New York, Oct. 27.—Losing his temper evidently by the grimaces made by a crowd of women and children in the primate house in the Zoological Park yesterday afternoon, Dohong, a large orang-outang, pulled two bars from their fastenings and sprang through the opening, armed with one of the bars. In a moment all was confusion, and in the panic which followed women and children fought each other to get through the narrow entrances to the walks. Nobody was injured in the rush, and Dohong made no attempt to assail anyone. After the building had been cleared Keeper Riley opened one of the doors and looked in. Dohong was standing with his legs crossed, leaning on the iron bar. He looked peaceful and extended his arm to the keeper. Riley walked in and, locking arms with Dohong, led the orang-outang back to his cage.

Chief Doane's Slight Accident.

Chief T. O. Doane, of the fire department, had a narrow escape a few days ago from breaking his ankle, and although he has not been off duty, he still suffers considerable pain. He was inspecting one of the new houses being erected in the East End of town by L. W. Spear & Co., and was walking across a beam on the floor, when it suddenly tipped. The Chief's ankle was severely lacerated and wrenched, but fortunately he caught himself quick enough to prevent more serious injury.

No Teachers' Institute.

There will be no teachers' institute held in Union county this year, and from present indications several other counties in the State will have to do without these educational gatherings. It seems that ever since the amount formerly appropriated for institutes exclusively has been used both for institutes and High school inspectors, the annual appropriation has been far from sufficient to meet the needs which an institute in every county would require.

Big Machine Crashes Into a Load of Iron Pipes.

UPSET AND SMASHED

Theodore F. Reynolds, of Orange, Struck in the Face By One of the Pipes, and Only One Hurt.

Theodore F. Reynolds, of Orange, has his nose broken in an automobile accident at Park avenue and Ninth street, Saturday, and four other occupants of his touring car had narrow escapes from injury. The auto was thrown on one side by a collision with the projecting ends of a load of water pipes on a wagon driven by C. W. Krausse, of the borough.

The automobile party, consisting of Theodore F. Reynolds, of Orange; W. G. Currie, Harry Sadler, T. E. Day, of New York, and Herman Washeim, the driver. They were on their way from Orange to Lakewood. Krausse was driving in the same direction with a load of water pipes. He intended to turn off at Park avenue into the newer avenue, and the chauffeur thought he would have no trouble in passing the wagon on the right side.

Krausse was driving rather slowly, but it is said that the automobile was going at a pretty lively pace, and in the collision the ends of the pipes on the chauffeur run into the water pipes. The end of one struck Mr. Reynolds, who was on the front seat, on the nose, breaking it. The roadway was slippery with mud and the auto swung completely around, upset and was ditched, throwing the occupants into the road. Only Reynolds was hurt in any way. He was taken into O. T. Waring's house, where Dr. A. F. VanHorn dressed his injury.

The automobile was badly damaged. The front was ripped and torn, and one of the hind wheels collapsed.

Chief of Police Kiely was among the first to arrive at the scene of the accident and at once started an investigation of it. He told the autoists that he did not want to work any hardship on them, but as there was a difference of opinion as to the speed of the machine, he felt compelled to hold them for further examination. A half-hour later he released them and they drove back to Orange in a car furnished by F. L. C. Martin.

The most frightened members of the party was Harry Sadler. He and his wife were passengers on the Steamboat Adirondacks, last week, when it was run into by the Steamboat Saratoga, and Mr. Sadler has recently been over the effects of that accident.

To Attack Oil Trust.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 27.—On very high authority it is announced that Attorney General Moody will within a month bring proceedings against prominent members of the Standard Oil Company under the terms of the Sherman Anti-Trust law, which provides penalties of fine and imprisonment for its violation. This action, which will be the most notable of all ever undertaken by the government against a commercial organization, will be Mr. Moody's valedictory as a Cabinet member. For the trust prosecuting service he has already rendered President Roosevelt has decided to appoint him to the Supreme Court Bench. The fight against the Oil Trust will devolve upon Charles J. Bonaparte, who is Secretary of the Navy, and who has been decided upon as the next Attorney General.

J. H. C., Jr.

There was much excitement in banking circles Saturday but not until J. Herbert Case, secretary and treasurer of the Plainfield Trust Company, was approached could the cause be learned. The expression on Mr. Case's face led the reporter to believe that fresh good fortune had come to the trust company within a day or two. What was the matter? Oh, nothing, 'cept it's a boy.

School Drops Football.

New York, Oct. 27.—Football has been dropped by Pratt Institute, following a decision of directors that the lives of students are endangered by the games. The institute's eleven will play the Hotchkiss School team in Lakeville, Conn., today and will then drop its schedule, defaulting to many old rivals, including Stevens Institute and a team from West Point.

Fish Were Scarce.

Local fish dealers were at their wits' end, yesterday, to furnish their patrons with fish for their orders and something like a famine existed until last night. Heavy storms along the coast had prevented fishermen getting any large catches and as a result inland dealers got little or none. Fred Ivanyi, the West Second street dealer, adopted all sorts of extremes to meet demands but only partially succeeded. The pressure was relieved today by new consignments and no further trouble is expected.

OLD FASHIONED.

What has become of the old fashioned man who wore bedticking suspenders?

A real old fashioned woman never uses the word "mattress;" she always calls it a tick.

What has become of teh old fashioned country church that gave "Mrs. Jarley's Waxworks?"

What has become of teh old fashioned child that had to go to "meeting" twice every Sunday?

We suppose that if ever a real old fashioned woman reads she makes up her bed when she leaves her berth in the Pullman in the morning.—Atchison Globe.

What has become of the old fashioned man who said, "You can go to grass!"

When a man puts on a new suit of clothes old fashioned men say, "Where was the fire?"

What has become of the old fashioned child called her masculine kin "the men folks?"

When a child asks an old fashioned woman a question the woman is liable to sa, "Curiosity killed a cat."

What has become of the old fashioned curly haired boy who put "clabber" on his hair to straighten it?

What has become of the old fashioned woman who could tell whether a shoe would fit or not by putting her hand in first?

What has become of the old fashioned woman who when she tried to get her husband "up" in the morning said, "Get up, lazy bones?"—Atchison Globe.

ENGLISH ETCHINGS.

The Channel Islands are the oldest appanage of the British crown. They have been English since 1066.

The first woolen cloth made in England was manufactured about 1330, though it was not dyed and dressed by the English until 1667.

Frederick Townsend, charged in a London court with maliciously wounding James Ridley, pleaded in justification that Ridley had caled him a "Glasgow Irishman."

In a London police court the other day a woman, testifying to bad language used to her by another woman, stated that her next door neighbor came out to see what the trouble was, and when she heard the language she dropped dead.

Sixty per cent. of the London police are on the night service, which they prefer to day service because there is less to do. One of their main duties at night is to see that doors and windows are barred and to notify the occupants of houses when they are ret.

HOME REMEDIES.

Arnica diluted with warm water acts like magic in soothing tired, swollen feet.

Camphor is very soothing in cases of chilblains and should always be kept in the house. It is simply rubbed on.

A simple and effective ointment for cold sores or fever blisters: Five grains of camphor, one-half dram of powdered arrowroot, one-half dram of subnitrate of bismuth, one-half ounce of ointment of rosewater. Apply often.

Onion syrup made in the following manner will relieve the congestion in cases of croup. Cut several raw onions into slices, sprinkle the slices with granulated sugar and squeeze out the juice. The dose is a teaspoonful every fifteen minutes until relief is obtained. This strup is also much used in cases of bronchitis.

PHOTO DON'TS.

Don't wear black. It gives a hard, dense tone.

Don't smile unless it comes naturally or the result will be annoying.

Don't expect to get a photograph that will please you if you are fatigued when sitting.

Don't be afraid of wearing lace. The line between the flesh and dress will be softened by it.

Don't take a full faced picture if the nose is crooked or the eyes weak. Try a three-quarter view.

Don't choose a day when the sunshine is very bright or every imperfection will be developed. A well lighted cloudy day is best.

THE GARDENER.

To promote the formation of buds and flowers on geraniums let the plants become pot-bound and kept in a sunny place, water sparingly and avoid pruning.

If snails trouble your pansy bed dust over the plants a little carbolic powder and there will be no more trouble with the leaves and blossoms being eaten. This powder is put up in cans and is not destructive to plant life.

When Jack Frost visits your garden and kisses all the tender plants, do not forget to rescue a few sweet alyssum roots. Cut back the tops to two inches and place in the large pots or in the window boxes as border plants. They will trail from the sides in clusters of dainty white.

Have a saucer of sand always ready in a sunny window for plant cutting. Some one gives you a bouquet of choice flowers. Look it over before it withers and you may find a valuable cutting. Place it in the sand, keep it moist and in a few days you have a plant ready for potting.

Pansies, pinks and carnations, though mostly hardy when well rooted in the garden, should be given some protection by placing a frame of boards around the bed and when extreme cold weather comes place a covering of boughs of evergreen over the plants, or boards may be used if they can be so arranged as to let in the sunshine on warm days.

The narcissus blooms best in a bright but rather cool room. The room should be frost-proof, but unheated, to get the best results.

HINTS FOR WOMEN.

Please tell me ..ow to clean a purpre Panama skirt that has butter stains on it. They are on the front breadth, and I am afraid to use gasoline, as rings might form or the color of the goods might be changed in cleaning. Also what can I use to make my handbag black and glossy again? It is growing rusty in appearance. Thanking you in advance,

U. L. M.

You will be running more or less of a risk if you try to clean the skirt at home, as almost any cleaning fluid is apt to change the color. Touch the spot lightly with diluted ammonia water. Warm water and soap or cold water and soapsuds are sometimes effective, if followed with a touch of a cloth dipped in diluted ammonia. This usually prevents the color from fading.

Another way is to cover the spot with powdered French chalk and hold over a hot iron. The heat will melt the grease and the chalk will absorb it. Rub the chalk off with a linen rag. If this is not successful try rubbing the spots with spirits of turpentine.

Would advise you to take the skirt to a professional cleaner. Inquire at almost any store for a preparation to blacken your bag. We do not give names in this column.

Kindly inform me through your question column, which is proper, for the hostess or the guests to cut a birthday cake. Also what games can be played by a party of young ladies and gentlemen. And oblige. BIRTHDAY.

The hostess usually cuts the cake.

As it is so near Hallowe'en I think some sort of a fortune party would prove more enjoyable than anything else. In one corner of the room make a cave of boughs and draperies. Have one of the young ladies dress as a witch, hide herself in the cave, and hand out sealed envelopes to each guest. The envelopes should contain the future destinies of every one present. From time to time we have published a great many Hallowe'en games. If you desire more I will be glad to help you.

When supper is served, have for the centre piece a large surprise pie, with streamers of ribbon going to the plate of each guest. At a given signal they are to pull the ribbons, when they will find a Hallowe'en favor attached.

Please publish in your paper a recipe for making popovers, and oblige,

A READER.

Popovers—Two well beaten eggs, one cup of milk, a pinch of salt, one tablespoonful of melted butter, two cups of flour; mix, and when all is together cup of milk. Bake in a quick oven, in gem pans.

Please let me know how to make jelly roll, and oblige. CORA.

Jelly Roll—Three eggs, one cup of sugar, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one cup of flour; mix, and bake in a shallow pan, in a very thin layer, spread jelly over it and roll it up. Wrap in a cloth and bake.

STAIN REMOVERS.

Grass Stains.—Alcohol or molasses.

Blood Stains.—Soak in cold soapsuds to which a little kerosene, if followed, will be added.

Fresh Paint.—Try kerosene, vaseline or machine oil; then wash with soap and cold water.

Ink Stains.—Dip into boiling water, spread over a basin, rub well with salts of sorrel; then rinse thoroughly.

Wine Stains.—Sprinkle thickly with salt while still wet. If dried wet with boiling water, rub thoroughly with salt and pour boiling water through.

Rust.—Wet in cold water, spread on the sun; then apply to each one ordinary table salt wet with lemon juice. As fast as it dries renew the application. As soon as the stain is removed rinse thoroughly.

Indelible Ink.—Soak in a solution of common salt; then wash with diluted ammonia. Rinse well. Javelle water and a solution of oxalic acid will also remove indelible ink. Rinsing must follow immediately and thoroughly.

Relatives of "Skiddoo."

How the passions will stimulate the growth of language is an interesting study.

One of the most curious examples of this is in the everyday desire to get rid of some unwelcome visitor.

No philologist will ever trace the origin of many of these grotesque expressions nor fashion how they were ever made expressive of expressing the idea. "Skiddoo" is a modern example that is just as expressive as "Get out," but where it came from and who were its sponsors is not clear, to say nothing of its development into a full rounded word.

Following is a partial list of other phrases and words:

Absquatulate. Vamoose the ranch. Shake your duties. Light out. Shunt off. Beat it. Retire. Get out. Go away. Leave. Hit the trail. Hike. Skedaddle. Make your escape. Vacate. Withdraw from the scene. Scoot. 'Raus mit 'em. Blow. On your way. Trot along. Back to the mines. To the tall timber. Get a move on. To the grass. Take a run for yourself. Clear out. Go along. Get. Ta-ta. So long. Brush by. Shut the door from the outside. Dig.—Chicago Journal.

A Bad Craftsman.

"Wot ails ye?" asked Casey of Kearney.

"'Tis a bad nose-bleed I have," replied Karney, the plumber.

"Huh! 'tis a poor plumber ye are if ye can't stop a leak in yer own face."

MOHAMMED'S BLOODY HAND.

History of the Inscription on a Pillar in the Church of St. Sophia.

In the course of our exploration in Constantinople we visited a building in an obscure and poor quarter of Stamboul inhabited solely by Mohammedans.

It is called the Mosque Kakrie, but it is or was a church dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. The beauty of the mosque ceiling and walls not even centuries of neglect have been able to obliterate.

When we returned to the great Church of St. Sophia, now a mosque, and saw again the print of the bloody hand of Mohammed, which is pointed out high up on the wall of that once Christian church, we understand its significance better than we had at first sight.

Mohammed II. after advancing his outposts gradually and stealthily had finally, as if in a night, crossed the Bosporus from Asia and raised his forts on the European side of the straits. Then, before, on a trip up the Bosporus, we had seen the ruins of those fortifications.

The rulers of the city had protested in vain against this encroachment. When the Moslems finally attacked the city the Christians fled in terror to St. Sophia. An ancient legend, firmly believed, promised that this sanctuary was absolutely safe.

Mohammed proved the fallacy of their trust by breaking down the doors, murdering those who had sought safety there, men, women and children—so many of them that finally, forcing his horse over the great pile of dead bodies, away up on the side of a pillar he planted his bloody hand on the clear wall in token of his victory over the Christians. "That story has still overshadows the darkest portion of southeastern Europe."—Rosary Magazine.

BIG PRESENTS FOR PRINCETON UNIVERSITY.

At a meeting of the Princeton University trustees the following gifts, received since last June, were announced: For current expenses, $48,352.59; for books and apparatus, $4,651.13; increase of endowment, $111,845.89; total, $164,851.52.

Among these gifts are included $45,165 from the committee of fifty, and $40,066.32 from the estate of the late Dr. John S. Sayre to found a Sayre fellowship.

At the same meeting the following elections to professorship and assistant professorships took place: Howard McClenahan, as professor of physics; Augustus Trowbridge, Ph. D., Berlin, as professor of physics; Oliver Kenyon Richardson, D. Sc., of Cambridge, as professor of physics; Norman Smith, of Glasgow, university, as Stuart professor of psychology; H. Lester Cook and Philip Robinson, as assistant professor of physics.

Fifteen men were appointed as in*structors.*

CLOSE TO THE PEOPLE.

High Feed in Kansas.

The following menu was put up for four men in this town:

Roast Walnut River Crawdads,
On the Half Shell.
Baked Walnut River Black Bass.
Grated God Corn Bread.
Broiled Butler County Prairie Chicken.
Brown Essence.
Baked Sweet Potatoes.
Escalloped Spuds.
Fried Butler County Quail.
Walnut River Frogs' Legs Salad.
Chili Sauce.
Apple and Pumpkie Pie.
Cake and Fruit.
Butler County Cheese.
Sorghum and Honey.
Maryland Biscuits.
Coffee and Buttermilk.

Every item on this bill of fare except the coffee is a Butler County product, and if there is any city paper that can present a better one we would like to see it.—El Dorado (Kan.) Republican.

All Well Again in Greenville.

The "Little Spy" has been seriously afflicted with appendicitis, and thus far escaped the surgeon's knife, we are now able to walk around in our room, and will endeavor to keep in line with correspondents and friends.

It is gratifying to know, and a pleasure to inform our many readers of the prosperous condition of our place and people who have a bountiful supply of all things necessary for comfort and pleasure in this life.

We wish to extend our many thanks to Drs. Hamilton and Hays, who attended us during our severe illness, and would say to those who that take the dreaded disease, call Drs. Milburn and Hays.—Greenville (Tenn.) Sun.

Graft in the Name of the Lord.

A young kid with a white face like a girl, delicate, soft, little hands too nice to "earn his bread by the sweat of his brow," blowed into town Wednesday afternoon, and in the "name of the Lord" proceeded to do some read up-to-date grafting. From the way as pulled in the shekels in his house to house canvas one would think he had been taking personal lessons from pious old John D. Such individuals, along with other tramps and hoboes, should go to work and earn an honest living.—Yoncalla (Wash.) Courier.

Lizst Going Home.

The small town of Dovorjan (formerly known as Raiding), where Franz Lizst first saw the light of day, is about to build a new church. In another five years' time the great Hungarian musician's birth anniversary will have reached its centenary, and now the church and local authorities, having called a meeting, have formed a committee, headed by Prince Nicolaus Esterhazy and Count Johann Illchy, in order to arrange that the auspicious day—which is to coincide with the home-bringing of the master's mortal remains—shall be in every way suitably honored. Franz Lizst, who died in the year 1886 at Bayreuth, lies at present beside the great Friend and illustrious son-in-law, Richard Wagner.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Learned, Lazy Guam.

The island of Guam, a possession of the United States in mid-Pacific, has an area of 200 square miles on which are 9,000 people. Statistics give eighteen schools on the island and state that nine-tenths of the islanders can read and write. This is the people will not work. The shipments of merchandise from the United States to Guam amounted in value to $101,900 in 1904 and only $610 in 1905.

The only farming implement used in Guam is a hoe, used like the scuffling hoe in the States, ploughs being unknown. Guam is said to be thickly wooded, well waters dand fertile, producing tropical fruits abundantly. There is also a good harbor. If the American people wish to help Guam they can do it quickly and efficiently by teaching the people improved agriculture. If the agricultural possibilities of Guam were developed the people would not have to depend upon Japanese traders for their sustenance. —Letter to Charlotte (N. C.) Chronicle.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 4.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic—The Sacrament of communion with Christ.—John xiv, 15-26.

Communion with Christ is one of the greatest blessings that result from Christian discipleship. There are various ways of communing with Christ. We may commune with Him in prayer. Prayer is not simply petition. It does not consist simply in asking for things desired, but also in holding communion with the Father or the Son, to whom we pray. We talk to them as child to parent or as friend to friend, and not the least of the blessings of prayer is this communion and fellowship with the Saviour. "A little talk with Jesus, how it smooths the rugged road." We may commune with Christ through His word. In the Scriptures He speaks to us, and in them we have the means of the best of fellowship with Him. In the celebration of the Lord's supper we hold communion with Christ. It is called the "communion" not only because Christians enjoy each other's fellowship in the performance of this sacrament, but because in it the true disciple communes with Christ through the emblems that represent His broken body and shed blood. But the chief avenue of communion with Christ is through the Holy Spirit. At Christ's departure from the earth He sent His Holy Spirit to abide as His representative in the hearts of believers, and through the indwelling Spirit we have the sweetest communion with the Master. In all these ways we should be faithful in communing with Him who is the source of our spiritual lives.

The blessedness of communion with Christ cannot be overestimated. The intercourse of friend with friend is one of the chief sources of the happiness of life, and how much greater is this happiness when the friend is Jesus Christ our Saviour and our Redeemer. To hold communion with the good and great of the earth through personal intercourse or through their written words is a source of untold blessing; but He is the greatest of the great, the best of the good, and communion with Him consequently produces far greater happiness.

In the results of communion with Christ we see its blessedness.

1. Such communion comforts us amid life's troubles and afflictions.

What a friend we have in Jesus,
All our sins and griefs to bear;
What a privilege to carry
Everything to God in prayer!

2. It is a source of knowledge. In our intercourse with Him through the spirit we are taught concerning spiritual things. The spiritual knowledge and discernment of many who are ignorant and unlearned are sometimes remarkable. But it is easily explained. They live close to the Master, and He reveals many things to them. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned, and all who would attain unto spiritual knowledge it must be through a life of fellowship with the Holy Spirit, who dwells within us. "He will reveal all things unto you."

3. Communion with Christ is an inspiration to christian service. We cannot live in loving fellowship with Him who died for us without wanting to do more for Him.

4. It deepens our faith; constant communion with the living Christ keeps ever before us His reality, which is the great support of faith. To many Christians Christ is not as real as He ought to be and the cause is largely from their neglect to commune with Him as they ought. Let us not miss the sweetest and best joys of our Christian lives by neglect of communion with Christ; but let us live in daily fellowship with Him.

BIBLE READINGS.

Ex. xxv, 21, 22; Matt. xi, 28-30; xxvii, 19, 20, 24; Luke xxiv, 1; John xv, 1-14; xvii, 20-26; Acts ii, 1-4; I Cor. x, 16, 17; Gal. ii, 20; I John iv, 11-21.

Younger Officers.

The feeling is growing that the young people of our churches should be induced to join the Christian Endeavor society and that one reason why it is difficult to do this in some places is that so many who are of older years are in the positions of leadership in the local societies. This condition can be remedied. "In fact, it must be. The very life of the Christian Endeavor society depends upon it. We can have a young people's society only when we have a society of young people. This has been said before. But it needs to be said again and again for in some churches the situation is so serious as to cause alarm. Give the young people a chance with the young people's society. Put them into places of responsibility and leadership.—Rev. W. Knight Chaplin.

"Seed Sowers."

Endeavorers of the Japanese church of Honolulu have organized themselves into a band which they call "Seed Sowers," whose purpose it is to distribute tracts throughout the city. There are twelve companies of these Seed Sowers. They preach in the streets. with a choir of singers, on Saturday evenings, and if any member of the band is unable to distribute tracts on the Sunday following he contributes a sum of money toward the expenses.

In the Midweek Meeting.

A few years ago President Walden of the Australasian Christian Endeavor union obtained from fifty societies the statistics of the midweek prayer meetings of their churches and found that the Endeavorers furnished 75 per cent of the attendance.

Australian Growth.

Australia now has 85,000 members of Christian Endeavor societies and expects to reach 100,000 during the present year.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Nov. 4: "Church Extension."

By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D.

Hymns for worship are essential consistent.—Ex. xl, 18; John xvii, 20; Acts ii, 38. God honored the building of a synagogue.—Luke vii, 1-10. Liberality is a mark of love.—Ex. xxxvi, 5-7.

Many of our older people remember the beginnings of this society and its work and have followed its progress with deep interest through all the years of its history, but there will always need to be a retelling of the story of all such enterprises, for there is ever a new generation coming forward to whom the familiar things of the fathers are strange and who need to have the whole explained anew.

Our leaguers should know how and why the Church Extension society was founded, what its magnificent work in many years should have to propel telling. Its present claims and opportunities for usefulness should be well considered and all our young people set aside a certain part of their income regularly for this benevolence.

Many churches in the east, and not a few of them with large congregations, have in the pressure of some exigency been saved from forced sale and the consequent dispersal of the people by timely gifts or loans from this society. But its chief work has not been of this character, nor does it make its strong appeal for support on this ground. At the close of the civil war the Pacific slope was widely separated from the east by lofty mountain chains and a vast stretch of plains roamed by great herds of bison and entirely unsettled. As you left St. Louis you plunged almost at once into the wilderness. Omaha was the farthest outpost of civilization. The Central Pacific and Union Pacific railroads were built after the most strenuous exertions and completed by the sheer genius. This gave an opening into the vast waste for homes and towns where before had been only roaming Indian tribes. Soon the tides of immigration began to fill up the territory thus opened, until five great sections of population have been built between the Mississippi and the mountains.

As the people began to push into the newly opened lands there was need of the preacher following with the gospel. Where the home was founded there must be church. It was in the glory of early Methodism that she followed the pioneer into the wilderness, and where he built his log cabin in the days of Asbury and his fellow workers there you would find the circuit rider, with his saddlebags and Bible, holding service and saving souls. Methodism in these later days has been no less aggressive and heroic. The fathers traveled on horseback and forded rivers and slept in the woods. The sons have built 273 churches, efficiently, if in a different way, made necessary by the changes of conditions.

The story of the building of the great new west is one of the romances of history. Where the new town sprang up, either on the railroad or as a mining camp or the prominent home of the settler, there came the preacher, selected a lot for a church, called the people together to worship, took a collection for a building fund and went to work. But these people were almost invariably poor and could do little beyond making for themselves the poorest kind of a log or sod house at first and so could not do all needed for a church, however willing they were. So the Church Extension society's work came in right there and helped when they put to the limit of their ability. The strongest work of the society has been just this kind of aid on the frontiers or in the mountains in the west, and also in the south.

In the south was dire need among both white and colored after the war, and but for the help of this society our land could not have the prosperity it now enjoys.

The need for its work has not passed, but may have changed somewhat in character. Its collections should not be less, but in accordance of present needs should rather increase its income.

Ability a Divine Trust.

He who gives beauty to the stars, fragrance to the flowers and life to the child gives gifts and graces to mankind. "To every man according to his ability." The eagle has no song, the lark has, yet both are of God and have their place in His created realm. So each human life fills its place and has its opportunity. By our own will we inspire or abuse, multiply or stultify, double or decrease, our power.

We determine our usefulness, measure our happiness and fix our destiny. How important, then, that we wisely improve our ability, so that in our being and doing for Christ and humanity we may be pleasant in manner, practical in service, patient in spirit, pure in life and prayerful in heart, thus seasoning all centers of society and illuminating the lives of those with whom we have to do!—Rev. W. F. Wilson.

Way of Duty.

Our duty is never completely hidden from us. God will always give us light enough to see our next duty. This is a great truth and the understanding of it brings much peace, for the serious problems of life are generally the deciding of what is our duty. Now any one who is honest with God and willing to walk in the path of duty when it is revealed to him how easily and beyond a peradventure what is his duty. It is possible for each of us to be certain whether or not he is at present at the post of duty. By this providence, by His word, by His Spirit, by the testimony of our own conscience, by the judgment of God with whom we have to do, by our fellowmen, by our own soul.—Wilbur L. Lee.

AREA OF UNITED STATES.

Geological Survey Bulletin Gives It as 3,026,789 Square Miles.

The United States geological survey at Washington recently issued bulletin 302, by Henry Gannett, which represents the result of conference and co-operation of the land office, census bureau and geological survey in an effort to agree on what constitutes "the area of the United States." The absence of a standard of measurement for determining the areas led to a discrepancy between the tables of the census bureau made in 1887 and those of the general land office prepared in 1899.

The result of the co-operation of the departments is that the area of the United States proper, which is given as 3,026,789 square miles, has been increased over the census figures by 1,188 square miles. The bulletin gives the area of Alaska as 590,884, the Philippines 115,026, Hawaii 6,449, Porto Rico 3,435, Guam 210, Samoa 77 and the Panama canal strip 474 square miles. All of the detached territory is subject to change as the limits become more correctly defined.

The bust of Socrates in the Capitoline museum at Rome looks like the late Henry George.

In Washington county, Me., there are 150,000 acres devoted to nothing but raising blueberries.

Spain and Russia are the only European countries which produce more wool than they consume.

There are only six places in New York where macaroni is better cooked than at the best hotels in Venice, Naples, Rome or Milan.

The Audubon Society of California has been organized at Los Angeles to about 500 members. The society will be incorporated later.

The Lafeyette artillery company of Lyndeboro, N. H., is 102 years old and has the queer distinction of recruiting its ranks by handing down positions in the company from father to son.

The annual auction of prizes, on unmarked logs, in the Argyll and Pea Cove booms in the Penobscot river, Maine, has been held. There were 350,000 feet of logs in the lot, and they were sold for $13 per 1,000 feet.

Half the so called mad dogs have nothing the matter with them but the toothache.

Australia contains more unexplored territory in proportion to its size than any other continent.

One-third of all the derelicts who apply for aid to the New York Y. M. C. A. are college graduates.

There are 271 newspapers published in Mexico, of which seven are printed in the English language.

J. B. Bennoch, of Orono, Me., has come into possession of the old Orono flag which was used a very long time ago to adorn the flagpole in the village. The fact that he has only thirty-two stars attests its great age.

In constructing the East river tunnels, New York city, according to the statement of the engineer in charge, fourteen men have succumbed as the result of working in the high pressure chamber, which is 24 pounds per inch above the normal pressure of the atmosphere.

Youthful Elopers Parted.

New York, Oct. 27.—"He's my Spizzy," wailed thirteen-year-old Charlotte Francis, of No. 509 West 140th street, when asked why she was so much interested in Albert Spizznoco, fourteen, of No. 1,650 Amsterdam avenue, from whom she was parted, forever, it may be, in Children's Court yesterday. The two have just finished their fourth elopement. The others took place on August 26, October 4 and October 15. Charlotte is the house of Mercy and Albert is on his way to an institution of reformaion. It is said they eloped with seven cents, but that was their rst experience. After that Albert got work, so the second time they had enough to went to Philadelphia on half fare tickets. Albert wanted to spend his money on a state room, but Charlotte said she would rather eat.

Clever German Crook Caught.

Berlin, Oct. 27.—The pretended captain of Grenadiers of the Guard who on October 16 produced a forged order authorizing him to take command of a battalion of twelve men he met on the streets in this city and proceeded to Coepenick, a small town near here, where he arrested the burgomaster and the treasurer and took possession of the cash, amounting to about $1,000, turns out to have been a shoemaker of Tilsit, named William Voight. He was arrested this morning by four commissaries of police at his lodging place in a quiet, respectable quarter of Berlin. Voight, although working at the trade of shoemaker, has committed a long series of felonies, principally robberies by means of forged documents. He has served five terms in prison, finishing a fifteen years' sentence in February, and is nearly sixty years old.

President's Address to Women.

In her annual address before the Women's Federation of New Jersey, assembled at Asbury Park yesterday, Mrs. Newbaker, the president, declared the women's clubs of the State should pledge themselves to stand for a national pure food law, better school laws and for municipal sanitation. She also denounced child labor. Miss Alice Lakey, of Cranbury, gave a talk on pure foods.

FREE EDUCATION IN JERSEY.

The report of the State of Education for 1904-5, which has just been issued, is replete with interesting data and statistics. According to it, the total enrollment for New Jersey for the period covered was 369,402. Of this number 22,799 were in kindergartens, 237,243 in primary grades, 101,472 in grammar grades and 17,893 in high school grades. There was an increase of 463 in the number of teachers, and an increase of $.55 in the average annual salary paid to teachers. The number of teachers employed during the year under notice was 9,157, or one to forty pupils. The total increase in enrollment was 17,296.

The report also shows that the total increase in appropriations over the preceding year was $160,240.26. In building and repairing school houses $336,096.33 was spent. The total value of all school property was $22,094,076, an increase of $2,232,683. This makes an average value of $11,592, there being constructed 1906 buildings. One hundred and seventy-three of these structures are each worth more than $40,000. In that year the school tax amounted to $2,772,178.18. For 1905-6 it was $2,902,282.32, and for 1906-7 it is $3,172,628.14.

WAR ON WHITE PLAGUE.

In the organization of the New Jersey Association for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis, which was effected yesterday at Trenton, a great work in the interest of humanity has been undertaken. A systematic and intelligent warfare against the "Great White Plague" is the duty of the hour. There is an alarming proportion of tuberculosis cases in the State despite the efforts of the various boards of health to combat the origin and growth of the terrible wasting disease. No complete cure has ever been found and doubtless none ever will be. All that can be done is to prevent its spreading. The suggestions issued sometime ago by the local board of health concerning methods of prevention and treatment are valuable for this purpose, but what is needed is an united effort on the part of the whole people of New Jersey. The time for it has arrived and it is quite certain that in the formation of the New Jersey association the first step towards the desired end has been taken. The co-operation of every citizen is required and no doubt it will be given.

CANDIDATE DODGES QUESTION.

The question put by George T. Rogers to W. W. Smalley, the Somerset Republican nominee for the Assembly, is one that should be answered. The Bound Brook man knows now whether he should vote for John F. Dryden and it is only fair for him to say so. One of the chief responsibilities and at the same time privileges of the successful candidate will be to cast a vote in the legislative Joint caucus for United States Senator. His vote should represent the wishes of his constituents and therefore the right thing for him to do at this time is to tell the voters of Somerset county frankly how he stands on the senatorial fight.

The size of the congregation at the opening service of the great revival being conducted by Dr. Wharton surprised even the most sanguine and but past efforts have demonstrated that the people of Plainfield join heartily in movements of this kind. Dr. Wharton may feel assured that the attendance at every meeting he holds here will be just as largely attended as the one last night. When he finally takes his departure he will leave with the satisfaction that his services have done much good for the community.

The benefaction of the late Miss Catherine Webster will add another benevolent institution to Plainfield, which is already well endowed in that respect. This venerable and noble woman left a large share of her estate, as told exclusively in the Daily Press on Saturday, for the erection of a Home for Aged and Infirmed Ladies. Such an institution has long been needed in this community and it remains for a woman whose whole life was devoted to the doing of good deeds to supply the means.

For the good name of the Episcopal church, Bishop Lines should use his offices to persuade Rev. Dr. E. A. Wasson that he has missed his calling. Wasson's fierce denunciations of the Bishops' law would make him out of place in a convention of lawabiding saloon-keepers. He's no man to preach the Gospel—that's certain.

The Newark Call points out that both speakers at the Republican mass meeting here last Tuesday night made records as reformers before they become Governors of New Jersey. Griggs stood out against corporation tyranny and Voorhees in the Senate defied the bosses.

James E. Martine took part in a ball up in Warren county the other night, but that was not the first occasion that Charles N. Fowler made the "farmer-orator" dance.

Farmer Orator Martine is out with his biennial slogan, "Beware of the snare of the Fowler."—West Hudson Press.

It certainly seems that labor is for Hearst—with an axe.

Put not your trust in candidates' promises.

HAROLD HANSEN INJURED IN AUTO-WAGON COLLISON

THROWN FROM HIS SEAT WHEN MACHINE RAMS HIS RIG.

An automobile belonging to the Morris Brothers garage, in charge of John Thornton, and a delivery wagon owned and driven by Harold Hansen, the painter, collided at Seventh street and Plainfield avenue at noon, Monday. Hansen was hurled from his seat and was quite badly hurt while the wagon was put out of commission. The horse tore loose from the harness and ran away but was captured later before it had harmed itself.

Hansen struck on his head and though retaining consciousness, was badly dazed. He was taken to his home on West Front street by Walter Apgar and Dr. Endicott was summoned. The physician found him suffering from a severe blow in the chest, causing him to raise blood, a badly sprained arm and several cuts about the face. He was in a weak and nervous state today but it is thought no serious consequences will follow.

Hansen was going east on Seventh street and Thornton north on Plainfield avenue when the accident occurred. Each man claims the other to be responsible for the collision and that is as near as it can be explained. The brake rod of the auto was broken and one side was somewhat banged up.

ORANGE FIELD CLUB DEFEATS ALIS ELEVEN.

Score 10 to 5 in a Fast and Brilliant Contest on Crescent Oval.

The Orange Field Club defeated Alis at Crescent Oval, Saturday afternoon by a score of 10 to 5, in a football game filled with many brilliant plays. The Orange Field Club made its first touchdown within the first ten minutes of play in the first half, Embleton doing the trick and kicking the goal. The ball was see-sawed back and forth considerable throughout the game, but the O. F. C. team was never in danger of losing the contest. Brilliant plays were made by McVoy, Banks and Emmons for O. F. C.

In the second half Embleton kicked a safety for a distance of forty-five yards during the last two minutes of play. Taylor's punting and the work of Percy Phillips were features. The lineup:

O. F. C.	ALIS.
Hillyer	Lake and Manning
	right end.
Joseph	Eckhart
	right tackle.
J. McCullough	Fountain & Bird
	right guard.
McLoughlin	Bogert

W. McCullough	Bentley
	left tackle.
F. Emmons	Tice
	left end.
McVoy	Phillips
	quarterback.
Lyness, Brown	Marsh
	right half.
Sheppard	Phayle
	left half.
Banks, Embleton	Taylor

SOMERSET REPUBLICANS FEELING CONFIDENT.

The Somerset County Republican committee has re-elected Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen as chairman, and it is well organized for the campaign. At a meeting held on Saturday afternoon the reports from the various districts showed a pretty certain Republican majority, according to the views of most of the leaders. The only danger they have to fear, it is said, is a general indifference among Republicans all over the county as to the result. The organization is endeavoring to overcome this. A meeting of the Somerville Republican Club was held Saturday evening, and addresses were made by Clarence E. Case, and others. The candidates for Assembly, William W. Smalley, spoke.

On Thursday evening a big mass-meeting will be held in Somerset Hall, when these will be addressed by Governor E. C. Stokes and Congressman Ira W. Wood.

The Democratic candidate, William V. Steele, is regarded as a strong candidate. He will make an excellent run if he receives the support of the Republicans. The county committee has as yet no effective organization. William J. Keys, who has been the chairman, was defeated for committeeman at the recent primaries, and a new leader is to be chosen. Up til the present time the situation in the county is favorable to the election of a Republican Assemblyman.

AMUSEMENTS.

Notwithstanding that Klaw & Erlanger's production of "The Prince of India" has made the greatest hit scored in New York since the presentation of its companion play, "Ben Hur," it will remain at the Broadway theatre but a few weeks longer. Its original booking was for nine weeks. This time will terminate November 24th, when it will be transferred to another city to fill another contract and give way to Anna Held and her great company in "A Parisian Model," Klaw & Erlanger's policy of always transferring a play to fill a contract, no matter how great its success, will be followed in this instance as in the past, although "The Prince of India" could undoubtedly remain at the Broadway till the coming spring, playing to capacity. Too much can never be said in praise of this production. It tells a great story and is superbly mounted and acted. A better cast has never been seen here, every one of the principal personality of General Wallace's story is realized in the principal players. In the tragic scene of the third act where "The Prince of India" predicts the downfall of the Empire of the Greeks and the capture of Constantinople by the Turks under Mahommed, Emmett Corrigan carries one of the most powerful dramatic scenes ever presented on the stage with wonderful realistic effect.

Lovers of good drama have the pleasure of witnessing "The Measure of a Man," Cora Maynard's great play, which is to be seen at Weber's theatre, New York. "The greatest play of its kind now before the public" is the verdict of Augustus Thomas, the well known dramatist who was present at the dress rehearsal. The production under the management of Daniel V. Arthur and J. Fred Zimmerman, Jr., enlists the services of such prominent players as R. M. Holland, Percy Haswell, Mary Hall, Robert Drouet and George Holland, supported by a strong company. Miss Maynard, known heretofore only as a magazine writer, wrote "The Measure of a Man" expressly for stock, and our production, and announced was its success that immediately all the best theatrical producers of New York sought the play, which finally fell to Messrs. Arthur and Zimmerman. When Mr. Thomas saw the production, he declared not only that it was the greatest play of its kind, but that it was the best play ever written by a woman. This is a significant statement coming as it does from one of the best dramatists of the day. The play has been produced at the Grand opera theatre, Philadelphia, where it was received in such a way as to indicate that it is one of the greatest plays of the decade.

THE D. & I. COMPANY WITH $2,000 CAPITAL.

Plainfielders Incorporate to Manufacture Barbers' Supplies.

Articles of incorporation were filed in the county clerk's office, Elizabeth, Monday by "The D. & I. Company," of Plainfield, the principal offices being on Watchung avenue. The capital stock of the company is $2,000, 200 shares at $10 each. The company is formed to manufacture, buy, sell and deal in shaving creams, massage creams, soaps, perfumes, powder and all other toilet articles for barbers. The incorporators are DeWitt C. Ivins, Frank T. Ostrom and Miss Margaret L. Leggett, all of Plainfield. The company's plant is located on New street, where the manufacture of the barbers' supplies will be carried on. "The D. & I. Company" is trade mark.

Auto Inspector in Bad Wreck.

George Thompson, of Somerville, a traveling auto license inspector, is laid up for repairs at the Belmont hotel at Freehold as the result of an accident caused by his motor cycle coming in contact with a large bird dog lying in the road near Brakeley's basket factory. He was thrown from his wheel and dragged 25 feet. His face and head were badly cut and a wrist sprained. A passerby picked him up and took him in a carriage to Freehold where a physician dressed his wounds. The auto cycle was wrecked and the dog's back broken.

COMPERS TO UNION MEN

Labor Leader Addresses Local Typos on the Congressional Fight.

HE OPPOSES FOWLER

President of American Federation of Labor Practically Advises Union Labor to Support Martine.

The following letter has been received by the secretary of Typographical Union, No. 399, of this city, from Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor:

Washington, D. C., Oct. 23, 1906.

Mr. James Kermode,
Secretary Typographical Union, No. 399,
Plainfield, N. J.:

Dear Sir:

Your favor of October 18th to hand and contents noted.

The only opportunity that Congressman Fowler had to express his friendliness to labor in the last session of Congress was on the bill which nullified the Eight-Hour Law in the construction of the Panama Canal, and on this bill he voted to nullify the Eight-Hour Law in the construction of that work.

Shortly after the adjournment of Congress a document known as Labor's Bill of Grievances was submitted to the Members of Congress with a request for a reply. The answers of those who replied were published in the September issue of the American Federationist. Those members, who did not reply to the first communication again sent a copy of the document, together with a similar request, and up to the time of writing, no reply has been received from Congressman Fowler to either of the two documents which wesubmitted to him. Together with his vote nullifying the Eight-Hour Law in the construction of the Panama Canal, and his neglect or failure to reply to the documents above mentioned, does it not indicate that if he is not hostile, he is at least indifferent?

*Let the slogan go forth to our fel*low workers and friends and we urge that they act intelligently, unitedly and practically to accomplish the purposes they have set for themselves—the enactment of their lawful demands.

Wherever opportunity affords let *labor secure the election of intelli*gent, faithful, honest, earnest trade unionists, with clear, unblemished paid up union cards in their possession.

Labor men often underestimate their own ability, and look up to those who are members of Congress as *mortals of greatly superior quali*ties. It is true that many of our congressmen are brilliantly brainy, but their brilliancy too often consists of trickery devices by which the people are hoodwinked, cajoled and cheated out of their rights. Some of the most brilliant speeches that are made in Congress have their beginning and ending for, of and by the dollar.

A number of workmen from the factory, workshop, farm, mill and mine will give a fitting tone to our congressional and legislative halls, and their sterling common sense, honesty of purpose and experience would surely inaugurate an era of plain, but honest legislation in the interest of the people.

Wherever possible let labor elect its own men, but wisdom and foresight forbid the nomination of a labor man in a hopeless district, particularly when that action may result in the election of a man who is a known and persistent opponent to the cause of labor, of justice and right.

Let us stand by our friends, our true friends, not those who simply mouth their pretended friendship now, and whose past course has given their pretensions the lie.

Let us administer a stinging defeat to all men or parties who are either indifferent, negligent or hostile.

With kind regards, I am,
Yours fraternally,
SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President American Federation of Labor.

Grace Church Affair.

The women of Grace Episcopal church will have a sale and supper, followed by a dramatic and musical entertainment, in the parish house, on Wednesday and Thursday, November 7 and 8. A more extended notice will be given later.

School Girl's Wheel Stolen.

A new Banner wheel, 1906 model, belonging to Miss Mary Radford, of Grant avenue, was stolen from the grounds of the Plainfield High School Friday. The matter was reported to the police but so far no trace of the machine has been discovered. The problem at the school house no act place to put their wheels and it is an easy matter for a thief to appropriate one.

Cross Country Practice.

Good practice work was done by some of the cross-country runners of the Y. M. C. A. Saturday afternoon, in a practice jog preparatory to the big run Election Day morning. Three of the runners, Odell, Miller and Douglass, covered the whole course, five miles, in forty-four minutes. That is good going for new men.

REV. FRANK FLETCHER RESIGNS AS PASTOR

TO LEAVE NEW MARKET BAPTIST CHURCH ON JAN. 1.

Rev. Frank Fletcher, of New Market, has tendered his resignation as pastor of the First Baptist church of that place. The resignation takes effect on January 1 according to the letter sent by the minister to the board of trustees.

It is thirteen years since Rev. Mr. Fletcher for the second time became pastor of the New Market flock. Under his ministrations, the church has prospered and has become widely known for its good works. Advancing years, he having passed threescore and ten years in life's race, is given as the cause of his severance of the pastoral tie.

Rev. Mr. Fletcher has been in the ministery for over forty-three years and has had many charges. He is a veteran of the Civil War and frequently attends the meetings of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R. He is much-beloved by the people of New Market.

POLICE TO INVESTIGATE POOLROOM WRECKING.

Young Jaeger Says He Was Allowed to Play and Judge Adjourns Hearing.

Samuel Thornton, colored, whose poolroom was partially wrecked by Mrs. Mary Jaeger Friday evening, in protest against his alleged encouragement of her fourteen-year-old son in his visits to the place, faced the angry mother in the city court this morning to answer to a charge of disorderly conduct charge. After the woman and her son had testified, Judge Runyon laid the case over until Saturday morning to enable the police to discover something more about the place and the circumstances leading up to Mrs. Jaeger's visit.

Mrs. Jaeger said she found her boy playing pool. She denied throwing stone throw the windows. She acknowledged throw some of the pool balls about.

Thornton denied that the boy, who is under the age set by the law governing the appearance of minors in poolrooms, was allowed to play. The boy, himself, testified that he played pool, and was in the habit of playing there. He said Thornton stood outside while he was at the table to look for the approach of policemen.

PARK BOWLERS WILL ROLL PRINCETON FIVE.

At Park Club Next Saturday Night; Roselle Coming For Return Match.

The Park Club bowling team will meet a Princeton University team on the Club alleys next Saturday night. The Princeton five is not a regular college team, because Princeton is not in the intercollegiate league. She may enter later, but there is no formally representative five at the university yet.

The Park's regular five will roll: Barlow, Daniel, Walter Long, Monroe Long, Ball. The match will be two games out of three. After the bowling the Princeton rollers will be entertained at the usual Saturday night dance and supped.

Some night this week the Parks will bowl a return match game here with Roselle Casino. The borough bowlers defeated the Casino team two weeks ago on their own alleys.

Borough Couple Wed.

Miss Jennie Baldwin, of Watchung avenue, the borough, and Lawrence Scheelein, also of the borough, were married at 6 o'clock Sunday night by Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of North Reformed church, at his home on West Front street. The couple was attended by Miss Lillian Reutsch, of Dunellen, and Harry Bush, a brother-in-law of the bride. Mr. and Mrs. Scheelein will reside on Prospect place, the borough. The groom is engaged in business as a harness maker.

BOROUGH SCHOOL BOARD HAS MONTHLY MEETING

ORDINARY MATTERS OCCUPY THE GREATER PART OF THE SESSION.

The Borough Board of Education held its regular monthly meeting, Monday, but disposed of nothing particular beyond ordinary business. The Somerset school received a good share of the evening's attention and a number of improvements were ordered for the betterment of the pupils' comfort.

Complaint has been made of the heat in this building, the same being decidedly poor in several of the rooms while in others it is provided in too voluminous quantities when it is least needed. The buildings and grounds committee was instructed to make a studied investigation and adopt the necessary measures to remedy the trouble. The same committee was invested with power to decide what sort of material should be placed on the playground of the Somerset school. A short time ago it was thought cracked stone would serve the purpose best and a resolution was passed to this effect, but since then there has been a change of sentiment. The cracked stone decision was reconsidered and something else will be used.

It was reported that the borough's share of State school money, amounting to $3,778.36, had been received, and Superintendent Krebs asked the Board to confirm the following school calendar: September 11, school opens; November 6, election holiday; November 29-30, Thanksgiving holi*day; December 21 to January 7,* Christmas vacation; February 12, Lincoln's birthday; February 22, Washington's birthday; March 29 to April 5, Easter vacation; May 30, Memorial Day; June 21, Commencement. This gives 180 actual school days for the year, a gain of two over last year. Mr. Krebs also announced that there are now 3,038 pupils on the active roll of the borough schools and that for pupils attending from North Plainfield township the following rates of tuition her quarter have been fixed by the finance committee: Primary pupils, $10; grammar, $15; High School, $40.

It was announced by the teachers' committee that Miss Mabel Bogardus, who has been teaching the "special" class in the Somerset school, had resigned in order to take a new position at Jersey City, and that Miss Anna Holcomb had been secured to take her place. Miss Holcomb formerly taught in the borough but retired a year or more ago to spend some time in rest and travel. The buildings and grounds committee was empowered to engage an assistant janitor for the Somerset building at not more than $35 per month and also to purchase a hose for the same school. It will be placed on the main cupola for the present while some decision is reached as to where a pole to carry it should be placed permanently.

Alfred M. Foote's Funeral.

The funeral of Alfred M. Foote, who died at his home on Plainfield avenue, Sunday, was held at the residence this morning. It was conducted by Rev. Dr. J. C. Zelle and was attended by a gathering of relatives and friends, many of the latter being newspapermen from the staff of the Jersey City Journal, where Mr. Foote was employed for a long time Interment was made in Cypress Hills cemetery, New York.

Positions With Uncle Sam.

A civil service examination for the position of clerk and letter-carrier at the local postoffice will be held on Monday, November 12. There are excellent opportunities now for such positions and further information will be given about the examination by W. B. Sharp or Postmaster E. H. Bird at the postoffice.

Harry Knowles, of the reportorial staff of the Courier-News, is entertaining a force from Providence, R. I.

*Rev. and Mrs. Karner, of Brook*lyn, who have been visiting Mrs. Karner's parents on Plainfield avenue, have returned home.

GREAT THRONG GREETS EVANGELIST WHARTON A SERVICE FOR THE DEAD

Ministers and Their Flocks Join Heartily in Big Revival Services.

BEGUN LAST NIGHT

Rev. Dr. Wharton Preaches, His Topic Being "Does It Pay"—Pastors Take Part—Chorus of 100.

Faced by a congregation that packed the auditorium to the limit of its capacity, Rev. Dr. Henry M. Wharton opened the week of revival at the First Baptist church Sunday. Seven churches joined with Dr. Chambliss' charge in launching the revival, and the congregation was splendidly representative the evangelistic denominations in the city. Dr. Wharton did not preach long, and his discourse was, in the main, only preliminary to the determined assault that is to be made on the spirit of worldliness to be found in the congregation and community.

Several minutes before the service opened, at 7:45 o'clock, the church was filled, and a very few minutes after the first hymn, it was packed. Not less than 1,300 people were present, and probably more. There were rows of standing late-comers back of the nave and at the rear of the galleries, and numbers of others turned away for lack of room. The congregation was swelled by members of the Crescent Avenue, First M. E., Park Avenue Baptist, Grace M. E. and Trinity churches, and Faith and Warren chapels, all of which were closed to lend force to the initial demonstration of the revival spirit.

On the platform about Dr. Chambliss and Dr. Wharton were Rev. Dr. Cornelius D. Schenck, of Trinity Reformed church; Rev. A. C. McCrea, First M. E. church; Rev. Dr. Charles W. Carroll, Grace M. E. church, and Revs. A. E. Finn, Park Avenue Baptist church; J. W. Musson, Faith chapel. Moved by a desire to worship in the ranks, Rev. Dr. John S. Zelie, of the Crescent Avenue church, sat in a front seat throughout the service.

The choir was augmented to nearly 100 voices, and led the singing spiritedly. The organist, Howard Case, conducted the singing. To accommodate the enlarged choir the platform was extended at the sides.

Dr. Schenck offered the opening prayer. Dr. Wharton read portions of the first and second chapters of the Acts, and in expounding them briefly, he said the Christian needed more power, more power to live right, to do right and be strong.

Dr. Chambliss welcomed the visiting congregations. It was a great joy, he said, to see the multitude before him. It was representative, he felt sure, of the community. It gave promise for the success of the services, and he felt that the people were on the threshold of a great blessing from God. The congregation told of a people all in accord, their hearts beating as one heart.

Dr. McCrea offered a prayer, remembering in particular two men, a petition for whose spiritual awakening was requested by their sister. In reading the request, Rev. Dr. Chambliss announced that all similar ones would be welcomed and remembered.

Dr. Wharton fulfilled the expectations of those who attended the service to hear a winning speaker. His platform presence is attractive, and the effect of his magnetism and oratorical skill were felt last night with his opening sentence. His gospel is one of gladness and the spirit of brightness in which he works was evidenced by the pleasantries he introduced in his discourse.

The sermon began with a smile. Dr. Chambliss introduced the evangelist as a man's man. "Wherever he has spoken," said the pastor, "the men have flocked to hear him." Dr. Wharton's eyes twinkled as he stepped to the front of the platform.

"Without detracting in the least from what Dr. Chambliss has said, I want to say that I am a great ladies' man also," he said, and the congregation smiled back at him.

"Does It Pay?" was the subject of the sermon. It was not so tagged, but that is the query it answered. The text was from Acts 3:22, 23: Whether Paul, or Appollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's * * * *."

Almost everything, Dr. Wharton said in opening, is, nowadays, calculated on a basis of profit and loss. He wished to look at religion from the same point of view. Did it pay to become a Christian? Was it profitable in a plain, everyday light?

The text answered the queries. It was like an inventory of the Christian's possessions. The ministry—"Whether of Paul, or Appollos, or Cephas"—belonged to the people, to begin with. The ministers were the servants of the people, and they were what the people made them.

The world was theirs. Satan was only an intruder. Jesus Christ was trying to win it back to where it belonged. The world did not seem the same to the child of God and the child of the devil. Eat, drink and be merry, was the creed and aim of the worldling. It was a narrow selfish view—as though the world were an orange, to be sucked dry and dropped. God never intended men to be sponges, the evangelist said ringingly, or they would have been for sale that moment on strings in a drug-store. "Let me help someone," was the ambition of God's child. The world didn't look the same to the child of God and the child of the devil. The Christian saw a bright, happy world. The religion of Christ was one of joy, and the world reflected their brightness.

Life was theirs. They had life eternal, and nothing could take it from them. Death was theirs, for Jesus Christ had conquered death. It could only come to the Christian as a servant, saying, "Child, your Father wants you."

"Things present are yours." The brightest people on earth should be the Christian people. The sad ones should be the sinful ones. Those whose sins had been forgiven ought to be happy. They should enjoy home, family, and any pleasant circumstances in their lives. God did not wish his children to be sad. He wished them to lead a happy, joyous life; sin, of course, was not included in that. Dr. Wharton said uncomplimentary things of the sad-faced churchmen, who cast gloom on all with whom they came into contact.

"Things to come." Who could tell what was wrapped up in that expression? One thing it certainly meant was freedom from sin; the best of living ones had not enjoyed that on earth. Other things it meant were no more care and sorrow, reunion with loved ones who had gone before, and a meeting with Christ, the best friend the Christian had ever had.

All things were the Christian's, but one. The Christian did not belong to himself. "Ye are Christ's." Nothing belonged to anyone who does not belong to Christ.

Dr. Wharton closed with an appeal for constant effort to upbuild God's kingdom. Whatever the Christian could do, even the smallest of services, would be accounted well and noted on eternal records. He urged his hearers to strive and pray for the success of the revival.

"In your silent prayer," said the evangelist in conclusion, "ask God to send a great blessing to these meetings."

Rev. A. E. Finn offered the closing prayer.

The musical features of the service included an anthem, "Wideness of God's Blessing," by the First Baptist church choir, and a solo, "Face to Face," by Miss Louella Harris, the leading soprano of the choir.

CORNER-STONES LAID AT NEWARK MONDAY.

Catholics Start Formally a New Building and Hebrews Also a Hospital.

Nearly one hundred clergymena and full ten thousand members of Catholic societies took part in laying the cornerstone of the new building of the Father Matthew T. A. B. Society, attached to St. Joseph's church, at Hudson and Hartford streets, Newark, N. J., Sunday afternoon. Owing to the unavoidable absence of Bishop O'Connor, the stone was laid by the Rev. George N. Corrigan, pastor of St. Joseph's. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Edward J. Quinn.

Prior to the laying of the stone there was a demonstration in the streets of the locality, in which the members of the various men's societies to the number of several thousand took part. Among them were the Father Matthew T. A. B. Society, Young Men's Catholic Associations of Newark, Orange, Elizabeth and Harrison, Knights of Columbus and Holy Name Societies.

The Hebrews of the city laid the cornerstone for a fine big hospital.

SAILS WITH CIRCUS.

Bob Whittaker to Put Big Show at Jacksonville.

Robert Whittaker, the well known local circus man, accompanied by Fred S. Whittaker, sailed from New York, yesterday, for Jacksonville, Fla., where he will put on a big circus carnival for the city. He took with him one of the most expensive aggregations that has ever gone so far South for this purpose, representing a weekly salary of $4,000. It includes Mme. Rossel, the equestrienne, who was at the Hippodrome last winter; Mons. Vinella and his trained stallions, featured all this summer with Ringling's circus; Ella Zuila, the Berlin high wire artist who was with Barnum & Bailey, and many others.

The company will exhibit at Jacksonville for ten days and then go to Tampa and other cities. In addition to giving his act with his horse, "Dahl," "Bob" Whittaker will be equestrian director and Fred Whittaker will be his assistant.

Elbert Hubbard at Westfield.

Elbert Hubbard, the head of the Roycrofters, and noted author and critic, will lecture at the Westfield Club on December 19. His subject will be announced later.

Members of St. Mary's Church Observe the Annual Custom at Their Burial Grounds.

A SOLEMN CEREMONY

Sermon Preached by Rev. Father B. M. Bogan in Presence of a Large Gathering.

According to the annual custom, the members of St. Mary's parish conducted the celebration of Catholic devotional services for the dead, Sunday afternoon. Four hundred communicants participated and fully 1,000 others viewed the ceremony.

Members of the various societies connected with the church first assembled at the Parochial school hall at 2 o'clock and then, headed by Rev. Father Frederici and a surpliced choir, marched to St. Mary's cemetery. There were about 350 men in the procession and at the burial grounds they were met by delegations from the women's societies of the parish. The march was continued through the pathways, Father Frederici being joined in the lead by Fathers Bogan and Delehanty, of St. Mary's; Father Miller, of St. Joseph's, and Father Dunphy, of Dunellen.

As the procession moved through the cemetery, Father Bogan read the Rosary and it was repeated by the men and women in line, thus adding deep solemnity to the scene. The mourners halted at the graves of former St. Mary priests and the memorial prayer for the dead was offered. At its conclusion, Father Bogan addressed the gathering on "Prayers for the dead," and in part spoke as follows:

"There is just one thing on earth that is absolutely universal, and that one thing is death. There is one sorrow that finds a home, at some time or other in every human heart, and that one sorrow is sorrow for the dead. 'It hath been appointed unto all men once to die'—and neither human prudence nor human power can stay the execution of that dread decree. Though the flagstaffs may be strewn with the fairest flowers that a fallen world hath ever preserved, some place on that way, a grave is dug by the decree of God, and that grave shall one day claim us.

"Echo of us looking around can fail to perceive the awful universality of death? The throne is not hedged around so securely, but that death at the appointed time breaks in and leaves it vacent. Riches cannot bribe it, poverty is not too lowly an object on its roll-call, and we come that all men die. But by some strange perversity the very commonness of death robs it of its awful significance. But when those we loved have come to die; when the parting hath taken place that gives to death a bitterness, which else it would not have; when we long in vain for the well-remembered greeting of the now cold hand, and the music of a silenced voice, can we bring ourselves to believe that all is over between our dead and us?

"Can we bury our dead out of our sight; stand sorrow-stricken before the lifeless form; wait till the last sod has been heaped upon the grave; shed one, the saddest tear of final parting, and then go back to work again with the busy world, and believe that we have no more to do with the departed? Oh, surely not. There is something in our hearts that protests against such a conclusion. It would be doing violence to the very nature that God has given us, to believe that human friendship and human love can reach out to the grave, and cannot pass beyond its shadow; that they are flowers so frail that death's cold touch can wither them forever; to believe that even the power of death can break the mystic bond, that in the first and greatest of the commandments, binds the love of our fellow creatures with the love of God Himself. Our very instincts,—*and after al these are but divine fore*shadowings of truths—our very instincts compel us to look beyond the grave, to see through all its shadows the traces of another world.

"The Holy Ghost hath declared that even the "Just Man falls seven times a day." We sometimes feel to ask what is the lot of such as these in the world to come. Again we know that though mortal sin may be remitted, as to its guilt and eternal punishment, yet there remains a temporal penalty, and we can easily conceive a man passing out of this world before complete penance has blotted, out the debt.

"Hence there are two classes; what shall be the lot of these when death has claimed them; shall they go into the glorious presence of their God? Surely not, they are not yet purified, but they go into everlasting fire! No, God is faithful to His word, and only to deadly sins has He attached the awful penalty of hell. Where then shall their lot be cast? The Church, borne out by reason as well as by revelation, the Church answers at once, they go into a place of temporary punishment, wiped out, and may pay the debt which they owe the Infinite Justice of God.

"Such briefly is the doctrine of Purgatory; a doctrine so consoling is itself, and so much in accordance with what the nature of the case might have been expected to demand, that when those who deny it refuse to acknowledge the authority of the Inspired Word, that declares that 'It is a holy and a wholesome thought to pray for the dead that they may be loosed from their sins,' I can only wonder at their blindness—not judging individuals among them,—but leaving them to their conscience and their God."

As Father Bogan concluded, the customary benediction was pronounced and the gathering was dismissed.

sponsive, ... really felt sorry for the congregation.

"It is a certain man mentioned in this text that I want to talk about tonight; that one who said he would follow Christ wherever He wanted him to. It matters not when you believed in Christ, but the important question is do you believe in Him. My sister asked me once to come to her church in Virginia and assist in revival meetings, she being much concerned about her two sons. They were of entirely different dispositions. One was impetuous and quick tempered and the other mild and as amiable as a girl—that is some girls. I had not been there long when the one with the quick temper gave his heart to Christ, but his brother gave no signs of interest. At my sister's request I spoke to him one night, saying, 'Can you remember when you didn't believe in Christ?' Whereupon he replied, 'No, I cannot. I have always believed in Him and have always said my prayers.' I then told him to confess Christ, which he did and he instantly received a great blessing.

"The man in our text had the courage of his convictions. It didn't make any difference to him what others had to say, he declared that he would follow Christ. That man had a will and when we get control of our wills and give them to Christ the bargain is sealed at once."

In closing his discourse Dr. Wharton related two interesting incidents. The first one was about a young soldier in the Civil War, who was the only Christian in his company and because he prayed every night before retiring he was jeered and hooted at by his comrades. At the suggestion of the chaplain he said his prayers after going to bed, but this only called forth greater ridicule, believing that they had laughed him out of his religion. So he decided to pray as before. When comrades found he was in earnest, one by one he won *them to Christ until this whole com*pany was saved.

The closing incident related was about the visit of Dr. Wharton and his brother to see a sick man at home, the home of an infidel. After en*tering the man's house Dr. Wharton* introduced himself and his brother and then after much difficulty told him that they had come to pray with him. The infidel did not object. After the prayer, they saw traces of tears on his face and he was deeply impressed. Within a few days he attended the revival meetings in the village, the first time he had been in a church for fifty-six years and publicly confessed Christ. Within a short time he died and he had been faithful to the end.

In closing the service Dr. Wharton sang as a solo a beautiful hymn and Dr. Chambliss pronounced the benediction. Services will be held tonight and every night this week, except Saturday, at 7:45 o'clock.

The speaker said he had sat in Congress with Mr. Fowler for four years. The New Jersey representative was a gentleman and a worker. Senator Dryden, he said, was the noblest Roman of them all, and the Assembly nominees were to be safeguarded to insure his return to office.

C. R. H. Hawkins was the last speaker. He spoke briefly. The meeting ended with three cheers for Charles J. Fisk, proposed and led by Jesse Lawson.

After adjournment, the speakers and distinguished guests were entertained at a supper in the Kensington Hotel dining room. Covers were laid for thirty. Jesse Lawson was toastmaster. One speaker expressed his private opinion about John P. Dryden. He was promptly called to order.

The Supper committee was made up of W. A. Kline, chairman; E. B. Maynard, Alexander Stills, Albert Butler and C. W. Jackson.

Those at the banquet: Jacob Dunham, R. E. Miller, W. E. Gregory, Jesse Lawson, J. W. Lyons, George H. White, R. B. Norwood, William Robenson, William Mayhew, Thomas Hanks, R. B. Fisher, H. C. FAVORS SUNDAY SALOONS

Newark Clergyman Holds the Bishops' Law to Be Clerical Blunder.

REV. WASSON'S RETORT

Minister Replies to His Sober-Minded Critics, Both Lay and Clerical—His Address.

Dr. E. A. Wasson, rector of the Episcopal Church of St. Stephens, of Newark, who has championed the Sunday saloon and criticised the Bishops' law, replied Sunday to his clerical and lay critics, saying:

"I have learned to assimilate impartially both bouquets and brickbats. The taste for the former is indeed natural, but the taste for brickbats has to be acquired. All that is needed for it, however, is a little philosophy and a little practice. It is really not so bad when you once get used to it.

"For my position on the Bishops' law only one layman wrote me a condemnatory letter. From the clergy not one approving letter was received, *but many were of courteous re*monstrance, and many, though not so many, violently abusive and acrurious.

"It is a mistaken idea that it is only working people who are strong*ly in favor of the Sunday saloon.* My experience over and over again has been otherwise. Men in all walks of life except the ministerial have written me in the same strain. In fact, it would appear that most men who wear their eyes in front of their heads approve of the Sunday saloon as a necessity, whether as a question of their own personal comfort or of public policy. Men that never drink a drop tell me they believe, under the conditions, in the legalized sale of these things on Sunday.

"The Real Question."

"The real question is not whether beer or liquors are to be sold on Sunday. There really never was such a question. The sole question is whether they shall be sold legally or illegally.

"It is not for the rigorist to decide whether the saloon shall be open on Sunday, but it may be for the rigorist to decide whether in addition to an open saloon he shall have a law violated and trampled in the dust of contempt.

"The unpardonable sin is for a member of the 'cloth' to intimate that the 'cloth' is not always all wool and a yard wide. Now I don't think that the clergy are as black as they are sometimes painted; neither do I think they are as dazzling white that they are fain to paint themselves withal. I should say they are a lightish gray. Strip us of our holy duds and our holy lugs and we run about the average. A dollar looks as big to us as to the next one. The biggest salaries are the biggest ones in the ministry, as elsewhere. One of the great weaknesses of the ministry is this continual assumption of the superior holiness of ministers. It gives us an air of unreality that weakens us with a practical world.

*"It is hard for us ministers to ap*preciate that for some generations back the people have been out of their swaddling clothes and have been administering their, morals themselves, and it really makes little difference to the masses of the people what the clergy think of them and their ways."

"A Clerical Blunder."

Dr. Wasson expressed the belief that the introduction of the Bishops' bill into the Legislature last winter was a clerical blunder, from which the church and clergy have greatly suffered.

"It is generally believed," he said, "that they were tricked and used by cunning politicians. It has died the new license movement; as Blaine and his Burchard, so Colby met his bishops.

"The Bishops' law is opposed by the great bulk of those who do oppose it in the interest of liberty, in the interest of impartial justice as between class and class. Let us have legislation dealing with the evils of the saloon business, with drunkenness, with the back-room, with lawlessness. And let that legislation be of such a character that conditions being what they are it can be enforced. Encourage the liquor men wh oty to conduct their business in a respectable, lawabiding way; discourage the others. Let us have done with hysterics; let us apply common sense to facts."

COUGHING FIT SAVED JOHN AUTEN'S SILVER.

Thieves Frightened Away From Kensington, was awakened in bed at his house on West Fifth street, Sunday, shortly after 10 o'clock, by a coughing spell. When he finished, he heard a noise like a door slamming from downstairs. He thought the wind was at work and turned over to sleep again. This morning he dis*covered the kitchen door wide open*, a window pried up and the family silverware scattered all around the room.

Nothing was missing. It was evident that the thieves had been frightened off by his coughing. The case was reported to the police.

SEVERELY INJURED BY FALL FROM A TROLLEY

SOME MYSTERY ABOUT ACCIDENT IN WHICH TWO WERE HURT.

James Conway, of East Second street, and Stephen Fitzgerald, of Somerset place, fell off a main westbound trolley between Terrill road and Scotch Plains, shortly after 11 o'clock, Monday night, receiving serious injuries. Dr. A. Pettis, who was sent to the scene of the accident on a special trolley, gave the injured men temporary treatment and had them removed to the hospital. Conway was suffering from a dislocated ankle, a scalp wound and cuts about the elbow. Fitzgerald was cut about the right and left knee and also received a scalp wound. Their condition is not considered serious.

The two men boarded the car at Forest road, two women also getting on the trolley at that point. The men remained on the rear platform and it was while Conductor Cornell was inside collecting fares from Scotch Plains passengers that the men fell off or were thrown off. They were missed by the conductor when he returned to the platform.

The car was stopped and run back some distance to where Conway and Fitzgerald were found lying in the roadway alongside the tracks. Word of the accident was telephoned to the trolley officers on Watching avenue and Inspector Harry Milligan, who was out, was commoned a special car, notified Dr. Pettis and made a trip to the scene of the accident.

Fitzgerald is employed in New York as a telegraph operator, while Conway is a butcher. As near as can be learned the two men had been to Scotch Plains and were returning to their homes in this city.

STAR COURSE OPENS WELL AT THE Y. M. C. A.

POLK MILLER AND OLD SOUTH QUARTETTE PLEASES AUDIENCE.

The Y. M. C. A. Star Course for 1906-07 made a pleasing start Monday night. Pleasing to the audience because the entertainment was delightful, and pleasing to the management and entertainers because the audience was of good size and cordial.

Polk Miller, who, with his Old South Quartette, presented a program of negro minstrelsy, a lighter nature of the ante-bellum plantation darky, was received with much applause. His stories were delightfully humorous, and his songs and banjo picking were no less entertaining. His quartette, led by Anderson Ripps, his old plaything on the Virginia plantation where both were born, sang old-time shout songs and latter-day ballads of sentiment with equal skill as entertainers.

Mr. Miller made the interesting announcement that this might be his last season. It was hard, he said, to get the old-time negro with the ability to reproduce the songs of the early days, and the young negroes could not do it.

After the entertainment, several Southerners in the audience met Mr. Miller at an informal levee at the front of the platform. A Virginia woman greeted him with especial warmth.

MODES OF THE MOMENT.

It is decreed that the separate blouse shall not leave us for yet another season at least.

Lightweight silks—that is, the soft taffetas, chines anr oriental weaves—are enjoying a vogue of unusual popularity.

The newest craze is the pinafore, an exact duplicate of that worn by children and donned usually over a lace or lingerie blouse.

For dressy occasions the Dolly Varden hat will continue the same popularity is felt that it has had during the past season in straw.

Embroidered silk roses are appliqued on the revers of many of the dressiest suits. The roses are worked on taffeta and are usually of the color contrasting with that of the suit.

Trimmings are important features of fashions this season—unusually so—stitched bands of silk or velvet of the color of the gown material being first choice. Ribbon ruffles are frequently used to border them and are also used by themselves in place of circular flounces.—New York Post.

The German reichstag proposes to raise more revenue by taxing picture post cards through which trade is made one-half cent each. Consul Britain, of Kehl, writes that 500,000,000 of these cards are sent through the mails annually, which would produce $2,500,000 revenue.

The most astonishing recent outbreak in all Germany was the wrath of the tradespeople of Essen and of Berlin at the Krupp girls and their wedding garments. The richest heiresses in Germany are blamed for taking the bread from the poor man's mouth. They made their own wedding clothes.

BABY CRIES.

Hunger—Usually a continuous, frettful cry, rarely strong and lusty.

Normal—Loud and strong and the nature of a scream. Baby gets red in the face with it.

Temper—Loud and strong and unusually long, accompanied by kicking and stiffening of the body.

Illness—Usually more of fretfulness and moaning than real crying, although real crying is excited by very slight causes.

Indulgence of Habit—Stops short when the baby gets what he wants, only to begin again when the object is withdrawn.

Pain—Usually strong and sharp, but not generally continuous. It is accompanied by contortions of the features, drawing up of the legs and other symptoms of distress.—Frank Barkley Copley in Outing.

Shakespeare and Servian Politics.

A striking scene was witnessed, our correspondent tells us, at the performance of "King Richard III," at Galgrade. In the ghost scene a whisper ran round the house that the presentment of Hastings resembled the late General Petrovit, wh owas murdered together with King Alexander. And every time the ghost appeared all got hands in hand to give the "Bee Hive" millinery supremacy. And what also holds its patrons with ties of satisfaction is the care bestowed on and the facilities for special order work. Women are sure in receiving what they desire in style and workmanship; at the time they want it and at a cost that gives L. S. Plaut & Co. prestige for low prices also.

Funeral of Mrs. Pierre Moore.

The funeral of Mrs. Pierre Moore was held at her late home on East Third street, Thursday afternoon, and was attended by a gathering of relatives and friends. The service was conducted by Rev. J. W. Musson, pastor of Faith chapel, and Rev. L. R. Howard, pastor of Hope chapel. Interment was made in the Methodist cemetery.

POSTAL SERVICE COST.

Postmaster-General Payne Asks for a Net Gain of $15,000,000.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 29.—Postmaster-General Cortelyou's estimates for the postal service for the coming fiscal year aggregate $206,662,190, a net increase over the present appropriation of $15,000,000.

The principal items of increase are: Pay of postmasters, $1,500,000; pay to clerks in first and second class offices, $3,000,000; clerk hire, third class offices, $400,000; letter carriers, $1,156,700; pneumatic tube service, $350,000; railroad transportation, $4,600,000; railway mail clerks, $978,360; foreign mail service, $268,000; manufacture of stamped envelopes, $227,000; rural delivery, $1,475,000.

A new item of $300,000 for freight on supplies is incorporated under the law passed at the last session.

LITERARY NOTES.

Upton Sinclair, author of "The Jungle," gives in Success Magazine for November his impressions of another phase of life in Packingtown —the children, who have been kept out of the factories by the child-labor law, and deprived of school facilities, have been left to roam about the lots and dig in the dump heaps. The child-labor law is being fairly well enforced, he says, but what is to become of these children? A few years ago there were 9,500 children in the two wards of Chicago commonly known as Packingtown who were attending no school whatever, their lives spent among the most sordid and brutalizing conditions, while their mothers worked in the factories. The only remedy, Mr. Sinclair insists, is the payment of a decent living wage to the father of the family.

The November McClure's is a striking number and will be remembered long beyond the usual term of magazine literature. The leading article is a brilliant challenge to the advocates of Spelling Reform, coming from no less an authority than Professor Hugo Munsterberg, Harvard's noted psychologist. In a manner sometimes satirical and again full of impressive gravity, he delivers some of the most crushing blows the Spelling Reform movement has had to meet. Carl Schurz's American reminiscences ouent in this number with Mr. Schurz's first impressions of this country—impressions so freshly received and so delightfully narrated that they awaken one picture after another of the stirring years before the Civil War.

Charming Millinery.

The height of quality at these prices, that acme of style and perfect refinement are attained by L. S. Plaut & Co., of Newark, in their trimmed hats at $5, $7.50 and $10. This store's position in the fashion centers of Europe and America, its enterprise in retaining foremost milliners insure just the right output—all go hand in hand to give the "Bee Hive" millinery supremacy. And what also holds its patrons with ties of satisfaction is the care bestowed on and the facilities for special order work. Women are sure in receiving what they desire in style and workmanship; at the time they want it and at a cost that gives L. S. Plaut & Co. prestige for low prices also.

LITERARY.

In the midst of the multitudinous assaults being made on our politicians by the "muck-rakers," it is refreshing to read of the exploits of Senator Broderick, the foremost character in a story by Wm. Hamilton Osborne in The Red Book Maga*zine for November.*

As usual, this most charming of outdoor magazines is fairly bursting its handsome cover with seasonable articles and stories, this month mostly of wildfowl shooting. Easily the best of all articles ever published on the subjects is "Duck-Shooting with Gun and Camera," by C. S. Cummings, showing some most ermarkable pictures of the author shooting ducks. The camera caught the dead ducks dropping through the air, and the man is clearly shown simultaneously firing the gun and operating the camera.

"The Conflict," by Emma Wolf, which is the novelette opening the November number, is a strong contribution which results is logically and skillfully brought about. Miss Wolf, through this novelette, will find herself occupying a very high place among the younger American writers.

In addition to A. E. W. Mason's compellingly interesting "Running Water," The Century's present serial, and Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's new novel, "The Shuttle," which will begin in the November issue, The Century in 1907 will publish a new novel by Elisabeth Robins, to be titled "Come and Find Me!" In this story Miss Robins has returned to the scenes of probably her chief success in the fiction, "The Magnetic North," and has made the magnetic attraction of the far North the chief motive of an unusual narrative. The illustrations will be Blumenschein's work.

President Roosevelt's articles on "Hunting Big Game" pale into insignificance before the account in Appleton's Magazine for November of the hunting of perchance animals. The capture of a fossil brontosaurus in Wyoming and the mounting of him in New York constituted sport of a wholesome kind. This brontosaurus is 67 feet long. It could wade in water 20 feet deep and browse in the trees 40 feet high. It was longer than three elephants in line, and weighed more.

George Madden Martin, the author of "Emmy Lou," has thrown in her lot with John S. Phillips, Ida M. Tarbell, William Allen White, F. P. Dunne, Ray Stannard Baker, Lincoln Steffens and the others who have taken hold of The American Magazine. Beginning with the December number of The American Magazine, will begin a series of stories of a new little girl of fiction—Lettit, who is an army child. The new series is to be called "Lettita, Army Corps, U. S. A."

"The Hint," by Alice Duer Miller, is a bit of doggerel which everybody is going to talk about. It appears in the November number of The Metropolitan Magazine, and suggests to Mr. Roosevelt a new outlet for his energies should he persist in not running for the Presidency of these United States again. It is the best bit of fun which has appeared since Mr. Roosevelt's election.

Eight special articles, each of actual importance to any American reading public, and nine short stories of the highest quality are contained in the November Everybody's. It is a number that should make a strong appeal to the widest possible variety of American readers. Chapters of the "Common Good," by Charles Edward Russell, deals with the remarkable achievements of the labor government of Australia—on the fringeline of political progress. It is a report vital to the interests of good government of all the people.

"The people ought to be educated on the point of piano maintenance," said Col. Hollenberg, a prominent music man of Little Rock, Ark., to The Musical Age recently. "When a man buys a piano for $500 he ought to be prepared to spend $15 or $20 a year to keep it in first-class condition, just as he spends five or ten cents a day to keep a pair of $5 shoes in good shape. Pianos need regular attention and unless they get it deterioration is rapid."

Next Sunday's World will contain: Poisons that Lurk in Fresh Eggs. Astonishing discoveries by scientists and doctors in the foods we eat and drink. Where Boys are Trained to Become Money Kings. Arranging for Hallowe'en Social.

Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., met last night, received one application and had a pleasant time in the good of the order. Next week the lodge will hold a Hallowe'en social and have initiation.

Rev. Dr. Henry M. Wharton, the evangelist, who is conducting a series of special meetings at the First Baptist church, is being entertained at Tyrell hall during his stay here.

Francis DeLacy Hyde, of Mountain avenue, who has had a severe attack of rheumatism, is much improved.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

FOOTBALL.

The Holy Cross football eleven defeated the freshmen from the Bound Brook High School, Saturday morning, by a score of 20 to 0, and not the reverse as stated on Saturday.

There is a great cry being raised in New York by lovers of football that it is about time that the Army and Navy football game should be played in the metropolis. They say that there is no reason why Philadelphia should continue to have the preference over New York, when the latter place offers just as good accommodations and is just as easily reached as the Quaker City. The game on Saturday between Princeton and Cornell is the only one of importance scheduled for New York this season, Columbia having given up the game, and the football enthusiasts are hungry for big games.

A large number of Princeton and Cornell admirers witnessed the football game in New York, Saturday, between the elevens from these colleges. It was very difficult to find any of Cornell money in Plainfield on Saturday.

The N. P. H. S. football eleven and the Rahway High School team will play on the Westervelt avenue grounds in the borough on Wednesday. The borough boys are putting up a good game and as interesting contest should result.

The Holy Cross football eleven wants to schedule games and teams looking for such can be accommodated by communicating with William Little, of 417 West Fifth street.

It is learned that because the Plainfield High School eleven has disbanded for the season, teams which had games scheduled with the local eleven are finding great difficulty in filling their schedules. The P. H. management had arranged a particularly strong list of contests and the disbandment of the team is a source of disappointment.

Lovers of football will have to depend upon the Orange Field Club, Alis and North Plainfield High School to furnish the sport for them, while the Holy Cross eleven is not to be forgotten among the minor teams.

Rev. George A. Warner, of Holy Cross church, is greatly interested in athletics of all kinds and is now devoting considerable time to developing a strong football eleven. Thus far the team has made a cerditable record, all things considered.

GOLF.

While the season's competition for the Golf Committee cup was concluded at the Plainfield Country Club on Saturday, there will be play for several weeks for consolation cups. Next Saturday afteraoon there will be the initial play for the Golf Committee consolation cup, preliminary round; November 6, Election Day morning, there will be play all day for the Election Day cup, and the first and second rounds for the consolation cup and the inconsolables cup. On November 10 there will be the semi-final rounds for both cups and the final rounds on November 17, while on November 29, Thanksgiving Day, the active season will end.

The final competition for the Hydewood cup was held at the Park Golf Club on Saturday, but the play for the President's and club cups will continue for several more Saturdays. There appears to be more interest in the play at the club now than at any time during the season. Every Saturday there is a large field out and the course was never in better condition than now.

All things considered the Plainfield Country Club has never had such a successful season as the present. The scheduled events have attracted many competitors every week and the rivalry has been intense. Several special competitions have been arranged from time to time which has brought out the best talent.

The next social event of interest at the Plainfield Country Club will be on Election Day, when several dinner parties and luncheons will be given by the members.

A freak of golf that is probably unprecedented has developed in the tournament at the Chevy Chase Club. Allan Lard, Columbia, Samuel Dalzell, Chevy Chase and A. S. Mattingly, Columbia, all tied at 175 for the low score qualifying prize. The total medal score of all three players in the first round match play was also the same, 91. In the second round match play the tie for the prize remained broken, as Lard and Dalzell each turned in a score of 89, while Mattingly was only one stroke behind. All three of these players were back in the contest for the second round match play for the cup. J. C. Davidson, Columbia, defeated Samuel Dalzell, Chevy Chase, 1 up; L. W. Weaver, Columbia, defeated A. E. Mattingly, Columbia, 1 up; E. S. Duvall, Jr., defeated C. A. Spofford, New York, 2 up; L. Barbeau, Columbia, defeated Allan Lard, Columbia, 4 up and 3 to play.

Although two down at one time, Mrs. R. H. Barlow, of the Huntingdon Valley Country Club, beat Miss F. C. Griscom, Merion, by 1 up in the final of the Women's Golf Association of Philadelphia's championship. Both played a strong game. Miss Griscom drove the bunker guarding the thirteenth green, and but for some poor luck in putting would have retained her lead. Mrs. Barlow's best shot was with the brassy from the top of a cob bunker that reached the green and enabled her to win the critical hole. The women started before the interesting team players and they had a large gallery throughout.

The series of matches played by the women of the Morris County Golf Club for the cup presented by President Thomas have been brought to a finish. The winner of each match received three points, the second two points and the third one point. The contestants and their scores are as follows: Mrs. Shippen, 12; Miss Hribut, 14; Miss Foster, 11; Miss Whitney, 8; Mrs. Billings, 7; Mrs. Phipps, 1; Miss Bryce, 1.

Ingenious Jerseymen.

Patents that were issued to Jerseymen, reported by Drake & Co., solicitors of American and foreign patents, Crawford House, Market streets, Newark: Centrifugal separator, J. J. Sommer, Newark; two, rotary duplicator, J. Steel, Little Falls; clamp, D. Swope, Merchantville; sheet piling, C. C. Tomkinson, Plainfield; multiple punch, L. H. Vodd, Westville.

Postmaster and Mrs. E. H. Bird, of Elm street, will be home this week from Delaware Water Gap, Pa., where they have been stopping for the past three weeks. Mrs. Bird's health is much improved.

To Operate New Ferry.

New Brunswick, Oct. 29.—Articles of incorporation have been filed here of the Perth Amboy and Staten Island Ferry Company, which plans to run a ferry between Perth Amboy and Tottenville, in competition with that of the Staten Island Rapid Transit Company. The company has purchased land in Tottenville for a landing and is negotiating for wharf privileges in Perth Amboy. George S. Silzer, of New Brunswick, is the agent of the company. The capital stock is $125,000, and the incorporators are Frederick W. O. Schmitz, M. F. Humphries, Edward White, Harry Loewenstein and John J. Nicholson, of New York; and John W. Humphries, of Bayonne.

Elizabeth Lawyer Goes West.

Elizabeth, Oct. 29.—Former Alderman John F. Brown, a young lawyer of this city, has left it for good and intends seeking his fortune in the West. He started Wednesday night for Reno, Nev., after bidding farewell to his family and a number of friends, several of whom accompanied him to Jersey City to see him off. Mr. Brown is the son of *the late Michael C. Brown, who, like*wise, was an Elizabeth alderman and who died several years ago. He was a Democrat, while his son is a Republican. John F. This Boy a Storm Signal.

Cleveland, Oct. 29.—Dale Canfield, a ten-year-old boy, has become a human barometer. For more than a year he has been peculiarly susceptible to changes in the weather. Every time a storm approaches the boy disappears from home. Dozens of times his disappearance has been reported to the police. They are looking for his now. Dale ran away from home many times last lear, each time immediately before a heavy storm. His father declares a fall from a street car has rendred the youngster unduly susceptible to weather conditions.

Youngest Civil War Soldier.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 29.—The controversy as to who is the youngest soldier of the civil war probably has been settled in favor of Perry Byan, of Seattle, Wash. He enlisted as a drummer boy in Company D, Twenty-fourth Iowa Volunteers, on August 22, 1862, at the age of nine years and ten months. After serving nearly a year he was honorably discharged on a surgeon's certificate of disability. The Pension Office has investigated Byan's papers and found that the representations are correct. He will receive a tidy sum as back pension.

Revival at Rescue Mission.

Revival services are being held at the Rescue Mission on Grove street on Monday, Wednesday and Friday nights and the attendance and interest are increasing steadily. These meetings will be continued for some time. A feature is the special music with a chorus choir.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter VanCamp, of South Branch, have returned home after a visit with relatives in Plainfield.

BIG PROFITS FROM FAIR

St. Mary's Undertaking Netted $4,660 For Sister's Home Fund.

WINNERS ANNOUNCED

Peter Flynn, Sr., Mayor of Parish—John Donnolly Most Popular Coachman.

Greatly to the surprise of even the most liberal guessers, it was made known Friday night that the net receipts of the recent St. Mary fair and bazaar had reached the grand total of $4,660. The fact was announced at a gathering of the parish workers in the school hall by Father Bogan, who stated that the figures were much higher than he had dreamed of and that the sum would be adequate for the purpose specified.

Another announcement made by Father Bogan that caused almost as much enthusiasm was the fact that Peter Flynn, Sr., one of the original members of St. Mary's parish, had won the "mayoralty" contest conducted during the fair. In all 6,830 votes had been cast and of this number the successful candidate received 4,567. Mr. Flynn is eighty-six years old and for thirty-four years has been connected with the T. A. B. Society. He was supported by the entire parish and the result was satisfactory even to those who had voted against him. Mr. Flynn's opponents were Dr. W. C. Boone, who was nominated by the Knights of Columbus; J. W. Graham, from the Holy Name Society, and Patrick Casey, from the T. A. B. Society. Mr. Flynn was at the gathering last night and he was accorded one of the greatest demonstrations the hall has ever witnessed.

A second contest that attracted much attention was for the most popular coachman in the parish and there was more cheering when it was stated that John Donnolly had won. In this contest, 3,864 votes had been cast, the winner receiving 2,560. Young women of the parish had collected money from individuals during the fair and following the other awards it was announced that Miss Margaret Gilhooly had been ahead of all other contestants with $127 to her credit. For this she was presented with a gold watch and one of those encouraging addresses from *Father Bogan that is a reward in it*self.

When all the winners had been made known, members of the various societies that had taken part in the fair secured a fife and drum corps and paraded the streets in the immediate vicinity of the hall. The homes of the successful contestants were visited and they were serenaded in a noisy manner. Afterward a social time and refreshments were enjoyed at the hall.

The proceeds from the fair are to be used in building a home for the Sisters of the parish. Where it will be located and what sort of a building it will be are matters still under consideration. Father Bogan and his assistants are busy on the plans, however, and will make the facts known in a short time.

Silk Mill Busy.

Among the many industrial plants throughout this part of the country which are enjoying a great era of prosperity is the Watchung silk mills, of North Plainfield. The mills have been running full time for a long while and recently it was found necessary to put in several extra looms. The company has been endeavoring to secure additional weavers and has been scouring the country for them. Heretofore the company has not devoted much time to the manufacture of plaid silks, but the great demand for them has compelled the company to make this kind of silk for the trade. The company ships its silk to all parts of the country and great quantities of it are sold in New York.

Steele—Lyman.

Miss Katharine Lyman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hart Lyman, of New York, was married to John Nelson Steele, Jr., on Tuesday afternoon in the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Ascension. Mrs. Leon Moran, of Grove street, is a cousin of Mr. Steele and her father, Dr. J. Nevitt Steele, vicar of Old Trinity church, New York, assisted in the ceremony.

George Wiltse, of the New York Giants' pitching staff, has been spending several days in town visiting relatives. George is in the best of condition after having had a successful season.

SAYS CITY MUST PAY FOR RIGHT OF WAY

MR. STAATS NOTIFIES MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT IT IS A TRESPASSER.

Objecting to paying taxes for property owned by him and over which the police have driven the patrol wagon from the department stable, J. A. Staats, proprietor of the Hotel Kensington, notified Mayor Buckle and Chief of Police Kiely Friday that the city hereafter would be a trespasser if it used the strip of land in any way.

"The right of way in question is through the alley between property owned by Mr. Staats and Roth & Co., of East Front street. The police department owns a brick barn on property, adjoining that of Mr. Staats, and owned by J. B. Coward and J. W. Murray, Sr. To drive in or out of the barn to Front street, it is necessary to cross the property owned by Mr. Staats.

Mr. Staats says that he gave the police department notice over a year ago that he intended closing this right of way, but the latter has done nothing about the matter. Now, he says that the city cannot use the land unless it makes special arrangements with him to do so. He says that he can see no good reason why he should give the city a free right of way over land upon which he is compelled to pay taxes and he does not propose to do it.

Mr. Staats owns the property on East Front street, extending from police headquarters to the alley which seperates Roth & Co.'s property, which is owned by Mr. Staats.

There has always been a question about this matter. Out of the time the city secured permission from Mr. Coward and Mr. Murray to erect a barn for the patrol wagon and horse, when the property was leased, there appeared to be a question as to how long it would have a right of way to Front street, but it was decided to form a school. Irving expressed his willingness to confess to theft of an oil stove, but George said, "I jes guess I'll give dem a good run for dere money. If dey's got anything against dis chicken they's got to prove it." The reasoning powers of the county prosecutor and the pleadings of the mother failed to move the obdurate twin, and as the court did not care to separate the pair, they were marched back to the county jail, where they will remain until their case again comes before the court next week.

CANDIDATE SMALLEY IS NON-COMMITTAL

ASSEMBLY NOMINEE EVADES MR. ROGERS' PERTINENT QUESTION.

In answer to George T. Rogers' open letter as to how he would stand on the Senatorial question, if elected, W. W. Smalley, the candidate of Somerset Republicans to the Assembly, has sent the following letter:

Bound Brook, N. J., Oct. 23, 1906.
Mr. George T. Rogers,
Plainfield, N. J.
Dear Sir:

Your letter of the 22d received, and I am very glad to get your views on the subject matter of the Republican Senatorial contest. I can but repeat the statement made before the convention when, after much urging, I accepted the nomination—that I must be entirely unpledged to anyone or anything, and could be free to use my judgment on matters of interest to my constituents.

Trusting this will be satisfactory, I am,
(Signed) Very truly yours,
WM. SMALLEY.

This is the reply, Mr. Rogers has made:

Mr. W. W. Smalley,
Republican Candidate for Assembly,
Somerset County,
Bound Brook, New Jersey.
My dear sir:

Your esteemed favor of the 22d inst. in reply to mine of the 22d inst., duly received. I note that you do not state your position on the Senatorship for United States Senator. I believe that a very large majority of the Republicans in Somerset County are opposed to him. A candidate expecting the support of the voters ought to be willing to state his attitude in advance, on an issue of so much importance. I do not think it necessary for you to do so if you are to get my vote. After election you will have the power to vote for the United States Senator, but the better opportunity than your constituents have now, to judge of the merits of candidates.

(Signed) Very truly yours,
GEORGE T. ROGERS.

REV. P. M. DOOLITTLE VICTIM OF HEART TROUBLE

WAS PASTOR OF NORTH BRANCH FOR FIFTY YEARS.

Rev. P. M. Doolittle, for fifty years pastor of the North Branch Reformed church, died suddenly at his home in that village Thursday. He was one of the best known ministers in this part of the State and had frequently addressed local congregations. He retired in his usual health last evening but his wife was awakened by his deep breathing in the night and before assistance could be summoned he had passed away. Heart trouble is ascribed as the cause.

Mr. Doolittle was seventy-five years old and was a graduate of Rutgers College. He was a classmate of Rev. Dr. Talmadge, the noted divine and the two always maintained a warm friendship. The North Branch church was his first and only pastorate and he was always held in the highest esteem by the members. Because of his advanced age, he recently announced that he would retire from active work and he was to have preached his last sermon last Sunday.

Beside his wife, he leaves two married daughters, both of whim live in the North Branch vicinity.

HOLY CROSS WOMEN PLAN BIG BAZAAR.

Affair to Be Held in Parish House on November 21 and 22.

Active preparations for a bazaar to be held on November 21 and 22 are being made by the women of the Church of the Holy Cross. For several weeks, under the leadership of the Guild officers, preparations have been going on quietly for this parish event. The auditorium of the parish house and the rooms adjoining are all to be utilized in order to give plenty of scope for variety of booths and originality in decoration.

The committees in charge give out that the date was selected with a view to meeting the wants of Christmas shoppers, the aim being to provide for such. Not fancy articles alone, but every kind of suitable gift of a practical sort will be on sale. There will be all sorts of housewifely articles, towels, linen, dust cloths, aprons, groceries and various needed articles for fighting dust and germs and keeping the home in order.

That good cooking of the old New England order will be in evidence is to be expected. During the two evenings of the bazaar the women will serve dinner at the usual hour and charge the accustomed price.

One part of the parish house will be transformed into a Japanese tea room with Miss Virginia Hegeman in charge; that the booth will be a work of art and the tea of the real quality is assured by the selection of the chairman and her many efficient helpers.

One of the business women of the Guild who knows how to sell groceries as well as to manage a booth, will be in charge of the booth where necessities of life are dispensed. She has a large corps of clerks who promise to keep the sugar free from sand and to give a good generous weight of all goods sold.

A highly gifted palm reader will unfold the future by the marks and mounts found on the palms presented for her inspection. The children will not be overlooked or forgotten; a special booth is to be prepared for them and that which delights childhood can be found there.

Mrs. Emil Larsson is chairman of the fancy booth. The beautiful articles of embroidery and fancy work gathered by her committee promise much for those who are seeking suitable gifts.

A well known member of a New York art league is chairman of the art booth and art lovers may expect to find many articles gathered together by her and her committee that will satisfy their artistic desires. As chairman of the candy booth, Miss Laura Long, and the committee working with her, has provided for all kinds of home-made sweets as well as the best brands of well known candy manufacturers.

Gorgeous chrysanthemums and beautiful flowers of all sorts will surround the committee in charge of the flower booth with Miss Iola Moore as chairman.

Miss Pearson as chairman and her committee of helpers will endeavor to please all who come to the bazaar, to have a lemon handed to them. The lemonade well, it is said, will be not only beautiful but deep and inexhaustible.

The jolly little waiters who appeared in the spring at the annual choir concert with their caps and white aprons and show that the boys can wait on tables as well as sing—a considerable camp experience making them very nimble in attending to the wants of impatient and clamorous table folks.

The fair will be held two afternoons and evening, November 21 and 22. The proceeds for parish house improvements.

Hospital Scheme for Summit.

Among the originators for founding a hospital society at Summit to give needed medical service to those unable to pay, is Dr. William J. Lamson, who was a Plainfield boy.

HARMONY THE KEYNOTE

City Committee By Resolution Disavows Responsibility For Some Campaign Talk.

PUTS ITSELF ON RECORD

Does Not Endorse Remarks Made by Ex-Governor Voorhees Aimed at Colbyites.

The Republican City Committee held another ante-election meeting, Thursday, and disposed of several matters relative to the present campaign. Variety was lent the gathering by a free and open discussion of former Governor Voorhees' remarks at the open meeting last Tuesday night, when he indiscreetly said things about the Colbyites that they didn't relish. Chairman Charles J. Fisk made it plain to the New Idea men present that the committee did not indorse the remarks in any way and that the former governor spoke more of conditions outside of Plainfield than in it.

At Mr. Fisk's suggestion, the following resolution was framed up and passed:

Resolved, That the members of this committee are all working for a harmonious party in the city of Plainfield and success of the Republican ticket; and be it further

Resolved, That they do not countenance and unqualifiedly disapprove of any statement tending to disturb this harmony or reflections in any manner, upon the action or remarks of any members of the party during the recent primary campaign; be it further

Resolved, That they urge every voter to go to the polls and vote on Election Day.

The passing of the resolution overcame what prejudice the New Idea members entertained over the occurrence and the discussion ended with harmony predominating. There had been some strong feeling expressed but the committee's action showed beyond all shadow of a doubt where the members stood.

Under the order of business, Joseph M. Shellabarger and George J. Tobin, of the Third ward, and Robert A. Meeker and Marion S. Ackerman, of the Second ward, resigned as members of the committee, other appointees filling their attention and making it impossible for them to attend to the duties. George W. V. Moy and J. Stephen Higham were elected in place of Messrs. Shellabarger and Tobin and Howard C. Tracy and E. E. Iremonger to succeed Mr. Meeker and Mr. Ackerman. All four new members were affiliated with the New Idea movement.

C. W. Jackson and E. B. Maynard, colored, attended the meeting in the interests of the colored voters and with the committee arranged the details for the colored voters' meeting to be held next Tuesday night in Reform Hall. It was stated that Eugene W. Gregory, who is in the Supreme Court clerk's office at Trenton, Judson W. Lyon and Jesse Lawson would be present as speakers. The colored men also made the request that the committee make an attempt to secure ex-Congressman White (colored), who is considered one of the foremost men of his race in the country. He was the last colored man to sit in Congress and is the developer of Whiteboro in Cape May County, this State. County Chairman Frank H. Smith stated that every effort would be made to get him. The meeting will be enlivened by a band of musicians graced by leaders of the local Republicans.

It was decided to issue a call for volunteers to work about the polls on Election Day, the statement being made that twenty-five would be needed for each district. Instructions were given about the secretary and vice presidents for the next big mass meeting in the New Plainfield theatre and the secretary was instructed to get out the usual election circulars.

Adjournment was taken until this week Saturday night, when final campaign reports will be heard.

Newspaper Men Advance.

Allen R. Beals, a former member of The Daily Press staff who has been city editor of the Elizabeth Times for the past two years, has resigned his position to become a member of the editorial staff of the Star, Newark's new morning paper. He has always been a rapid worker in all departments of newspaper work and is now one of the best known of the craft in the county. He is sure to make a valuable man in his new position.

Rehearsing for the First Concert.

The Plainfield Operatic Association is now devoting some time to rehearsals for the first concert to be given in December. William Holmes, the director, has made a number of fine selections to be rendered at that time. Early in the new year the association will give "The Chimes of Normandy," to be followed later by a second concert and then another opera. The place for the first concert has not been decided upon yet.

REV. MR. DOOLITTLE FIFTY YEARS A PASTOR

DEAD MINISTER HAD SERVED ONE CONGREGATION FOR HALF A CENTURY.

Rev. Dr. Philip Melanchton Doolittle, who has been pastor of the Reformed church in North Branch for fifty years, was found dead in the bed at the parsonage Thursday morning by his wife. Heart disease was the cause.

On July 25 last Dr. Doolittle celebrated the semi-centennial of his pastorate with impressive ceremonies, and his resignation as pastor of the church he had served so long and well had been accepted with reluctance by the consistory, to take effect November 1, and he was to have preached his farewell sermon last Sunday.

Dr. Doolittle was the fourth pastor of the North Branch church. He began his duties in 1856. He was born in Springfield, Essex County, on January 20, 1831, and was a son of Rev. Horace Doolittle, then pastor of the Presbyterian church in Springfield. Dr. Doolittle prepared for college in the old Bloomfield Academy, and when eighteen years old entered Union College, from which he graduated in 1853. He graduated from the Theological Seminary in New Brunswick in 1856.

He was invited to preach as a candidate in the Reformed church at North Branch on the fourth Sunday in June, 1856. He accepted, and from that day, June 22, 1856, he had held to the pulpit and deemed pastoral duty. When Dr. Doolittle first went to North Branch he lived with the family of the late Samuel B. Little.

On December 2, 1856, he married Anna, daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Gabriel Ludlow, who was for nearly fifty-seven years the pastor of the Reformed church at Neshanic. On February 3, 1857, they moved to the parsonage and were received by a large number of the members of the congregation. There, in their first home, they lived for more than forty-nine consecutive years. Three daughters were born to them. The eldest, Katie Skillman, died in 1874, when nearly seventeen years old. The second daughter, Mary Ludlow, is the wife of Dr. James Bloomfield Beckman, of Bedminster, and the youngest daughter, Susan Rapelje, married Rev. Dr. Edward Griffen Read, pastor the Second Reformed church in Somerville.

The average number of families in the North Branch congregation for the last fifty years has been 118 and a fraction. The territory over which Dr. Doolittle ministered covered a radius of about five miles.

During the fifty-one pastorate he solemnized 234 marriages. There were 400 baptisms of both infants and adults. Of funerals there were 513. Dr. Doolittle preached during his pastorate at home and abroad 5,98 times during the fifty years, mostly at home. His visits do not include numerous addresses of which no account was kept. He received into the church 664 persons, 352 by certificate and 312 on confession.

Public Hearing On Sewer Matter.

The Common Council will hold an adjourned meeting on Monday night, November 12, to grant a public hearing to interested property-owners regarding the proposed action of purchasing land for the southside sewer pumping station. The land desired by the city is owned by Clifton & Campbell and is located on Randolph road, south of Arlington avenue.

Miss Reynolds Surprised.

Miss Ethel Reynolds, of Summit avenue, was given a surprise party Wednesday night by a dozen intimate friends. The evening was spent playing games and in listening to vocal and instrumental music. Miss Reynolds received a gift of a handsome lounging robe as a token of esteem. Refreshments were served at midnight.

Complaints Must Be In Writing.

Tax Collector J. W. Murray, Jr., and his corps of assistants are busy now getting the tax bills ready to send out. The Common Council on Monday night appropriated $150 for Mr. Murray to engage help to distribute the bills, according to the usual custom. As soon as the bills are received by taxpayers it is expected, of course, that there will be complaints. All such persons wishing to register a kick will have to present their grievance to the Union County Board of Taxation in Elizabeth, in writing. Verbal kicks will not go this year. The taxation board takes the place of the commissions of appeal, which body was abolished by the last Legislature.

Will Elect New Set of Officers.

In the proposed plan of consolidating the Plainfield Relief Association and the Organized Aid Association, there will be a whole set of new officers chosen from among the members of both organizations. It is believed that by the consolidation the charity work of the city can be attended to more satisfactorily and with less possibility of doubling up in giving aid.

Harry Noble in England.

Friends have received word of the safe arrival in England of Harry Noble, of the borough, who sailed early last week. He will spend several months in London and other places visiting relatives.

STATE ROAD COMMISSION MAKES IMPORTANT RULING

ALL ROADS MUST HEREAFTER BE INSPECTED BEFORE IMPROVED.

State Road Commissioner Hutchinson put out an important ruling in his department this week—not to approve the building of any road in any county until he had been over the proposed road and made a personal inspection of the highway, in company with the engineer of the county and the road committee of the Board of Freeholders. A modification to this rule will be that the Deputy State Road Commissioner, Engineer Meeker, of Plainfield, may go over the proposed road in lieu of the State Road Commissioner, only in this case Mr. Meeker's autograph must be affixed to the blue print of the final plans.

"I made this rule," said Mr. Hutchinson, "in order that saving may be made to the county in which the road is to be built. I find that engineers plan elegant roads on paper, but an inspection sometimes of the land on both sides will show how a few extra curves by electing Mrs. Hamilton L. Gordon, of East Orange, to the office of local vice president, to succeed Mrs. Harland P. Beach, of Montclair.

In the evening Miss Juliette Gilson, a missionary of East Central Africa, related her experiences in Rhodesia. Dr. F. K. Sanders made an address on the "Pressing Need of the Great West." Dr. Sanders advocated the home missions to send missionaries to the sparsely settled districts where it was impossible to have churches. The growth of religion should keep pace with the cultivation of the soil.

AN OIL MAGNATE.

Bonwell Struck It Rich and Will Settle Down Here.

C. E. Bonwell, who recently purchased F. W. Runyon's house on Madison avenue, has taken possession. Mr. Bonwell is an oil and gas speculator. While prospecting in the mountains of Virginia, where he purchased many acres of land, he struck a gusher, pronounced to be one of the best ever discovered in that State. The Standard Oil Company soon learned of the well and at once made arrangements to buy the oil from it.

Mr. Bonwell recently figured in two very important deals, whereby he disposed of some of his holdings for good round figures to Pittsburg capitalists. He is still interested in several natural gas wells in Virginia, from which he derives a princely sum. Mr. Bonwell is now in Virginia closing up some deals, preparatory to coming here to stay.

P. H. S. DEBATING SOCIETY CHOOSES NEW OFFICERS.

Miss Mary Lock, Instructor in English, Makes an Address.

The Plainfield High School Debating Society held a meeting yesterday at which nine new members were elected and these officers were chosen: President, George H. Fisher; vice-president, P. R. Williams; secretary, Miss Alma Brakley; treasurer, Joseph Osgood. More interest than usual was shown and a successful year is anticipated.

Miss Mary Lock, instructor in English, who has consented to act as critic, made a short address in which she made a number of excellent suggestions, showing where improvement can be made over the work of the society last year. She suggested that the whole school be invited to attend the debates thus interesting a greater number and giving the debaters better training in public speaking. Special emphasis was made by Miss Lock regarding the importance of regular attendance and keeping all appointments in connection with the debates.

The society will meet in the high school every Thursday. Next week the members will vote on the amendments to the constitution, which are being prepared by a special committee composed of George H. Fisher, Jr., Adelbert VanBrakle and Arthur Titsworth. At this meeting subjects for debate will be discussed.

A. O. U. W. SOCIAL.

Central Lodge Has Informal Entertainment.

Central Lodge, No. 48, A. O. U. W., held a social session after the business meeting Thursday. There were vocal selections by the lodge quartette, consisting of Charles H. Spicer, J. Spicer, W. H. Lungger and E. M. Mosher. Theodore J. Mason presided at the piano.

R. W. Ellis gave an exhibition of jig and reel dancing and Clark Rogers gave several cornina solos. Walter Bradford, H. B. Zimmerman and George Overland presented a sketch entitled "Fish Story Bee," which was amusing. At the next meeting the lodge will hold a smoker.

Mr. Mathewson's Treatise.

A treatise by Chester Arthur Mathewson entitled "The Behavior of the Positive-tube in Monatomia (Bisect) Coerulea," has just been issued by the department of science of Columbia University. Mr. Mathewson is instructor of Biology in the Plainfield High School.

CONGREGATIONAL WOMEN HOLD MISSION ANNUAL

MRS. J. M. WHITON PRESIDED OVER SECOND DAY'S SESSION.

With Mrs. J. M. Whiton, of this city, in the chair, as president, the fiftieth annual meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Union of New Jersey opened Thursday morning at 9:30 o'clock in the Christian Union Congregational church, Upper Montclair. The meeting began with the singing of a hymn and devotional exercises led by Mrs. Edward H. Still, and the treasurer, Mrs. G. A. L. Merrifield, read the reports, which showed that the receipts were larger than last year. Miss Elizabeth White read a paper on Our Designated Work."

Mrs. Washington Choate, president Woman Home Missionary Union of Connecticut, made a short address on "Federated Unions."

Miss Lydia Singer, of Redfields College, South Dakota, also made an address.

The delegates from the Congregational church in this city to the Union and to the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, Philadelphia branch, which met in the same place Wednesday, were Mrs. Charles A. Rice, Mrs. L. B. Morgan, Mrs. C. L. Goodrich and Miss Elizabeth Chadbourne. The Board reported a deficit in the Interncon by electing Mrs. Hamilton L. Gordon, of East Orange, to the office of local vice president, to succeed Mrs. Harland P. Beach, of Montclair.

In the evening Miss Juliette Gilson, a missionary of East Central Africa, related her experiences in Rhodesia. Dr. F. K. Sanders made an address on the "Pressing Need of the Great West." Dr. Sanders advocated the home missions to send missionaries to the sparsely settled districts where it was impossible to have churches. Central Lodge Has Informal Entertainment.

Central Lodge, No. 48, A. O. U. W., held a social session after the business meeting Thursday. There were vocal selections by the lodge quartette, consisting of Charles H. Spicer, J. Spicer, W. H. Lungger and E. M. Mosher. Theodore J. Mason presided at the piano.

R. W. Ellis gave an exhibition of jig and reel dancing and Clark Rogers gave several cornina solos. Walter Bradford, H. B. Zimmerman and George Overland presented a sketch entitled "Fish Story Bee," which was amusing. At the next meeting the lodge will hold a smoker.

Mr. Mathewson's Treatise.

A treatise by Chester Arthur Mathewson entitled "The Behavior of the Positive-tube in Monatomia (Bisect) Coerulea," has just been issued by the department of science of Columbia University. Mr. Mathewson is instructor of Biology in the Plainfield High School.

Negro Twins Go Back to Jail.

Somerville, Oct. 27.—George and Irving Blaney, negro twins, nine years old, known as the "Infant Crooks," were brought up to plead to a charge of larceny before Judge John L. Connet in the Somerset Court yesterday. It was understood that the diminutive negroes, who had already been imprisoned for petty thefts in two counties, would plead guilty and be sentenced to the Reform School. Irving expressed his willingness to confess to theft of an oil stove, but George said, "I jes guess I'll give dem a good run for dere money. If dey's got anything against dis chicken they's got to prove it." The reasoning powers of the county prosecutor and the pleadings of the mother failed to move the obdurate twin, and as the court did not care to separate the pair, they were marched back to the county jail, where they will remain until their case again comes before the court next week.

FEELS GRATEFUL TO BURGLAR.

Councilman Boyle, of South Orange, Glad Sick Wife Was Not Disturbed.

It is seldom that the victim of a burglary has cause to feel grateful to the burglar, but that is the position Councilman Frederick A. Boyle takes toward the burglar wh obroke into his house at South Orange Wednesday night and stole articles valued at $50.

The reason for this unusual attitude on Mr. Boyle's part is that the burglar went about his business so quietly that no one in the house was disturbed. Mrs. Boyle is dangerously ill, and Mr. Boyle feared that any shock might result seriously.

To this end the dogs have been kept away from the house and every precaution has been taken to insure absolute quiet. It is to this fact that the burglar owes his easy task. The burglar stole a revolver, a watch, a locket, some money, tableware and other things, but Mr. Boyle says he can keep them all. He refuses to take steps to find the arrest and punishment of the offender.

Wardmen Get Big Job.

New York, Oct. 27.—By one of the most sweeping general orders ever issued to the Police Department Commissioner Bingham yesterday ordered every policeman in the city into uniform. The order, General Order No. 83, takes effect this evening at six o'clock. The order limits the power of the police captains in assigning men to any form of work in civilian clothes and puts the responsibility up to the inspectors. Many retirements from the force are looked for on account of the order. Many men have been on duty in citizen's clothes for six or more years, and some of them will have grown, it is feared, entirely out of their uniforms. The order threatens to do away with men in civilian clothing, who are known as ward men.

Council to Award Contract.

Wade Street Commissioner A. J. Gavett has determined the lowest bidder for the proposed southside sanitary sewer, it being Peter Morgan, of Bridgeboro. No action can be taken until the Common Council meets in November to award the contract. There is also in dispute the bid of James Tusco, of Montclair, which was irregular and must be decided upon by Corporation Counsel Marsh. It is hardly possible that the other bidders would be willing to allow an irregular bid to stand and the chances are it will not be considered. It is understood that the irregularity consists of the failure of Tusco to submit a complete bid for the sewer work.

Storm Sewer Work Progressing.

The Harrison Construction Company, of Newark, is well under way with the work of building the extension to the Richmond street storm sewer. When this is completed the sewer will be able to take care of a great deal of the surface water that formerly inundated the streets and properties in that part of the city. The street committee expects to build another extension to the sewer next year.

John Street Undergoing Change.

Contractor C. M. Meeker has placed a large gang of men at work macadamizing John street from Fourth street to Seventh. The street has been in bad condition for years through the changing of grade, but it will now be made one of the best short thoroughfares in the West End.

FIFTY YEARS MARRIED

Mr. and Mrs. Abram L. Cadmus Celebrate Golden Wedding Anniversary

DANCE VIRGINIA REEL

Sixty Friends Surprise Aged Couple, Bringing Gifts—Married in 1856 by Rev. Lewis Bond.

Mr. and Mrs. Abram Lenox Cadmus, of 114 Plainfield avenue, who celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, Monday, were given a delightful surprise at their home last night by a company of sixty relatives and friends. A pleasant reminder of the olden times was the dancing of the Virginia reel, which was led by Mr. and Mrs. Cadmus, while their pastor, Rev. C. E. Herring, presided at the piano.

The bride received many presents, including a solid gold watch and chain from the groom. There were also gifts of goldware and a silk bag containing fifty new pennies. During the evening there were several violin selections by Martin A. Korff, accompanied on the piano by Rev. Mr. Herring, and at a late hour supper was served.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Cadmus are natives of Plainfield, Mr. Cadmus being born on the Cadmus Estate, which was in the family since 1748 and which was purchased over a year ago by a syndicate. The couple was married on October 30, 1856, at the home of the bride's father, Edmund Shotwell, in Plainfield. Mrs. Cadmus was Miss Martha Shotwell. The wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. Lewis Bond, one of the first pastors of the First Presbyterian church, where the couple have been members and regular attendants ever since. Some of Mr. Bond's grandchildren were present last night, and Joel Randolph, of East Front street, was the only one at the celebration who was at the wedding ceremony fifty years ago. Rev. and Mrs. George W. Karner, of Brooklyn, also were being the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cadmus, attended, and Mr. Karner's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Karner, of West Front street, who celebrated their golden wedding anniversary January 1, last.

A feature of last night's celebration was a wedding cake, bearing the dates, "1856-1906," and many Hallowe'en mementoes were displayed on the table.

Today Mr. and Mrs. Cadmus will be entertained in Brooklyn at the home of their daughter and son-in-law, and tomorrow they will go to Trenton and be entertained at the Windsor Hotel by Rev. Dr. Studdiford, the well-known Presbyterian minister of that city. It was at the Windsor Hotel that Mr. and Mrs. Cadmus spent a portion of their honeymoon, driving from Plainfield to Trenton with a horse and buggy after their marriage. From Trenton the couple will go to Atlantic City to remain a week or so.

ERIC MORALLER EN ROUTE FOR ST. PETERSBURG.

Will Engage In Y. M. C. A. Work in Russia and Will Visit In Paris and Berlin.

Eric Moraller, son of Louis Moraller, of West Fourth street, sailed on Saturday last on the Steamship Amerika, of the Hamburg-American Line, en route for St. Petersburg, Russia, where he will engage in Y. M. C. A. work. Mr. Moraller will reach Cherbourg on Saturday and will go to Paris, where he will spend a week. From there he will go to Berlin for a week and then continue his journey to St. Petersburg.

Mr. Moraller has been actively engaged in Y. M. C. A. work for several years and recently was in charge of the athletics at DePaw University. He was graduated from the Y. M. C. A. Training School at Springfield, Mass., and is thoroughly equipped to take charge of all departments of the association work. Mr. Moraller will remain in St. Petersburg for an indefinite time.

16 YR. OLD GIRL ELOPES

While Parents are Off Their Guard Miss Jeter Flees Away With Lover.

WEDDED IN NEW YORK

Mrs. Crow Refuses to Return to Parental Home and Shows Marriage Certificate—Living in Cranford.

Disregarding the pleadings of her parents, sixteen-year-old Helen Agnes Jeter Crow clings to her husband, William Crow, with whom she eloped from Faith chapel Sunday morning. The mother, Mrs. Charles L. Jeter, of Belmont avenue, is heartbroken over the affair. Despairing of her ability to have the marriage annulled, Mrs. Jeter has turned her thoughts to vengeance on the young man, and she announced this morning, without attempting to conceal her bitterness, that she would take steps to make Crow rue his action within twenty-four hours.

The elopement is a story of an employee's love for his employer's daughter and the implacable opposition of the parents. Crow, who is twenty-four years old, entered the employ of Mr. Jeter, of the Willswood Farms Dairy, Belmont avenue, nine months ago, as a driver. He and the sixteen-year-old daughter promptly fell in love. Three months ago Mr. Jeter discovered that Crow was paying attention to his daughter, and the young man was discharged. He was forbidden to see or hold communication with the girl.

Mr. and Mrs. Jeter though that ended the affair, but the young man and his sweetheart, using resourcefulness with which lovers are endowed, managed to meet secretly and plan the elopement. Sunday morning, Mr. Jeter drove his daughter to Faith chapel, where he was to play at the children's service. Her mother was to meet her after the service. She was not at the chapel when Mrs. Jeter arrived, and the latter learned that Helen had waited only until her father drove away to leave the place. Mrs. Jeter started search for her with all speed. When she failed to come home in time for dinner, Mr. and Mrs. Jeter started search for her with feverish energy. No trace of her was found that day, but yesterday morning the parents located her in Cranford. They learned that Crow worked there, and lost no time, after daylight dawned, in carrying the search to that place. Crow and Helen were found in furnished rooms. They were armed against separation by a marriage certificate dated the day before. The marriage took place in New York Sunday afternoon. Rev. Dr. Fulpin, Mrs. Jeter said this morning, performed the ceremony. She did not know the church to which he was attached.

Mrs. Jeter spoke to The Daily Press reporter of the elopement with her eyes brimming.

"I am afraid we cannot have the marriage made void," she said. "My daughter went of her own free will, and she will not leave him. When we asked her, she said she would think over it, but I am afraid—I am afraid. We will do something besides entering the legal mase that lies about attempts at annulment. My objection to Mr. Crow's attentions to my daughter were not based on her youth. There were other reasons. I cannot say now what they were and are, but they will be made public in due time."

Mrs. Jeter's bitterness extends to a neighbor. She charges the latter with harboring Crow, and giving countenance to his clandestine meetings with Helen. "They were our enemies," she said, "and helped that man just to bring disgrace on us and break up our home."

Crow came here from Somerville. He is the son of Manning Crow, a police officer of that town.

PICTURES IDEAL CLUB.

Mrs. B. J. Shreve's Subject at Monday Afternoon Club.

Reports of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, held in Atlantic City, by Mrs. Benjamin J. Shreve. Some points suggested by Mrs. Shreve were a good constitution, allowing of growth and development, freedom of discussion, the consideration of up-to-date subjects, teaching its members to think, teaching them to speak and giving them a high and broad outlook on life and its work. Tea was served at the conclusion of the discussion.

Co. K Wins Regimental Trophy.

Captain W. B. Martin, of Co. K, has received word that his company has received the regimental trophy for figure of merit, its percentage being 98.7, the highest attained by any company in the Second Regiment this year. The trophy will be presented to the local company on or about January 1. The high honor won by the company is gratifying to Captain Martin as well as every member, and is deserving tribute for faithful and earnest work.

Frank Reynolds' porch has been extended several feet.

THIEVES FIRE A BARN

Men Stealing Chickens Supposed to Be Responsible For Building's Destruction.

ONN HORSE BURNED

Loss $2,000, With Partial Insurance —Vail & Co. and Robert Appleton Are the Loscrs.

A large barn on the former Pete Field property on Plainfield avenue just over the city line, caught fire early Tuesday, presumably from matches dropped by chicken thieves, and was entirely destroyed. It was rented by Vail & Co., the grocery firm which has a store at Fourth street and Park avenue, and one of their horses was so badly burned it had to be shot. They also lost a carriage and a surrey, sets of harness and a large quantity of hay, straw and other material. The structure was worth about $1,000 and was owned by Robert Appleton, of New York, who had practically no insurance on it. Vail & Co.'s loss will reach a similar figure with a partial insurance.

The house on the property is occupied by Edward Vail and his mother and they were entirely in ignorance that the barn was on fire until Capt. Townley, of the city department, roused them from their slumbers. When the flames broke out the reflection cast a glare over the city and it was seen by Patrolman Dan McDonald, who turned in an alarm from box 84 at Grant avenue and Fourth street at 12:30 o'clock. The firemen responded and from that point proceded to the scene of the blaze, not learning that it was over the line until directly to it.

When they arrived on the premises, the structure was beyond saving and the efforts of the men were devoted to getting out some of the contents. Two delivery wagons, standing near a door, were saved, and some farming utensils, but nothing else of any consequence. No water was thrown on the flames as the nearest hydrant was too far away to be of any service. The department remained on the scene, however, and did everything possible to lessen the danger from sparks, the house standing but a short distance away.

While Chief Doane and Edward Vail were looking over the premises, the found three bags filled with chickens. From this it was concluded that thieves had been working about the place and in seeking the barn had dropped a lighted match, starting a fire that got beyond them. It must also have been their intention to take away a horse, as another of Vail & Co.'s animals was found wandering in a nearby field with a bridle on. No coat was found there as seen it brought out and it confirms the opinion that thieves were at the bottom of the trouble.

Among the smaller losses from the fire were a lot of chickens and prize pigeons belonging to Edward Vail. The latter were in a nearby coop and were smothered by smoke before they could escape.

Toronto Wants "Willie" Deegan.

An enthusiastic and large crowd of fans witnessed a fine game of ball at Elizabethport yesterday afternoon between the Stars and Hobokens. The Stars won by a score of 1 to 0. It was a pitcher's battle between "Willie" Deegan for Hoboken and "Flick" Luyster, for the Stars. Luyster and Ross, his catcher, won the game. The pitcher made a safe hit in the seventh inning, stole second and came home on a single by Ross. A representative in the Toronto, Eastern League Club, was at the game and he made "Willie" Deegan a flattering offer to join that team. The Scotch Plains twirler has the offer under consideration.

TICKET AGENT WEDS.

Mason F. Bebney Takes Clinton Girl for Bride.

Miss Elizabeth S. Stires, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Whitfield L. Stires, of Clinton, Hunterdon county, and Mason F. Bebney, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bebney, of Greenpoint, Pa., were married Saturday night by Rev. A. C. McCres, pastor of the First M. E. church, at the parsonage on Central avenue. The ceremony was witnessed by members of Mr. McCres's family.

Both the bride and groom are members of the M. E. church. The latter is the ticket agent at the Lehigh Valley Railroad station at Roselle Park, where the couple will reside, and both he and his wife have many friends here.

Jacob Grieb Cremated.

With strict privacy, attended only by the family and a few close friends, the funeral of Jacob Grieb, who died at his home in Dunellen Friday night, was held this morning. The body was cremated at Fresh Pond, L. I.

Mr. and Mrs. Abram L. Cadmus, of Plainfield avenue, left today for Trenton, where they will be guests of Rev. Dr. Studdiford at the Hotel Windsor, where they spent their honeymoon fifty years ago. Tomorrow they will go to Atlantic City to spend a week.

Charles M. Wilson, of West Sixth street, who has been detained at home several days by illness, is able to be out again.

JEALOUSY THE MOTIVE

Prosecutor Declares That Reason For Slaying of Raritan Italian.

THE TRIAL CONTINUES

Florindo Illario, the Girl on Trial for Her Life, an Attractive Young Woman.

Florindo Illario was placed on trial yesterday for the murder last June 4 of Alexander Dipaolo, a hotel man and contractor of Raritan, before Justice Garretson and Judge Schenck in the Somerset Court at Somerville. The accused woman entered the court room in custody of Sheriff Cooper. She turned a look of sympathy on Dipaolo's widow and four small children, who were seated near the front of the court room.

The prisoner, an attractive young woman, was neatly attired in a brown tailor made suit set off with embroidery, which she had made during her imprisonment in the county jail.

Prosecutor John F. Reger, assisted by Nelson Y. Dungan and E. P. Johnson, appeared for the State, and the accused was defended by former Congressman Alvah A. Clark and Clifford W. Cass. The jury was empanelled after both sides had made several challenges.

In opening for the State Prosecutor Reger recited the story of the crime. He told the jury of the elopement of the prisoner and Dipaolo and of their subsequent return to this place, where they lived apart until the day of the murder, when Dipaolo went to the woman's boarding-house and found her alone.

He said Dipaolo was found on the rear portico of the boarding-house and the accused confessed she had killed him.

The most damaging evidence was by three girls, Francesco Alicio, Jesafino Dipaolo and Leonara Sariano, who were friends of the accused. When she had returned from her conference with Dipaolo, with the Dipaolo, these friends met her at the house of Filimino Conde. They asked why she had gone with a married man and she replied that he had promised her that he would get a divorce from his wife and marry her. "But," said the woman, "I do not want any one to mix up in this matter. He has done this thing to me and I will kill him. I do not want any one to intertere."

The defense endeavored to show that the word used by the defendant in this conversation meant "ruin" and not "kill," but the witnesses held to their statement.

A number of witnesses testified to seeing Dipaolo and the accused woman together a number of times on the day they were seen in the buggy and several weeks previous to the shooting, and Miss Jessamine Burd, a clerk in the Somerville postoffice, described an agitated conversation between the two in the postoffice the day previous to the killing.

Dipaolo entered the postoffice first and was followed by the woman. They remained there about twenty minutes in earnest conversation.

Prosecutor John F. Reger asserted in his opening that the motive of the killing was jealousy of Dipaolo's wife, who engendered hatred. The testimony of the witnesses, showing the relations of Dipaolo and the prisoner, evidently was to bring out this phase of the case.

Several testified to hearing the shots, and Policeman Robert Henderson told how he found the dying man on the porch of the Warwick house, on Mechanic street. He went after the defendant, and when he took her into custody she told him that she had shot the man and gave the policeman the revolver with which she shot him. She carried it in the bosom of her waist.

HOW HUGHEY LAMB FELL BEFORE CITY TEMPTATIONS.

Hughey Lamb came down from Alton Tuesday to testify on Dave Dunn's side in the case Sim Lambert brought against him in the District Court for money Sim says Dave owes for the hire of ice-cutting tools and salt hay last winter. Hughey visited all the taverns and renewed old acquaintances with overbalancing results. But Hughey held fast to his duty by Dave and he was in court when the case opened, and responded loyally to his name.

Counsellor Swackhamer, Dave's lawyer, asked Hughey two questions and then he guessed he wouldn't bother with him any more. Hughey couldn't understand the briefness of his service and the reason and he wondered, out loud, until the court ordered him suppressed. Hughey kept quiet for a time, but a question aroused him and he cried his protests.

When Sergeant at Arms Hand fell on Hughey and the noise of his descent down the stairs leading to the street broke up the court. The Sergeant at Arms telephoned for a policeman and Patrolman Charles Flynn was sent to shoo Hughey back to Alton. Hughey pleaded pathetically for a nickel. "Will you beat it or do you want to go with me?" sternly asked the bluecoat.

"'Ca' beat it 'nout nickel," said Hughey with a lovely smile, "'Slides, do' wan' leave, cons'ble."

The cons'ble took him along.

C. B. MORGAN WINS CUP

Captures Golf Committee Trophy at the Plainfield Country Club.

CHAS. A. STOVER SECOND

Charles A. Reed Gets the Hydewood Cup at the Park Golf Club—The Scores.

C. B. Morgan won the Golf Committee cup at the Plainfield Country Club, on Saturday, although he failed to score any additional points for the trophy. His total number of points, 144½, held him safe and neither Charles A. Stover and Arthur Murphy, who were a close second and third were able to overtake him, in fact they did not get among the low scores in the final competition for this cup. This is Mr. Morgan's first win for the cup, although last year he finished almost near first place. He has played a steady and consistent game throughout the season and improved over last year's work.

The competition for the Golf Committee cup has excited more than the usual interest this season and each Saturday there has been an increased number of contestants. On Saturday, Edward T. Wilde led with 106 net points with a score of 66. He had the fat handicap of 24 to help him. Henry D. Hibbard finished second with an 83, while five players tied for third place with a score of 84 giving each one fifth of a point. The best scores:

Edward T. Wilson, 90, 24—66; Henry D. Hibbard, 88, 5—83; Alexander Gilbert, 111, 27—84; L. A. Chase, 93, 9—84; S. D. Lounsbery, 91, 7—84; J. A. Lane, 95, 11—84; Morris J. Dumont, 91, 7—84.

In the consolation for the October Handicap cup, between J. A. Lane and Frank O. Reinhart, the former won with a score of 84. Reinhart did not play his usual strong game, while Lane was in the best of form.

There was real rivalry at the Park Golf Club on Saturday when the final play for the Hydewood cup, October competition, was scheduled. Charles A. Reed was the winner with a net score of 85, scoring five points which gave him a total of ten. He won in the seventeen hole play and failed to secure any additional ones until the final play. There were three players tied for second place with nine points—John L. Watson, Leon R. Thurlow and Miss Lyda Loiseaux.

These scores were returned from the President's, Club and Hydewood cups:

Charles A. Reed, 92, 7—85; Miss Lyda Loiseaux, 105, 16—89; Rev. Dr. H. C. Carrier, 108, 16—92; Geo. A. Chapman, 110, 18—92; Leon R. Thurlow, 103, 9—94; Rev. C. L. Goodrich, 106, 9—97; Alexander Gilbert, 119, 21—98; A. W. Kenworthy, 112, 13—99; John L. Watson, 113, 15—100; D. H. Rowland, 110, 10—100.

Mr. Reed also scored three points for the President's cup and an equal number of points for the club trophy, while Dr. Carroll and Mr. Chapman divided second honors for the handicap cup, and Mr. Thurlow won second honors and Mr. Goodrich third honors for the scratch trophy. The play for the President's and Club cups will be concluded with the competition on Saturday and Election day.

MISS WEBSTER'S BEQUEST.

Executors Have Not Yet Formed Plans for Discharging It.

Joseph B. Coward, one of the two executors of Catherine Webster's will, said this morning that plans for carrying out her bequest for the establishment of a home for aged women had not yet been formed. Most of Miss Webster's household goods, Mr. Coward said, were to be turned over to the home.

It has been learned on good authority that the home will most likely be established in the old Webster home on Watchung avenue. The executors will arrange to carry out the dead woman's wishes regarding it without delay.

NEWARK MEN WON.

Local Scribes' Reputation As Pin-Smashers Not Upheld.

A bowling aggregation culled from the ranks of local newspapermen matched pin-smashing proclivities with the Newark News team, Saturday night, and went down in defeat. The Essex county scribes were not in exceptionally good form, but they capped two games with comfortable majorities. The contest took place on Snedeker's alleys and was witnessed by a large gallery. At its close the vanquished stood for a turkey dinner for all hands at Timbo's. A return match will be played at Newark next week. The scores:

PICK FOWLER TO WIN

G. O. P. Will Surely Elect Its Assembly Ticket In Union and Somerset Counties.

The liveliest days of the political campaign in New Jersey began today. Leaders of all the parties will put in their hardest work until next Saturday evening when the campaign will be practically closed. There will be little done the following Monday, and Tuesday, November 6, will be election day.

Indications at this time, it is said by Republicans, point strongly to a Republican victory. Inside reports received from all of the counties tend to show that the administration party is in good shape and that there is no change in public sentiment towards the new Democratic party. This election is an important one for an off year, because of the fact that ten Congressmen and a United States Senator will be chosen, the latter by the Legislature comprising several hold-over Senators.

The Congressional campaign is interesting because the people of New Jersey are greatly concerned in sending to Washington men who are to be relied upon in the matter of tariff. The people are in favor of the "stand pat" policy of Senator Dryden and other Republican leaders.

Republican Forecast.

In the First District Henry C. Loudenslager will be re-elected for the eighth time. His Democratic opponent is Daaniel V. Summerhill.

In the Second District, "Old Brains," John J. Gardner, will also be re-elected over his Democratic nominee, Samuel E. Perry.

The Third District will re-elect Benjamin V. Howell over David Harvey, Jr., the Democrat.

Senator Dryden Safe.

Senator John Fort Dryden is sure to be elected by his own successor unless the entirely unexpected happens and a Democratic majority is elected to the Legislature. Democratic control of the Legislature, however, cannot be figured out at this time. The party is badly disorganized in all parts of the State, while on the other hand the Republicans are in good shape everywhere and have behind them the pledges of support of the Colbyites who were so overwhelmingly defeated at the late primaries.

Six State Senators and sixty Assemblymen are to be elected to the Legislature. Fifteen Senators hold over. There are eighty-one members of the Legislature. Forty-one votes in a joint meeting are a majority and will elect the United States Senator.

The Republicans are practically certain of electing three, and in all probability, four new Senators. This will leave the present political complexion of the upper house unchanged.

The Republicans will also elect the following Assemblymen, unless all signs fail: Atlantic, 1; Bergen, 2; Burlington, 3; Camden, 3; Cape May, 1; Cumberland, 2; Gloucester, 1; Mercer, 3; Middlesex, 3; Morris, 2; Ocean, 1; Salem, 1; Somerset, 1; Union, 4; Warren, 1. The votes of the Colbyites are treacherous, 11 in Essex County, thus giving the party 54 votes on the joint ballot. Even without Essex the party would have a joint vote of 43.

Ira W. Wood will win again in the Fourth District, although the Democrats are making a strong fight for the success of Allan Southwick.

In the Fifth District the candidates are the same as in 1904, Charles N. Fowler, Republican, and James E. Martine, Democrat. Mr. Fowler will win by a greatly reduced majority over his last campaign. The labor vote appears to be for Martine.

The Sixth District will probably re-elect the Democrat now holding the office, William Hughes, although the Republican nominee, George H. Burke, is making a strong fight.

The Seventh District will return Congressman R. Wayne Parker for another term. His Democratic opponent is Dr. Charles F. Kramer.

Henry J. Gottlob, a strong labor man, has been nominated by the Republicans of the Eighth District and he will win there over Le Gage Pratt, the Democratic nominee.

The Ninth District is very close and no one is taking any chances on predicting either the success of Eugene Kinkead, the Democratic nominee, or of Charles E. Prickett, the Republican.

In the Tenth District Howard B. Cruse, the Republican nominee, is lively to lose to James Hamill, the Democratic candidate. Mr. Hamill is immensely popular in the district. He was Democratic leader in the House of Assembly two years ago and made a good record for himself in other Legislatures.

Will Visit the Churches.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, editor of The Sabbath Recorder, has gone West on a six weeks' trip among the denominational churches and to attend several conferences. The first conference will be held at Gent, Arkansas. He will also visit churches in the South.

UNION TAKEN BY MARTINE

way by 196, that municipality as well going over to the Democratic camp. Plainfield gave Fowler 663 majority and Summit gave him 212. Westfield stood by the G. O. P., giving its congressional nominee 257 votes more than his opponent.

The Elizabethan carried Cranford township, Union township, Fanwood borough, Garwood, Linden borough, Linden township, Mountainside borough, New Providence borough, Roselle borough, Roselle Park borough and Springfield township.

Clark township and New Providence township went for Martine.

According to the latest and most reliable returns at hand, James E. Martine, the Democratic Congressional candidate, has carried Union county.

Mr. Martine's plurality is less than half a hundred votes. The Democrats are jubilant, however, as small the majority may be for this is the first time they have carried the county in a Congressional fight since John T. Dunn was elected.

All morning long, there was serious question as to which of the candidates had won out so close was the vote. But when Roselle Park borough was heard from finally, Fowler's fate was settled. The Elizabethan had been routed in his own county—Union—which is a Republican bulwark.

Mr. Martine's plurality is 40 in the entire county.

FOWLER IS RETURNED; MORRIS CO. SAVES HIM

Martine, Democrat, was defeated by Fowler, Republican, in the Fifth Congressional district by about 1,000 plurality. Two years ago Fowler defeated him by 5,000 majority. Warren county, a Democratic stronghold, caused the defeat of its own candidate yesterday.

Letter from Mr. Martine.

To the Voters of the Fifth Congressional District:

From indications at hand it would seem that I have been defeated in this contest. To my friends I have the most kindly feelings and the warmest thanks. To my enemies I ask no sympathy or quarter. My fight was waged with all the earnestness of my nature. I have done nothing of which I am ashamed. I fought to win. I have no personal regrets. I would fight the battle over again from the same platform and for the same principles. As I have often said, defeat has never crushed a truth or annihilated a principle.

Respectfully,

J. E. MARTINE.

SOMERSET IS REPUBLICAN

Wood's Majority About 1,000 and Smalley's About 850.

A clean sweep was scored by the Republican party at the election in Somerset county yesterday. That not a great amount of interest was manifested is indicated by the very light vote cast. With a number of country districts to be heard from Ira W. Wood has more than 1,000 majority over his Democratic opponent, J. Allen Southwick, for member of Congress. It is not expected that the districts to be heard from will materially change the figures. William W. Smalley, of Bound Brook, was elected *member of Assembly over his Demo*cratic opponent, former Prosecutor William V. Steele, by nearly 850 majority. Meagre returns make it impossible to give the total vote accurately.

The resolution, which does away with the present Board of Chosen Freeholders and constitutes a commission for the county government, is believed to have been carried. The resolution was carried in North Plainfield borough and Bridgewater township, but the country districts voted against it, but not enough to defeat the measure, it is said. The result will not be known definitely until the complete returns are filed.

Whether the Board of Freeholders will be Democratic or Republican is in doubt. With Montgomery township to hear from the board stands five Republicans and five Democrats. Walter M. Vreeland, Republican, of that township, was a candidate for re-election.

Majorities received by Smalley (R.) for Assembly are: Bridgewater, 1st, 46; 3d, 42; 4th and 5th, 124; 4th, 101; 6th, 26; Branchburg, 9; Bound Brook, 189; Franklin, 3d, 84; Hillsborough, 2d, 74; Millstone, 24.

Majorities for Steele (D.) are: Bernards, 102; Bedminster, 186, Warren, 146.

Majorities for Wood, Congress: Branchburg, 11; Bridgewater, 1st, 87; 2d, 79; 4th, 130; 6th, 8; Hillsborough, 2d, 74.

FANWOOD TOWNSHIP GOES FOR MARTINE.

Republican Stronghold Gives the Farmer-Orator Five More Votes Than Fowler.

Fanwood township, which is strongly Republican, gave Martine five majority over Fowler. The rest of the Republican ticket went through with its usual decisive majority. The Bishops' law, the effect of which was felt strongly in Scotch Plains, helped the Republican Assembly candidates.

The total vote was 279. Perkins got a plurality of 32; Moxon, 34; Tillman, 36. Lafburrow, for coroner, got a plurality of 40. George H. Johnston, Republican nominee for assessor, defeated Charles H. French, the Democratic candidate, by one of the largest majorities rolled up by a candidate in the township in several years. Johnston's majority was 64. The increase in taxes had much to do with burying French.

The vote in detail:

For Congress, Martine, D., 140; Fowler, R., 135; for Assembly, Perkins, R., 153; Moxon, R., 153; Tillman, R., 155; Desmond, D., 121; Hague, D., 119; Coulter, D., 119; for coroner, Lafburrow, R., 157; Wagner, D., 117; for freeholder, Robinson, R. (unopposed), 165; for township committee, Walker, R. (unopposed), 160; for assessor, Johnston, R., 170; French, D., 106; for collector, John E. Hatfield (on both tickets), 275, 275; for justice of the peace, Haberley, D., 123; for constable, Spicer, R., 152; Pangborn, D., 123; for surveyors of highways, Schaffer, R., 156; Hall, 155; Lee, D., 124; Scudder, D., 121; for poundkeepers, Mair, R., 156; Ryno, D., 121; Lee, D., 120.

Sesame Club Meeting.

The Sesame Club will meet tomorrow morning at the residence of Mrs Corlell, No. 1200 Denmark road.

BOROUGH FAST IN LINE

Republicans Hold Opponents Tightly in Unexciting Contest.

There may have been quieter elections in the ancient days of North Plainfield, when it was a part of Warren county, but if there was even one in the modern history of the borough the oldest inhabitant couldn't remember it. In the fashion of the day, the Republicans won handily. The total vote was 721, less than half the number registered, which was 1,459.

Wood, the Republican candidate for re-election to Congress, got a plurality of 263 over Southwick, his total vote being 466. Smalley, for Assembly, defeated Steele, his Democratic opponent, by 452 to 223, a plurality of 229. Wild, the Republican candidate for coroner, secured 457 votes to Bowers' 269, a plurality of 200. VanArsdale and Waldron, the Republican councilmanic candidates, got 475 and 272 respectively, against 203 and 201 for Bird and Ludlow.

Comparatively few people neglected to vote on the question of abolishing the Board of Freeholders, and an overwhelming sentiment in favor of the proposition was registered. In a total of 543 votes, 491 yeas were cast and 62 nays.

The balloting was absolutely without incident. So little interest was manifested in the result after the polls closed that memories of two or three recent election nights in the borough seemed very unreal.

The vote:

First district—Total votes, 367; (724 registered); For Congress, Wood, R., 251; Southwick, D., 96; Lunger, P., 15; Sinclair, S., 2; Wolf, S. L., 1. For Assembly, Smalley, R., 236; Steele, D., 113; Brown, P., 14. For Coroner, Wild, R., 238; Bowers, D., 94; Murphy, P., 12. For Council, VanArsdale, R., 257; Waldron, R., 254; Bird, D., 94; Ludlow, D., 94. For Justice of the Peace, King, R., 257; Smalley, D., 95. On Abolition of Board of Freeholders, yes, 236; no, 47.

Second district—Total votes, 354 (735 registered). For Congress, Wood, R., 215; Southwick, D., 107; Lunger, P., 24; Sinclair, S., 1; Wolf, S. L., 4. For Assembly, Smalley, R., 216; Steele, D., 110; Brown, P., 21. For Coroner, Wild, R., 219; Bowers, D., 106; Murphy, P., 21. For Council, VanArsdale, R., 218; Waldron, R., 218; Bird, D., 108; Ludlow, D., 107. For Justice of the Peace, King, R., 212; Smalley, D., 134. For Abolition of Board of Freeholders, yes, 215; no, 45.

JUNIORS ENTERTAIN.

Music, Humor and Magic Enjoyed by Large Audience.

A large audience enjoyed the entertainment of Plainfield Council, No. 293, Jr. O. U. A. M., at Y. M. C. A. Hall last night. Clever professionals filled most of the numbers.

The programme included music by M. A. Korff's five-piece orchestra, with the versatile Dr. Buchanan at the bass viol; monologues by S. V. Sanford; ventriloquism by Dan J. Harrington, and magic by H. Warren Rankin. The numbers were all delightful, and the audience was not sparing of its applause.

At the close of part one, Rev. E. E. Roberson, pastor of Monroe Avenue *M. E. church, delivered a brief ad*dress. The hall was handsomely decorated with flags and the insignia of the order. The committee in charge was made up of E. E. Smith, H. H. Webb, P. H. Bennett, B. H. Crataley, Julius G. Williams, William Richards, Ernest Crow and Fred Sebring.

Sayings of Sanford.

Sanford Robinson, to whom most of the success of the Fowler campaign in the Fifth Congressional district is due, says that "the reason Martine was defeated was that he had poor press agents." That of course will be accepted as final.

PLAINFIELD HITS FOWLER

Congressman's Majority Less Than One-half That Given G. O. P. Assembly Candidates.

MARTINE RUNS WELL

Plainfield Administered a good spanking to Congressman Fowler yesterday for playing "hookey," but it decided to send him back to "school" instead of making him start out in the world for himself. After listening to the monitor, James E. Martine, who was egged-on by the Democrats, the voters decided by a majority of 663 to send the Republican candidate back to answer roll calls. Two years ago, Plainfield gave him a ma*jority of 812 as against* Martine and four years ago approximately 1,700 as against DeWitt C. Flanagan.

Fowler was badly cut in every district in the city with the exception of the First district of the First ward. He got less than half the majority given his colleagues who were running for Assembly, but he got there just the same, so what's the difference? The average majority for the G. O. P. Assemblyman here was approximately 1,487. This is a trifle above the normal majority of the party. The Bishops' bill did it, for Plainfield favors stringent excise regulations.

As a rule the Republican municipal candidates make good runs. Of course the coroner is always the high man on the ticket and yesterday's election proved no exception to the rule. Charles Joel Fisk, for mayor, and John W. Murray, Jr., for tax collector, were on both tickets, the Democrats having endorsed the G. O. P. selections. Murray beat Fisk in the race by about thirty odd votes Woodhull, for school director, and Doane, for freeholder, were the second and third highest respectively.

James E. Martine was given a fine complimentary vote by his fellow townsmen. Lack of organization in the local Democracy was largely responsible, however, for the size of the majority by his opponent. That the labor vote did not cut so much figure in some districts as was expected may be seen by a glance at the tables published in another column. But nevertheless many union men did cast a ballot for the Plainfielder. In most all the districts the Colbyites voted straight tickets, which is also evident on the face of the returns. The colored men voted solidly for Fowler.

Somewhat of a surprise was caused by the fact that Martine swept two districts in the city. He carried away the Second of the Third ward and the Third of the Fourth ward. Organized labor made itself effective in these two districts. The Third district of the First ward was the banner one for Fowler, he receiving a majority of 182 there—that's over one-fourth of his total majority in the city. The First district of the Third ward was a close second, giving him a 173 majority.

The majorities obtained by Mr. Fowler in the other districts were: Second of First, 51; Second ward, 96 and 39; first two of Fourth, 73 and 59. Martine received five majority in the Second of the Third and in the Third of the Fourth. Total vote in city—Fowler, 1,948; Martine, 1,285. Total vote in 1904—Fowler, 2,298; Martine, 1,386. Majorities, 1906—663; 1904—912.

In the Assembly fight it was significant that Tillman was the high man on the Republican ticket. He received 2,360 votes; Perkins and Moxon about eighteen less. Desmond, Democrat, got a little advantage by being a labor candidate. He was high man on the minority ticket, getting 873 votes, while Coulter and Hague got a few less.

The Councilmanic figures are interesting. Tolles, R., was cut a bit in the First district of his ward, the First. Hibbard, R., made an excellent run in both districts of the Second ward, receiving 418 votes. Tolles got 251. In the Third ward Tyler was given a fine send-off. He was high man in his First district. Despite threatened cuts, Randolph did splendidly in the Fourth ward.

KILLED BY TROLLEY CAR

Charles La Tourette, of This City, Falls From Van Seat at Elizabeth.

DEATH INSTANTANEOUS

Had Evidently Been Asleep—Leaves Mother and Brother Who Live at Peapack.

Charles Latourette, who resided either in the city or borough for many years, was killed in Elizabeth shortly after 11 o'clock, last night, by falling from the seat of a van, which he was driving, directly in the path of a trolley car. He had barely landed on the ground when the car struck him and rolled his body over and over. When the motorman was able to bring the conveyance to a stop and passengers helped him extricate the form, it was found that life was extinct. A physician who was called declared that death was instantaneous.

Latourette was thirty-two years old and unmarried and resided until a short time ago with his mother at 340 East Third street. He was a telegrapher by occupation but seldom followed it up. Last week he secured a position with Robert Woodruff, Jr., the Westfield storage man, and was put at work driving one of his furniture vans.

He was sent out last night with a load of goods for Newark and when he reached Elizabeth had evidently fallen asleep. Several persons noticed the vehicle with the driver in a recumbent position but the horses were going along as though they knew the road. At North Broad and Mary streets, Latourette suddenly lurched sideways and dropped on the trolley tracks, the vehicle having been very close to the outer rail. A swiftly moving trolley car was close by and he was struck probably before he was fully awake.

The body was removed to Stiner's morgue and County Physician Westcott afterward gave a permit for burial. The motorman and conductor were arrested as a matter of form and were later released in the custody of a trolley official. So far as is known, Latourette's only relatives are his mother and a brother, both of whom now reside at Peapack.

HOWARD HUNTINGTON WINS HONORS AT P. C. C.

FIRST ROUND FOR THE CONSOLATION CUP AN EVENT OF INTEREST.

In the first round for the Golf Committee consolation cup at the Plainfield Country Club, on Saturday's match play, Edward T. Wilson beat Stuart H. Patterson, 3 up and 1 to play; E. E. Iremonger beat Dudley H. Barrows, by default; Charles A. Reed beat Edward J. Patterson, 4 up and 2 to play, and L. A. Chase beat E. B. Shoemaker, 3 up.

The second round will be played tomorrow and will be concluded on Saturday. There was also the initial play on Saturday for the November cup, similar competition to that of the October cup, the winner being determined by the best average score for the month. These competitions have been very popular and full of interest.

The scores returned on Saturday were as follows: Howard Huntington, 94, 15—79; C. B. Morgan, 83, 2—81; Charles A. Stover, 88, 7—81; Arthur Murphy, 96, 7—89; George E. Cathcart, 109, 18—91.

The schedule for tomorrow includes play for the November and Election Day cups, as well as consultation for the consolation cups, while the play for the inconsolables' cup will also be started and continued throughout the month.

There was a large field out on Saturday, the beautiful weather being ideal for the game. There were a number who did not enter any special competition but just played the game for the fun of it. The clubhouse was also the scene of much activity throughout the afternoon and evening, and the usual features were greatly enjoyed and refreshments were served.

Not Many Complaints.

The Union County Board of Taxation is somewhat surprised by the small number of complaints received from taxpayers regarding their assessments under the new law. The law provides that complaints must be made in writing, and a large number of taxpayers whose increase in taxes amounts to but a few dollars consider it hardly worth while to complain. Of course, there are some complaints, but there is not the strenuous kicking seen under the old law, when taxpayers were obliged to go before commissioners of appeal.

Congregational Conference.

An important conference of the Congregational churches from this part of New Jersey will be held at Chatham on Thursday, and the local church will be well represented. In connection with that conference, there will be a session of the Congregational Union, of which Rev. C. L. Goodrich, of this city, is the president.

DEADLY BOA CONSTRICTOR CAUSES PANIC IN A CAR

Giant Reptile Escapes from Case and Prisoner Passengers Fight to Escape—Snake Finally Subdued by Tamer.

Elgin, Ill.—A huge boa constrictor loose in the express compartment of an interurban car en route from this city to Geneva created a panic among nine prisoners in the compartment under escort of Chief of Police James Younger and officers from this city and was followed by a battle with the prisoners who endeavored to escape.

Harry Thorne, one of the prisoners, narrowly escaped death by the reptile. The python was one of a collection of snakes in three cases being shipped to Joliet, where a street fair is in progress.

Shortly after the car started from Elgin Officer Higgins was disturbed by a movement of the lid of a box on which he was seated. Rising to discover the cause of the trouble he was amazed at the appearance of the head of an enormous snake gradually forcing its way from the interior of the case.

The snake was observed by some of the prisoners at the same time and a general rush was made for the car door. Here the other police officers, headed by Chief Younger, held the men at bay.

A few minutes later the snake stretched its length of 14 feet on the floor of the car. In an instant it had clasped Harry Thorne within its coils. The giant reptile tightened on the unfortunate man and was slowly crushing him when the owner of the snake appeared in the compartment, attracted from another portion of the car by the commotion.

With the assistance of several men the snake was forced to uncoil and was finally urged back into its prison.

The Giant Reptile Wrapped itself Around Thorne's Body.

In the meantime the prisoners, frightened and realizing in the excitement that they would have an opportunity to get away, made strenuous but futile efforts to escape.

GHOST THAT CREATED TERROR IN A LITTLE NEW JERSEY TOWN

"Brave" Young Men of Nutley Frightened by Shrouded Spectre—Latter Meets its Waterloo at Hands of Church Sexton.

Newark, N. J.—Five miles out from this city, in the little town of Nutley, a grove of deep, overhanging elms marks the intersection of Grant and Passaic avenues. Not a house is in sight for blocks around. A gateway leads into a field across which a path takes you off into the backwoods. Few signs of civilization are visible from Grant and Passaic avenues.

Looking down through the avenue of overhanging elms in the direction of the Methodist church, one can see where the elms end and the firs begin; low, stunted fir trees with fantastic shapes and outstretched fingers which appear to reach out ready to clutch the timid passer by after dusk.

It is an ideal lurking place for a ghost.

So, at least, thought Elsie Symonds, daughter of George Symonds, the civil engineer, and her brother Royal, Royal is 15. There is only a year or so difference between his age and his sister's, and this, combined with the necessity of living in the suburbs somewhat off the beaten path, made excellent chums of them, always eager for the excitement which rarely came to Nutley, and always ready to invent a new amusement when things got fearfully slow.

Returning to the intersection of Grant and Passaic avenues; it did not take Miss Elsie and Brother Royal very long to notice this as an ideal lurking place for a ghost and to decide *that the spot was worth develop*ing. Their home is not far away from there. It is the nearest house to the corner, in fact, so the children had every opportunity to carry out their plans without much fear of detection.

First it was only a simple little ghost story they told. Royal supplying the curdles, about a wild, flapping specter that moaned and shrieked, somewhere down near the stunted firs.

That was several weeks ago. Nobody else had seen the ghost, and the story didn't make the slightest impression, even in Nutley, at first.

A few nights later two young men belonging to that race which above all others feeds upon superstition, came across the path in the field leading from the backwoods, passed through the gateway and thence down through the grove of overhanging elms toward the stunted firs.

"An' so Ah says," one of them was saying, "'Mist' Small,' Ah says, 'Ah can't see why yo' *carries dat rab*bit foot. She cain't do you no good, nohow, nor keep off no hoodoo. Ah done come to de exclusion dere ain't no such thing, no way, as a'—hoo-oo—oo—Lordy!"

The two young men had fled in terror. Not three feet from where they had stopped, turned tail and vanished, stood a ghost. It was medium height, very shapely, and dressed in white. The draped arms flapped somewhat mechanically as the ghost turned from side to side to the accompaniment of most curdling croaks.

Presently the ghost grew tired of flapping its arms. The two negroes were miles away, maybe, and probably still going. Silence reigned again in the vicinity of the stunted fir.

But it wasn't for very long. Whistling gayly as he strode along, came one of Nutley's most prominent young unmarried men.

Somewhere in the dark shadow of the fir something seemed to whisper to something else that it was Mr. So-and-So on his way to call on Miss Sew-and-Sew.

"Yes," it or the two somethings in the shade seemed to say in unison, "let's see what happens to him."

The ghost arms flapped excitedly and Mr. Sound-So stopped whistling and sank down. Then he sat up and yelled once—twice. Then he, too, vanished in the wake of the presumably, still running colored men.

Silence was restored once more in the vicinity of the firs and overhanging elms. Half a mile away Miss Sew-and-Sew sat alone in the best parlor and expected company that failed to show up.

After two evenings of this sort of thing, Nutley knew all about the Passaic avenue ghost. Some believed, others didn't. Among the latter was chief Knabb, of the Nutley police department.

On the third evening Thomas Brandreth, sexton of the Methodist church, was walking home from prayer meeting when the specter assayed to scare him. Sexton Brandreth is a good man. He sidestepped, let go with a right swing and banged the ghost in the eye. Down it went for the count, a tangled mass of white linen, bedsheets corresponding to those nice plump wire dummies on which the dressmakers fit gowns for display. Then Sexton Brandreth, after addressing a few words of advice in the direction of the stunted firs went home.

And that was the end of the Nutley ghost. Caught with the goods on them, as they made their way home that night, the two Symonds conspirators laughed at the joke they had had at the expense of some of the most prominent young people in the town. It is even safe to assert that if she only would, Miss Elsie could give a list of young men who are mortally afraid of ghosts, no matter how brave they look in daylight. But she won't tell. Neither will the victims.

Interesting Gossip from Washington by Our Special Correspondent —To Make Alcohol from Corncobs—Rare Act of Army Friendship—To Suppress Bell Ringing.

WASHINGTON.—The manufacture of alcohol may be revolutionized as the result of experiments which have been completed by the department of agriculture. The officials of the department have succeeded in making alcohol from corncobs and cornstalks at a cost so small that they believe it will prove of large commercial value and develop into a new industry. It is proposed at first to manufacture the alcohol as a by-product in connection with corn-canning factories. In investigations which the department is making at Hooperston, Ill., it has been proved that the large quantities of corncobs which every year go to waste can be converted into alcohol in sufficient quantities to justify the erection of a distilling plant.

The department sent two chemists to Hooperston to make experiments at a large cannery there. They have succeeded by simple methods of fermentation in getting a yield of 11 gallons of alcohol from a ton of green cobs and nine gallons of alcohol from a ton of green cornstalks.

A statement concerning the experiments by one of the scientists of the department reads:

"At different times during the last 25 years the department has conducted experiments along the same line, but with common field cornstalks. These tests show that there are 240 pounds of fermentable substance in a ton of green field cornstalks, which will yield about half of their weight in alcohol and alcohol. In round numbers a ton of stalks will produce 100 pounds of alcohol or 200 pounds of proof spirits. As a gallon of alcohol weighs nearly seven pounds, there should be 15 gallons of alcohol in a ton of stalks.

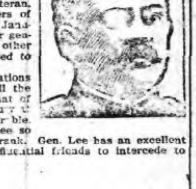
"Not only are the cobs a waste product but the irregular and spoiled ears of corn as well. Hand labor is as yet employed in the husking and all ears are put in, as the wage is based upon a measureful. As the measures of ears are emptied upon the conveyors the ears unfit for use are culled as they go by. These culled ears also are waste. The expense of bringing them to the point where they are available is such as to make the perfect ears. The addition of the corn on the cob adds further to the possibilities of alcohol obtainable from a ton of cobs and will have its influence in bringing the quantity to a greater figure."

THE SACRIFICE OF GEN. BELL.

In sacrificing promotion to the rank of major general in order that a friend may have the coveted honor, Brig. Gen. J. Franklin Bell, chief of staff of the army, has done an act unparalleled in magnanimity and generosity in American military records.

Brig. Gen. Jesse M. Lee, a civil war veteran, the only one left among the higher officers of the army, is to be retired by law early next January. There was a vacancy among the major generals when Lieut. Gen. Corbin retired the other day and Maj. Gen. MacArthur was promoted to succeed him.

Under the usual operation of the regulations Gen. Bell would have been advanced to fill the vacancy, thus giving him rank equal to that of any other officer assigned to departmental duty in Washington, a condition extremely desirable. But Bell stepped aside in favor of Gen. Lee so that the latter might retire with the higher rank. Gen. Lee has an excellent record, but has always refused to allow influential friends to intercede to hasten his promotion.



BELL RINGING MAY BE SUPPRESSED.

Shall church bells continue to peal in the national capital as in the good old times, or shall they be suppressed, is a question which the district commissioners have decided to take up for serious consideration, and all interested in the matter and con have been requested to submit their views.

The Koran says that bells hang on the trees of Paradise and are set in motion by wind from the throne of God as often as the blessed wish for music.

Many of the Christian churches of Washington have dispensed with steeple bells and are nervous although completely that the peace and comfort are disturbed by those that remain.

Commissioner MacFarland, who is himself prominent in church affairs, has taken the initiative of bringing the issue for decision. He believes the time has come to enlarge the police regulations prohibiting noises, and in those days, when a timepiece can be found in nearly every household, he can see no good reason why notice of the approach of a service in church should be given by the loud ringing of bells.

All fire alarm bells have been suppressed with the exception of one in the business section of the city, and its doom is sealed. Curfew has not rung for years in the shadow of the capitol and the commissioners will, unless the representatives of the churches can offer some unexpected good reason restrict the ringing of bells upon those edifices to strict compliance with the ritual of the churches.

STEVENS' UNAPPRECIATED PUN.

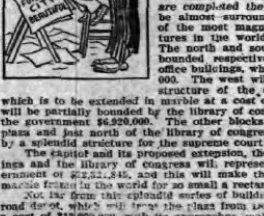
John F. Stevens, chief engineer of the Panama canal, has been in various limelights in the capital during the negotiations, but he carried his point and has been told at last to go ahead and build the kind of canal he has advocated. He is a man to carry points when he makes them. He is an ideal engineer, rugged and strong, and every motion indicates unlimited reserve power. His face is rather handsome, but determination dominates, from the thick, dark hair and heavy eyebrows to the brief, strong mustache, over lips which close like a punctuation mark when he has said his say. He missed it once, however, and told the story as though he rather enjoyed it. He was sitting on the counter in a western grocery store when a cowboy came in, and taking him for a clerk, said: "Gimme some raisins!"

There had just been a couple of impromptu hangings in the next town, and looking up without moving the young engineer asked:

"Do you want the same kind of raisin's they had over yonder?"

The next instant he was looking into the business hole in the cowboy's shooter. He says that it was as big as a cannon, and he was getting ready to slide off and hunt for raisins when the proprietor came to the rescue, begging the cowboy not to spatter up his place. He took advantage of the pause to apologize.

MAKING A "CITY BEAUTIFUL."



More than $50,000,000 is now being spent upon buildings and bridges of a public character in and around Washington, and when work already undertaken has been completed, Washington will be without a peer as a city of architectural beauty. In addition to the projects amounting to more than $50,000,000 now decided upon and under way, improvements costing an additional $26,000,000 are projected.

When the new senate and house office buildings are completed the plaza east of the capitol will be almost surrounded on its four sides by one of the most magnificent groups of public structures in the world, built of Georgia marble. The north and south sides of this plaza will be bounded respectively by the senate and house office buildings, which together are to cost $7,000,000. The west will be bounded by the imposing structure of the capitol, the eastern front of which is to be extended in marble at a cost of $1,330,000. The eastern side will be partially bounded by the library of congress building, which has cost $6,000,000, and another $2,000,000 will be spent on the capitol plaza and just north of the library of congress, will ultimately be occupied by a splendid structure for the supreme court of the United States.

The capitol and its proposed extension, the senate and house office buildings and the library of congress will represent an expenditure by the government of $22,321,845, and this will make these structures the most costly marble group in the world for so small a rectangle of foliage and grass.

Not far from this splendid series of buildings will be the new union railroad depot, which will move the plans from Jackson square on the north at a cost of $12,000,000, with its approaches, making the five structures in this vicinity cost upward of $35,000,000.

New York Financiers Converted by Wave of Religion—Big Pay Roll of City—Countess de Rilly Seeks Divorce—Big Bore Completed—Other Interesting News.

NEW YORK.—With the remarkable achievement of having converted Wall street to his credit, Rev. William Wilkinson, street preacher, has ended his labors in the financial district and will seek other fields for his evangelistic labors. While few have suspected the reformation that was going on among the men who promote trusts, water stocks and strip the fleece from the gullible lamb, it is said confidently that the work has been thorough and that Wall street has resolved to go and sin no more.

Men of millions as well as clerks, messenger boys and truckmen, went to old Trinity church to say farewell to Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, who has gained the title of "Rector of Wall Street," and he closed there one of the most remarkable missions ever known in New York or anywhere else.

For five days a week Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, who often calls himself plain "Wilkinson," has *stood at the noon hour in front of the custom-house and those of every sta*tion in life have stepped in the midst of the temples of Mammon to listen to him. Bankers, brokers and real estate men have sought him out after his services and have invited the evangelist of the street to their homes. They have taken him to luncheon, offered him the use of their offices and have done everything possible to help him.

Chief among those who have accorded recognition to the missionary is James Stillman, the president of the National City bank and one of the leaders of finance.

Following the lead of Mr. Stillman, others in the street did all they could to accord to the evangelist recognition and support. Hundreds of the most prominent in the commercial and the financial worlds, now count themselves his parishioners. Protestants, Roman Catholics and Jews are all the same to him, and on his "attendance committee" the "Rector of Wall Street" has representatives of all races and all creeds.

Few who saw Rev. Mr. Wilkinson begin his missionary labors in the street would have believed that he would have obtained such a following. Those who are familiar with evangelistic work thought that he could not have chosen a less promising field, but in less than a week he had all Wall street listening to him. There is nothing of the hackneyed revivalist in his methods of preaching, and all his appeals were directed to reason and to the higher ideals of men.

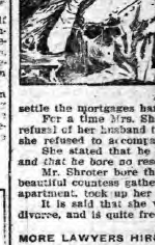
CITY PAYS MILLIONS TO EMPLOYES.

The city of New York has $9,948 employes on its pay roll. The total pay roll is $57,958,253.13. This fact appears from a report submitted to the board of estimate by the commission named by the mayor early in the year to reclassify and regrade all the employes in the city departments. The commission was composed of Joseph Haag, secretary of the board, and the various secretaries of the members of the board of estimate.

The report of the commission shows that the slackest sort of methods prevail in the establishing of titles and in the correspondence of the titles to the civil service regulations. The commission reports that the same position and grades have been created by the same departments several times since January 1, 1902, and that the titles created do not in many instances correspond exactly with the titles used in the civil service regulations, thereby creating much confusion.

Different salaries are being paid to persons holding the same title and performing the same grade of work. A general reclassification and regrading of the places of all departments is recommended, one of these being a chemist for the finance department at $3,000 a year. The corporation counsel wants a first assistant at $12,000 a year, four assistants at $10,000 a year, two junior assistants at $2,550 and two at $2,250. The commissioners of accounts want a chief engineer at $6,000 and an examining engineer at $3,500.

COUNTESS TIRES OF SECOND HUSBAND.



Countess Eugenia De Rilly, otherwise known as Mrs. George Shroter and presently the wife of George Shroter, mining expert of Denver, Col., has left Mr. Shroter and is about to appeal to the courts for a divorce.

The former countess left Mr. Shroter because he refused to spend his good money to redeem the de Rilly estate. The de Rilly properties and titles are regarded as an asset by the government of Greece, and in the courts, taking the official view of the case, had mortgaged them to the limit.

Countess de Rilly began a suit for divorce some little time ago in this city. The count did not contest and a decree was granted the countess married Mr. Shroter.

According to the countess, Shroter is of noble birth and could have a German title if he cared to pay for it. Also according to the countess, Mr. Shroter refused to buy a German title or to settle the mortgages hanging over the de Rilly estate in Greece.

For a time Mrs. Shroter bore her tribulations in silence, but finally the refusal of her husband to buy anything in the way of a title angered her and she refused to accompany him about town.

She stated that he ate like a pig. That his "form" was distinctly bad, and that he bore no resemblance to a gentleman.

Mr. Shroter was then given a title and then there followed a scene. The beautiful countess gathered up her dainty skirts and, leaving her magnificent apartment, took up her residence at the Hotel Seville.

It is said that she will remain there until she has made application for divorce, and is quite free to look for another title and some money.

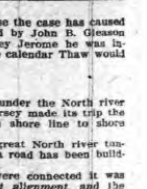
MORE LAWYERS HIRED FOR THAW.

Two additional lawyers have been retained for the defense of Harry Thaw. The lawyers are John H. Iselin and Howard S. Gans. The latter was formerly an assistant under District Attorney Jerome.

Gans and Iselin will be associated with "Cliff" Hartridge in the defense of Thaw. Mr. Iselin stated that it had not yet been decided who would conduct Thaw's defense at the trial. He admitted that David T. Watson, of Pittsburg, would be retained as an advisory counsel.

A notice of motion has been served on Assistant District Attorney Garvin by counsel for Thaw that in the supreme court, they would make a motion for the removal of the indictment for murder in the first degree against Thaw from the court of general sessions to the supreme court.

Accompanying the notice were two affidavits signed by Thaw's counsel. One by Hartridge is to the effect that his client wants a speedy trial because the case has caused widespread discussion. The second affidavit is signed by John B. Gleason and states that in a recent talk with District Attorney Jerome he was informed that owing to the large number of cases on the calendar Thaw would not be tried until the middle of November.



BORE UNDER NORTH RIVER COMPLETED.

The first train to run under the North river from New York to New Jersey made its trip the other day, 6,000 feet from shore line to shore line.

The two ends of the great North river tunnel which the Pennsylvania road has been building were brought together.

When the two ends were connected it was found they met in perfect alignment, and the most sanguine anticipations of the engineers in charge of the work were realized. Indeed, it might be said that the anticipations were more than realized, for the running of the first train took place just one year ahead of scheduled time.

The rapidity of the construction work is all the more remarkable because of the unforeseen obstacles that were encountered as the work progressed. The divergent rock and soil formations through which the tunnel had to be carried were responsible for much unlooked-for trouble, together with dangers encountered through the piercing of gas pockets and other natural hindrances.

There still remains much detail work to be accomplished, and it will be a long time still before the long tubes are ready for the regular traffic of the road, but the tunnel is an accomplished fact. For the first time a man can walk dry shod from Jersey to Manhattan.

The work has been under the personal direction of Charles M. Jacobs, chief engineer. It is said of him that he has had to do with the building of more tunnels than any man now living. His principal assistant was James Forde.

Old Photographs.

There are few homes which have not numerous old photographs too precious to be thrown away, yet of interest to few besides the immediate family. These generally take up too much space to keep where they can be got conveniently and so are carefully put in boxes in the storeroom or aaatic to be kept from the dust. So when one would gladly pass a few moments looking on the familiar faces and scenes, alas, it is too much trouble to get them out! Here is one solution of the problem; Put the photographs in clear hot water, and in a short time the pictures can be easily removed from the cards. When drying, either trim down the pictures (to economize space) or cut away the background entirely. The last requires care, but can be done without destroying the outline Mount these in a scrapbook, or, better still, a book made especially for kodak pictures.

PLAINFIELD LIBRARY NOTES WITH THE TRADES UNIONIST

JANE'S VISIT TO THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

A Theme on the Public Library Written by a Member of the Library's Apprentice Class.

Jane—like Howell's "Lady of the Aroostook"—wanted to know," so one beautiful morning in early October, she went forth to the place she especially wished to know about.—The Free Public Library of the town she dwelt in. Pleasantly situated, a short distance from the business portion, on one of the main thoroughfares, with a beautiful little park, directly at its back and the fashionable "Inn" by its side, it had long been known as the dispensor of the best.

Here came the energetic workers of the Monday Afternoon Club for material on their yearly topics, members of the Missionary Societies, intent on learning about the distant lands to which they contributed for the conversion of their strange inhabitants: Doctors, ministers, school teachers, the children, large and small, for whom a special alcove had set apart. Persons in short, from all walks of life, came to take away books on subjects as various as their occupations.

On this particular morning, however, the building took upon itself a new aspect. For she had persuaded the librarian to enroll her as a member in the small apprentice class which she was in the habit of training every year. So upon entering the place this time she used her eyes and ears. This is what she saw;—A red brick building, evidently built for the purpose, with the name over the door in gilt letters of the donor. A wide hall led from this door, on whose right were the librarian's private office, and a work room; on the left, a large well lighted reception room. The hall terminated in a large room the entire width of the building, well lighted, and evidently used as reading, receiving and distributing room. On the right of the room were shelves well filled with reference books, and extending across it at right angles to the beginning of the reference shelves, were two long stands filled with any quantity of current periodicals, neatly arranged each in its own compartment, while below were cupboards for back numbers.

In the centre of the room, opposite the door, leading from the hall, was a large bay-window. Here stood the newspaper stand, chairs, also a large table, while opposite the table, against the wall, was the card catalogue, which Jane noticed from a distance, stood on top, formed a sort of general index to contents of library, alphabetically arranged as to author and topics.

The left of this large room was occupied by the children's alcove, adjoining which was the bulletin board. Opposite these were the receiving and distributing desk, and back of this was a large square opening with fireproof doors leading into a three-story fire-proof "Stack." On its first floor was the library's most used circulating books; on the second, "restricted books," books of reference, and technical works of all kinds; while the third was occupied by bound periodicals and pamphlets.

The second story of the main building contained an art gallery in which quantity was evidently its motto. Beside the paintings, were fine collections of Cloisonne and the Gilbert collection of beautifully mounted butterflies. As Jane had ascended the stairs, she saw on her right a large stained glass window, containing views of celebrated scenery in the far West, the gift of a prominent townsman.

The Dewey system of classification is used, while its loan system is a modification of the Newark system. The library has several small loan libraries in connection with the public school system, another at a large manufacturing plant on the outskirts of the town. After listening to a talk from the librarian in her private office, upon the divisions, subdivisions and classifications of its contents Jane wended her way home. By this time she not only "knew" but trembled in her shoes for what was to follow, thinking even in the making of a assistant librarian the race would have to be, to the strong and strenuous, not only of mind but—body.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 12.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—Christ's Sufferings.—Its sorrows and how He bore them.—John xi, 30-35; Isa. liii, 3-5.

The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah is a prophecy of the vicarious sufferings of Christ upon the cross of Calvary. And this prophecy we have a description of the sorrows of Christ. "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." He who was the incarnate Lord, who had grown up in childhood as a "tender plant," bore in his humanity sorrows such as no one else in the world's history has ever borne. How graphic the prophet's summing up of these sorrows! "He was despised and rejected of men." No doubt this rejection of men was Christ's greatest sorrow. "He came to His own and His own received Him not." His own nation rejected Him; the representatives and leaders in the Church, who should have received Him gladly, despised Him. What a burden this must have been for His sensitive nature to bear.

"A man of sorrows." Not one sorrow was His, but all sorrows. He experienced all the sorrows of life that He might not be a "high priest who could not be touched with a feeling of our infirmities." He was "acquainted with grief." He did not simply behold the grief of the world, but had a personal acquaintance with grief. As we see Him on His way with Mary and Martha to the sepulcher of Lazarus we have a picture of His acquaintance with grief. In sympathy with the sisters' grief "Jesus wept." But around the cross of Calvary His greatest sorrow center. In the garden of Gethsemane it was so great that He sweat drops of blood! On the cross of Calvary it was necessary that He should bear the greatest of sorrows—God's separation from Him. And in the agony of that acquaintance with grief He cried out, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?"

See, from His head, His hands, His feet,
Sorrow and love flow mingled down.
Did e'er such love and sorrow meet
Or thorns compose so rich a crown!

The saddest fact about the sorrows of Christ is that they were borne for others, for the world, for us. He had done no sin. He merited no suffering and no sorrow, yet He was wounded, bruised and afflicted. "He was wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities, and the chastisement of our peace was upon Him." That we might be pardoned of our sin and escape its penalties He gave Himself for us and as our substitute paid the penalty of sin. Willingly and cheerfully, by the grace of God, He endured all the sorrows that we might be freed from them. Do we appreciate this fact? In consequence of it have we consecrated our lives to His service? Have we accepted the loving sacrifice Christ made for us? Have we given Him rightly show our gratitude and appreciation.

Drops of grief can ne'er repay
The debt of love I owe.
Here, Lord, I give myself away;
'Tis all that I can do!

How can we do less than give ourselves to Christ, since He has so wonderfully given Himself to us!

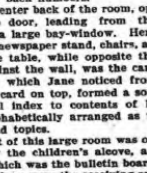
Japanese C. E. Badge.

Most foreign countries have now their own Christian Endeavor badges.



JAPANESE BADGE.

In Japan, that country which is so much in our minds in these stirring times, Christian Endeavor is making rapid progress, and the Japanese badge is becoming well known. There are as many Christian Endeavor societies in Japan as there are in Ireland.—Irish Endeavorer.

Need of Consecration.

There must be in all Endeavor work very clear and definite and decided consecration of the whole being to the service of Jesus Christ, and nothing less than that. It was a magnificent ideal, but nothing less would do. They must resign body, soul and spirit into the hands of the Master. Some people did not set the standard of their Endeavor high enough; some were so intent on having a big society. But don't let them think a big society was necessarily a strong society. The only strong society was where every member was entirely consecrated to Christ.—Christian Endeavor Times.

In China.

From the Foochow Messenger, China, we learn that three of the oldest boys of the Foochow boys' school were united with the church have on their own initiative organized a Christian Endeavor society that meets each evening after school hours. Miss Martha Wiley of the Diongloh field writes: "The Christian Endeavor societies are proving increasingly helpful in the religious life of the school. The intermediate society is a great help to the little boys."

A Lace Scarf.

When Dr. Clark visited Nottingham, England, the Endeavorers gave him as a memento of his visit an exquisite lace scarf, which he was asked to accept "for the most long suffering woman in the world." Mrs. Clark will know what lady is intended.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Nov. 12: "Forgiving One Another." Matt. xviii, 21-35. A prompt of brotherly love.

There is no surer test of the genuineness and sincerity of one's piety than this same spirit of forgiveness. It is of the very essence of godliness. The heart of the gospel lies there. Our heavenly Father forgives us and stands ever ready to repent and turn to Him. The depth of the divine nature is revealed as love. This is the desire to give and the desire to bless. Whatever has any measure of salvation has to just that extent this same nature of love and desire to confer benefits on others.

When we have been injured by another there may be a natural impulse of opposition arising from the instinct of self preservation, but if this goes to the extent of the desire to retaliate, and especially if this desire for retaliation is fostered and opportunity is sought to gratify resentment, it is certain that the spirit of godliness cannot continue in the same heart. The peace of God no longer rules there, love never replaces love, and the door is wide open for the wicked brood of evil things to come in and take up their abode. The inner condition is one of torment not so much because we have received hurt from others, but by reason of the loss of harmony with God and our fellow man.

It is one of the strange things of human nature how we deceive ourselves at this point. There are members of the church, and not a few, either, who consider themselves pretty good Christians and would stoutly resent any intimation to the contrary, who are sadly deficient on this matter. Do you not know some who have for years cherished a grudge against some one else, perhaps in the same church if not in their own family, and even refused to speak or to have any dealings with the offender, but at the same time have continued to regard themselves as somewhat more righteous than another?

There are few more miserable traits one can possess than this spirit of resentment of ill treatment. Some are always on the lookout for slights and insults, oversensitive and thin skinned. All this is not a mark of refinement and superiority as they fondly think, but the mark of a soul lacking in real nobility.

Every young person needs to take this lesson home to himself and make close analysis of his condition and watch against the first approach of this evil trait of unforgiveness. Our salvation hinges here. No activity in socials or prayer meetings, visiting the sick, giving to benevolent objects or any other class of Christian service will take the place of this. It is a solemn fact found in the words of our Saviour in this lesson that if we do not forgive others the injuries they have done us our God will not forgive us. Let no one deceive himself in this matter. You cannot be in favor with God and have the witness of the Spirit of God to your salvation and at the same time feel enmity toward any one.

Bishop William Taylor used to tell of a man whom he met at the Moody meetings in London who, for three weeks sought salvation without finding peace. This was puzzling to that master evangelist, Taylor, for the man was evidently in earnest and seemed ready to do all he was directed to do. At last Taylor said to him, "There is something you have not given up." Silence and deep thinking followed until the man, jumping up, shouted, "I've got it!" meaning forgiveness. "What was the matter?" asked Taylor. "A man wronged me foully twenty years ago, and I swore I would never forgive him. I gave up all but that, but got no peace. Finally I have let that go too. All is surrendered. I do forgive him, and, blessed be God, I know I am forgiven."

Forgive if you desire to be forgiven. Those are the terms.

A Day at a Time.

It has well been said that no man ever sank under the burden of the day. It is when tomorrow's burden is added to the burden of today that the weight is more than a man can bear. Never load yourselves so, my friends. If you find yourselves so loaded, at least remember this, it is your doing, not God's. He begs you to leave the future to him and mind the present. What more or what else could he do to take the burden off you?—George Macdonald.

Practical and Not Dreamers.

God touched men are practical men, not dreamers. They are optimistic because of spiritual insight, dominant because their souls are in touch with power, needed because sin is mighty, and the kingdom grows by "the strenuous life," sympathetic because the love of God and needs of men have moved their hearts to pity, bridled together because they have come under a common object of affection and one common cause and foe.—Rev. Dr. J. H. Davis.

He Knows.

He knows the bitter, weary way,
He knows the endless struggle day by day,
The souls that weep, the souls that pray;
He knows.

He knows how hard the fight hath been,
How clouds have come our lives between,
The wounds the world hath never seen;
He knows.

He knows when faint and worn we sink;
How deep the pain, how near the brink
Of dark despair we pause find shrink;
He knows.

He knows. Oh, thought full of bliss!
For, though our joy on earth we miss,
We still can bear the cross of this—
He knows.

The Cathedral of St. John the Divine, now under construction in New York, will, when completed, rank fourth in size among the world's cathedrals. Only St. Peter's in Rome and the cathedrals of Seville and Milan will surpass it in massiveness.

The streets of Nottingham, England, are sprinkled with water in which chloride of alcium has been dissolved and are therefore dustless. One sprinkling every three or four weeks is enough to keep them so, even in the hottest weather. The cost is very small.

Within the narrow limits of the city of London, with its mere handful of residents—only sufficient to people a small provincial town—there are still so many churches that you might worship at a different one every Sunday of the year without putting foot inside them all.

The city council of Birmingham, England, has increased the number of women health inspectors from four to twenty because of the excellent results achieved in the homes of the poor and in the factories. In the same city the policemen have been taught the principles of "first aid."

New York city consumes nearly 1,000,000,000 units of electricity per annum, while London, with nearly double the population, consumes not more than one-fourth of that amount. The consumption per head of population in New York is stated to be 282 units against only 42 per head in London.

By a somewhat primitive system the town of Thompson Fall, Mont., manages in the hottest weather to keep rooms aat a temperature 55 degrees. Wells are covered at the top, and large pipes tap the current of cold air as few feet below the surface of the ground, conveying it to different rooms in nearaby buildings.

A MAN OF LETTERS.

Rare Brevity and Beauty of Lincoln's More Notable Addresses.

Nothing would have amazed Mr. Lincoln more than to hear himself called a man of letters, and yet it would be hard to find in all literature anything to excel the brevity and beauty of his address at Gettysburg or the lofty grandeur of his second inaugural. In Europe his style has been called a model for the study and imitation of princes, while in our own country many of his phrases have already passed into the daily speech of mankind.

His gift of putting things simply and clearly was partly the habit of his own clear mind and partly the result of the training he gave himself in days of boyish poverty, when paper and ink were luxuries almost beyond his reach and the words he wished to set down must be the best words and the clearest and shortest the ideas he had in view. This training of thought before expression, of knowing exactly what he wished to say before saying it, stood him in good stead all his life, but only the mind of a great man with a lofty soul and a poet's vision, one who had suffered deeply and felt keenly, who carried the burden of a nation in his heart, whose kindness was as great as his moral purpose was strong and firm, could have written words that fell from his pen in the later years of his life. It was the life he lived, the noble aim that upheld him, as well as the genius with which he was endowed, that made him one of the greatest writers of our time.—Helen Nicolay in St. Nicholas.

ADVERTISING.

A picture advertisement to get returns must tell the story at a glance. Folks with money to spend ain't looking for puzzle pictures.

Any advertisement, like a man, must present a good first appearance, but to get the returns there must be something more than mere appearance.

Advertising is like duck hunting—you must advance carefully, shoot the right time and with the right kind of ammunition in places where there is a possibility of game.—Exchange.

RIBS BROKEN BY AUTO AS HE HURRIED HOME

SCOTT PRESS WORKS EMPLOYEE DIDN'T HEAR MACHINE APPROACH.

Hurrying across the roadway to his home at nightfall, William Emerson, an employee at the Scott shop, was struck and knocked down by an automobile, Monday, on East Fifth street, near Franklin place. Three ribs were broken.

No blame attaches to automobile driver. The machine, which belongs to a Mrs. Swayze, of Bound Brook, was going at a slow pace, and Emerson was hit because he was so intent in getting to his boarding house, across the street, he didn't hear the machine's approach. With Mrs. Swayze in the machine were her brother, C. H. Tucker, and the driver, Nahum Davis, both of Bound Brook.

There was police investigation of the accident a minute after it occurred. Chief Kiely, who lives near the scene of it, on his way home to supper, heard Emerson's groan as the automobile party bent over him at the other side of the street. The chief ran across and took charge of the injured man without delay.

Emerson was removed to his boarding house, where his wife had been awaiting his home-coming, and Dr. Endicott was called in. The physician immediately discovered the broken ribs, and Emerson was placed in bed.

The nature of the man's injuries were certificates of good character for the chauffeur. They were of a character that indicated a slow speed. If the machine had been going swiftly Emerson would have been dead or fatally hurt. As the party had stopped and ministered as best they could to the injured man, there was no shadow of reason for holding them. Chief Kiely took the names and told them they were free to go.

MANY ACCESSIONS TO CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

Communion Services Held in Several Local Churches Sunday.

Communion services were held in several local churches Sunday morning, at which time new members were received. At the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, twenty new members were received, five on confession and fifteen by letter.

These persons were received at the First M. E. church:

Clinton R. Watrous, Raymond Palmer, Leroy Guest, Hazel Moore, Thyra Stiles, Lena E. Tallman, Beatrice Apgar, Anna A. Thom, Rose Reed, Louise Camp, Martha E. Camp, Mary R. Sharp, George H. Williams, Henrietta G. Williams, Ada M. Williams, Lena R. Dennick, Frances E. Weed, Mayme Breads, Josephine Griffith, Annie Perry, Horatio S. Bell, William G. Bell, Henrietta Bell, Ada M. Holder, H. J. Northrop, Reba Northrop, Daniel R. Sherwood, Annie Sherwood, Katherine H. Ewart, Alice Higgins, Claus Peterson and Haydn W. Barrows.

At the Congregational church three members were received on confession and one by letter, and at the First Presbyterian church two were received on confession and three by letter.

RIDING AND DRIVING CLUB ORDER ADDITION TO STABLES.

The stockholders of the Plainfield Riding and Driving Club met at the Casion, Monday, to discuss some financial questions, and this was followed by a meeting of the directors for the purpose of authorizing the horse show committee to provide more extensive stable room at the horse show grounds. At present there are accommodations for 160 horses and it is proposed to build an additional stable to care for sixty more.

The stables will probably be built directly back of the main grandstand, close to the ring. During the horse show last June the club was obliged to make arrangements for stabling horses at nearby farms, and the improvement at the grounds will obviate this trouble. Other plans for the future were discussed. It was reported that the club is in first-class condition financially and otherwise.

Dissolution of Partnership.

T. O. Doane, Jr., and John H. Doane have dissolved the partnership heretofore existing between them under the firm name of Doane & Doane, real estate brokers, and the former will continue the business at 216 Park avenue, the Stirling Building, under his own name, William Grannatt, formerly with William Jeffery, the real estate dealer, will be associated with Mr. Doane as his representative. John H. Doane will also continue in the real estate building, his office being in the Vanderbeek building at North and Park avenues.

REPUBLICANS SWEEP MAJORITY OF STATES

84 MAJORITY IN LOWER HOUSE FOR THE G. O. P.

In addition to New Jersey, there were elections yesterday in forty-one States and three territories. In twenty-three States a governor was elected, and in all but three of these a Legislature was chosen. Representatives to Congress were elected in all these States, but Maine, Vermont, and Oregon, which had already chosen solid Republican delegations.

Returns indicate that the Republican party have made a clean sweep in every State but Rhode Island, which went Democratic by about 6,000. Minnesota and Ohio, which is slightly in doubt. The Republicans have elected a majority of the House of Representatives, apparently it will be about 84, which is much better than the Republican Congressional Committee expected.

New Jersey was carried by the Republicans, but as Essex county elected a full Democratic delegation to the Legislature, the re-election of United States Senator Dryden is not certain. Some other Republican may be chosen.

Returns from Pennsylvania indicate that the Fusionists have been utterly routed. The plurality of Edwin S. Stuart, Republican candidate for Governor, is likely to be at least 50,000 in the city of Philadelphia alone. Samuel Rotan, the Republican nominee for District Attorney of the city, defeated Gibboney by upward of 20,000.

In Massachusetts, Governor Guild (Rep.) is re-elected by a plurality of 37,000 over John B. Moran.

CITY DONATES $153 TO FIREMEN'S PENSION FUND.

Councilman Mellick Says That the Fire Laddies Should Be Considered.

In conformity with the State law which provides that one per cent. of the salaries of firemen may be set aside for the establishment of a pension fund, Chairman Mellick, of the finance committee, offered a resolution at the November meeting of the Common Council, Monday, appropriating a similar amount from the sale of old fire material for the same fund. The amount appropriated was $153.29. Mr. Mellick said he believed it would be well for firemen to unite their worthy efforts to establish such a fund so that when they become unfit for service they will have something to fall back upon.

The law provides that one per cent. of the salaries of regular firemen be appropriated for the pension fund until a maximum amount of $20,000 has been raised, and the city is privileged to set apart a like per cent. for the same fund once a year. Mr. Mellick's resolution appropriating $153.29 to the fund was adopted.

CONTRACTS AWARDED.

Peter Morgan to Build Southside Sanitary Sewer.

According to the action of the street committee, at its meeting a few nights ago, Chairman Gloak offered a resolution at the November meeting of the Common Council Monday, awarding the contract for the construction of the southside sanitary sewer to Peter Morgan, of Poughkeepsie, and to Warren B. Travell, of this city, for the pumping station. They were the lowest bidders for this work. The Mayor and city clerk were authorized to sign a contract for the city, when the contractors furnish the property security for the faithful performance of the work.

The extension to the sewer is intended to provide for a certain section of the southside of the city which cannot be sewered by gravity, it being necessary to install a pumping station. It is proposed to locate the station on land which the city proposes to acquire on Randolph road, south of Arlington avenue.

McCarthy Case Ends.

Judge Runyon suspended sentence Tuesday upon John O'Keeffe, the boy charged with swearing at Edward McCarthy after a Hallowe'en ruction before the latter's house at West Fifth and Division streets. After both sides had produced several witnesses the court declared that the trouble was too complicated by family differences to admit of ready adjustment. The five boys, who admitted throwing stones, and O'Keeffe, who acknowledged repeating language McCarthy was alleged to have used, were lectured before released. S. S. Swackhamer appeared for O'Keeffe and F. J. Huff for McCarthy.

Thanksgiving Day Services.

Special services will be held at St. Stephen's church on Thanksgiving Day, commencing with early celebration of the holy communion at 7:30 o'clock in the morning and again at 9:30 o'clock. There will be the usual donations of vegetables, fruits, etc., to be given to the Plainfield Relief Association.

"Yes, they're the most disgusted young couple you ever saw; their marriage is a regular failure."

"Why, I didn't even know they were married until you told me just now."

"O! yes, they were married 'under the rose,' you know."

"Well, what could they expect to find under the rose but thorns?"

AMUSEMENTS.

In May Irwin's new play, "Mrs. Wilson, That's All," which is to be seen at the Bijou theatre, New York, commencing Monday night, the author, George V. Hobart, has given the comedienne the sort of a role in which she simply revels. Mrs. Wilson, the character played by Miss Irwin, is a woman with a comic past. Before the beginning of the play she had been married, through the pleadings and influence of a maiden aunt, to Murgatroyd Wilson, a Texas cattle king. Murgatroyd is not a product of the Sunday-school superintendent type. He disapears and Mrs. Wilson is led to believe through an article in a newspaper that he is no longer in the land of the living. She contracts a second marriage with Colonel Andrews after the expiration of seven years, when Murgatroyd is declared to be legally dead. The time is up on a certain date, and a very funny scene has been given to Miss Irwin as the clock strikes the hour, at which time, to deference to the wishes of her aunt, she sheds a deluge of crocodile tears. Later in the play, a friend of Murgatroyd's turns up in the person of Gerald McSweeney, who was so fond of Mrs. Wilson's first husband that he imitated him in appearance, even to a set of flowing side whiskers. Mrs. Wilson, believing that she has committed bigamy, plans flight to South Africa and leave a confession in the shape of a record for a talking machine for Colonel Andrews. Eventually of course it turns out that Murgatroyd was dead after all and everything ends happily, as it usually does in farce comedies. Miss Irwin is supported this season by a first class company and will have her usual budget of comic, all of them new this season. In her company are Adolph Jackson, John Hazzard, Lillian Dix, Victor Cassmore, Mary K. Taylor, Madelon Temple, May Donohue, Ben Roth, C. Russell Sage and others.

"The Love Route" by Edward Peple, a thrilling romantic drama of western life is the bill at the Lincoln theatre, New York, and Guy Standing and Odette Tyler are the leading role. Orrin May is also in the large and efficient caste. This is the first theatre in New York to be built in absolute compliance with the rigid new building laws, and the only new theatre in the city equipped with a fireproof curtain weighing sixteen thousand pounds, and so simply operated that a little child could work it by the mere pressure of a button. The audience is also protected against such an emergency by a water curtain operated by a just outside the steel shield. Matt. Morgan is responsible for the magnificent painted curtain, which is one of the handsomest in New York. The theatre is decorated in white and gold.

A Society Circus.

A thrilling and novel animal act was seen for the first time in New York at the Hippodrome last Monday, as an added feature of "A Society Circus." Herman Weedon, a lion trainer from Germany, exhibited several trained lions in the big arena behind steel bars. An unusual feature of the act was that Mr. Weedon appeared in cow-boy costume, with two large bowie knives in his belt and a loaded Colt's revolver in his left hand. He was fearfully wounded once in Berlin, while exhibiting these same lions, and since then he has never entered the arena without being fully armed, ready to put up a stiff fight in case of attack. Mr. Weedon and his lions will remain indefinitely at the Hippodrome. Portions of the international Congress of Quiarity of "Moon Dear," the catchy song from "A Society Circus" at the Hippodrome, have been received. A. Toxen Worm, business representative for Miss Marlowe and Mr. Sothern, reports that while in Denmark last summer, at the International Copenhagen, "Moon Dear" was one of the most popular selections played by the local orchestra. He also heard it at Monte Carlo and at Biarritz. One would not be surprised to hear next that "Moon Dear" is the favorite long of the Fiji Islanders.

NOTIFIES COMMON COUNCIL CITY IS A TRESPASSER.

J. A. Staats Says He Will Apply to Courts to Protest His Rights.

In a communication to the Common Council at its November meeting, Monday, J. A. Staats, proprietor of the Hotel Kensington, notified that body that it would be prohibited from trespassing on his property at 122-130 East Front street, and that unless it ceased immediately to trespass on his land he would apply to the courts to stop the practice. City Clerk MacMurray stated that a copy of the notice was served on him and he referred it to Corporation Counsel Marsh. The matter was referred to the police committee.

The trespassing complained of is in regard to the police patrol wagon which is obliged to pass over property owned by Mr. Staats in going to and from the barn located on land owned by J. B. Coward and John W. Murray, Sr. Mr. Staats claims that the city has never obtained a right of way over his property from him and inasmuch as he has to pay taxes on the land he can see no reason why the city should have the free use of it. The question is now up to the corporation counsel and no doubt some action will be taken within a short time.

THE CANDIDATE'S DAUGHTER.

Her father was a candidate.
His daughter was my love;
Her face was morning light to me,
Her eyes the stars above.
Her father was a candidate;
This much is worthy note—
She came to me, all smiles to state:
"Pa needs the floating vote!"

"My dear," I said, "you cannot get
This floating voter's vote
Without you give him something first
To make the vote float—
Something to lift him up from earth
And spread his joyous wing
In a flight of sunny ecstacy
Where larks and linnets sing!"

Clean through my anecdote,
And shunned a big, and archly sighed:
"So you would sell your vote!"—
Her father was a candidate;
He needed floaters bad—
The—the—the—the—river—Hush!
I voted for her dad!

PITH AND POINT.

Who has to suffer for your fool acts?

If you do wrong, sooner or later you'll get caught.

Might may make right, but it doesn't always make good.

Next day after you throw a thing away it becomes valuable.

Granted a Divorce.

Mrs. Mary A. Brown, colored, has been granted an absolute divorce from her husband, William J. Brown, by Chancellor Magie. Coddington & Swackhamer, representing the petitioner, received word of the decree on Saturday. The application was granted on the grounds of desertion.

BRIGHTON HAD AN APPETITE AND THIS IS WHAT HE ATE—HERE'S THE BILL

The wise ones over in the borough who were alarmed at the ante-election silence and who predicted that something would surely happen before November 6, had their auspicions verified Saturday night. The circumstance occurred in Van's lunch room at Somerset street and Somerset place and came in the form of an exhibition of food demolition, the like of which has never been equalled anywhere in New Jersey.

Charley Brighton, a well-known North Plainfield colored character, was the attacking party and he sallied into the eating place with a look on his face akin to a famished wolf. Seating himself at a table, he first displayed a roll of real money to show that he was acting on the square and then by degrees ordered the waiter to bring him enough food to supply a large-sized family. What he ate and what it cost him was checked up as follows:

21 fried eggs	$1.05
2 plates of beans	20
2 orders of oyster fries	50
30 raw oysters	75
2 oyster stews	40
3 boiled eggs	15
Another plate of beans	10
8 cups of coffee	40
1 loaf of bread (contributed in slices)
Total	$3.50

When Brighton reached the middle of his gastronomic act, the youthful waiter, who was attending his wants, thought some cash of a lesser was being handed to him and demanded that the cash be produced. The diner paid for each order as he called for it after that and the entire larder was placed at his disposal. When at last he concluded and the tired waiter sat down for a rest, Brighton pulled the same roll of spoof from his pocket and taking a $5 bill off the top offered to bet anyone in the place that he could stow away an additional 100 oysters but what he had already done had spread up and down the street and there were no takers. As he left the place, Van gave him the welcome sign and told him to come early and often so long as he had the appetite and the mazuma.

Brighton ran afoul of the borough police not long since and Mayor Smalley sent him to Somerville for twenty days. They put him on a short diet at the county bastile and Saturday's performance was probably one of a series he is conducting to catch up.

ROWDYISM ON P. S. C. TROLLEYS CONTINUE

SUNDAY DISTURBANCES ON CARS ARE AS BAD AS EVER.

Local people who have occasion to use the cars of the Public Service Corporation have reached the conclusion that though the Bishops' bill has been passed and is supposed to be in force, it is being violated somewhere. It is next to impossible to board one of the main line trolleys on the Sabbath day without having to submit to the insults of drunken rowdies and for the past few weeks it has been equally as bad as when the hotels at Scotch Plains and Dunellen kept open house on the day of rest.

A particularly flagrant instance was noticed last evening on car No. 1924 which reached the Watchung avenue terminus from Scotch Plains at 5:45. A half-baked Hun, of the variety that works in the Perth Amboy clay pits, so badly overcome from the effects of rum that he had to hold against the rear door for support, hurled all manner of insulting remarks at passengers and sang ribald songs until he was hoarse. Grouped around him was a crowd of local young men, also much the worse for drink, and they urged him on with a steady stream of oaths and curses. The car was filled to its capacity with ladies and people of refinement and they were forced to submit the scene, the conductor limiting his remonstrances to merely telling the Hun and the rest that they "would have to keep still or get off." He might as well have abandoned his flat against the side of the car for all the good it did.

This case is only one of many as the same thing occurs regularly Sunday nights on cars coming either from Elizabeth or Bound Brook. In most instances it is caused by so-called young "sports" who get intoxicated on three beers and try to impress older people with the idea that they don't care for anybody or anything. It would be an easy matter for a conductor or motorman to throw three off at a time but as a rule they simply smirk at them and respectable passengers have to suffer.

Miss Lowe Gives a Delightful Dinner.

Miss Lowe, of Park avenue, gave a delightful dinner at the Plainfield Country Club, Saturday, the affair being in the nature of a Hallowe'en celebration. There were eighteen young people in the party. The women were dressed as dairy maids and the young men were attired as farmers. The dining room was decorated appropriately.

ASSESSORS SALARIES TO REMAIN THE SAME

NO POWER TO GRANT THEM INCREASE DURING TERM OF OFFICE.

Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, to whom was referred the question as to the right of the Common Council to increase the salaries of the members of the Board of Assessors, reported at the November meeting of that body, Monday, that according to the law, it had no right to either increase or reduce their salaries during their terms of office.

As to the right to pay Alexander D. Ayers, overseer of the poor, for extra work performed for the Board of Assessors, he said that the Common Council could refuse the request inasmuch as it did not authorize the work done. However, if the Common Council cared to recognize the fact that the assessors needed assistance there was no legal objection to their remunerating Mr. Ayers for services performed.

In view of this opinion, Mr. Buxton moved that the Common Council ratify the action of the Board of Assessors in hiring Mr. Ayers and pay his bill, amounting to $40. The motion was adopted. Mr. Ayers assisted the assessors in the preparation of a duplicate tax book and in several other ways.

Mr. Marsh reported that in the tax matter of Elston M. French, referred to the State Board of Taxation, that a settlement had been effected and that in the suit of the American Sewage Disposal Company against the City of Plainfield, the matter is statue quo.

$100 FOR LECTURES.

City Board of Education Provides for a Series for the Teachings Corps.

In the regular order of business at the city Board of Education meeting, last night, an appropriation of $100 was made for the use of Superintendent Maxson in providing a series of lectures for teachers. They will be on educational topics and for the advancement of the various faculties in their work. It may possibly be arranged to have the public invited.

Drs. Tomlinson and VanHorn, the school physicians, reported examining 563 pupils during October. The building committee reported splendid progress in the grading and arranging of the new High school grounds and the clerk reported a balance of $17,880.38.

Installed Elders and Deacons.

Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor, installed the newly elected deacons and elders at Trinity Reformed church, Sunday morning. The elders are George L. VanEmburgh, Robert Clark, Jr., and H. E. Gale. The deacons are W. F. Oliver, A. K. Willett and W. R. Krisey. All were present except W. VanEmburgh, who was detained at home by illness. The installation service was an impressive one.

MANY HEAR REVIVALIST

Five Addresses Made by Rev. Dr. Henry M. Wharton on Sunday.

SCORES ARE CONVERTED

Three Appeals Made at First Baptist Church; One at First M. E. and One at the Theatre.

Large crowds gathered at the evangelistic services held Sunday by Rev. Dr. Henry M. Wharton at the First Baptist church, the First M. E. church and at the New Plainfield theatre. It was the closing day of the series of special meetings and there were not only large congregations at every service, but in nearly every case there were many who signified their desire to lead a Christian life. Especially was this true at the young people's meeting at the First Baptist church in the afternoon, where scores of young men and women took a stand for Christ.

At the morning service in the First Baptist church, Dr. Wharton preached a short sermon. He took occasion to thank the pastors of the city, the chorus and the newspapers for their many kindnesses during the week of special services. He explained that it would be impossible for him to remain here longer. He planned to spend ten days with his family at this time, but at the solicitation of Dr. Chamblin he had given eight of the ten days to work here, something he would not have for anyone on earth, except Dr. Chamblin or his own brother.

His discourse treated with becoming scorn with the things of the world, such as temptation, disappointment and the frivolities of this life. Dr. Wharton said that the all-important thing of this life and the one to come is not "Who is who," but "What is what." "If your home is only in Christ," said Dr. Wharton, "you can have peace and rest, such as the world cannot give and cannot take away. If you don't meet Christ here as your Saviour, you must meet Him later on as conqueror." Dr. Wharton made a strong and urgent appeal to everyone to accept Christ now.

At the Sunday-school session in the afternoon, Dr. Wharton gave a short and informal talk to the young people, in which he persuaded them to give their hearts to Christ in their youth before evil days draw nigh. In response to his appeal scores arose and gave their hearts to Christ. Afterwards they signed cards and at the request of Dr. Wharton they walked to the platform and laid the cards on the desk.

Dr. Wharton appeared at the New Plainfield theatre at 4 o'clock and addressed a great gathering of men. He spoke on the subject "Death at a Frolic," and he held the close attention of the men throughout. He pictured Belshazzar's feast of Belshazzar, and the handwriting on the wall which caused such consternation to the King of the Jews and those about him, when God told him that he had been weighed in the balance and found wanting. Here again Dr. Wharton appealed to the men to stand up for Christ, to follow Him, and several throughout the audience responded to the earnest words of the speaker. The music at this service was furnished by a large chorus of male voices.

Last night the principal meeting was held at the First Baptist church, but the gathering was so large that arrangements were made to have the First M. E. church open for an overflow meeting. Dr. Wharton spoke for a half hour at the Methodist church before going to the First Baptist church, and both edifices were filled to overflowing. After Dr. Wharton left the Methodist church, other pastors took charge of the service, which lasted for an hour. Then all joined in an after-meeting at the First Baptist church, where a great many testimonies were given and a number took a stand for Christ.

"Who is on the Lord's Side?" was the text taken by Dr. Wharton for his discourse at the First Baptist church. The musical song service was held and included a duet by Miss Gertrude Helns and William Holmes. The latter had charge of the music.

"There are only two sides," said Dr. Wharton. "It is no mere say-so of my own. Christ says that he that is not with me is against me. Being on the Lord's side means to do what He wants you to do and to rest in Him." Dr. Wharton pictured impressively the advantages of being on the Lord's side and the disadvantages of being on the devil's side, adding that in being on the Lord's side one can have the best time in this world and that to come. In conclusion Dr. Wharton said that when one's time to die comes they want that sustaining help and peace of Christ.

After his earnest talk, Dr. Wharton conducted an after-meeting in which he gave others an opportunity to give testimony. A great many responded. Dr. Wharton disclaimed the credit for the results of the meetings, saying that the Plainfield pastors were reaping now what they had shown. Among the pastors who took part in this service were Rev. Dr. C. W. Parsons, Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, Rev. Phil. A. Parsons and Rev. Dr. J. A. Chamblin. It was regretted by all that Dr. Wharton felt compelled to close his work here, but all united in saying that the special meetings have been a great blessing to all who attended.

PARK CLUB BOWLERS TAKE BOTH GAMES.

Defeat Princeton on the Local Alleys By Large Scores.

The Park Club bowling team showed the result of practice Saturday night, when it defeated the Princeton team in two games by big scores. The local bowlers had their eyes on the pins and several high scores were rolled. Monroe Long put up a score of 209 in the first game, while in the second Daniel excelled that by rolling 226 and F. O. Ball rolled a score of 220.

In the first game the Parks had a margin of 128 points to spare, while in the second game rolled one of their best games, winning by a margin of 179 points, the total score being 945. They rolled over 800 in the first game. Owing to the lateness of the hour and the fact that some of the bowlers wanted to dance, the third game was not rolled.

The scores:

O. F. C. LOST.

The Crescents, of Elizabeth, defeated the Orange Field Club Saturday afternoon, at Elizabeth, by the score of 11 to 0 in a game that was without special features. The gains were made almost entirely by line play. A few forward passes were tried, with the effect of putting the ball out of bounds. King and Emmons made the only runs of the game. The line-up:

Crescents.		Orange F. C.
Brown	right end	Hillyer
Kurtz	right tackle	Joseph
Ohl	right guard	J. McCullough
Smith	centre	McLaughlin
H. Smith	left guard	Lyness
Bender	left tackle	W. McCullough

Cramer	quarterback	McVoy (Capt.)
Boyd	right halfback	Brown
Lloyd	fullback	Embleton

Score at end of first half—6 to 0. Final score—11 to 0. Touchdowns—Kurtz and Lloyd. Goals from touchdown—Lloyd. Time of halves—20 and 15. Referee—Glazebrook. Umpire—Tucker.

FLEMINGTON MOWED DOWN.

The Flemington A. C. football was handily defeated by the Dunellen Field Club's eleven at Flemington, Saturday afternoon by the score of 22 to 0. The home team put up a plucky game, but could not move to Dunellen's line. Dunellen could work to the goal without kicking. The line-up:

Flemington.		Dunellen.
Berkaw	right end	Peters, Maltby
Wood	right tackle	Rhinehart
Kelly	right guard	Logan

Attempt to Wreck Senator's Auto.

Four men in a large touring car attempted late Sunday afternoon to wreck the automobile owned by Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, on a country road near Millstone. The Senator's auto was going at a moderate rate when it was overtaken by a big red machine, containing four men, and instead of passing Mr. Frelinghuysen's machine, which was run to one side of the road, it mad straight for it and the wheels of the two machines hooked and the Senator's auto was almost upset. The red machine was little damaged and got away. Senator Frelinghuysen is determined to find out who were in the red machine and punish them.

Revenge For Alls.

Alls turned the tables on Cranford, Saturday, defeating them 3 to 0. The game was played in Cranford.

POWERLESS TO STOP OBJECTIONABLE PLAY

MAYOR SAYS THEATRE MANAGER WILL HAVE POLICE PROTECTION.

"The Clansman" will be produced at the New Plainfield theatre on Friday night, Mayor Buckle having notified Manager Counihan that he is powerless to prevent it. Coupled with the mayor's action, several colored citizens have issued an appeal to members of their race not to resort to violence when the show is on at the theatre.

Following is the mayor's letter:

Mayor's Office,
Plainfield, N. J., Nov. 5, 1906.

To Mr. William Counihan,
Proprietor of the Plainfield Theatre.
Dear Sir:

You having informed me of your bona fide efforts to cancel the contract for the production of "The Clansman," at your theatre, in response to my appeal, and having also informed me that you have been unable to obtain a release from the contract, and that the owners of the play insist on holding you to your contract, I have t osay that there will be no attempt on my part or on the part of the Police Department of the city to interfere with your carrying out your contract and allowing the production, unless there shall be a breach of the peace or other violation of the law in connection with the production of the play. The Corporation Counsel advised me before I served my notice of November 2, that the city had not the power to prevent the production of the play, and hence my notice took the form of an appeal to you to prevent the production. I am sending you the present notice, because in my conversation with you I have got abroad, to the effect that I had positively forbidden the production of the play. This I have no power to do, and immediately on receipt of obtain a release from your contract, it only remains for you to assist in guarding against any disorder or breach of the peace during the performances. To aid you in this effort, I will give instructions to the Chief of Police to assist you in every way in his power in preserving good order while the play is being performed.

Your obedient servant,
J. P. BUCKLE,
Mayor.

The appeal of the colored citizens follows:

To the colored citizens of Plainfield:

We, the undersigned, have done all in our power and the mayor has done all in his power to prevent the production of a play distasteful to the negro race from appearing at the New Plainfield theatre on Friday night. As no legal way can be found to stop the show, we implore the colored citizens of Plainfield for the sake of law and order to stay away from the theatre on that night. Furthermore we beg them not to go anywhere near the theatre building on that night, and above all things not to resort to any lawlessness. The colored population of this city is noted for its orderliness and we feel sure that they will not bring discredit on their city and on themselves by tolerating any disorder.

C. W. JACKSON,
WM. A. KLINE,
E. B. MAYNARD.

It transpires that all the colored ministers as well as Dr. Jesse C. Anderson and other prominent men of the race have held a meeting Friday night at which a committee was appointed to wait on Mayor Buckle and ask him to have the play stopped. The committee with Dr. Anderson as chairman saw Mr. Buckle Saturday and made the request. To the meeting held Friday night, invitations to attend were given Messrs. Kline, Maynard and Jackson, but none responded. The committee, with which the ministers are identified, say that Jackson, Kline and Maynard had no right to act for the colored race.

HAD STIFF RUN.

Sporting Ride After Hounds for Watchung Hunt Club Members.

The Watchung Hunt Club had a lively run Saturday afternoon. Twenty riders met at the Crescent avenue triangle, but there were not that many at the finish. There were a number of stiff fences on the run, that tried the mettle of horses and riders.

The hounds were laid in at the old kennels at Rahway road, and two stiff jumps faced them huntsmen early in the run. The course was on to Westfield in a straight line, where, after a check, the pack streamed out ahead of the riders for a run to Colonia. The going was over meadow land, with a lot of high fences.

Those who finished: L. S. Treadwell, on Strongheart; L. E. Waring, on his gray; C. E. Marshall, on Magog; H. A. Bourne, on his new purchase; Dr. M. O'M. Scott, on Zephyr; Walter Lance, on Magyar; W. H. Wildey, on Recruit; G. Fred Alpers, on Black V.; Mair and Vaughan, on Middlesex and Pilot.

L. S. Treadwell Engaged.

The engagement of Louis S. Treadwell, formerly manager of the Pedrick & Ayer Company, and a prominent members of the Watchung Hunt Club, to Miss Josephine Scoville, of Seneca, Kansas, has been announced. The wedding will take place in New York, in June. Mr. Treadwell is manager of the Robins Conveying Belt Company, of Passaic.

Address by Dr. W. H. Morgan.

The Brotherhood of the First M. E. church will meet in Vincent chapel Friday night, and listen to an address by Rev. Dr. W. H. Morgan, of the Central M. E. church, Newark. There will be a reception to the men who have joined the Brotherhood during the pastorate of Rev. A. C McCrea. Refreshments will be served and all men of the church are invited.

MANSLAUGHTER VERDICT

But Judge Defers Sentence on Illario Woman Because of Revelations.

MAY BE A MISTRIAL

Trying Jurors Went to Scene of Tragedy Without Knowledge of the Court—Constables to Blame.

The trial of Florinda Illario for the murder of Alexander Dipoalo, the contractor, of Raritan, which has occupied the Somerset Court at Somerville seven days, terminated Monday night, when the jury, after a deliberation of three hours, gave a verdict of manslaughter.

Justice Garretson was about to sentence the women when Clarence E. Case, her counsel, asked that sentence be deferred, as he would ask for a rule to show cause why a new trial should not be granted.

When asked for his reasons for making this request, Mr. Case said the jury, during the progress of the trial, had, without the consent of the Court, been taken to the house where Dipoalo was killed by the prisoner and had been allowed to examine the premises.

Justice Garretson manifested great indignation on hearing this and ordered the constables in charge of the jury brought before him. When they were arraigned he asked them if the charge made by counsel for the defense was true. The constables admitted that in one of their walks with the jury during a court recess, they walked through Mechanic street and were about to pass the residence of Mrs. Warwick, where Dipoalo was shot.

Justice Garretson granted this request and deferred sentence on the woman.

TRY YOUR HOME PAPER.

A Few Words of Advice to Budding Newspaper Women.

If you are a newspaper woman born you will "make good" in your home town, I do not care what the size of the paper. You will create a demand for your services. If you cannot please the editor there, if you cannot induce your neighbors to give you news, what do you expect to do in a strange city with an editor driven to desperation with work and women to interview who place statuesque butlers between you and the news you would learn?

I speak from my heart, dear girl with the pen, when I say, "Beg the editor of your home paper to try you out and then make yourself invaluable to him before you try your wings in the great city."

You may have influential letters, you may have diplomas and pretty frocks and a prettier make, but in the great city where you think there must be hundreds of openings for ambitious girls you will find competitors with the same influential letters, good frocks and pleasing smiles already on the ground, a hundred to every opening. And when you tell the editor you have had no experience, but are willing to learn, he will inform you that he does not run a kindergarten for reporters.—Anna Steese Richardson in Woman's Home Companion.

PROTEST MADE AGAINST OPENING NARROW STREETS.

Town Improvement Association Communicates With the Common Council.

The Town Improvement Association, in a communication to the Common Council, Monday, took occasion to speak of a tendency to open narrow and blind thoroughfares in what might be termed tenement districts of the city, which it considered to be undesirable. It complained that it left insufficient space for children, proper light and ventilation and is a detriment to the whole city.

The association urged that the city give the matter its earnest consideration and that it be thoroughly investigated with a view to correcting such an evil in the future. Streets referred to are less than fifty feet wide and might properly be termed alley-ways and lanes. The communication was referred to the street committee.

Refused the Assessors Extra Pay.

The Board of Assessors presented bills to the Common Council, at the November meeting, Monday, for extra services this year, which was required by the new law. The bills were $160 each, or $640 in all, but in accordance with an opinion by Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, they were not ordered paid. Mr. Marsh informed the Common Council that it had no right to either increase or lower the salary of the assessors during their term. The regular bills of the assessors were presented and they were ordered paid.

Gans-Nelson Fight Pictures.

The original Gans-Nelson fight pictures have been secured by Manager Counihan for presentation at the New Plainfield theatre on Tuesday afternoon and night, November 13. They are said to be the most complete fight pictures that have ever been secured.

ST. MARY'S BUYS SCHOOL

Washington Building Disposed of by the Board of Education.

CONSIDERATION, $14,500

Structure at Fifth and Liberty Erected in 1875—Antiquated Now—To Be Used By Parish.

Guided to a certain extent by Superintendent Maxson, who declared that the building is practical inadequate for the educational purposes required of it, the city Board of Education at its meetin Monday, decided to sell the Washington school, located at Fifth and Liberty streets. Overtures for its purchase have been made at frequent intervals by St. Mary's parish, whose church property is adjoining on the Sixth street side of the block, and since his appointment as pastor, Rev. Father Bogan has renewed the offers, as last meeting with success. The figure agreed upon for the building and grounds at $14,500 and the conditions of the sale were specified in the following resolution passed by the school board last night:

WHEREAS this Board hath ascertained and determined, and doth hereby ascertain and determine, that the school property owned by this Board, known as the Washington School Building, and the lot on which the said building stands, located on the southerly corner of West Fifth and Liberty streets, in the City of Plainfield, are, in the judgment of this Board, wholly inadequate for the public school purposes for which they have been and are now used, and that it is not practicable by alterations or additions or otherwise to render them suitable and appropriate to meet the pressing needs and just demands of the public, the duty of meeting which the law has imposed upon this board; and

WHEREAS this Board has now the opportunity to enter into contract for the sale of said property for the full fair value, to wit, the sum of $14,500, and has already made arrangements looking to the purchase of other land suitable and appropriate for the purposes of a new school building of adequate capacity and otherwise adapted to the needs of the city in the premises:

RESOLVED, That the President and Secretary of the Board be and they are hereby authorized and directed to make, execute and deliver on behalf of the Board, a contract with the intending purchaser, said contract to be prepared and approved by Craig A. Marsh, counsel for the Board, for the sale and conveyance of said first mentioned property for the said sum of $14,500, and to execute and deliver a deed for the conveyance of the premises, upon receipt of the sum of $14,500 consideration;

RESOLVED, That the matter of the terms of payment of the consideration, the date for delivery of possession and the delivery of the deed, respectively, and the temporary use of said property by this Board for school purposes pending the providing of other accommodations elsewhere, and the terms on which such temporary use shall be obtained, the form of the deed, and all other matters of detail to enable this Board to carry out the true intent and meaning of these resolutions be referred with power to the Finance Committee of this Board.

The Washington building is the smallest of the city school structures and one of the oldest. The property at Fifth and Liberty streets was bought in 1874 and the school was erected a year later. It is of rather peculiar construction, being too high enough for two stories, contains but one floor having six classrooms. It is in the centre of a populous district and for years has always been filled to its capacity.

When Father Bogan was at the head of St. Mary's church he believed the site should be acquired by his parish as its membership has been increasing rapidly and it seemed to him that the time would soon come when others to look into the matter thoroughly. Superintendent Maxson was instructed to make an investigation as to the future needs af the building and as to the advisability of seeking other quarters and this he has been doing.

Father Egan was succeeded at St. Mary's by Father Bogan and the latter continued the offers for the property. He made such liberal propositions that he was forced to be received by the board and the sale has been under discussion for several months. The clergyman stated that it was not his desire to take immediate possession and that in the event of the transfer the riches of his parishoners would be gratified if it could be simply held in order to maintain an undesirable purchaser stepping in. These and other inducements combined led the board to authorize the finance committee to make the sale.

Superintendent Maxson was asked last night about the board's plans and he said steps would be taken to secure another site in the same locality and erect a more modern and commodious building. Such a structure is needed to relieve the pressure on the Irving school, some of the classes in that building now being on half time.

St. Mary's parish will do with its new acquisition is not defined at present. Father Bogan said this morning that the building might be put to some temporary use when full possession is secured and then again it might not. The land area is quite large and one of the playgrounds would be ample for the projected convent home, should it be decided to locate in that vicinity.

TO STOP NUISANCE OF BURNING LEAVES

SUBJECT OF DEBATE AMONG THE CITY FATHERS REFERRED TO COMMITTEE.

The nuisance of burning leaves in various parts of the city, which is complained of every fall, was brought to the attention of the Common Council last night by Mr. Mellick, through a communication signed by sixty citizens. They referred to the annoyance and distress occasioned by the burning of leaves and asked that action be taken to stop it.

Mr. Mellick supplimented the statement of the citizens, by urging that something be done to bring relief from the nuisance. He said that the comfort and health of the citizens demanded today, and he hoped that the matter would be carefully investigated. On his motion the petition was referred to the street committee.

Chairman Glenk, of that committee, said that he was willing to have the matter referred to his committee, but he thought it was a little late to do anything this year. He believed that steps could be taken to abate the nuisance another year.

Mr. Mellick suggested that something might be done now, such as restricting the burning of leaves to one day in the week, or Friday, and he would be glad to co-operate with the committee in solving the problem.

Mr. Tyler commented on the matter and added that it might be taken up with a consideration of the collection and disposal of garbage, which he thought should be investigated by the Common Council. Mr. Mellick thought it would be an expensive thing to provide for the collection of leaves, but believed that some method could be adopted to stop the burning of them.

He cited a personal instance of the burning of leaves about his home, the smoke filling the entire lower floor of his house, much to the annoyance of his family.

Mr. Tolles believed that the matter should be referred to the street committee with power to act at once.

It was a question in the mind of Mr. Hibbard whether the burning of leaves could be termed a bon-fire. He thought that one had the right to burn rubbish, while a bon fire was generally considered in the nature of a celebration of some event.

INTERESTED IN REVIVAL

Despite Unfavorable Weather Conditions, Many Attend Evangelistic Services.

SOME GIVE TESTIMONY

Dr. Wharton Preaches—Dr. Chambliss Prays—William Holmes Leads Choir.

The evangelistic service at the First Baptist church Wednesday was largely devoted to testimony, prayer and song, while Rev. Dr. Henry M. Wharton, who is in charge, gave another one of his informal talks. Stormy weather conditions doubtless kept many away, but there was a good attendance nevertheless. Following the song service, which was led by William Holmes, of the First Baptist church choir, there were several requests for prayer. All were remembered in an earnest petition by Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss. There were requests for prayers for members of Sunday-school classes, wives, husbands, friends, sons, daughters and "backsliders." Before Dr. Wharton began his talk, Holmes sang very earnestly "Softly and Tenderly Jesus is Calling."

The evangelist read selections of the Scriptures from the eighth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, beginning at the twenty-fifth verse, which contains the story of Philip meeting the man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority, who was converted while on his way to Jerusalem. He took his text from a portion of the thirty-ninth verse, "And he went on his way rejoicing." In part Dr. Wharton spoke as follows:

"Then the man brought to Christ. The way to be happy in this world is to seek to make others happy. I heard Dr. Judson tell a story of a little girl who was running after her pet dog, the animal seemed to be running away from home, and the girl was crying as though her heart would break. When Dr. Judson asked her what she was crying about she said that her dog would be lost and she would be lost and she didn't know what to do. Dr. Judson then advised her to start and run home, adding that the dog would follow her. She did so and it happened that the dog not only followed his owner but overtook her and got home before she did. In relating the incident, Dr. Judson said that it made him happy all day long when he thought how he had helped the little girl.

"In the intensely interesting chapter I read tonight we have both the divine and human side. We see God planning for the conversion of a soul. He knew that the man from Ethiopia would leave for Jerusalem and he sent Philip out to meet him. He sent the message to Philip's heart and he obeyed the summons."

In connection with this Dr. Wharton related an incident telling how a young physician was strangely led by a woman to a service he was holding to deliver a telegram and although he was an infidel, he was converted and became a useful man. Continuing he said:

"In the second place we see God's child carrying out His plan. Philip asked no questions but obeyed. What if he said 'this is no use going to meet that man I will stay here.' There would have been a lost opportunity to save a soul. When Philip met the man from Ethiopia I imagine he was much embarrassed, because he rode in a carriage, but the Spirit spoke to him at a good time telling him to go near. God wants us to go near the world but not to partake of its harmful pleasures. I believe that the unsaved of this world are more anxious to have us talk to them about their soul's salvation than we are to talk to them. When Philip found the man reading he asked him if he understood what he was reading. He replied in the negative, and then invited Philip to explain it to him. There we see Philip anxious and willing to do all possible to save that soul.

"In the third place we see the man willing and anxious to learn. If there is one here tonight willing to do as much, salvation is yours. Philip Baptized the Ethiopian and he went away rejoicing and happy, while Philip rejoiced in the fact that he had led a soul to Christ. If you don't know that joy of leading a soul to Christ, try it tonight."

Dr. Wharton then related another story about his early ministry, where he was used of God to lead an unconverted young man to Christ. He was on his death-bed, and because he had lost so many opportunities to accept Christ when well and strong he would not listen to the teaching, preferring to go into eternity as he had lived. Dr. Wharton visited the young man every day, talked and prayed with him and finally rejoiced to see him converted and die a Christian. The boy's mother also rejoiced. She was afraid to have her son die unsaved, but when converted she said that knowing he could not get well, she could let him go.

During the service an opportunity was given for those present to testify by quoting a passage of Scripture, and many responded. At times there would be several on their feet at once, each anxious to bear testimony to the saving power of Christ. The

HALLOWE'EN'S FESTIVITIES

Young and Old Made Merry at Gatherings in the City and Borough.

MANY HOUSE PARTIES

Games and Pranks and Lots to Eat —Some Masquerade Affairs.

Following are some of the Hallowe'en parties in the city and borough Wednesday night:

Mrs. Lee Roberts, of Embree Crescent, Westfield, gave a delightful masquerade party at her home, last Wednesday, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. G. Harold Whitney, of this city, who recently returned from their honeymoon. Forty young people from Westfield and Plainfield were in attendance. The festivities proper were held in the spacious attic of the house, which looked like a harvest festival in decoration of corn husks, pumpkins and fruits, while lanterns and lighted pumpkins were the "shining lights" of the evening. The masqueraders were garbed in sheets and pillow cases and made the scene still more picturesque. They ducked for apples, roasted chestnuts and enjoyed other old fashioned games. Vocal solos, farm ballads and the "Game of Hickory Hend" one and all the guests, contributed to the enjoyment of the evening. At the conclusion of the fun, refreshments of pumpkin pie, apples, cider and chestnuts were served. Wooden platters were used by the participants and they afterward did service in a "platter rolling" contest to decide the championship between Westfield and Plainfield. The latter were outdone and the laurels, for this year at least, rest with the Westfield contingent.

A masquerade party at Miss Mabel Cook's home, 149 East Fifth street, started spookishly. The guests were met at the basement door by two "ghosts," in very ghastly white, and led through the cellar to the basement rooms in which the party was held. Miss Cook and Miss Edith Runk were the phanton guides.

Fortune telling and dancing were the chief feature of the evening. Refreshments were served at a late hour. Among the guests, in costume, were:

Miss Cook, Indian squaw; Miss Runk, Queen of Hearts; Miss Carolina Lambert, old maid; Miss Lambert, old Black Mammy; Miss Doris Tennyson, Japanese girl; Miss Edith Richards, gypsy; Miss May Chamblyn, Topsy; Miss Jessie MacMurray, Peter Pan; Miss May Fitz, College girl; Miss Winifred Hammond, Red Riding Hood; Miss Eleanor Bold, flower girl; Miss J. Hill, flower girl; Miss F. Hill, marketwoman; Mrs. G. Linberry, Red Cross; nurse; Miss Day, witch.

Frank Wikoff, of West Fourth street, was tendered a surprise party at his home, Wednesday, that was a combined Hallowe'en and birthday affair. It was arranged by Mrs. Wikoff and was attended by thirty-five friends. Dancing was the feature of the gathering and guests contributed both vocal and instrumental music. Refreshments were served at midnight. Mr. Wikoff received a wide assortment of presents in honor of the natal day end of the affair.

A delightful Hallowe'en party was given by Miss Bessie VanNest, of Whitewood avenue, to fifteen of her friends. Games appropriate to the occasion were played and the refreshments were in keeping also.

Among the Hallowe'en festivities Wednesday was a masquerade dance held at the Plainfield Camera Club rooms. There were about fifty in the company and all were attired in fantastic dress. Some of the masks were so clever that it was impossible to tell who the masqueraders were. The affair was arranged by Mr. and Mrs. Louis M. Hummer, of East Fifth street, and among those present were many who formed a dancing class that met at the rooms last winter.

Mr. and Mrs. English, of East Seventh street, gave an informal children's Hallowe'en party, last night, when the usual games were enjoyed.

The Sagamore Club gave a delightful Hallowe'en dance in E. C. Martin's barn on Albert street, Wednesday. There were about forty members and friends of the club present and dancing was continued until a late hour. The barn was decorated with autumnal foliage and everyone had a jolly good time.

A Hallowe'en surprise party was given to Miss Beulah VanWinkle at her home at Park avenue and East Seventh street, Tuesday night. All kinds of games were played and prizes were given to the winners. About fifty young people attended. The affair was arranged by Miss Helen Wilson.

Miss Ida Tier, of Bank place, was given a Hallowe'en surprise party, Wednesday, about fifty young people calling at her home. All were masked and it was sometime before it was known who was who. The evening was given up to dancing and playing games and at a late hour refreshments were served.

Miss Grace Woolston entertained a few friends at her home Wednesday when the usual Hallowe'en games were played and refreshments were served.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Rowley gave a "spook" party at their home on Grove street that was attended by seventy-five friends. There were all manner of ghostly objects placed about the rooms and hallways and wierd effects helped to make the guests realize that it was a "creepy" affair. Games, music and a supper were features.

Miss Laura Lee, a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Leek, of East Fifth street, was the guest of honor at a masquerade party. She was taken out to dinner and knew nothing of the affair until she was brought into the midst of it. The affair was a most delightful one, and vastly enjoyed by the two-score guests. The rooms were lit only by jack-o'-lanterns, many of which shone grotesquely from tables, shelves and stands. Mr. Leek created much merriment as a boy.

Dancing and round games were the features. Refreshments were served. A number of prizes were won.

The Misses Anna and Sarah Hopewell, of East Fifth street, were hostesses for thirty or more friends at a Hallowe'en party. The guests came with their faces concealed in masks and they were kept on until 10 o'clock, all manner of fun being occasioned by it. Dancing predominated in the afternoon and there was plenty of music, games and other features. The refreshments were appropriate to the Hallowe'en spirit.

SOMERSET CLUB HAS A HALLOWE'EN AFFAIR

EXTENDS THE GLAD HAND TO FULLY 200 GUESTS.

Hallowe'en was observed in rousing good style by the Somerset Club, of the borough, last night, and the members added to their laurels won by delightful entertaining. The headquarters in the building at Somerset street and Manning avenue were "open" all evening and 200 guests enjoyed the hospitality of the organization.

A decorating committee had been busy for several days and the place smacked of Autumn, harvest fields and apple orchards, making it a positive delight to be inside. Those responding to invitations were made to feel at home as soon as they crossed the threshold of the door and the glad hand was extended in large-sized slices. Beside this something substantial was passed out in the form of sweet cider, sandwiches, coffee, cake and pie. There was any quantity of each and if anybody went home without a fourteenth help it was his own fault.

Everybody of any prominence in the borough was on hand and in addition to the contingent that crossed the brook from the city side the guests included Somerset county celebrities. Among the latter were Senator Freilnghuysen, from Somerville, and William W. Smalley, of Bound Brook, candidate for Assembly on the Republican ticket. There were others as widely known but it was one of those affairs where everybody was as good as anybody else and there was no especial particularizing.

During the evening George O. Stevens and Herbert Schutt favored with several vocal selections and Charles J. Ward gave a monologue that was a "knock-out." The rest of the time was devoted to attacks on the refreshment supply and sociability pure and simple.

The committee which arranged and had charge of the affair consisted of David J. Carney, chairman; Robert Trewin, John Schroop, Andrew Love, Jr., and Grover Schuck.

IT NETTED $50.

Silver Cross Circle Holds a Tea and Entertainment.

The Silver Cross Circle, King's Daughters, gave a Hallowe'en tea, and entertainment at the home of Mrs. Edward T. Wilson, on Sycamore Ave., the borough, Wednesday afternoon. The stormy weather kept a great many away, but the affair was a success nevertheless and about $50 was netted for the treasury.

The rooms appropriately decorated with corn-stalks, pumpkins and autumnal foliage, while the members of the Circle, assisting, were dressed in Puritan costume. During the afternoon coffee and crullers were served, Mrs. S. Fullerton Weaver and Mrs. H. E. Butler being in charge. There was also a sale of candy, cake and useful articles. Mrs. F. W. French and Mrs. William J. Roome, Jr., had charge of the candy table, and Miss May Shreve and Mrs. Clifford W. McGee were at the cake table, while different members presided at the useful articles' table. An enjoyable feature were the soprano solos by Miss Agnes Bailey, accompanied on the piano by Miss Sarah Mae Howell.

The officers of the Circle are as follows: President, Miss Helen Phillips; secretary, Miss Elsie Suffern; treasurer, Miss Marion McCutchen. The proceeds from yesterday's affair will be used toward keeping the Circle's pledge in support of the city nurse.

GAVE A DINNER IN CANDIDATES' HONOR

CONGRESSMAN FOWLER AND OTHERS ENTERTAINED BY CITY CHAIRMAN FISK

Congressman Charles N. Fowler, State Senator Hillery, State Senator Ackerman, Assemblyman Randolph Perkins and Assembly Nominee Moxon were entertained at dinner Thursday, previous to the mass meeting, at the Hotel Iroquois. City Chairman Charles J. Fisk, the Republican and Democratic candidate for the mayoralty, was the host and the affair was the most elaborate of the kind that has taken place here in years.

Among Mr. Fisk's other guests were Precholder Samuel P. T. Wilbur, City Clerk James T. MacMurray, Factory Inspector Andrew McCardell, Councilman Herbert Buxton, former County Chairman Hamilton F. Kean and County Chairman Frank H. Smith.

The menu follows:

	Cocktail a La Fisk.
	Caviar on Toast

After the dinner, Congressman Fowler and the other G. O. P. candidates held an informal reception in the parlors of the hotel. They shook hands with about 100 of the local workers.

MORGAN GETS CONTRACT.

Poughkeepsie Man Successful Bidder for Sewer Work.

Peter Morgan, of Poughkeepsie, the lowest bidder for the construction of the southside sanitary sewer, met with the Councilmanic street committee Wednesday and after discussing the matter, the committee decided to recommend at the November meeting of the Common Council, that the contract be awarded to Mr. Morgan. The latter was in town yesterday looking over the ground and learning more in detail about the contract and stands willing to execute the contract if he gets it.

The contract for the pumping station to be erected up to Warren B. Travell, he being the lowest bidder on that part of the work, and the committee will recommend that he be given the contract. It understood that he is bidding on the Ingersoll-Rand Company type of pumping station.

Death of Mrs. H. E. Ryder.

Mrs. Hobert E. Ryder, formerly of this city, died at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph B. Losey, at Somerville, Wednesday afternoon, following a long illness. About a year ago Mrs. Ryder underwent an operation at Muhlenberg Hospital, after which she made her home with her parents. When in Plainfield she lived at one time in Richmond street and later in Netherwood. She was for some time the leading soprano soloist at Trinity Reformed church. She made many friends while a resident of Plainfield, and she was held in high esteem for her many lovable qualities. She is survived by a husband, who is engaged in business in New York.

A Hallowe'en Party.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. W. Burnet, of Sandford avenue, entertained the Fortnightly Wrist Club at their home, Wednesday night, and because the club meeting happened to fall on Hallowe'en night, the festivities were appropriate to that event. There were sixteen in the company and all appeared in amusing costumes, some of the guests scarcely being recognised. The evening was spent in playing all sorts of games, features being several vocal solos by Mrs. Burnet and piano selections by her sister, Miss Mildred Cornell, of Dunellen. Cake was accomplished musician. During the evening an elaborate repast was served.

Afternoon—Devotional, Mr. Scott. Reports of auxiliaries concluded. Newark, New Brunswick, Orange, Orange (woman's board), Orange (colored), Passaic, Paterson, Plainfield, Rahway, Red Bank, Ridgewood, Salem, South Amboy (railroad), Summit, Dunellen.

There will also be sectional conferences, in which four groups of delegates will informally discuss the following important phases of auxiliary work: Social work, leader, Mrs. Frank H. White, Ridgewood; furnishing rooms, leader, Miss C. L. Cameron, Elizabeth; business management, leader, Mrs. Llewellyn B. Tompkins, Morristown; boys' work, leader, Mrs. Abram Mosler, Orange.

Somerset Teachers' Institute.

The Somerset County Teachers' Institute will be held at Flemington on November 26, 27 and 28. County Superintendent H. C. Krebs, of the borough, will be in charge.

NOT IN SYMPATHY WITH "NEW WOMAN"

CLERGYMAN TELLS PUPILS THE HOME IS THEIR SPHERE.

Upon the invitation of Superintendent Henry M. Maxson, Rev. George A. Warner, rector of Holy Cross church, addressed the pupils of the Plainfield High School, Friday morning. He took for his subject, "Opportunities," contrasting the days when he attended the country school at his home in Vermont, with none of the advantages of the present day public schools. He complimented the pupils on having such a fine school building, where under the most favorable circumstances it is possible for them to secure an education.

He particularly interested the boys in his remarks concerning athletics, taking occasion to tell them of the efforts being made among the boys in his parish to promote clean, healthful sports. Turning his attention to the girls, Mr. Warner said he wanted to impress upon their minds that the world of today is not in sympathy with the so-called new woman and unless it is a case of necessity he advised the girls to remain in their own particular sphere—the home—where their help and usefulness are always needed.

Mr. Warner was given enthusiastic applause at the close of his address. At his request Superintendent Maxson arranged for a fire drill, and he was greatly pleased to see how quickly the building could be emptied. It required exactly one minute and fifteen seconds for the teachers and pupils to leave the school. Following the drill, Mr. Warner was shown through the building and he again expressed his pleasure at what he saw, declaring it to be one of the finest and best equipped schools he had ever visited.

In a striking manner, Rev. Mr. Warner compared the old-time school and its crude methods with the systematically conducted school of today with all the modern improvements and advantages. He said that all have equal opportunities in school, and he called attention to the fact that regardless of this there is great difference in pupils. He attributed it to lack of application, and said that grasping opportunities in school is the secret of success, which counts most in the future.

"It is not the boy who gets along easily," he said, "who is the most successful, but the boy who sees his opportunities, makes good use of them, and applies himself. To quote Judge Ben Lindsey, the Juvenile Court, of Denver: 'I could not wish for an American boy an easy time, but a hard time.'"

In dwelling on women, he said: "They are the best of God's creation, but they are not always in their sphere because they often go outside of their sphere and do the things that men are doing; things God never intended them to do." He emphasized the fact that women influence men greatly, and said that those who have the most influence are the ones who in the most unobtrusive ways do those who enter into a business life, but those who can make home attractive.

WOMEN'S AUXILIARIES TO HOLD CONFERENCE.

Sessions to Be Held at Summit Friday, November 9.

The twelfth annual conference of the women's auxiliaries of the Young Men's Christian Associations of New Jersey will take place in the Summit association's building Friday, November 9. There will be morning and afternoon sessions. The first will begin at 10:15 o'clock and the second at 2 o'clock. The program follows:

Morning—Mrs. William P. Bailey presiding. Devotional, Charles R. Scott, State secretary boys' work: Address, "The Young Man of Today," Rev. John McDowell, pastor Park Presbyterian church, Newark. Reports of auxiliaries, Atlantic City, Camden (railroad), Elizabeth, Freehold, Hoboken (railroad), Hudson City, Jersey City, Jersey City (railroad), Lakewood, Madison, Montclair, Montclair (colored), Morristown. Discussion. Business session. Luncheon.

Prisoners Sentenced.

In the Union County Court of Common Pleas at Elizabeth Wednesday a number of prisoners were arraigned, pleaded guilty and were sentenced. Henry Cuguelle, for breaking and entering from a car on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, got two years in State prison. William Lane, alias Arthur Rice, and William Morris, for breaking, entering and larceny, Morris got three years in State prison and Lane two years. William Semlar, for assault, got two years in State prison. Lane and Morris were the two thieves who broke into the residence of James Hastings, 441 Catherine street, Elizabeth, on the morning of October 17, and stole watches and rings valued at nearly $100.

Pauper Goes To Asylum.

Susan Harris, an inmate of the Industrial Home, was taken from there by the police Friday morning for removal to the State asylum. She had become unmanageable, and worried the Home management with an incorrigible tendency to discard all forms of clothing

MERRIMENT BY JINKIE IN THE CITY COURT

HARRY WILSON'S TALE BREAKS UP DIGNITY OF THE SESSION.

Smiling broadly above his service blouse, Harry Wilson, a naval jackie with the traditional taste and prodigality, enlivened the session of the city court Thursday. He said so many funny things he broke up the court completely.

Harry was taken in by Patrolman Payne at midnight while working the nightbell at the home of Dr. W. K. Browning, Park avenue and Sixth street. Judge Runyon was walking home when Harry fell into the hands of the cop and he was curious to discover what the husky jackie thought he needed a physician for. When he asked Harry, the latter smiled sheepishly.

"You see, I didn't know where I was and I couldn't see a blessed soul on the street to ask. All I could see was electric lights. So I went up and pushed the button to see what the main street was like. What got me was the way the woman in the house answered back through the button."

When the laugh that went up sounded Harry's cheerfulness increased. He evidently hadn't figured out yet that a speaking tube must have worked somewhere when the button was answered.

"I wasn't disorderly, was I?" anxiously queried Harry. "I could navigate all right only I was trying to navigate without a compass overland."

He couldn't remember how he got to Plainfield. He remembered being in New York, and when he woke up again he was in a field near the hospital. When Harry got to that part of his tale he was joyfully recognised by the police as the man for whom the hospital authorities begged headquarters to send the patrol wagon early in the evening. He scared the nurses by his appearance. When the wagon reached Park avenue and Randolph road Harry had disappeared. He said he thought he was in the Bronx when he woke up.

Harry told the judge he had spent $720, the savings of four years, in the month since he was discharged from the service.

"I'm going back into the service to save some more," he said. "I've got my discharge papers at the Y. M. C. A., and I'm off."

The laugh that went up shook the room. Harry grinned.

"There's a saloon next door," he said, and Judge Runyon choked as he waved him away. Harry went out with a nautical roll that put the finishing touch to his performance.

400 PEOPLE ATTEND TIMBO CLUB'S BALL.

Fourth Annual Affair Also Graced by Officeholders of Two Counties.

Successful both from a financial and social point of view, the fourth annual ball of the Timbo Social Club in Saengerbund Hall, Thursday, exceeded even the most sanguine expectations of the committee. It was attended by 400 dancers while something of a political aspect was lent by the appearance of some of Somerset and Union counties best known leaders. Among the latter were Mayor N. B. Smalley, Mayor James F. Buckle, former Mayor Charles J. Fisk, Assemblyman Randolph Perkins, County Recorder Frank H. Smith, Councilmen Herbert Buxton and Frank Randolph, Freeholder Wilbur and Andrew McCardell.

Dancing commenced at 8:30 and an hour later a grand march was held in which 100 couples participated. Suhr's orchestra furnished the music and though the floor was crowded to its capacity the greater part of the time everything was kept in perfect order by the management of Rudolph Kampf.

The committee in charge consisted of Henry Wierenga, chairman; William Doud, Erwin Y. Neighbor, Rudolph Kampf, Frank Schuck and Theodore J. LaRue.

AN INFALLIBLE WIFE.

Wilson Warwick, Colored, Penitentiary Bound by Her Testimony in Court.

Wilson Warwick, colored, was arrested Thursday afternoon at his home, 429 West Fourth street, on complaint of his wife who charged him with working off a jag by breaking up furniture. Warwick was penitentiary Chesterfielded when arraigned.

"My wife is infallible," he said, "and I will accept whatever punishment she fixes."

Mrs. Warwick evidently moved to emulation, courteously insisted that her husband receive the punishment. Diplomatic, as well as polite, Warwick suggested that the matter might be decided by withholding all punishment. Judge Runyon let it go at that.

Property Conveyances.

Among the recent property conveyances in Plainfield as filed in Registrar Smith's office are the following: Floret Wormser et ux to William M. Culbertson, southeasterly side South Second street, 237 feet southwesterly of Central N. J. Land Improvement Co., Plainfield, $1; William M. Culbertson to Isaac Risley, same as above, $1; Annie E. Barnaby et al. to Ella Bebout, northerly side Pemberton avenue, 150 feet westerly of Field avenue, Plainfield, $1.

NEW LAW FATTENS NEW JERSEY TREASURY

RAILROADS AND CANALS WILL HAVE TO PAY $3,509,000.

The State Board of Assessors filed at Trenton Thursday with the State Comptroller a schedule of taxes assessed against the railroad and canal companies under last year's law providing for the taxation of main stem property at an average rate. The average rate has been figured out to be $1.80 per $100, as against a rate of 50 cents per $100 under the old law.

The assessment for this year amounts to $194,000,000. Taxes that will have to be paid under the new law are $3,509,000, or more than three times as much as last year.

Of this amount the Pennsylvania Railroad Company pays $1,077,000, the New Jersey Central $765,000, and the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western $503,000.

Another Landmark to Go.

V. W. Nash, Sr., and William Claassen, who occupy the old building on Park avenue, adjoining Mrs. L. J. Denton, the florist, is planning to vacate the property this month and move to the vacant store in the Marsh building. Afterwards the old structure will be torn down by the New Jersey Central to make room for proposed improvements in its property.

DEDICATED PARISH HOUSE

Bishop Scarborough Praises St. Stephen's Rector and Flock Warmly.

MARKS THE ADVANCES

"St. Stephen's of Yesterday Not St. Stephen's of Today"—Reception and Supper In New Building.

The new parish house of St. Stephen's P. E. church received its final touch as a component part of the pretty little Netherwood house of worship Thursday afternoon. Through Bishop Scarborough, head of the New Jersey diocese, the Church pronounced it good and fitting, and dropped the ecclesiastical mantel over it.

The dedication service was held at 4 o'clock, before a large congregation. Rev. A. S. Peck, the rector; Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson, of Grace church; Rev. William R. Mulford, of All Saints' church, Fanwood, and Rev. Harris Rush, of Westfield, took part in the service.

The usual form of blessing for parish houses, prescribed by the prayer book, was followed. The vested church choir sang a special programme of hymns and canticles.

In his sermon, Bishop Scarborough spoke with warm approval of the parish house idea. It supplied, he said, the opportunity for a helpful and helpful social life, which was as much a part of church activity as the spiritual life. It brought the people of the parish together, and welded them into a church family.

The prelate spoke words of warm praise for the rector, whose second year in charge of the parish ended yesterday. The completion of the parish house, the bishop said, was the culmination of a great deal that had been accomplished under Mr. Peck's guidance. St. Stephen's of yesterday was far from being the St. Stephen's of today. The parish had advanced splendidly. The things that had been done, notably the erection of the parish house, enlarged its field and scope much, and the future was rich in promise, the fulfilment of which, by the grace of Providence, was assured.

The new house was gay last night, when a reception and musicale was held to mark the dedication. Miss Estabrook, soloist of the church of St. Mary the Virgin, New York, sang.

Bishop Scarborough spoke informally. He enlarged on his thought of the afternoon as to the great value of the parish house in church work. The Christian life, he said, was not meant to be a gave St. Stephen's' people a chance to effect the combination of church life and social enjoyment that was intended. He congratulated the parishioners and the people of the community on its erection.

The reception ended with a supper, catered by Mrs. Lena Hellstrom. The affair was arranged and conducted by the vestrymen, assisted by their wives. The vestry is made up of Dr. George Dupuy, Adam C. Hill, R. H. McCready, Alfred Lacey, C. H. Weeks, A. J. Beal, F. L. Hebert and H. S. Guinn.

Senator Everett Colby, who was a liberal contributor to the parish house fund, was unable to be present, but he sent a message of congratulations and regret.

Woman U. S. Attorney.

New York, Nov. 1.—Mrs. Mary Grace Quackenbos, one of the leading women lawyers of the city, was appointed special Assistant United States District Attorney by United States District Attorney Henry L. Stimson, yesterday. Mrs. Quackenbos is the first of her sex to be selectedfor such a position. The case Mrs. Qpackenbos will especially prosecute is that of the United States against Sigmund S. Schwartz, proprietor of an employment bureau in this city, charged with peonage.

Winter Swimmers.

New York, Nov. 3.—Organization was effected yesterday of the Bath Beach Cold Plunge League, whose members are to devote themselves to winter surf swimming. Magistrate James G. Tighe, who has hitherto beenregarded as the onlyBrooklynite to win honors in the winter, must look to his laurels, for members of the new league intend to set him a hard pace. To show the faith that is in them, the "cold plungers" took their first dip off Bay Twenty-second street yesterday.

Secretary Warburton to Speak Here.

George A. Warburton, secretary of the railroad branch of the Y. M. C. A., with headquarters on Madison avenue, New York, will be the guest of Rev. Dr. C. W. Parsons, pastor of Grace M. E. church, on Sunday, November 11, and will speak at the church in the morning and possibly at night. Mr. Warburton is a personal friends of Dr. Parsons, in fact it was the latter who started Mr. Wharburton in his present work. He is a born leader and a delightful speaker.

Frecholder Wilbur Busy.

Through the efforts of Freeholder S. P. T. Wilbur, culverts have been installed on Grove street near the bridge over Green brook, and Park avenue and Cedar brook, to carry off the surface water.

TRINITY ENJOYS A BIG OYSTER SUPPER

MEN OF THE CONGREGATION IN CHARGE OF THE AFFAIR.

"Oysters in Every Style," were the words which greeted those who patronized the oyster supper given in the lecture room of Trinity Reformed church, Thursday, by the Men's Association, of the church. The men deserve credit for the success of the affair, but in a measure the women of the church were of much assistance, although the men were supposed to be in full charge. The lecture room of the church was attractively decorated with pink and red bunting, and other colors, while a pretty candy booth was an attraction. A long string of roses that looked like real flowers was used with good effect in the decorations.

There were oysters stewed, oysters fried, oysters raw, and oysters creamed, while the accompaniments consisted of coffee, sandwiches cream and cake. The bivalves ed and served in the r way. The committee in ch supper consisted of R. chairman; M. F. Cano, Chs. Bonnell, F. Ackerman and William F. Oliver. Assisting the committee were Mrs. Cornelius Schenck, Mrs. R. E. Bohan, Mrs. Winfield Schomp, Mrs. Charles E. Ball, Mrs. Henry Van Name, Miss Gano, Mrs. Frank P. Storr, Mrs. J. A. Vroom and Mrs. William H. Kirch.

Those who waited on the tables were Irving Martin, Ira Vail, John Schofield, LeRoy Dayton, William Nischwitz, William Latourette, Clarence Rittenhouse, Bertram Leggett, Elmer Bohan and Walter Sutz.

The candy booth was in charge of William Debele, while Elmer Bohan looked after checking coats and hats and Charles M. Dolliver was at the door to receive tickets.

COUNCILMAN SMITH IS A LIBERAL OFFICIAL.

Wanted Borough Solons to Pay a Man for Sleeping in a Specified Place.

Through the wording of a resolution presented by Chairman Smith, of the Fire Committee, a vein of humor was injected in the meeting of the Borough Council, Friday, it made the request that "an additional man be secured to sleep in the engine house at nights at a salary of $5 a month." It was naturally inferred by most of the members present that in the event of its being passed the second would be put to some use but Councilman Lee was quite puzzled.

"Mr. Mayor," said he, "if we give a man this munificent salary of $5 a month, don't you think he ought to do something else for it beside sleeping?"

The Mayor opined that he should and Mr. Smith quickly changed the resolution so that it read "to sleep in the engine house nights and drive the chief's wagon, at all."

Before the matter was put to a vote, Mayor Smalley stated that he was not in favor of it for two reasons; first, because there were sufficient men in the house at night already, and secondly, the borough finances are not in as good shape as he would like to have them and $60 a year is a whole lot when there is no real need of its being spent. As a result the resolution was voted down, Smith and Lee alone favoring it, and the chief will either have to walk to fires or do his own driving.

SUES DOUBLY-WEDDED MAN.

Girl Asks $10,000 from Man Who Courted Her Before His Marriage.

New Brunswick, Nov. 3.—Papers have been served in a $10,000 damage suit brought by Miss Hattie Sedam, daughter of Joseph A. Sedam, against Robert Eastburn, who recently wed his wife, formerly Miss Maye Parsons, of Harrisburg, a second time.

Prior to his first marriage to Miss Parsons last January, it is alleged, he courted Miss Sedam. He eloped to New York with Miss Parsons, whom he met while on a gunning trip in Pennsylvania, where his daughter attended school. The couple were married at the Church of the Transfiguration (the Little Church Around the Corner), in New York. The bride's father objected to the runaway marriage and the couple were recently remarried at Harrisburg to satisfy her father.

Consolidated Water Companies.

Cranford, Nov. 3.—A meeting of the directors of the Union Water Company was held Wednesday at the office of the treasurer, B. F. Ham, in Cranford, for the purpose of consolidating the Plainfield Water Company with the Union Water Company, and preventing the purchase of the Plainfield plant by the city, which is committed to municipal ownership. A plot of ground on North avenue, Westfield, near the Central Railroad station, has been purchased, and the consolidated company's offices will be located there.

NEW SCHOOL CHAMPION

Chauncey Murphy Scores Highest Number of Points at Meet.

LED HIS RIVAL BY FOUR

Freshmen Gather In Some Glory by Winning the Inter-Class Tug-of-War.

Scoring four points more than his nearest rival, Chauncey Murphy, a sophomore, won the individual championship at the Plainfield High School's annual field meet, Friday afternoon, at the Driving Park. Murphy scored thirty points. William Douglas, a senior, finished second with twenty-six points. The class championship went to the seniors, who totalled fifty points. The sophomores followed with thirty.

The opening event was a hundred-yard dash, in which Murphy finished first, in eleven seconds; William Douglas second, Stanley Fisher third.

Murphy won first place in the standing broad jump, covering nine feet seven and a half inches; Fisher second, nine feet, six and a half inches; Douglas third, nine feet, six inches.

In the running high jump Victor Todd won first with four feet, nine and one-fourth inches; Douglas second, four feet eight and one-fourth inches; and Walter Caldwell third, four feet, seven and one-fourth inches.

First place in the pole vault was won by Murphy, six feet six inches; Brakeley second, six feet two inches; and William Lee Taylor, five feet, eight inches.

Douglas made the four hundred and forty yard run in one minute and four-fifths of a second; Brakeley second, Todd third.

The highest record in shot-putting was also made by Douglas, twenty-nine and a half feet; Caldwell twenty-seven feet, nine and a half inches; Fisher twenty-six feet, eleven and a half inches.

Edgar Freeman won first place in the sixty-yard dash. He made it in seven and two-fifths seconds. Russell Miller came in second and Alfred Brakeley third.

The running broad jump resulted in another victory for Murphy. He jumped seventeen feet, eight inches. Brakeley was second, sixteen feet, five and a half inches; and Douglas third, fifteen feet, eight inches.

Douglas won first place in the hammer throw, fifty-one feet, seven inches; Fisher second, forty-nine feet, six inches; Brakeley third, forty-nine feet, four inches.

On the home stretch of the half-mile run Douglas was leading, but his wind gave out and he fell. Murphy came in first, in two minutes and thirty-two seconds, Todd won second place, and Brakeley third.

The closing event was the tug-of-war. Six members from each class were chosen. The seniors defeated the sophomores, the juniors defeated the freshmen, and then won the event by defeating the seniors. Willie Lambert was the star tugger.

The freshman squad for the tug-of-war was composed of Kingslow, anchor, Scank, Brick, Rickets, Vail, T. Loizeaux, and Miller; sophomores, Dorothy, anchor, C. Loizeaux, Fountain, Morris, Osgood and Linderbury; juniors, Titsworth, anchor; Morrison, Lambert, Caldwell, Kirkner and Reid; seniors, Leggett, anchor, Smith, Kyte, Fisher, Tood and Douglas.

Fred Smith was clerk of the course. Lindsey Best and William Dayton were timekeepers and Fountain were the timekeepers, and Robins and Morris starters.

At the Christmas exercises of the High School Chauncey Murphy will be presented with a gold medal and a banner will be given to the class of '07. Every winner will receive a ribbon as an individual prize.

Jersey Central Siding.

For the purpose of further improving its facilities for taking care of the increasing business of the company in this city, the New Jersey Central has purchased a strip of land twenty feet wide, extending from the freight house to the Netherwood station on the north side of the railroad, where it will lay extra tracks for the storage of freight and merchandise in general. The company has purchased a strip from David T. Kenney, and another from the Hygeia Ice Co., paying the latter $3,500. The Hygeia's strip is 200 feet long. It will be necessary to remove the back section of the Hygeia building and the Dunham Grocery grain elevator to allow the improvement to be made. The work will be done by W. H. Kirch. For a long time the railroad company has been cramped for room in handling freight and it was decided to secure the additional land and put in a siding. The work on the improvement will be started at once.

Usher at Newark Wedding.

Philip S. Suffern, of this city, was one of the six ushers at the marriage Thursday evening of Miss Mary Lester, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick H. Larter, of Newark, to William Francis Price, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clinton D. Price, of East Orange. The ceremony took place in St. Luke's Methodist church in the presence of a large assemblage.

LITERARY.

Lewis B. Ely, author of the complete novel "Young Love and Old Hate," fills an editorial position on the St. Louis Republic. Maarten Maartens, author of "A Argument," writes under a pseudonym. Few people remember that his real name is Joost Marius Willem Van der Poorten-Schwartz. E. Ayrton-Zangwill, author of "The Demi-Man," is the wife of the distinguished Hebrew novelist and sociologist, I. Zangwill. She is an Englishwoman, and as Miss E. Ayrton she contributed to many magazines. E. F. Benson, author of "The Shootings of Achnaleish," won fame by his publication of "Dodo," and has advanced by his recent success, "The Angel of Pain." He is a son of the late Archbishop of Canterbury.

The National Magazine for November has a distinctively harvest festival Thanksgiving spirit. Its editor, Joe Mitchell Chapple, has taken a trip back to his old home in North Dakota, riding through the great wheat fields and rich country of that remarkable State, and he draws a vivid picture of the wealth and grandeur which the Red River of the west at the time looking from the windows of a Pullman) and this he compares with the conditions more than twenty years ago when he went with his father's household goods, and farm machinery and settled on a claim of wheat State. Senator Hansbrough and W. R. Kellogg are also contributors to the North Dakota articles, which form a great feature of this number.

The Popular Science Monthly for November contains the following articles: "University Control," by Prof. J. J. Stevenson; "The Value of Science," by M. H. Poincare; "Pathogenic Protozoa," by Professor Gary N. Calkins; "The Making of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado," by Professor A. R. Crook; "Notes on the Development of Telephone Service," by Fred De Land; "The Jews a Study of Race and Environment," by Dr. Maurice Fishberg; "John Stuart Mill," by P. F. Bicknell; "Changes of Climate," by Robert DeC. Ward; "The African Pygmies," by S. P. Verner; "The Rubbles of the Coal Tar Color Industry," by Sir William Henry Perkin;" "The Royal Society;" "The York Meeting of the British Association."

Judge Shute, Edward Stratemeyer, Everett T. Tomlinson, and Horatio Alger, Jr., occupy prominent positions in the November American Boy with their stirring serials. Scarcely second to these are short stories whose very titles should stir up the interest of the boys: "A Visit from the Cheyennes;" "The Lard Eaters;" "The Society of the F. P. F.;" "A Desperate Hero;" "Bill Bowen's Historic Walking Match;" "Tim's Pig;" "For the Glory of St. Mary's," a fine football tale.

The fact is that throughout the dry period of two and a half months, following the earthquake, when all sale of liquor was forbidden in San Francisco, the town was as gay as ever and the police had nothing to do.—Edwin Emerson, Jr., in Sunset Magazine for October.

That the Atlantic keeps in touch with an unusually wide range of interests is strikingly illustrated by the current November issue. The leading place has been given to a summary by S. W. McCall of the work of the Fifty-ninth Congress—the Congress that passed the Hale Bill, authorized free alcohol, and expended eight hundred millions of public money. The Massachusetts Congressman is noted for a habit of speaking his mind without fear or favor, and his brief review of national events will give him a good basis for judging of the character and significance of the latest session. David C. Brewer of the Supreme Court, who holds the next place in the number, has some interesting things to say about "The Ideal Lawyer." Forty-four years of experience in the law have not destroyed Justice Brewer's belief in his profession. Hosea B. Morse, a veteran in our Chinese Customs Service, describes some of the embarrassing dilemmas which confront the American consul on account of "extraterritoriality."

Routine Business Transacted.

Chiefly routine business was considered at the November meeting of the Union County Board of Freeholders, held in the Court House, Elizabeth, yesterday. A report was received informing the board that the Westfield bridge is completed and ready for use. The claim of a Cranford man, whose horse fell through a bridge at that place and was injured, was settled, the board giving the man $125. The adjournment was to November 22, for the purpose of paying election bills.

Song Recital and Festival.

There will be a song recital and festival of music at Reform Hall on Thursday night, November 14, under the direction of Chas. N. Brown, for the benefit of the Ebenezer Baptist church, colored. There will be a chorus of thirty-five voices and Mrs. Esther J. Holmes, an elocutionist, will take part. Fred White will be the piano soloist and J. H. Bolding's male quartette will sing. The committee in charge is as follows: President, Mrs. H. J. Smith; vice-president, Mrs. Sarah Humbles; Miss Rebecca Hamlet, Mrs. William Boyd, Miss E. Ford, Miss M. Tiner, Mrs. F. Yetman, Miss Carrie Thomas, Mrs. Charles Hardaway and Charles Hardaway.

BOROUGH COUNCIL PUTS BAN ON BLUE CONCRETE

MAKES GOOD WALLS BUT FOLKS DON'T LIKE COLOR COMBINATION.

In the regular order of business at the borough Council meeting, Friday, Mayor Smalley expressed his disapproval of bright blue concrete sidewalks that some of the North Plainfield property owners are putting down. Notices were recently issued to residents on various streets that walks were required and it was specified, according to the borough ordinance, that the customary flagging would be acceptable. Some of those served heard about a new blue concrete article and they had it laid in front of their premises. It has made a good walk, so far, but the dashes of cerulean hue here and there between the prosaic gray of the time-honored flagstones has made a striking combination of colors that is anything but harmonious. Pedestrians who have almost contracted psychic aura through the quick changes called the mayor's attention to the fact and when he looked for himself, he decided to have the conglomeration tabooed. Accordingly, the council will have the novelty flagging or concrete that corresponds in color for future new walks.

A communication was received from the Board of Health reminding the council that sewers were needed and not long since a sewage committee had been appointed but that nothing definite had resulted so far. Mayor Smalley informed the councilmen that the commission was hard at work and that in due time would submit a report of its investigations.

A petition was received from Clifford Manning asking for permission to erect a frame dwelling on the northeast corner of Washington avenue and Prospect place. It was granted after the plans had been examined. Mayor Smalley, as acting recorder, reported that there had been thirty arrests during October and that $53 in fines had been collected. At the conclusion of business adjournment was taken until November 9, when a proposition to overhaul the fire alarm system will be considered.

PRECIOUS STONES.

Perseverance Lodge Celebration.

Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., conducted a "Hallowe'en" social in its rooms following the regular business session Friday night. Vocal and instrumental selections were contributed by Judge Runyon, Elmer D. Cutting and others, and a professional monologist gave a good line of talk. At the close refreshments of punch, pies, doughnuts and coffee were served. The affair was arranged by Elmer D. Cutting, Philip Jahn, William Mills and Asa D. Pope.

Grape Tapioca.

To a quart of Concord grape juice add a cup and a half of sugar and a half cup of well-washed minute tapioca. Cook together in double boiler for half an hour. When partly cooled add the stiffy beaten whites of two eggs. Bake in buttered pudding dish in quick oven for fifteen minutes. Serve, when cold, in glasses, with a tablespoonful of sweetened grape juice.

Waterproof Glue.

A waterproof glue may be made from thre eparts of gum shellac and and one part of India rubber, these being dissolved separately in ether under the influence of heat, and the two solutions mixed and kept for a time in a sealed bottle. According to the "Iron Age" water, either hot or cold, and most acids and alkalies, will have no effect on the glue.

Quick Muffins.

Sift two cups of flour with a level tablespoonful of sugar, two level teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a saltspoonful of salt. Beat two eggs, add one cup of milk. Rub one level teaspoonful each of lard and butter into the flour and pour in the egg and milk. Heat and bake in well-greased muffin tins.

Harvest Home at the Hospital.

The annual harvest home festival will be held at Muhlenberg Hospital on Thursday afternoon, November 22, when it is expected that there will be the usual donations of fruits, vegetables and other useful things. The affair will be in charge of the members of the Women's Auxiliary to the Board of Governors, and tea will be served during the afternoon.

MASKED COTILLION IN ST. MARY'S SCHOOL HALL.

AFFAIR GIVEN BY THE CHURCH CHOIR PROVED HIGHLY ENJOYABLE.

One of the most enjoyable affairs that the members of St. Mary's parish have takes part in for many monthswas conducted in the Parochial school hall Wednesday by members of the church choir. It was in the nature of a masked cotillion and was attended by 150 young people. They came in all manner of costumes and disguises and merriment reigned from eight o'clock until well after midnight.

The cotillion was led by Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Courain, of Jersey City, former local residents, and they did it in the manner that has given them a reputation and made their services exactly sought after. Many new figures were introduced and as on a former occasion when a cotillion was held in the hall, the participants carried long strips of paper with them, so that eventually they were enmeshed in the glittering material. Favors of whistling birds, pumpkins and fans were given the dancers, while confetti was thrown about in bewildering clouds.

The masks were kept on until 11 o'clock and the hilarity was increased a hundred fold when the identities were revealed. Formal dancing followed and refreshments were served shortly after midnight.

The committee of arrangements from the choir comprised Joseph O'Keefe, Theodore Shirley, Bryan Hanrahan, Miss May Smith, Miss Alice Keely and Mrs. Edward Feiring. Music was furnished by Allen Squier.

HOLY CROSS ELEVEN DEFEATS SLOCUM JUNIORS.

Church Boys Rout Their Opponents by the Big Score of 42 to 0.

The Holy Cross eleven defeated the Slocum Juniors on the North Plainfield Cricket Field, Saturday, by the overwhelming score of 42 to 0. The visitors were no match at all for the church boys, who simply walked away with them. The borough team had control of the ball from the start to the finish of the contest. The Holy Cross team will play a return game in Orange on Saturday, November 10. The first game between these teams resulted in a tie, the score being 6 to 6. This morning's lineup was as follows:

HOLY CROSS.		SLOCUM.
R. Vail	right end.	Mehalnney
Bristol	right tackle.	Leland
Little	right guard.	Denlinger
Stien	center.	Hockiss

Will Practice in Newark.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Barton, of Westervelt avenue, contemplate moving to Newark about December 1, where Mr. Barton will practice law. He has been in the office of Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh. Some time ago he was admitted to the bar and has practiced to some extent in this city.

PRIZES ARE OFFERED IN BOWLING TOURNEY.

John G. McLaughlin Announces Rules For the Season's Contests.

The Inter-City Bowling tournament to be rolled at the Plainfield Bowling Academy, season of 1906-07, is open to clubs from Garwood, Westfield, Scotch Plains, Plainfield, Bound Brook, Somerville and Raritan. John G. McLaughlin, of the borough, who is at the head of the affair, has announced the following prizes:

First team prize, $40; second team, $20; third team, $10; high team score, $10; high individual score, $10. A bowler to be eligible for an individual prize must roll in at least two-thirds of the games in the tournament.

The tournament will be rolled under the rules of the American Bowling Congress and such other rules as may be adopted by the management. Each club must submit in writing the names of ten members to represent each team in the tournament, said names to be filed with the management, and no change or substitution will be permitted. There will be bowling on Tuesday and Thursday nights, beginning Tuesday, November 13, at 8 o'clock. Applications for membership with an entrance fee of $10 should be made to Warren MacLaughlin, 117 East Second street.

SMALLEY SAYS FREEHOLDERS' BOARD SHOULD GO

Borough Mayor Favors Proposition to Substitute a County Commission in Somerset.

SOME HARD FACTS

Corporation Counsel Reed Adds His Approval to Scheme Upon Which Voters Will Act on Tuesday.

For the benefit of Councilman Lee, who raised the question as to what advantage North Plainfield would gain by the change, Mayor N. B. Smalley and Corporation Counsel Charles A. Reed gave a full explanation of the proposed abolition of the Somerset county Board of Freeholders, at last Friday's Council meeting. Both officials are in favor of the change and from present indications the borough will give a large affirmative vote.

"There is just this much about it," said the mayor, "we are receiving a great many complaints about the taxes and so far it has been charged up against the County Board of *Equalization. The Board of Free*holders asked for an increase of $20,000 this year over last and the State school tax has been raised, while the rate for the borough itself has been lower. A study of the twenty thousand dollar increase for the county will show that affairs are conducted all right locally but that attention is needed in another direction."

"The manner in which the freeholders distribute money in the county, as far as North Plainfield is concerned, is enough to have anyone vote against keeping them in office. All the borough wants is fair play. It pays a big share of Somerset's tax but it does not begin to get a proper return. We pay absolute cash for what the county calls for but have to collect our money as best we can.

"There was an increase in county taxes this year and I think that there will be another increase next year, regardless of the fact that the commission is in. In the past ten years there were fifty miles of roads built in Somerset that are now at the charge of the county and more must be made and it's going to cost a whole lot of money. They were constructed under the supervision of incompetent men and the tax payers must suffer. That's one of the problems that confront the people in this matter of freeholders. In regard to the borough's share of tax, I don't maintain that its property is assessed at full value but I think it's plenty high enough."

Corporation Counsel Reed supplemented the mayor's remarks with a further explanation of the proposed change, dwelling on the fact that if the Board of Freeholders was abolished, the commission which would take its place would be composed of men of intelligence. They would be paid a salary sufficiently big enough to have them devote their entire time to the office and exercise proper care and supervision over the expenditure of sums as high as $150,000 annually.

"If you had a business involving that amount of money in a year," said Mr. Reed, addressing the Council, "you would exercise judgment in spending the sum with which to have the handling of it. It is just as important that the county's affairs should be as carefully looked after."

KITCHEN HELPS.

To open a fruit jar try placing a warm flatiron on the cover for a few moments.

To remove the scraping of cake batter from the bowl an ordinary calling card is better than a spoon.

To prevent a gas stove oven from rusting, as it does if care is not taken rub the enamel inside with a flannel cloth saturated with sweet oil.

An admirable plan for cleansing a coffeepot and the surest method of keeping it occasionally with strong hot borax water.

It is a good place for the rolling pin may be made by screwing two curtain pole brackets to the inner side of a kitchen closet door just far enough apart to hold each handle to be used.

It is a good plan to tack a piece of white oilcloth on the wall back of each of the kitchen tables, as otherwise it will soon become discolored and greasy—a thing that is almost unavoidable otherwise.

Real Man.

"Just one," said Mr. Nervey, and, leaning forward, he kissed her.

"Sir," she cried, "you forget yourself!"

"That's so. That one was for you," he said, and, leaning forward again, he answered another. "One more for me."—Philadelphia Press.

CITY FATHERS' ROUTINE

Minor Business Transacted at the November Session of the Common Council.

PETITIONS AS USUAL

Some Requests Granted and Others Referred—To Meet Next Monday Night.

There was a considerable amount of routine business transacted at the November meeting of the Common Council Monday night. The ordinance providing for the vacating of Dunham street, near All Souls' church, was adopted on third reading, after a public hearing was given. No one was present to speak for or against the proposed action.

Horace Coddington's request to move a house from 630 East Front street to a site on East Second street, on his own property, was granted, on motion of Mr. Mellick. A petition was received from three-quarters of the property-owners on Arlington avenue asking that that avenue, between Fourth and Fifth streets be widened to conform to the width of the street between Fifth and Sixth streets. The petition was referred to the street committee.

Residents of West Front street asked that lights be placed on that street, 300 feet east of Jefferson avenue. The petition was referred to the light committee.

The J. D. Lolzeaux Lumber Company asked for permission to use cement blocks in the construction of a house on the southside of Evergreen avenue, and Mr. Mellick offered a resolution, which was adopted, granting the petition, provided it is approved by Building Inspector Doane.

J. W. Reinhart, of Belvidere avenue, who overpaid $54.07 in taxes, asked to have that amount returned to him, and he submitted a verification of the facts in a letter written by Tax Collector J. W. Murray, Jr. The matter was referred to the finance committee.

Woolston & Buckle and others petitioned for electric lights on Evergreen avenue, where eight new houses are being erected. The matter was referred to the light committee, as was also a petition from residents asking for a light on Norwood avenue, near Green Brook. The Public Service Corporation informed the Common Council that two lights, as ordered, one on Rock avenue and the other on East Second street, have been placed in position. A similar report was received concerning a light placed on Leland avenue, and the reports were filed after having considered by the light committee.

Dr. Albert Pittis, of East Front street, informed the Common Council that he has a barn suitable for the keeping of the patrol wagon and horses, which he is prepared to lease to the city, if it has secured no other quarters in view. The matter was referred to the police committee.

J. G. Staats resigned his position as a regular fireman, and Patrolman James McKeon resigned his position. Both resignations were accepted and the appointment by the Mayor of Frank Ingraham in place of Mr. Staats, was confirmed.

Street Commissioner Gavett reported that from October first to November first, thirty sewer permits were granted and $30 was turned over to the city treasury. Building Inspector T. O. Doane reported that seventeen building permits were granted during the past month.

Clerk Horace G. Adams, of the district court reported receipts for the past month of $155.09 and disbursements of $53.90.

A resolution offered by Mr. Ginna, which was adopted, provided for the issuance of three $1,000 street improvement bonds, in anticipation of the collection of taxes.

Four new fire hydrants, one at Leland avenue and George street, a second at Sherwin and George street, a third at East Second street and Leland avenue, and a fourth at Sumner avenue and East Second street, were ordered located in accordance with a resolution offered by Mr. Mellick. He stated that fifteen houses are now in course of erection and he believed that such improvements should be encouraged. These houses will cost between $6,000 and $8,000 each.

On motion by Mr. Hubbard an electric light was ordered placed under the Leland avenue railroad bridge. He stated that his attention had been called to the darkness at that point and believed that a light should be placed. It is left for Chief Kiely to designate the exact place to locate the light.

Mr. Ginna moved that when the Common Council adjourn it be to meet on Monday night, November 12, to give a public hearing on the proposed action of acquiring land for a pumping station on Randolph road for the improvement of the sanitary sewer system.

GOT MORE VOTES THAN MAYORALTY CANDIDATE

J. W. MURRAY, JR., RUNS A BIT AHEAD OF C. J. FISK.

Murray, in his lone jog back into the collectorship, passed Fisk in his solitary sauntor to the mayoralty. The collector got twenty-five more votes than the head of the municipal ticket. The difference in the votes doesn't mean anything in particular, except that it gives Mr. Murray a chance to smile at Mr. Fisk in memory of the jollying they indulged in over the prospects of one running ahead of the other.

There were two more votes for Murray in the second district of the First ward; five more in each of the districts of the Second; five and four respectively in the First and Second districts of the Third where both candidates live and four more in the Third district of the Fourth.

The vote by wards for the unopposed candidates:

E. B. SCHOOMAKER WON ELECTION DAY CUP

C. A. REED AND J. O. M'KELVY GOT PARK GOLF CUPS.

There was a large field out at the Plainfield Country Club, yesterday morning and afternoon, several events having been arranged for the holiday. The course was crowded throughout the day. E. B. Shoemaker won the Election Day cup with a net score of 79. These scores were returned:

E. B. Shoemaker, 82, 3—79; C. B. Morgan, 83, 2—81; Arthur Murphy, 88, 7—81; Edward T. Wilson, 92, 10—82; Frank O. Reinhart, 85, 0—83; Frank C. Talmadge, 85, 0—83; W. Lester Glenney, 84, 0—84; E. C. Fisher, 121, 37—84; J. J. Blackmore, 123, 24—99.

These scores were posted for the November Handicap cup:

Morning—E. B. Shoemaker, 82, 3—79; Arthur Murphy, 87, 7—80; C. B. Morgan, 83, 2—81; W. Lester Glenney, 83, 0—83; Frank C. Talmadge, 83, 0—83; E. C. Patterson, 113, 27—86; J. J. Blackmore, 122, 24—99. Afternoon—C. B. Morgan, 83, 2—81; Frank O. Reinhart, 82, 0—82; W. Lester Glenney, 84, 0—84; Frank C. Talmadge, 88, 0—88.

In the second round for the Golf Committee consolation cup the result was as follows:

Howard W. Beebe beat L. L. Tweedy, by default; H. D. Hibbard beat G. F. Schoonmaker, by default; Arthur Murphy beat Morris J. Dumont, 6 up and 4 to play; Edward T. Wilson beat E. E. Iremonger, 5 up and 4 to play; L. A. Chase beat Chas. A. Reed, by default; Charles A. Stover beat H. A. Stevenson, 3 up and 1 to play; C. F. Abbott beat Robert Abbott, by default; Frank C. Talmadge beat W. D. Riggs, 2 up and 1 to play. Third round—H. W. Beebe beat H. D. Hibbard, 6 up and 7 to play; Arthur Murphy beat Edward T. Wilson, 4 up and 3 to play; L. A. Chase beat Charles A. Stover, 1 up (21 holes); Frank C. Talmadge beat C. F. Abbott, 5 up and 3 to play.

In the initial play for the Inconsolables' cup W. Riggs beat Geo. F. Schoonmaker, by default; Morris J. Dumont beat Edward J. Patterson, by defaut, and E. B. Shoemaker beat Stuart H. Patterson, by default. The semi-finals will be played on Saturday.

The active season closed at the Park Golf Club yesterday with final play for the President's and Club trophies, the latter a scratch event. Charles A. Reed won the former cup with a total of 16 points, while Rev. J. O. McKelvey won the other cup with a total of 18 points.

Martine Carries Madison.

Madison, Nov. 7.—James E. Martine, Democratic candidate for Congress in the Fifth district, carried Madison by a plurality of 40 votes over Representative Charles N. Fowler, Republican. The vote was 450 to 410. For the assembly the votes were as follows: R. J. Chaplin and Henry W. Buxton, both Republicans, 414 and 415, respectively; August H. Bartley and Samuel Brant, both Democrats, 452 and 456.

CONGRESSMAN WOOD BY 4,000 MAJORITY.

The Fourth Congressional district re-elected Ira W. Wood, Rep., to Congress yesterday by a majority of 3,-

Congressman Ira W. Wood.

500, thereby indicating that the people very properly approve Mr. Wood's career in congress. Mr. Wood carried the First ward of Trenton, Mr. Southwick's home ward, by 297 majority. The following shows the vote:

	Wood.	Southwick.
Hunterdon	.....	559
Somerset	1000	....
Mercer	3050	....
	4050

Wood's majority 3,500.

LIVELY IN FANWOOD.

The Fanwood Republicans won a hot fight for councilmen. Charles R. Vincent, Thomas S. Young, Chas. Sternheim defeated George E. Cruse, John Uhler and H. H. Seaman by 20 to 22 votes. J. H. L. Todd, a Republican, was on both tickets, as was Collector Charles Sheelen, named for re-election. H. G. Young defeated F. J. Palmer for assessor. The party workers hustled hard all day, and made the election one of the liveliest outside the cities.

The Congressional and county tickets were voted as follows: For Congress, Fowler, R., 52; Martine, D., 28; for assembly, Perkins, R., 52; Moxon, R., 52; Tillman, R., 52; Desmond, D., 22; Hague, D., 22; Coulter, D., 22; for coroner, Lufburrow, R., 51; Wagner, D., 22.

FIRE TRUCK DAMAGED.

Rear Wheels Strike a Pole While Making a Turn.

While on the way to a grass fire at Seventh street and Monroe avenue at 6:40, last night, the hook-and-ladder truck from headquarters ran afoul of a telephone pole at Seventh street and Park avenue. Daniel Kelderhaus, who was driving, swerved the front wheels into Seventh street safely but the rear pair took too wide a sweep and they caught the pole. William Jaeger, who was substituting as tillerman, failed to avoid the collision but without success and barely saved himself from being thrown headlong into the street.

The rear wheels were jammed under the body of the truck and it was necessary to use a jack to get them in the proper place. There were a couple of minor breaks on the vehicle that will put it out of commission for a few days. The fire wasn't worth the trouble of going out.

MR. FISK'S COMMENT.

I am very well satisfied with the result in Plainfield. The Republicans were united. The "new idea" men all worked together for the success of the ticket. Martine made a fine showing, I must admit. He not only had the labor vote but a large number of personal friends and admirers. The result shows very plainly that the success of the Republicans so far as the Assembly ticket is concerned is due to the vote in Plainfield. In other words Plainfield saved the day for the party and I congratulate my fellow Republicans.

G. O. P. Controls County Board.

The Union county Board of Freeholders will stand twelve Republicans to eight Democrats as a result of yesterday's election. Woodruff was returned from Roselle Park and Meisel was returned from Springfield. Wahl and Potter were defeated in the three cornered fight in New Providence by Jones.

Vote for Squire and Constable.

In the First district of the First ward, Peter Thompson received 351 votes for Justice of the Peace, and Constable Peter V. Weaver received 352. In the Second district Mr. Thompson and Mr. Weaver each received 169 votes. This was the only ward in the city having candidates for these offices.

Republicans Sweep Chatham.

Chatham, Nov. 7.—The entire Republican ticket here was elected by a majority ranging from thirty to sixty. For Congress, Fowler (Rep.) received 58 majority; Chaplin and Buxton (Reps.) 51 and 46, respectively, for Assembly. Hitchings beat Smith for coroner by 59.

Got Large Majorities.

S. P. T. Wilbur and J. Hervey Doane made remarkably good runs for freeholder.

DUNELLEN HAS A COLLECTORSHIP FIGHT

TIE VOTE AND THE RESULT WILL BE DECIDED BY THE COURT.

Looking for one error, the election officers of Dunellen found another, last night, and as a result they didn't get through counting until after breakfast time this morning, and I. J. Stiles, Republican candidate for collector, is making preparations to bring the ballot box into court. He claims a tie between him and his Dittes and Moynihan. In totalling the ballots last night, an error in the votes for Fedderman and Coriell, councilmanic candidates, was discovered, and a recount began. At that time, Moynihan was checked up as one vote better than Stiles. Before the recount ended an error was discovered that wiped out the plurality of one, and established a tie, on the official count, between the collectorship candidates.

Mr. Stiles protested against the rejection of two ballots cast for him as defective. They were thrown out because his name was written in "Stiles." Mr. Stiles declared this morning that the intent of the voters who cast those ballots was plain, and he intended to have the court's safeguard them in their constitutional rights.

The Republicans won on the county ticket, and lost all but one Councilman on the local ticket. The vote:

For Congress, Howell (R.), 193; Harvey (D.), 114. For State Senator, Jackson (R.), 188; Stiles (D.), 181. For Assembly, Drake (R.), 192; Crowther (R.) 189; Haines (R.), 192; Ramsey (D.), 177; Kerr (D.), 177; Haggerty (D.), 177. For Coroner, Beekman (R.), 194; Morgan (D.), 177. For Assessor, Fisher (R.), 178; Peters (D.), 193. For Collector, Stiles (R.), 184; Moynihan (D.), 184. For Council, full term, Fedderman (R.), 174; Coriell (R.), 183; Richards (D.), 191; Starker (D.), 190. For Council, one year, Churchill (R.), 204; Bolard (D.), 159.

MORRIS KEEPS IN FOLD.

Republican Assembly Delegation Chosen—Morristown Republicans Win.

Morris county's Assembly delegation for the coming legislative session will again be Republican, R. J. Chaplin having been re-elected and Henry W. Buxton having been chosen as a fellow-lawmaker by 1,800 plurality. The only defeated Democratic rivals were Samuel Brant and Augustus H. Bartley, who had been placed on their party ticket after Edward A. Quayle, of Morristown, and Whitfield B. Gillen, of Dover, had declined the nominations.

Fowler, Republican, for Congress, carried Morris by 1,500.

Morristown elected Alexander Bennole, Republican, over Charlton A. Reed, Democrat, for Mayor, by 100 majority, and three aldermen out of four, Messlar, Democrat, in the Second ward, being elected. The Republicans will retain a majority in the Board of Aldermen.

Assemblyman-elect Buxton has been a resident of Morristown since boyhood. He is engaged in business in Newark and is a graduate of Princeton.

SOUTH PLAINFIELD, TOO.

The Republicans had an easy time in South Plainfield. They cast 102 ballots to their opponents' 61, and practically all the candidates got nearly the total vote. The figures: For Congress, Howell, R., 96; Harvey, (D.), 62. For State Senator, Jackson, R., 86; Silzer, D., 69; for Assembly, Drake, R., 96; Crowther, R., 98; Haines, R., 98; Ramsey, D., 62; Kerr, D., 61; Haggerty, D., 62; for coroner, Beekman, R., 81; Morgan, D., 78; for collector, La Rue, R., 100; Kelly, D., 59; for assessor, Corbell, R., 86; Nelson, D., 70; for township committee, Hamilton, R., 104; Geary, D., 56; for justice of the peace, Von Minden, R., 98; Rogers, D., 61.

Mountain Results.

Out of 305 votes polled in North Plainfield township, the Republicans got 105 and the Democrats 65, the Prohibitionists 5 and the Socialists 1. Demler, for freeholder, and one other of the local candidates on the Democratic ticket, won over their opponents. The proposition to abolish the freeholders was voted down by 107 to 23. The vote: For Congress, Wood (R.), 106; Southwick (D.), 58. For Assembly, Smalley (R.), 110; Steele (D.), 61. For Coroner, Wild (R.), 105; Bowers (D.), 65. For Freeholder, Titus (R.), 58; Demler (D.), 112. For Tax Collector, Ackor (R.), 105; Bodin (D.), 89. For Township Committeeman, Beetham (R.), 77; Brokaw (D.), 85.

Meet After Many Years.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Polkinghorne, of Golconda, Nev., are visiting the former's sister, Mrs. Paul Symons, of Park street. It is the first time that Mr. Polkinghorne and Mrs. Symons have met in twenty-seven years and is former's only visit East since 1871.

G.O.P. LOSSES IN STATE

Democrats Gain Three Senatorships and Twenty-six Assemblymen.

GOOD BYE, MR. DRYDEN

United States Senator's Chances Are Slim—Hudson and Essex Counties Democratic.

Returns from yesterday's election in New Jersey show that although the ship of State has again been confided to the Republican party, the chances are very unfavorable for United States Senator John F. Dryden's re-election by the incoming Republican Legislature. The "cashless campaign" of his Democratic rival, Colonel Edwin A. Stevens, may not have been in vain.

Though the new excise law or "bishops' act" played as important part in the contest because the liquor men are bent on its repeal, it is not believed that the statute will be effaced for more than a year at least, unless indications belie the prevalent belief. It is not likely the Republican majority in the Senate will reverse its record of last winter, and if it does not that alone would save the act.

Of the twenty-one members of the Senate there are thirteen holdovers, all of the thirteen having voted for the bishops' law at that time. It is confidently felt that none of these will vote for its repeal. With the Republican Senators chosen yesterday there are enough in the upper house in favor of the law to warrant the belief that it will not be disturbed for some time to come.

The big victories of the Democrats in Hudson county over the Republican regulars, or Dickinson machine tickets, were features of the election that made the Republican bosses wince.

In Middlesex county the election of Senator William H. C. Jackson, Republican, over George S. Silzer, Democrat, is in doubt.

The triangular fight for Senator in Burlington county was won by Samuel K. Robbins, Republican, his competitors being Arthur J. Collins, Democrat, and George Wildes, Independent, who is a Colbyite.

The bitter Senatorial contest in Cape May County resulted in the election of Robert E. Hand, the Republican candidate, over Samuel E. Ewing, Democrat, who was indorsed by the Prohibitionists and by the Roosevelt Republicans.

The New Legislature.

The new Republican Legislature elected yesterday in New Jersey will stand on joint ballot.

	Rep.	Dem.

HUGHES WINS

Elected Governor of New York by 67,500 Plurality.

Charles Evans Hughes, Republican, was elected Governor of the State of New York yesterday by a plurality of 67,500 votes over William Randolph Hearst, Democratic and Independence League candidate. The city vote for Hearst was sufficient for a moment to stem the tide of up-State ballots for Hughes. The Republican candidate reached the Bronx with a plurality of 129,750. Odell, in 1902, had only 131,000 plurality, while Higgins two years ago reached the Bronx with 160,000 plurality.

Hearst lost Erie, Schenectady, and Monroe counties, in all of which he had confidently counted on beating his opponent. Albany went against him. Westchester gave Hughes the remarkable plurality of 9,000. Onondaga contributed 8,500, Chautauqua 6,000, St. Lawrence, Ulster, Oneida, Rensselaer, Orange, Oswego, Broome, Greene, Herkimer, Jefferson, Montgomery, Fulton, Washington and Wayne all added to the total in the Hughes column.

Hughes carried all the up-State counties with the exception of Chemung, which gave Hearst 300 plurality; Hamilton, which gave him 116, and Schoharie, where the Democratic candidate got a plurality of 250. Two years ago Chemung gave Higgins a plurality of 1,140, and the Democratic plurality in Schoharie was 648.

Erie county, Democratic State Chairman Conners' stronghold, which the Hearst forces had been claiming by 5,000, went for Hughes by about 1,500.

JERSEY'S STAFF IN NEXT CONGRESS

DEMOCRATS CAPTURE FOUR OF TEN SEATS IN THE LOWER HOUSE.

For the ten seats in the national House of Representatives to which New Jersey is entitled, the Republicans, who have been in control of nine of them, yesterday succeeded in electing four of their candidates, one district is in doubt and the rest of the Congressional berths went to Democratic nominees.

James E. Martine's defeat by Representative Charles N. Fowler in the Fifth district was a keen disappointment to himself and friends.

In the Sixth district former Representative William Hughes, Democrat, beat George H. Burke, Republican.

As was expected, Eugene W. Leake, Democrat, defeated Charles E. Pickett, Republican, in the Ninth district. Pickett is the superintendent of the Bayonne refining plant of the Borax Trust.

As usual the Tenth district went overwhelmingly Democratic. James A. Hamill winning over Howard B. Cruse, Republican, by a large plurality.

The fight for the Second district Congressional berth made by Councilman William Riddle, of Atlantic City, the Labor and Lincoln Republican nominee, was not a serious factor, as his candidacy has been repudiated by President Ford, of the State Federation of Labor, and President Dennis A. Hayes, of the National Bottle Blowers' Association.

The estimated pluralities of the successful candidates are as follows, the asterisks indicating re-election:

First district—*Henry C. Loudenslager (Rep.), 9,000. Loudenslager's plurality in 1904 was 10,804.

Second district—*John J. Gardner (Rep.), 8,000. Gardner's plurality in 1904 was 13,261.

Third district—Benjamin F. Howell (Rep.), 4,500. Howell's plurality in 1904 was 6,703.

Fourth district—*Ira W. Wood (Rep.), 4,000. Wood's plurality in 1904 for the full term was 5,626 and 5,655 for the short term.

Fifth district—Charles N. Fowler (Rep.), 1,000. Fowler's plurality in 1904 was 5,234 over Martine.

Sixth district—William Hughes (Dem.), 600. The Republican candidate in 1904, Henry C. Allen, won over William Hughes (Dem.) by a plurality of 510.

Seventh district — Election in doubt. Parker's plurality in 1904 was 11,231.

Eighth District—Le Gage Pratt (Dem.), 2,000. The Republican candidate in 1904, William H. Wiley, was elected over Seymour (Dem.) by a plurality of 12,541.

Ninth district—Eugene W. Leake (Dem.), 2,000. In 1904 the Republican candidate, Marshall Vanderbilt Winkelman, won by a plurality of 2,425.

Tenth district—James A. Hamill (Dem.), 8,000. Allan L. McDermott, the Democratic nominee in 1904, won by a plurality of 5,334 over Walker (Rep.). Hamill was Democratic leader in the New Jersey House of Assembly two years ago.

MANY SPLIT TICKETS HERE.

Another Feature of Election in New Providence Was Tie in the Mayoralty Contest.

New Providence, Nov. 7.—Split tickets marked the election in both the borough and township. James E. Martine, the Democratic Congressional candidate, was beaten in the borough but carried the township. The vote in the township follows: Congress—Fowler (Rep.), 99; Martine (Dem.), 56. Assembly—Perkins (Rep.), 51; Moxon (Dem.), 50; Tillman (Rep.), 50; Desmond (Dem.), 42; Hague (Rem.), 42; Coulter (Dem.), 42. The vote in the borough follows: Congress—Fowler (Rep.), 99; Martine (Dem.), 78. Assembly—Perkins (Rep.), 97; Moxon (Rep.), 98; Tillman (Rep.), 99; Desmond (Dem.), 79; Coulter (Dem.), 77; Hague (Dem.), 78.

A feature of the election here was the fact that in the contest for Mayor of the borough Thomas B. Crane, the Democratic candidate, and Alfred G. Mason tied at 89 votes each. The ballots were twice recounted, but the result was the same.

SUMMIT HITS PERKINS.

No excitement above the ordinary was occasioned by the election in Summit. The vote as a whole was lighter than last year, and this with a larger poll list. The Republican ticket throughout the city was voted with Randolph Perkins, Assembly candidate for re-election, running behind his ticket.

For Congress, Charles N. Fowler, Republican, won out over James E. Martine, Democrat, by a majority of 213. On the Assembly ticket, Randolph Perkins, Peter Tillman and John R. Moxon defeated James E. Desmond, Joseph Hague and Henry C. Coulter, Democrats, by an average of 212. For coroner, Lufburrow defeated Wagner, Democrat, by 265.

Washington for Martine.

Washington, N. J., Nov. 7.—Only sixty per cent. of the votes of the borough were polled in Washington, and there were only a few workers at the polls. James E. Martine, Democratic Congressional candidate, carried the town by forty-two plurality.

SENATOR ACKERMAN REMAINS FIRM FOR STOKES

After Visit to Trenton, Union's Senator Says He is Encouraged By the Outlook.

OTHERS FAVOR HIM

Little Doubt He Would Be Admitted to Senate If Elected—Kean Optimistic for Dryden.

State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman after returning from Trenton last night expressed himself as agreeably surprised at the number of legislators who are desirous of seeing Governor Stokes elected to the United States Senate. To a representative of The Daily Press, he stated that there is an air of independence being exhibited by many Republican members of the Legislature and a growing restiveness at being told what they are expected to do when the caucuses are held.

Mr. Ackerman declared that expressions of approval at the prospect of seeing Governor Stokes honored have reached him from unexpected quarters and that the undercurrent to the Governor is manifest on every hand. It is the belief of those who have examined into the question that in the event of his election, there would be no doubt of his being admitted to the Senate and thus far Mr. Ackerman has heard of on one who regrets having declared for the Governor for the place.

United States Senator John Kean declared last night he did not think there was the least doubt that the Union county members who have declared against Mr. Dryden would abide by the Republican caucus. Senator Kean asserted that from the present outlook he thought Mr. Dryden's success was assured.

COMMUNICABLE DISEASE CASES ON INCREASE.

Only Slight, However, According to October Report of Health Board.

Reports showing the sanitary condition to be excellent were presented at the November meeting of the Board of Health, yesterday afternoon. The number of cases of communicable diseases reported during the past month, although a slight increase over previous months, continued to be low. There was one case of scarlet fever, five of diphtheria and five of tuberculosis reported. Four deaths resulted from tuberculosis.

Applications for permits to sell milk were granted to Fred W. Dunn, Woodbrook Farms, Charles B. Wicht and Neuman Brothers. William Winkleholt was granted a permit to collect garbage; Swift & Co., to collect offal and B. F. Ruckman to remove dead animals. The plumber's bonds of A. L. Carney, Daniel Hibbitts and Samuel Allcock were ordered filed.

The following returns were made to the office during October: Marriages, 24; births, 23; deaths, 20.

CONGREGATIONALIST CLUB.

First Fall Meeting With Magician Present, Last Night.

The Men's Club of the Congregational church held its first fall meeting last night. Bogart, the magician, was presented by the entertainment committee. Bogart is a humorist as well as a magician, and the members enjoyed his programme very much.

The weather was against the performer and the committee, but the attendance made up in enjoyment what it lacked in size. Refreshments were served. F. A. Weeks and Charles A. Rice were the committee.

A series of social meetings has been planned by the club. Another will be held December 18.

Obstructions Being Removed.

William Hand & Sons, of East Second street, began the work this morning of putting in position the iron girder and marble column at Charles P. Sebring's new building on West Front street, adjoining the Babcock building. The girder and column have occupied a place on the sidewalk for some time and it is partly with a desire to remove the obstructions that Mr. Sebring is having them put in place.

Sesame Club Meeting.

The Sesame Club will meet tomorrow morning at the residence of Mrs. A. H. Chamberlain, No. 313 East Sixth street.

BUSINESS BRISK WITH COUNTY TAX BOARD

BULK OF COMPLAINTS FROM PLAINFIELD AND CRANFORD.

The County Board of Taxation had a lively session in the county court house, Elizabeth, yesterday morning. The members expected it, and were prepared. In fact they had anticipated a much more exciting time judging from the manner in which two of them discussed the matter afterward. Altogether, they told a repoyter, there were about fifty complaints received. None of them, however, were of a very serious nature. But the bulk of them came from Plainfield and Cranford, the former place making the most perplexing showing. Consequently, the Plainfield assessors were summoned to the office of the county officials to aid in the unraveling of any difficult problems that might be presented.

There was one case from this city in which, it was asserted, the parties had sworn off their personal property in New York, only to be caught in the assessment net spread for residents of Union county.

AFTER 6 MONTHS DELAY WEST END AVENUE OPENS.

Bridge Finished and Thoroughfare Can Now Be Used.

The new West End avenue bridge was practically completed yesterday, and that thoroughfare has been opened for traffic again after being closed over six months. The bridge itself has been completed two or three weeks, but there remained other work to be done, such as the macadamizing of the roadbed and going over the rough spots on the concrete walls.

The contract for the bridge was awarded to the late William Farrier, of New Market, but soon afterwards he was taken ill and was never able to execute the contract, in fact he was never able to see the work started. C. E. Kelly, of New Market, assumed the contract under an arrangement with Mr. Farrier and his son, together with Magnus Johnson, also of New Market, who was associated with Mr. Farrier for many years, have had charge of the work. The contract price for the work was $7,500.

The structure is made entirely of reinforced concrete, there being three arches. The top of the bridge is twelve feet from the bed of the brook and is ample to allow water during the heaviest freshet to pass through. There has been considerable filling in on the city side to make an approach to the bridge and now the filling-in process is being done on the borough side and the avenue brought up to grade. This will be necessary on the city side and it is quite likely that the street committee will make some provision for improving the street and putting it in good condition. The bridge is the first one of the kind built in Plainfield and while not as attractive as a stone structure, it is well built and will never require repairing, as in the case of iron and brick bridges.

BOARD OF ASSESSORS CONFER WITH CO. BOARD.

Consider Complaints Received from Local Taxpayers About Their Assessments.

At the solicitation of the Union County Board of Taxation, the members of the Plainfield Board of Assessors met at the Court House, Elizabeth, yesterday, to consider the fifty odd complaints received from Plainfielders as to their assessment this year. None of these complaints are from large taxpayers, the majority being of a minor character and easy to dispose of.

The new law provides that the county board of taxation shall give a public hearing on written complaints, and the Union county board has been in session every day for this purpose. Due consideration has been given to every complaint and every effort made to effect a satisfactory settlement. In the opinion of those who are acquainted with taxation matters, Plainfield's rate next year should be about $1.25, a reduction of ten cents over the present rate. It is said that the work of the Union county board has been the most satisfactory of any county in the State.

Jacob A. Schleif.

Jacob A. Schleif, aged seventy-six years, died yesterday at the home of his son, Charles Schleif, of West Front street. He resided at Warrenville for many years and came to Plainfield a short time ago when his home was destroyed by fire. He leaves two other sons, Stephen H. Schleif, the Park avenue baker, and Herman Schleif, of Brooklyn.

GROUND FOR A NEW SCHOOL HOUSE BOUGHT

BOARD OF EDUCATION ACQUIRED LOT ON DARROW AVENUE TODAY.

The large lot at Darrow avenue and Essex street, where the carnival has been held, was purchased by the Board of Education this morning. It was acquired as the site o fase hool to take the place of Washington school, which is to pass into the possession of St. Mary's Roman Catholic parish.

No plans for the erection of the new building have been made yet. In due season, the Board will have designs drawn for a most substantial structure, of the latest type, and the West End will get a new school where it is most needed.

For several years the approaching need of another school in the heart of the West End has been very apparent to the Board. The Irving school has been taxed to its utmost capacity for more terms than the Plainfield educators like to think of, and the new school will no more than meet the demands of the situation. The crowded condition of the Irving building compelled the Board to rent the Epworth House of the Monroe Avenue church, last year, for additional room. The new school will probably be built large enough to ease all the conditions that now compel the Board to manage as it does to avoid the squeezing out of any pupils.

LOST CERTIFICATE REVEALS WEDDING.

Telltale Document of Secret Marriage in Broadway Surface Car.

By the finding of a marriage certificate in a car in Broadway, New York, where the bride had forgotten it in her haste to reach home before her absence should cause comment, the secrecy marriage of Miss Marian Gilhooley, daughter of former Judge and Mrs. Patrick H. Gilhooley, of Elizabeth, N. J., and Frederick E. Lawrie, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Lawrie, of the same city, was yesterday discovered. The young couple had intended keeping their marriage a secret until after the holidays, and it was not known last night to either of their parents or to a young man in Philadelphia, to whom Miss Gilhooley became engaged at Narragansett last summer. The bride left for Virginia last night to visit friends until after the holidays, leaving her husband to reconcile the parents to the match.

Miss Gilhooley belongs to one of the wealthiest and socially prominent families in Elizabeth. Mr. Lawrie is twenty-four years old. He has considerable business ability. He is secretary of the C. G. Gates Company, with offices in the Trinity Building, New York.

Had it not been for the desire of her parents that she marry a wealthy young man in Philadelphia, to whom she finally became engaged last summer, there might have been no objection to the young woman's marriage with Mr. Lawrie. Under pressure of her parents' wishes she gave Mr. Lawrie up for a time, but he continued to press his suit until at last she yielded.

$300 FOR A BLOW.

Epstein Wants Damages to That Amount from Former Employer.

Abe Epstein, of Liberty street, has sued Thomas B. Neilson, an upholsterer and dealer in antiques, whose shop is at Watchung avenue and Front street, for $300, in tort. The papers, issued out of the District Court, were served yesterday.

Epstein worked for Neilson, and, according to his story, they quarrelled at the shop on October 26. Words were followed by a blow from Neilson, Epstein alleges, and his face was so badly damaged he had to get attendance from Dr. Cregar, and wear most of his features in a bandage for several days.

The case is set down for next Tuesday. Epstein is represented by F. J. Blatz.

Talk on San Francisco.

Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll will deliver an interesting address on "The Wreck and Ruin of San Francisco and Its Resurrection," at Grace M. E. church, Park place, next Sunday morning. The address is based on personal observation.

He Won't Talk of This, Either.

"Silent" Smith, who is county register during business hours and Republican County Chairman at other times, took the seventeenth and eighteenth degrees in Masonry last night at a consistory in Jersey City.

Michael Hughes' Funeral.

The funeral of Michael Hughes, who died at his home on East Second street, Monday, will be held at St. Mary's church tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock. Interment will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

SLID THROUGH IN UNION

J. E. Martine it Transpires Got Only Two Plurality in This County.

CANVASSING THE VOTE

The County Election Board Rubs Up Against Law Regarding No Recount of Machine Cast Returns.

The latest information about the election returns from Union county shows that James E. Martine's majority over Congressman Charles N. Fowler is two votes. The reduced figures are said to be due to the original mix-up in the Fourth ward, of Rahway, when Mr. Martine received 165 Democratic votes, and a similar number was credited to him on the Independent Democratic ticket. This would give him a total of 330, while the total vote in that ward was 312.

Congressman Fowler received 149 votes in the Fourth ward, the Socialist candidate four votes and Candidate Vaughn, who was running on the Prohibition ticket, one vote, a total of 145. Adding this number to the 330 given to Mr. Martine would make a total of 175, and deducting 313, the actual number of votes polled, would leave 165 votes not to be accounted for.

In the First ward, of Rahway, Mr. Martine received 231 votes, 154 in the Second ward and 165 in the Fourth ward, which together with twenty-seven odd votes throughout the county found cast for Mr. Martine, gives him a total of 577, while the vote received by Congressman Fowler was 575, giving the defeated candidate a majority of two votes.

The law states specifically that in the case of the machine vote the county board of election and registry must accept the returns as they are received, and the Union County Board is now debating whether they should go behind the returns and correct the mistake made in the Fouth ward of Rahway.

The election board from that ward, consisting of Robert Uhler, Frank Splaine and Edward Leonard, appeared before the county board this morning, in answer to a summons, to explain the mix-up. The members stated that they had added the 165 votes cast for the Independent Democratic ticket to the like number cast for the straight Democratic ticket, which they claim was done in good faith and in error. At the time they thought the compilation of the returns was correct.

FOUND DEAD IN BED.

Bernard Brady, Well-known Resident, Stricken as He Slept.

Bernard Brady, for many years a local resident, was found dead in bed at his home at West Front street and Lafayette place, yesterday noon. He had been stricken some time during the night but the fact was not discovered in the morning as the family believed he did not feel well and refrained from calling him.

Mr. Brady was fifty-four years old and had always resided in the West End. He was a carpenter by trade but until a short time ago conducted a shoe store on Liberty street. Since disposing of the business he had lived a retired life. He leaves a widow, three daughters, the Misses Mary, Rose and Regina Brady, and two sons, Bernard and Frank.

The funeral will be held at St. Mary's church Friday morning and interment will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

Anniversary Fresh Air Association.

Rev. Erskine M. Rodman, rector emeritus, of Grace church, and president of the Plainfield Fresh Air Association, announces that the anniversary of the association will be celebrated at the Y. M. C. A. hall on Monday night, November 19. Miss Sara Curry, matron, together with a number of children from the Day Nursery, New York, will attend and take part. Reports for the past year will be presented and addresses made. The music will be in charge of Martin A. Korf.

Novelty Entertainer.

G. E. Garrison, who will entertain the boys' department of the Y. M. C. A. Saturday afternoon, and the men of the association that night, is more than a show in himself. Besides playing hand-bells, sleigh bells, musical coins, violin, mandolin and some other tuneful contrivances, he juggles cleverly and is an excellent elocutionist. Not for nothing is he called the Novelty Entertainer.

Early Morning Hunt.

An early morning run was engaged by a dozen hardy members of the Hunt Club today. The twelve met at the kennels at Colonia at 6:30 o'clock. They rode over a new country, going on the other side of the Pennsylvania railroad a far as Woodbridge. The going was good.

SUPPOSEDLY MAD DOG BITES DR. MOLDENKE

CELEBRATED MINERALOGIST WILL AT ONCE BEGIN PASTEUR TREATMENT.

Dr. Richard Moldenke, the well-known Egyptologist and mineralogist, was severely bitten by a pet dog at his home in Watchung, this morning. It is feared the animal is afflicted with rabies and Dr. Moldenke has taken steps to place himself in the hands of the Pasteur Institute for treatment.

The dog has been acting queerly for several days but on one thought that it had any serious complaint. The doctor started to play with it this morning and it suddenly turned with a snarl and sank its teeth in his right hip. He shook the animal off and after securing it against further attack, drove hurriedly to the office of Dr. Long in this city. The physician cauterized the wound and then advised him to take the Pasteur treatment in the event of its being established that the do has rabies.

SOMERSET FREEHOLDERS TRANSACT ROUTINE WORK.

Engineer May Survey Mt. Bethel Road in Warren Township.

Not a great amount of business was done at the meeting of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders in Somerville yesterday. A petition for the improvement of the Mt. Bethel road in Warren township under the State Aid Act was received and placed on file. A resolution was adopted authorizing the county engineer to survey the same, providing the State Road Commissioner consents.

The application of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company for permission to place its poles along the turnpike from Somerville to the west Hunterdon county line was referred to the committee on the North Branch road, which is now being built.

The auditing committee will meet on Friday at the office of Clerk Suthphen for the purpose of auditing the election bills, and the county treasurer was authorized to pay the same after this meeting.

A survey of the North Branch road from the Lamington road west was ordered with the permission of the State Road Commissioner, in order to take out the "elbow" at that point.

The board will meet next Monday for the purpose of receiving bids for the construction of a retaining wall on the east side of the North Branch iron bridge.

The committee in charge was authorized to complete the construction of the bridge being built in Warren township at a cost not to exceed $250.

The jail contractors were given permission to remove the brick and debris left over from the construction of the new building.

FLAG AT HALF MAST.

City Officials Plan to Honor Memory of Former Mayor.

On account of the death of former Mayor O. L. Jenkins, Mayor James F. Buckle gave instructions this morning to have the city flag displayed at half-mast from the city pole on Front street, opposite Park avenue. Dr. Jenkins being one of the oldest members of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., the officers of that order have displayed its flag at half-mast from the top of the Scheuer building on West Front street.

President R. I. Tolles, of the Common Council, has notified each member of the death of the former Mayor, and to hold himself in readiness to attend the funeral services. The members will probably arrange to attend the services in the body, together with other city officials.

Mr. St. John Resigns.

William W. St. John, city editor of the Courier-News since it came under its present management two years ago, has resigned his position to take effect January 1st. Mr. St. John's health has compelled him to seek a change of climate and he proposes to engage in newspaper work in Los Angeles, Cal. He was the founder and part owner of the Elizabeth Times, and is one of the best newspaper men in this section of the State. His departure will be regretted by a host of friends, who hope for his speedy restoration to health.

Official Visit from District Deputy.

Anchor Lodge, No. 149, F. and A. M., held a regular communication last night and received an official visit from the Right Worshipful District Deputy Theodore B. Townley, of the Fifth Masonic District. This was the first visitation from Deputy Townley since he succeeded former Deputy W. D. Wolfskeil, and he was given a cordial reception.

DR. OLIN L. JENKINS SUDDENLY CLAIMED BY DEATH

Suffers Heart Attack While in Arm Chair at Home and Quickly Passes Away.

A LEADING CITIZEN

Prominent Alike in His Profession, In Business, In Politics and in Fraternal Affairs—Sketch of His Life.

With little more than a few moments warning, Dr. Olin L. Jenkins, one of Plainfield's first citizens and a former mayor, died at his home on East Front street at 6:20 o'clock last night. Heart trouble which had been apparent for several days, suddenly took an aggressive form as he was seated in a chair in his sitting room and he realized its dangerous nature. Mrs. Jenkins was near him at the time and she summoned Dr. Endicott. The latter hurriedly responded but Dr. Jenkins breathed his last as he reached the house.

The doctor had been subject to valvular heart trouble for years and at times it affected him seriously. He complained of feeling ill one day last week and when the spell continued, he called in Dr. Brown, of Elizabeth. He was still under the latter's care at the time of death though he had been going about yesterday apparently as well as usual.

Dr. Jenkins was born in this city on April 23, 1852, and was the son of Joseph B. and Sarah Ann Jenkins, both native of Columbia county, New York. His father was a carpenter by trade and moved to Plainfield in 1843. He died in 1890. His son was educated in the public schools of this city and in a seminary at Kingston, Pa., graduating at the latter institution in 1871. He then began the study of medicine, completing his course four years later in the Homeopathic Medical College, New York. His professional career was begun in Danielsonville, Conn., where he practiced twelve years. In 1888 he returned to Plainfield and succeeded to the practice of Dr. South, in which he had since continued.

He represented the First ward in the Common Council for 6 years, having been elected as a no-license man in the days that was the paramount issue. He also served 5 years as a member of the Board of Education and in 1900 was elected mayor, succeeding the late George W. Rockfellow. He discharged his duties with such impartiality and faithfulness that he was re-elected in 1902 and served until succeeded by James F. Buckle, the present incumbent. He was also chairman of the Republican City Committee for several years and was vice chairman at the time of his death.

Aside from political matters, Dr. Jenkins was a firm believer in fraternal organizations and he belonged to as many, probably, as any member in the city. He was a member of Anchor lodge, No. 149, F. and A. M., and its kindred organizations, the Mystic Shrine and the Knights Templar; Plainfield Lodge, No. 835; B. P. O. E.; Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P.; Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum; the O. U. A. M., the A. O. U. W., the Knights of Honor. He was also a member of the Sons of Malta Society and various association pertinent to his profession.

Dr. Jenkins was married in 1881 to Miss Ida Hallock, of Plainfield, daughter of the late J. H. Hallock. She survives him. He also leaves one brother, William Jenkins, a resident of Elmhurst, Pa., near Scranton. In recent years Dr. and Mrs. Jenkins travelled a great deal and only a short time ago they completed a long trip to the Pacific coast and back by way of British Columbia and other Canadian provinces.

Valuable Property Sold.

Charles P. Sebring has sold to Jacob Voehl, Sr., his valuable lot at Grove street and Prospect place, and the latter plans to erect thereon a handsome dwelling. This property was the object of interest some time ago when Mr. Sebring proposed to move his dwelling from West Front street, opposite Grove street, to that corner through the influence of the borough authorities the scheme failed. Prior to that time the corner was purchased by the congregation of the Church of the Redeemer, when Rev. Mark Dorsey was rector, and plans were prepared to erect a church there. The consolidation of this church with that of the Holy Cross church, changed these plans.

Like Proposed 7:45 Train.

While the "Wall street contingent" may prefer an 8:20 train as a relief to the 7:55 train, instead of a 7:45, there is considerable support among the users of the 7:55 for the earlier train. Not a few of the 7:55 patrons frequently desire to get into the city a little earlier, and a 7:45 train would just suit them.

PLAINFIELD, THE QUEEN CITY OF ALL NEW JERSEY, RICH IN ADVANTAGES AND RESOURCES BOASTS OF EVERY ATTRACTION WHICH GOES TO MAKE A TRULY MODEL COMMUNITY.

Superb Streets, Unsurpassed Sanitary Improvements and a Wealth of Handsome Homes Are Found Here.

Religious Activity and Club Life as Well as High-class Amusements Help to Make It Ideal.

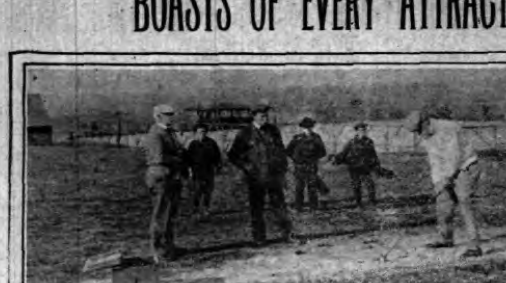
Within the shadow of the southern slope of the Watchung Mountains, from which Washington watched the movements of the Hessian troops, is Plainfield, whose citizens proudly proclaim it the "Queen City" of the State. Rich in the gifts of nature and equally blessed with the material advantages with which a progressive and enlightened citizenship endowed it, this well groomed little city issues a bold challenge to other communities of its size to produce an equally good bill of particulars. It does not rest on its laurels content that other places cannot surpass it, but it forges ahead, building improvement upon improvement, one after another, and therein lies the secret of its success and its magnetism.

Plainfield, the name by which it is known well and favorably far beyond the confines of the State, really includes two municipalities, for a selfish political condition has prevented the union, in fact, of two governments in a place which is inseparately connected otherwise than by geographical lines. To the stranger within its gates it is a visual impossibility to tell in which municipality he be, for the dividing line passes through what is and always has been the most thickly settled part of the community—the business section. North Plainfield is but the overflow from Plainfield, which, spreading in all directions, sweeps beyond Union county and plants its borders in both Somerset and Middlesex. The capricious spirit of Somerset county alone is responsible for the existence of North Plainfield as a separate municipal government. North Plainfield is a borough, having less than half the population in Plainfield city, and it is purely a residential place.

Plainfield covers a stretch of four miles from east to west, and, including the borough, an equal distance from north to south. Although settled by a sturdy band of the Friends in the early days of American history, today, it is distinctly the home of the prosperous New York commuter, who has found in it an ideal place for a country residence, far from the noise of the metropolis yet within a convenient commuting distance of Wall street and the business section of the big city. In a luxuriously appointed club car attached to a fast train making no stops between his home and the North River, he is conveyed daily to and from his office, while his wife and children breathe the fresh air and enjoy the outdoor life of picturesque New Jersey. Plainfield is "forty-five minutes from Broadway," but the time flies swiftly for the commuter who is enjoying his after breakfast cigar and reading his morning paper or indulging in a game of whist. The actual running time of the special trains is only thirty-five minutes.



Fine Streets a Feature.

The first thing that strikes the stranger as he alights from an express at the main station of the Jersey Central, in North avenue, is the splendid condition of the city's thoroughfares. The credit for their excellent condition is due to Andrew J. Gavett, the city engineer, one of the most painstaking and conscientious officials to be found in a city hall. Well macadamized streets studded on each side by stately trees are a feature throughout the whole place. In all there are sixty-five miles of improved macadam roads, forty-five of which lie in the city proper. These avenues lead into the magnificent highways of Union, Middlesex and Somerset counties, built by the State, which has improved nearly 1,000 miles of roads than any other in the entire Union. The automobilist and the driver of horses alike find in this fact one of its chief attractions.

Thousands of dollars are spent annually upon the streets and the expenditures meet with the hearty approval of the taxpayers, who take a great pride in them. Beneath these macadam roads, for the most part, are well constructed storm sewers, which carry off in less time than it takes to tell, the heaviest of rainfalls. Throughout the place, also under the beds of the streets, are sewer pipes connecting with the homes and business places. There are thirty-six miles of these pipes weighing into the many millions of contact beds to the west of the city, where the filtration process takes place. This sewage disposal plant has already cost the city about $200,000, and the money is well spent. The system is being extended constantly, as the city grows space, and it will not be long before there are at least fifty miles of piping.

Equally attractive advantages are to be found in the police and fire protective systems. Burglary and like offenses against law and order are almost unknown here, for the Plainfield sleuth has a reputation as a terror of evil doers. A large force is commanded by Chief of Police Kiely, whose reputation extends to every detective agency in the country. The headquarters in East Front street are admitted to be the finest equipped of any town of the size in the State.

The fire department is equally well equipped. Three large and well supplied fire houses are scattered about the city and another one is to be found in North Plainfield, which receives the help of the police. The apparatus is of the latest improved make and the ability of the paid firemen to battle with the flames is emphasized by the low fire insurance rate, one of the lowest in this part of the country.

A Representative Government.

The citizens of Plainfield long ago realized that if the place was to be made attractive and prosperous progressive men must be enlisted as public servants to take charge of its government. At all times the best citizens have always been willing to be mustered into service to act in the capacity of Mayor, Councilman, School Director or to serve on some important commission, as the case might be. Among the New York bankers who have accepted the Mayoralty chair are Messrs. Charles J. Fisk, Alexander Gilbert and L. V. F. Randolph, the first named being the sole nominee for the election on Tuesday. Equally good men have sat in Common Council, including Messrs. John B. Dumont, E. T. Barrowa, E. R. Ackerman and George P. Mellick.

Although the tax rate has never been high, the guardians of the city's finances have been able to raise funds by taxation sufficient to carry out big improvements and at the same time to properly reward the paid men of the various departments. The taxable value of Plainfield can best be shown by a comparison. It is equal to the combined taxable value of Somerset county, which adjoins it, and is also about equal to the combined taxable value of Summit, Rahway, Westfield and Cranford, four of the next biggest towns in Union county. This is the more noteworthy because Plainfield millionaires are no different from any others, and they do not tell the tax assessors more than they are required to by law. The tax rate is only $1.25 per $1,000. This is eleven points lower than the city of Elizabeth and nearly thirty points lower than Summit.

Excellent School System.

To the man looking for a place to settle down with his wife and children the public school system is of vital interest, and in Plainfield he finds just what he most desires. The curriculum of the public schools is such that the high school diploma admits the graduate to most of the large colleges of the country without examination. The instruction which the pupil receives is testified to by the standing he takes in the higher institutions of learning. On the walls of the handsome new high school building, facing the city park, built a year ago at a cost of $125,000, are diplomas from the St. Louis Exposition, the Pan-American Fair, the World's Fair and other large exhibitions where Plainfield entered educational competitions. While great attention is paid to the higher departments, the kindergarten system is today the boast of the Board of Education, a non-political body composed of representative and scholarly men. Dr. Henry M. Maxson is the Superintendent of Education, and his faculty consists of a large corps of principals.

The manual training department in the North Plainfield schools, which is under the supervision of Dr. H. C. Kreh, is one of the best in the State. The manual training building itself is the gift of Charles W. McCutchen, the largest property owner in the borough. Besides the private schools are the Plainfield Seminary and the Hartridge School for young women, John Leal's school and Cedarcroft Academy for boys. For members of the Roman Catholic faith there are St. Gabriel's Academy and the parochial schools.

Much has been written of Plainfield's Board of Health, and deservedly so, for it is a vigilant body. Its president is former Mayor Charles Joel Fisk, of the New York banking house of that name, who, on November 8, was elected chief magistrate. He was the nominee of the Republican party and his fitness was recognized by the fact that his name also headed the Democratic municipal ticket. Most of the members of the Board are leading physicians. The staff consists of a chemist and health officer. Mr. Leon R. Thurlow, a graduate of the Boston Institute of Technology, who devotes his entire time to the work, and a health inspector.

The latter makes it his duty to pick out a bottle of milk from the unsuspecting dairyman's wagon in the early hours of the morning and take it to the paid chemist for analysis, and to visit a grocery man to get a sample of his butter for the same purpose. Regular house to house visits are paid by the inspector to examine the sanitary condition of the premises to see that they answer the exacting requirements. Heavy fines are imposed for any violation of the health ordinances. Milkmen, plumbers and the like are all licensed.

Almost without exception the homes are detached houses surrounded by spacious lawns. This applies not only to the mansion of the man of wealth, but to the leased property. Rentals run anywhere from $20 to $50 a month. The great demand for houses, however, has caused a building boom unprecedented, and several syndicates are erecting good houses which they put on the market at reasonable figures.

Wonderful Water Supply.

Beneath Plainfield there is an underground lake; some contend that it is a river. Be what it may, from this pit is drawn water of a purity that has surprised analytical chemists. All the year round the supply remains the same, inexhaustible and pure. The water flowing from a faucet in the kitchen or bathroom is clear and cold. No filter is ever thought of by the careful housewife, for none is needed.

These are some of the attractions of Plainfield, but there are many others to be recounted with pride. The club life and outdoor and indoor amusements generally are to be noted, and reference should be made to the religious life of the community. The Monday Afternoon Club and the Rasores Club, both affiliated with the New Jersey State Federation of Women's Clubs, are intended for the intellectual edification of the commuter's wife and daughter. Each is composed of a large number of women who meet once a week. The Park Club is a typical commuter's resort, its well appointed club house, in Washington avenue, being a centre of the social activity of the community during the winter evenings. Hops, concerts and other forms of entertainment are always to be found there, as they are at the Casino, in West Seventh street, where the formal social functions take place as a rule. The auditoriums of the Park Club and the Casino are both used for private society theatricals and for cotillions.

The Plainfield Country Club has its home in the Hillside district, where its splendid eighteen hole golf course and tennis courts are located. Private dinner parties and like social functions are the rule week in and week out at the club house. Numerous handsome cups and other trophies are offered in the regular season of golf and tennis tournaments, the Saturday and holiday play being the special feature of the programme. Among its membership of approximately seven hundred are expert players in both sports. Messrs. Frank O. Reinhart, W. L. C. Gleaney, D. H. Barrows, Morgan Townsend, C. A. Stover, C. B. Morgan and Robert Abbott being among golfers, while Mr. T. M. Day, Jr., and Miss Schuyler are among its noted tennis players.

The Park Golf Club, whose nine hole course is on the slope of Watchung Mountain, is another spot where the lover of the ancient Scottish game may find recreation. Many of the clergymen of the city are among its most enthusiastic members, including the Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, the Rev. Charles L. Goodrich, the Rev. J. O. McKelvey and the Rev. L. R. Howard. Among the more prominent minor clubs of the sort is the Cedarbrook Tennis Club. So far as the national game is concerned, the Plainfield Baseball Club, with its big grounds in the southern part of the city, is the most conspicuous, being the successor of the Crescent Club, which turned out such players as "Billy" Kesler and "Tuck" Turner.

The Plainfield Riding and Driving Club, the Watchung Hunt Club and the Driving Park Association are organizations whose names reveal their objects. The first named is composed of wealthy citizens, many of whom own fine stables. Among the number are Messrs. Edwin S. Hooley and Charles W. McCutchen. Mr. Hooley's stable is the best in this section. Every year the Riding and Driving Club holds a three days' horse show on its own grounds. It is a member of the national association. The show grounds are elaborately appointed and in the competitions which take place the Plainfielders win a big share of the ribbons. The Watchung Hunt Club, another society organization, holds meets weekly. The chase is scheduled for Saturdays, and after the run across country over the farms of Union county social meetings are held at its Colonial club house. The Driving Park Association holds meets Saturday afternoons on its own track and horsemen from all parts of the State make it a rule to enter their fast steeds in these events.

Strong Religious Spirit.

Almost every religious denomination in the country is represented here, many of them having more than one church and not a few of them having beautiful houses of worship. St. Mary's Roman Catholic church, which has a magnificent edifice in Liberty street, has a membership of about thirty-five hundred. Father Regan is the head of the parish. St. Joseph's, of which Father Miller is pastor, has a smaller list of communicants. The Episcopalians worship in four different churches. Grace church is the largest, its church edifice and parish house being particularly ornate. Deon Rodman is rector emeritus and the Rev. E. Vinars Stevenson is rector. The Church of the Holy Cross is located in the Washington Park section of North Plainfield and has a pretty little church, as has St. Stephen's, in the Netherwood section of Plainfield. The Church of the Heavenly Rest has a picturesque building in the Evons section of the city.

Among the evangelical denominations the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, of which Rev. D. W. R. Richards, now pastor of the Fifth Avenue Brick Presbyterian church, was minister for two decades, has the wealthiest congregation. The mother church supports three missions, with a pastor in charge of each, they being Hope chapel, Warren chapel and Bethel chapel, the last named for negroes. The First Presbyterian church is the oldest of that denomination. The Baptists are represented in the First and the Park Avenue churches. Dr. J. A. Chambliss is the pastor of the former. This congregation is the largest in the city, excepting that of St. Mary's. The Methodists have three churches, the First, Grace and the Monroe Avenue. Other religious bodies with fine church buildings include the Seventh-Day Baptist, All Souls' Unitarian, the Congregational, Trinity Reformed, the Friends' meeting, German Lutheran, German Reformed and Children of Israel Synagogue. There are thirty-seven congregations in all. In addition to these the Young Men's Christian Association has a fine building in the heart of the city.

No other city in New Jersey and, in fact, only two others in the whole country, have so stringent an excise ordinance as Plainfield, a saloon zone being permanently established. By its provisions the Common Council dare not even receive an application for a licensed place save in the purely business section, which constitutes but a tenth part of the entire municipality.

This forever protects the residential property from any depreciation or change by the introduction of a saloon. Not even a hotel or boarding house in the prohibited zone could be allowed to sell liquor even with meals. Moreover, it is the fixed policy not to increase the number of saloons, and today there are only seven in the place, it being found by experience that the greater the number of saloons in other places, proportionately great is crime and disorder.

Long before the much agitated Bishops' law, enacted by the last Legislature, was even dreamed of Plainfield had all its features in force. The saloons must close at eleven o'clock at night and dare not open until six in the morning. No side or back room evil has ever been permitted and at all times a clear unobstructed view of the barroms must be had from the street during the prohibited hours. The retail license fee is $1,000 and the wholesale $500, both of which are about double the next highest in the State.

The last offender against the excise ordinance, a "speak easy" proprietor, was fined $1,000, and since then no illegal resorts have existed. Plainfield's stringent excise ordinance is due to the untiring efforts of William S. Tyler, a New York lawyer, who, as a member of the Common Council, succeeded in spite of the combined liquor interests of New Jersey in having his favorite measure enacted. Now no one can be found who opposes the regulation. In fact, they are proudly boasted of abroad by the citizens of the place.

The fraternal organizations are numerous, and many of them are prosperous. The Masons and Elks lead in this respect. The home of Masonry is in the Babcock Building, where Trinity Commandery, Knights Templar, holds its conclaves. Jerusalem chapter, Royal Arch Masons, its convocations, and Jerusalem and Anchor lodges, F. and A. M., their communications. Plainfield lodge, B. P. O. E., has fine club rooms and large quarters in the Elkwood Building. The Knights of Pythias have two lodges and one military branch of the order. Among the other orders having one or more lodges are the Red Men, A. O. U. W., Knights of Columbus, Royal Arcanum, Knights of the Golden Eagle, Odd Fellows and Junior O. U. A. M.

Culture and Philosophy.

In the residential portion of the city stands the Plainfield Public Library, supported entirely by the citizens. The library contains nearly 30,000 well selected volumes, and its art gallery and collection of curios are notable. One painting, "The Death of General Sedgewick," by the late Julian Scott, a resident of the town, is valued at $10,000. In the library is the Babcock scientific collection, which is particularly valuable. This institution is free to the public. Muhlenberg Hospital is another public institution supported entirely by the people of the community. Its large buildings are located in Randolph road and its staff is composed of eminent surgeons and physicians. Mr. William R. Cook is the president of the Board of Governors. The institution has a separate institution in the west end of the city and is supported by the municipal government.

Among the other institutions are the Children's Home, with a handsome house in North Plainfield, the Plainfield Relief Association and the Plainfield Organized Aid Association. The City Union of King's Daughters has a baby camp on the Watchung Mountain in the summer time. It also supports a city nurse all the year round. The Netherwood Fresh Air Home, where some of the poor of New York's east side are provided for during the summer, is another example of Plainfield's philanthropy. A home for aged and infirm women is about to be erected through the liberality of the late Miss Catharine Webster, thus adding another to the many charitable institutions.

Although Plainfield is only twenty-four miles from "the Great White Way," it has one of the best theatres in the State. The New Plainfield books the leading attractions of Broadway.

Wherever one goes in the wealthy sections of the city he finds the home of some man who is known in the financial or business section of New York. All these men take an interest in the welfare of the community, and it is due to them that Plainfield stands in the front rank of model settlements.

Plainfield's transportation facilities are excellent. Although the Jersey Central has the only direct line through the city, the Lehigh Valley has a station at South Plainfield and the Pennsylvania one at Metuchen, but a short distance south of the city line. Over the tracks of the Jersey Central sped the fast expresses of the Baltimore and Ohio and of the Reading, both of which make stops at the North Avenue station. The Reading's hourly expresses are particularly convenient to the shopper and theatregoer.

The commuting rate to New York is less than thirteen cents a trip, the monthly rate for sixty rides being but $7.60. The Central has four stations along its line within the bounds of the city—the Netherwood, the North Avenue, the Grant Avenue and the Clinton Avenue. The city trolley services makes direct connection with lines to all the country round, including the Oranges, Elizabeth, Newark, Bound Brook, Somerville and New Brunswick. The through New York-Philadelphia hourly express trolleys run over the tracks of the local system. The two principal telegraph companies have offices open night and day, and the local exchange of the telephone company has two thousand telephones in private residences and in the shopping district.

All in all, Plainfield is one of the most charming settlements to be found and is an ideal home for the commuter, be he rich or poor. No other community of the kind presents better attractions or advantages—that is why it has earned its title, the Queen City of New Jersey.

FAR AND NEAR.

In Alabama last week an aged negress died.—"Aunt" Clarissa. Following her remains to the grave were, among other vehicles, six carriages occupied by the leading white women of the community. On her grave there were piled myraids of floral tributes, the finest display of offerings of the kind ever seen in that section of the country. Twenty-five wives of farmers and business men heard the sermon over the grave by "Aunt" Clarissa's negro pastor. "Aunt" Clarissa was eighty years of age at the time of her death. For fifty years she had lived in the white man's service. She had cared for his wife and children and grandchildren. She was the person in the household who handled the money. She bought the household supplies. She rendered accounting to no one. She paid herself her own salary. She saved all she made. She was more than housekeeper. She was friend. It is said that at the burial to the sobs and tears of relatives were added the manifestations of sorrow of the white woman, and that the lady in whose home Clarissa had lived was deep in anguish.—Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.

Is it correct to speak of Houhomont, which some British officers are said to be about to purchase, as "the castle of Hougomont?" The correspondent who asks the question suggests that this is a mistranslation of "chateau," since in English "castle" has never really become equivalent merely to "mansion," but can be accurately used only of a feudal castellated fortress, or of a building erected in imitation of the style. Great confusion was caused by the habits of translators down to the eighteenth century of rendering the Vulgate's "castellum," which means a village, as "castle." There is evidence to show that the "castle" of Mary and Martha was supposed by readers to have been a baronial stronghold.—London Chronicle.

More and more the political meeting of today is coming to partake in essential features of the old-time rally of many years ago. This is particularly true as regards the revival of the plan of eating at the flow of political soul. Few open-air partisan gatherings are now considered complete unless there is a meal to be attended to, along with the eloquence on display there. Our forefathers settled the perplexing problems of this great country over barbecued dinners. At such gatherings the principles of the men of the times were discussed by them, and uniformly with much meritorious effect, since the nation continued to advance with increasing vigor unrer their well-fed guiding hand. So we are but getting back to early principles of citizenship when we mix our campaigning with well-cooked food. By all means let the polotical picnic have the right of way. It is certainly an old settler.—Maryville (Mo.) Tribune.

Election Brings Raise.

Franklin, Pa., Nov. 9.—Asserting that the election of the Republican ticket in Pennsylvania has inspired them with ideas of still greater prosperity the management of the two plants of the Standard Oil Company here yesterday announced an increase in wages to more than 500 men. The percentage was not given. The order applies to all men paid by the day and receiving less than $100 a month.

OVER THE TEA CUPS.

Despite the fact that it is the height of illbreeding to discuss our personal affairs in the street cars and other public places, it is not an uncommon thing to hear seemingly cultured women relate all that takes place in their homes in the course of a day, or even to go so far as to talk about their friends and neighbors without the least hesitancy about using names.

During the rush hours yesterday afternoon two women were carrying on a conversation for the benefit of all the other passengers on an east bound Orange car. This is part of what was heard:

"That was while my mother-in-law was staying at our house."

"Is she with you now?"

"Oh, goodness, no! I should hope not. She don't like me and I'm mighty glad she's gone."

"She is hard to get along with, isn't she?"

"Well! I should say she is! None of the family like her. It was the biggest mistake for father-in-law to marry her—she was such a cranky old maid, all she took him for was to get a good home. She bosses him as well as everyone else in the house."

"Well, that's what I always said. He had a right to marry some older woman, it would have been better."

"Oh! she's old enough if she wasn't such a confirmed crank. Did you hear about the Joneses? Mr. Jones hasn't worked a stroke all summer, and it's just 'killin' ' where they get all their style."

"I know it; everybody is talking about it, and do you know, Mrs. Jones actually pays to have her washing and ironing done, when you'd think she would do it herself and save something. I know I can't afford to have my work done, and my husband works every day."

"Neither can I. Why, I've done all my own work since last April, and I can just tell you I have needed all the money I saved. Of course, my husband don't want me to do it, but I don't mind."

"I suppose you heard Frank B. has been cutting up high jinks again and neglecting his family. I don't think his poor wife made such a good match."

"No, I guess not; you get off here?"

"No. I go to the next corner, but if you're going to get off I will, too. I can tell you about the trouble they're having up at Frank's house."

And they vanished through the doorway, leaving the remaining passengers to wonder what more they would say about "Frank" and his family.

If women would only learn to be discreet, how much ridicule they would spare their sex, and how seldom they would be mistaken for know-nothings.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

When making pie crust use little water and fold often.

Add a tiny pinch of salt to water in which beans are put to soak.

Meat for soup should be put into cold water to bring the juice out.

A pinch of grated nutmeg added to potato croquettes improves them.

Steamed puddings are much improved by standing a few days before serving.

Clothes should be rinsed thoroughly before putting them into the blue water.

A new range should be very gradually heated to prevent the possibility of cracking.

A good way to save steps is to stop an instant and think when you are tempted to rush after a thing. By trying to imagine what you would do were it impossible to get what you are about to run after, your ingenuity would quickly enable you to find a means of substituting something at hand for the thing you have not. A residence in the country, several miles from any sort of shop or from neighbors, will teach one that a great many "absolute necessities" can be done without comfortably.

Atime and strength-saving way to pick up pins or needles is to draw a magnet across the floor. The metal things that stick to it can be easily picked off without taking a step.

For the small things in the wash on cold wintry days use a soft wool twine line three or four yards long. Pin all these things on in the house and run the line out on the clothesline outside. It will save cold fingers both in putting out the wash and in taking it in, as the small line is brought into the house before things are removed.

A small quantity of alum in sugar starch will prevent the sirup becoming granulated.

When other means fail, stains on the hands can be removed by rubbing with your scouring brick.

A Criticism.

"Yes, the amateur actor boasted, "I created the part. It was all mine —that is, all except the makeup. The costumer fixed that for me."

"Yes," replied the friend, "I heard several people say your makeup was good."—Philadelphia Press.

Handicapped.

"What makes you think he will not be successful in politics? He has a great many friends."

"Yes. He hasn't enemies enough to secure him the abuse and criticism that make people famous."—Washington Star.

Fibbing is a very easy way not to hurt people's feelings.

BIRTH OF A HYMN.

Story of the Origin of "In the Sweet By and By."

A song of national circulation, "In the Sweet By and By," written by S. Fillmore Bennett, of Elkhorn, Wis., had its birth in a country store. Mr. Bennett told the story, which is given in "Wisconsin In Three Centuries," as follows:

It was about time for closing business in the evening when J. P. Webster, whose melodies have made Wisconsin famous, came into the store, feeling rather depressed.

I said to Webster, "What is the matter now?"

He replied, "It is no matter; it will be all right by and by."

The idea of the hymn came to me like a flash of sunshine, and I replied: "The sweet by and by. Why would not that make a good hymn?"

"Maybe it would," he said indifferently.

I then turned to my desk and penned the hymn as fast as I could write, and handed it to Mr. Webster. As he read it his eye kindled and his whole demeanor changed. Stepping to the desk, he began writing the notes instantly.

In a few moments he requested Mr. Bright to hand him his violin, and he played with little hesitation the beautiful melody from the notes. A few moments later he had jotted down the notes for the different parts and the chorus.

I do not think it was more than thirty minutes from the time I took my pencil to write the words before the hymn and the notes had all been completed and four of us were singing it exactly as it appeared in the Signet Ring a few days later and as it has been sung the world over ever ever since.

SHORT STORIES.

It is said that 7,700 husbands deserted their wives in the city of New York last year.

The earliest creatures which were furnished with eyes were the trilobites. The sense of hearing did not exist for ages afterward.

With face lathered on one side and the other neatly shaved, the driver of a New York hook and ladder wagon was observed racing his equipage through the streets. He was only half shaved when the alarm came.

The following announcement to the hungry was posted one day in the front of a restaurant conducted by a Greek in the Horseshoe section of Jersey City: "Kornut beefe and garbage in fix stile too-day." The proprietor said he made the sign all by himself.

President Benjamin Ide Wheeler, of the University of California, suggests for language reform that an international academy might be founded to live authority in the matters of language changes, just as the French academy and the Spanish academy have done.

THE YOUNGSTERS.

Some Bright Sayings by Little Men and Women.

Tommy—Mamma, didn't you say that the cake in the pantry would make me sick if I was to eat it?

Mamma—Yes, dear.

Tommy—Well, it didn't.

Little Margie—I said my prayers seven times last night, papa.

Papa—Why did you do that, dear? Little Margie—Oh, so I wouldn't have to bother saying 'em the rest of the week.

"Now, Johnny," said the teacher, "can you tell me what a Mormon is?"

"Yes, ma'am," answered the little fellow. "A Mormon is a man whose wife is twins or triplets."

"Well, Harry," said the hostess to her small guest, "did you rest well last night?"

"I don't know," answered Harry.

"You don't know?" echoed the lady.

"No, ma'am," replied the little chap. "I was asleep all the time."

Marshmellow Frosting.

Buy enough marshmellow candy to cover the top of the cake when set closely together. Have a boiled icing ready and pour over the candy. As the icing cools it will hold the marshmellows together. Before the candies are laid over the cake they must be set in the oven to heat and swell.

The Wisdom of Dorothy.

Dorothy does not relish being left alone to go to sleep. One night after she was tucked in bed by her mother, who then left her, she called to her father and asked if he wasn't coming to bed after he finished his dinner.

"Yes; I'll go to bed as soon as my dinner digests."

"Then come upstairs now. Your dinner will digest upstairs just as well as down," argued the young hopeful.—Logan.

Penn Track Affairs.

Forty men responded to the call for track work at the University of Pennsylvania. Among the experienced men are Cartmell, the intercollegiate champion in the sprints; Haskins, the one mile intercollegiate champion; Taylor, winner of the quarter mile championship two years ago, and Root, Jones, Folsom, Beck, Carothers and Olsen.

A Consolidation.

Don't you care what anybody says about the reformed football; it is still the same old game. Aren't there eleven men on a side, the same old ball, and isn't the hospital list growing?

CULINARY CONCEITS.

When broiling steak try broiling it with butter and flour to keep the juice in.

If eggs are to be boiled hard have the water boiling when the eggs are put in. This will prevent the yolks turning dark.

Cinnamon makes an unusual and appetizing flavor for gelatin desserts, one which has the additional virtue of economy. Serve with sweet cream; plain or whipped.

When frying onions water may be added at the beginning, and, after they have simmered tender, the water should be turned off and fat added for the frying. This process removes the strong onion juice and makes them tender.

It is said that the best way to eat bananas, which are now so common a diet, is to crush them with a fork, squeeze a lime or lemon over them and sprinkle them with sifted sugar. They are often eaten this way in the tropics and found to be delicious.

JAPANESE JOTTINGS.

The average monthly income in Japan after recent advances in wages is officially stated at less than $8.

Japan's principal ports of export and import are, in the order named, Yokohama, Kobe, Osaka, Moji, Nagasaki and Shimonoseki.

Japan's taxes yield $125,000,000 a year; stamp duties $13,500,0000; tobacco and trade monopolies, $29,000,000; posts and telegraphs, $10,000,000, and salt monopoly, $13,000,000.

Like the ancient Egyptians, the Japanese are accustomed to store in huge public granaries $13,500,0000 in years of piety against the day of need which a famine may bring with it.

Baron Takaki says that four fifths of the boys in the schools of Japan are now studying English. If they study languages with the thoroughness that they did war, Japan's next generation will have two tongues.

BOHEMIAN PROVERBS.

Do the hard things first.

It's hard to work, but harder to want.

The heart that loves must be prepared to suffer.

The world doesn't owe you a living. It was here first.

Money isn't everything, but it often makes a good imitation.

The seven ages of man—Baby, Willie, Will, William, Billie, Bill, Old Bill.

Some people imagine that cunning and wisdom are synonymous, but cunning is as plentiful as wisdom is scarce.

It is a shock to a man who thinks he is world famous to discover that there are people in the next block who never heard of him.—Paul Vincent in Bohemian.

HOME DRESSMAKING.

For sewing on buttons stitch twice down the hem and sew buttons on this stitching and they will not tear out the cloth.

In sewing up a skirt, stitch from the bottom up, and it goes with, not against the bias.

In putting in gathered sleeves, sunbonnet crowns, or any work you wish gathers to be even, use two threads, one where the seam will be and the other one-fourth of an inch inside first. Remove second thread after sewing, or you can use machine to gather by making tension very loose and drawing up threads. By using second thread it does away with the ugly little plaits so often seen in gathers.

MACHINERY.

One man in a potery does a thousand potters' work.

One man does today the work of fifty hand loom weavers.

One man and two boys do the work of 1,100 hand spinners.

One man running a horseshoe machine does the work of 500 blacksmiths.

Netting Wash Cloths.

Waash cloths of mosquito netting sound impracticable, but for genuine satisfaction in the using they are hard to beat. One needle society has found ready sale for dozens of them. They are made of five or six thicknesses, turned in and stitched with a long machine stitch, two inches from the edges, then diagonally from corner to corner.

Soap Paste.

A jar of paste made by shaving a piece of white soap and boiling it in water to jelly is a great convenience when a spot appears on a glove or light colored shoe. Moisten a soft cloth in milk, touch it to the paste and rub it gently on the soiled place. Milk is better for the purpose than water, but the latter may be used.

Hemstitching.

One of the easiest methods of hemstitching is to first draw the threads and baste the hem neatly. Then take the work to the sewing machine and with the stitch regulated to the length desired stitch without thread, close to the edge, as in ordinary hem. This produces a line of perforations accurately marked, which is very easy to follow.

UPPER CLASSES GIVE RECEPTION TO FRESHMEN.

The reception given at the Plainfield High School, last night, by the three upper classes to the freshmen, was practically attended by all the pupils of the school. The objects of the affair were to promote sociability and to give all an opportunity to get better acquainted.

The feature of the evening was dancing, which began with a promenade, and concluded with a cotillion. For those who did not dance, games of all kinds were provided and played in the library. Refreshments were served during the evening. This is the first affair of the kind held at the school and was an entire success. It was arranged by Principal I. W. Travell. Music was furnished by Miss Mabel Maxson, piano; Arthur Mosher, violin, and Percy Mygrant, cornet.

Under the auspices of the sophomore class a Hallowe'en social was held Saturday night and large attended. The assembly hall was appropriately decorated with fall colors. The faculty was present and joined in the festivities of the occasion. There was dancing and refreshments were served during the evening. Music was furnished by Miss Florence Dickerson, and Miss Elsie Knowlton and popular selections were rendered by a quartette consisting of Messrs. Fountain, Doane, Reid and Bogardus. The success of the affair was due to the efforts of Chas. Loiseaux, class president and Miss Lillian Cronkite.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic for the Week Beginning Nov. 18.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—How the Bible condemns intemperance; a review of all temperance passages.—Luke xii, 45.

Intemperance has been one of the greatest curses of humanity throughout all ages. From the time of Noah's yielding to the temptation of strong drink intemperance has claimed its multitude of victims. No people or no nation has escaped its blighting influences. The chosen people of God even were no exception. Among them intemperance and drunkenness prevailed, and numerous warnings are to be found in the Bible against it. These warnings should deeply impress us, since they are the warnings of God Himself. Men may argue in favor of alcoholic drinks, governments may license and protect liquor selling saloons, but man's opinion is not to be compared to God's. It is our duty to listen to His voice and to obey the warnings of His word. "We ought to obey God rather than man."

1. The Bible warns us against the consequences of intemperance. Many such texts might be quoted, but no passage in the Bible perhaps so fully sums up the consequences of this evil as the familiar one from Solomon: "Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow? Who hath contentions? Who hath babbling? Who hath wounds without cause? Who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine." Who has not seen the awful consequences of intemperance—woe, sorrow, contentions, wounds? What a warning they should be to all against this great and wide spread interest.

2. The Bible warns us against the slightest indulgence in strong drink. Because of a few passages in the Bible suggesting the use of wine as a medicine it has been argued that the Bible does not teach total abstinence, that it simply warns against the immoderate use of drink and does not condemn moderate drinking. But what does Solomon say? "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright." If we are not to look upon it, how can we touch it? And with what reason the wise man urges complete abstinence. "At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Our only safety is in total and complete abstinence. No one can afford to run the risk of being a moderate drinker. For many such there is alcoholic drinks was at one time a moderate drinker and never intended to become a drunkard. Can we afford to take any chances when the dangers are so great?

3. The Bible warns us against giving drink to others. "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that puttest thy bottle to him, and makest him drunken." The woe here pronounced is applicable to many. The saloon keeper, the bartender, the man who treats another to drink comes clearly within its meaning, and there is no reason why it should not include the government that makes drinking possible and those who at social functions or in their ordinary home life place the wine cup before others. It is almost inexplicable how men can engage in a business that ruins men's lives, how governments can permit the sale of that which destroys its citizens, society can sanction that which only degrades it and men tempt their fellow men to drink. But it is all done. Yet God will hold the guilty ones responsible. His woe has been pronounced upon them and they will not escape their share of the responsibility in the ruination of the bodies, minds and souls of men.

BIBLE READINGS.

Lev. x, 9, 10; Isa. v, 11; Joel, i, 5; Prov. xxiii, 20, 21, 29-35; Nah. i, 10; 1 Cor. v, 10; Gal. v, 19-26; Eph. v, 18; Rev. xxii, 12-15.

For Others Too.

More than mere growth is expected of a plant. Healthy juices may be in its veins, but if it grow vigorous for its own sustenance and yet be no ornament, but an incumbrance to the place it fills. Flower or fruit, some loveliness of tint, some grace of waving spray or comforting shade, we always look for in the growths of earth. And so of spiritual development. More than mere living, more than mere inward satisfaction, is required of us. Our best gifts, those that we count as peculiarly our own, are for ourselves alone. They are hardly our own until they have found expression in blossom and fruitage. Our prayer must be not only, "Let Thy life be within us," but also, "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us."—Lucy Larcom.

A Spirit, an Atmosphere.

Dr. R. J. Campbell in a recent address declared that the indirect results of Christian Endeavor are greater than many Endeavorers know. "It," he says, "has created a spirit, an atmosphere: it has revived spiritual life in the churches; it is shaping the church of the future. While we are looking for and praying for a revival," said Mr. Campbell, "here it is in you young people."

"One Thing."

This one thing let us do.
Henceforward with one heart and mind
Forgetting all that lies behind
And leaving forth unto the end
The things before—let us press on Until our glorious prize be won.

Heedless of toil and pain and strife,
Athirst for more abundant life,
Desiring that our souls may grow
Into His likeness and to know
As we are known, so let us press
On to the mark of holiness.

This one thing let us do.
And through the years that come and go
Our consecrated lives shall know
The fullness of our Father's love,
The depths below, the heights above,
Our shelter is His secret place.
Our joy, the radiance of His face.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Nov. 18: "Personal Evangelism."

By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D.

The call to win men.—Mark i, 17. Not ordained to men only.—Acts x, 42. Believing for our own salvation only we shall be lost.—Mark xvi, 16; John xx, 31. Our natural servitude.—Rom. vi, 16; Gal. iv, 2-23. It requires understanding and wisdom.—Prov. iv, 5, 7; Dan. xii, 3.

It is not altogether easy for most folks to talk to others of their personal religious experience. There are many parents who find it difficult to approach their children on this topic who are still exemplary Christians and zealous for the salvation of their immediate children. Brothers and sisters often talk together of every other thing, but on this most important subject of all their lips seem sealed.

What is the explanation of this difficulty? It is not lack of interest or lack of love.

Perhaps in some cases it arises from lack of a deep and lively consciousness of the nearness of the blessed Christ in the personal life. Where this is feeling deeply and fervently there is a tendency to speak much of Him to others. But where he seems intimately near to one, so he shares all the plans and directs all the life work, one will unconsciously reveal this condition of spirit by the words and speech of life.

Then, again, many lack skill in approaching other people on such subjects and feel keenly this lack of knowledge of the best mode of approach and so do no work in this way.

There are many excuses—but find them not want to do the work, but these are among the chief hindrances to efficiency among those who feel a sense of duty and at the same time a sense of inefficiency and shrinking.

What is a remedy?

First, should seriously inquire: "Have I any responsibility for the salvation of any other one? Ought I to talk to others about their religious condition and try to help them? What reasons are there why I should do this thing? What valid excuses might there be against the doing of it?" Place these clearly before yourself. If desirable, take paper and write them out. There is nothing like having things where you can see them plainly.

Do these people around me stand in need of salvation? Is it a matter of vital importance to them? Is it urgent that they attend to it soon? Have I given the serious thought to their condition which I ought? If their house was on fire or they were exposed to deadly danger would I hesitate an instant to give them warning? Is not this case more serious and urgent than those would be?

If I ought to do this how can I best come at it? There is no one best way and no rules that are the same in all cases. Study the persons. Find out their tastes and personal peculiarities and then approach them on the most promising side.

Sometimes an invitation to go to church service to hear some particular preacher who will be likely to bring the truth home to an earnest seeker will be as good a way as any. Then follow this up by reference to the sermon and the points in it which can be made to lead up to an invitation to seek Christ. It may also be done in such a friendly way that no one can think of resenting it, but you will be taken as a matter of courtesy, which it certainly is.

Most important of all preparation for such service is the going to Christ all alone and getting the heart melted with His tenderness and loving interest in the one sought to be reached. Then He opens ways one could never have otherwise discovered.

Attend to Little Things.

Do not try to do a great thing; you may waste all your life waiting for the opportunity which will never come. But since little things are always claiming your attention, do them as they occur with a great motive, for the glory of God, to win His smile of approval, and to do good to men. It is harder to plod in obscurity, acting thus, than to stand on the high places of the field, within the view of all, and to do deeds of valor great while fiery armies stand still to gaze. But no such act goes without the swift recognition and the ultimate recompense of Christ. To fulfill faithfully the duties of your station; to use to the utmost the gifts of your ministry; to bear chaste thoughts in prose, verse, history, philosophy, drama, romance, satire, ode, song—I have tried all. But I feel I have not, said the thousandth part of what is in me. When I go down to the grave I can say like so many others, "I have finished my day's work," but I cannot say, "I have finished my life." My day's work will begin again the next morning. The tomb is not a blind alley; it is a thoroughfare. It closes in the twilight to open with the dawn.—Victor Hugo.

Calmness.

It is a sign that the soul is living in God if it maintains calmness within through the consciousness of His presence while working for Him in active ministrations. Such restfulness will show itself in the commonest ways, in doing common duties at the right time, in preserving an evenness and evenness of temper in the midst of ordinary interruptions and disturbances, in walking to and fro quietly on the day's varied errands, in speaking gentle words, in sweetly meeting unexpected calls, as calm, unruffled spirit grows as self is learning to lose itself in God.

Our Sorrows.

Every sorrow shall be but the setting of some luminous jewel of joy. Our very mourning shall be but the enamel around the diamond; our very heartships but the metallic rings that holds the opal, glancing with strange interior fire.—Henry Ward Beecher.

GERMAN GLEANINGS.

Germany has fifty-four mountaineering clubs, with over 142,000 members.

A colonial exhibition is being held at Metz for the purpose of encouraging emigration to the African colonies.

Hamburg has a library for the blind, which was opened a year ago, and already contains 1,695 books and 3,750 volumes of music.

Hotel and restaurant prices are steadily rising in German cities because of the rise of 25 per cent. of meat and vegetables. Cooks and waiters also demand much more than formerly.

According to the latest statistics, the strikes in Germany are increasing every year, and it is expected that the figures for 1906 will run ahead of all previous years. For the years 1899 to 1903 inclusive the average number of strikes was 1,242, for 1904 there were 1,870 strikes, and in 1905, 2,057.

Dachau, a German city dogs are captured in a fashion that appeals strongly to the humanitarian. Instead of being lassoed with a noose they are scooped up in a huge dip net.

Three German cities, Frankfort, Rostock and Cologne, have public parks covering about half their area. Berlin, on the other hand, has less than six per cent. of its area taken up by parks.

By way of celebrating the seventieth birthday of the eminent chemist, Adolf von Baeyer, his friends and pupils have brought out a collection of his scientific papers in two volumes of over 2,000 pages.

A chauffeur in Berlin was sent on an errand in a suburb some time ago. He never returned, abandoning his wife and four children, while the owner of the motor car was out 15,000 marks.

In Germany more than 500 out of every thousand women reach the age of fifty years, while only 413 men live so long.

Every month about 3,700 articles are left in the Berlin street cars by their owners, about 600 of them being women's purses.

Experiments made in Germany show that butter keeps best if mixed with 3 to 5 per cent of salt. If the percentage of salt is over 6, the result is less satisfactory.

The empress of Germany has contributed the formation of an institution to be devoted to the saving of infant life, the mortality of infants in Germany being surpassed in Europe only by that of Austria and Russia.

THE PARCELS POST.

There are thirty-five foreign countries in the parcels post union.

France has had the parcels post since 1885 and last year transmitted nearly 3,000,000,000 packages.

Germany's record of parcels post business last year was nearly 7,000,000,000 packages, with profits of $14,624,095.

Austro-Hungary, Italy and Switzerland have the parcels post in well developed condition. In Austro-Hungary there is a banking system in connection with it.

Great Britain has had parcels post for thirty years and carried last year over 4,000,000,000 packages at a profit of over $12,000,000. Its foreign service within the empire is excellent.

To Use Cold Meat.

Take a deep pie dish and at the bottom place a layer of sliced onions, then a layer of sliced potatoes. Cut up the cold meat (any sort will do) into finger strips and make a layer of this, sprinkle over it half a teaspoonful of mixed herbs, pepper and salt to taste. On top of the meat place another layer of onions and lastly potatoes. Have ready, soaked in water, a small teaspoonful of tapioca. Sprinkle this on the top between the slices of potatoes, half fill the dish with water, cover the top of the dish and bake in a fairly slow oven for two hours, or if the vegetables are parboiled—that is, boiled for ten minutes previous to slicing up—it will only take an hour.

Everything But—

"Just look, dear. Don't you think I am a real automobile girl? What of my automobile veil?"

"It is beautiful."

"And this automobile coat—isn't it becoming to my figure?"

"Wonderfully."

"And the automobile cap—did you ever see anything set so fetching?"

"Never."

"And even my hair is in a beautiful automobile tousle. Isn't it grand?"

"Indeed it is, dear, but—but where is your automobile?"

"Oh, I haven't my machine yet, but after I save up 10,000 baking powder labels and 20,000 soap wrappers and all the cigarette coupons the young men give me I'll get one in no time. It won't take over ten years at the longest."—Detroit Tribune.

A Handy Jar.

"What is a cat row in your house, Tommy?" asked the neighbor of the small boy.

"Why, ma's canning fruit," explained Tommy, with an apprehensive glance toward the windows from which poured the sound of angry voices, "and pa's a food inspector, you know, and he's trying to tell her how she ought to do her work."—Judge.

MR. DRYDEN ILLOGICAL.

Stooping to the plane of a practical politician from that elevated position of a statesman, which he has assumed in the past, John F. Dryden gives notice that he intends to bind the Republican party to an agreement to send him back to the United States Senate. His own words demonstrate that from an ideal political standpoint he is unworthy of that honor for he attempts to assert his claim by setting up a contractual obligation on the part of the party's legislators to do something they never agreed to; the very terms of which would be an insult to those who believe in carrying out the dictates of a political body pledged to good government. In short Mr. Dryden casts Jevons aside by the logic he resorts to in making out his case. He assumes that because he and one other man were only candidates in the field before the recent election that now he has an indisputable right to be the only candidate of the party.

He says:

"Before the primaries there were two candidates before the Republican party for the indorsement of the members of the party as their candidate for Senator. These were George L. Record and myself.

"The decision at the primaries, made by the Republican voters of the State at large, was, by a large majority, in my favor. I went, therefore, made the candidate of the whole party in the State, and, having become such, I consider it my duty to continue to be the candidate, as there is to be only one Senator to be elected.

"It is for that reason that I am confident of the support of the Republicans in the Legislature."

The mere fact that the regular organization won the primaries by any sound line of reasoning does not warrant the conclusion that Mr. Dryden draws when he says "I was, therefore, made the candidate of the whole party in the State." If such argument would hold good, no man could aspire to that exalted office and no man can be selected for it, unless his name is announced before the primaries prior to the general election are held. Under such conditions it would be fatal to his ambition to wait until the time arrives when the Legislature in joint session solemnly discharges its duty in electing a Senator.

Even were there anything sound in the premises assumed by the Newarker, was it not tacitly understood that both John W Griggs and Edward C. Stokes were in line for the place now held by him? As a matter of common knowledge, it will be disputed that the Governor, for one, repudiated Son-In-Law Kuser's announcement that the former Senator from Cumberland had endorsed his candidacy. Are there not hundreds of Republicans throughout the State that as well qualified for the place, and some probably better? What show would Mr. Dryden stand were United States Senators elected by popular vote? What show would he have if the Republican voters of New Jersey were allowed by direct ballot to take the question? Mr. Dryden is aware, just as much as any other man in the State that he would not have one chance in ten under such conditions provided that no undue influences were brought to bear.

Among the three, we submit that either Griggs or Stokes represents more fully the people's choice. Mr. Stokes came dangerously near being chosen at the time Mr. Dryden was named, and unless we mistake not, Mr. Stokes will come much nearer to the goal of his ambition when the Legislature again exercises its duty to name a Senator—unless Mr. Griggs is chosen.

MARTINE'S VICTORY

There is every reason for James E. Martine, the Democratic nominee for Congress, to feel proud of the consideration he received at the hands of the voters. Particularly should he find occasion for rejoicing over the fact that the almost invulnerable Republican stronghold of New Jersey, Union county, registered its preference for him to go to Washington in place of Congressman Fowler. The latter had already served six terms. But by reason of his great wealth it might be said he had his opponent greatly handicapped. But he went before the people on Tuesday solely on his record, and that record was not approved of by the intelligent citizenry of Union was plainly evident by the returns.

The figures themselves show how much Mr. Fowler has depreciated in the eyes of the people. Two years ago, when he first had Mr. Martine as his opponent, the marble man received a majority of over 5,000 in the district. On Tuesday he received little more than 600 plurality, including Union, Morris and Warren counties. Union and Warren both went against him and he was saved from utter rout by the normal vote given in Morris. Both men are residents of Union county; one living in Elizabeth and the other in Plainfield. Elizabeth buried its townsman under an avalanche of nearly 2,000 votes, while Plainfield, which gave the Republican Assembly candidates a majority of nearly 1,500, offered the Elizabethan 652 plurality as a balm for his injured feelings. Rahway turned him down also in favor of the Plainfield nominee, piling up a majority in favor of the latter. The result is all the more significant when it is considered in connection with the fact that four years ago—an off year in politics—Fowler received 1,700 plurality in this city alone.

Martine was defeated, and yet a great victory was his.

MR. ACKERMAN RIGHT.

Senator Ackerman's announcement that he will favor Governor Stokes for United States Senator in place of John F. Dryden clears him of the stigma of being a "machine" Republican. His declaration is an assertion of independence so bold that it will make some of the State's political ringsters gasp for breathe. The idea of Senator Ackerman from the foremost Republican fortress in the State proclaiming fearlessly that he will use his voice and vote to help seat the clean and able chief executive of the State in the highest legislative body in the country without waiting to hear from the bosses is something quite unexpected in politics.

The second choice of Mr. Ackerman is also an admirable one; one that will likewise meet with the approval of all decent Republicans in Union county. No finer man could be named for the place, excepting Edward Casper Stokes. It is not unfair to say that Dryden represents wealth while Stokes typifies ability. The one has no more show of being thought fit for the office than he would of being considered for a judiceship of the Supreme Court of the United States were it not for his money. The other's money is of no consequence for he is far from being a Croesus. It is his recognized political sagacity, statesmanlike action, lofty character, and seasoned experience that commends him. He is a man who has made an ideal record both in the halls of legislation and in the chief executive's chair.

Stokes is the man who should be chosen, if he declines Griggs should be named. Senator Ackerman so believes, and his opinion truly reflects the best sentiment of Union county.

The Senator from Union is to be congratulated.

PLUMS FOR DEMOCRATS.

In the House, the Democrats will have patronage amounting to $36,000 in a round sum, to dispose of when the Legislature convenes. Of this amount $18,300 of the "pap" is allowed by statute and the remainder by custom. Here are the figures of the "plums" provided by law: Clerk of the House, $1,500; assistant clerk, $1,200; journal clerk, $1,000; assistant journal clerk, $500; supervisor of bills, $1,300; first assistant supervisor, $600; second assistant supervisor, $600; sergeant-at-arms, $700; first assistant, $500; second assistant, $500; bill clerk, $500; first assistant, $500; printed bill committee clerk, $500; four committee clerks, $1,200; twelve doorkeepers, $4,200; ten pages, $2,000; speaker's secretary, $600; speaker's assistant secretary, $400.

NEW JERSEY DEMOCRATIC.

The total vote cast Tuesday places the State again in the Democratic column—for the time being. On the face of it, Jersey is lost to the Republicans by 11,250. So far as pluralities are concerned the Republicans got 47,370 while their opponents received 28,650. The Republican plurality in the Assembly ticket last year was 57,978, and in 1904 the State went for Roosevelt by 80,000 and for Stokes for Governor by 51,000. The Democrats have not had a majority in the State in any previous year since 1903.

"COME PERKY."

The unexpected has happened and Assemblyman Perkins' ambition to be the speaker of the House will not be realized, at least not for some time. As the Democrats will be in the majority in the next Assembly, the Westfielder will have to be content and satsified with the same job he held in the last Legislature—majority floor leader on the Republican bunch, excepting that in the next session he will be a minority factotum.

NOT TO ANY GREAT EXTENT!

Does Mr Dryden contend that the candidates for the Assembly before the Republican primaries, or any factions having delegates to county conventions were pledged to him? Does he even contend that the Assembly nominees came out with an endorsement of him before Election Day?

KEEP YOUR EYE ON STOKES.

Mr. Griggs like Mr. Dryden lost his own county. South Jersey stood by the party as the returns will indicate. Therefore, watch out for Mr. Stokes.

"WOW!"

A change of 206 votes in the entire Fifth district, which includes Union, Morris and Warren counties, would have sent James E. Martine to Washington instead of Charles N. Fowler. The latter's plurality it appears has dwindled down to 610; an insignificant figure when it is recalled that his plurality two years ago was 5,004.

"THINK IT OVER."

What does Hamilton F. Kean mean when he says the Union County Assemblymen should "make up their minds what is for the best interests of Union county."

In the Trenton True American a "prominent" Republican asks "Why not name Briggs now that Dryden is out?" The silly season is still on.

Mr. Fowler says he is much pleased. He has every reason to be.

METROPOLITAN GOLFERS TO DINE AT DELMONICO'S.

Leighton Calkins Issues Notices of Annual Meeting to Be Held on December 11.

The annual meeting of the Metropolitan Golf Association will be held at Delmonico's, Fifth avenue and 44th street, New York, Tuesday night, December 11, at 8:30 o'clock, Leighton Calkins, the secretary, having sent out notices to the members. Each club is entitled to be represented by two voting delegates and they must be certified to be club secretaries. The following nominations have been made by the nominating committee:

President, William Fellowes Morgan; vice-president, Arden M. Robbins; secretary, Leighton Calkins; treasurer, Frank C. Jennings; executive committee, the above officers and Simeon Ford, Paul Wilcox, Geo. T. Brokaw, John R. Maxwell, Jr., and S. Vilas Beckwith.

The following amendments to the constitution have been proposed and will be voted upon at the meeting.

1. Section 1 of Article III, which now reads as follows:

"The membership of this Association shall be limited to the associate and allied clubs of the United States Golf Association within fifty-five miles of New York, including the whole of Long Island."

To be amended so as to read as follows:

"The membership of this Association shall be limited to clubs located within fifty-five miles of New York City, including the whole of Long Island."

2. Add the following as a new section to Article III:

"No player shall be eligible to compete for the amateur championship of the Association unless he is a bona fide resident of the district covered by the Association and a member in good standing of a club belonging to the Association."

3. Article VII, which reads as follows:

"The fiscal year shall end on the 30th of November. The yearly dues shall be $10.00, payable on the first day of January in each year."

To be amended so as to read as follows:

"The fiscal year shall end on the 30th of November. The yearly dues shall be $15.00 payable on the first day of January in each year."

4. Article XV, which now reads as above stated, to be amended so as to read as follows:

"The fiscal year shall end on the 30th of November. The yearly dues shall be $--.00, payable on the 1st day of January in each year."

Although each club in the Association can be represented by only two voting delegates, all members of clubs belonging to the Association are cordially invited to be present at the meeting.

THE WHITE-WINGED DOVE OF PEACE AT "THE CLANSMAN."

Performance Passed Off Without the Slightest Suggestion of Trouble.

Without the slightest hint of trouble of any kind or any more demonstration than attends the performance of one of Theodore Kremer's thrillers, "The Clansman" was presented at the New Plainfield theatre Friday night. The predictions of the know-it-alls that the city would witness a race riot that would stir the State and that every Duchesne, who entered the gallery would carry a gun, fell to the ground like a spent skyrocket. It is true several bluecoats were stationed about the house but they tired themselves out looking for something to do and the only good that came from their presence was a chance to see the show.

The play was given exactly as it was presented last year and gave satisfaction to the audience. There were exactly two colored people in the orchestra and a generous sprinkling in the gallery but they made no comment and none was made by the white for their benefit.

It is needless to say that Manager Counihan is fully aware of the size, shape and color of the acid fruit that was placed at his hand. The silly agitation against the production cut the attendance over last season more than half and he is out a large roll of real money. The attraction is one that would always draw a full house on its merits but the fear of getting a stray bullet or something in a mix-up had the effect of keeping hundreds of people away.

Broke a Wrist Bone.

Running for a train at the Grant Avenue station Thursday afternoon, Thomas Shearon, of West Third street, fell and broke a small bone in his wrist. Dr. Cregar reduced the fracture.

AMUSEMENTS.

While Lew Fields acquired the Herald Square theatre, New York, he determined to give Broadway the strongest cast and the best value possible. The result was even more than was promised and the comedian heads a phenomenal cast including Edna Wallace Hopper, Louise Dresser, Elita Proctor Otis, Louise Allen Collier, George Beban, Harry Fisher, Lawrence Grossmith, Jack Norworth and Campbell—all stars of popular prominence—with several lesser lights of ability and the prettiest chorus ever brought together.

Lew Fields's "bridget whist" burlesque of the popular game, in "About Town" at the Herald Square theatre, ew York, is not always a parody, for all who take part in it are expert bridge players. Mr. Fields is still "sore" over a trick played on him a few nights ago. It was agreed that the hand should be played "on the square" for a lunch after the performance. In anticipation the stage games allows, Beban, Fisher and Norworth, "jobbed" the comedian and he was properly scalped by the conspirators. He paid the debt, but vows vengance.

Fay Templeton, who made a tremendous hit in George M. Cohan's music play, "45 Minutes from Broadway," at the New Amsterdam theatre last season is the leading feature engagement at the New York theatre in the same vehicle. Her supporting company is identically the same as when she played at the New Amsterdam, and will include Victor Moore as "Kid" Burns, Emma Littlefield, Julia Ralph, Marion Singer, Donald Brian, Charles French, James H. Manning and Louis Grisel.

Klaw & Erlanger's greatest production, "The Prince of India," will end its ten weeks engagement at the Broadway theatre this Saturday evening, Nov. 24th, and on Monday evening, the 26th inst., will give place to Anna Held and her company in "A Parisian Model." "The Prince of India" could undoubtedly remain at the Broadway theatre this spring, playing to capacity, but as Klaw & Erlanger have made it a rule never to break a contract, the route booked before the Broadway theatre run began will be played without change and Miss Held will be given her New York date as originally planned. The week beginning Nov. 26th, "The Prince of India" will be presented at the Newark theatre in Newark; December 3d at the Broadway theatre in Brooklyn borough, and December 10th, for ten weeks, at the Garrick theatre in Philadelphia. The great production will be staged in these theatres exactly as presented at the Broadway, with Emmett, Corrigan, William Farnum, Boyd Putnam, Julius McVickar and Adelaide Keim in the leading roles. Beginning next Monday, "The Prince of India" will remain at the Broadway but one week longer.

HIS EGG NTRICITIES LANDED HIM IN A CELL

STRENUOUS BELGIAN MACHINIST UPSETS TENOR OF THE GLOVE FACTORY.

For his "eccentricities," as Superintendent Hippolyte Texier considerately put it in court on Saturday, August Leemon, a Belgian employed as machinist at the glove factory of V. Perrin et Cie, Washington avenue, was arrested yesterday. Leemon's "eccentricities" included chasing after Edmund Duchesne, another employe, with a gun, an attempt to terrorize the factory girls into endorsing him as shop boss, and sass to the superintendent.

The trouble started two weeks ago, when Leemon casually intimated to Mr. Texier that he knew more about the business than the superintendent. He followed the declaration up by doing things in his own way, without regard to Mr. Texier's orders. That led to a clash with Duchesne, and about a week ago he armed himself and ran out of the shop after his fellow-employe. He didn't catch up with Duchesne, and he said it was a good thing he didn't because terrible things would have happened.

Leemon followed this eccentricity up with the composition of a statement that he was fully capable of conducting the whole plant. He passed it around among the employes in the hope of their signing it. Yesterday he became so insistent on signatures that the girls became frightened and began to talk of running out. Panic was threatened several times, and the conditions were not improved when it became known that Leemon had a wicked-looking revolver displayed on the table in the machinist's room.

Leemon's commanding position suddenly melted from under him when Detective McCarthy appeared on the scene in response to a hurried call from the superintendent. The militant Belgian was pinched in short order, without regard to his qualities as an inventor of new gunsights. He was meek and subdued when arraigned before Judge Runyon this morning, and hastened to promise that he would leave the shop and the city by nightfall. Mr. Texier said he would drop the case with that understanding, but he insisted on having an officer detailed to see that Leemon did as he promised without making gunplays.

MACLAY LECTURES ON VALE OF KASMER

TALKS TO HIGH SCHOOL BOYS ON FAMOUS SPOT IN BRITISH INDIA.

"In the Vale of Kasmer," was the subject of an illustrated lecture given by Arthur C. Maclay before the pupils of the Plainfield High School Friday afternoon. With the aid of fine views he gave a vivid account of his own town, the Vale of Kashmer, which is located in the most northern extremity of British India, the most mountainous country in the world.

Mr. Maclay said that a good deal of traveling is done on moonlight night according to the custom of the country. His description of the crafty guide showed that even the Hindu is not free from graft. The period that the lecture covered was during a famine year, and the awful conditions of the people were shown in all their terrifying aspects. The inner history of the famine was touched upon, showing that in every decade occurs a famine and ten millions of people die.

Mr. Maclay gave a very comprehensive and interesting description of the wild and majestic scenery of the Himalaya Mountains, and showed conclusively that Thomas Moore's poem of the Vale of Kashmer is an utter impossibility and untrue to nature. In speaking of the slovenly habits of the natives Mr. Maclay said that the Hindu is as near hybrinating as a human being can. He rolls himself in a blanket and sleeps, rising only to eat. They are densely ignorant, he said, have no pity, and are superstitious. A Mohamadan will not drink after a Christian, and when in a starving condition will choose death rather than accept food from a Christian.

The majority of the buildings in the Vale of Kashmer are frail, being of the simplest forms of architecture. No industry is carried on, other than the manufacture of blankets and shawls which are made of the long hair of the native goat.

This was the first of a series of illustrated lectures which I. W. Travell has planned for the benefit of the pupils.

ANNOUNCE THEIR WEDDING.

Lawrence Miller and Miss Grace Murphy Were Married in New York on Aug. 22.

Lawrence Miller, son of Druggist Joseph G. Miller, of Union street, and Miss Grace Murphy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Murphy, of West Fifth street, announced today that they had been secretly married on August 22 last. The ceremony was performed in the City Hall, New York, by Alderman Romond, and was witnessed only by the groom's brother, Joseph Miller, and an intimate friend. Owing to illness in the bride's family, the announcement was deferred until the present time.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Miller are well known young people and the fact of the marriage has occasioned much surprise. They had been keeping company for some time and by their friends it was understood that they were to be wedded this month. They will make their home on Union street.

AT BROOKLYN BANQUET.

Forty Members of Jerusalem Chapter Attend Big Reception.

Jerusalem Chapter, R. A. M., sent forty members to Brooklyn Friday to attend the reception tendered by Orient Chapter, No. 138, to Grand High Priest Derrick Brown, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Jerusalem was the only chapter invited in a body.

The reception culminated in an elaborate dinner, in the chapter banquet room, in the Johnston building, Nevins street, Brooklyn. Covers were laid for 360. Several grand chapter officers were present. E. Frank Corille, sojourner of Jerusalem chapter, responded to the address of welcome, speaking for High Priest Samuel Bingaman, who was unable to be present. The grand high priest was presented with a handsome jewel by Orient chapter.

COUNCILMAN SMITH GETS ON HIS DIGNITY

SERVES NOTICE HE WON'T PRESENT FIREMEN ALARM RESOLUTION AGAIN.

For the purpose of deciding whether or not the New York & New Jersey Telephone Company should be paid the $17.50 for overhauling the fire alarm system, the Borough Council held a special session last night. It lasted but a short time and was uneventful but Chairman Smith, of the Fire committee, stirred things up a little bit by a display of "mulay" immediately after adjournment.

It was he who called for the meeting and presented the 'phone company's estimate, at the same time offering a resolution that it be accepted. He did not specify how much work would be done or the amount of material used, for the money and Councilman VanArsdale suggested that it had better be embodied in the resolution. Councilman Krewson thought the same way, but Mr. Smith failed to give the desired information.

The interruption, however, led to a discussion of the proposition and in the end the Council voted against it. Mr. Van Aradale then offered a resolution that the matter be laid over until next Monday night and the information voted for at adjournment. As they began to leave the room, Chairman Smith held to his seat in a very dissatisfied frame of mind. When the opportunity offered he exclaimed with emphasis:

"This is the last time I'll present this matter. You people can do as you like about it."

The "people" were somewhat surprised at their confrere's display of temper but if it impressed them any, there was no outward sign and they filed out into the night in silence.

Vice-president Lee was in the chair in the absence of Mayor Smalley. Councilmen McGee and Van Winkle were not present.

DRUNKS AND SCRAPS FIGURE IN CITY COURT

SATURDAY NIGHT AND SUNDAY CROP OF USUAL SORT BEFORE RUNYON.

Joseph Lacey and Elisha McCready, arrested for fighting at Somerset and Front streets, Saturday night, were fined $3 each. McCready made a break for freedom when Officer O'Gorman broke up the scrap, but he was captured over the brook by one of Chief Weiss' aids, and handed over to the city authorities.

Michael Gleason, arrested Saturday night at 7:20 o'clock, at Front street and Park avenue by Chief Kiely and Roundsman Flynn, for drunkenness and disorder was a fineless dismissal from Judge Runyon by promising to sign the pledge. To show he was properly impressed by the solemnity of the step, Gleason told the court he would wait until next Sunday before taking it and like it for the higher life is a new suit.

Herman Lorsch, arrested by Chief Kiely Saturday night after the McCready-Lacey row, on Somerset street, was released under suspended sentence. He sassed the head sleuth when he was ordered to move on and brashly said he wanted to be arrested.

Arthur Scott, arrested by Officer Kelly, for drunkenness, was released under suspended sentence. Edward Kline, summoned by the Board of Health, for failure to connect his house with the sanitary sewer, was given thirty days in which to do it. He pleaded poverty but the court told him the law could take no cognizance of that in connection with his case.

Rev. and Mrs. C. L. Goodrich, of West Seventh street, will return today from Montclair, where they were called to attend the funeral services of Mrs. Goodrich's father, Mr. Carter.

STATIONARY ENGINEERS MEET.

A meeting of the National Association of Stationary Engineers was held in the rooms of the Newark local No. 3, on Saturday night. The president, T. H. Kelsey, from Lowell Union No. 17, and Vice-President Joseph F. Carney, of New York, who are here on their official State visit, made addresses.

Mr. Kelsey spoke on the foundation and advancement of the order during all its twenty-five years of its organization. Mr. Carney told of the good the association had done for engineers throughout the United States.

Representatives were present from Hoboken, Jersey City, Plainfield, Perth Amboy, Passaic and Elizabeth. Short addresses were made by William Reynolds, of Hoboken; William Cronley, Jersey City No. 1; John Calligan, Jersey City No. 10; Carrol Runyon, of Plainfield, and W. C. Tucker and J. MacMorran, of Newark No. 3.

Given a Surprise Party.

Miss Maude Duffy, of Grove street, was tendered a surprise party by a number of friends Saturday night. Vocal and instrumental music and dancing combined to pass a pleasant evening. Guests were in attendance from Newark, Elizabeth and this city.

SCHEME TO ERECT A "TEMPLE OF LABOR" HERE

Plainfield Machinists' Union Appoints Committee to Consider Advisability.

FOR HOME OF ITS OWN

Lodge No. 167 Is One of the Strongest in the State and It's Treasury Is in Fine Condition.

Plainfield lodge, No. 167, International Association of Machinists, has under advisability the erection of a home of its own, or, as they are known in other cities, a "Labor Temple." At present its meetings are conducted in Trades Council hall on West Front street but it is not especially adapted to the organization's needs and the membership has been increasing so rapidly the quarters will soon be inadequate. At a recent meeting, the lodge officers appointed a committee to investigate local building conditions and present a report as to the cost, probable location and other matters relative to the erection of a suitable structure.

It was specified in the instructions to the committee that a three-story building in the business section of the city is what is needed. Stores for the first floor were to be considered; lodge rooms for the second and assembly room for the third. The committee was also authorized to visit the temples in nearby places to secure suggestions and information.

Plainfield lodge, No. 167, is now one of the strongest branches of the order in the State, having over 500 members on its roll. It has had but little call on its resources since the machinists' strike five years ago and the excellent condition of the treasury is one of the reasons that induced the officers to consider having its own building. There is hardly a similar organization in the city that has its affairs better conducted and there is every prospect that the investigating committee will consider the matter in a full and impartial manner.

MORE LEHIGH YARDS AT SOUTH PLAINFIELD

BIG TRACT OF GROUND BEING GRADED FOR TWENTY ADDITION TRACTS.

The recent purchase of a big wood lot back of the South Plainfield station, has given rise to the story that the Lehigh Valley Railroad is to add another freight yard to its trackage at that point. The new property has been stripped of its trees and they have been cut into ties and cord wood, the later intended for sale. Laborers are now at work grading the ground and it is declared that twenty tracks will be laid, the reception and discharge of freight at that point having increased to such an extent that additional facilities have become absolutely necessary.

South Plainfield is one of the most important freight stations on the line from Mauch Chunk to Jersey City and it is rapidly growing through the railroad's efforts. The constant switching and drilling is not liked by the residents, however, as the noise at night is not conducive to sleep and the company has paid no heed to complaints about unnecessary whistling and shouts of trainmen.

COMMUTERS WANT A TRAIN AT 8:10 A. M.

ROAD MAY BE ASKED TO PUT ON AN EAST BOUND MORNING SPECIAL.

The rumor that the New Jersey Central proposes to operate a second section of the popular 7:55 morning train to New York, which will leave here at 7:45, has brought forth considerable discussion on the part of the commuter element. It is a question in the minds of some as to whether the proposed 7:45 train will not relieve the fast and popular 7:35 train more than it will the 7:55.

For years many wealthy commuters have endeavored to secure a fast morning train to New York leaving Plainfield about 8:10 or 8:15 which will land the business men in New York at 9 o'clock. This would give them ample time to reach Wall street and attend to important business before the Stock Exchange opens. At present there is no fast train leaving Plainfield in the morning which reaches New York at 9 o'clock and now that there is talk of a change in the running of the 7:55 efforts are being renewed to have a train leave here between 8 and 8:15 o'clock. The matter will probably be taken up with the officials of the railroad.

HOMEOPATHS RECOGNIZED

Muhlenberg's Board Lets Down the Bars for Others Besides Allopaths.

DR. DAVIS APPOINTED

Selected As a Special Attending Physician Holding Membership In Regular Board.

The Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, at its November meeting at the Casion, Monday night, adopted this resolution:

"That any medical case in the regular service who shall, on or before admission, either personally or by a properly authorized representative, notify the superintendent that he or she desires to be treated homeopathically may be so treated by an attending physician especially appointed for this purpose; and that a physician, residing in Plainfield or North Plainfield, practicing homeopathy, shall be appointed by the Board of Governors as 'special homeopathic attending physician,' whose duty it shall be to attend the above-mentioned cases; such homeopathic attendant shall be a member of the medical board of the hospital."

By subsequent action of the board, Dr. T. B. Davis was appointed 'special homeopathic attending physician of the hospital.'

This important action is the result of long and persistent effort on the part of the homeopathic physicians to secure recognition at the hospital. Heretofore, a homeopathic physician was privileged to take a patient to the hospital for treatment, but there has been no representative of that school of medicine on the medical board and no homeopathic physician had any say regarding hospital affairs. Last night's action on the part of the board is the first step toward a recognition of the homeopaths and will likely make many friends for the hospital.

It was expected that the board would also fill the place on the medical board left vacant by the resignation of Dr. W. C. Boone, but no action was taken, the matter being laid over until a future time.

The monthly report of patients at the hospital for October is as follows:

Patients remaining at last report, 22; admitted, 53; discharged cured, 41; improved, 3; not improved, 1; died, 2; total number treated, 75; remaining in hospital, 33; number operations, 42. In the dispensary there were 79 patients; visits of patients, 315, and 21 operations.

GROWTH OF Y. M. C. A. WOMEN'S AUXILIARY

ANNUAL MEETING FINDS IT STILL THE LARGEST IN THE STATE.

With its position as the largest organization of its kind in the State unshaken, the Y. M. C. A. Women's Auxiliary began a new year yesterday. The annual meeting was held at the Y. M. C. A. in the afternoon.

Mrs. H. M. Maxson, who was president from the start of the auxiliary three years ago, asked to be relieved as head of the organization, and Mrs. L. M. French was elected in her place. Mrs. Maxson, Mrs. Walter Freeman and Mrs. J. W. Gavett were elected vice presidents. Mrs. F. J. Hubbard and Mrs. Harry C. Runyon were elected secretary and treasurer respectively.

Highly gratifying reports were received from all departments. The membership has grown in the year from about 200 to 300, and the treasury is in excellent condition. During the year $400 has been spent on local and State M. Y. C. A. work. Reports on the work of the devotional committee, by Mrs. George H. Babcock; the membership committee, by Mrs. J. Harry Manning; boys' work committee, by Mrs. Walter Freeman; social committee, by Mrs. L. M. French; flower and sick committee, by Dr. Martha Rose Stillman, were read.

After the meeting light refreshments were enjoyed. Mrs. L. M. French and Mrs. Walter Freeman were in charge of the social hour.

The work for the new year has not been mapped out yet. The plans will be shaped up when the new committees are made up.

Dog Owners in Panic.

Dog poisoners have thrown the owners of canine pets and house guardians in New Market into a panic. It is reported that ten dogs have been poisoned fatally in a week, and others have been sickened to the verge of death. Dog owners have taken to keeping their animals tied in the house, and allowing them to exercise only from the end of chains. From the ruthlessly indiscriminate way in which the poisoners worked it is suspected that boys are at the bottom of the crimes.

Borough Councilmen Angry Over Wierd Tales as to Condition of Fire Department.

MAYOR'S BLUNT TALK

Mr. Smalley Declares There is a Time and Place for Discussing Opinions and Its Not the Street.

The Borough Council held another adjourned session, Monday, and in the space of a few minutes passed a resolution to accept the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company's offer to repair the fire alarm system at a cost of $137.50. By the same resolution, the fire, water and lamps committee was authorized to furnish all the material necessary.

During the meeting, Fire Chief Woolston took occasion to inform the Council that he needed more men in the department and that at times its efficiency was hampered for this reason. He cited as an instance that at the Barry barn fire, Saturday night, so many call men were either away gunning or visiting that outsiders took a hand and as a result water was turned on too soon, the hose got kinks and various mistakes were made. Replying to the chief, Mayor Smalley said:

"The fire department is exceeding its appropriation and for general purposes the men now under salary ought to be competent to take care of all fires. Unless I am instructed by a majority of the Council, I shall make no more appointments, either for house duty or otherwise. We don't want to get into competition with Plainfield or any other place. The department as it stands now was put in under strenuous conditions and we've got to crawl before we jump. I think two men are able to do the work in the house despite the fact that the ordinance calls for three; if the two men think the work is too much let them complain."

At this juncture the mayor grasped the opportunity to take a "shot" at the officials who have been passing out wierd statements to an overzealous reporter about the "inefficiency" of the department, "the deplorable condition of the alarm system" and the "men at headquarters being dissatisfied with the way the department is run."

"If there is anything wrong with the department," said the executive, "there is a time and place to discuss it. There is a committee which oversees its affairs and the street is not the place to air views. We don't want this fire-and-water talk coming to us from the Mayor and Council and if the companies are dissatisfied let them present the names of competent men for appointment."

Chief Woolston replied that the brunt of complaint fell on him and that he had all sorts of difficulties with the men but that "he was willing to take it all for the taxpayers."

Following the meeting, a majority of the Councilmen held a short indignation session at which they openly expressed regret that such stories as had been given out had made their way into the columns of another paper. They were unanimous that erroneous statements of this nature worked harm to the community and that officials had ought to think carefully before giving them out. As Borough Electrician Searing expressed it, "because a box failed to work Saturday, the whole system was condemned."

Those who are interested in true drama have a treat in store. George Kiernan, the well-known Pittsburg actor, who is a representative of the Joseph Jefferson school, will be heard in recitals to be given in December. He will present "The Rivals" and "Rip VanWinkle," two of Mr. Jefferson's best known plays. Mrs. Mary E. Lowry, representing Mr. Kiernan, has made arrangements for a series of recitals to be given at the Casino on December 14 and 18.

SLAPS HUSBAND'S FACE

Mrs. Olive B. Dunn Resents Alleged Insult With Vigor.

IN A BARBER SHOP

Then She Has Him Arrested—Is Suing For a Divorce and Wants His "Scoffing" Stopped.

Mrs. Olive B. Dunn, who is suing her husband, Wesley J. Dunn, for divorce, on the ground of extreme cruelty, appeared against him in the City Court Tuesday to press a charge of disorderly conduct. The charge grew out of an encounter between the two at Alfred Seidel's barber shop, Park avenue, Saturday night, in which Mrs. Dunn slapped her husband's face before the usual Saturday night barber-shop crowd.

Mrs. Dunn alleged that, as she passed the barber shop, her husband put his head outside the door and said, loud enough for everybody to hear, "That's the cat." She went on at that time, but her anger over the alleged remark led her to return in a few minutes with her mother. She went into the shop and walked swiftly to her husband. "You'll call me a cat, will you!" she exclaimed, and slapped him in the face. The smack was heard all over the shop. Then Mrs. Dunn swept majestically out to the arm of her mother.

Dunn testified this morning that he did not use the word cat, or make any reference to his wife as she passed the shop. Dunn drove to the barber shop in one of his father's grocery wagons, and he said the remark his wife heard was called forth by a compliment paid to the horse by one of the men in the shop. Just as she approached the shop this man said the nice thing about the horse. She was passing by, Dunn said, when he remarked, "That's my pet," referring to the horse. He said nothing about cat, he swore, and all the men in the barber shop at the time assured him they were ready to swear he hadn't when his wife retired after the slapping episode.

Judge Runyon sent out for Mr. Seidel. The barber corroborated Dunn's story.

Dunn charged his wife with annoying him persistently. He said she hung about the barn where he worked just to nag him. Mrs. Dunn indignantly denied the charge.

The two exchanged passes all through the hearing. Mrs. Dunn was seconded by her mother, who accompanied her to court. The latter declared Dunn was not even on speaking terms with truth, and threatened to bring the law on him herself. Dunn smiled, and Mrs. Dunn's indignation increased.

"Look at that," she said. "That's the mean grin he always shows. That is why I slapped him."

"Because he smiled?" queried the magistrate.

"Well, he has no right to scoff at me. He has attacked my reputation and made it a matter of talk all over town."

Judge Runyon withheld his decision on the case. He said the charge was evidently brought simply to bring an end to clashes between the two, and he believed it best to let the case rest with the understanding that both sides in the unpleasantness stay away from each other.

SENATOR JOHN KEAN'S VIEWS OF SITUATION

DRYDEN MUST LOOK TO SOUTH JERSEY —PLENTY OF OTHER GOOD MEN.

Senator John Kean, Mr. Dryden's colleague, in an interview, Monday, after saying that he believed John F. Dryden would be successful if South Jersey remained loyal to him, declared that Mr. Dryden, however, could not expect much from North Jersey after the result of last Tuesday's election, and must base his hope on the other part of the State. Senator Kean remarked he could not see how Governor Stokes could be a candidate, as there was a clause in the State Constitution which acted as a barrier to his candidacy.

This clause, however, would not have any bearing on his eligibility with the United States Senate if the State Legislature saw fit to elect him, but it would be a doubtful question if the Legislature would deliberately vote to override a part of the Constitution which debars the Governor from being a senatorial candidate while holding his present office.

When Senator Kean was asked who, in his opinion, would be the candidate if it was not Stokes or Dryden, he shrugged his shoulders and smiled and remarked: "Oh, there are others who are eligible and I have no doubt could satisfactorily fill the bill.

"Personally, I would like to see Senator Dryden re-elected, but he has a hard fight on his hands, and as I said before, it altogether depends on the strength he shows in South Jersey, whose legislative representatives hold the key to the situation."

SOCIETY AT HYDEWOOD

Gather as Mr. and Mrs. F. DeL. Hyde's Guests to Meet Mr. and Mrs. L. K. Hyde.

ABOUT 400 PRESENT

From Far and Near—Beautiful Decorations and Music—Those Who Were There.

For the purpose of introducing Mr. and Mrs. Louis Kepler Hyde, who recently removed from Titusville, Pa., to this city, Mr. and Mrs. Francis DeLacy Hyde gave a large reception at their beautiful home, Hydewood Hall, Saturday afternoon and evening from 4 to 10 o'clock. There were present about 400 well-known society people from this city and out-of-town, and the affair was a brilliant one.

Especially attractive were the decorations, consisting chiefly of magnificent chrysanthemums. There were about thirty dozen chrysanthemums, principally yellow and white used throughout the house. Many of them were raised by Japanese. In the dining room pink chrysanthemums and oak leaves were used in profusion and with good effect. During the hours of the reception delightful music was furnished by the Neapolitan orchestra, of New York. Marest was the caterer.

Those assisting in the receiving party were Mrs. Charles Hyde, Mrs. Chapman Fisk, Mrs. E. H. Ladd, Jr., Mrs. Percy H. Stewart, Mrs. Pierre Mali, Mrs. Dorsey Hyde, Miss Maida Hyde, Miss Jessie Munger, Mrs. J. Kirtland Myers, Mrs. Benjamin Arrowsmith Hegeman, Mrs. Ewarts Tracy, Mrs. Daniel P. Ginna, of this city; Mrs. Morton Nichols, Mrs. Hood Wright, of New York; Mrs. Louis Brenneman and Mrs. Thomas Bakewell, of Pittsburg.

Since coming to Plainfield to live Louis Kepler Hyde has been elected president of the City National Bank, and he is in many other ways identified with the business interests of this city. He recently completed the building of a handsome home on Mountain avenue, where he and Mrs. Hyde now reside.

There were guests at the reception from Philadelphia, Pittsburg, New York and this city, among them being the following:

Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Abbott, Mrs. Warren Ackerman, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Arens, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick H. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Albert H. Aterbury, Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. George A. CHILDREN AND MATCHES FIRE CHAS. BARRY'S BARN

STRUCTURE AND SIX TONS OF HAY ARE CONSUMED.

Children and matches are ascribed as the cause of a fire which destroyed the large barn of Hackman Charles Barry, situated at the rear of his residence on Howard street, Saturday evening. The blaze was first noticed shortly before 6 o'clock and had evidently been smoldering for some time. A man passing turned in an alarm from box 145 at Somerset street and Hudson lane but it failed to work. By the time another attempt was made the barn got out a depot wagon and a mixed collection of small articles. There was no live stock in the structure at the time the fire started.

With the arrival of the borough fire department, which made a record run for the season, the members devoted their attention to saving two dwellings, located dangerously near the blazing barn. They worked rapidly and beside keeping the houses from getting any more than a scorching, had the original blaze out in short order.

Barry puts his loss at $2,000, partially covered by insurance.

TOTAL VOTE 68 PER CENT.

3,414 Ballots Cast Out of Registry of 5,004 in Plainfield.

1,138 FOR THE G. O. P.

In Five Districts 342 Were Scratched Ballots—996 Democratic Votes.

The summary of Tuesday's vote in Plainfield forms an interesting study, especially in view of the fact that a great deal of cutting was done, and chiefly by Republicans. Out of the 5,004 registered voters in the city, there was a total of 3,414 votes cast, in the four wards, of which number 2,138 were Republican and 996 Democratic. In the five districts not having machines there was a total of 342 scratched, or cut ballots, and a total of 14 rejected ballots. The vote cast by the two leading parties, together with the number of scratched ballots follows:

		Scratched.
	Rep.	Dem.	Rep.	Dem. Total.
First Ward, First District	316	134	0	0 466
First Ward, Second District	163	55	30	5 241
Second Ward, First District	295	199	0	0 525
Second Ward, Second District	179	47	49	9 227
Third Ward, First District	296	122	0	0 437
Third Ward, Second District	99	47	61	13 235
Fourth Ward, First District	302	129	0	0 431
Fourth Ward, Second District	369	112	68	10 452
Fourth Ward, Third District	283	156	83	14 456
	2,138	996	291	51 3,414

There were two rejected ballots in the Second district of the Second ward, four in the Second district of the Third ward, four in the Second district and one in the Third district of the Fourth ward. The tally sheets where the machines were used in the First district of each ward, did not indicate the number of scratched ballots as in the other districts.

It is a very noticeable fact that the machine is not conducive to independence, most of the cutting being done where no machine were used.

In comparing the Congressional vote of 1904 with that of this year, Congressman Charles N. Fowler, the Republican candidate, received 2350 votes less than in 1904, while James E. Martine, the Democratic candidate, received 101 more votes than when he ran in the first instance against the present Congressman.

Congressman Fowler's total vote in Plainfield was 2,288, while the "farmer-orator" received a total of 1,286. On Tuesday Fowler received 1,948 votes in Plainfield, and Martine got 1,285, giving Fowler a majority of 663. Two years ago Fowler had a majority of 912 over his opponent.

In every district Fowler's vote this year was less than two years ago, showing that he was generally cut, chiefly by Republicans, while only in a few districts did Martine's vote exceed that of two years ago.

Below will be found the vote for Fowler and Martine in 1904 and 1906:

Wonderful Lake.

One of the wonders of Java is a lake of boiling mud two miles in circumference, in the center of which immense columns of salt, hot mud continually rise and fall. Besides these columns there are two gigantic bubbles near the edge, which fill up like huge balloons and explode on an average three times per minute.

COPS LEARN HOW TO BECOME MARTIANS

Twelve Republicans and 8 Democrats on the New Board.

SANITARIUM STRAY IMPARTS A GREAT SECRET TO BLUECOATS.

For several hours Wednesday, Chas. Swayne, an inmate of Dr. J. H. Cooley's sanitarium, had a keen time. He wandered away in the afternoon, and did as his unchained fancy listed until after nightfall, when Roundsman John Flynn found him on the street.

While waiting for Dr. Cooley to come for him, Swayne imparted some metaphysical secrets to an attentive group of cops. They could get to Mars, he told them, by committing suicide, which would be the means of releasing their souls, giving them a chance to slip into a Martian body. He had done it several times himself, but once he found himself back on earth in the body of a colored man, and then the kind of lost interest in the sport.

Swayne wandered in and out of several office buildings yesterday afternoon. In the Codington building, Park avenue, he frightened two of the stenographers a bit, but he did not create any disorder and made no attempt to harm anyone. His home is in Pensacola, Fla. He is well-to-do, but he thinks he is better off than he is. He regards John D. Rockefeller as a comparatively poor man.

FOWLER'S PLURALITY DWINDLES TO 647

MARTINE CARRIED WARREN BY 781 AND UNION BY 72.

Congressman Charles N. Fowler's plurality over James E. Martine, Democrat, in the Fifth district, on Tuesday, was 647. Two years ago it was over 5,000. The result on Tuesday:

	Martine.	Fowler.
Union County	72
Morris County		1,500
Warren County	781
Fowler's plurality		647

Mrs. Annie M. Simpson.

Mrs. Annie M. Simpson, great-aunt of Mrs. John H. Doane, of East Seventh street, and known to a number of Plainfield people, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Barber, in Brooklyn, this week. Mrs. Simpson's home was in Moscow, Pa., where Mr. and Mrs. Doane have been in the habit of spending their summers for twenty years. She was 83 years old. Death was caused by bronchitis, which developed swiftly from a cold contracted in the damp air of Brooklyn a few days after she began her visit to her daughter.

Reception at Sunnyside.

Invitations have been sent out by Mrs. Frederick Goodhue Mead and her daughter, Miss Margaret Platt Mead, for a reception to be given at their home, Sunnyside, on the evening of Thursday, November 22.

UNION CO. FREEHOLDERS

Republicans and 8 Democrats on the New Board.

DEMOCRATIC GAINS

Minority Party Elects Six Members and Two Holdover—Only One New G. O. P. Man.

As a result of the election in the city and county yesterday the Board of Freeholders will now stand with a reduced Republican majority. There will be twelve Republicans in the new bord and eight Democrats. Ten Republican Freeholders were elected and two hold over. Six Democratic Freeholders were elected and two hold over.

The Republican Freeholders now are Benjamin King, of Clark; E. K. Adams, of Cranford; John Robison, of Fanwood; Henry Krouse, of Linden; Elston Darby, of Mountainside; S. P. T. Wilbur, of Plainfield; J. Hervey Doane, of Plainfield; P. H. Mussel, of Springfield; Charles A. Smith, of Westfield; Joseph Perry, of Westfield; Adolph Gruener, of Rahway; and John N. Cooper, of Summit. The last two hold over. Doane is the only new one among the Republicans, he having taken the place of William A. Westphal.

The Democratic Freeholders will be J. Logan Fay, John J. Donahue, C. C. Maurer and Thomas Pierson, of Elizabeth; Noah Woodruff, of Roselle Park; Bradford Jones, of New Providence; George B. Cladek, of Rahway; and William H. Swain, of Summit. These last two hold over. Jones in New Providence had little opposition, as the Republicans disputed among themselves and could not settle on a single candidate. Noah Woodruff was re-elected in Roselle Park.

Of the four Elizabeth men. Donahue has been on the Board of Freeholders before.

Before the election there were seventeen Republicans on the board, and only three Democrats. But in one case, that of Charles A. Smith, Republican, he was appointed to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Mulford M. Scudder, Democrat. There is an actual loss of four Freeholders t othe Republicans, although they retain control of the board.

In Elizabeth the Republican candidates for Freeholder ran a little better than the rest of the city ticket. The lowest Republican on the list, George H. Kline, was 844 behind the lowest Democrat, John J. Donahue. The difference between the vote of Charles J. Jenson, who was at the top for the Republicans, and that of Thomas Pierson, highest on the Dem*ocratic list, was 925. The difference* between the highest figure of the Democrats, and the lowest of the Republicans was 1,113.

In some parts of the county the Republican candidates for Freeholder got less than their previous pluralities, and in some cases more.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL BOYS TO SHINE AS ATHLETES.

New Kind of An Athletic League Is Being Formed by Y. M. C. A.

Something distinctly new in athletics in Plainfield is being shaped up by Physical Director Listman, of the Y. M. C. A. If his plans are carried out, a Sunday-school athletic league will figure, this fall and the coming winter, in the sporting annals of the city.

The plan is to organize a league, for all kinds of track athletics and gymnastics, among the boys of the various Sunday-schools. Such leagues have been organized in other cities with great success, and the prospects for a successful organization in this city are bright.

There will be a meeting of the representatives of different churches at the Y. M. C. A. next Friday night. The plans are now in a tentative state, but the meeting will develops them into definite shape.

Friends Surprise Miss Grant.

Miss E. Virginia Grant, of the Babcock building, was tendered a surprise party by fifty of her friends, Thursday. Music and games were features of the gathering, while talent from Jersey City and Somerville assisted in entertaining. Refreshments were served promptly at 11 o'clock and the affair terminated shortly afterward. Miss Grant was formerly in charge of the shorthand department in the Plainfield Business College but has resigned to take a position with a New York firm, though still retaining her local residence. Miss Adelia C. Phelps was instrumental in arranging the surprise and the guests included former pupils of Miss Grant from Somerville, Raritan, Bound Brook, Westfield and Jersey City.

Cats, Dogs and Chickens Poisoned.

The poisoner is at work again in this city. Recently, two pet cats belonging to Miss Olive Randolph, of Plainfield avenue, were poisoned by arsenic, the deadly potion being given to the felines on fish. Three dogs and several chickens have also been poisoned. The residents of that vicinity are active in their endeavors to ascertain the mean person or persons guilty of the offense.

CHARLES A. REED WINS BOTH CUPS

tion Day. He captured the president's cup with 16 points and the scratch cup with 26½ points. He previously won the Hydewood cup, October competition.

The final standing for the president's cup is as follows:

Charles A. Reed, 16 points; John L. Watson, 11; Leon R. Thurlow, 10; Charles B. Morse, 9½; Rev. J. O. McKelvey, 9½; Reuben Knox, 9; A. W. Kenworthy, 6½; Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, 5½; Rev. C. L. Goodrich, 5; Alexander Gilbert, 5½; Raymond B. Carroll, 3; Nelson A. Miller, 2½; George A. Chapman, 2½; J. B. Betts, 2½; R. V. Carpenter, 2; John A. Steiner, 2; S. St. John McCutchen, 1; Rev. L. R. Howard, ¼.

The final standing for the club cup, scratch competition, follows:

Charles A. Reed, 26½ points; Rev. J. O. McKelvey, 21; Rev. C. L. Goodrich, 11; Reuben Knox, 7; Leon R. Thurlow, 7; Charles B. Morse, 6; A. W. Kenworthy, 5½; Rev. Dr. H. K. Carroll, 3; Raymond B. Carroll, 3; John A. Steiner, 3; Alexander Gilbert, 2; John L. Watson, 2; S. St. John McCutchen, ½.

SMITH'S VIEW OF FIGHT

County Chairman Takes a Retrospective Glance at the Battle of the Ballots.

"NEW IDEA" LOYAL

Martine's Popularity in Plainfield Lost Union County to the Republicans.

County Chairman Frank H. Smith feels much elated over the result in Union county, notwithstanding that this third of the Fifth Congressional Congressman Fowler was beaten in district.

To a representative of The Daily Press he said this morning, "The result in Union county shows me that it is as strongly Republican as ever. The only way the vote in the lower sections of Elizabeth can be explained was the feeling of the people down there against the passage of the Bishops' bill. I think that the 'new idea' people as a general rule voted the party ticket in Plainfield and throughout Union county. The result in Plainfield so far as the Congressional vote was concerned was purely a matter of local pride and personal friendship for 'Jim' Martine. The result in Rahway was brought about partly by a local fight and partly by the enactment of the Bishops' bill.

"I think that as county chairman I should add," he continued, "that whatever differences may have arisen in the recent primary campaign were wiped out in the election. The so-called 'regulars' and the so-called 'Colbyites' worked shoulder to shoulder for the success of the Republican ticket. They were reunited on that day in a fight on the common enemy and there is no reason why in the future there should be any division of sentiment or action within the party ranks. We all will work for the best interests of the Republican party. To do this we should favor the nomination of the very best men and we should strive together for their election. We should see that the will of the people is obeyed and we should hold in mind at all times *that we are working for the best in*terests of the people."

At the third quarterly conference of the First Methodist church in Somerville, Rev. Edwin N. Crasto presented his resignation from the pastorate, to take effect at the end of the conference year. Mr. Crasto has occupied the pulpit in Somerville for five years, his being the longest pastorate in the history of the church. In March next he and his wife will go abroad for a year. They will travel in most of the countries of Europe, going as far East as Constantinople, Egypt and Palestine, and will stop for sometime in Spain on their return trip.

G.O.P. LOSES ASSEMBLY

Next Legislature Will Stand 44 Republicans to 37 Democrats.

DEMOCRATS BIG GAINS

Essex, Hudson and Passaic Send Solid Delegations—Sitzer Defeats Strong.

The Democratic gains in the As*sembly were in Hudson*, Essex and Passaic counties, the three largest counties in the State. The Bishops' law had much to do with Democratic success in these counties, where there is a large foreign population. Dissensions in the Republican party did not help any.

In Essex, senator Dryden's home county, the Democrats swept everything. The Assembly plurality was 6,700. They elected a Democratic Mayor in Newark by more than 12,000 and a majority of the county Board of Freeholders, and left Mayor Lentz without any patronage with which to continue his fight for the Republican leadership. The Independent Citizens' ticket, which favored the Bishops' law, had much to do with Republican defeat. Every Assembly candidates polled about 10,000 votes in the county.

The worst Republican defeat of all was in Hudson, where the Democratic county ticket was elected by a plurality of more than 20,000. Last year John Kaiser, Republican, was elected Sheriff by 5,000. Jersey City last year gave Mayor Fagan 3,500 plurality, but H. Otto Wittpen, Democratic candidate for County Supervisor, had a plurality of 14,000 in Jersey City on Tuesday.

In Passaic the liquor question was the main issue, and the Democrats carried the ticket for Sen*ator and Assemblymen through* by pledging to work for the repeal of the Bishops' law.

The other counties throughout the State, with the exception of Hunterdon, Sussex and Warren, which are normally Democratic, returned Republicans to the Assembly, but by reduced majorities.

The Democrats gained two Senators in Tuesday's election. John Hinchliffe defeated Wood McKee, candidate for re-election in Passaic county, and George S. Silzer won from W. H. C. Jackson, who was also a candidate for re-election in Middlesex county by a little more than one hundred votes.

Samuel K. Robbins, who was the Speaker of the last Assembly, was elected Senator on the Republican ticket in Burlington county. Rudolph Perkins, Republican leader in the last Assembly, was re-elected from Union county. He is now spoken of as a candidate for Speaker of the new Assembly.

The Democrats gained three Congress seats in New Jersey. Nine Republicans and one Democrat represented the State in the last Congress, but the delegation now stands six Republicans to four Democrats.

The seats gained by the Democrats were in the 4th district, where Wm. Hughes defeated George H. Burke; in the 8th district, where Le Gage Pratt defeated Henry J. Gottlob, and in the 9th district, in which Eugene W. Leake defeated Chas. E. Pickett. In the 7th district R. Wayne Parker pulled through by the narrow margin of 220 votes. The 10th district, which is usually Democratic, elected James A. Hamill by a big plurality.

The make-up of the New Jersey delegation to 60th Congress follows:

First district—Henry C. Loudenslager (Rep.)*

Second district—John J. Gardner (Rep.)*

Third district—Benj. F. Howell (Rep.)*

Fourth district—Ira W. Wood (Rep.)*

Fifth district—Charles N. Fowler (Rep.)*

Sixth district—William Hughes (Dem.)

Seventh district—Richard Wayne Parker (Rep.)*

Eighth district—Le Gage Pratt (Dem.)

Ninth district—Eugene W. Leake (Dem.)

Tenth district—James A. Hamill (Dem.)

Totals—Republicans, 6; Democrats, 4.

Last delegation—Republicans, 9; Democrats, 1.

*Re-elected.

Replaces a Republican.

Off For Mexico.

Mr. and Mrs. Bourgeois, of East Front street, with their daughter, Miss Marie Bourgeois, sailed today for Mexico on the steamship Merida via Vera Cruz. They will join another daughter, Miss Julia Bourgeois, near the city of Mexico, where she is conducting a successful English school. Miss Linda D. Butler accompanied them.

The Long Way Around.

That was a long distance message through the earth, or over it, to the Goettingen seismograph from "a powerful earthquake 14,000 miles away." If it was 14,000 miles one way, it must have been only 11,000 the other. Perhaps the reporter thought the longest way round was the shortest way to tell about the mysterious shake.—Buffalo News.

CHANGE IN HEAVIEST OF COMMUTER TRAINS

THE SEVEN-FIFTY-FIVE IS TO BE SPLIT IN TWO.

Too long and too heavy for as good time as the service demands, the 8:55 a. m. train for New York from North avenue, the heaviest commuter train that runs over the Jersey Central tracks, is to be made over into two sections. The change will be made, General Manager Besler has told several of his fellow-commuters, in a very short time.

The first section of the train will leave at 7:45 o'clock; the second section will leave at the old hour. The 7:45 train will be made up at Flemington, as usual. The 7:55 will be started at Dunellen. The club car will go out with that.

Other train changes will be made. Partly to replace the Reading hourly trains between New York and Philadelphia, which will not stop here or anywhere else along the road, five other fast and semi-fast Reading trains are to be worked in on the time-table. The time-table board, made up of B. & O., Reading and Central officials, are understood to be at work on the new time card now. The Central men will get what the others leave room for, and just about that. It is said the new table, with Plainfield changes, will be ready November 18.

DRYDEN WILL NOT QUIT "IMPOSSIBLE," SAYS COLBY.

"Candidate of the Entire Party" Declares U. S. Senator for Himself.

Senator Dryden has announced his intention of keeping in the race. He has made the following statement:

"I shall continue as the candidate of the Republican party for election as United States Senator. As the Republicans will have a clear majority on joint ballot, I expect to receive their support, and so secure my reelection. Before the primaries there were two candidates before the Republican party for the indorsement of the members of the party as their candidate for Senator. These candidates were George L. Record and myself. The decision of the primaries, made by the Republican voters of the State at large, was by a large majority in my favor. I was, therefore, made the candidate of the entire party in the State, and, having become such, consider it my duty to my party to continue to be the candidate, and the only candidate, as there is only one Senator to be elected. It is for that reason that I am confident of the support of the Republicans in the Legislature."

What Mr. Colby says follows:

"The results of this election will certainly force the Republican party to find a new candidate and a strong candidate for the office. Yesterday's vote in Essex makes Senator Dryden's candidacy impossible."

EPWORTH LEAGUE RALLY.

District No. 4 Will Hold Big Group Meeting In Somerville.

A group rally of district No. 4 of the Elizabeth District Epworth League, including the societies of Westfield, Plainfield, Scotch Plains, Mt. Horeb, Martinsville, Metuchen, Dunellen, Bound Brook, Somerville and Raritan, will be held in the First Methodist Episcopal church at Bound Brook on Tuesday evening, November 20. Louis G. Myers, of Somerville, who is district leader, will preside, and the address of the evening will be delivered by the Rev. William M. Trumbower, pastor of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal church, in Jersey City.

The president of the Elizabeth District, Mr. Blanker, of West New Brighton, S. I., is expected to take part in the exercises. A social hour, including bounteous refreshments, will follow the meeting.

ELVINS AGAINST DRYDEN.

Atlantic County Assemblyman Said To Be Hostile to Senator.

It is stated upon good authority that even if senator Dryden is a candidate for re-election before the next Legislature he will have to reckon at least one South Jersey vote against him, and that is the vote of Thomas C. Elvins, the Assemblyman from Atlantic county, who has been re-elected for a sixth term.

Because of his anti-corporation attitude Mr. Elvins, it is said, failed to win either the Assembly leadership or Speakership last winter. With Elvins, Ackerman and Tillman against him, Mr. Dreydens calculations of having forty-two votes must be reduced by at least three more.

How Fuss Got Her Name.

Many years ago the people of Egypt worshiped the cat. They thought that she was like the moon, because she was most active at night and because her eyes changed, just as the moon changes, which is sometimes full and sometimes only a little bright crescent in the sky. Then these people made an idol with the cat's head and named it Pasht, the same name which they gave the moon, for the word means the "face of the moon." That word has been changed to "pas," or "puss," and has come at last to be "puss," the name which almost every one gives to the cat.

BUYS NETHERWOOD HOTEL

Mrs. Truell Becomes Owner of Famous Resort in the East End of City.

TO MAKE CHANGES

Place to be Opened in May as All-the-Year Round Resort —History of the Hotel.

Papers were filed Thursday in the Register of Deeds Smith office, Elizabeth, whereby Mrs. J. R. Truell, proprietor of the Truell Inn and Truell Court, of this city, becomes the recorded owner of the Netherwood Hotel property. She has purchased the property from the Hyde, Lattimer and Ludlum estates. The deal was made by J. Fred MacDonald, who is an agent for all three estates. The sale was reported in The Daily Press a few weeks ago, but not until today the required deed has passed.

Mr. Truell is now in possession and the work of improvement has started. She will put a new roof on the hotel at once, and other improvements will be an eltrely new heating and plumbing system. She will take the next six months to put the place in first class condition so that it can be opened in May of next year. It will be run as an all-year round resort.

The deal recalls interesting facts regarding the famous hotel. It was built by the Netherwood Land and Improvement Company, of which Florens Shetter was the president, in fact he was the founder of the Netherwood section and planned to lay it out as it is today. Others associated with him in the enterprise were W. S. Darling and J. S. Plumber. The work of building the hotel was started in 1876 and was opened in 1879 by James H. Breslin, who was famous as a hotel man. He afterwards run the Gilsey House and the Hotel Breslin, in New York, and the Hotel Breslin at Lake Hopatcong. Mr. Breslin died about two months ago.

Mr. Breslin took the Hotel Netherwood under lease and during his management it was a great success and was the residence of many people of prominence from New York and elsewhere. Mr. Breslin was succeeded by Mr. Woodruff, who successfully managed the place for several years. Frank E. Miller, now in charge of the restaurants and dining car service on the Missouri, Kansas & Pacific Railroad. He met with varying success and finally left to be succeeded by Webb & Morrison, of New York, who remained in charge of the hotel but a short time, as did also John H. Spitler, who came here from the south.

Dr. Hunter, of New York, a well-known specialist in pulmonary troubles, then leased the hotel, intending to make it a sanitarium for the treatment of such diseases. He died a few months after coming here, and Major Coleman took his lease and managed the hotel until his death. Upon the death of Major Coleman, Mr. Brown, his manager, ran the place during the last year of the lease, after which it was closed and has remained idle ever since. During Major Coleman's management the hotel was the residence of a number of army and navy officials and in many ways success attended the major's efforts.

There are 240 rooms in the hotel, and as it has often been said the only objection to the hotel is building, was that the structure was about twenty-five years ahead of the times. The architect was a Mr. Stevens, who also drew the plans for the United States and Grand Union Hotels at Saratoga. It cost very nearly $400,000 to build and equip the Netherwood Hotel, but of course there has been considerable depreciation in value since that time.

It cannot be learned what Mrs. Truell paid for the property. It will require several thousand dollars to put the hotel in first-class condition. In spite of the success Mrs. Truell has had with Truell Inn and Truell Court, it is believed that she will also be successful in her new venture. She will conduct all three places. The hotel will be run as a no-license place.

Since the hotel was closed a few years ago a number of different parties have been negotiating for the purchase of it, including Fred Croker, son of Richard Croker, Tammany's former chief. Mr. Croker made several visits to Plainfield and at one time was about ready to close the deal for the purchase of the property, when his father changed the plans. It was proposed to make it a suburban headquarters for Tammany, and elaborate plans were drawn for the improvement of the place.

Results of the Revival Meetings.

*As a result of the special meet*ings held at the First Baptist church last week under the direction of Rev. Dr. Henry M. Wharton, evangelist, 130 persons signed cards, thus signifying their desire to lead Christian lives. Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, pastor of the First Baptist church, will see that the pastors of the different churches receive the cards of those who have expressed a desire to unite with them. Trinity Reformed church will receive about fifteen new members due to the revival.

May Give Up the Ministry.

Rev. George Hauser, formerly pastor of the German Reformed church, but now of Wyantskill, N. Y., has returned after spending several days in town. His plans for the future are not fully decided upon, but there is a possibility that Mr. Hauser may give up the ministry to engage in business.

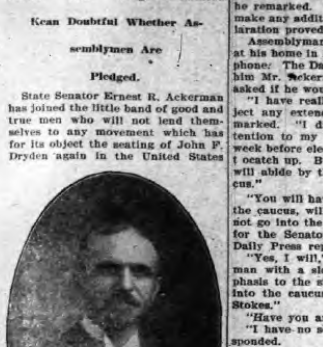
UNION'S REPRESENTATIVES RALLY AROUND STOKES

Senator Ackerman Leads the Way and Assemblyman Tillman Follows.

PERKINS FAVORABLE

Moxon Alone Dodges—Hamilton Kean Doubtful Whether Assemblymen Are Pledged.

State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman has joined the little band of good and true men who will not lend themselves to any movement which has for its object the seating of John F. Dryden again in the United States Senate. The Union county senator is the first in the field of those warriors of the regular organization to enter the lists in behalf of another man for that exalted office. He has come out for no less a person than the Governor himself, and furthermore adds a prayer that the former Senator from Cumberland may see his way clear to become a candidate.



Senator E. R. Ackerman.

Following in the footsteps of the senator is one of the Assemblymenward Casper Stokes. This man may be semblyman Perkins, of Union, also. That he is announced as a supporter of the Governor. The Daily Press representative cannot say at first hand for efforts to reach the Westfielder last night proved in vain. But it can be said that there is good reason for believing that he will join with his colleagues from Union in supporting one other than the present junior Senator. It can even be said that on the best sort of authority the former floor leader of the majority in the House will most probably vote in the caucus for Stokes in preference to Dryden. The only doubt in the case appears to be whether he will pick Stokes or Griggs; in any event it is reliably reported that the big insurance man will not be his first or even his second choice. There is only one other man in the county who will have any direct say in the matter and that is Assemblyman-elect Moxon, of Elizabeth. Moxon is noncommittal. That's the way he puts it himself. To say it more plainly his friends say that he is inclined to be partial to Dryden; the exception elect from that rock—not of "Gibralter," but of Republicanism,—Union county. Mr. Tillman, of Rahway, says that he too is broke with favor with Mr. Stokes; at least that he will go into the caucus favoring him as the one in the whole State should be chosen of the people to represent them at Washington. He only differs from the Plainfielder by testifying to The Daily Press representative that he has no second choice. He will not say that should the Governor spurn the pleadings of the populace to make himself known as a candidate for the office that he would then rally to under the banner of Dryden or any other man. Senator Ackerman, however, who has had that unenviable reputation of being a "machine" Republican, comes out boldly by declaring that in the event of the Governor declining to run, he will favor Stokes for the reason that money alone is not responsible for his position of high state within the party. He declares that under such circumstances he will lend his vote and voice to the end that former Attorney General John W. Griggs may be the colleague of the Sage of Ursino.

Still another representative of Union county who will have a say as to whom shall go to Washington for the term beginning next March is very apt to fall in line for Governor Edge to the rule in Union.

Senator Ackerman's secretary, Edgar F. Shepard, handed a note to The Daily Press representative last night. The note was signed by the Senator, himself, and this is what it said:

"Owing to the fact that South Jersey will have more than twice as many Republicans in the next Legislature, on joint ballot, as North Jersey, it is possible that Governor Stokes would be the logical candidate for the office of United States Senator for the term commencing March 5, 1907.

"I hope that Governor Stokes can see his way clear to become a candidate.

"If the United States Senator is to come from the Northern end of the State, former Attorney General Griggs is my choice.

(Signed) "Ernest R. Ackerman."

When a representative of The Daily Press talked with Mr. Ackerman over the telephone, the Senator from Union would add nothing to his written statement. "These are my views and that is all I care to say," he remarked. Efforts to get him to make any additions to his signed declaration proved futile.

Assemblyman Tillman was reached at his home in Rahway over the telephone. The Daily Press man read to him Mr. Ackerman's statement, and asked if he would not give his views.

"I have really not given the subject any extended thought," he remarked. "I did not pay much attention to my business for about a week before election, and I am trying to catch up. But I know this; that I will abide by the choice of the caucus."

"You will have a vote and voice in the caucus, will you not? Will you not go into the caucus with a choice for the Senatorship?" queried The Daily Press representative.

"Yes, I will," responded Mr. Tillman with a slowness that lent emphasis to the statement. "I will go into the caucus favoring Governor Stokes."

"Have you any second choice?"

"I have no second choice," he responded.

When Assemblyman-elect Moxon was asked over the telephone what position he would take, the Elizabethan, from his home in that city, did his best to invade a direct answer.

"I will tell you that I am brand new at the business. I haven't had time to consider the subject fully and I wouldn't care to commit myself."

He was told that Senator Ackerman had come out for Stokes and was asked by The Daily Press man, whether he had any intention of doing likewise.

"I wouldn't care to say one way or the other," he declared.

"But what of Dryden; I have it from your friends that you rather lean towards him."

"I am under no pledge absolutely whatever. I am free to act as I consider best and am not committed to anyone. I don't know really what I shall do; I have had conversation with no one on the subject—that I assure you."

County Chairman Frank H. Smith was seen at his home here by a Daily Press reporter, who handed him Mr. Ackerman's statement and asked for his views. In his characteristic way, Mr. Smith swung his head from side to side much in the manner Senator Kean is given to and then clasped his teeth. Then he muttered:

"I have nothing to say for publication; I refuse to be quoted." Pressed for some statement, Mr. Smith smiled broadly and remarked that it was "not for a county chairman to announce his preference for any candidate for office, particularly when it comes to such an important one as that of United States Senator."

"That is up to the legislators; better see them," he said as he changed the subject to what a nice evening it was.

An attempt to find United States Senaor Kean proving futile, The Daily Press man finally located his brother, former County Chairman Hamilton F. Kean, who is reputed to be the more astute politician of the two, at his home in Union township.

"This is the Plainfield representative of The Daily Press, Mr. Kean, and I want to get your views on the United States senatorship fight. First will you read Mr. Ackerman's statement in favor of Stokes and I want to add that while Tillman hasn't pledged himself he says he favors the Governor too." After Mr. Kean had listened to the Union county senator's statement and had pondered a while, he dictated the following comment, over the telephone, for publication:

"The Colby movement insisting that the regular organization represented Mr. Dryden, and the people demonstrated our organization, it is a question whether they did not authorize their representatives in the Assembly to support Mr. Dryden. The Assemblymen are undpledged in every other way to andpledged and it is a question for them to make up their minds what is for the best interests of Union county.

"I would add," continued Mr. Kean, "as far as Mr. Ackerman is concerned he is at liberty to vote as he pleases. He was not a candidate, he has been a member of the last Legislature."

A leading Republican in Plainfield who keeps a close watch on the political checker-board in New Jersey had some interesting comments to make on the situation in Union county.

When told what Mr. Ackerman and others had said, he remarked to the reporter that their position was the most natural one in the world under present conditions.

"You see," he said, "South Jersey wants one of the senatorships and has been wanting one for some time. North Jersey knows that it is entitled to one and that it will get one sooner or later. If it does not succeed in landing Stokes this time in place of Dryden, you may be sure that when Kean's term expires it will come in again and won't stand for any 'lemon.' John Kean and his friends know that and so do the representatives in Union, who own much to him. They don't say that the Keans are trying to shove Dryden overboard for that is not the way they do things. In all my experience in politics, I have found that both John and Hamilton are 'on the square.' If they oppose a man they come out and say so without making any bones about it. I know that John Kean will do all in his power to help elect Dryden, but what his friends will do is another thing. If the Keans wanted to do any knifing in politics, they had a good opportunity to do it on Tuesday. Fowler could never have been renominated, in my opinion, had John said the word. But he isn't built that way. He has never antagonized Fowler, no matter what Fowler has done or said about him. You know perfectly well that had Kean told his friends the day before election that he didn' twant Fowler elected, he never would have been. The election returns show that it would have been no easy matter for Kean to bury Fowler; but he never thought of such a thing. On the contrary, I know positively that he took every pain to tell his friends to get out as big a vote as possible for Fowler, and they followed his wishes."

FRIENDS MAY MOVE THE MEETING HOUSE?

THAT'S A REPORT IN CIRCULATION ON THE STREETS TODAY.

There is a well-founded rumor that the Plainfield Meeting Religious Society of Friends is seriously considering a proposition to remove the old meeting-house on Watchung avenue to a more quiet location, the idea being to get away from the noise of the railroad and trolley cars. The matter has been under advisement for some time and it is believed that action will be taken in the near future.

Such a move would put the property at Watchung avenue and East Third street in the market, and would possibly mean the removal of the old cemetery back of the meetin-house. This structure is about the oldest in Plainfield back of the meeting-house early part of the eighteenth century. Several times efforts have been made to purchase the property, the city trying a few years ago to secure it for the purpose of erecting a city hall there, but the city's offer was refused, as were also other offers. Several sites are being considered by the Friends as suitable for the old meeting-house, as the members of the meeting would not consent to tearing the structure down and building a new place of worship.

SIGHT OF BLUECOAT THREW HIM INTO PANIC.

That Is Why Harmless Hobo Led Officer Kelly An Exciting Chase.

Through an instinctive antipathy toward policemen, Harry Foulds, a wandering wire-drawer, was led into giving Patrolman John Kelly a fruitless and unnecessary chase Thursday afternoon. Foulds was seen to drop off a freight train at Grant avenue by one of the railroad employes, and the latter was suprised of the fact because he looked suspicious. Kelly was sent out on his bicycle to corral him.

Kelly spotted Foulds along the track near Grant avenue. Foulds spotted Kelly at the same time, and the two, at his home in Union township.

"This is the Plainfield representative of The Daily Press, Mr. Kean, and I want to get your views on the United States senatorship fight. First will you read Mr. Ackerman's statement in favor of Stokes and I want to add that while Tillman hasn't pledged himself he says he favors the Governor too." ITEMS HERE AND THERE

In this country the census shows that small farms are increasing in the amount of their land faster than the larger ones.

Taking an average from the statements of managers, the number of variety acts now on the stage is about fifteen thousand. As most of these acts employ more than one person, it is no exaggeration to assume that at least forty to fifty thousand people are engaged in this branch of the profession.

The ancient poets used to sing of the dense forests of Sicily. Today the mountains are bare. The question of reforesting is a difficult one. Attempts at starting new growth are frustrated by the peasants, who tear down fences and drive in their goats. Only under military protection could new forest trees be grown.

Ministers who seek rich men for parishioners should, in the opinion of the Christian Register, remember Cromwell's saying when he formed his famous army: "I had rather have a plain russet-coated captain that knows what he fights for and loves what he knows than that which you call nothing but a gentleman and is nothing else. I honor a gentleman that is so indeed."

The city of Zurich has abolished all doctors save forty and those are to be approved and salaried by the municipality. All who need treatment will receive it gratis. The physicians will be supported by a small annual tax laid upon all citizens. Now, if Zurich would adopt the Chinese plan of paying a doctor while his patients are all well and stopping his proportionate salary while any of them are ill, the scheme would appear about perfect. How would parts of it apply to ministers?

In commission and under construction we now have twenty-six battleships and thirteen armored cruisers, besides coast defence ironclads, the large fleet of unarmored steel vessels upward of forty gunboats and nearly sixty torpedo boats and submarines. Of ships of all classes we had 327 at the end of 1905; and the complement has risen to about thirty-three thousand officers and men, exclusive of a marine corps of more than six thousand, a force considererably larger than the regular army before the Spanish War.

Dr. Joseph Parker, Spurgeon, who succeeded his famous father, the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon as pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, and who recently celebrated the jubilee of his birth, says that the sermon today is not the power it once was. It is very difficult nowadays to stir up the people by sermons. This is not altogether the fault of the preachers, but the people care less for sermons reading than they used to. Consequently they are less interested in sermons. It is mainly a matter of inclination. They prefer lighter and more frivolous subjects. Nevertheless, Mr. Spurgeon added, he did not believe that any sermon writer living could equal his father. Whatever he wrote or spoke had a peculiar grip. His sermons are still being published and preached again in pulpits wherever English is spoken.

Lunatics.

A "prominent" English physician has discovered that the time is coming when there will be more lunatics than sane persons in the world. Statistics, of course, show this, as they will show anything that is good for advertising purposes. They will show that we live longer, that our general average of physical health is better and that our heads are bigger than our ancestors, but that our minds are going to the bowwows. We suspect from some of the things like the above, written by great "alienists," that it takes a maniac to detect lunacy, as a thief to catch a thief.

The American Way.

How an American machinery agent, secured an order in Japan is related by the commercial agent of New South Wales in the far-east as follows: It was a question of some lathes for a large factory which was being started. They were required of a certain size. The agent for the British firm first said, "That is three inches longer than they are made, and we can make no alteration." The American said, "I will make them to any size you like." The American secured the order.—United States Consular Report.

Shooting Butterflies.

The ancient question, "Who breaks a butterfly on a wheel?" should have a modern counterpart. A Transvaal agricultural paper says: "A great deal can be accomplished toward reducing the numbers of the larvae of the swallowtail butterfly by destroying the butterflies. The most effective instrument for this purpose is a light fowling piece loaded with dust shot or coarse salt. It may seem ridiculous to advocate the shooting of butterflies, but an insect with such a large wing expanse affords a very good target."

Too Much Affection.

Dr. Zamenhof, the inventor of Esperanto, went through a trying ordeal at the conclusion of the recent Esperanto congress at Geneva. Hundreds of the departing delegates shook him with every show of affection. This he bore with patience. But when the Esperantists of the other sex insisted on kissing him goodby the fortitude that had stood by him so well throughout the conference deserted him. He broke down.

STOKES AFTER BIG PLUM?

Politicians Believe Governor Will Be the Next U. S. Senator.

ORGANIZING HOUSE

As the Democrats Have Captured the Assembly, Party Men Are Beginning to Take Notice of Jobs.

The question, "who will be the next United States Senator?" is not attracting much more attention just now than who will be the Democratic Speaker of the next House of Assembly, and what Democrats will fill the many berths at Trenton next January, the first the party has had to dispense there in fourteen years.

Governor E. C. Stokes.

As to the Senatorship, while John F. Dryden's friends have not abandoned hope, there are few, if any, politicians willing to admit that he can win unless nominated by an Essex man, and Senator Colby has already declared that Mr. Dryden is out of the race so far as he is concerned.

This brings Governor Stokes up to the front ranks and as his ambitions in that direction have long been known there is every reason to believe that his canvass is already well under way. South Jersey wants the office and Stokes is as popular today as he was when he came within two votes of capturing the office from Dryden, when the latter first ran.

Stokes' candidacy would clarify the contest for president of the Senate, as Senator Minoch of his own county, who is Senator Hillery's most formidable rival, would give vote to the latter in return for North Jersey support of Stokes' candidacy. There are other possibilities, of course, but none as far in the lead as the Governor.

Both Joseph Riordan and Archibald Alexander, of Hudson, are candidates for Speaker of the House.

FOWLER'S PLURALITY TUMBLES IN MORRIS

CONGRESSMAN RECEIVED 1,483 MORE VOTES THERE THAN MARTINE.

County Clerk Voorhees, of Morris county, and his staff of clerks are tabulating the election returns. The vote for Congressman has been completed, and it gives Charles N. Fowler, the Republican candidate, a majority in the county of Morris of 1,483 over James E. Martine, the Democratic nominee.

The vote: For Fowler, 6,253; for Martine, 4,790; for Vaughan, Prohibition, 259; for Whitesell, Socialist, 213. A great surprise to the politicians was the wrestling of the "third party" banner from the Prohibitionists by the Socialists.

The Socialist candidate, George B. Whitesell, did not do much campaigning in that county, except in Dover, while the "cold water party" made an active canvass for Dr. Harry Vaughan.

The best authorities pronounce it appen-di-ci-tis, with the fourth syllable accented and the "i" long as in "side." Bronchitis, tonsilitis and other words of that kind have the "i" long also, though it should be said that there is good authority for making the "i" soft, as it is in Italian. It is, after all, a question of English or continental pronunciation, the first making the "i" long and the second making it soft.—Chicago News.

Realty Deal at Beechwood Heights.

The New Jersey Realty Company, of which Silas D. Drake, of Lincoln, is the president, has sold all of its property at Beechwood Heights to the New York Suburban Developing Company, which has also bought twenty-four acres adjoining the Beechwood Heights' property of J. W. Stout, and proposes to build two new houses at once. Mr. Drake will be the resident manager at Bound Brook.

"The Jungle" Coming.

The dramatized version of Upton Sinclair's great book, "The Jungle," has been secured for local presentation. It will be seen at the New Plainfield theatre during New Year's week.

LITERARY NOTES.

The most striking feature of the handsome Thanksgiving number of Good Housekeeping is the published result of this magazine's thorough investigation of the quality of flavoring extracts, through R. O. Brooks, B Sc. The disclosures here made are a revelation. Other articles in this issue which will attract particular attention are Child Discipline, where in Millicent W. Shinn, author of The Biography of a Baby, considers the experiences of certain perplexed parents an dteachers; Julia Marlowe, Housekeeper, a charming sketch by Gertrude Vivian, with photographic illustrations; Domestic Servants of Colonial Days, by Ella Morris Blackwell Sterling; Silhouettes and Their Making, by Lillian Leslie Tower, with fascinating illustrations; A Savory Thanksgiving Menu, by Ellen Burns Sherman; How to Purchase a Piano, by Rupert Hughes. The second installment of Truthful Jane, the serial by Florence Morse Kingsley, finds the reader deeply absorbed in this lively tale.

The November number of The Century will be published Thursday, October 25th. Advance sheets are requested not to print extracts from this sheet until about that date. The favor of copies of papers containing such extracts is requested. The most noteworthy feature of the November Century, the first number of the seventy-third volume, is the first instalment of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's new serial, "The Shuttle." Interest is placed in the first chapter by the Vanderpools, who are the chief characters in a story of international marriage—"Americans whose fortunes were a portion of the history of their county." These chapters narrate the wooing of Rosalie Vanderpool by Sir Nigel Anstruthers and the beginning of her married life in England, and give promise to the richest and best work Mrs. Burnett has yet wrought.

PERSEVERANCE ENJOYED UNITY'S HOSPITALITY.

Pythian Knights Have a Good Time at an Evening with Cards.

Unity Lodge, No. 102, K. of P., entertained members of Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., at its meeting, Thursday, the time being devoted to playing various games of cards. Unity Lodge members lost only that of Old Maids, winning every other contest.

In the game of Old Maid, Robert and Philip Jahn defeated Charles Degraw and Samuel Humpstone. Chancellor Commander Hall and Prelate Dove, of Perseverance, were defeated by Chancellor Commander Causebrook and Frank Putnam in a spirited game of whist. Jerry VanWinkle and H. J. Martin, of Unity Lodge, defeated William Mills and J. B. Higgins, of Perseverance, in a game of euchre, notwithstanding the Mr. VanWinkle was continually getting the queen of spades, which counted thirteen.

W. L. Hetfield, Jr., and Elmer D. Cutting, of Perseverance Lodge, were defeated by Harry Werner and Frank Dunham, of Unity Lodge, in an exciting game of pinochle, while in a game of euchre, George Dean and Charles Harris, of Unity Lodge, were victors over A. D. Pope and Thomas Demun, of Perseverance. The first of a series of similar entertainments to be held during the winter. Refreshments were served and a smoker enjoyed after the games.

SOMERSET COUNTY VOTES TO RETAIN FREEHOLDERS.

From Figures at Hand Today Commission Proposition Was Defeated by 132 Majority.

Though the full returns have not been made even as yet, figures indicate that Somerset county stood for the old system of government in Tuesday's election. A careful estimate places the majority in favor of retaining the present Board of Freeholders at 132 votes. Bedminster township, which is a rich farming district, gave 158 majority in support of the old board, and the third district of Bernards gave eleven. Several country districts are still to be heard from but it is not believed they will materially alter the present result.

The returns on the proposition came in slower than any matter on which the people of the county have voted for years. Though it was just as easy to forward the figures as those for the candidates, it was not until yesterday that any idea of the result could be obtained. From the results at hand, yesterday morning, it was thought the proposition to abolish the freeholders would be carried, but in the afternoon additional returns gave the matter a different aspect.

Surprise to Miss Wilcox.

Miss Miriam Wilcox, who resigned her position as cashier at the Woodhull & Martin Company store Saturday night, was given a lively send-off as she left the store. About thirty employees gathered outside the building and when Miss Wilcox appeared she was showered with confetti. The iron gates to the main entrance were closed thus preventing her from making an avenue of escape, but she took the assault good naturedly. Miss Wilcox resigned her position to prepare for her marriage in the near future to Albert Tayno, of Cranford. Her place at the store cashier has been taken by Miss Dodwell, of Fanwood, who was formerly a saleswoman at Levy Bros.

FOWLER MUCH PLEASED

Congressman Declines to Give Explanation of Vote in Union County Just Now.

GRATIFIED, HOWEVER

Republican Nominee's Friends Feel That He Made a Good Showing On Tuesday.

Congressman Charles N. Fowler says that he was pleased with the outcome of the contest.

"I am very much gratified with the result," is his comment.

When asked t owhat he attributed the drift of votes in Elizabeth and Union county against the Republican Congressional ticket, he said that at this early time he could not reply with definiteness.

"There are many factors which enter into an election," said Congressman Fowler, "and it is impossible and unreasonable to attempt to assign reasons unless all the facts are before one. To give an opinion without knowing all the circumstances simply makes further explanation necessary. But you may say that I am very much pleased with the way things have come out."

Considering the close shaves which other Republican Congressional candidates had, and the general drift toward the Democratic side in New Jersey, the friends of Congressman Fowler feel that he made a good showing, and that the result was creditable to him. In the Sixth district William Hughes, a Democrat, was elected to Congress, defeating his Republican opponent, Burke, by a wide margin. Two years ago the district went Republican. In the Seventh district E. Wayne Parker, Republican, came in by so small a majority that there is talk of a recount. Two years ago his Democratic opponent was snowed under by a majority of 11,200. In the Eighth district LeGage Pratt, Democrat, was elected by a majority of 9,000 in round numbers. Two years ago Wiley, Republican, carried the district by 12,500. This shows a falling off to the Democrats of 20,000 in the district. In the Ninth district Eugene W. Lewis, Democrat, was elected. Two years ago the Republican candidate won by 2,400. In the other districts also, where Republicans were re-elected, there was a lessening of majorities.

PARK BOWLERS WIN EASILY FROM ROSELLE

TAKE THREE THREE STRAIGHT GAMES, MONROE ROLLING WITH STRONG ARM.

Roselle was the toy of the Park bowlers Thursday. The visitors were perhaps not exactly toyed with, but it amounts to the same thing, because they didn't get one of the three games. The Parks got the first by 9 pins, the second by 84, and the third by 56.

Long rolled a strong game. He scored high with 220 in the first round, and held to the high altitudes in the second, 192. Daniel nailed up 193 in the first game. The high score for Roselle was Howe, and he scored only 181.

IT WAS Y. M. C. A. DAY

Churches Mark Thirty-Ninth Anniversary of the Association.

ITS WORK OF THE YEAR

President Gavett Reviews the Activities of the Twelve Months—Special Speakers Present Y. M. C. A. Claims in Community.

Nearly all the evangelical churches took part in the observance of Y. M. C. A. Sunday Sunday. Eight special church services were held, and a theatre meeting. A service was held at the Seventh-Day Baptist church Saturday morning. All but two of the church services yesterday were held in the morning.

At all the churches the following statement by President J. W. Gavett was read:

"Dear Brethren:

"Your familiarity with the organization and methods of the Young Men's Christian Association renders any statement of these unnecessary in this report. The prospectus distributed in the pews furnishes detail information of the work. Receiving its authority from the churches, and as their agent the association should report annually to its constituents who are naturally interested in all pertaining to its welfare.

"We have conducted 113 Bible classes during the noon hour in the different machine shops in the past twelve months with an average attendance of 49. Fifty-three gospel meetings were held with an average attendance of 150; two of these were theatre meetings with an attendance of about 700 each. Two Bible classes were conducted at the association, one taught by Mr. J. H. Manning with an average attendance of 9, and the other by Mr. William D. Murray, the average attendance of which was 12. We have this year also a Bible class taught by Dr. Jesse L. Hurlbut.

"One of our special features during the past year was the automobile class with an enrollment of 18 men. Another new department was the starting of an employment bureau. We have already found business places for a good many young men, and the constant call upon us for men to find different kinds of positions, convinces us that this branch of our work will have a prominent place in the future of our work. The annual Thanksgiving dinner for young men away from home was given as usual, the boys themselves of our hospitality. The Christ*mas dinner for poor boys of our city* was appreciated by 50 boys.

"The boys' manual training school was well attended. We have had the best instructors, and hope to make this branch of our work a great benefit to that class of boys that cannot afford to go to school in the day time, and also to those who wish to add this kind of knowledge to their regular school work.

"Our association has pledged itself to the support of the association work in foreign fields, and has forwarded to the association at Madras, India, $225, contributed personally for this object by our members. Two of our number have gone abroad to engage in this work.

"From time to time, we have realized that in connection with our men's Sunday afternoon meetings, we were not reaching the class of men we wanted to, and so have planned for six theatre meetings during the winter, and have secured the best speakers possible for these meetings. We are satisfied that many men come to these meetings that cannot be induced to enter our churches or even our own hall.

"The Women's Auxiliary with a membership of over 300 is of great assistance to us. In our boys' work, in looking after the Jaradise and the general care of the building, and arranging our banquets and entertainments. A very important feature of our association is our boys' work. Mr. H. W. Barrows, our boys' secretary, is pushing this part of our activities in many new lines, and the coming year promises to be very successful. We have in this department 150 boys, but expect a larger enrollment this year. The boys had their regular summer camp, 18 members attending. Statistics show that the activity boy is not up to the mark of many of the boys ten years ago. We believe that renewed attention should be given to the physical [illegible] of children.

"The physical director, Mr. [illegible] has put our gymnasium in good condition, and some [illegible] has been largest that we have had. A new feature this year is the inauguration of [illegible] sports, cross-country and field [illegible] not yet at-

MR. PERKINS COUNTS 14

Union Co. Legislator Sanguine Opposition to Dryden Will Be Successful.

GOVERNOR'S DAY TALK

Conference Between Morris and Union Legislators—Talk of Senatorial Election Investigation.

The Senatorial situation was apparently more complicated than ever when the legislators, legislators-elect and politicians went home from Trenton yesterday afternoon. The views expressed there outspoken and the rumors were of a more vivid and emphatic character.

Senator E. R. Ackerman, of this city, said that he had not changed one iota from his determination as originally expressed. He favors Governor Stokes for the place.

Assemblyman Randolph Perkins, leader in the Assembly last year, gave out an interesting interview. He said he had been around a good deal of late talking with the members of the next Legislature. He found the sentiments against Senator Dryden strong. This was especially true in the northern part of the State. If a caucus should be called now, he thought there would be an unlooked for expression of opinion. The members would not pledge themselves in advance. He believed that at least fourteen men would be against Senator Dryden to the end, which would, of course, defeat him.

He predicted that Union county would control the caucus if one should be held. As all the Union county members are understood to be opposed to Mr. Dryden, the question naturally arose as to how Senator John Kean, who resides in Elizabeth, really stood on the matter. It was freely stated that, on the quiet, Kean was against Dryden because Kean's chances would be materially lessened if the two Senators came from the same locality.

A prominent State House official, who makes no concealment of his antagonism to Dryden, said yesterday afternoon that a rock bottom Dryden could not calculate on a vote, as things stood now, in Essex, Hudson, Passaic, Bergen, Union, Monmouth, Somerset, Middlesex or Mercer.

If the joint meeting were to be held today, a South Jersey man would have to nominate Mr. Dryden, unless Senator Hillery, of Morris county, consented to do so. As Hillery is the chairman of the committee to investigate the insurance companies, which has not made its report, it is doubtful whether he would deem it wise to act as the Dryden spokesman on the floor. Hillery, in addition, is having a hard fight with Minch, of Cumberland, for the presidency of the Senate, and would not want to hamper his chances unnecessarily.

The State Senators at Trenton yesterday were Wakelee, Minch, Shinn, Ackerman, Mintura, Brown and Hutchinson. The Republican Senators understood to be adverse to Dryden are Ackerman, Colby, Hutchinson, Prelinghuysen, Minch and Wakelee. If this is accurate, adding the Democratic Senators to the list, Dryden has not a majority in the Senate.

The report that attracted the most notice was that when the Legislature met the Democrats in the House would at once offer a resolution to have a committee appointed to investigate the manner and methods employed to elect John F. Dryden in 1902, when he was chosen to fill the vacancy caused by the death of General William J. Sewell.

None of the Democrats around the corridors at the State Capitol would stand sponsor for the story, but several of them admitted that such a proposition was under consideration. Many of the party leaders seemed to be pretty positive that Senator Dryden would win, while others of the legislators voiced opposition to the Senator.

Senator Dryden himself arrived early. He went at once to the Trenton House, where he received some callers. There was a rumor, unconfirmed, that Governor Stokes, Treasurer Briggs and some others were to private conference with the Senator. Near noon the Senator presented himself at the State House. He went to the Governor's rooms and the Governor followed close after. He was followed by ex-Governor Franklin Murphy, who came up from Lakewood in his automobile. Later ex-Governor Foster M. Voorhees joined the party. At 1 o'clock Governor Stokes entertained the whole party at luncheon in the dining room under the Senate chamber. One of those stated to a reporter that nothing more serious was discussed than farming.

RAISING $50,000 FOR A MISSIONARY SCHOOL

INSTITUTION'S PRINCIPAL EXPLAINS ITS NEEDS TO CONGREGATIONAL WOMEN

The Home Missionary tea held yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. John M. Whiton, of Central avenue, under the auspices of the women of the Congregational church, was largely attended. It afforded an unusual opportunity to learn much concerning the work being carried on by the graduates of the Shauffler Missionary Training School at Cleveland, Ohio. Mrs. Mary Wooster Mills, principal of that institution, made an address. It is clear that they can work intelligently and Mrs. Mills related many interesting incidents to show the value of the efforts being put forth in this missionary movement.

The Shauffler Training School is maintained by the Congregational church, but Mrs. Mills said that members of all denominations are constantly seeking graduates to do special missionary work among foreigners. The school is not endowed and she is making a special effort to raise $50,000 for that purpose. During the meeting yesterday the annual thanksgiving offering was received from the women of the Congregational church.

Mrs. Curtis Bates is the president of the Home Missionary Society of the church.

In connection with the meeting Mrs. J. M. Whiton gave a tea. Mrs. J. V. Beekman and Mrs. Thomas F. Hyatt poured tea and the members of the Girls' Club, of the church, served during the social hour which followed.

Mrs. Theodore Mantz rendered a solo.

DARK ROCK AVENUE.

Residents Agitating for a Light at Menacing Crossing.

Residents of the neighborhood and those who have had occasion to use the Rock avenue crossing are complaining over the lack of street lighting there. It is said that the gloom there is responsible for many stumbles and falls. One man fell several nights ago, because of a misstep in the darkness, and sprained his wrist, besides cutting his hand.

The section beyond the tracks is being built up rapidly, and the number of men and women who desire to use the crossing is growing almost daily. There is no light on Rock avenue from Front street to Second street. The crossing at best is a bad one, and it is felt that the city would be doing little enough if it placed a light there.

Somerset Courts.

In the Somerset county courts at Somerville last yesterday afternoon six Peapack Italians were found guilty of atrocious assault on Antonia Napolitano. The trial was the result of a scrap last summer in which Napolitano was severely beaten by six men, he having gone into their shanty to get a cup. Two days were consumed by the case. The trial of Giavanni Gabbianelle, of Raritan, charged with the embezzlement of $157 from Michael Trolzi, a saloon keeper by whom he was employed, was taken up this morning and will go to the jury late this afternoon.

Thanksgiving at the Relief.

Each year adds new families to the list of those to whom the Plainfield Relief Association gives Thanksgiving dinners, and to meet these increasing demands the officers of the association appeal to the generosity of the citizens of Plainfield. Gifts of money are asked for and should be sent as soon as possible to the treasurer, Miss Tillie Moore, 717 Watchung avenue; also poultry, groceries, fruit, etc. These should be at the rooms, 544 West Front street, not later than 12 o'clock on Wednesday, Nov. 29.

Dr. Carroll to Lecture.

The Public Education Society, of Somerville, has secured Dr. H. K. Carroll, of this city, to lecture on Porto Rico at its next meeting on Monday evening, Dec. 3, in the assembly room of the public school building in Somerville. Dr. Carroll is well versed in the subject, having been commissioned to Porto Rico during President McKinley's administration.

Michael Heffernan's Funeral.

The funeral of Michael Heffernan, who died at Muhlenberg hospital from apoplexy, was held at St. Mary's church this morning. The mass was conducted by Rev. Father Delehanty in the presence of a gathering of friends. Interment was made in St. Mary's cemetery.

BANKERS DINE IN HONOR OF ALEXANDER GILBERT

DIRECTORS OF HIS BANK TENDER HIM A BANQUET IN NEW YORK.

The directors of the Market & Fulton National Bank, of New York, of which Alexander Gilbert is president, tendered him a complimentary dinner last night. The dinner was held at the Metropolitan Club.

Covers were laid for thirty. Among the guests were bankers of distinction in the Wall street district. Mayor-elect Charles J. Fisk, Charles W. McCutchen, John B. Dumont and J. C. Gilbert, of this city, were present.

Mr. Gilbert was recently elected president of the New York Clearing House. The position is second, in the financial world, to that of the Secretary of the Treasury. He has been head of the Market & Fulton bank for a number of years and is considered one of the best authorities on matters pertaining to finance.

PLAINFIELD SUPPORTS UNION'S LEGISLATORS

ADDRESSING THEM BY PETITION AND LETTER TO BE FIRM AGAINST DRYDEN.

Warm endorsement of Senator Ackerman and his Assembly colleagues in the Legislature who followed his lead in ignoring Dryden as a candidate for re-election to the United States Senate is expressed by many of the rank and file of the party here. Letters commending the stand they have taken may have been written and signatures, preparatory to sending them to the Senator and to Assemblymen Perkins, Tillman and Moxon, are being secured. Men of the strictest "regularity" in the party, as to their votes, the "independent" brethren are signing.

The text of the letter to Senator Ackerman is as follows:

"As Republican voters of Union county, we desire to express to you the gratification with which we have learned of your recent statement as to your choice for United States Senator. We interpret your statement as meaning that you are opposed to the re-election of Senator John F. Dryden, and we feel sure that in the decision which you have reached in regard to this matter, you have correctly gauged the wishes of a majority of the people of this county.

"In view of the present state of the public mind as disclosed by the situation, we believe that aside from any question as to Senator Dryden's fitness or unfitness for the high office which he now holds, his re-election would be extremely unwise from a political point of view, if New Jersey is to continue in the Republican ranks."

The body of the letter to the Assemblymen is almost the same, but instead of the phrase "your recent statement as to your choice for United States Senator" it reads "statement that you are one of your number, etc.;" and this paragraph is added:

"We therefore sincerely trust that in the Republican caucus, the delegation to the Assembly from Union county will be found united in opposition to such re-election."

DR. LINDSAY TO ADDRESS ORGANIZED AID ASS'N.

U. of P. Professor to Speak Here Tuesday Night on Public Charity.

The annual meeting of the Organized Aid Association will be held in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, Tuesday night, to discuss the question of consolidation with the Plainfield Relief Association. A few weeks ago the relief association met and voted to consolidate with the Organized Aid Association, now the question will be acted upon by the latter organization. There appears to be no doubt but that the merger will be made.

At the meeting of the Organized Aid Association, Samuel McCune Lindsay, secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, will make an address. Dr. Lindsay is professor of political history in the University of Pennsylvania, one of the governors of the newly-organized "Peoples' Lobby" in Washington, former special commissioner of education at Porto Rico, and a man of national distinction in various ways, well worth hearing.

Fire at the Swayze Farm.

Fire visited the E. H. Swayze place on the River road at Bound Brook, early this morning, and destroyed the big barn and outbuildings. The live stock and a costly touring car were gotten out in safety. The loss will reach several thousand dollars.

—Charles Stransenbach, of West Front street, has taken a position at Fred Endress' market.

WORK ON MURDER THEORY

The Result of Examination of Uliano Woman's Body to be Given County Prosec

AUTHORITIES ACTIVE

County Coroner and County Physician Make Examination—Warrants May Be Issued.

An investigation covering the past twenty-four hours has convinced the New Jersey authorities that Mrs. Georgianna Uliano, whose mutilated body was found in the woods near that place, Monday night, met death violently at the hands of some person or persons. They are working on the murder theory and the matter will be placed in the hands of County Prosecutor N. C. J. English. When the body was first discovered it was thought that the woman had committed suicide and that dogs had dismembered the parts but later developments have tended to make them think otherwise.

County Physician F. W. Westcott and Coroner C. B. Lufburrow visited Cole's undertaking rooms in this city this morning and made a closer examination of the body than at any time before, paying particular attention to the skull for evidences of depressions. At noon they called in Chief Kiely but what they discovered or what suspicions they entertained were not made known. Both physicians refused to talk and the chief declared that he had no information to divulge at this time. It was asserted, however, that the result of the investigation would be made known to the prosecutor.

Sheriff Lawrence, whose home is in Summit and who visited the scene of the discovery, stated today that he believed the woman was murdered at a place more distance from the woods and that the mutilated portions of the body were conveyed to the spot in a wagon and there burned. Julian DeMark, who lives next door to the house occupied by the Ulianos, told the police that he heard the woman and her husband quarreling shortly before she left home. Uliano when questioned, emphatically denied that there had been any trouble between he and his wife and that her disappearance had puzzled him as much as anyone.

The New Providence police said today that they expected to make an arrest in the case.

The suspicions or investigation has not left the authorities to interfere with the funeral arrangements and the body was removed from this city to Stony Hill this afternoon. A service is to be conducted in the church at hat place this afternoon.

GRAND JURY THROUGH.

Returned This Morning With a Batch of Thirty Indictments.

The Union County Grand Jury completed its labors this morning and at 12 o'clock brought in a batch of thirty indictments, making sixty-two in all for the term. It also handed up a presentment against the New Jersey Central for not maintaining proper safe-guards at the Schiller street crossing, Elizabeth.

After their labors discharged, the jurymen adjourned to the Burkey hotel where dinner was served. During an intermission, the foreman, Benjamin King, of Clark township, was presented with a silver loving cup, the presentation address was made by John S. Sauer, of Elizabeth, and the recipient responded fittingly.

May Install Light Plant.

The question of installing an independent lighting plant at the Plainfield Country Club with which to light the clubhouse, was discussed at a meeting of the trustees held at the Casino, last night. It was the opinion of those present that it be a wise move to provide an independent system of lighting. E. T. Barrows was appointed a committee of one to investigate the matter and report later. There was also some talk about the annual meeting of the club to be held in February, when officers will be elected and plans for the coming year decided upon.

Only the Furnace.

Fire headquarters received a telephone message this morning that the Crescent Avenue church was on fire. The apparatus was hustled out but on reaching the structure it was found that there was "nothing doing." The smoke from the furnace has a peculiar outlet from the roof and the person who sent in the alarm thought there was trouble.

Fisk Chooses Offices.

Mayor-elect Charles Joel Fisk has decided to locate his office January first on the second floor of the Woolston & Buckle building on North avenue, the room formerly being used by Charles A. Reed as his private office, when Reed & Coddington occupied a suite of rooms in that building.

SOCIETY GATHERS FOR ELABORATE LUNCHEON

GIVEN BY MRS. C. J. FISK IN HONOR OF MRS. B. VAND. HEDGES.

Mrs. Charles Joel Fisk, wife of Mayor-elect Fisk, gave a charming luncheon today at her home in honor of Mrs. B. VanD. Hedges, wife of Dr. Hedges, of Watchung avenue. There were about eighty guests, including those most prominent in local society affairs.

The home in West Seventh street was elaborately decorated for the occasion, the prevailing color being pink. In the dining room the table was lavishly garnished with pink roses. Holland, of Philadelphia, was the caterer.

Dr. and Mrs. Hedges were married a few months ago, and since their return to Plainfield, several brilliant social functions have been given in honor of Mrs. Hedges for the purpose of introducing her to society.

"HOLY CITY" WELL RENDERED AT GRACE

CHOIR SINGS GAUL'S FAMILIAR CLASSIC WITH SPLENDID EFFECT.

Gaul's "Holy City" was splendidly rendered by the choir of Grace P. E. church, last night, at a musical service held for the benefit of the music fund. There was a large congregation, and the offering was proportionately liberal.

The choir was only slightly augmented, and the excellence of the rendition reflects a delightfully large amount of credit on the singers under organist William E. MacClymont. The chorus brought out the beauty of the cantata to a noteworthy degree.

The soloists were Mrs. Theodore Mantz, soprano; William J. Tallamy, tenor; Miss Millie Pottgieser, contralto, of New York, and Arthur H. Chamberlain, basso. Miss Pottgieser was the only outside soloist. Dr. Waldo played the 'cello in a duet with Mr. MacClymont.

Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson, the rector, offered the prayers, and gave a brief history of the cantata before the musical feast opened.

A PUBLIC CHARGE.

Efforts to Have City Care for Scotch Plains Woman.

Margaret Comiskey, who has been living at the home of James Connolly, of Scotch Plains, was brought to Plainfield this morning by Overseer of the Poor Augustus Kliemser and Mr. Connolly to have her put in the hospital. They claim that she is suffering from a tumor and is not able to take care of herself. As Overseer of the Poor Alex Ayers was out of his office, Chief Kiely was notified. He learned from Mr. Kliemser that he had a warrant issued by Justice Clark, of Scotch Plains, authorizing the removal of the woman to this city. Chief Kiely disputed the right of Justice Clark to take any action in the case.

The Comiskey woman was in the hospital three years ago when Connolly hired her as his housekeeper. Dr. C. B. Lufburrow, the city physician, has been called in on the matter by the other authorities.

When Connolly was asked by Chief Kiely as to the whereabouts of his wife, he replied that she went away some time ago with a colored man.

MR. BUTTFIELD FORTUNATE.

Miss Banahan and Miss Westcott Are Winners.

W. J. Buttfield's fine bays, Miss Banahan and Miss Westcott, won the $50 prize at the opening of the horse show in Madison Square Garden on Monday. There was sharp competition between them and the Philadelphia winners, Lettie Lee and Leonora, who came in for first prize.

Yesterday Mr. Buttfield's same pair won the first prize, $300, in class 13, for pairs over 15 hands, 7 years old or over, shown to harness or wagons. Conformation, substance, style of going, shoeing, bitting action, manners, and as they are and appear at the time showing in the ring considered in judging. Mr. Buttfield drove his team yesterday.

Mrs. Townley Calls Meeting.

There will be a business meeting of the women and friends of the Christian church at the chapel, on Grove street, this evening, immediately following prayer meeting, called by the chairman, Mrs. E. E. Townley.

—In preparing for Thanksgiving keep in mind the fact that Neuman Brothers have everything necessary for the feast. They make a specialty of mince meats, prepared plum puddings, fancy fruits, new nuts of all kinds and fresh vegetables.

ELKS PLAN ANNUAL MEMORIAL SERVICE

REV. OTIS GLAZEBROOK, OF ELIZABETH, TO PREACH SERMON.

Plans for the annual memorial service of the Elks will be completed by Plainfield Lodge at its meeting tonight. The date for the service has already been set, and the speaker secured.

The service will be held at the New Plainfield theatre. Rev. Dr. Otis Glazebrook, of St. John's church, Elizabeth, will preach the sermon. Rev. Erskine M. Rodman, rector-emeritus of Grace P. E. church, will also speak.

As is always the case, the music will be of unusual character. Townsend H. Fellows, a baritone, will lead the singing. Mr. Fellows is a brother of Miss Blanche Fellows, well remembered as a soloist at the First Baptist church. He is related by marriage to S. P. T. Wilbur.

Rev. Dr. Glazebrook is a pulpit orator of unusual finish. He is chaplain of the Elizabeth Elks and of the Second Regiment, N. G. N. J.

FIVE DOMESTIC PILLATES FOR TRENTON DIOCESE.

Pope Pius X Appoints Them on Bishop McFaul's Request.

Rt. Rev. James A. McFaul, Catholic bishop of the diocese of Trenton, received from Pope Pius X. yesterday a cablegram assuring him of the appointment of the five domestic prelates for whose elevation to that dignity the bishop had made a request to the pontiff on his recent visit to the vatican. The priests were given the honors for their participation in the services held for the silver jubilee of the Trenton diocese.

When the bishop had his audiences with his holiness, he informed him that the silver jubilee of the diocese of Trenton would be celebrated on November 4, and the pontiff cheerfully granted these honors to several of the leading priests.

There are many old and distinguished clergymen in the diocese of Trenton, and it was difficult to select one as more worthy than another for preferment. After much consideration the bishop thought it best to nominate clergymen from the various nationalities. No doubt at some future time other aged priests will be similarly honored.

The bishop entertained the new prelates at lunch yesterday in his residence in Trenton. All were present except Monsignor O'Connell, who is ill.

Those who received the honors at the hands of the pontiff are: Rt. Rev. Monsignor P. F. Connolly, dean of Philadelphia; Rt. Rev. Monsignor Frederick Kivelitz, dean of Freehold; Rt. Rev. Monsignor John F. Brady, of St. Mary's church, South Amboy; Rt. Rev. Bernard T. O'Connell, rector of St. Mary's church, Perth Amboy; Rt. Rev. Monsignor Alexius Pozzi, rector of St. Joachim's church, of Trenton.

The cablegram was signed by Monsignor Kennedy, rector of the American college at Rome.

CATHOLIC FAIR CLOSES.

Goodly Sum Realized for Building Fund in South Plainfield.

The three-nights' fair for the benefit of the Catholic church fund at South Plainfield, closed last night at Washington, that place. The proceeds were large.

The attendance was heavy. Music and dancing were features, and an informal entertainment programme was presented, in which P. J. Kane scored a hit with a humorous monologue.

Prizes were won as follows: P. J. McDonough, ton of coal; Walton Smith, barrel of flour; F. Miller, umbrella; Mrs. Lifebury, spread; Mrs. Charles Shirley, table; Mrs. Horton, rug; M. Pyatt, toilet set; Connie Hennan, dress suit case; Mrs. May Phillips, set of dishes; Mrs. J. Geary, parlor lamp; James Savard, pair of blankets; T. Klein, lace curtains.

Other things were left until December 15, when the parish will hold a fair for which to decide who is the lucky winner for the contest for a diamond ring, in which Miss Hogan, Miss Geary and Miss McGuire are interested.

K. G. E. Election Change.

By order of the Grand Castle, communicated to Freedom Castle, No. 42, K. G. E., last night, the castle election will be held the first Tuesday of December this year, instead of late in the month. The order was promulgated to enable the members whose evenings are apt to be taken up during the holiday season to get to the meeting. The nominations will be made next Tuesday night, and the election will follow a week later.

Sesame Club Meeting.

The Sesame Club will meet tomorrow morning at the residence of Mrs. O. S. Simons, No. 822 Second street.

THREE HORSES ROASTED

Patrolman Makes Futile Attempt to Rescue Maddened Animals From Flames.

A BARN DESTROYED

Hearse and Other Vehicles and Harness Also Lost In Mysterious Blaze in Moore's Barn.

Three horses were burned to death and a money loss of at least $3,000 was brought about by a fire which broke out shortly after 1 o'clock this morning in the barn belonging to Undertaker Thomas A. Moore and situated in the rear of his home on East Sixth street, near Scott place. The fact that no wind was blowing and prompt work on the part of the city department prevented a serious conflagration as the Moore residence and two others nearby, occupied by Charles Bock and John Miller, were smoking from the heat when water was first thrown on them. The cause of the fire is unknown.

The blaze was first noticed a few minutes past one by Patrolman Theodore Martin, who had previously detected a strong smell of smoke in the air and was trying to locate the origin. He first hurried to the barn and made an attempt to get the horses but when he had broken in the door, two of the animals had been suffocated and the other was in such a position that he could not reach it. He withdrew with his face scorched and his hair singed and stopping only long enough to rap heavily at the Moore door to arouse the sleeping inmates, ran to Seventh street and Franklin place to turn in an alarm from box 22. At the same time some one else pulled box 61 and both were sounded, bringing out all the city apparatus with the exception of one hose company.

The barn and its contents made a fierce fire and the blaze lighted up the entire eastern section of the city. With the arrival of the firemen, three hydrant streams were soon playing on the burning structure and the chemical engine took care of the houses on East Seventh street, directly back of the building. Beside a large quantity of hay, Mr. Moore's hearse and four other vehicles, one of them Dr. Roland Tomlinson's carriage, a half dozen sets of harness, undertaking supplies and other property was consumed. Two of the horses were Mr. Moore's and the other belonged to Dr. Tomlinson. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

Chief Doane and Mr. Moore have both made an effort to determine the cause of the fire but as yet it is merely supposition. The structure was lighted by electricity and it might possibly have been from a cross of the wires. The theorie have also been advanced that spontaneous combustion may have generated in some new hay that had been put in or in the embalming fluids that Mr. Moore kept in his workshop. The barn was a well built structure and was practically destroyed. The firemen had hard work in extinguishing the last bit of flame and it was 2:30 this morning before they left the scene.

Conference at Trenton.

County Clerk Daniel Voorhees and Assemblyman Richard M. Chaplin were at Trenton from Morris, and had a lengthy conference with the Union men, which gave observers the impression that Morris would be found in the anti-Dryden column when the time came. The two Morris men laughed when asked if that was so and said that Morris stood where it did last week, was pledged to no one and would vote in the caucus for the man whose election to the United States Senate would conserve to the best interests of the Republican party.

Elsmer Squier Re-instated.

Elmer Squier, who has been employed as night clerk at the police office, and who suddenly left office one morning, remaining away for several days, has been reinstated after being cautioned not to let the offense. At the time of his appearance, Postmaster Hall was on his vacation. He claims that he left a note explaining his absence, though it was not found. As Mr. Squier's record was a good one and this was his first offense, the postal authorities were lenient with him.

Personal Recital.

The first recital this winter of the pupils of Prof. May Grant was given at his home on East Seventh street, Saturday night. A pleasing programme was presented and the pupils were well received.

"Ninety and Nine" Postponed.

Charles L. Lewis will sing "Ninety and Nine" at the Y. M. C. A. meeting Sunday afternoon, and a stereopticon will illustrate it. Rev. Charles L. Goodrich will speak.

CRYING SHELLS OF CEYLON.

Sounds They Make Like the Notes of an Aeolian Harp.

Sir J. Emerson Tennent, having heard a story about musical sounds issuing from the lake at Batticales, in Ceylon, paid a visit to the place, says Chambers' Journal. The fishermen told him that the sounds, which resembled the faint sweet notes of an aeolian harp, were heard only at night and during the dry season, were most distinct when the moon was nearest the full, and proceeded, they believed, not from a fish, but from a shell called the "crying shell."

"In the evening," says Tennent, "when the moon rose I took a boat and accompanied the fishermen to the spot. We rowed about 200 yards northeast of the jetty by the fort gate; there was not a breath of wind or a ripple except those caused by the dip of our oars. On coming to the point mentioned I distinctly heard the sounds in question. They came up from the water like the gentle thrills of a musical chord, or the faint vibrations of a wineglass when its rim is rubbed by a moistened finger. It was not one sustained note, but a multitude of tiny sounds, each clear and distinct in itself; the prevalent treble mingling with the lowest bass.

"On applying the ear to the woodwork of the boat the vibration was greatly increased in volume. The sounds varied considerably at different points as we moved across the lake, as if the number of the animals from which they proceeded was greatest in particular spots, and occasionally we rowed out of hearing of them altogether, until on returning to the original locality the sounds were at once renewed. This fact seems to indicate that the causes of the sounds, whatever they may be, are stationary at several points, and this agrees with the statement of the natives that they are produced by mollusca and not by fish.

"They came evidently and sensibly from the depth of the lake, and there was nothing in the surrounding circumstances to support the conjecture that they could be the reverberation of noises made by insects on the shore conveyed along the surface of the water, for they were loudest and most distinct at points where the nature of the land and the interposition of the fort and its building forbade the possibility of this kind of conduction."

Against Hard Proposition.

Herbert Knox Smith, the brilliant deputy of the bureau of corporations, said in Washington apropos of certain illegal practices: "Those acts are illegal, but the question is: Can the law get at the perpetrators? I am afraid it can't. For these men are poor, and monetary punishment is the only one the law can take. The law, I am afraid, is in the position of a certain housewife I heard of the other day.

"This housewife, a strict woman, said to a new maid: 'I forgot to tell you, Maude, that if you break anything, I'll have to take it out of your wages.'

"But Maude, whom two days had heartily sickened of her berth, replied with a merry laugh: 'Do it, ma'am, do it. I've just broke the hundred-dollar vase in the parlor, and if you can take that out of four dollars—for I'm leavin' at the end of the week—why, you'll be mighty clever.'"

Honey Is Nutritious.

"Honey, one of the most nutritious and delicate of foods, should be eaten more than it is," said a cooking expert. "Bought in the comb, it is bound to be unadulterated, and this pure honey will keep its friends free from sore throat and bronchial troubles. I have not had a sore throat for six years and I attribute it to eating honey. My doctor tells me he often recommends honey with excellent results, for diseases of the throat. Honey is excellent to use instead of sugar for sweetening cakes. It gives the cakes a most delightful flavor. It is also excellent in place of butter on bread, toast and on buckwheat cakes.

"I know a number of women who use honey as a cosmetic. They apply it to the skin, rub it in well, then wash it off with tepid water. The result is a finer-textured complexion, a glowing fresh look."

John Doyle's Generosity.

The late William Plummer, of Newburyport, who was a contractor and mason, had in his employ as a tender an Irishman named John Doyle. One day John went to Mr. Plummer and said he was in trouble, as he had lost his account book.

"Why," said Mr. Plummer, "you can't read or write, and how could you keep an account book?"

"Well," said John, "I had a nail keg in the cellar, and when I worked a whole day I put a potato in the keg, and half a potato for a half-day. My pig got into the cellar and ate the potatoes."

"Very well," said Mr. Plummer, "I have your account, and will look it over." On doing so, he found that John had overdrawn 50 cents. He told John that he had drawn 50 cents more than was due him, when John said: "Well, Mr. Plummer, it's a small amount, and you are welcome to it."

Always One End.

It's easy to name the winner of an argument in which a man's words are pitted against a woman's tears.

The Muck Raker.

The man who contends that the world is growing worse always goes about armed with a muck rake.

SONG OF A BALLOON.

I'm getting now to be fine style, and,
filled with dollar ass, far up above the crowds I smile at earthly things I pass. Nobody may run over me nor mangle me, indeed; and there's no limit, you'll agree, to my aerial speed in every current I may glide, nor do I turn quite pale; if mighty miles an hour
I ride they can't put me in jail!
Indeed, I am a novel affair, a wonder, you'll agree; and autos, as I sail
the air, must all look up to me
At times I have a lot of mind,
I'm full with such a load. The only oath that I command is this: "Well I'll be blowed!"
High, O!
I sail in lordly state across the checkered sky. I do not even have to wait until the clouds roll by!

—Life.

It Was a Good Thing.

"Excuse me, madam," said the agent, addressing the lady of the house, "but I'd like to show you a little device that I am introducing. All you have to do is simply place it in your refrigerator and it will save half the ice."

"Indeed!" exclaimed the lady. "And do you guarantee that it will save half the ice?"

"Certainly, madam," answered the agent.

"Then I'll take two," said the practical woman, "so as to save all the ice."—Chicago Daily News.

Stinging.

The humorous writer smiled, for he enjoyed talking about his work, especially when the lady was pretty and young.

"How on earth," she remarked, "do you write two jokes a day?"

"With a typewriter," rejoined the humorist, and his smile widened.

But she stared at him quizzically.

"Oh," she said, "I thought you used some copying process."—Cassell's Journal.

Needed Pressing.

He—She wouldn't give me an answer the other night.

She—That's strange.

"But I'm going to see her again tonight, and press her for an answer."

"Gracious! Didn't you press her the first time? No wonder she wouldn't give you an answer!"—Yonkers Statesman.

A Confident Assertion.

"What kind of a dog is that?" asked the inquisitive man.

"I dunno jes' what kind of a dog he is," answered Mr. Erastus Pinkley, "but he's got good stock in 'im. Dat dog is so many kinds of dog dat dar's got to be a good dog somewhere."—Washington Star.

SQUELCHED THE PROUD ONE.

Old Traveler Took the Starch Out of the Staff Officer.

A gorgeous staff officer, glittering attendant of a visiting governor, stood at the entrance to the platform in the Philadelphia station of the Pennsylvania road the other day. There had been a historic anniversary celebrated down the Delaware and the guests were about to board their special train for New York. The haughty staff officer had been stationed where he was in order to pass in on to the platform where the "special" was awaiting the invited guests. He was very, very proud. To him appeared an irate old man, dictatorial of temper and apoplectic of build.

"When does the next train for Harrisburg leave?" snapped the portly and fiery man.

The staff officer drew himself up haughtily and replied in accents meant to be chilling: "I am sure I don't know."

"You don't, hey?" roared the irate inquirer, being, of course under the impression that the staff officer was one of the uniformed employes of the road; "you don't, hey? Well, I'll find out who you does. What in thunder are you paid for, any way?"

By this time a crowd of the expected guests had arrived and were standing by, listening with amusement to the conversation. The last pointed question of the old man was too much and a "snicker" broke out which swelled into a laugh as the staff officer, completely taken aback, stammered out:

"I—I—don't know."

PITY THE BUTTONED-BEHIND.

The Victim of Modern Feminine Clothes Needs Sympathy.

The man was looking quizzically around the theater, evident in search of something or somebody. "Do you see her anywhere?" coldly asked the maiden at his side.

He laughed. "I wasn't looking for any 'her,'" he said. "I was merely confirming my belief that the majority of women who wear waists buttoned in the back go around with the sixth button from the top unbuttoned. Of course, I know it is difficult for a woman to fasten her shirt-waist properly when it closes in the back, but that is no excuse for the sixth button from the top; why not the third or the fifth?"

The maiden at his side looked at him pityingly. "That's easy," she said. "If you'd tried to wear such a waist you'd know just why. It's because the sixth button marks the point where we cannot reach up or down to. By twisting and squirming we can manage to fasten the fifth button from the top, and by twisting our arms up we can reach the seventh from the top, but the sixth is impossible. So we leave it, expecting to ask some kind friend to button that one button for us, and then we go out and forget all about it until we're reminded. 'Would you mind buttoning that sixth button on my waist now before the show begins?'"

DONKEYS FOR CHILDREN.

They Cost Too Much to Be Common in This Country.

The little donkey cart, as it trudied along the white beach, attracted much attention. Under their red silk parasols the ladies in white looked at the small, gray donkey and smiled. The gentlemen, raising their eyes from their novels, patted the small and dainty animal as it passed.

"That donkey cost a hundred," said a veterinary surgeon. "It is a very fine specimen. When I want to know is, why are not cheap donkeys bred here in America, the same as abroad? Then every child, at an expense of $5 or $10, might have a donkey no bigger than a Newfoundland dog to ride and drive.

"London is full of donkeys. The costers use them. Every tiny huckster cart is drawn by a tiny gray donkey." The animals are bred in Ireland and in Wales, and it is possible to buy little ones for $4, $5 and $7, and so on up to $100 or more for the fancy grades.

"The donkey is docile, intelligent, industrious, moral. He never runs away. He never loses his temper. He is an ideal pet for children, and, if he were bred here, he would be within the reach of nearly all.

"Think how nice it would be if you could do here what you can do in England—give a child a nice little donkey that only costs $6."

FUNERAL OF DR. JENKINS

Rev. A. C. McCrea Makes an Impressive Address During Service at the House.

MANY FLORAL TRIBUTES

Physicans Act as Pall Bearers—Interment Made at the Hillside Cemetery.

Before a gathering of friends that represented every walk of life in the city, the funeral of Dr. Olin LeRoy Jenkins took place at his late home on East Front street, Friday afternoon. Though it had been the wish of the family that the final ceremony over the body be as devoid of ostentation as the life had been, the gathering indicated the great love and esteem in which the man who had twice been Plainfield's chief executive had been held. The mourners included city and county officials, doctors, lawyers, business men and ordinary citizens, all impelled to gather to honor the memory of a God fearing and honorable man.

The service was in charge of Rev. Dr. A. C. McCrea, pastor of the First M. E. church, and it was extremely simple. He began by reading parts of the forty-sixth Psalm and the fourteenth chapter of John and later made an address. In it he paid a tribute to Dr. Jenkins, every word of which came from personal knowledge and struck a responsive chord in the hearts of his hearers.

"The community has been plunged in sorrow," said Dr. McCrea, "by the death of one of its leading members. The whole city has felt it and there is an aching void in every home. In his political life, he had won many friends; in his business relations he had dealt just and fairly; in his social and fraternal life he was cordial and brotherly; in his home he had been devoted. All these made him widely loved and esteemed.

"It is interesting to look at such a life and learn the secret of its success and to me there is a verse of scripture that characterizes it: 'What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God.' Who was more just—justice entered in all his transactions; in his official life and in his business relations. He would rather have been taken advantage of than taken advantage of. He was generous to a fault. His calling was one of mercy and he was adapted to it. If all who had felt the kindness and tenderness of his ministrations, what a testimonial it would be.

"An example of his character is shown in the humility of his Christian life. He confessed Christ in 1873, becoming a member of the First Methodist Episcopal church under Dr. Bryant's pastorate, but it was not generally known. He would rather by his actions proclaim his faith than do it in words. He showed to the community what it means to be a true Christian.

"Looking backward at the past, we wonder why such a life has been taken away. The world needs such a man and as St. Paul says, 'Now we see through a glass darkly.' The past is filled with beauty, the present is inscrutable but the future is filled with promises of joy unending. From his life we gain the message: 'What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God,' and then to re-dedicate our lives for the help of our fellow-men."

During the service, two hymns, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and "Abide With Me" were sung by Miss Bertha VanNuis Willis and Mrs. Stephen H. Tugwell, of the First M. E. church choir. With the pronouncing of the benediction by Dr. McCrea, the men and women in the gathering were permitted to view the features of Dr. Jenkins for the last time, the same opportunity having been accorded others in the morning from 11 until 12 o'clock. Interment was made in Hillside cemetery, the same simplicity marking the commitment of the body to the grave. The pall-bearers were members of the medical profession in the city, Drs. D. C. Adams, Edward Rushmore, T. S. Davis, George W. Endicott, Ellis W. Hedges, John B. Probasco and William H. Murray.

The floral tributes were so numerous as to occupy the larger part of one room at the house. There were pillows, columns, wreaths and emblems in great profusion, all of the codeties to which the doctor belonged contributing one or more. Among those represented in this way were the Plainfield Medical Association, the various Masonic orders, the Elks, the Knights of Pythias, the Junior Order United American Mechanics, the Royal Arcanum, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Knights of Honor.

Ptomaines Fatal.

Mrs. Perry Powers, of Scotch Plains, who was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital last Monday, suffering from ptomaine poisoning, caused by eating canned salmon, died Saturday night at 7 o'clock. Funeral services will be held tomorrow morning. The deceased woman is survived, besides her husband, by one son, Lawrence Powers, of this city.

Miss Ida Yerkes, of Grove street, has returned from a visit of several days on Long Island.

SEARCHING FOR DIAMONDS.

Early Experiences of One Man in South Africa.

J. B. Robinson, the South African millionaire, told an interviewer his early experiences in searching for diamonds. "The news spread like wildfire through the countryside that a white man was giving away wagons and oxen for bits of stone. I set all the natives who came to work to seek diamonds on one side of the river," says Mr. Robinson, "and I fetched up my own 50 men to hunt for diamonds among the bushes and scrub on my side of the vaal. * * * Next morning at sunrise I was startled by a loud halla-bulloolah, looking out, I saw a whole gang of my men rushing toward me in a state of great excitement. One of them had found a diamond of good size; they all had come to see what I would do with it. 'What will you give me for it?' says he. 'I will give you ten cows,' I replied, and seat the man into the herd to take his pick, and he marked ten of the best cows as his own. They had never dreamed of making such a bargain. Ten cows for a bit of stone; Oh! they went back, and found diamonds every day; they all became rich, and I accumulated a good store of precious stones. We made a belt full of small pockets, in each of which we placed a diamond. When the belt was filled my partner gave it to the ship's doctor and started for Cape Town. He never took off his belt until he reached London. And it was up this way that the first consignment of African diamonds reached London."

HORSES STAMPEDE AT SEA.

Million-Dollar Herd Raises a Ruction Coming from Europe.

If any vessel ever arrived at Hoboken with a more remarkable series of adventures than those accredited to the S. S. Andrew, after that sober plodder of the Phoenix line had reached her Hoboken pier, residents of Hoboken want to know. And such of the marine reporters as come from Missouri want to be shown.

The St. Andrew brought to port a important shipment of horses consigned to western stock farms. There is no doubt as to that. The horses were there, many of them, and many, too, heard of the value of the shipment—$1,000,000 in all, was it? Amid the thunder of waves this herd was stampeded, and a reckless, daring cowboy crew roped and flung the terrified Percherons and brought them back to their stalls. This runs the account, came about on the night of August 3. It was a terrifying struggle, and when the casualties were counted it was found that one deckhand had a sprained wrist.

It was just before this fearsome experience that there was enacted on shipboard a thing unique in that line that has ever taken place since the days of Munchausen. This is a verbatim account:

"One of the officers of the St. Andrew, on a wager, climbed to the king truck of the mainmast on July 30 and lowered the iron ball 150 feet to the deck, and then hoisted it again, set it in place and climbed down to the deck."

It would puzzle sailormen to tell what a "king truck of a main mast" is, but there must be something of the kind. And there must also be sea serpents, for it was related on a typewriter that on August 2 Capt. Spies and Third Officer Cummings were on the bridge when at midnight they sighted one and saw about 16 or 18 feet of its head.

Neither the captain nor his third officer was on board when an investigator called, but another officer volunteered the information that sea buoys, when they go adrift, do sometimes look queer.

GOLD IN BIG CHUNKS.

Indian Chief Says Legend of Tribe Tells of It.

Chief Good of the Nanaimo tribe says there has been a legend in his tribe for several generations that about the center of Vancouver Island there is a cavern in which small falls. Over the falls gold descends all the time and if a basin is thrust into the water golden grains can be caught therein. "There," says the chief, "is plenty of the stuff that the white man worships and the total obliteration of all that is good and noble. At the base of the falls is almost a solid mass of gold and in earlier days many Indians cut away chunks to make bullets so that he might hunt and get his daily food."

It is a matter of history that in 1862 two Frenchmen left Victoria to hunt for the Midas stream. They returned some months later with well filled pokes, but money or persuasion could not induce them to make the trip again, and their faces blanched with terror when they spoke of this curious Eldorado. This bears out the superstition of the Indians that a terrible god holds guard over the treasure, that there is something supernatural, something dreadful about the golden river.

On this account few redskins have ever been induced to joint the white parties which from time to time have been made up to look for the source of the gold.

Which Did He Take?

Dr. Woodrow Wilson, president of Princeton university, was sauntering down a shady lane one day in the early summer when he met a tall, handsome youth who had just been graduated. He was poor but very intelligent. In all his courses he had taken honors, including athletics.

"Well, Smith," said Dr. Wilson, "through at last, eh?"

"Yes, sir," said the young man, smiling and blushing.

"And now what are you going to do?"

"I hardly know, sir. I have had two offers."

"Two? Wonderful!"

"Yes, sir. One from a scientific society, offering me a secretaryship at $5 a week and the other is from a baseball magnate offering me a five years' contract to pitch at $5,000 a season."

"Ever play marbles?" Uncle Russell asked.

"Yes, when I was a boy."

"Couldn't eat 'em, could you? Couldn't drink 'em, could you? No use to you, were they? What did you play marbles for?"

Doat, Taxile Maximin.—Grand feu ceramics: a practical treatise on the making of fine porecian and gres.

"This treatise by the well known French potter appeared in the form of articles in the 'Keramic studio.'"

Gardner, William.—Process year book for 1906.

"Everyone interested in the subject of process work, and who wishes to know its position today, cannot do better than examine closely the examples displayed throughout the pages of this volume."

Gardner, Ernest Arthur.—Handbook of Greek sculpture.

Hasluck, Paul N.—Book of photography.

A comprehensive work on present day photography.

Heath, Dudley.—Miniatures.

"Mr. Heath has done his work with exceptional thoroughness and skill. The closing pages are given up to foreign miniaturists and we read of Italy, Germany, and France, but not a word of America or the United States."

Kellogg, Alice M.—Home furnishing: practical and artistic.

"Different parts of the house are considered in turn—the hall, 'den,' library, living room, dining room, kitchen, etc, and appropriate furnishings and decorations suggested for each."

Lanteri, Edward.—Modelling, a guide for teachers and students. 2v.

"It would almost be superfluous to praise a guide to modelling by Prof. Lanteri. In this work the student may follow the whole process through a series of remarkable photographs from the construction of the armature to the finished state of the figure or bust."

Maskell, Alfred.—Ivories.

"....The author has endeavored to give a comprehensive sketch of ivory sculpture, confining his examples to those found in the British Museum, South Kensington, Wallace and late collections in England. Chapters are devoted to prehistoric ivory carvings, consular diptychs and other Greek and Roman carvings, early Christian ivories, etc."

Moore, Mrs. N. Hudson.—Old pewter, brass copper and Sheffield plate.

Study of pewter is new, nor is it uncollected and highly valued. The details of manufacture, style of decoration and correct weight are given, illustrated by pictures of hundreds of examples. Also a list of the names of continental, English, Scotch and such American makers as could be found, to facilitate classification."

Potter, Mary Knight.—Art of the Louvre.

"In her classification and treatment the author has been guided by the great art critics of the Western world, from whose opinions she has aimed at choosing what seemed to her most generally true and reliable, and of special value to readers who are not connoisseurs or deep students of painting."

Redman, William.—Marks on old pewter and Sheffield plate.

"The connoisseur will be glad to know of this volume which contains a complete account of the various periods of old pewter and Sheffield plate, indicating the varying values of the different marks which those periods bear. .....The search for real old pewter is likely to last for a long time with a certain class of people .....because it can never be reproduced with its original old-fashioned appearance."

White, Mary.—How to make pottery.

"The author .... here treats of pottery-making in a simple, practical manner. Chapters on clay and tools, glaze, the wheel, process and the essentials of the art so that any one of average intelligence and deft fingers may learn how to work in clay."

There is no change in the condition of John Chandler, of East Fifth street, who suffered a stroke of paralysis sometime ago. His appetite is excellent, but the paralysis has practically made him helpless.

Mr. and Mrs. George Strathie and daughter, Etta May, of this city, who have been visiting Mrs. Matilda Higgins at Scott's Branch, have returned.

Peter J. Dorr, of Centerville, is visiting relatives in Plainfield for several days.

Miss Lillian Glenn, of Madison avenue, has been visiting friends at Rocky Hill.

Mrs. William Hoffman, of Hunterdon county, has been visiting friends in town for a few days.

DEER AND TROUT ON LINE.

Stories of Remarkable Catches Made in North Woods.

To kill a deer and catch a trout at the same time out-Nimrods Nimrod and out-Izaaks Walton. A fisherman has just done the trick on the Arrow lakes. The deer weighed 200 pounds and the trout ten. The fisherman was trolling for trout when several deer swam past his boat. One was an old buck and the man managed to catch hold of him as he was going by.

Having no gun he tried to kill the animal with a clasp knife says the Toronto Globe. The buck objected so strenuously that he got away, swimming off with the fishing line upon his horns. The fisherman bailed out his boat and started in pursuit. After two hours rowing he caught up with the deer, and with oars and knife succeeded in slaying it. While the chase was proceeding a big trout got on to the hook and after the deer was safely landed the fish was secured. It is quite a common occurrence to see deer swimming in the lakes of British Columbia, but to capture one and a trout at the same time is infrequent.

Conductor McKay, of the Nakusp and Slocan branch of the Canadian Pacific railway, previously held honors in Kootenay for securing a wild animal in unique fashion. He, while on a moving train near Nakusp, shot and killed a big bear, but the fisherman has put him in the shade. Even the captain of the Okanagan lake steamer, who secured an eagle by shooting it from the pilot house, has had his fame eclipsed, while Neil Gething, who tried to lasso a deer from the deck of the old steamer W. Hunter on Slocan lake, and failed by a horn's breadth, is quite outclassed.

The only man who can come near to the fisherman's record is W. Hall, of South Vancouver, who a few days ago killed an old bear and three cubs who were eating his strawberries in a big patch just outside the city limits. It has not come to fish with which to adorn the tale he told the reporters.

WAITERS ALL QUIT.

Hotel Full of Non-Tipping Ministers Too Much for Them.

A mysterious walkout of waiters occurred recently in Brooklyn at the hotel where 300 Methodist ministers met in an annual conference. The waiters, paid at the usual rate, asked for extra money, and, not getting it, departed in a body.

A second force was engaged, and very shortly they, too, quit, leaving the clergy in imminent peril of famine.

Did the waiters happen to be Presbyterians? Were they in the plague or a spiritual contamination feared by the garcons, who hesitated not to serve saloon keepers and tainted money kings? The ministers felt hurt.

Neither theology nor experience seemed able to indorse the cause of this unjust discrimination.

A waiter, however, made everything clear and simple by saying:

"The preachers never give us tips; see? That's the trouble."—N. Y. Tribune.

Ink Slinging in Parliament.

I have no wish to make odious comparisons between our legislators and others, but having watched the proceedings of other parliaments I feel that we have no reason to fear comparison, says M. A. P. For instance, I once looked on when the parliament in Vienna was in full blast. There was a party in the state there which sought to advance its views by its members banging the lid of the desk which each member had before him, and thus causing an intolerable din. These gentlemen I venture to describe as the liddites of the Austrian parliament. Another party attempted to make its mark by throwing ink pots across the chamber. I have done some ink-slinging in my time, but the prowess shown by these legislative inkslingers filled me with admiring despair, and I would have called them the hittites had it not been for the fact that they often missed. Now such practices are unknown at Westminster —though it is only fair to acknowledge that we do not give our members the opportunity of banging lids or throwing ink pots.

...S CONSTITUTIONALIST.

...ESS.

The proposed readjustment of President Roosevelt's Cabinet has called forth some talk about "geographical lines." An examination of the official record shows that Cabinet positions have since the organization of the Government been distributed as follows: New York, 30 members; Pennsylvania, 28; Massachusetts, 23; Virginia, 16; Maryland, 16; Maine, 14; Kentucky, 12; Indiana, 11; Connecticut, 8; Tennessee, 8; Georgia, 8; Iowa, 8; Maine, 6; Missouri, 6; Illinois, 6; Wisconsin, 6; New Jersey, 5; Michigan, 5; Delaware, 4; South Carolina, 3; Louisiana, 3; New Hampshire, 3; District of Columbia, 3; Minnesota, 3; West Virginia, 3; Vermont, 2; California, 2; Colorado, 1; Arkansas, 1; Alabama, 1; Nebraska, 1; and Oregon, 1. In this office of Postmaster-General is not included until the Administration of President Jackson, when it was first raised to that dignity. No cabinet officer has yet been taken from Florida, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Washington or Wyoming. Virginia was not without a place in the Cabinet from the organization of the Government until the administration of Andrew Jackson, when it dropped from the cabinet roll and was not restored until Tyler became President. Since 1860 the State has not had a member of the Cabinet, except for one month during Grant's second term, when James W. Marshall served as Postmaster-General for that month. Prior to this time, under Cleveland's first term that Arkansas had a Cabinet place, and not until his second that Alabama had that honor. Monroe was the first to call a South Carolinian into the Cabinet, and his choice was John C. Calhoun, who served as Secretary of War through both administrations. The State did not have another until Van Buren's time, when Joel R. Poinsett became Secretary of War. When Tyler's Cabinet broke to pieces it left Virginia in the Cabinet again; this time as Secretary of State.—Elizabeth Journal.

Dryden and a Hint.

Unlike the man who was kicked downstairs from the second story, Senator Dryden, of New Jersey, cannot take a hint. That part of the State Republican machine with which he was most prominently identified, the machine which Major Carl Lentz ran so imprudently in Essex county for the exploitation of the public, collided with an enraged electorate last Tuesday and was dented, battered and smashed into almost unrecognizable junkiness. Yet here is Senator Dryden saying:

"The decision at the primaries, made by the Republican voters of the State at large, was by a large majority in my favor. I was therefore made the candidate of the entire party in the State, and having become such consider it my duty to be the candidate. It is for that reason that I am confident of the support of the Republicans in the Legislature."

One hardly knows what to admire most in Senator Dryden, his density or his bump of self-esteem. His assertion that his candidacy for reelection was indorsed at the September primaries is made against the plain fact that the candidate who had come sufficiently forward to be counted as in opposition to him was George L. Record, and of Record it can be fairly said that while many Republicans were sure that they loved Dryden less they were not sure that they loved Record more. Again, a host of Republicans voted at the primaries without regard to Senatorial ambitions but solely according to excise law opinions and prejudices, and nobody should know that better than Senator Dryden himself, for his own personal property, the Essex county machine, made the Bishops' law the leading ante-primary issue, with the express aim of diverting attention from Senator Dryden.

Still, allowing Senator Dryden all the consolation he may derive from the September primaries, it is difficult to see how he can construe the result of the election this week as an expression of popular favor. That part of the Republican machine which operated in Hudson county went to worse smash even than did the Essex county apparatus, and Hudson county is the home both of George L. Record, who appealed for Republican support in the primaries as a rival to Senator Dryden, and Col. Edwin A. Stevens, who came out during the ante-election campaign as a candidate for Democratic and independent support to succeed Dryden. Moreover, the way in which the Republican party did follow at the heels of the Hudson county leader of the New Idea or Colby movement, slaughtered the ticket put up by Col. Samuel D. Dickinson, the county machine boss, was quite as appalling, from the boss point of view, as the way in which the same kind of Republicans in Essex county eviscerated the ticket put up by Boss Lentz. Through all the upper part of the State only pieces of the Republican machine survive, and Senator Dryden's hope for re-election is founded upon the slender control of the Legislature on joint ballot which is derived from the strongholds of Republicanism in the lower counties. Yet northern New Jersey has both Senators now.

If Senator Dryden cannot take a hint, perhaps the Republicans of South Jersey can. They have received no mandate from the northern counties to send Senator Dryden back to Washington. In Dryden's home county he has been disavowed and the detested Lentz, held in power by Dryden and his associates, despite the twice-rendered verdict of the voters, appears at last to have been booted int othat nowhere from which he can hereafter scarcely emerge. If the Republicans of southern New Jersey are wise they will insist on some other candidate than Dryden for the Senate. He has already cost New Jersey Republicanism dear, and the reviving Democracy, flushed with a success that must astonish them, may not have much trouble in making the reconquest of the State complete if the Republican party in general proves as impervious to a hint as Dryden in particular appears to be. —New York Evening Sun.

RECORDS.

In the number of his titles the Duke of Atholl, with twenty-three, holds the record.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic for the Week Beginning Nov. 25.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—Thanksgiving topic. Praise and humility.—Ps. lxxv, 1-9.

The Seventy-fifth Psalm was written at a time of contemplated deliverance from an enemy by the power of God. It may have been in the reign of Hezekiah, when the hosts of Sennacherib were encamped about Jerusalem. Though Sennacherib had been victorious against many enemies and Jerusalem was supposed to be doomed itself, yet King Hezekiah was confident that deliverance would come from the Lord, and this confidence and its effects are set forth by the psalmist. It is therefore most appropriate for our study as we approach our national Thanksgiving day, as it practically expresses the thanksgiving of a nation for the providence of God that watched over it and preserved it. The same God of nations has watched over us as a nation for a period of nearly 130 years, a time that has just passed, wherefore we should be grateful and express a nation's gratitude to God.

1. The gratitude of our nation to God should be unstinted and unqualified. His goodness demands the deepest expression of thanksgiving. This is clearly shown in the repetition of the thanksgiving, "Unto Thee, O Lord, do we give thanks; unto Thee do we give thanks." Repetition signifies emphasis. The psalmist's heart is so full of gratitude that he must repeat his declaration of it. And when we think of the past year and God's most gracious dealings with us as a nation the same feeling should pervade us. Our God has "crowned the year with goodness." We have enjoyed undreamed of prosperity. The nation has enjoyed the blessings of peace. Business has abundantly prospered. The fields have been blessed and have brought forth rich harvests. Famine, pestilence and sword have not come nigh us. What causes for thanksgiving, full, abundant and exhaustless!

2. The national thanksgiving should be associated with national humility. What a temptation it is for a great and powerful nation to boast, to exalt itself as the architect of its own fortunes! Nebuchadnezzar could not resist the temptation. "Behold mighty Babylon, which I have built!" he exclaimed. And there are not a few Nebuchadnezzars in the United States. They point with pride and boasting to our national achievements and exclaim, "Behold what we have done!" Instead of this we rather should we in humbleness and thanksgiving say, "Behold what God hath wrought!" Promotion cometh neither from the east nor from the west nor from the south, but God is the Judge, "And in His judgment He exalts one and puts down another." As we witness our unparalleled success and prosperity let us put down pride and in true humility and gratitude let us say, "Unto Thee, O Lord, do we give thanks; unto Thee do we give thanks; for that Thy name [God Himself] is near, Thy wondrous works declare."

3. National thanksgiving should be accompanied by national consecration to God. Thanksgiving should be expressed in deeds as well as in words. It is not enough that we attend to common, prayer and praise should on one day of the year thank God for His goodness. The life of the nation should be a daily thanksgiving to God. Righteousness should be exalted and sin rebuked. The nation in all its life should stand only for principles approved of God. His will should be done, and then we can ever expect His providence to watch over us and His blessing to be upon us.

Successful Irish Society.

It is gratifying to note how Christian Endeavor societies are springing up in various villages in different parts of Ireland and what blessing is coming from it in such surroundings. One of the most successful of these is the Togherdoo society, in County Fermanagh. This society has been doing very good work in the interests of temperance. The temperance committee recently organized a very successful meeting when a number were induced to sign the roll of total abstinence. The Rev. G. H. Stockdale is the president.—Christian Endeavor Times.

Out In Ohio.

The largeness of the work done in Ohio is evidenced from this scrap taken out of the annual report of the field secretary, Rev. Ira Bidwell of Columbus: The field secretary has been moving from where he was to where he is with considerable frequency and rapidity. It is not given to him to be a pillar in the church; he must be content to be a pedestal. The following summary gives the record of field work from September, 1905, to June, 1906:

Engagements filled	126
Addresses and conferences	275
Counties visited	21
Societies reached	1,310
Miles traveled	16,562

For Every Life a Programme.

The Lord Jesus Christ has a programme for every life, every Endeavor society, every church, every nation and every world. When brought to judgment the burning questions will be: Have we remembered Jesus Christ? Have we followed the programme? Have we builded according to the plans and specifications in the mind of the Master? In that great day God may show us the life we might have lived—the work our society might have done. Herbert H. Lyman at Colorado State Convention.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Nov. 25: "Temperance."

By REV. WALTER J. TATES, D. D.

Total abstinence enjoined.—Prov. xxiii, 19-35. Sound drink units for service of God.—Lev. x, 9-11. His evil effects avoided.—Judges xiii, 4, 5. Abstinence while acquiring national character in the wilderness.—Num. vi, 1-4. Strong drink brings personal and universal ruin.—Isa. xxviii, 1-8.

One point has not given careful attention to the subject can scarcely conceive how strong and startling are the denunciations of the use of intoxicating drinks made by the great prophets of the Old Testament. No fault for those times is made more conspicuous. No excuse is found for it.

It is apparent that the popular worship of those ancient days had much of drunkenness and debauchery connected with it. The worship of Jehovah was to be free from all the vileness practiced by the surrounding heathen people, but in the process of time this pure worship became corrupted. It came mixed with the religious practices of the Hebrews. These, the prophets of Jehovah, who were true to the Mosaic ideal, never ceased to condemn.

It is certain that drunkenness and true piety can never be soon coupled. There is no one more deeply pledged to a engagement—from the legal point of view, for instance. The secretary of the Ada Leigh homes quotes the case of a girl who had been with a Parisian family for seven months. At the end of that period she was turned out in the street without a penny, and had no legal remedy, for, according to French law, if application is not made monthly for wages due, they need not be paid.

A Paris man has been arrested in Paris carrying in her arms a 4-year-old child which had been trained to snatch watches and scarfpins, as its mother carried it through the crowd. The child was seen to annex two watches and seven pins in less than half an hour.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

"It is a time honored privilege annually accorded to the citizens of this mighty and prosperous Republic to pause for a day and ponder upon the bounty of an all-wise and all-powerful Father. History records another year of plenty, of health, bestowed upon us in rich profusion. Our civilization is advancing; our influence as a nation ever widening. The fruits of labor are abundant and he who toils receives a liberal reward. Rich and poor alike share in opportunity, in the blessings of freedom, of justice, of wider knowledge and higher standards. Happiness and contentment abide with us. Pestilence and plunder have long ceased to menace the homes of our people. Hopes of the past, realized in the present, inspire greater efforts for the future, and it is meet that a day be set apart to render thanks to Him who has guided us in prosperous paths. Therefore, I, Edward C. Stokes, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do designate Thursday, the twenty-ninth day of November, as Thanksgiving Day, and do recommend that the people of this Commonwealth gather together in places of religious worship to lift their voices in songs of praise to our Heavenly Father for the marks of His Divine favor already enjoyed and to ask that He continue to lead us in the way of peace. Given under my hand and seal at the executive chambers, in the city of Trenton, this twelfth day of November, one thousand nine hundred and six.

"(Signed) EDWARD C. STOKES,
"Governor."

DRYDEN'S OPPORTUNITY.

The Republican State machine, in which Senator Dryden looms up in large proportions, pleaded with the people before the election to vote the straight ticket for the sake of the party. The voters were told that the party's future was at stake and unless they cast aside all petty differences and sunk their own personal views there was great danger that New Jersey would be turned over to the enemy of the Democrats. That was before the election.

Now that the Republicans have won, the same machine appears to be utterly unmindful of the party's future. The bosses, one and all, acclaim John F. Dryden as their choice for the highest office in the gift of the State. They do this despite the indisputable fact that the dissension within the party's ranks before election was largely due to opposition to the name of Dryden. They know and they are frank enough to admit that the "new idea" faction, whose loyalty to the party saved it from utter defeat at the polls, is bitterly opposed to him. His election in defiance of a large proportion of the Republican voters' wishes means that such a course will be repudiated at the first opportunity. It means that the State may go Democratic next fall and that the Republicans may lose the Governorship.

There we, it may be asked, is John F. Dryden not big enough to slak himself politically for the sake of that party to which he professes to be so deeply interested. Is he not loyal enough to sacrifice his own political ambitions by standing up his chase after the Senatorial plum, when he knows what his election will cost the party?

John F. Dryden has a rare opportunity to show how much he thinks of his party. He can do so simply by withdrawing from the race. Then and then only can the people and not the bosses name the next United States Senator.

WHERE A SCHOOL IS NEEDED.

It has been suggested that it would be better for the Board of Education to erect another school further west before it builds on the lot at Darrow avenue and Essex street. At the present time there is but one school building in the entire western part of the city, the Irving, at Monroe avenue and West Fourth street. According to the residents in that section more school accommodations are urgently needed in the extreme west. A decided site would be found on the north side of the railroad tracks near Clinton avenue for the location is one where the population is rapidly increasing and one in which is bound to grow rapidly within a few years. There is no gainsaying the fact that a school at Essex street and Darrow avenue would be very desirable, but the question is whether at the present time there is not more need for one further west.

TO A PATRIOTIC ORDER.

The five councils of the Jr. O. U. A. M., in Elizabeth, on Thursday night, presented an American flag to the Y. M. C. A. of that city. The attention of Plainfield's fourishing councils of the order is directed to that fact with a confidence that they will make a like gift to the local association. There cannot be too many National emblems waving over our big buildings.

CONSTITUTION NO BAR.

If an United States Senator is not an officer "under the government of the United States" but is a part of the government itself as is set forth in an article in another column, Governor Stokes is eligible to election by the Legislature. Here's hoping that he is!

In Bucks county, Pa., the other day a fellow was sentenced to nine years imprisonment for stealing a horse. Over this way, the judge suspends sentence and places the unfortunate rascal in the charge of a probation officer.

In his rainbow chase after the gubernatorial chair of the Empire State, William R. Hearst wasted $256,370.22, not to mention several tons of red ink and bill-poster size type.

AUSTRALIAN BALLOT WANTED.

It is said that Assemblyman-elect Charles E. Hendrickson, of Hudson county, plans to introduce a bill in the next Legislature intended to abolish voting by machine and that bright young lawyer does nothing else during his career as a law-maker than to use his best energies to rid New Jersey of that half million dollars' worth of junk he will have made a present of to the State of Indiana from various parts of the State show that the machine has proven to have been as great a failure elsewhere as right here in Union county, where it "went wrong" in at least half a dozen instances. There are many reasons why the automatic devices should be dumped on the ash heap and there is only one point that has ever recommended them. They facilitate the work of counting up the returns after the polls are closed, but beyond that what good are they?

"The sooner the law-makers give us the Australian blanket ballot, the better. Pennsylvania, New York and other States have found that method perfect in every respect. It is even more simple than the machine and is a thousand fold more satisfactory in the long run.

The scheme to erect a temple of labor in Plainfield is one that should meet with general approval. Such an institution, a meeting place and conference chamber for union workingmen, would be a fine thing. No doubt provision could be made for entertaining the delegates and in such case the "home" would be doubly desirable.

Senator Dryden should have his political life insured in the company of which he is the head.—Westfield Standard.

Pretty bad risk for that company to take.

The best friend of the voting machine is the political machinist. The honest men not like to see split tickets and there's little danger of them where the device is put at work.

For United States Senator for the term beginning March 5, 1907—Edward Casper Stokes.

LITERARY.

Mrs. Henry Dudeney, the distinguished English writer, is the author of "Two Shoulder-Knot," the novel which opens the December Smart Set. Here is a story of real power, of real emotion, of real people. The scenes of the tale are laid in a remote hamlet in rural England, and four characters constitute practically all those who are vitally concerned in the narrative. How dramatically Mrs. Dudeney brings about her unlooked-for climax, need not be told here; she writes in a masterly way, and along the entire line of her work she has beaten paths of current fiction. This novel closes another brilliant year of fiction in The Smart Sets' history.

ROGER MURRAY'S BILL.

Compulsory Voting Has Its Good Points.

In 1899 Assemblyman Roger F. Murray, of Union County, introduced in the Legislature a bill providing for compulsory voting. It was such an innovation that it received the unstinted condemnation of almost the entire State press, and was so unpopular that Mr. Murray was glad to let it die in the committee to which it had been referred. But there are those who still think that compulsory voting will yet win the day, and they are now able to point to Belgium, not only, but to Canada, as countries in which this experiment is now, or soon will be, in progress. For the past few years all qualified citizens of Belgium have been compelled by law to vote at every election, or to give some sufficient reason for absenting themselves from the polls. When the law was first passed the chronic stay-at-homes strenuously objected, but they now seem to be doing their duty without being dragged to the polls. The Canadian Parliament proposes to pass a compulsory voting law at its coming session, making disfranchisement for a term of years the penalty for remaining away from the polls without sufficient excuse. New Jersey isn't ready for compulsory voting yet, but the Canadian experiment will have great interest for those who think that the State has as much right to the votes of all its qualified citizens as it has to their taxes.—Newark News.

AMUSEMENTS.

MADAME BUTTERFLY.

In the Garden theatre Monday evening, where Henry W. Savage gave New York its first hearing of Puccini's "Madam Butterfly," there was something in the air that told of the near approach of the regular grand opera season at the Metropolitan. Here, there and everywhere, scattered through the great audience that fairly packed the theatre, were faces that are familiar in the season to the box tier and orchestra chairs of the big Broadway opera house, those of many of the fashionable set who are still at the country houses but had run in Monday evening to have a look at the opera that Mr. Conried is to give them later at the Metropolitan. Such an audience the Garden has not seen in many a moon; not in full dress to be sure, but nevertheless a brilliant one, and so numerous was the company that to secure seats were sorely tried in the effort to force a passage through the crowd of standees. And the new opera? Went finely. Beautifully put on. Well sung and acted. In a word, "Madam Butterfly" scored an unmistakable success for its composer, its producer and for the artists and conductor concerned in its presentation.

Nat. C. Goodwin's appearance this week at the Grand Opera House is interesting to all classes of theatregoers, for Mr. Goodwin has the peculiar quality of being an actor that is acceptable to audiences who look for high ideals as he is to those who want good entertainment without bothering with ideals of any kind. He presents his new farce by Wm. C. and Cecil de Mille, entitled "The Genius," which has just concluded a successful run at the Knickerbocker. Mr. Goodwin's leading actress is Edna Goodrich, a young woman of unusual beauty and reputed dramatic cleverness. Others in the cast are Neil O'Brien, Robert Paton Gibbs, H. G. Lonsdale, Gordon Johnstone, Louise Randolph, Rose Snyder and Suzette Jackson. "The Genius" is elaborately mounted.

After three months on the road Broadway looked good to Mr. Cole Weber and his company, who returned to the little music hall at Broadway and Twenty-ninth street, New York, Monday night. There was no new show to signalize the return to New York, but the familiar "Twiddle Twaddle" seemed good enough for all practical uses, and, reinforced by the burlesque "The Squaw Man's Girl of the Golden West," it proved an entertainment to start the smile that wouldn't come off. Mr. Weber got a rousing welcome when he came on to sing his first song, "O-h-i-o," and a little later Miss Marie Dressler got almost as hearty a greeting. They both played with an abandon of merriment as though they were glad to be back. In fact, the whole company sang and danced with an excess of good spirits that was rewarded by much laughter and appreciative applause.

The Belle of Mayfair.

There is an idyllic love story that runs throughout the two acts of "The Belle of Mayfair," the latest English musical comedy success that will be produced by Thomas W. Ryley at Daly's theatre, New York, for an indefinite engagement beginning Monday night. The book is by Charles H. E. Brookfield and Cosmo Hamilton and the music is by that most versatile and popular composer, Leslie Stuart. The play was produced originally at the Vaudeville theatre, London, with Edna May in the principal role. Because of the delightful story and the charming music it sprang into instant favor and the London critics declared that it was "Romeo and Juliet" set to music. Be that as it may, the authors were much more merciful to the lovers of their fancy than was Shakespeare to his, as in the play there is a happy ending with a wedding in the fashionable church of St. George in Hanover Square. The music throughout will be found fascinating in its refined melody. In fact, not since the captivating strains of "Floridora" took the world by storm has Mr. Stuart more successfully mastered the art of appealing to the public ear. In the forthcoming production, Miss Christie McDonald, the daughter-in-law of the late Joseph Jefferson, will be seen as "Julia Chaldicott," the part that was created in the London production and until recently played by Miss Edna May. Miss Irene Bentley will have the other principal female role, that of the "Princess Carl," and Miss Valesca Suratt will appear as "The Gibson Girl" in the part in which Miss Camille Clifford created so great a furore in London's smart set.

The Three of Us.

The Madison Square theatre, the cozy little playhouse on Twenty-fourth street and Broadway, has sheltered more substantial dramatic hits than any other two theatres in New York. Hazel Kirke ran here for over six hundred nights. The late Chas. Hoyt made his fortune here with "The Texas Steer," "The Stranger in New York," "The Tin Soldier," and the closen more equally as well known. The house is handsomely furnished and the seating arrangement perfect permiting a clear and unobstructed view of the stage and acoustic properties are perfect. Having assumed the management of this house, Walter N. Lawrence this season again has produced the biggest dramatic hit seen in New York in ten years, "The Three of Us," with Carlotta Nilsson as the star. "The Three of Us" has the endorsement of every critic in the city of New York. They have declared it the strongest and best play seen in many years. Some of them even went so far as to say that it represents as near as it is possible to write a play, "the real type of the real American drama. The staging is perfect as to detail and the cast is the best now seen in any New York playhouse. The business is such that it seems that the Madison Square theatre will hold this attraction so well into this season but for another one to follow.

The Reappearance of Rosenthal.

After an absence of eight years from this country, Moris Rosenthal, the Austrian pianist, who will give a recital in the Krueger Auditorium, Newark, Tuesday night, November 27, reappeared on the American concert stage at Carnegie Hall, New York. The interest felt by music lovers in the return of this phenomenal artist, and his performances under the management of Henry Wolfsohn, was shown by the presence of an enormous audience such as is attracted thither only by the appearance of a celebrity whose entertaining ability appeals to the casual as well as the regular concertgoer, or by a political meeting free to the public. During the eight years that have elapsed since his last visit here Mr. Rosenthal has developed and broadened as an artist. At a pianist he has no superior among his contemporaries. Those who desire to secure reserved seats for the Newark recital before the regular sale opens at the Lyon Company's music warerooms, 657-659 Broad street, Newark, on November 22, can do so by sending orders, accompanied by checks, to Frederick N. Scanmer, 794 Broad street, Newark.

SELL FAMOUS CLUB HOUSE

Fanwood Resort Built in Borough's Heyday Disposed of By Land Company.

P. RITTER'S PURCHASE

Originally the Home of the Fanwood Club—Recently the Headquarters of Suburban Club.

An important deal in Fanwood real estate was consummated, Monday, when Peter Ritter, of that borough, purchased the Fanwood Club House property from the Central New Jersey Land Improvement Company. It includes the large club building and extensive grounds, located on South Avenue, directly opposite the Jersey Central station. The sale price has not been given out but it is understood that it went at a bargain. The new owner will probably make the building remodelled into a dwelling and livery stable combined, using the hall part for the stable.

The club house was erected eighteen years ago by the Land Improvement Company at the time it was developing Fanwood real estate. One of its principal advocates was the late George Kyte, secretary and treasurer of the concern. The club house was handsomely furnished, bowling alleys, billiards and other forms of amusement were provided and for a time the organization was on the crest of a social wave. The bowling team was well known throughout the county and the club house receptions and dances drew many people from the select circles of Plainfield, Westfield and Elizabeth. Later a hall for theatricals was added and the club house was leased to the borough's fire apparatus were provided.

The club flourished a number of years but constant changes among the borough residents and dissension among the members seriously impaired its growth and then it gradually grew weak. The place was evidently taken over by the improvement company and for years it remained closed, except for an occasional social function. Three years ago, the Suburban Club, composed of young men from Plainfield, Netherwood and the Park, was organized and leased the building. It renewed the furnishings and placed the bowling alleys in first class shape and prospered more than did its predecessor in its best days. Its lease was secured from the Fanwood Club, which still has control until next April.

Lane's Case Set Over.

The case of Clarence Lane, the Union News agent charged with embezzling $148, was laid over indefinitely this morning by Justice Mosher. The prisoner has gone to his father, who lives in South Jersey, and asked for the adjournment pending his father's arrival. Lane has been unable to get a bondsman and will be kept at the police station until the case is disposed of.

Opportunity to Help Hospital.

The harvest home to be held at Muhlenberg Hospital, Thursday afternoon, affords the people of Plainfield and vicinity an excellent opportunity to contribute to the various needs of this institution. Gifts of fruits, vegetables, canned goods or money will be gratefully received during the week.

J. H. McVey, of McVey's Hotel, West Front street, is very ill with heart trouble.

THROWN FROM HORSE; BROKE COLLAR BONE

AFTER TREATMENT AT HOSPITAL, SMITH PLUCKILY RIDES TO COLONIA.

Leonard Smith, of New York, a member of the Watchung Hunt Club, was thrown from his horse Saturday afternoon, while riding with the club on it's weekly run, and received a fracture of the collarbone. He went to Muhlenberg hospital, and after the bone was set he jumped on his horse and rode back to the clubhouse at Colonia.

The hunters started out about 2 o'clock from the Plainfield Country Club, and it was while the riders were going along at a pretty good gait in the vicinity of Oak Tree that Mr. Smith met with the accident. The riders had been jumping fences and it was while going over one of these that Mr. Smith's horse struck the top rail. This caused the rider to lose his balance and after the horse had taken several steps, he fell off a distance of about two feet.

The other riders who were nearby laughed at Mr. Smith, not thinking that he was injured at all, in fact he did not think so himself until he attempted to get up. He experienced excruciating pain about the shoulder and a hasty examination by Mr. Knott disclosed a break in the collarbone. Mr. Smith was assisted on his horse and he rode to the hospital, where the physician in charge set the bone. Mr. Smith is a member of Troop A, of New York, and an experienced rider. He has been a member of the Watchung Hunt Club for some time and regularly joins in the hunts. Later Saturday night he returned to his home in New York.

GOLFERS ONLY THOUGHT OF YALE-PRINCETON GAME.

Little Doing On the Plainfield Country Club Course As a Result.

The Princeton-Yale contest affected the attendance at the Plainfield Country Club, on Saturday, a majority of the active members going to Princeton to see the Tigers do battle with the wearers of the blue. In consequence there was little doing in golf.

It was expected that Frank C. Talmadge and Arthur Murphy would play the final for the Golf Committee consolation cup, but by agreement they postponed the match until next week. In the final play for the inconsolables' cup, between E. B. Shoemaker and Morris J. Dumont, the match ended as far as the eighteenth hole. The players being all square at this hole and darkness overtaking them, they decided to quit and finish the match next week.

There were several players who contested for the November handicap but only one got around the long eighteenth, where scores could be posted and the result of the play was not learned. The contestants dropped their cards in the box. The final play for this cup will be on Saturday, when the winner will be announced. Aside from the final play for the consolation and inconsolables' cups, and for the November handicap cup on Saturday, there will be nothing more doing until Thanksgiving Day, when there will be a cross country tournament to end up the active season. This is sure to bring out a large field as it is one of the most popular events of the year.

Presented With a Morris Chair.

Following his retirement as letter-carrier after a service of seventeen years, Edward T. Dunn, the veteran, was the recipient on Saturday of a handsome Morris chair from his fellow-letter-carriers, which will help him to pass his remaining days in comfort. The gift was sent to Mr. Dunn's house and was a complete surprise to him. Mr. Dunn was obliged to retire from Uncle Sam's service last Thursday, owing to eye trouble and other physical infirmities and his fellow-employes planned to mark his retirement in a way that would show their esteem for years of faithful service.

H. R. MUNGER HOPE CHAPEL'S SUPERINTENDENT

ANNOUNCEMENT MADE OF HIS APPOINTMENT MADE YESTERDAY.

At Sunday's session of Hope chapel's Sunday-school it was announced by Assistant Superintendent Travell that Henry R. Munger had been appointed superintendent to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Henry C. Squires. The appointment was made by the Session of the Crescent Avenue church and received hearty approbation from the chapel members. The new incumbent was present yesterday and after Pastor L. R. Howard had welcomed him in behalf of the school, he was formally introduced by Leander N. Lovell, formerly superintendent of Warren chapel. Mr. Munger made a cordial address to the members and afterward entered upon his duties.

The work at the chapel is not new to Mr. Munger as he was one of the few men closely identified with Mr. Squires in its early history. He took charge of the men's Bible class when the Sunday-school was first opened in 1888 and served faithfully for years until impaired health compelled him to resign. As soon as he regained his strength he returned, though not as teacher, but there was always something for him to do and Mr. Squires depended upon him a great deal. He has endeared himself to every member of Hope and under his leadership the good work began by Mr. Squires will be continued. Ira W. Travell will continue to act as assistant superintendent and the other officers will remain the same.

DUNHAM-SMITH.

William Cortlandt Dunham Becomes a Benedict.

Announcement is made of the marriage of Miss Florence Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Smith, of South Plainfield, and a member of Philip Smith, the well-known baseball player, to William Cortlandt Dunham, formerly of the Dunham Grocery Company. The ceremony took place quietly on Saturday in New York, and the couple returned this this morning to Plainfield, where they will reside.

While the bride's parents have been residing at South Plainfield, they recently moved to West Second street for the winter. Mr. Dunham is also a native here, where he has lived for many years. He is a member of Plainfield Lodge, B. P. O. E. At present he is engaged in the grain business in this city.

Miss Peterson a Bride.

Miss Sophia Olive Peterson and Eric John Luthman were married at 5:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon at the home of the groom, 128 Johnston avenue, by Rev. A. W. Peck, rector of St. Stephen's church. The wedding was largely attended by relatives and friends of the couple. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Peterson, of Sweden, and the groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Luthman, of this city. Both the bride and groom are natives of Sweden. A reception followed the ceremony and supper was served. The couple will reside on Johnston avenue.

WHI Address Reform Association.

The executive board of the American Sunday School Union of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, has received a communication from Corresponding Secretary Lewis reporting his attendance at the Southwestern Association meeting and also enclosing an invitation to attend and address the annual session of the National Reform Association to be held at Beaver Falls, Pa., on Tuesday, December 5. The executive board voted that Secretary Lewis be instructed to attend the convention in the interest of the society and the denomination.

Y. M. C. A. Entertainment.

A musical and literary entertainment by the Vivo Instrumental Trio, assisted by Mrs. F. Kirberg, dramatic reader, will be given Saturday evening, November 24, at 8:15 o'clock, at Young Men's Christian Association hall. Silver offering at the door.

SAYS WIFE IS POISONER

Charges and Counter-charges When Popeks Face In Court.

JUDGE BLAMES BOTH

Poison Notion Nonsensical and Mrs. Popek's Idea that Her Husband Is Crazy Not Right, Peacemaking Magistrate Declares.

Charged by her husband with attempted poisoning, Mrs. Vincent Popek, the Polish wife of a Polish laborer, countered with a charge of insanity against him in the city court Monday. The appearance of the pair in court was the result of a marital unpleasantness that Judge Runyon could only succeed in partially smoothing over.

Mrs. Popek had her husband arraigned on a charge of disorderly conduct and non-support. He left their home on Jackson avenue eight weeks ago, after packing up a knife, a fork and a spoon, and hired lodgings on this side of the brook. Since then she has received just fifty-five cents from him.

Popek made no pretense of denying his desertion. He said his wife tried to poison him and he got out because he was afraid to eat food cooked by her. He suffered terrible pains in his stomach, he said, up to the time he left, and they stopped as soon as he took to "American cooking." He was called in all this, and charged his wife with having, first, induced him to deed their house to her after getting him drunk, and, then, trying to break down his health to get him out of the way. Also, there was a small matter of a story told him by one Becker, to the effect that his wife had two daughters in Galacia, and had given them each a substantial dot, with which to capture husbands, out of his hard-earned money. He wanted it understood that he had married his wife and not her whole family.

Mrs. Popek laughed at the story; then she wept. He had had stomach trouble for years, she said, and the pains he suffered came from his own habits of eating. He deeded the property of his own volition, she swore, and as for the Becker story, her husband knew all her friends and kindred in the old country, and he could easily have learned how false it was by writing to Galacia.

Popek grunted at that, and said he took no stock in letter-writing. Judge Runyon told him he was foolish. The idea that his wife had designs on his life, the magistrate continued, was nonsensical and the acceptance of a rank outsider's tale against his wife at face value, without any attempt to verify it, was just as silly. He asked Popek if he wouldn't go back to his wife and make another try at marital happiness.

Popek gave grudging assent. His wife started to cry again, and said she was afraid he was not sane enough to live with in safety.

"There's nothing in that," said Judge Runyon. "He was examined by doctors the other day after you filed the complaint, and he was found to be all right."

Popek said he would only resume husbandly relations if his wife allowed him to hire rooms on this side of the brook, near his work. Mrs. Popek cried again, and expressed a fear that he wanted a home among people who were not quiet and orderly. The couple left court in an atmosphere surcharged with dissension.

A play of the times is "A Square Deal," which comes to the New Plainfield theatre Saturday afternoon and night with Otis B. Thayer and the original New York cast appearing. Edward E. Rose, the author, has written a play around President Roosevelt's utterance of "A Square deal for every man," and the fight of the masses against the trusts and bosses is realistically portrayed. A delightful love tale and much good comedy is claimed for the piece.

ELIZABETH ELKS' MEMORIAL SERVICES ON DEC. 2.

Arthur C. Moreland, of New York, to Deliver Address.

Elizabeth Lodge, No. 289, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, will hold its annual memorial service in the Lyceum theatre, in that city, Sunday evening, December 2, at 8 o'clock and a committee consisting of Palmer H. Chadwick, James J. Manning and Emanuel David have been appointed to make the arrangements.

An address will be delivered by Arthur C. Moreland, of New York Lodge, No. 1, and the eulogy will be pronounced by Dr. Crowther, of Perth Amboy. A musical programme of excellence is being arranged, under the management of Clarence Elck. Friends of Elizabeth lodge are invited to attend the memorial services, but children under 16 years of age will not be admitted unless accompanied by their parents.

To Enlarge Greenhouses.

Charles L. Stanley, the florist, with a store on North avenue and greenhouses at 1156 South avenue, has been compelled to enlarge his greenhouses, so great is the demand for flowers. The present conservatory is tested to the limit and Mr. Stanley is unable to grow any additional number of plants. Mr. Stanley has also added another delivery wagon to his business.

PTOMAINE POISON VICTIM

Mrs. Powers Taken Violently Ill After Eating Canned Salmon Dies In Hospital.

AFTER WEEK'S ILLNESS

Seized With Awful Pains on Nov. 9 and Doctors Battled in Vain to Save Her Life—Funeral Tomorrow.

Mrs. Jane Powers, the wife of Pierre Powers, for many years residents of the Glenside Park section back of Scotch Plains, died in Muhlenberk hospital, Saturday, from ptomaine poisoning produced by eating canned salmon. She had been ill since Friday, November 9, and was taken to the hospital as a last resort but her system had been so badly affected that the physicians could do nothing for her.

A member of Mrs. Powers' family brought home a can of salmon that had been purchased in a local grocery store and it was placed on the table for supper. Mrs. Powers partook of it heartily, and the same night was taken with violent pains. Dr. F. W. Westcott was called and at once diagnosed the trouble as ptomaine poisoning and adopted every precaution to stay the inroads of the trouble. She continued to remain ill and when no improvement was noted in a few days, it was decided to have her removed to the hospital. The physicians there worked with Dr. Westcott to bring about her recovery but their efforts were of no avail.

The case was one of the worst a local physician has had to contend within in some time and the fact that other members of the family ate sparingly of the salmon is probably all that saved them from a similar fate. They were affected slightly but the trouble soon passed away.

Mrs. Powers was well known in this city as well as at the Plains and leaves many warm friends. Be*side her husband, she is survived by* one son, Morris Powers, who resides in this city.

OPERATIC ASSOCIATION PLANS FIRST CONCERT

PHILHARMONIC STRING QUARTETTE TO TAKE PART IN THE PROGRAMME.

In the formation of the Plainfield Operatic Association, the object was to confine its efforts entirely to operatic work, but acting on the suggestion of a number prominent in the city, the organization has decided to give two concerts each season, the latter entertainments in a measure to take the place of those provided by the Choral Society, whose excellent work will be recalled.

It has been several years since Plainfield has had the pleasure of hearing a large chorus of local talent, and in presenting the first concert on Tuesday night, November 27, William Holmes, the musical director, has taken particular care to make the chorus work a feature. Many new voices, carefully selected from a waiting list, have been added, and the work bids fair to surpass the standard established last season.

For the first concert the association has secured the Philharmonic String Quartette, of New York, composed of musicians of note. Otto K. Schill, first violinist, is an artist of exceptional ability, and has long been known as an eminent soloist and ensemble player. Ludo Goesweiler, the 'cellist, a native of Switzerland, is a born artist. His playing reveals temperamental and artistic qualities. The Philharmonists need no introduction here, as they have been heard on several occasions at musical services in the First Baptist church.

They will contribute the following numbers to the programme:

Theme and Variations from quartette op. 18 No. 5, Beethoven; L. Secret d'amour, Klein; Canzonetta, Mendelssohn; Capriccio for three violins, Herman; Music of the Spheres, Rubenstein; Menuette, Godard.

The concert will take place at the Casino.

Another Lodge for Plainfield.

Mrs. W. J. Ford, of East Fourth street, has returned from a visit to Clark Court, Jersey City, it being the official visit of the Supreme Royal Matron, Mrs. Annie Voss, and staff, of the Order of the Amaranth Supreme Council, Rite of Adoption of the World, of which Mrs. Ford is an officer, and while there she was appointed by the Supreme Council to institute a court of the Royal Amaranth in Plainfield. The order consists of members of the Eastern Star, Master Masons and their friends. In the near future Mrs. Ford will take steps to institute a local court.

Exhibition of Cigars and Liquors.

Commencing on Monday, November 26, and continuing for one week, Henry Windham, proprietor of the Waldorf Hotel on East Front street, will hold one of the largest cigar and liquor exhibitions ever given in Plainfield. The brands of cigars and liquors are the best in the market and it will be to the advantage of intending purchasers to examine the stock before buying elsewhere.

"BOB" WHITTAKER LAURED BY FLORIDA PEOPLE

WARMLY COMMENDED FOR HIS WORK AT JACKSONVILLE'S CARNIVAL.

Robert Whittaker, the well known Plainfield equestrian and circus man, accompanied by Fred S. Whittaker, has returned home from Jacksonville, Fla., where the former had charge of the amusement end of one of the biggest carnivals the South has had in years. It took place at Jacksonville and lasted 10 days, closing last week. Whittaker, or "Bob," as he is known to all his Plainfield friends, was given instructions to secure performers for the "Hippodrome" and assume entire charge of the programme while the carnival was on. The fact that he did so to the satisfaction of all concerned is attested by the following glowing notice given him by the Jacksonville Metropolis, the city's leading paper:

"The Jacksonville Carnival Association owes a great deal of the success of their hippodrome to the able and efficient manner in which the director, Mr. Robert Walberti Whittaker, conducted the affair this week. Under his intelligent and capable management, the aggregation of stars that has been secured for the Carnival Association were displayed to the greatest advantage. The staging of the different acts attracted most favorable and enthusiastic comment from the thousands of people who nightly came to enjoy the scenic performance, the like of which has never been seen in the South before. With rare skill, Mr. Whittaker most capably controlled the performances, and got the very best results from each. The remarkable smoothness with which the different acts were carried on elicited the admiration of everybody. The stage manager is born, not made, and Mr. Whittaker, *with his long experience in the cir*cus ring, proved himself to have been adapted of the very best methods. His management was signalized by quick, effective work. There were no amateurish drags at any stage of the performance, it being clearly visible that a master hand was in control.

Mr. Whittaker came to the Carnival Association most highly recommended, and his work here proved that the reports concerning him were not exaggerated in the least. He has the art of stage craft developed to a marked degree, and, although the personnel of the hippodrome was composed of many different nationalities, he controlled them with rare tact and marked ability, and held their esteem to the extent that they would do anything he asked them willingly and promptly.

"The Carnival Association feels so indebted to Mr. Whittaker for his assistance in making the hippodrome such a wonderful success that they unhesitatingly and unstintedly give him the praise which is his just due. All his dealings with the association have been marked with courtesy and consideration of their interests, and he has labored early and late with the keenest zeal to help this difficult movement out in every particular. He has in his son, Fred S. Whittaker, a most valuable assistant, who, following the lines laid down by his father, has been also of valuable help to the Carnival Association.

"Mr. Whittaker, Sr., and son sail this week for New York, on the Clyde ship, from whence they will go to their home at Plainfield, N. J., taking with them the best wishes of the Carnival Association. They have been much pleased with their trip to Jacksonville, and hope to come here again in an official capacity some time."

A prominent critic says: "If there is an actress capable of showing one side of woman's capricious nature, Florence Gale is opportuned with a hundred, which she does indeed most admirably. At times sad, joyful, coquettish, musical, slurred, flighty, bantering, etc., up and down the whole gamut of human emotion, she made the most of her part in 'Romeo and Juliet.'" Miss Gale is said to have lots to do—from her inception in the play as the petted ballerina until her final rescue of her lover from the sombre castle, her pleasing personality is ever present. Miss Gale's youth and beauty is a great factor in her professional success, yet this does not cast reflection upon the speaking parts of the play. There are many good characters, all placed in most competent hands. "Romeo and Juliet" will be at the New Plainfield theatre next Monday afternoon and night.

Pupils' Work.

An attractive poster drawn in crayon by Miss Grace Weeks, is displayed on the Plainfield High School bulletin board, advertising the girls' basketball game with East Orange next Saturday. Another poster in pen and ink by Weston Gavett, tells of the coming reception on Thanksgiving Eve.

Mayor Smalley's Court.

In the borough court, Saturday night, Mayor Smalley fined Garret Shephard and Edward Conshey $1 each for disorderly conduct at Saengerbund Hall, Friday night. They tried to settle an argument by a wrestling bout that threatened the equilibrium of a lot of people standing around. Sentence was suspended on Aaron Reed, who was charged with violating the health ordinance.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

GOLF.

Despite the fact that the golf season is rapidly waning enthusiasts still follow the game on the local links and will continue to do so as long as weather permits.

*Harry Vardon has declined the in*vitation to play a series of matches in Australia this winter, but may possibly visit the Antipodes next year. In spite of his fine play this year he is far from being well.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Morris County Country Club held on Monday for the election of fifteen directors and a committee of three to nominate candidates for the offices to be filled at the annual meeting, those elected were as follows: For directors—John O. H. Pitney, George G. Frelinghuysen, Charles W. Harkness, George C. Palmer, Ransom H. Thomas, Hamilton McK. Twombly, Louis A. Thebaud and John I. Waterbury. The seven candidates selected by the regular and associate members of the club, known as club nominees, are: Joseph B. Dickson, Robert D. Foote, William Shippen, Wynant D. Vanderpool, Albert H. Vernam, Ridley Watts and Richard H. Williams. Nominating committee—George C. Palmer, Wynant D. Vanderpool and Peter H. B. Frelinghuysen.

The Eastern Professional Golfers' Association has practically decided not to hold its next championship tournament in the spring. This may result in the withdrawal of the Country Club of Brookline's offer, which suggested a spring date as well as a possible combination with the Massachusetts open championship tournament. The almost unanimous opinion among the professionals at their recent meeting was in favor of a fall date. They prefer October to any other month.

From now on the sale of foreign made golf balls in this country will cease. Further legal trouble was averted yesterday by the defendants in the suit confessing judgment, paying damages and agreeing to return his stock of balls of foreign manufacture.

There is a chance of a team of American woman golfers going abroad to compete in the championship tournament at Newcastle next spring. It is generally admitted now that there is little or no difference between the best players of Great Britain and America.

Robert Weir, the young man from the Wilmington Country Club, continues his good work at Lakewood on Saturday by winning the chief cup, defeating E. L. De Forest, of Shinnecock Hills, 4 up and 3 to play in the final round. R. L. Redfield, of the Montclair and Essex County Country Club, also won a cup.

One of the lowest eighteen-hole scores made this season was credited to David Robertson, professional of the Pittsburg Golf Club. He went out in 30 and back in 33, for a total of 63. Robertson had nine threes, seven of which were made consecutively. The former record for the Pittsburg course was 64, held by W. C. Fownes, Jr., the well-known amateur.

Harry Mackey, of Atlantic City, made a remarkable record during the Lakewood tournament last week. The twelfth hole is 270 yards long, yet Mackey made it in 3 five times in succession.

In winning the third division cup at Lakewood on Saturday, J. Haine Lippincott, of Atlantic City, scored his first win in a tournament. He defeated one of his club mates in the final round.

BOWLING.

The Park Club bowling team is getting in fine condition for the opening of the Central Journal Bowling League tournament early in December. Under the direction of F. O. Ball, captain, the bowlers practice nearly every night.

Arrangements are about completed for the ten-pin and cocked-hat bowling tournaments to be held at the Park Club through the winter. These are open to the club members and there promises to be unusual interest.

William Barlow is one of the best bowlers at the Park Club. In following his work on the alleys there is a uniform excellence which makes him a valuable member of the team.

—Yesterday was the thank-offering day in the Plainfield Public Schools and the pupils brought fruits and vegetables to be sent to Muhlenberg Hospital, according to the annual custom.

Miss Jennie Kissam, of Duer street, accompanied by her brother, Willis A. Kissam, of Great Neck, L. I., will leave tomorrow for the south to remain an indefinite time.

Miss Lillian Kiersting, of Morristown, is spending a couple of weeks with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lielke, of West Front street.

James Kloseus, of the borough, who fell off the top of a building on Clinton avenue, last week, is still improving at the hospital.

Mrs. A. D. Edgar, of East Front street, has returned from a visit with her mother, Mrs. Ramsay, of Lebanon, Hunterdon county.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

The Young Ladies' Mission Circle of the First M. E. church will hold an entertainment in Vincent chapel tomor ow night.

The annual fair of the W. C. T. U. opened this afternoon in the rooms on Madison avenue, and will continue until tomorrow night.

The members of the First M. E. church will receive contributions next week for Thanksgiving dinners for the poor, which is the annual custom at this church.

There will be a moving picture entertainment at the Y. M. C. A. to*morrow night* under the auspices of the Young Men's Brotherhood of Warren chapel.

The Young People's Society of the First Baptist church will hold a meeting of special interest Friday night and it is requested that as many of the new converts as possible attend.

MUST BELIEVE IT.

When Well-Known Plainfield People Tell It So Plainly.

When public endorsement is made by a representative citizen of Plainfield the proof is positive. You must believe it. Read this testimony. Every backache sufferer, every man, *woman or child with any kidney trou*ble will find profit in the reading.

Andrew Mattis, carpenter, of 127 West Fourth street, Plainfield, N. J., says: "I have been troubled for years with dull backache and pain in the back of my head, caused by kidney complaint. I was hurt severely some time ago by falling from a scaffold and the physicians thought my spine was injured. I think that fall injured my kidneys. As nothing else that I tried seemed to help my back or kidneys, I decided to try Doan's Kidney Pills and got a supply at Randolph's pharmacy. I have now taken nearly three boxes, and find that the backache and headaches has disappeared."

ORIOLES DEFEAT THE Y. M. C. A. FIRST TEAM

HOME FIVE WEAKENED BY ABSENCE OF REGULAR PLAYERS.

Crippled by the absence of three of their regular men, the Y. M. C. A. basketballists fell down before the Orioles, of New York, Monday. At that, they put up a good fight. The score was 24 to 12.

As if a hurriedly-built team was not hard luck enough, Leary, one of the regulars, sprained his ankle within three minutes after the game started, and had to limp for the antiphlogistine department without delay.

The team naturally was weak on passing. Brilliant individual work, with dashes of concerted action, served, however, to hold the visitors down in the first half, and the score was tied at seven to seven when the period closed. Long and Schoenmaker made a good showing as utility men considering their lack of team practice.

Line-up and score by points:

Y. M. C. A.		ORIOLES.

Points scored—Long (3), Thompson (5), Scull (4), Seward (2), Lamb (4), Jenkins (4), Dailey (7), Cook (8). Referee Charles B. Morse.

Between halves the Business Men were slaughtered to make a second team holiday. What the seconds did to the perspiring B. M.'s is a sad story of hard times in business. Loiseaux scored four goals and Smith one, and that was all, except for two useless fouls, that the Business Men scored. The second team? Oh, about 40 for theirs.

A Surprise Party.

Mr. and Mrs. Lynn Crandall, of Somerset street, were pleasantly surprised Saturday evening, when about twenty-five friends called on him unannounced. Mr. Crandall is instructor in mechanical drawing and manual training in the North Plainfield schools. During the evening games were played in which acting was a feature. George Clark won first honors. Refreshments were served, after which all joined in singing college songs.

CONSTITUTION NO BAR TO STOKES' CANDIDACY

Senatorship It is Argued is Not an Office "Under United States Government."

OF GOVERNMENT ITSELF

Loophole in State Constitution—Governor Not Prevented from Being Elected in Dryden's Place.

Despite all the declarations of State leaders that even should Governor Stokes aspire to succeed United States Senator John F. Dryden, a provision in the State Constitution would prevent him, there is a loophole in the Constitution through which His Excellency may crawl, if he so wishes, in fact he won't have to do any crawling for it is believed that the working of the provision would have no legal effect on his candidacy. It has been stated by friends of the Governor that the Constitution would not act as a bar, but that is as far as they will go in discussing the subject. The "why and wherefore" is by the Legislature to any office under the Government of this State or of the United States, during the term for which he shall have been elected Governor." As he will still be in office, when the Legislature performs its duty of choosing an United States Senator, the Dryden people hold that the Stokes boom would be legally punctured.

On the other hand, there is reason why much weight should be attached to the clause as Mr. Stokes' friends interpret it—"Nor shall he be elected by the Legislature to any office under the government of the United States, kept in the dark—for the time being at least.

The concluding sentence of paragraph eight, article five, of the Constitution of New Jersey is the one relied upon by John F. Dryden and the State machine, of the head of which who has made such an excellent rec*ord both as a State Senator and as* Governor." It says: "Nor shall he (meaning the Governor) be elected etc." A Senatorship is not an office under the Federal government, it may be argued. In fact it is part of the Government itself. The Constitution of the States divides the Government into three parts, Executive, *Legislative and Judicial. The Sena*tors are in the Legislative branch—they are a part of the third of the whole government. They are not officers under the government, for in such class appointments made by the three branches of the Federal Government themselves would be placed. Consequently, it is argued, the election of an United States Senator would not be the selection of a man for an office under the Federal Gov*ernment. It would be the selection* one to become a component part Federal Government. This is of reasoning, it is believed, ich the friends of the Gov to have him chosen to ral toga.

GOOD REPORT FROM DIOCESAN TREASURER

MRS. CARPENTER TELLS WOMEN'S AUXILIARY ABOUT MISSION WORK.

The regular monthly missionary meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary to Missions of the Church of the Holy Cross on Wednesday was well attended, about thirty women gathering to hear Mrs. Carpenter, the diocesan treasurer, speak of the work being done through the united offering. It was with a justifiable pride, she said, that she pointed out the work the women of the Episcopal Church were doing by the combined mite-chest offerings given in triennially. Workers in Alaska, in China, in Africa, in the South and in fact all over the missionary field, she said are receiving support and encouragement that in sums of ready money to be used at discretion and apart from apportionments made by the General Board of Missions.

At the conclusion of her address the rector declared that the men were not to be left behind by the women but plans were in operation among the men of the church generally for an united offering of $1,000,000 to be given at Richmond, Va., in 1907, when the General Convention would meet. The work of Deaconess Boorman among Mountain Whites in Virginia next came up for consideration. The arduous character of her work was shown in that she has to go about nursing from house to house in a sparsely settled wild country and to do the work without necessary helps and conveniences. A box to be sent before Christmas, consisting of hospital supplies and useful gifts for the mountaineers is now being made up. A sum of money was appropriated from the auxiliary treasury and members have sent in contributions toward bufiding a hospital.

The meeting ended with an informal tea and reception.

LOCAL PLAYGOERS LIKED "CAUGHT IN THE RAIN."

The New Collier Comedy Catches the Fancy of a Large and Appreciative Audience.

A large and typically Plainfield audience witnessed the first production in this city of William Collier's new comedy, "Caught in the Rain," at the New Plainfield theatre, last night. The play gives Mr. Collier the great*est opportunity of his artistic life to* show what a splendid comedian he is and both he and his company received *hearty approbation from the spec*tators.

"Caught in the Rain" depicts the love-making of a bashful young man who willingly risks his life for a dying miner but runs at sight of a pretty girl. The runs once too often for, sprinting from a storm, he lands under an awning just as the rain descends in torrents and finds himself face to face with the prettiest girl he ever saw—Muriel Mason (Nanette Comstock). He falls desperately in love but makes a mistake in her identity and when later he is offered *a fortune with the hand of Miss Ma*son he refuses on the ground that he is in love with another girl. As a matter of fact that "other girl" is really Miss Mason, but he does not learn that until he has deliberately thrown away his own fortune rather than prove faithless. In the end all comes out right of course but not *until after three acts that are brim*ful of fun as well as heart interest.

The leading role was excellent, with Miss Nanette Comstock, who was seen here a short time ago in "The Calloper," and Miss Louise Drew, a daughter of John Drew, sharing honors with the star. Manager Charles Frohman has had the play magnificently mounted and the scenic effects are artistic and novel.

CITY COMMITTEE MOURNS FOR ITS VICE CHAIRMAN.

Orders Engrossed Copy of Resolutions Sent to Former Mayor's Widow.

The present Republican City Executive Committee held its last meeting at the Casino, Thursday night, the most important business being the adoption of resolutions on the death of Dr. O. L. Jenkins, former mayor and for ten years a member of the committee. The resolutions were ordered spread on the minutes of the committee and an engrossed copy will be sent to the family of Dr. Jenkins.

Several matters of minor importance were disposed of. It was reported that there is a small surplus in the treasury. The new committee will meet in January for organization.

FRIENDS IN CONVENTION

Plainfield and Shrewsbury Meetings in Half-Yearly Session Here.

DISCUSS TIMELY TOPICS

Talk On Race Feud in the South and of San Francisco's Edict Against Japanese.

The half-yearly session of the Religious Society of Friends was held Thursday and Friday meetings at the meeting-house on Watchung avenue. This comprises the Plainfield and Shrewsbury meetings and despite the stormy weather there was a large attendance, including members from New York and distant points.

The first meeting was held in the morning and consisted chiefly of the reception of reports from the Plainfield and Shrewsbury meetings. These indicated increased interest and an excellent spiritual condition. At noon dinner was served at the meeting-house by a committee from Friends from the Plainfield meeting.

The afternoon session was devoted to a talk by Timothy Hussey, who, with his wife has just returned from Palestine, where they have been engaged in mission work for eighteen years. They have established Friends' schools there and now have a membership of about 300. Mr. Hussey gave an exceedingly interesting talk about his mission labors, which took up the best part of the afternoon.

The session last night was given up to the Young Friends' Association, and the consideration of a paper presented by Mrs. Clara S. Rushmore, on "The American Race Problems." This was the opening paper in a series to be considered throughout the winter by the association. Mrs. Rushmore's paper treated chiefly with the colored people, beginning with a sketch of Africa, the climate, and environments of the colored people there, the introduction of the colored people into this county as slaves in 1735 and progress of the race since then. In the future papers the condition of the colored race will be presented more in detail.

Mrs. John Poole presented the paper on current topics, which included a synopsis of the recent outbreak between the colored and white people of the South, especially in Atlanta. Mrs. Poole spoke of the progress of the colored people, stating that they now have thirty-one banks conducted by people of that race in the south. The recent discussion regarding the Japanese in relation to public school education in San Francisco was also touched upon by Edward Hutchinson. These papers merely set forth facts as gleaned from the various newspapers and did not attempt to take sides or express opinions. The meeting closed with a social hour.

The morning's session was largely devotional, while a brief time was devoted to a consideration of the proposed changes to do away with the office of ministers and elders and substitute ministry and council, to which it is proposed to add the names of several young Friends. This question will come up at the yearly meeting to be held later.

Among those from out of town who attended the conference were former Dean Bond, of Swarthmore College; Mrs. Anna Rice Powell, of Philadelphia; Miss Phoebe C. Wright, of Manasquan; Robert Barnes and family, of Purchase, N. Y., and Mr. and Mrs. John Shotwell, of Asbury Park.

Those in charge of serving dinner at the conference were Mrs. Harry G. Adams, chairman; Mrs. J. H. Cooley, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Vail.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CLUB MEETS AT THE CASINO.

Members Put In An Evening at Bowling, Pool and Bridge Whist.

The party of young people recently organized to engage in bowling, pool and bridge whist, held their first meeting at the Casino, Thursday. Meetings will be held fortnightly at the Casino throughout the winter months. Last night some bowled, others played pool, while a number played bridge whist, spending a pleasant evening. Coffee and sandwiches were served.

Those present were the Misses Fleming, Sykes, Strong, Burke, Mead, Goddard, Edna Brown, of this city, and Miss Moore, of Canada; Henry Brower, Lawrence Tweedy, Charles King, Owen Fleming, Frank O. Reinhart, A. W. West, William Bull, Amos Brooks, Wylie Brown, W. Lester Gleaney and Carroll Runyon.

Will Build Apartments.

Henry Leifke and B. Frank Cortell, who had plans drawn for the remodelling of their property on East Front street, near Watchung avenue, have made a number of alterations in them. William C. Smith, of Grandview avenue, has the contract for the mason work. The double house on the property will be transformed into apartments.

Common Council to Act.

It is quite likely that the Common Council, at its December meeting will take suitable action upon the death of Dr. O. L. Jenkins, who was mayor of the city for two terms.

SALE ADDS TO NEW CHURCH CARPET FUND

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AID ASSOCIATION HOLDS SUCCESSFUL AFFAIR

Unqualified success was scored by the sale held Friday afternoon and night by the Pastor's Aid Association of the First Presbyterian church, in the church lecture room. The attendance was large and the booths and tables did a brisk business from the opening hour. The new carpet fund, for the benefit of which the affair was held, will be swelled by $200 as a result of it.

The booths and tables were prettily decorated. The room was a mass of tastefully blended colors, and its very appearance seemed like an assurance of perfect management and complete success.

Mrs. David K. Young was general chairman. She was ably assisted by these committees and workers: Decorating committees, Mr. Dunning, Jno. Burroughs, F. Lounsbury, A. V. Searing, Jr., Mrs. LeRoy Gates, Freeman Shotwell, Miss McConaighy, Miss Bessie Deforest, Miss Burroughs, Miss Colburn, Miss Wash, Miss Reynolds. Fancy table, *Miss Addie Dier*rich, Mrs. Norman Currie, Mrs. Robert Radford, Mrs. F. Bettman, Mrs. Diamond, Miss Moody. Japanese booth, Mrs. Clarence E. POPE SENT BLESSING TO ALL AMERICA.

Bishop McFaul Returns from Rome After Several Months Absence.

Bishop McFaul, who has been abroad several months, has returned to Trenton. He says the Pope, in the face of the difficulties between church and state in France, spoke with great regard for the freedom which Roman Catholic church enjoyed in the United States, and sent his benediction to the American Federation of Catholic societies in this country. He added:

"I had two audiences with His Holiness Pius X, before which I presented the Peter's Pence offering of the diocese of Trenton and had pleasant conversations regarding the extent and population of the diocese of Trenton as well as the general condition of religion in the United States.

"In my second interview I explained the object and scope of the American Federation of Catholic societies, assuring the Holy Father that, while the organization was progressing slowly, it had nevertheless grown beyond the expectation of its founders and its national conventions had become great Catholic congresses, wherein before immense audiences in our chief cities and fundamental problems of the day, such as socialism, education, divorce, etc., were discussed by the most eminent clergymen and lawyers.

"His Holiness was much interested and bestowed his apostolic benediction on the organization."

"Speaking of France the Pope said he prayed for the day when the church would enjoy the same liberty there as in the United States. The state in America, he said, attends to its own affairs and allows the church to manage hers."

Concerning the disagreement in France, Bishop McFaul said the Pope's latest act would take from France the control of the foreign missions. His Holiness will gradually intrust them to the care of Germany and Italy.

Roosevelt in Foreign Soil.

Panama, Panama, via Galveston, Texas, Nov. 17.—At La Boca, the Pacific terminal of the canal, after a slow trip across the zone, President Roosevelt said to Chairman Shonts, of the Canal Commission: "The sight of the canal is most inspiring. I wish every American could see it. I am highly satisfied with my cursory examination." Mr. Roosevelt gave the rest of the day to an interchange of amenities with Panamanians, for which he broke a precedent by setting foot on foreign soil at a line marked by Panama and American flags midway between the Tivoli Hotel, in the canal zone, and the Panama Railroad station, in the republic. A *Sesta was declared and two hun*dred Panamanians in rough riders' uniforms, specially purchased by the republic, served as a guard of honor.

'Prince's Mayor Indicted.

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 17.—The Grand Jury this afternoon returned five indictments against Mayor Eugene E. Schmitz and Arabham Ruef for extortion in connection with the French restaurants in this city. Bail was set at $10,000 on each count. Ruef will furnish his bail money tonight. Mayor Schmitz is on his way home from Europe, and will reach San Francisco in about a week.

SELECT NEW S.S. HEADS

Officers of New Jersey Association Chosen at Convention in Somerville.

UNION GETS A FLAG

This County Recognized For Its Financial Donations—Next Meeting at Freehold.

The convention of the New Jersey Sunday-school Association was concluded Thursday at Somerville with a large attendance. After a devotional meeting, with Rev. Frank Anderson as leader, a business meeting was held, when the following officers were elected:

President, James L. Griggs, Somerville; vice-president-at-large, Jas. H. Forster, Jersey City; district vice-presidents, first district, Rev. Dr. Louis W. Stults, Bridgeton; second, Rev. Dr. John W. Lyell, Camden; third, Charles B. Parsons, Red Bank; fourth, Edward W. Dunham, Trenton; fifth, Robert J. Smith, Dover; sixth, Rev. Henry C. Cronin, Jersey City; seventh, Henry H. Dawson, Newark; recording secretary, Rev. Samuel D. Price, Camden; treasurer, Edward W. Barnes, Perth Amboy. It was decided to hold the next convention at Freehold.

Miss J. Woodbridge Barnes, International secretary of elementary work, presented diplomas to Miss Jean Gulick, of Princeton, and Miss Berry Applegate, of Dover. It was announced that seven such diplomas had been awarded at the Essex county convention on "Teacher Training in Pennsylvania."

An interesting part of the exercises yesterday afternoon was the presentation of flags to the counties which had fully met their financial apportionment. The counties which were thus honored were Essex, apportioned $600, raised $698; Union, apportioned $400, raised $520; Mercer, apportioned $250, raised $271; Camden, apportioned $350, raised $414; Hunterdon, apportioned $150, raised $165; Warren, apportioned $150, raised $163; Ocean, apportioned $140, raised $140; Cape May, raised $77; Cumberland, apportioned $200, raised $225. In addition to these flags were presented to the Warren, Essex, Cumberland, Hunterdon and Union delegations, the presentation having been omitted last year.

The superintendents last evening held a meeting and banquet at the DeForest House. F. W. Ayer, of Camden, presided. There was a rapid-fire confidence on "Problems of City Sunday-school Work," which was led by James V. Forster, superintendent of the Bergen M. E. Sunday-school of Jersey City. This was followed by a dinner at the Casino.

After the dinner Philip E. Howard, of Philadelphia, made an interesting address and conducted a question box. At a business meeting reports of various officers were heard and the following officers elected: President, Edward W. Dunham, of Trenton; vice-president, Philip Case, of Somerville; secretary, C. H. Madison, of Newark.

Rev. Dr. Forest E. Deger, of Philadelphia, addressed the convention last night on "Saving the Boys." Rev. Frank Anderson, of Milville, secretary of Baraca Class Movement in New Jersey, gave a talk, explaining the Baraca class idea. Charles E. Scott, of Newark, gave an interesting illustrated address in "Successful Methods with Boys."

BOWLED IN NEWARK.

Plainfield Newspaper Rollers Had a Perfectly Lovely Time. Yes?

The newspaper bowlers went to Newark last night as the guests of the Newark News rollers. After a happy-go-lucky trio of games on the Tuxedo alleys, the News men led the Plainfielders to a real supper, surrounded by mineral waters of several degrees of intensity.

John Runyon and Elmer D. Cutting were with the Plainfielders and they supplemented star performances on the alleys by corruscating whirls at the automatic piano player thoughtfully provided as an extra course by the supper committee. The supper was held in Frey & Sons' cafe, and the ex-Plainfielder let himself out to make the menu and the cuisine one to be lovingly remembered. Only one unpleasant incident marred the perfection of the evening. While Lauber spoke disrespectfully of the W. C. T. U., and Chairman Harry Hughes felt compelled to eject him.

KNIGHTS TO GET $15,000.

Woman to Give Columbians Money to Pay Off Mortgage.

Knights of Columbus in Jersey City have received word from the National Council at New Haven, Conn., that a woman in Boston has informed officers of the National Council she intends to pay off the $15,000 mortgage on the Knights of Columbus club-house at Bright street and Jersey avenue.

The woman heard James J. Hopkins, principal of the Jersey City High School and president of the Jersey City Council of the Knights of Columbus, tell in a banquet speech in Boston how the Jersey City Knights of Columbus bought the club-house formerly occupied by the defunct Palma Club.

YOUNG COUPLE WEDDED AT PRETTY HOME CEREMONY

MISS SADIE MADORA ULRICK AND SAMUEL W. CROUSE THE PARTICIPANTS.

Miss Sadie Madora Ulrick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar N. Ulrick, of East Fifth street, and Samuel Winfield Crouse, of this city, formerly of Raritan, were married at the home of the bride's parents, Thursday afternoon. The ceremony was performed at 5 o'clock by Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, of which both young people are members, and was witnessed by a large gathering of relatives and friends. The house was tastefully decorated with palms, roses and chrysanthemums and while the nuptial words were being pronounced, the bride and groom stood beneath an arch of ferns and chrysanthemums.

Miss Ulrick was attended by her sister, Miss Grace May Ulrick, as maid of honor, and Howard Stryker, of Somerville, was best man. The bride wore a gown of brussels net over white silk, with Duchess lace yoke, and tulle veil caught up with orange blossoms. She carried white roses. Her attendant's gown was of pink silk mulle. The ushers were Walter Ulrick, a brother of the bride, and Garret VanCleef, of Somerville. The bridal party passed through an aisle of ribbons held by Dorothy Vanderbeck, of Plainfield, and Miss Hazel Ulrick, of Brooklyn. Miss Edna Randolph, of this city, played the wedding march.

Following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Ulrick were tendered a reception and in the evening they left for a wedding trip of a week. At the conclusion they will make their home in Newark, Mr. Crouse having recently taken a position in that city. Both bride and groom were remembered by their friends with many pretty presents for use and ornamentation. There was also an interchange of gifts in the bridal party, the bride giving her attendant a gold bracelet and the best man and ushers receiving pearl stickpins from the groom. The groom's gift to the bride was an upright piano.

UNIQUE METHOD OF FIGURING SNOWSTORMS.

Railway, Nov. 17.—Chief of Police George Wright figures out there will be twenty-nine snow storms here this winter. His method, he says, is as follows: "Find what day of the month there was the last new moon. To the date of that day add the date of the day of the first snow storm, and you will have the number of snow storms for the winter. For instance, the new moon, the last one, came October 17. The first storm was November 13. Add the two together and you have thirty storms in all, one of which we have had." Mr. Wright says this was handed down to him from his parents and grandparents, from the days when they had no meteorological agencies to prophesy those things, and he will place their record against the latter inventions and wish out.

Negro Outlaw Riddled.

Asheville, N. C., Nov. 17.—Brought to bay by bloodhounds, which had tracked him from the home of W. J. Vanderbilt estate at Biltmore, James Harvey, of Forest City, Va., otherwise "Will Harris," a negro, who killed two policemen and three negroes in this city on Tuesday night, was killed at Fletcher yesterday by a posse. He refused to surrender, and his pursuers a ten mile chase, in which hundreds of shots were exchanged, and wounded two more men before his death. When his cartridges were exhausted he faced the mob, rolled his arms and laughed as the death volley of shot poured into his body. The saloons in Asheville have remained closed during the excitement, and the most perfect order has prevailed. The posses have been composed of the best citizens and the negro population has aided in the search and contributed toward a relief fund for the families of the dead policemen.

COMMITTEE WORK FOR WOOD AND FOWLER.

Both Will Be Advanced at Next Session of United States Congress.

At the next session of Congress, Congressman Ira W. Wood, of the Fourth District of New Jersey, will be advanced from sixth to third place on the committee on coinage, weights and measures, because of the failure of Chairman Southard and of Messrs. Hedge, of Iowa, and Dresser, Pennsylvania, to be re-elected. He will also go up from seventh to sixth place on immigration and Naturalization, because of the suicide of Congressman Adams, of Pennsylvania.

Congressman Fowler, of the Fifth District of New Jersey, will retain his chairmanship of the committee on banking and currency, and will be advanced to second place on the committee on reform in the Civil Service, because of the defeat of Mr. Lacey, of Iowa.

Concert Postponed.

The concert of the Vivo Trio, which was to have been held at the Y. M. C. A., last night, was put off until November 23, on account of the weather.

WORK ON BUS SCHEME

South Plainfielders Will Seek Board of Trade's Co-operation.

COMMITTEE ON CARS

Will Spend Tomorrow In New York Inspecting the Best Types of Machines for Traction Purposes.

Co-operation from the Plainfield Board of Trade in the establishment of the proposed automobile traction line between South Plainfield and this city is to be sought by the organizers of the service at South Plainfield. It is argued that the Plainfield Board would receive direct and large benefits from the service, and substantial support of the project should come from the progressive men of the city.

A committee of South Plainfielders will appear before the Board at its next meeting and lay the subject before it. There is a confident expectation of ready encouragement. The South Plainfield men are sure of carrying the scheme to a successful conclusion if the Plainfield merchants back up their efforts.

Active work on the plans has been entered into by the general committee. Matters have progressed to such an extent that the members will spend tomorrow in New York looking over suitable types of cars. It is the committee's determination to adopt only the very best model available. Every type of car will be investigated and tested, and when the selection is made, the choice will have fallen on a car capable of the highest class of service, combining speed with safety, capacity, and economy of operation.

When its investigations along this line are completed, the committee will report fully at a public meeting to be called for the purpose. The choice and cost of the cars is the most important, almost the only preliminary things to be decided upon astide from the financing of the project, and when they have been established the scheme will have advanced appreciably.

LATE NIGHT MARRIAGE.

Young Couple from New York Wedded at Grace M. E. Parsonage.

Merrill F. Beckwith, twenty-two years old, of New York city, and Miss Annie A. Allen, nineteen years old, of Schenectady, N. Y., were married by Rev. Dr. C. W. Parsons, at Grace M. E. church parsonage, Park place, Thursday. Accompanied by a woman friend, the couple came to the house at 10 o'clock.

Dr. Parsons does not know why the couple came to be wedded, but he said this morning that he was sure they were members of good families and that the marriage was not the culmination of an elopement. He said the groom was a piano manufacturer, and that the couple would live in Schenectady.

GETS YALE CLUB PRIZE.

Gurth Williams Passed Best Entrance Examination at New Haven.

Gurth Williams, a former P. H. S. boy, has been awarded the annual prize of $25 offered by the Yale Club to the Plainfield boy who passes the best entrance examination at Yale. He is a member of the class of 1909, Sheffield.

The award was made the executive committee of the Yale Club, upon the recommendation of Prof. Russell H. Chittenden, director of the Sheffield scientific school. Mr. Williams completed his preparation for Yale at the Bleak Hall School.

Told of King's Daughters' Work.

Mrs. Charles A. Reed, president of the City Union, King's Daughters, addressed a company of 100 women at the Seventh-Day Baptist church, Wednesday afternoon, telling of the work being done by the various circles in the city. She also told of the Day Nursery work, which is being carried on successfully and of the need for more funds.

P. H. S. FIVE DEFEATS BUSINESS MEN'S TEAM.

By Score of 50 to 20 on the Y. M. C. A. Floor—Feature of Game.

The basketball game Friday in the High School gymnasium between the Business Men's team and the High School team was a walk away for the latter, the final score being 50 to 20 in favor of the Plainfield High School. The signals went through to perfection, team work being the feature of the game.

Snyder of P. H. S. played an all round good game, calling forth frequent applause by his clever work. Caldwell and Line played together effectively, the former making nine goals, the latter six.

For the Business Men Loizeaux and Smith played the best game.

The line-up:

P. H. S.—Doane, Line, Morris, forwards; Caldwell, centre; Freeman, Snyder, Fountain, guards.

Business Men—Liazeux, J. Doane, forwards; Dunning, centre; Smith, Harrows, guards.

Referee, Collier; umpires, Scull and Mathewson; scorer, Woodbull; timer, Hansford. Two and fifteen minute halves were played.

TAX BOARD PERPLEXITIES

Low Valuation of Personal Property in Stores Causes Much Trouble.

AS TO THE FIGURES

Assessors Did Not Have Time Enough to Do Their Work Thoroughly, It Is Said.

The assessment of personal property in connection with the occupants of stores is said to be looming up at present as a possible cause of considerable trouble for the County Board of Taxation.

While affairs at the room of the County Board are at present going along in the most peaceable manner, the members of the board are alive to the fact that with the distribution of the tax bills there will probably be a host of dissatisfied property-owners calling upon them for an explanation of large advances in their assessments.

But no one has seemingly been paying any particular attention to the assessment of personal property in stores and one who is well posted in matters of taxation in talking with a reporter yesterday, laid considerable stress on the statement that if the books of the whole city were looked over it would be found that the personal property assessments on stores had in the majority of instances been left the same as they were last year.

Some there are whose assessments have been raised to a degree that shows some idea of conforming to the law requiring an assessment according to the true value of the property, and these may have some complaints to make.

In many cases the assessments run from $100 to $250, while it is claimed that it would cost at least $500 to fit up an ordinary barroom on modern lines. To a certain extent it is said butcher shops have been dealt with in the same way.

One of the members of the County Board admitted in conversation with a reporter that quite a large amount could be added to the personal property end of the tax lists if the assessments such as referred to above had been raised to a proper figure. "The assessors," he said, "all admit that they have not given much attention to the question of personal property as they would like to, but they have not had the time to go into their work fully this year. And this is true. The whole system, one may say, is new, and the assessors have been hampered by the extra amount of work the provisions of the new law entails.

"This has been, properly speaking, a year of experience and next year, when the assessors start out they ought to be acquainted with the nature of the work that is before them all of these things can be remedied."

JAMES TRIMMER ACQUITTED OF THE CHARGE OF ASSAULT.

Joseph H. Wright's Complaint Against His Neighbor Fails to Impress the Jury.

James Trimmer, of West Front street, was acquitted in the Union County Court, Elizabeth, yesterday, of the charge of assault and battery on Joseph H. Wright, a neighbor. Louis Clement and S. S. Swackhamer represented the defendant.

The action was the result of a quarrel over chickens trespassing upon Mr. Wright's property. It is said that he repeatedly spoke to Mr. Trimmer about his chickens running through his yard, but to no purpose. One day Mr. Wright called at Mr. Trimmer's house to complain, and he alleges that the latter struck him, knocked him down and kicked him and that his injuries kept him in bed for two weeks.

The defendant denied the allegation and the jury evidently did not put much credence in Mr. Wright's story as it was out only a few minutes when it returned with a verdict of "not guilty."

GAVE A BARN DANCE.

Members and Friends of St. Joseph's Church Enjoy An Unique Affair.

Members of St. Joseph's church conducted a barn dance and country social in Saengerbund Hall Thursday night. It was unique in both features and was attended by fully 200 people, the majority of whom were appropriate costume. The hall was decorated with farm products and anything that would tend to convey the rustic idea.

Suhr's imperial orchestra furnished music for the dancing and the floor was in charge of Thomas Gough.

The committee which arranged and conducted the affair included Mrs. A. E. Kenney, Mrs. A. E. LaPorte, Mrs. James Bailey, Miss Agnes Fitzgerald, Miss Justine Smith, Miss Julia Bannon, Arthur A. Cannon, Garret Kiely, Robert McCormack and Andrew Hauptmann. The proceeds are to be applied to the fund being raised for the new church.

His House at Home.

Mayor N. B. Smalley, of the borough, has been detained at home a few days owing to an injury to his eye received at the stone crusher at Watchung.

A RUMOR STARTED RUN ON THE BANK

INSTITUTION MET DEMANDS OF DEPOSITORS; CONFIDENCE RESTORED.

From some unknown source a rumor was started Wednesday at New Brunswick that the local savings bank was in some kind of trouble. So quickly did this rumor spread throughout the city that a "run" was started, and soon there were hundreds of persons at the bank demanding their money.

The bank has about $4,000,000 on deposit and is managed by some of the best known men in that city. At present there is a surplus of about $400,000.

When the bank opened yesterday there was no indication of a "run," but before noon over four hundred depositors had withdrawn their money and there was a constant crowd at the place. The bank officials tried to stop the "run," and in a measure were successful, as several persons who had withdrawn their money in the morning appeared at the bank before closing time and redeposited it.

One effect of the rumors was to cause distrust in another local bank, the Home Savings Bank Company, but there was no run there. A card was issued saying that it could pay every cent and have $200,000 left. The card closed:

"The directors have arranged to have on hand half a million dollars in cash, and any depositor desiring his money can have it without a minute's delay."

Arrests are expected to follow the scare. The false statements are said to have been mailed out. A man went to the bank several days ago with a passbook belonging to a relative and asked for the balance of the account. According to custom the bank declined to give it. That angered the man, and it is alleged he went about circulating false reports about the bank.

JERSEY WINS MEDALS IN BIG BELGIAN SHOW

ECONOMY EXHIBIT OF STATE BOARD OF STATISTICS HONORED.

The State Board of Statistics of Labor and Industry received Friday a diploma and bonze medal for its social economy exhibit at the Liege International Exposition in Belgium, which closed a year ago. The department was represented by a large collection of photographs, showing what had been done in the State to make life in factories healthy and comfortable. Reports were exhibited also, showing the able manner in which statistics were kept by the State Board.

Winton C. Garrison, of Newark, received a diploma of the gold medal class as the head of the department. Deputy James T. Morgan, as collaborator, was given a diploma of the silver medal class.

As similar departments in every State of the Union and in Continental countries had exhibits at the exposition, the prizes awarded the board are considered high honors.

Fourteen medals from the St. Louis Exposition were given yesterday to the several State departments that exhibited there.

Fight Likely Over New Job.

As a preliminary to the anticipated struggle of the Collins and Ford factions in the organization of the Elizabeth Council on January 1, it is probable that there will be a squabble over the suggestion that the office of city counsel in Elizabeth be created for City Attorney J. C. Connolly, and that Abe J. David, a lawyer, get the office of city attorney. Since the suggestion was made half a dozen candidates have arisen, ready to proclaim their fitness for the latter place, some of them demanding that they be the first to get that right. Mr. David should get the berth. It is expected that City Attorney Connolly, who says he should have an assistant, will send a communication to City Council on the subpect at its meeting tonight.

FORECLOSURE SALE.

Mrs. Sanford's Handsome Home Bought in by Her Mother.

Under foreclosure proceedings instituted by the First National Bank of this city, the handsome home of Mrs. Alice M. Sanford, at New Market, was sold Wednesday by Deputy Sheriff Overman in the sheriff's office at New Brunswick.

The property was bid in by Mrs. Sandford's mother, Mrs. Kate Yeomans, representing the bank, the mortgage was for $3,400 and the costs and judgment brought the total up to about $4,500. Mrs. Yeomans secured it at that figure. Harry C. Runyon, representing the bank, bid the property up to that figure to protect his clients. An outsider tried for the property, but dropped out when the figure passed for $4,000.

EPWORTH LEAGUE HOLDS A SOCIAL.

Good Programme at Vincent Chapel Thoroughly Enjoyed by a Large Number.

Under the auspices of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church, a monthly social and entertainment was held in Vincent chapel Friday. A large attendance of members and friends enjoyed the programme arranged by Miss Helen Whitney and her committee.

Before the rendition of the programme, the young people engaged in playing a game of "Authors." The names of various authors were put in a conspicuous place and the young people were required to guess certain things about their works.

The programme opened with a piano solo, "The Two Larks," and "To the Sea," by Miss Muriel Collins, followed with two vocal solos, "When Love is Gone," and "He Was a Prince," by Miss Leila Druse, of the First Baptist church choir. Miss Louise Stowell gave a reading, entitled "Patsy." Another piano selection, "Dreams," by Miss Collins, preceded the closing number on the programme, vocal solos, "Molly's Eyes," and "Good Night Beloved, Good Night," by Arthur Henly.

The evening's entertainment was concluded with the playing of "Blind Man's Bluff." Refreshments were then served by a committee of which Miss Mattie Humble had charge. Miss Ethel Truby, Miss Alma Hoagland preceded the evening's entertainment by a short business session when Miss Anna committee on spiritual work.

Dr. Anthony to Practice Here.

Dr. Anthony, who served as house physician at Muhlenberg hospital for six months, has returned here from his home at Shamokin, Pa., and will practice in this city. He will reside at the home of Dr. J. T. Fritts on Park avenue. Dr. Anthony is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania.

Teachers Will Meet at Atlantic City.

The fifty-second annual meeting of the New Jersey State Teachers' Association will be held at the High School building, Ohio and Pacific avenues, Atlantic City, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, December 26, 27 and 28.

THREE YALE CUPS FOR SCHOOL BOYS

OFFERED AS REWARDS FOR PROFICIENCY IN SCHOLARSHIP AND ATHLETICS.

The Yale Club, of Plainfield, has decided to purchase three cups to be placed in three of the public schools of the city, to be awarded each year to the pupil proving himself the most proficient in scholarship and athletics. Action was taken on the matter at a meeting of the executive committee at the home of the president, T. M. Day, on Carlton avenue, last week. Arrangements were made for the purchase of the cups; also for the annual dinner of the club, by the appointment of committees to look after these matters.

Arrangements are also being made to have the Yale Glee Club give a concert in this city some time during the winter, the date to be announced later. There will be the usual dance following the concert. There are probably more graduates of Yale than any other college in Plainfield and they have always taken the initiative in affairs tending to maintain the college spirit.

N. J. CENTRAL GETS FIFTY STOCK CARS.

They Have Steel Underframes and Are Fine Specimens of Car Building.

Fifty sturdy steel-underframe stock cars of thirty tons' capacity have been received by the Central Railroad of New Jersey from the Middletown Car Works, and they are about as fine-looking specimens of this freight car as can be had, as ever rode on four-wheeled trucks.

The floor are built very low, being but three feet seven inches from the top of rail, with double end doors for loading lumber and five-foot side doors. The inside dimensions are: 35 feet 10 inches long, 8 feet 3 inches high, and 8 feet 4 inches wide. The underframe consists of a central box girder made up of two 12-inch 20 5-pound channels, spaced 12¾ inches apart, with cover plate on top and bottom cover plates; similar channels for side sills and end sills, with built-up plate webb bolsters. The central girder is designed to carry, in addition to its normal load, any excess load between bolsters which the side sills cannot carry. This excess load is transmitted by two cross trusses and three channel ties, the cross trusses also serving as support for the Interchange floor nailing strips. The side sills are also bolted to a continuous angle 4 inches by 3 inches by 5-16 inch, which is riveted to the webb of the side sills, and gives them some small additional strength and vertical stiffness. The cars are mounted on Bettendorf cast-steel trucks.

CHAMBER CONCERT DRAWS LARGE AUDIENCE.

Society Present in Force, and Shows Approval Generously Throughout the Programme.

A large and fashionable audience greeted the first of the Tuesday chamber music concerts at the Casino Friday evening. Society was out in force as it always is at these enjoyable affairs and gave fresh evidence of the high favor in which it holds Mr. McIntyre and his associate artists. The trio was brilliantly rendered, especially exquisite work being done in the charming scherzo and andante.

The Rubinstein sonata for piano and cello was the feature of the evening. This glorious composition providing a fit opportunity for Mr. McIntyre and Mr. Dubinsky to display their great ability as interpretative artists. The piano beauties of the sonata, particularly in the song like middle movement, were most charmingly rendered.

Mr. Dufault's group of English and French songs were delightfully sung and he was obliged to repeat his last number. It is to be regretted that he felt obliged to retire. Mr. Dunn began his service as a carrier, but during the past few years he was given the work of making all collections from the letter-boxes, working from 3 to 7 o'clock in the morning and from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until 8 o'clock in the evening.

Mr. Dunn's place has been taken by Letter-carrier Charles Glaetzer, who had a West End route, and Mr. Glaetzer's route is now carried by Substitute John McCormick, who passed the civil service examination a few months ago.

NOT GIVING OUT PLANS

Colby, Ackerman and Other G.O.P. Legislators Won't Vote For a Democrat.

PLENTY OF MATERIAL

Essex Man Says He Will Keep on "Until the Crack of Doom"—

What Union Man Says.

Among Democratic visitors to the Capitol Building at Trenton Friday there was a disposition to question the assertion that the fight is between Dryden and Col. Stevens. Democrats of Mercer county—in which is Princeton—say the name of President Woodrow Wilson, of Princeton University, surely will be presented to the Democratic legislative joint caucus. It was further asserted that Mr. Wilson will receive the support of many members from different sections of the State, notably those from Essex county.

But the election of a Democratic successor to United States Senator Dryden being, to say the least, remote, discussion of the respective chances of Col. Stevens and Prof. Wilson were overshadowed by speculation as to what the Republican legislative revolters against Dryden will do when their party caucus meets.

Those who took part in these speculations point to the fact that on strict party lines the Republicans have a majority of seven on joint ballot.

They also place much stress on the fact that when the smoke had cleared away after the conferences of Tuesday only four Republican members of the Legislature could be found who are in open opposition to the election of Mr. Dryden. These are Senator Everett Colby, of Essex; Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, of Union; Assemblyman James Devine, Jr., and Assemblyman Guy L. Fake, both of Bergen.

To these four men a report put this question:

"If Mr. Dryden is the nominee of the Republican Legislative caucus for United States Senator and your vote could either elect him or cause the choice of a Democrat, would you cast your ballot for Mr. Dryden?"

To this question Senator Colby made this answer:

"That is an impossible situation. The only way a Democrat may be elected will be by having some Republican Legislators vote for him, and as I will not vote for a Democrat my attitude in that respect would not decide the issue. At all events, I will have a candidate and if the case continues, I will keep on voting for him till the crack of doom."

Senator Ackerman's reply was:

"That question is too ridiculous. I'm not going into 'ifs' and 'ands' at this time. There is a good Republicans who could be elected by the Legislature to succeed Mr. Dryden."

Assemblyman Fake answered:

"I do not care to reply to that question at this time. I do not wish to commit myself. The position of Assemblyman is new to me and I desire to be better posted before I do much talking. All I care to do now is to refer you to a letter I wrote to the local newspaper about the Senatorship."

The letter to which Mr. Fake refers is as follows:

"My Dear Sir: In your editorial you raise the question as to whether or not I will abide by the decision of the caucus in the mater of the election of a United States Senator. In reply, I would say that receiving the nomination as I did I am bound to fight against the re-election of Senator Dryden just as though an additional plank had been placed in our platform to that end.

"It will my duty to represent our county in the Legislature as well as in the caucus, but if a majority in caucus some Republican other than Senator Dryden can be elected I will reserve the right to bolt.

"There might, however, be conditions arising which would make it necessary for me to vote for Senator Dryden such as would arise to prevent a Democrat from being elected.

"Yours truly,

"GUY L. FAKE."

To the same question as addressed to the other revolters against Dryden Mr. Devine replied:

"I am a regular Republican, and I was not pledged to oppose Dryden or favor him. I have not declared myself one way or the other, but if I believe in the conditions existing my vote was to decide, I would be a fool not to vote for Dryden and elect a Democrat."

Interesting B. and L. Decision.

A decision by the Court of Chancery, just published in law notes, is of interest to members of building and loan associations. The court ruled that the claims of general creditors of insolvent building and loan companies were entitled to priority of payment from the assets over the claims of shareholders, as such.

PARK BOWLERS LOSE TO SUMMIT CLUB-FIVE

HIGHLAND ROLLED TOO STRONG FOR BOROUGHITES IN TWO.

Mingled grief and joy was the portion of the Park Club bowlers at Summit Wednesday. The Highland Club took two games, but the Parks got one, and they made a good showing against an awe-inspiring opponent.

The Highland Club five started in with a rush, and didn't slow up much at any stage of the contest. They passed 900 in all three games. To begin with, they scored 933 in the first game, and although the Parks showed individual scores to match two or three of the straight-eyed Highlanders, Daniel was weak and a gap of 79 pins separated the teams at the end.

In the second game, Daniel woke up, the others held to their pace, and the 953 pins topped the Highlanders' total by 20 pins. Jones and Dunn pulled the Highlanders out of the rut in the third game, and the Parks were shy 27 pins at the finish.

The scores:

MACHINISTS' BALL DRAWS CROWD OF 600

LODGE WILL GET MORE THAN $200 FROM THE ANNUAL AFFAIR

The fourth annual ball of Plainfield Lodge, No. 667, International Association of Machinists, Friday, eclipsed all previous efforts of the organization and broke a record for attendance at an affair of this kind in Saengerbund hall. Over 600 people were admitted and at times dancing was carried on with difficulty owing to the throng. Splendid work was accomplished by the floor committee, however, and what inconvenience there was did not interfere with the enjoyment of the participants.

Suhr's imperial orchestra furnished the music and it was one of the features of the evening. The attendance included many visiting machinists' delegations from Elizabeth, Newark, New Brunswick and other places. As a result the fund for the lodge will clear over $200, the same to be applied to the funds being raised to build a labor temple.

The general committee which arranged and had charge of the affair consisted of John R. Cline, chairman; James Smith, Michael F. Kiely, Marcus J. Hibbits, Michael Cooney, Jos. S. Burke, Robert Sowden, Richard Scott, Jeremiah Callahan, Arthur Jacobsen, Arthur Hann and O. Aitken. The floor committee was composed of Michael F. Kiely, general manager, Richard Scott, Martin Hibbits and Jeremiah Callahan, assistants.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

Mix ginger cookies with cold coffee instead of water, as it improves them.

Turnips and beets are improved by adding one or two tablespoonfuls of sugar when cooking.

Cranberries can be made very palatable with much less sugar by mixing them with about half their bulk of apples. Rub both cranberries and apples through a colander.

A round piece of tin about three inches in diameter, half of it turned upright, makes a good pot scraper.

To make an extra fine bread and cake cooler, something that no housewife should be without, purchase a piece of rather fine meshed, heavy wire fencing. Have the hardware man turn down about four inches on each end and sides to form the rim. This makes the side pieces for the cooler to stand on, and you have a simple, durable and inexpensive article on which to cool bread, cake and pies, or to place the hot stewpan while the sauce is made.

Boiled cabbage, in one family, is served with an egg sauce, to which Parmesan cheese has been added. The sauce is turned over the cabbage after it is put into the serving dish. For the sauce to a medium sized cabbage made of a capful of milk and a tablespoonful each of butter and flour has two hard-boiled eggs, chopped fine, stirred into it.

FOWLER'S PLURALITY, 408

Official Canvass of Union Complete Gives Martine 274 Plurality.

THE TOTAL RETURNS

Plainfielder Would Have Been Elected If Voting Machine Votes Had Been Undisputed.

The Union County Board of Elections and Registry completed the canvass of the county vote Thursday and announced the official figures. The mix-ups have been straightened out and it is learned that James E. Martine, who opposed Congressman Fowler for a re-election, has a plurality of 274 in the county over Mr. Fowler, which cuts the latter's plurality in the Fifth District to 408.

Martine is credited with 165 votes more than he is entitled to in Union county, but the Election Board could not dispute these returns. The returns from three wards in Rahway gave Martine twice as many votes as in reality he got. This was due to the fact that the voting machines in these places recorded a vote in the Independent column for Martine every time the regular pointer was turned and likewise recorded a vote for him in the regular column every time the Independent ticket was voted. Martine was the sole candidate on an Independent Democratic ticket.

The board did not have to accept the results in duplicate form of the Rahway wards, because of a defect in the returns from these two places. If the board had found it necessary to accept the vote in each place as the voting machines showed it, Martine would have been elected, on the face of the returns, by a plurality of two votes in the district, and Congressman Fowler could have been put to much trouble if his opponent should desire to take his seat in Congress.

The general opinion about voting machines in this part of Union county is not very favorable to their continuance.

The official returns show that Congressman Fowler received 10,241 votes in Union county, while Mr. Martine's vote, including the 193 Independent Democratic ballots cast for him in Rahway, was 10,535, which gives him a plurality of 274 over Mr. Fowler.

The official county vote for the Assembly candidates follows:

Republican — Perkins, 10,355; Moxon, 10,798; Tillman, 10,928.

Democratic — Desmond, 9,675; Hague, 9,654; Coulter, 9,508.

For coroner, Dr. Charles B. Lufburrow, Republican, of this city, received a total of 11,251, while Wagner, the Democratic opponent, received 9,333.

"Ride" Out for Country Dance.

The Pad and Pencil Club has issued invitations for its fourth annual country dance to be held in I. C. T. hall, Park and North avenues, on Thanksgiving eve. As in previous years, much originality has been displayed in getting up the "ride." They are printed on large sheets of yellow paper embellished with odd pictures in light green, the two colors indicated by correspondence with the grain and vegetables that will be in evidence at the Thanksgiving dinners on the next day. The committee from the club which will have charge of the dance consists of Archibald Hazelton, Thomas M. Muir and George E. Firstbrook.

FOUND BURNED AND MANGLED BODY OF WOMAN

Mutilated and Charred Corpse Discovered By Hunters Near New Providence.

IDENTITY ESTABLISHED

Declared by Husband and Son to Be Mrs. Georgiana Ullana—Remains Brought to This City.

Hunters with their dogs last Monday came upon the mutilated and burned body of a woman in a lonely place in the woods at New Providence. It was found just off Elwood avenue. The condition of the body was such that identification depend upon the shoes and bits of apparel that were not wholly destroyed by the flames. Some persons who saw the shoes thought they recognized them as of the pattern worn by a woman named Georgiana Ullana, who lived in the vicinity.

Mrs. Ullana disappeared from home about a month ago and her husband and son were apprised of the suspicions. They examined the bits of clothing and had no hesitancy in declaring them to be those of the missing woman. She had been mentally irresponsible and it is possible that she wandered away and killed herself.

Chief of Police Jacob Miller and Mayor Thomas F. Crane, of New Providence, and County Physician F. W. Westcott, of Fanwood, were summoned, and they went at once to the spot where the body was found. The woods there for some distance around were swept by fire about a month ago and that probably accounts for the condition of the remains. The parts of the body were gathered up and taken at first to John Hahr's hotel in New Providence, and afterward conveyed to this city.

It was at first thought that the woman may have been murdered but this theory was afterward abandoned.

One of the hunters who found the body is E. D. Rich, a civil engineer, of New Providence. He and his party were on their way home after a day's sport. It was the dogs that first drew their attention to the ghastly find. The dogs pointed it persistently, and at last the hunters went up to look.

First they found the skull, severed clean and lying about six feet from the trunk. The skull was cracked just above the forehead, and there was a hole in it that might have been made by a bullet. There was a depression also that might have been made by a blow from a club. A few thin gray hairs were visible, clinging to the temples.

The lower jawbone was separated from the head, but two rows of perfect teeth were intact. A puzzling feature is that a mass of dark hair was found. It lay some distance from the body near a clump of charred bones. There was but one ear, the left. The other may have been burned or cut off.

In the hasty examinations made by the authorities Monday it was uncertain which. The right leg was severed from the body, but lay very near it. It was much burned like the rest. The left leg was missing. This was searched for, but no part of it was found. Small particles of flesh still adhered to the bone, but it looked as if dogs had picked the bone. There are other evidences that dogs had feasted on what was left of the burned body. The police think that this may account for one leg being missing. They say that the dogs may have carried it off farther into the woods.

The flesh was entirely gone from the head, but some remained on the hands. This, too, looked as if it had been chewed off.

Davenport to Exhibit Fowl.

Move Wage Increase.

New York, Nov. 17.—Another proportion of corporations announced today its intention to increase the wages in its employees owning to the higher cost of living and on account of the prevailing prosperity, which recently increased its dividend rate, thus distributing larger sums to its stockholders. Francis F. Pinco, vice-president of the company, announced yesterday that, effective November 15, all employees of the company who are receiving wages less than $1200 a month are to receive an increase of ten per cent.

RECOUNT ORDERED IN DUNELLEN ELECTION TIE

JUDGE SWAYZE SIGNS ORDER AND THE BOARD SETS A DATE.

Judge Swayze has signed an order at New Brunswick, granting a recount of the votes cast in Dunellen for the two candidates running for tax collector, where the result was a tie. The County Board of Elections Monday fixed Tuesday, November 27, for holding the recount, at the Court House.

The fight for the collectorship was the hottest the borough has ever had. Isaac J. Stites, the Republican nominee, is a deacon in the First Methodist church here and an enthusiastic advocate of the Bishops' law. He was opposed by John Moynihan, the Democratic nominee, who favors more liberal liquor legislation. Mr. Stites is also a member of the William Hodson Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, and had the latter's support in the contest.

Election night there was dispute as to the count, and the District Election Board recounted the entire vote cast, finishing its work the next morning at about four o'clock. It was found that the two candidates for collector were tied.

The church deacon has since applied for a recount on the ground that two votes which were rejected by the Board because his name was not properly shorted, should have been counted, and that if they should not a vote cast for his opponent where the name was misspelled should be rejected.

PENNY PICTURE FUND STOLEN FROM SCHOOL

MEAN SNEAKTHIEF WORKS HARDSHIP ON ART-LOVING SCHOOLCHILDREN.

Sneakthieves, supposedly local, entered the Scotch Plains school several nights ago, and ransacked the rooms. They got only $1.20 in money and a few trinkets of little value from the teacher's desk, but their visit has compelled the children in Miss Hogan's room to start a new penny fund for classroom pictures.

The $1.20 the thieves got represented the savings of the pupils for the pictures. The police kept the theft quiet in the hope of smoking out some clue to the thieves, but no trace has been discovered.

The crooks got into the building by way of the fire escape and a rear window on the second floor. It is not considered at all likely that a hobo or a professional crook would have paid any attention to the school as a field for operations.

A NOVEL CASE.

Landlord Wanted Tenant Ejected on a Disorderly Charge.

A jury in Justice Snape's court in the borough of Metuchen Monday rendered a verdict of no cause of action in the landlord and tenant suit brought by Alexander E. Faber, Jr., against Jesse E. Cottle.

The case was one of the first kind that has been decided in this vicinity, the suit being brought by the landlord against the tenant under a section of the landlord and tenant act which provides that any tenant who is disorderly as to destroy the peace and quiet of the other tenants or of the neighborhood, may be ejected from the premises on three days' notice. The disorderly charge was made after Mr. Cottle and Edward Olsson, agent for Mr. Faber, had gotten into an argument, during which Olsson, he alleged, was assaulted.

R. S. Swackhamer, counsel for Cottle, produced witnesses to prove that his client was a peaceable tenant and the testimony was accepted by the jury. The plaintiff was represented by Charles J. McNabb.

ANXIOUS ABOUT UNION

Attitude of County's Legislators Most Important in Senatorial Contest.

BALANCE OF POWER

As In 1901, Union May Decide the Battle—Some Political History.

In its Mondays' issue, the Newark Evening News, the leading paper in New Jersey, said editorially:

"There is profound and well-grounded anxiety among those who insist upon the re-election of Senator Dryden, with reference to the attitude of Union county, for it is certainly true that a regular Republican caucus would be held immediately if it were thought that the Union County Senator and Assemblymen would attend it and be bound by the decision of the majority. One reason why the caucus is not called is because of the unsettled conditions in Union, or, rather, because it seems to be settled that Union county is anti-Dryden.

"Senator Ackerman, of Plainfield, was the first to declare that he was not in favor of the re-election of Senator Dryden, but would cast his vote for either Governor Stokes or former Governor Griggs. Next, Leader Perkins, of Westfield, declared his preference for Stokes, and Assemblyman Tillman, of Rahway, who was at first reported to be especially opposed to Dryden, modified this attitude by saying later that he was not pledged to any candidate. The Assemblyman-elect from Elizabeth, Mr. Moxon, has given no clear indication of how he stands on the Senatorial issue.

"The attitude of the Union county legislators is entirely consistent with that of some of their predecessors of five years ago. At that time Congressman Fowler had jumped in Trenton in the interests of Edward C. Stokes, who was John F. Dryden's most formidable opponent. Mr. Fowler threw the whole force of his personal strength and political influence in favor of Stokes, and Governor Voorhees, though maintaining a neutral position, undoubtedly hoped for the election of his friend. United States Senator Kean and other Union county leaders favored Mr. Dryden.

"The Senator from Union county at that time was Judge Cross. He favored former Governor Griggs. All efforts to induce him to support Dryden in the caucus were unavailing. "No," he said, "not so long as there is such a candidate as Griggs in the field." It was only when the Passaic contingent itself fell away from their support of Griggs that Judge Cross abandoned him and gave his vote to John F. Dryden. This settled the matter, but it was only after Griggs was hopelessly deserted by his own constituents.

"Congressman Fowler, the strongest advocate Mr. Stokes had five years ago, was chosen for the seventh term at the recent election. He lost Union county, but the city of Plainfield, which was always his stronghold, saved him from defeat in the Congressional district. He has great political influence in that city and there is reason to believe that he leans toward the "new idea" and that he *holds the same opinions with refer*ence to Dryden and Stokes that he held five years ago. This year Senator Kean has planned to work hard to see Mr. Dryden re-elected, but astute politicians agree that if South Jersey had one of the United States Senators, Mr. Kean's chances of re-election in 1911 would be improved.

"These facts taken together, show that Union county is entirely consistent in opposing Mr. Dryden and they tend to explain the anxiety of the Dryden constituency and the reason why a caucus of the Republican members of the Legislature is not called at once.

"If the Union county legislators refuse to support Mr. Dryden, the chances of his election are very slender, and to hold a caucus now and not win would be almost equivalent to ultimate defeat. Union county virtually holds the key to 1911, the key of the Senatorial situation; with greater reasons than then for opposing Mr. Dryden to the end."

Rushmore Escapes Fine.

Judge Atwater, in the Court of Common Pleas at Elizabeth last week, reversed the decision of the lower court in the case of the State vs. W. Rushmore, of Plainfield, who was fined $50 by Recorder Clark, of Scotch Plains, on July 4 last, for reckless driving. Rushmore was defended by the New Jersey Automobile and Motor Club, of which organization he is a member. The automobilist is charged with frightening a horse belonging to Charles Vincent, of Scotch Plains.

JERSEY CENTRAL'S ENGINEERS MEET

REPRESENTATIVES OF SEVEN DIVISIONS DISCUSS "MINOR DIFFERENCES."

Elizabeth, Nov. 20.—Representatives of all the divisions of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers covering the New Jersey Central Railroad system met here Sunday in the Lyceum theatre building. There were present 121 members of seven divisions. With them were Senior Assistant Grand Chief E. W. Sterley, of Cleveland, O.; H. E. Evans, general chairman of the divisions of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad system, and E. A. Tucker, one of the grand officers, of Brooklyn. The call for the meeting was made a week ago, and members of the different divisions began to arrive early in the morning.

They went into session at noon and lost no time in getting down to the consideration of the minor differences with the officials of the company that form the only disturbing element in the relations that have existed between the engineers and their employers since the signing of the contract under which they are now working about three years ago. The session lasted from noon until 5:30 o'clock, when an adjournment was taken until 9 o'clock, and the final adjournment at 10:20 o'clock Sunday night.

In an authoritative statement given to a reporter by two members of the Brotherhood after the meeting, the question of wages was left out of the statement that the matters under discussion were only "minor differences," and that neither these differences nor the serious discussion of them by the engineers should be taken as indicating any possible break in the amicable relations of the Brotherhood and the company, or a strike on any division of the road.

While the engineers have decided on asking for certain changes they are confident of bringing them about without making any formal demand for them, and it was with a desire to do justice to all concerned and thereby strengthen the friendly relations now existing with the company rather than to give any cause for a rupture that the matters were discussed and the plan of procedure decided upon.

While there were a number of matters taken up the most important was that involving a change of the working schedule so as to shorten the number of hours of the day's work. There was no discussion of an increase of pay as the shortening of the hours will amount practically to an advance. The wages now paid range from $2.50 to $4.20 per day, but the engineers average twelve to fifteen hours for a day's work. There are some few—not more than four or five—exceptionally good runs on the road which give the incumbents short hours and extra good pay, but they do not count in the general calculation of the schedule to be asked. All the subjects had been thoroughly thrashed out the opinions of the engineers were embodied in a series of resolutions which will be presented to the officials of the company some day this week by a committee consisting of General Chairman Arthur Kirkendall, of the Central system, and the other representatives of the general board of adjustment.

Y. M. C. A. SUNDAY AT CRESCENT AVE CHURCH

W. J. SOUTHAR SPEAKS ON THE ASSOCIATIONS IN CHINESE KINGDOM.

*W. J. Southarn, religious work di*rector of Canada for the Y. M. C. A., spoke at the Crescent Avenue church Sunday morning, in the interest of the local Y. M. C. A. The service was a belated part of the Y. M. C. A. thirty-ninth anniversary. The Crescent Avenue church was unable to lend itself to the celebration last week on account of a prearranged calendar.

Mr. Southarn spoke of the awakening of China, and the growth of Y. M. C. A. work there in the eight years it has been established in the Flowery Kingdom. He was general secretary at Hong Kong for seven years.

The development of the Y. M. C. A. in eight years in China, Mr. Southarn said, was wonderful. In Hong Kong alone three active associations had sprung up. The business men of the country had interested themselves in the work and associations were now self-supporting. All that America did was to pay the expenses of the general secretaries. The speaker told of a high government official who gave up his place to become a general secretary.

Speaking of the general advancement of the country, Mr. Southarn told of the Imperial edicts forbidding any native to hold office if his mother, wife or daughters followed the practice of binding their feet, or if he used opium in any quantity.

William C. Marchant is seriously ill at his home on East Fifth street.

TO REORGANIZE S.P.C.C.

Prominent Women Interested in Movement to Revive Local Association.

MEETING ON FRIDAY

Preliminary Plans To Be Made at Public Gathering In Stirling Building—All Are Invited.

Impelled by the feeling that there is a great need for an active Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in this city, steps will be taken Friday morning to re-organize the society at a meeting to be held in the office of W. A. Coddington, of the firm of Reed & Coddington, Stirling building, Friday morning at 10 o'clock. A few years ago such a society existed in Plainfield and good work was done for a time, but the membership lost interest, and the organization finally disbanded. Since that time William N. Pangborn, of Linden avenue, has been the local agent for the State society and has prosecuted all cases which have been brought to his attention.

Now a number of prominent Plainfield women have interested themselves in the society and its re-organization and prospects are encouraging for a strong society. An urgent invitation is extended to all members of the society and to any who may be interested, to attend the meeting Friday morning. At that time plans will be presented to effect a re-organization and officers will be chosen.

The women who are deeply interested in the matter are Mrs. J. S. Zelie, Miss Wilhelmina Man, Mrs. J. Kirtland Myers, Mrs. Duncan Warren Taylor, Mrs. Knox Taylor, Mrs. George W. Bunnell, Mrs. Francis De Lacy Hyde, Mrs. Marvin D. Rae, Mrs. S. B. Schuyler, Mrs. Albert A. Atterbury, Mrs. Edward A. Stevenson, Mrs. Dorsey Hyde, Mrs. Theodore D. Wilson, Mrs. B. Van D. Hedges, Miss Edith Smalley, Miss Wickersham, Miss May Waring, Miss Munger, Miss Seward, Miss Hartridge, Miss Malda Hyde, Miss Harman and Miss Lapsley.

It is proposed to make the local organization a part of the State society and one will co-operate with the other in preventing all kinds of cruelty practiced on animals. While the society does have tickets on initiative in the re-organization it is expected that men also will become interested, join the society and do all in their power to make it successful.

MISS ANNA O. MARSH.

Death Came Monday From the Effects of Uraemic Poisoning.

Miss Anna O. Marsh, daughter of the late Elston and Eliza Stelle Marsh, died at her home on Madison avenue, Monday. She had been in poor health for the past two years but only gave up and took to her bed a few days ago. Uraemic poisoning is ascribed as the cause of death.

Miss Marsh was born in this city and had resided here all her life. Following the death of her father, she took up instruction in music and with her sister, Miss Minnie Marsh, became one of the most prominent teachers in the city. She was a member of the First Baptist church and was active in the work of all its departments. She attended there with unceasing regularity until the condition of her health prevented. She was also a member of the Monday Afternoon Club.

Beside Miss Minnie Marsh, she is survived by two other sisters, Mrs. S. St. John Whitehead, of the borough, and Mrs. Oliver B. Leonard, of Arlington avenue.

J. E. SKIFFS' PUPILS GIVE A SONG RECITAL.

Pleasant Affair Enjoyed by a Large Audience in Vincent Chapel.

The pupils of J. Edmund Skiff gave a song recital in Vincent chapel, Monday, which attracted a large audience of music-lovers. The selections were excellent and the pupils sang in a way that was pleasing to the audience. Miss Agnes Bailey was the accompanist for the women's chorus, while Mr. Skiff accompanied his pupils in the solo parts. This programme was presented:

Spring Song and Lullaby, Hawley, women's chorus; Bedouin Love Song, Schnecker, Frederick Kreitler; Without Thee, D'Hardelot, Miss Marion Bailey; Chanson Provencial, Dell'Acqua, Mrs. J. Edmund Skiff; The Bonnie Piper's Tune, Loomis, Miss Bertha vanNuis Willis and Mrs. Stephen H. Tugwell; The Ivy Leaf, Millidenberg, Miss Florence Conroy; Were I a Star, Hawley, Mrs. Stephen H. Tugwell; The Horn, Fleigler, Carlos C. Gallup; Red, Red Rose, Hastings, Mrs. Arthur Price; The Hills o'Skye, Harris, Miss Helen Whitney; Serenade to Juanita, Jourdel, Miss Laura E. Genewein; Heaven Hath Set a Tear, Kuehen, Miss Bertha vanNuis Willis; The Chi em sMacy, and Rock-a-Bye, Neidlinger, women's chorus.

The members of the chorus were as follows: Mrs. J. Edmund Skiff, Mrs. Arthur Price, Mrs. Maurice McGrath, Mrs. Stephen H. Tugwell, Mrs. Joseph Dunham, the Misses Willis, Genewein, Crane, Cook, Smalley, Conroy, Sampson, Searle, Huffman, Bird, Taylor, Rathborn, Whitney, Bailey, DeMott, Johnson, Pink and Miller.

ANNUAL INSPECTION OF TRINITY COMMANDERY

SIR KNIGHTS FROM NEWARK, EAST ORANGE AND JERSEY CITY PRESENT.

Trinity Commandery, No. 17, Knights Templar, held its annual inspection in Masonic hall, Monday night, Charles E. Mohn, of Washington, Warren county, being the inspecting officer. As usual the Sir Knights went through their drill in a perfect manner, which called forth hearty applause and words of commendation from the visitors. W. A. Pinto, as captain general, had charge of the drill and every detail was executed with exactness.

E. S. Cortright led a delegation of seventy-one sir knights from Damascus Commandery, of Newark, and Jersey Commandery, of East Orange, the trip being made to this city in a special car. There were also several sir knights from Hugh De Payne Commandery, of Jersey City, the entire company numbering over 150. The visitors also present Past Grand Commanders Jacob Kirkner, of Trinity Commandery; Josiah Davidson, of Washington; James McKane, of Newark, and Warren Dobbs, of Jersey City.

After the inspection supper was served under the direction of Mrs. Henry Johnson, the caterer. The committee in charge of the entertainment of the visiting Sir Knights consisted of B. Frank Cerieli, Lemuel B. Woolston and Henry Woodland.

PROGRAMME FOR THE SILVER JUBILEE

CELEBRATION WILL TAKE PLACE NOVEMBER 27-28 AT CATHEDRAL.

Rt. Rev. Monsignor John H. Fox, vicar general of the Trenton diocese, has announced all the details incident to the monster demonstration in conjunction with the two days' silver jubilee of the Trenton diocese, November 27 and 28.

Rt. Rev. James A. McFaul, the second bishop of Trenton, will pontificate at the ceremonies, which will take place at the cathedral at Trenton at 10:30 o'clock Tuesday, November 27. Rt. Rev. Monsignor John A. O'Grady, of New Brunswick, has been secured to deliver the sermon. More than 200 priests will be present at the mass.

Bishop McDonald, of Brooklyn; Bishop Donahue, of Newark, and Monsignor John A. Stafford, president of Seton Hall College, South Orange, will attend. Members of ecclesiastical orders will also take part in the ceremonies, and the gathering will be most notable. Special music will be rendered by the cathedral choir.

At Taylor Opera House, Trenton, in the evening will occur the lay celebration. The combined choirs of the Catholic churches in the city, consisting of more than sixty voices, will sing.

As no children will be present at the evening exercises a special entertainment will be given by them Wednesday afternoon, November 28, in the opera house. The bishop, priests and sisters of the city will be present.

ANOTHER MEN'S CLUB.

The Men of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church Organize.

The men of the Seventh Day Baptist church met in the parlors of the church, last night, to form a men's club, and in response to the invitation about thirty persons were present. The following officers were elected:

President, Starr A. Burdick; vice-president, Dr. Marcus L. Clawson; secretary, N. O. Moore, Jr.; treasurer, Ira S. West. These officers were appointed as a committee to draft a constitution to be acted upon at a meeting to be held Sunday, December 2, when the organization will be completed. The object of the club is similar to those of other men's clubs formed in the various churches and it promises to be a large and flourishing organization. Dr. O. B. Whitford, Asa F. Randolph and Orra S. Rogers comprised the original committee which called the men of the church together.

The object of the club is to promote sociability and furnish entertainment which will probably be of an educational nature. The four officers and Asa F. Randolph, Ora S. Rogers and Dr. A. B. Whitford were appointed as a committee to draw up a constitution and by-laws. All those present joined as charter members of the club. The next meeting will be held the first Sunday night in December. After the business meeting refreshments were served and a social time enjoyed.

Chauffeur Menaced Lives.

Stamford, Conn., Nov. 17.—After a struggle in which many lives were endangered, Edward F. Finney, of New York, chauffeur for Anson Phelps Stokes, was overpowered here last night by Chief of Police Brennan and Policeman Gosnod and dragged from Mr. Stokes's new twenty thousand dollar Delaunay-Belleville automobile and arrested for intoxication, reckless driving and disorderly conduct. He was locked up. Mr. Stokes declining to come to his assistance.

FRESH AIR HOME ANNUAL

Figures Show a Remarkably Low Average Cost Per Beneficiary.

CHAPMAN ON RIVALRY

No Need to Draw Line of Hostility Between Netherwood Institution and the Kings' Daughters' Camp.

There was a disappointingly small attendance at the annual meeting of the Netherwood Fresh Air Association at Y. M. C. A. Hall Monday. Not much more than a dozen people were present, although a programme for a bountiful had been prepared, even to the printing of a programme slip. Still, there was a robust spirit in the air, and the prospects of another highly successful year, brightened by reports of last summer's success and of a snug balance in hand, were very plain.

Rev. E. M. Rodman, president of the association, was in the chair. Miss Sara Curry, matron of the Home, who brought an interesting assortment of tenement children from the Little Missionary Day Nursery, her winter charity, with her, and George A. Chapman, who has been interested in the Home work for several years, spoke.

Mr. Chapman referred to the idea of rivalry that appeared to have sprung up here and there as between the Home and the King Daughters' Baby Camp. He earnestly deplored any such feeling. There was no need of it, he said. The Baby Camp was an admirable institution, and should be liberally supported by Plainfield, but there was no reason why the Fresh Air Home should be ignored because of it. The charity was not only a beautiful one, but most remarkable. As for the argument that New York should take care of it's own poor and not expect Plainfield to help in sharing the burden, it was true enough as a general proposition, but the Fresh Air Home was the exception that proved the rule.

Of the many of the most remarkable charity he knew of, Mr. Chapman said. Figures show that the average cost of bringing the beneficiaries to the Home, maintaining them and returning them to the city was just sixty cents per person. He thought that Miss Curry and Dr. Johnson *that he knew Miss Curry to be a won*derful manager, but the fact remained that for each sixty cents paid to the charity by a Plainfielder, some one tenement sufferer would be brought to the Home. Where else could such a showing be made for so little money, he asked. Figures showed that the total of $16.70 was received by the association during the year, and that the year was started with a balance of $125 on hand. The expenditures amounted to $1,245, leaving a balance of $46. During the season over 1,600 children and more than 500 mothers were entertained.

Miss Florence Hawkins reported for the Devotional Committee; David Hand for the Buildings and Grounds committee, and Mrs. A. C. Pierson for the House Committee.

Rev. Mr. Rodman was re-elected president. Four vice-presidents were elected, instead of one: J. T. Parker, G. E. Hall, J. W. Gavett and W. D. Murray. Benjamin Hadley was elected secretary and D. M. Runyon treasurer. The committee chairmen were named as follows: House Committee, Mrs. Herbert Henry; Finance, George A. Chapman; Devotional, Miss Hawkins; Buildings and Grounds, J. D. Johnson; Entertainment, Herbert Henry.

The musical programme included selections by M. A. Korff's Vivo trio; songs by Miss Etta Haybert, accompanied by Miss Lillian Force; and songs by the Day Nursery children. The latter bloomed also in a little garden of verse.

Horse Show Guests in New York.

Among the guests at the twenty-second annual breakfast, preceding the opening of the National Horse Show in the city of America, held this week in Madison Square Garden, New York, were William J. Buttfield, of Rockview avenue, and Robert A. Fairbairn, of Westfield. The latter is one of the judges of trotters and roadsters at the Horse Show.

League Basketball.

The league basketball games will begin at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium next Monday night. Rahway will be the opposing five. Both second teams will play between halves. Whatever the fate of the first team may be, the second local team will almost certainly win very decisively. The seconds are swift and growing swifter with each game. One of these days it will pass the first team.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL IST.

VOL. XXXVIII PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1906 NO. 49.

FIGHT IN A BALLROOM

Rivals Shock Fashionable Members of the Middlebrook Country Club.

GOVERNORS TO ACT

Insulting Remark Alleged to Have Been Made to Young Woman by Shainwald Resented by Zeman.

With the boiling over of a secret too big to be confined in the social kettle of the exclusive Middlebrook Country Club, the good people of Somerville are discussing a sensation which club members did their best to cover up. The episode waits on the action of the club's Board of Governors in the cases of R. L. Shainwald and August Zeman.

Shainwald is the son of President Shainwald, of the Standard Paint Company, of No. 100 William street, New York. Mr. Zeman is also engaged in business in New York. Both are leaders in the young social set which enjoys membership in the Middlebrook Country Club.

Shainwald was observed to trip lightly after Miss Elting, a belle of the village, at the Thanksgiving night dance of the club, and, catching up with her, was heard by those nearest them to say, with an apparent attempt at gallantry:

"Miss Honeylips, may I have the honor of the dance?"

August Zomnah apparently overheard the words with which Shainwald had addressed Miss Elting. He took a quick step forward, and landed a blow between the eyes which sent Shainwald to the floor. They fought furiously, scores clearing out of their path until several of the older members of the club rushed in, separated them and forced them, still resisting, into the Governor's room.

A window was heard to raise in the Night. Zeman, reaching to apologize, had opened it and leaped out on the lawn, where he turned about and incited Shainwald to follow him and fight it out. Shainwald jumped through the window on the word.

Zeman made up in activity what he lacked in science. Crimson stains quickly spotted their broad expanse of shirt, and the tails of their evening coats punctuated their swift revolutions. Before a score of men could run through the club-house and reach the lawn, both gallants were painfully bummelled.

It was reported in club circles last night that the Board of Governors intends to take stringent action.

Will Provide for the Poor.

The Salvation Army is preparing for the annual Christmas dinner for the poor, many to whom Christmas is only a reminder of better days. It is the purpose of the army to send a well-filled basket to every needy family in the city on Monday afternoon, December 24, so that father, mother and children may enjoy Christmas dinner at home. Adjutant James Johnson, in charge of the local corps, will be glad to receive donations or checks for this work.

Golden Eagles Elect.

Officers were elected and these candidates introduced at the meeting of Freedom Castle, No. 42, K. G. E., last night. The election resulted as follows: Noble chief, J. O. Randall; noble vice chief, P. T. Bennett; herald, Clarence VanDoren; venerable sage, Peter Vanderhoef; high priest, W. L. Gamble; master of records, A. R. Vail; keeper of the exchequer, W. W. Randolph; clerk of the exchequer, R. V. Kinney.

Engagement Announced.

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Robins, of Norwood avenue, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Helen Robins, to Francis K. Anderson, Jr. Anderson has always been a resident of this city, where upon being graduated from the High School he began newspaper work. He is now city editor of the Elizabeth Evening Times.

Men's Club Entertainment.

Taggart, the "Man from Texas," reader, musician and ventriloquist, was the attraction at the monthly social session of the Congregational Church Men's Club last night. Refreshments followed the entertainment. Four members were elected.

Miss Duckworth Engaged.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Lillian Duckworth, of West Third street, and Adolph Kahler, of Philadelphia. Miss Duckworth is a sister of Mrs. Walter Emmons, of Bank place. No date has been set for the wedding.

Last Sale Tomorrow.

The Royal Daughters' Circle of King's Daughters will have seats on sale for "Pip, Pip, Pouf," at the store of J. W. Gavett, 318 West Front street, tomorrow morning from 9 until 12.

NEW ENGLAND SUPPER DREW A BIG CROWD

FEAST OF GOOD THINGS AT VINCENT CHAPEL LAST NIGHT.

Under the auspices of the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary societies of the First M. E. church, a New England supper and sale of useful articles, candy, ice cream and cake was held in Vincent chapel last night. The attendance of members and friends was large and the patronage liberal.

The supper, which was served from 6:30 to 8:30 o'clock, was the main attraction and during those hours the supper room was crowded with patrons. The menu was an excellent one, comprising all the things that go to make up an appetizing New England repast.

Mrs. N. W. Pike was the general chairman, and among those assisting her in the various committees were Mrs. Nelson Y. Hull, Mrs. William Camp, Mrs. Wilbur Clifton, Mrs. James Love, Mrs. Samuel Bingaman, Miss Minnie Sharp, Mrs. Maurice McGrath and Mrs. Judd Stewart. Those who presided at the various supper tables were Mrs. George M. Whitney, Mrs. George H. Whitney, Mrs. L. M. French, Mrs. J. C. Peck, Mrs. Henry DeMott, Mrs. John McNaughton, Mrs. Matthew Ewart, Mrs. S. S. Alpaugh. The waitresses were the Misses Pryor, DeMott, Frances Rittenhouse, Bertha Tamm, Susie Jackson, Ewart, Hannah Bingaman, Mrs. Joseph Dunham, Mrs. R. W. Davis, Mrs. F. W. French. Dr. F. W. French also assisted. Miss Gertrude Sharp was the cashier.

In the Sunday-school room of the chapel there was a sale. Those who had charge of the candy table were Miss Helen Whitney, Miss Leila Druse and the Misses Pryor. Those at the fancy articles table were Mrs. Nelson A. Miller, Mrs. J. W. Jackson, Mrs. A. C. McCrea, Mrs. L. M. French and Mrs. George Burgess. Mrs. David S. Dunavan and Miss Mary Clayton had charge of the ice cream and cake table. During the evening there was an informal programme of music.

Recital by First Baptist Choir.

A recital of Christmas music will be given by the choir of the First Baptist church on Thursday night, December 20. The programme will include West's cantata, "The Story of Bethlehem."

Mythical Fanwoodites.

Coroner Schlemme, of Jersey City, telephoned to police headquarters yesterday morning that an unidentified man had been hun over and killed in West Hoboken Saturday night by a truck in charge of two men who gave their names as Frank Kurll and John Randall, and their address as Fanwood. They gave the names to a bystander and then drove away. The coroner wanted them located. The police were unable to find trace of any men bearing the names in Fanwood. They were almost certainly fictitious.

Two Still Alarms.

A still alarm was received at fire headquarters at 9 o'clock this morning for a slight blaze at the home of Dr. J. T. Pitts on Park avenue. The latter cloth covering on a section of steam pipes caught fire and had to be pulled away. There was practically no damage. The West End company was sent out at 2 o'clock this afternoon for a grass fire on West Sixth street near Monroe avenue.

Funeral of Franklin Wilson.

The funeral of Franklin Wilson, the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Zacharish Wilson, was held at the parents' home on Harmony street, yesterday afternoon. It was conducted by Rev. C. E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church. Interment was made in the North Plainfield cemetery. Six of the little fellow's playmates acting as pall bearers.

Theatre Meeting.

E. R. Ackerman will preside, and Rev. Dr. W. H. Morgan will speak, at a theatre meeting to be held by the Y. M. C. A. Sunday, December 16. Dr. Morgan recently spoke before the Men's Club of the First M. E. church. The music will be a feature of the meeting. The Crescent Avenue church quartette is to sing.

A. D. and D. Arrested.

Charles Messler, of the city side of the brook, was arrested on Somerset street by Marshal Pope last night, on a drunk and disorderly charge. He was bailed out for appearance tonight.

Don't Experiment.

Don't experiment in buying coffee. Neuman Brothers offer you Mocha and Java plain Java and Maracaibo, all tried and true. They stand supreme in the market.

Fred Valentine has sold his large farm in the southwestern part of the city to H. C. Adams, and he has purchased the Bodine property at Grandview avenue and Verdon street, where he will reside.

ALMOST FREE FROM COMMUNICABLE DISEASE

ONLY TWO HOUSES UNDER QUARANTINE ON DECEMBER 1.

The sanitary condition of the city continues to be unusually free from communicable diseases as shown by the reports presented at the Board of Health meeting yesterday. There was one death during the past month from tuberculosis. The following number of cases were reported:

Scarlet fever, 2; diphtheria, 3; tuberculosis, 3; typhoid fever, 4; chicken pox, 2.

On December 1, there were but two houses under quarantine. Of the four cases of typhoid fever reported, two were traced to sources outside the city. It was impossible to find the source of infection in the other two cases.

At the request of some of the garbage men the time after which they were not allowed to collect garbage in the business portion of the city, was extended from 9 to 11 o'clock in the morning, during the months of December, January, February and March.

The following permits were granted: To collect garbage, Peter Robinson, Fernando Brown, Charles Myers and John Ryan; to sell milk, James B. Guttridge, R. H. Keenan and Harry Holland; to collect offal, Nathan Myer.

These returns were made during the month: Marriages, 25; births, 29; still-births, 1; deaths, 22. The meeting adjourned to Thursday afternoon, December 27, at 4 o'clock.

DR. HUBBARD LOCATES HERE.

Physician of Extensive Experience in General Practice to Remain.

Dr. Harry V. Hubbard has settled in this city as a practicing physician, and is located at 110 East Fifth street, the first house from Park avenue. Dr. Hubbard comes originally from Rochester, Vt. He graduated from the University of Vermont School of Medicine in the class of 1898, and for several years afterwards was one of the leading physicians at Barnard, Vt. A short time ago he came to New York city, where he has just completed a course at the New York Post Graduate School. At present he holds a position in the Eye and Ear Clynic in the latter institution, where he practices on Monday and Friday afternoons of each week. He gives special attention to diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat.

Autoist Explains.

A. H. Chamberlain, of Rahway, whose auto grazed W. E. Lowe's carriage on Park avenue Thanksgiving day, has issued a statement controverting the version told by the coachman. He declares that the auto was going at a speed of nearly ten miles an hour, and that he signalled the driver of his intention to pass him on the left. The latter, he says, pulled across his path without warning. He looked out at the side of the machine, saw only a bent mud guard in the way of damage, noted that the driver was going on as if undisturbed, and concluded that there was no need for him to stop. He did not sneak away, he protests. Mr. Love, he says, blames his coachman for carlessness in disregarding the signal.

Women's Choral Club.

*Steps have been taken for the or*ganization of a "Women's Choral Club" under the direction of F. Edmund Stehr. The club will be formed for the study of part songs and cantatas. The club will meet on Wednesday afternoon of each week at 4 o'clock. It has already about twenty-five members and the membership will be increased to about twice that number. The organization is open for membership to any women having good voices with a fair amount of ability to read music at sight. Rehearsals will begin on Wednesday, January 2, and all applications must be in Mr. Stehr's hands not later than Dec. 22.

Will Speak on Sunday Legislation.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, editor of The Sabbath Recorder, will address a large assemblage of people at Beaver Falls, Pa., today on Sunday legislation. He will return home on Friday after an absence of six weeks in the west and southwest in the interest of the Seventh-Day Baptist denomination.

The Lake Pigment Co. Organized.

The Lake Pigment Company has been organized with registered office in this city, the agent in charge being Milton Knapp. The capital stock is $50,000 and the incorporators are Milton Knapp, Frederick G. Lasher, Plainfield; Henry C. Suydam, of Bound Brook.

Dunellen P. O. Building Sold.

Robert L. Pierce has sold the property at the corner of North avenue and Washington avenue in Dunellen for the Vars estate to Alvah Gray, of that place.

PERKINS THE CENTER OF THE POLITICIANS.

Dryden Was Absent and Discussion Was Over Senate Presidency.

Assemblyman Randolph Perkins, of Union county, the recognized leader of the anti-Dryden forces in the fight for the United States Senatorship, was the center of attraction among the politicians gathered at the State House at Trenton yesterday.

The gathering of political lights and "glimmers" was the smallest, numerically, that has been witnessed since before election, but to the few that lounged about the corridors during the morning and early afternoon hours, Mr. Perkins displayed numerous letters he has received from his constituents in his home county, in which they urged him to continue his fight against the return of Mr. Dryden to Washington. He has received hundreds of such letters, Mr. Perkins said, and they invariably complimented him upon the stand he has taken.

Senator Dryden did not put in an appearance, but his son-in-law and campaign manager, Colonel Kuser, spent some time at the capitol.

Frequent remarks were made in reference to Mr. Dryden's absence, as his friends were confident that even in view of the fact that congress convenes Monday, he could have made arrangements to be at the State House at least for a short time.

The anti-Drydenites displayed signs of being unusually optimistic and predicted freely the election of a Democrat. That is usual, the prevailing sentiment among Dryden's opponents was that either Governor Stokes or State Treasurer F. O. Briggs would be the man chosen.

Interest was added to the gossip by the discussion of the candidacy of Senator Bloomfield Minch of Cumberland for the presidency of the Senate, an honor that was confidently expected to go to Senator Thomas Hillery, of Morris county. Both Mr. Minch and Mr. Hillery were "among those present" and each avowed the intention of making a fight for the presidency.

It is the popular belief that Senator Minch's candidacy has the support of Governor Stokes. He declares that it is a matter that must be settled among the members of that body, as he will have nothing to do with.

H. C. RANDOLPH'S FUNERAL.

Service Conducted by Dr. Zelie Assisted by Dr. Schenck.

The funeral of Henry Clay Randolph, who died Saturday morning after a long illness, was held at the home of his daughter, Mrs. C. Frank *French, at Washington avenue yes*terday afternoon. It was conducted by Dr. J. S. Zelie, of the Crescent Avenue church, assisted by Dr. Cornelius Schenck, of Trinity Reformed church, and was attended by a large gathering of relatives and friends. The floral tributes were numerous.

Interment was made in Hillside cemetery, the pall bearers being L. W. Randolph, Fred Valentine, Lemuel B. Hart, Frank Jones, Fred Melick and N. W. French.

Out One Barn In Another.

Two of Miller Hill's horses broke out of his barn at 1128 Prospect avenue and he asked the police to help him find them yesterday morning. A short time after he left headquarters, Joseph Vanderhoet came in to report that two big horses had broken into his barn on Lake street Monday night, and ramaged around the place until it looked as if a cyclone had struck it. They were the Hill horses. Mr. Hill offered a reward for their return, so some agreement as to the salving of Mr. Vanderhoef's feelings will probably be arranged.

Christmas Sale.

Under the auspices of the Women's Alliance of All Souls church, a Christmas sale will be held at the church on Park avenue tomorrow afternoon and Friday afternoon and evening. Supper will be served Friday night from 6:30 to 8:30 o'clock. No admission fee will be charged, but there will be lots of things on sale suitable for Christmas gifts.

Elks Social Tonight.

Plainfield Lodge, No. 885, B. P. O. E., will hold its old-fashioned social tonight. An interesting programme has been prepared and after its rendition supper will be served. The affair had been planned for last month but was postponed because of Dr. Jenkins' death.

Christmas Sale.

The Girls' Mission Club of the Congregational church, on West Seventh street, will hold a Christmas sale in the church Friday afternoon and evening from 4 to 10 o'clock. Ice cream, cake, candy and fancy articles will be sold. Music will be a feature.

Second Musicale.

The Criterion Hand Bell Ringers and Miss Florence Allwood, reader, will give an entertainment in Grace M. E. church Thursday evening, December 13. This is the second in the series of musicales being given by the members of the church.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LEAGUE GETS DOWN TO WORK

ORGANIZERS ARE GETTING THE ASSOCIATION INTO SHAPE RAPIDLY.

Temporary organization and several committees emerged from the third meeting of the Sunday-school Athletic League organizers at the Y. M. C. A. *last night. Another meet*ing, at which the committees will report, will be held next Monday.

These churches were represented, as follows: Warren chapel, J. W. Gavett; Trinity church, F. E. Smith, Edgar Sheppard; First Presbyterian church, Charles Murphy, Mr. Hill; Park Avenue Baptist church, Harry Thompson, Mr. Clark; First Baptist church, Harold Serrell, James E. Church; First M. E. church, H. M. Barrows; Hope chapel, L. R. Howard, Supt. Munger; Congregational church, Mr. McClymont and Mr. Rice.

The temporary organization was effected with Mr. Church as president, Mr. Smith vice president and J. S. Thompson secretary. Organization will be completed next Monday.

HOLD-UP FIZZLED.

George Becker's Charge Against Young Men Laughed Out of Court.

Haldar Peterson and Axel Peterson, employees at the Country Club, asked George Becker, a Polish South Plainfield farmer, for a ride to town on lower Park avenue Monday night. Becker refused. Then he followed the young men to town and had them arrested. He said he wasn't sure, but he had a notion they might be high*waymen.*

Judge Runyon pooh-poohed the nervous Becker in court yesterday morning, and dismissed the case. Becker had more trouble of a legal nature than any seven ordinary people, was shoved out of headquarters.

OFFERS $50 REWARD.

No Trace of the Slonim Robber Has Been Discovered.

Hope of the capture of the man who robbed and shot Leo Slonim, the jeweler, Monday night diminished yesterday as the police search continued. Not the faintest trace of the crook was picked up. A rumor that the thief had escaped in an auto was unfounded. Chief Kiely said today that there was no truth in the report that the robbery was a "plant."

Mr. Slonim was still in bed, this morning, recovering from a feverish night. He announced through his wife that he would pay $50 reward for the capture of the thief.

C. E. Services in the West End.

The Plainfield Christian Endeavor Union has leased the Home Real Estate office on Hunter avenue, in the West End of the city, and it is being fitted up for religious services to be held there this winter. The first meeting will be held tomorrow *night at 8 o'clock. This is the com*mencement of a campaign of religious work to be conducted in that part of the city by the Christian Endeavorers.

Lively Runaway on Front Street.

One of B. Scheuer & Co.'s spirited horses, attached to a grocery wagon, ran away late yesterday afternoon, on East Front street, and just before reaching Park avenue, collided with Mrs. Ohl's pony cart, almost upsetting it. Several bystanders caught the horse.

Additions to the Public Library.

Following the routine business at the meeting of the board of directors of the Public Library, last night, the library committee reported the purchase of sixty-four volumes of the London Graphic and also the Encyclopaedia Americana.

Supper for G. A. R.

In the Women's Christian Temperance rooms on Madison avenue, tomorrow night, the Women's Relief Corps will give supper to and for the benefit of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R.

Vivo Entertainment.

The Vivo Instrumental Trio will give musical and literary entertainment at Y. M. C. A. hall Saturday night. Mrs. F. Kirberg, dramatic reader, will appear.

W. C. T. U. Meeting.

The regular business meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held in the rooms on Madison avenue tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

Sesame Club Meeting.

The Sesame Club will meet tomorrow morning at the residence of Mrs. Stephen Voorhees, 602 Central avenue.

Morris C. VanAradale, the East Front street shoe dealer, is detained at his home with a severe cold.

The young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford A. Braider, of East Front street, is seriously ill with erysipelas.

PLAINFIELD BOWLERS DEFEAT RARITAN TEAM

TAKE FIVE OF THE SIX GAMES ROLLED ON LOCAL ALLEYS.

The Plainfield Bowling Academy team and The Raritan Five met on McLaughlin's alleys last night in two matches of three games each. The Plainfielders were in splendid fettle and walked away with 5 of the six games, taking three of them with comfortable leads. The last of the six was one of the hottest games ever rolled on the alleys and went to the local team by one pin, the scores being 930 to 929.

Sam Felver made the highest score on the Plainfield side, handing in a 224 in the third game, although he had hit the timber for 209 just before it. The best on the Raritan side and also for the evening was capped by J. Schaub, a former Plainfielder, who piled up 255 the first crack out of the box. His average for the six games was 196, a set of figures envied by the best pin-hitters. Felver's average was 191, the best for Plainfield, and he was closely followed by Frank Willett with 190. The scores:

FIRST MATCH.
Radin	178	172	177

HAWAII THE TOPIC OF MISSIONARY WORKERS.

Miss Clyde Burnett Reads Paper Before First Baptist Foreign Missionary Society.

A paper of unusual interest was presented yesterday afternoon at the meeting in the lecture room of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the First Baptist church on the subject "The Hawaiian Islands: Missionary Influence: Present Problems," by Miss Clyde Burnett. The change from idolatrous barbarians to church-going and God-fearing people was vividly described by Miss Burnett. She told of a native from the Sandwich Islands who in visiting this country was greatly pained at the public games and non-observance of the Sabbath in many cities.

The labor question was given as one of the serious problems, Chinese labor interfering with that of the natives.

At the close of the meeting, curios from the islands were shown by Miss Burnett, consisting of flags, cards, native fabric, manufactured *articles and many beautiful photo*graphs.

Current events of interest were given by Mrs. F. E. Kinsman.

Reference was made to the recent death of a constituent member, Miss Anna O. Marsh, and resolutions of appreciation and sympathy were adopted.

Principal Travell Will Speak.

Principal I. W. Travell, of the Plainfield High School, will be one of the speakers at a meeting of the New Jersey High School Teachers' Association to be held at the Public Library, Newark, Saturday morning, when subjects of vital interest will be discussed. The association will hold its annual reception and dinner at the Continental Hotel, Newark, Friday night. Mr. Travell is chairman of a sub-committee known as the syllabus committee.

Gave a Goose Supper.

Charles Meyer, an employee of the firm of J. A. Smith & Bro., of West Front street, entertained his fellow-clerks at a goose supper, last night. Supper was served at 8 o'clock and the clerks certainly had a feast. The evening was spent in playing cards and dominoes and a most enjoyable time was had.

A Christian Endeavor Social.

The Christian Endeavor Society of Trinity church held a social last night, following the regular business meeting. Games were played and the Misses Berg contributed piano selections. The affair was in charge of the social committee from the society.

WIDOWS' 4 BABES BORN

Locked in Their Cabin When Mother Went to Work, All of Them Perish.

COTTAGE A FURNACE

Identification of Little Ones After the Fire Impossible —Mothers Collapse.

As they turned the lock of the door in a little cottage which they called home on the outskirts of Westfield, Mrs. W. F. Wezel and Mrs. Oscar Felter started for town yesterday with light hearts. They said it was blessing enough that their four children were quartered snugly in the humble home, where a wood fire crackled merrily against the cold into which the mothers set forth to their work.

Each was left a widow last summer and each had two children. Before the deaths of their husbands the women were friends of long standing. They shared the sorrows of their bereavement and decided to face the future together. The prob*lem of a home* was solved when they took possession of the cottage. It was only sixteen by twenty feet in size, but they had patched it up for the winter and made it cozy within.

Townspeople of Westfield who knew of the brave struggle the two widows were making, gave them employment. While they were away at work the children kept house. Mrs. Felter's daughter, Louise, aged five, was the oldest of the four. Next came little Charles Felter, three; Samuel Wezel three, and baby Susie, four months old.

Each day when possible, either Mrs. Wezel or Mrs. Felter hurried home at noon to see how the children were getting along. It chanced yesterday that both the widows were working near enough to the cabin home to visit it during the hour's rest. All was well save that the fire had died down in the stove and the place was cold. The mothers hustled about to see that the children did not suffer during the afternoon, and after filling the stove a little store of wood was placed on the hearth. Departing, they locked the door as was their custom.

It was just getting dusk last night when the nearest neighbors saw flames leaping above the roof of the cabin. Those first to arrive pressed forward until they were nearly suffocated by the heat and smoke, but the flames precluded all human possibility of succoring the children within the structure.

Word had been sent to the Westfield firemen, who made all haste to the scene. While the spectators were viewing helplessly the destruction of the shanty two figures were seen, staggering as if their strength was spent, toward the illumination. The crowd fell back as Mrs. Wezel and Mrs. Felter approached. They had just left the homes where they had been employed for the day, and read the meaning of the light on the outskirts of the town. Their strength had been exhausted in their desperate haste reach the shanty and save their children. They collapsed after reaching the scene, and were well-nigh crazed with grief.

The firemen put out the flames, but not until three of the children had been so burned that identification was impossible. Baby Susie was also dead, but the crib had protected the body somewhat.

Foresters Elect.

Court Watchung, No. 3871, I. O. F., elected the following officers last night: Chief ranger, Dr. W. K. Browning; vice chief ranger, Charles Leighs; orator, Arthur Thorne; corresponding secretary, George Volk; financial secretary, J. D. Macnab. During the election and afterward, the members held an informal smoker. The installation will take place on December 18 and it will probably be accompanied by a social.

John Baker Here.

John Baker, the great rifle shot with Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show, was in Plainfield today visiting William H. Conway, the owner and trainer of the trick mules located at the Ohl Farm. Mr. Conway expects a visit in two weeks from Col. Cody, "Buffalo Bill."

Bowling Tourney Entries Close.

Entries for the two-man team bowling tourney to be held at McLaughlin's academy, closed last night. Fifteen teams are entered and thirty men include nearly all of the city's crack bowlers. They will compete for valuable prizes.

No Pension for R. R. Men.

Vice President W. G. Besler, of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, denies emphatically that his company is about to inaugurate a pension system for its old employes.

PLAINFIELD LIBRARY NOTES

Recent Fiction Added to the Public Library.

Andrews, Mary Raymond Shipman.—Rob and the guides.

"A book of ten Canadian bunting stories with Bob, a small Boy, for the hero. In each he gives in boyish fashion some camping adventure."

"Can be read aloud and out of doors, two severe tests for a book."

Bennett, Mrs. M. E. S.—Judith's garden.

Burnett, Frances Hodgson.—Dawn of a tomorrow.

"In a simple old-fashioned miracle-play, set forth in modern London with the sure, swift touch of a practised story-teller."

Carey, R. N.—Herb of grace.

Castle, Agnes and Egerton.—If youth but knew.

"The time and rule of Jerome Bonaparte furnished the occasion and material of this romance. The period is well chosen by the authors as just anterior to the fall of Jerome, and the critical part of the narrative passes in Cassel at the King's court. The atmosphere clothes this story as a garment."

Crawford, Francis Marion.—Fair Margaret.

"If there were nothing else in this book than the portrait of the big-hearted, Junonesque, voluble French woman . . . it would still be one of the books that Mr. Crawford might justly be very proud of."

Dahn, Felix.—Fecilitas.

Fogazzaro, Antonio.—The saint.

"The best read, the most discussed book in Italy in the last two months. The work of the most eminent living Italian novelist."

Glasgow, Ellen A. G.—Wheel of life.

"There are broader contrasts of character than in 'The house of mirth,' though not quite the same sureness of touch, the same sense of intimacy with the most illusive aspects of a well-defined though loosely-ordered social group."

Howells, William Dean.—Coast of Bohemia.

Lane, John Luther.—Way of the gods.

"Mr. Long has succeeded in conveying in this romantic yet thoroughly modern story a fine impression of the marvelous persistence of hereditary ideas of honor and sacrifice among the Japanese."

MacCutcheon, George Barr.—Graustark.

Nicholson, Meredith.—House of a thousand candles.

"A story bristling with adventure."

"The story is told with spirit and the people in it are alive—in one case, even though dead."

Scott, Hugh S. (Henry Seton Merriman.) With edged tools.

Smith, F. Hopkinson.—Tides of Barnegat.

"Strikes a deeper note and is altogether of more serious quality than most of his productions."

Stimson, Frederic Jesup.—In cure of her coal.

"Not only the finest thing he has done, but a noteworthy addition to our literature."

Sudermann, Hermann.—The undying past.

"Sudermann sees deeply; he penetrates to the vital spot. There is no surface work in his novels. He lays bare the anatomy of character. He is an unflinching realist, but his realism is of the larger things of life, not of its mere circumstance. Nor is the 'Undying past' without its message—that nemesis is relentless, that sin carries down into its maelstrom innocent as well as guilty, that the only safe repentance is to repent before your wrong is done. . . . It is a powerful drama of humanity."

Wister, Owen.—Lady Baltimore.

"The story is one of love, prettily conceived and executed, but it is perhaps slow of development."

"Like Mr. Wister's other fiction, this story is defective on the side of construction, but the defect is atoned for by the author's powers of characterization and narrative charm."

Annotated list of books in the circulating department of the Public Library on elementary carpentry, and books which tell "how to make things."

Amateur work, by "Y." Illustrated.

Contains directions for making book shelves, cupboards, cabinets, how to bevel boards, make a canoe and describes the common tools needed for amateur work.

List of Books for the Beginner on the Study of Shakespeare.

The following was made an annotated for the Plainfield Public Library by the President of the New York Shakespeare Society:

Boas, Mrs. Frederick.—In Shakespeare's England.

"For juvenile reading there is nothing printed to compare with" this work.

Brandes, George.—William Shakespeare, a critical study.

"No English commentator has so far produced anything nearly as satisfactory as this by the Danish scholar. . . . The British sense of proprietorship in Shakespeare leads to a sort of not arrogant, nor still less, dishonest, but inability to report all the un-English features of the plays. But whatever reason, Mr. Brandes' work is the most catholic and comprehensive so far."

Elton, Charles Isaac. — William Shakespeare, his family and friends.

"For Genealogy of Shakespeare, if one cares to go into the minutest particulars, this is one of the latest authorities."

Goadby, Edwin. — England of Shakespeare.

"For a complete survey of the Elizabethan civilization, its domestic habits, its food and drink, its costumes, social amenities, etc., this is incomparably the best . . . it gives a mass of information that is collected, certainly condensed, nowhere else."

Holmes, Nathaniel. — Authorship of Shakespeare. 2v.

"If it is desired to get the facts upon which the so-called Baconian Theory, which is now being candidly examined, is based there are more than forty works to choose from. On the Theory itself Judge Holmes' work is the heaviest and most exhaustive; there is no objection of any other side in that work."

Morgan, Dr. Appleton. — The Shakespearean myth; or, Shakespeare and circumstantial evidence.

"The only work (in the Baconian Theory) which is so bulky, that is which gives both sides alternately."

Rolfe, William J.—Life of William Shakespeare.

"All lives of Shakespearse are more or less conjectural, but the New York Shakespeare Society recommends Dr. Rolfe's as eclectic of these conjectures and as possessing the one great merit of deciding to lose himself in theories about the Sonnets, which can answer no purpose whatever."

Seccombe, Thomas, and Allen, J. W.—Age of Shakespeare. 2v.

"The latest and best on dramatic literature at the time Shakespeare began his work."

Stopes, Mrs. Charlotte Carmichael. —Shakespeare's family: being a record of the ancestors and descendants of William Shakespeare, with some account of the Ardens.

"For Genealogy of Shakespeare Mrs. Stopes' work supersedes all others."

All the above are in the Public Library.

Recent Gifts to the Public Library.

Among a goodly number of gifts made to the Public Library in the last few months we mention the following:

The sum of $100 given by Col. M. W. Tyler for the purchase of books.

Sixty-five bound volumes and a number of unbound serials given by the Misses Randolph, of 520 Central avenue. These comprise books in various departments of literature, among others many much needed duplicates of popular fictin, the "Minutes of the Council of Safety of New Jersey in 1777," a valuable contribution to the history of the State, 4 volumes of Elbert Hubbard's illustrated edition of his "Little Journeys," etc.

Bishop Lang's two books on the "Parables of Jesus" and the "Parables of Jesus" were given by a friend of the Library.

Mrs. F. H. Ball, of North Plainfield, presented 19 miscellaneous volumes, mostly duplicates of popular fiction.

Mrs. G. D. Patten, of East Seventh street, about 50 bound volumes, many of which are finely bound volumes of the Atlantic and Harper's magazine, which have been placed in the circulating departments.

Hugh Hastings has given volumes 5 and 6 of the important serials, "Ecclesiastical records," being published by the State of New York.

From the Estate of Stephen Cushoone has been received 5 volumes of "The Mayflower descendant," a book of genealogy.

Mabie, Hamilton Wright, of 823 First place, is presenting from week to week "The Musical Courier," a periodical of much interest to music lovers. George Greenleaf is presenting a copy of "Horseless Age" and also of "Automobile."

From Miss M. L. Hotchkiss, a number of unbound magazines.

From J. E. Morse, "The Engineering Record," from January-June, 1906.

From W. E. Hoyt, Shakespeare's works, with Darley's illustrations, in unbound parts.

From Andrew J. Gavett, 13 volumes of "Engineering News."

From Mrs. P. F. Phillips, of Madison avenue, about a dozen miscellaneous volumes.

Walter Gaston, formerly of Plainfield, but now residing in New York, presented the Library with a copy of the New York Herald, April 15, 1865, which gives an account of the Assassination of President Lincoln, and also the news of the surrender of General Lee's army. These papers were mounted between glass and hang in the Reading Room.

TRACY AND GLENNEY WIN HOLIDAY TOURNEY.

Despite the cold weather the Plainfield Country Club course was well filled with players all day yesterday and many took part in the events scheduled for the closing of the outdoor season. The clubhouse is now closed, but the lockers will be accessible for some time to come for the players who desire to continue the game.

One of the chief events of the day was a seven country tournament, nine holes. This was won by the veteran members of the club, J. Evarts Tracy and W. L. C. Glenney, with a net score of 37. These scores were returned:

J. Evarts Tracy and W. L. C. Glenney, 59, 22—37; G. F. Earl and C. C. Burke, Sr., 59, 18—41; C. C. Burke, Jr., and C. W. King, 62, 18—44; E. B. Shoemaker and H. D. Hibbard, 49, 3—46; Morris J. Dumont and W. Lester Glenney, 48, 0—48; Stuart H. Patterson, 57, 9—48; Frank C. Talmadge and J. Whitney Baker, 50, 0—50; C. B. Morgan and J. A. Lane, 53, 2—51; Frank O. Reinhart and W. P. Glenney, 54, 0—54.

The November handicap cup was won by C. B. Morgan, his score of 81 being the best average one for the month. In the three competitions he's returned an 81 each time. Morris J. Dumont won the inconsolables' cup by defeating E. B. Shoemaker, 4 up in the final play. The final for the consolation cup between Arthur Murphy and Howard Beebe will be played later.

Another event of interest for the day was play for the invitation cup. S. A. Cruikshank and L. A. Chase were tie in the competition with a net score of 92. These scores were returned:

S. A. Cruikshank, 110, 18—92; L. A. Chase, 101, 9—92; Hugh P. Fox, 113, 18—95; Stuart H. Patterson, 113, 9—104; Thomas M. Day, 136, 27—109.

Miss Martha Robert, of Martine avenue, is entertaining Miss Jenkins, of New York, and tonight she will entertain a company of friends in her honor.

G. H. Bellis, of Elmwood place, who has been very ill, is slightly improved. Arrangements are being made to get him to the Soldiers' Home at Kearny.

DOOLEY'S DISSERTATIONS

The following extracts are from "Dissertations by Mr. Dooley," the new book by Finley Peter Dunne, published by Harper & Brothers, New York:

"Th' man that names th' Pullman cars an' th' pa-aper collars iv this country is our greatest pote, whoever he is."

"I have a theory that all threw eloquence comes fr'm th' tails iv th' coat, an' if ye made an orator change into a short coat he wud become deef an' dumb."

"Most iv th' ol' married men I know threat their wives like a rockin'-chair, a great comfort when they're tired, but not to be in th' way at other times."

"Was th' wurroul iver anny more simple thin it is today? I doubt it. I bet ye there was a good dale iv talk about Adam an' Eve dressin' ostentatiously an' havin' th' King iv Bhum's ancesthor to supper with them."

"'Annyhow, what is heeroism? It's a man stops a runaway team that is dhraggin' an empty milk-wagon into a ditch he's not a hero. He's a fool. Th' man is highly dhrawn, anyhow. A hero is often a suecissful fool, an' a fool is an unsuccissful hero."

"Th' doothors bothers us too much about what we put into that mighty tough ol' man-iv-all-wurruk, th' human stomach. Hivin sint mos' iv us our digistions, but, th' doothors won't let thim wurruk. Th' othrongest race iv rough-an'-tumble Americans that iver robbed a neighbor was raised on pie."

"'Well, he's a good man, an' I'm with him,' said Mr. Hennessy. 'Don't ye think he' right whin he wants to put a limit on how much money a man can have?'

"'I do,' said Mr. Dooley, 'but I'd rither put a limit on how little he can have.'"

"'Don't ye believe it,' said Mr. Dooley. 'Nobody is too smart to be bunkoed. Th' on'y kind iv people that can be too honest are smart people. Ye can be too honest to be bunkoed, but niver too smart. It's the people that ar're thryin' to get something fr'm nawthin' that end in gettin' nawthin' fr'm nawthin'."

"'It's sthrange about th' vice-prisidincy,' said Mr. Dooley. 'Th's prisidincy is th' highest office in th' gift iv th' people. Th' vice-prisidincy is th' nex' highest an' th' lowest. It isn't a crime exactly. Ye can't be sint to jail f'r it, but it's a kind iv a disgrace.'"

"'I have r-read th' report, an' now, whin I'm asked to pass th' corned beef, I pass. Oh, dear, th' things I've consumed in days past. What is lard? Lard is anything that isn't good enough f'r an axle. What is potted ham? It is made in akel parts iv plasther iv Paris, sawdust, rope, an' an insignificant bit iv ham. What kindom does caned chicken belong? It is a mineral. How is soup—Get me th' fan, Hinnissy.'"

"Some day whin I am down-town I am goin' to dhrop in on me frind th' prisidint iv the Amalgamated Soap an' ask him to publish a few hints to th' way-farer. I wud like to know how a gintleman can take off his clothes while settin' on thim. It wud help a good deal to know what to do with th' clothes whin ye have squirmed out iv thim. Ar-re they to be rolled up in a ball an' placed undher th' head or dhropped into th' aisle? Again, in th' mornin' how to get into th' clothes without throwin' th' hinges off th' thrack? I will tell ye confidintially, Hinnissy, that not bein' a contortionist th' on'y think I took off was me hat."

"I guess, Hinnissy, whin ye come to think iv it they ain't anny such things as a cross country tournament, nine holes. This was won by the veteran members of the club, J. Evarts Tracy and W. L. C. Glenney, with a net score of 37. These scores were returned:

J. Evarts Tracy and W. L. C. Glenney, 59, 22—37; G. F. Earl and C. C. Burke, Sr., 59, 18—41; C. C. Burke, Jr., and C. W. King, 62, 18—44; E. B. Shoemaker and H. D. Hibbard, 49, 3—46; Morris J. Dumont and W. Lester Glenney, 48, 0—48; Stuart H. Patterson, 57, 9—48; Frank C. Talmadge and J. Whitney Baker, 50, 0—50; C. B. Morgan and J. A. Lane, 53, 2—51; Frank O. Reinhart and W. P. Glenney, 54, 0—54.

GOSPEL WORK AMONG NEW JERSEY FOREIGNERS

DR. McLANAHAN TELLS TO CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH ASSOCIATION.

Uplift work among the immigrants in this State was the theme of an interesting address by Dr. Samuel McLanahan, chairman of the Synodical Committee on Home Missions for New Jersey, before the Young People's Association at the Crescent Avenue church Friday night. Dr. McLanahan is an authority of the subject he chose, and spoke as one who knew the field and its needs. He is the author of "Our People's of Foreign Speech."

Most of the imigrants in New Jersey, Dr. McLanahan goiated out, were from Central Europe—Italians, Poles and the like—among whom the need of the Gospel was keenest. Churches were being established for them, but there was a very wide field for more work.

Suggesting methods of approaching and handling the problem, Dr. McLanahan said that classes for the study of English might be started at any Sunday-school in places where there is a foreign population. Religious literature in their own language might be sent, to the foreigners, by which they are prepared for teaching in English. . .

Dr. McLanahan laid emphasis on this character of the work, and the requisites for a successful prosecution of it. Complete sympathy with the foreigner must be in the hearts of the worker before any advance could be made.

LARGE GATHERING AT FUNERAL OF J. K. MYERS.

Many New York Business Men and Associates Among the Mourners.

With a gathering of relatives and friends in attendance that overflowed his late home on East Seventh street, the funeral of Jared Kirtland Myers was held Wednesday afternoon. The attendants included many business men from New York and a host of Mr. Myers' associates in the American Bank Note Company, of which he was vice president.

The service was conducted by Rev. Dr. J. S. Zelie, of the Crescent Avenue church, assisted by Dr. John C. Hiles, of New York, who was Mr. Myers' first pastor in this city. Interspersing their remarks, selections were sung by the Lotus Glee Club. The floral tributes were among the handsomest ever seen at a local funeral and were numbered by scores. They were many large set pieces from the officers and employes of the bank note company and other firms in New York.

Interment was made in Hillside cemetery, the pall bearers being Charles W. Nicholson, James P. Gibson, Charles J. Fisk, George Wharton Edwards, Louis Kepler Hyde, T. H. Freeland, Frederick A. C. Perrine and Charles F. Abbott.

The friends who came from New York to attend the funeral were brought out in a special car attached to the 1:26 train.

POSTPONES SENTENCE ON ILLARIO WOMAN

Judge Garretson Gives Her Counsel Until December 26 to Fight for New Trial.

Justice Garretson deferred sentence today at Somerville on Florina Illario, who was convicted of manslaughter for shooting Alex Pi Paolo on June 22, until December 26, in order to give her counsel, Clark & Case, time to argue their rule for a new trial.

The fact that the constables who had the members of the jury in charge during the course of the trial took them to the scene of the crime without an order from the court is believed to form a strong point in favor of a second trial.

A petition, largely signed by Somerville business men, asks that the prisoner be not sent to the State prison. Many think that a short term in the county jail will serve the ends of justice owing to the bad character of the deceased.

A Gift of Solomon's.

In the ancient cathedral of Genoa a vase of immense value has been preserved for 600 years. It is cut from a single emerald. Its principal diameter is twelve and one-half inches and its height five and three-fourths inches. It is kept under several locks, the keys of which are in different hands, and it is rarely exhibited in public, then only by an order of the senate. When exhibited it is suspended round the neck of a priest by a cord, and no one is allowed to touch it but him. It is claimed that this vase is one of the gifts which were made to Solomon by the Queen of Sheba.

Exhibition Iron, Brass and Copper.

Effingham Amory Pinto, of 721 West Eighth street, announces an exhibition sale of unique brass, iron and copper work, valour, etc., December 14, 15, inclusive, from 10 a. m. to 6 p. m., and in the evening on December 11, 13 and 15.

Miss Zilla Conover, of High Bridge, has returned home after a visit with relatives in this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Orville Adriance and son, of this city, spent Thanksgiving with relatives at High Bridge.

DIRTY DISHWATER FOR PERSISTENT COLLECTOR

SELIM MILLER, PEDDLER TELLS OF HIS TRIBULATIONS IN CITY COURT.

Some of the difficulties of collecting money on the installment plan were disclosed in the city court Saturday, when Selim Miller, a peddler, appeared against Mrs. Ethabeth Apgar, to press a charge of disorderly conduct made two weeks ago.

Miller told the court that when he went to the back door of the Apgar houses Rock avenue, on November 19, to collect $1.80 owing him for napkins and a tablecloth, Mrs. Apgar refused to pay and emphasized her refusal by throwing a pail of dishwater over him. Selim said the dishwater not only spoiled his clothes but ruined two beautiful white petticoats in his pack.

Mrs. Apgar acknowledged throwing a cup of dishwater. She said she was under agreement to pay the peddler twenty-five cents a week, but that she was very short the week of the 19th and asked for an extension. The peddler persisted in knocking at the door, she said, and she threw the dish water to discourage him.

Judge Runyon told the peddler that it looked as if he was trying to make a collection agency of the court, but as the disturbance of the peace of both principals would be conserved by it he would dismiss the charge if Mrs. Apgar agreed to pay the $1.80. She promised to pay on Monday.

MISS JEAN GRISCOM INTRODUCED TO SOCIETY.

At Charming Reception and Tea Given by Her Mother, Mrs. William Griscom.

Mrs. William Goriscom, of Sycamore avenue, gave a charming reception and tea, Friday afternoon from 4 to 6, for her daughter, Miss Jean Griscom, introducing her to society. The affair was attended by 150 well-known society people from North Plainfield, Plainfield and New York. The debutante received a great many beautiful flowers.

Mrs. Griscom and her daughter were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Charles A. Reed, Mrs. Dorsey W. Hyde, Mrs. Augustus Van Deventer, Mrs. A. N. Selzer and Mrs. James Meredith. Assisting in the dining room were Miss Eva Browne, Miss Malda Hyde, Miss Jeane Douglass, Miss Edith Griscom, Miss Nancy Van-Deventer and Miss Ray Hookey.

The dining room was beautifull decorated with flowers, palms and smilax. In the dining room the table was resplendent with pinks and smilax. Following the reception a buffet supper was served to eighteen guests, and the evening was spent in playing bridge whist.

SENATOR ACKERMAN GIVES MUSIC BOX TO HOME.

Bountiful Turkey Dinner Served to Twenty-six Children.

One of the happy incidents at the Thanksgiving Day celebration at the Children's Home, Thursday, in addition to the bountiful dinner served to the children, was the presentation of a costly music box by Senator Ernest R. Ackerman. The gift proved a thing of delight and enjoyment to the little folks. It was immediately set in motion throughout the day and finished excellent music which pleased both young and old. Senator Ackerman was cordially thanked for the acceptable gift.

There were twenty-six children at the dinner, including several who had left the Home since according to the custom, had returned for the festivities. The dinner was a turkey one, and was accompanied with all the good things that accompany it. The occasion was indeed a happy one for all and long to be remembered.

Americans Amusing to Londoners.

We are to understand that the Rockefellers and others come here with the express purpose of dazzling us. Many think that a short term in the county jail will serve the ends of justice owing to the bad character of the deceased.

A Gift of Solomon's.

In the ancient cathedral of Genoa a vase of immense value has been preserved for 600 years. It is cut from a single emerald. Its principal diameter is twelve and one-half inches and its height five and three-fourths inches. It is kept under several locks, the keys of which are in different hands, and it is rarely exhibited in public, then only by an order of the senate. When exhibited it is suspended round the neck of a priest by a cord, and no one is allowed to touch it but him. It is claimed that this vase is one of the gifts which were made to Solomon by the Queen of Sheba.

H. G. RANDOLPH IS DEAD

Retired Farmer, Well-Known in Vicinity, Passes Away at Daughter's Home.

WAS IN HIS 75th YEAR

Many Years Ago He was the Only Milk Dealer in Plainfield—Funeral Held Tuesday Afternoon.

Henry Clay Randolph, a life-long resident if this vicinity and one of the best known of the older men in the city, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. C. Frank French, of Washington avenue, Saturday morning. He had been suffering more or less for the past three or four years with heart trouble and Bright's disease but had been confined to his room only during the last two weeks. In a way his death was unexpected, as he had been quite strong and no especially alarming symptoms were noticed until Friday night. At 3 o'clock the nurse realized that the end was not far off and summoned the family, the members reaching his bedside just before he breathed his last.

Mr. Randolph was born on Rahway road, January 8, 1832, on what was then and is still known as the Randolph farm. It came into the possession of his father, John Randolph, when he was married in 1831 and eventually became the property of the son. Henry Clay Randolph remained on it and superintended its cultivation until eight years ago, when he sold it to Mrs. S. A. Sabacher, the present occupant.

Though the farm is two miles out of the city and located in Fanwood township, Mr. Randolph was always looked upon as a Plainfielder as nearly all his business was transacted here. His place became noted for its luscious strawberries and many local business men can fondly recall for him when they were boys picking the fruit. He was also the first nearby farmer to deliver milk in the city and for many years was regarded as the leading dealer. Just before selling the property all the soil under cultivation was devoted to the raising of garden truck and his wagons delivered consignments to the local stores every morning during the season. On leaving the farm, he made his home with Mrs. French and resided there until the end of death. He had a severe illness last spring but rallied and afterward enjoyed a trip to Florida for recuperation.

Mr. Randolph had nine brothers and sisters and of these only one, Mrs. Fanny Pound, of Elizabeth, is living. Those deceased were Mrs. Eden Bolse, died about a year ago. Mr. Randolph married Miss Alma C. Horton, daughter of Stephen O. Horton, who came to this city from Morris county, and she survives. She also resides in the home with Mrs. French, who is the only child. Mr. Randolph was a member of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, having joined fifty years ago, when it was known as the Second Presbyterian church and its house of worship was on East Front street, where Whitney's carpet store is now.

The funeral was held at Mrs. French's home Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 and interment was at Hillside.

NEW YORK CITY.

New York city has nineteen colleges within its borders.

Men in New York daily smoke 1,104,000 cigars each day.

Thirty bodies pass through the New York morgue each day, and it costs the city $22.50 apiece to bury them.

The water consumed daily in New York city is about 500,000,000 gallons, weighing 2,100,000 tons, and its volume would fill a canal city feet wide, ten feet deep and twenty-one miles long.

New York city, by that name, is now working under its sixth charter. The first one was granted by James II. in 1686; the second by George II., in 1730, and the people prepared the third one in 1829.—N. Y. Herald.

Billingsgates Birth.

Just as no man can say with accuracy when Billingsgate was born, so none can say who is the godfather was, or what his sponsors were. Many guesses, romantic and prosaic, have been made, but nobody has had the courage to go further. Belinus, the son of Lud, divides the honors with an ancient fishmonger named Billing, whose descendants settled at Billington in Bedford, Billington in Hants and Durham, and two or three other places. Then there are those impersonal godfathers, words. Bailey offers as two—"bellan," to roar, suggested by the noise of the porters, or the fishwives, and "belte," Saxon for a purse.

Additions to Library.

The Epworth House Library of the Monroe Avenue church has received a new assortment of books, including the latest fiction, technical, biographical, historical and religious works; also recently bound oöples of the Bookman, Century, Outing, McClure's, St. Nicholas, Review of Reviews, World's Work, Scribner's, Harper's Magazine, and the Cosmopolitan.

Miss Ella Conover, of Elmwood place, who has been visiting relatives at High Bridge, has returned home.

FAMOUS HOSTELRY BEING TORN DOWN.

"The Somerset" Has Entertained the Leading Men of New Jersey—Modern Structure.

"The Somerset," the oldest and most famous hostelry in Somerset county, is now being razed to make way for a modern hotel structure at the corner of Main and Grove streets, in Somerville. The passing of this old road house marks the alteration of the oldest land mark in the town. A portion of the old structure torn down this week was built more than one hundred and fifty years ago.

In the good old days of the welkin risk of the stage coach the inn was famous as the "Stage House," and the clan of the stage coach with four prancing horses greeted the traveler. More than one hundred years ago the inn was kept by a man by the name of Smith. He was succeeded by William Mann, who reared a large family in the hostelry, and was its proprietor for more than thirty years. Jacob Talbot kept the hotel for 23 years after Mann, and sixty years ago Jacob A. Fritts became the proprietor. Mr. Fritts kept the hotel for 40 years and was succeeded by his son, George Fritts, who relinquished its ownership some years ago.

A half a century ago the inn was famous as a gathering place for politicians and statesmen, and it has been the scene of many noted banquets.

Nearly half a century ago the New Jersey Legislature dined there at the expense of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. It was on this occasion when the railroad company obtained a grant for an extension of its line over the Newark Bay. George Fritts, who still lives there, has a vivid recollection of that dinner. He says about two hundred legislators and railroad men were seated around the festal boards, who consumed 96 bottles of champagne, 96 cigars and one-half hours. The statesmen also smoked a large number of high priced cigars and the dinner cost the railroad company $656, which went down on record as the greatest amount of business ever done by the hostelry in the space of two hours.

A former Congressman from this section also gave a number of elaborate dinners at the hotel, which were the talk of town in olden times.

The hostelry under the administration of the elder Fritts was known as a "Democratic hotel" and it was considered as a "marble hall" by Republican politicians, who only assembled there on state occasions by the consent of the proprietor. On one of the occasions Mr. Fritts entertained John I. Blair and a number of local Republican politicians when Mr. Blair and a number of local Republican politicians when Mr. Blair was candidate for Governor. It is said that on that occasion Mr. Blair contributed $40,000 to the campaign fund to assure his election in this district, but the county went Democratic by a large majority. Jacob A. Fritts is still remembered by the old residents as "Uncle Heidsick" as one unique character, who took especial pride in running a first-class hotel. He was a gentleman of the old school, who had the appearance of a clergyman rather than a hotel proprietor. He drove a team of spanking bay horses to an old fashioned buggy and was a familiar figure on the country roads as he took his daily drives.

The old hotel when it first came in possession of Mr. Fritts had a circular bar similar to those seen on steamboats a half a century ago.

Y. M. C. A. FIVE WON; HOME PLAYER HURT.

Naval Reserves Fought Hard—Leary's Hand Stepped On.

Hard pressed all the way, but steadfastly holding the lead, the Y. M. C. A. basketball five kept up their winning gait yesterday afternoon, at the expense of the Naval Reserve team, of Jersey City. The score was 21 to 16.

It was a hot game. Both teams played swiftly, and the sparks flew at almost every move. The land-scamen were strong, but the home team made a combination just a bit stronger. The visitors bit up a faster pace in the second half and cut down a 12 to 4 lead.

Leary, of the Y. M. C. A., was knocked out of the game in the middle of the second half, by an injury to his hand. One of the Jersey City men stepped on his hand, and the result was very serious. His hand pained him so that Physical Diector Lathan summoned Dr. J. B. Probasco. There were indications that one of the small bones had broken, but the physician could not tell positively. A recent game Leary was forced out by a sprained ankle.

ART IN PAPERING.

"There is just as much good style shown in papering a house as there is in costuming an individual.

There is the "correct" way to do both.

As a business suit is inappropriate for the evening, so paper designed for the hall or dining-room is decidedly out of place if used in parlor or sleeping apartment.

For hall papers a distinction is made between those available for the county and those adapted to city homes.

For the latter warm, rich colors are chosen, while for the country a lighter and cheerier paper is "correct."

Do not forget one or more good pictures to be hung on the wall in the best light, and a clock, if only a niche for it can be found.

Uses of Golf.

Apart from the health-giving and moral influence of golf, the game is of immense social advantage to the actor, especially the touring actor. In teh old days on tour the actor had, as a rule, only the society of his own kind. Which is very good of after a while, or friends made in the little so-called—political clubs, which open their doors to him and keep him up much too late at night. At the golf clubs he can now meet the best men of the town, lawyers, doctors, merchants—all classes. His ideas of life are extended; he begins to realize that all the world is not a stage; in fact, he learns to be a much nicer man, a more useful citizen, and generally a much better actor.—Fry's Magazine.

MR. PERKINS IS RIGHT.

The Newark Evening News said Tuesday night:

"Assemblyman Randolph Perkins, leader of the Republican majority in the House last winter, and who would probably have been the Speaker of the next Legislature had the last elections gone the usual way, has clearly outlined the reason why the Republican caucus should not force the re-election of Senator Dryden. This reason is fundamental; it is because the people of New Jersey have emphatically shown that they do not want him to represent them in the United States Senate.

"Leader Perkins has evidently taken pains to learn the sentiment of the people, particularly his Republican constituents in Union county. He has spoken to hundreds of them, and has received many letters from others, and he declares that, 'with the exception of a few old party leaders, there is not one person of those who have communicated with me who favors the re-election of Mr. Dryden.' So far as Union county is concerned, this settles its status upon the Dryden issue. Any one who is at all familiar with Union county sentiment knows that Mr. Perkins is correct. He has heard the voice of the people, and his only course is to obey it to the end.

"Further than this, Mr. Perkins properly interprets the opposition to the Dryden candidacy as evidence of what will follow if the popular will is ignored or defied. 'If in spite of the demand,' he says, 'for the election of a man truly representative, the Republican caucus forces the nature of Mr. Dryden on the Senate, it will, in the judgment of many, lend plausibility to the charges made against the party, that it is controlled in favor of corporate and special interests, and has ceased to become the party of the people.' The re-election he mostly estimation, not as a Democratic victory, but as a Republican note of warning, and he takes notice of the fact that many voters will resent the re-election of Mr. Dryden by voting the Democratic ticket at the coming Gubernatorial election.

"The logic of Leader Perkins cannot be successfully assailed. It is correct in its premises and irresistible in its conclusions. The people of Union county, not alone, but of the State as a whole, are opposed to the re-election of Mr. Dryden. No other opinion can be reached upon any reasonable consideration of the returns, as a brief analysis will prove.

"Upon the average of the votes cast for Assemblyman in each county it has been carefully figued out that the total Republican plurality was 1,374, and this, the regulars have insisted, proves that the State favors Mr. Dryden's re-election, because his candidate had a plurality of 1,248, because no one in Union county, except a few leaders, favors Mr. Dryden's re-election. This would leave only 126. But even this cannot be counted for Mr. Dryden. Bergen county, which gave 857 Republican plurality, elected anti-Dryden Assemblymen. Somerset county, which gave 1,138 Republican plurality, elected an Assemblyman who refused to pledge himself to Mr. Dryden, and who favors either Stokes or Griggs. Even Morris county, with 1,093 Republican majority, is not distinctly in the Dryden column.

"But even without counting Morris, Republican majorities of Union, Somerset and Bergen must be counted as against Dryden, because it is upon the counties named that anti-Dryden Assemblymen were elected. Without Morris, the State, therefore, shows 1,859 against the re-election of Mr. Dryden and with Morris, 2,952. All of this is in North Jersey. Mr. Dryden's home county does not take into consideration upward of 9,000 in dependent votes, cast in the county of Essex, but not counted in making up the average majorities. If these are added, then the State's emphatic protest against Mr. Dryden's re-election would be 10,859 without Morris county, or nearly 12,000 if Morris is counted in the anti-Dryden column. Leader Perkins is right. If the Republican caucus forces the return of Mr. Dryden to the Senate it will show that the Republican party has ceased to be the party of the people."

Dog Did the Wrong Trick.

The Irishman wanted to sell the dog, but the prospective buyer was suspicious and finally decided not to buy. He turned to tell him why he was so anxious to sell. "You see," he said, "I bought the dog and trained him myself. I got him so he'd bark all the time if a person stepped inside the gate, and I thought I was safe from burglars. Then my wife wanted me to train him to carry bundles, and I did. If I put a packet in his mouth the dog would keep it there till some one took it away. Well, one night I heard a noise and heard one in the next room. I got up and grabbed my gun. They were there—three of the scoundrels and the dog."

"Didn't he bark?" interrupted the man.

"Sorry a bark he was too busy."

"Busy? What doing?"

"Carrying a lantern for the burglars."—Dublin Freeman.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 9.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—Christ's Life. XII.—Lessons from the "seven words of the cross." John xix. 25-30; Luke xxiii. 34-46; Mark xv. 34.

The dying words of our loved ones are always remembered and fondly cherished. We listen for the last words as death approaches, keep these words in our memories, and very often they exrt a powerful influence in our lives. Thousands of lives have been made better and souls have been saved through the influence of treasured last words. It is not to be wondered at therefore that the disciples of Christ would remember the dying words of their Master and hand them down as a priceless heritage to the church. Nor are we surprised that these words have had a lasting influence and power, and that they may teach us useful lessons. Christ spoke seven times during the six hours He was on the cross. Matthew and Mark each record one of these utterances, Luke three and John three. Three of these words concerned those who were about Him, and the other four concerned Himself—His sufferings, His finished work and His death. More sacred words were never uttered, and we should approach their study with the deepest reverence and humility and give them the widest possible influence in our lives.

The first word teaches us Christ's attitude toward His enemies—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." These words were spoken to the enemies of Christ, the Pharisees, who had falsely accused Him; the mob about the cross, who reviled Him, and the Roman soldiers, who were putting Him to death. They testify that Christ did not return enmity with enmity. He hated not those who hated Him. Nor should we. There is no place in the Christian religion for retaliation. Vengeance belongs to God. We should labor and pray for our enemies. (2) Christ forgave His enemies. His prayer for them proves that. Christians should forgive their enemies. They should love them.

The second word teaches Christ's attitude toward repentant sinners. "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, today shalt thou be with Me in paradise." These words were spoken in answer to the prayer of the dying repentant thief. They gave to him an assured entrance into heaven. They are indicative of Christ toward all sinners who repent of their sins and ask His forgiveness. No matter how far we may have wandered into sin, there is forgiveness for us at the foot of the cross and assurance and entrance into heaven.

The third word teaches us the attitude of Christ toward His mother. In his dying hour He did not forget His mother, but made provision for her future welfare. Jesus does not forget His friends. Jesus discovers in him the craving after a godly life in spite of his unpopular occupation and so eats at the feast, not as a gluttonous man and a winebibber, as he is called by the godish people, who have never tried to copy Levi, but he eats as a friend of sinners and as their best helper.

So he goes to the house of Zaccheus. The crowd may murmur at it as improper, but Jesus has come to seek and to save such, and in the strength of His rightness and sympathy for those not right He can safely to Himself and to them go to these out of the way and bring them into the right path of life.

This association is unto salvation. No one can safely walk in the way of sinners or stand in the councils of the ungodly or pass close by the seats of the scornful unless he is strong in the Lord and upheld by His mighty power.

There is a vast difference between the man of God and the ordinary man of the world. The Christian must do business with the men of the world, but he must not do business as they do otherwise he is no longer the man of God. We must have more extent in social life with them, but not "seek the intimacy of friendly society except among our kind," and not partake of their frivolities and dangerous dissipations of many kinds.

Be friendly with all men that you may bring them to know your Christ as their personal Saviour, but you will never so bring them unless they see that you live in close companionship with Him yourself. They must see Him in you.

He Knows Best.

The outward features of our life may not be all that we should choose them to be. There may be things we wish for that never come to us. There may be much we wish away that we cannot part from. The persons with whom we live, the circumstances by which we are surrounded, the duties we have to perform, the burdens we have to bear, may not be other than what we should have selected for ourselves, but may even seem inconsistent with that formation and discipline of character which we honestly wish to promote. Knowing us better than we know ourselves, fully understanding how greatly we are affected by the outward events and conditions of life, God has ordered them with a view to our entire and final, not only our immediate, happiness. And whenever we can be safely trusted with pastures that are green and waters that are still in the way of earthly blessing the Good Shepherd leads us there.—Arhold W. Thorold.

The Love For Nature.

We shall find that the love of nature wherever it has existed has been a faithful and sacred element of human feeling—that is to say, supposing all the circumstances otherwise the same with respect to two individuals, the one who loves nature most will be always found to have more capacity for faith in God than the other.—John Ruskin.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Dec. 9: "Association Into Salvation." By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D. A justification of incorporate association.—Matt. xi. 28. A discipline won from an unpromising source.—Luke xix. 5-10. A change of former days brought to Jesus.—Luke v. 28-32.

A man is known by the company which he keeps. We are so made that we seek companionship, and, while it is a truth everywhere recognized that like begets like, it is equally true that like seeks like, or, in the words of the old saying, "Birds of a feather flock together." We do not expect to find the dove flocking with crows, nor do we look with approval on the one who seeks goodness and right living if he seeks constant companionship among the vicious and depraved. It is well known that evil communications corrupt good manners." We become like those with whom we consort. No one can be constantly hearing vile language without acquiring to greater or less extent the taint of such speech. To the other hand, no one can be long in the company of the gentle and refined without taking on somewhat of their manners and tone.

The Bible is emphatic in this matter. The Psalmist is full of admonition against companionship with the evil, and the young person who makes the reading of that book a daily religious exercise soon comes to a way of looking at things that leads him to indentify himself with the righteous. There is no manual of conduct and advice in existence which approaches in value this ancient book of wise sayings. The New Testament is equally strong in advising "come out from among them and touch not the unclean thing." There is a vast difference between clean and unclean in religious and moral things, and this difference is shown all through the Bible. We are to live in this world as people separated unto God and good works.

But all this does not in any way imply that we may not have dealings with the morally wrong ones if our purpose is to bring them out of their evil into companionship with Christ and His church. Our Lord was friend to the publicans and sinners, but never partaker of their evil deeds. He met with them to show them the path to a better life. So we are warranted and commanded to seek the lost ones as He did, that we may bring them to salvation. We must, however, not fail to accomplish their reformation—at least they must not be allowed to deform us and make us come to their level. We must consecrate with the will only to reform them.

Levi makes a great feast for Jesus. Levi is a publican and is accounted by the goodish people as a very bad man because he collects the recourse for the government. They hate him. Jesus discovers in him the craving after a godly life in spite of his unpopular occupation and so eats at the feast, not as a gluttonous man and a winebibber, as he is called by the goodish people, who have never tried to copy Levi, but he eats as a friend of sinners and as their best helper.

So he goes to the house of Zaccheus. The crowd may murmur at it as improper, but Jesus has come to seek and to save such, and in the strength of His rightness and sympathy for those not right He can safely to Himself and to them go to these out of the way and bring them into the right path of life.

Be friendly with all men that you may bring them to know your Christ as their personal Saviour, but you will never so bring them unless they see that you live in close companionship with Him yourself. They must see Him in you.

He Knows Best.

The outward features of our life may not be all that we should choose them to be. There may be things we wish for that never come to us. There may be much we wish away that we cannot part from. The persons with whom we live, the circumstances by which we are surrounded, the duties we have to perform, the burdens we have to bear, may not be other than what we should have selected for ourselves, but may even seem inconsistent with that formation and discipline of character which we honestly wish to promote. Knowing us better than we know ourselves, fully understanding how greatly we are affected by the outward events and conditions of life, God has ordered them with a view to our entire and final, not only our immediate, happiness. And whenever we can be safely trusted with pastures that are green and waters that are still in the way of earthly blessing the Good Shepherd leads us there.—Arhold W. Thorold.

The Love For Nature.

We shall find that the love of nature wherever it has existed has been a faithful and sacred element of human feeling—that is to say, supposing all the circumstances otherwise the same with respect to two individuals, the one who loves nature most will be always found to have more capacity for faith in God than the other.—John Ruskin.

GORGEOUS GOWNS SEEN AT OPERAS OPENING

SOME OF THE COSTLY ROBES IN WHICH THE ULTRA-FASHIONABLES APPEARED

Following are some of the countless number of attractive gowns seen on the opening night at the Metropolitan Opera House:

Mrs. Henry Clews, after a summer spent in travel in Europe, was radiantly beautiful in a gown of rose pink satin, with marvellous trimmings of silver embroidery and point lace; a touch of black velvet encrusted in gems finished the corsage and a necklace of diamond solitaires, with huge pendants of pink pearls, loaned itself to beautify one of the striking costumes of the night. Mrs. Clews wore on her coiffure a coronet of diamonds and pearls.

Mrs. Richard T. Wilson, Sr., was in a rich but simple gown of white satin appliqued in black. She also wore a corsage bouquet and a necklace and collar and pendants of diamonds and pearls.

Lady Herbert, her daughter, was extremely attractive in a costume of black velvet, the front of the corsage ornamented with a cluster of gardenias and the head with a tall bandeau of diamonds and silver leaves. Her collar was of diamonds and pearls.

Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Sr.—Old fashioned gray satin, brocaded with great pink splash roses and trimmed with beautiful old lace; on the corsage was a suggestion of black jet, the long spray of the foliage intertwined in pink. Her headdress was of black velvet and silver.

Mrs. Goodhue Livingston—Gorgeous gown of palest shade of pink satin chiffon, combined with white tulle, showered with silver. She also wore a tiara of diamonds and a necklace of solitaires and pearls.

Mrs. Charles B. Alexander—Cream white satin princess gown, made with trimmings.

Mrs. Philip M. Lydig—Cream white satin princess gown, the skirt made severely plain and the bodice profusely embroidered in silver and green satin to represent foliage; head ornament of diamonds and pearls.

Mrs. William D. Sloane—Emerald green velvet with beautiful Venetian lace trimmings on the corsage, chain of diamonds and emeralds, collar of diamonds and coronet of diamonds and emeralds.

Mrs. Cortlandt Field Bishop—Electric blue satin, embroidered with silver and trimmed with silver spangled lace and tulle; necklace of diamonds and turquoise, and in the coiffure a rose of diamonds and a bandeau of diamonds and emeralds.

Mrs. Lloyd S. Bryce—Dolphin gown of pink satin, the corsage heavily trimmed with silver passementerie; collar and necklace of diamonds and pearls and a tiara of the same gems.

Miss Angelica Gerry—Pale blue satin, the corsage strapped with bands of silver and gold embroidery, to which was attached a cluster of American Beauty roses.

Miss Mabel Gerry—Pale heliotrope satin, with silver spangled tulle and trimmings of feather aigrette of white and mauve.

Miss Janet Fish—Deep rose pink satin, with gold embroidery in the coiffure and a bandeau of gold leaves and a huge aigrette of gold feathers.

Miss Paula de Acosta—Simple gown of white satin and chiffon, with white roses and foliage in the coiffure.

Mrs. Pembroke Jones—Pale blue satin and point lace, a collar and necklace of diamonds and pearls and a stomacher and tiara of diamonds.

Miss Sadie Jones—Pale blue satin and chiffon, with a Grecian bandeau of gold in the coiffure.

Mrs. August Belmont, Jr.—Mole colored chiffon velvet, embroidered with silver, with touches of deep crimson satin at the corsage, a wreath of gold leaves and several strings of superb pearls.

Mrs. Craig Biddle—Pale pink satin combined with gold spangled lace and chiffon, a tiara of diamonds and a necklace of diamonds and emeralds.

Miss Harriet Alexander—Princess gown of deep rose chiffon satin, combined with chiffon and lace; the corsage ornamented with huge clusters of pink and white roses; pink roses in the coiffure.

Mrs. W. Seward Webb—Empire gown of a bluish silver gray satin embroidered in silver and trimmed with bands of diamonds and a necklace of the same jewels and pearls.

Mrs. Frank Egerton Webb—Strikingly handsome gown of palest mauve satin elaborately trimmed with lace spangled with silver; rose and necklace of diamonds and coronet of diamonds.

Mrs. Perry Belmont—Turquoise blue satin, the skirt elaborately embroidered in gold, the corsage slashed with gold and trimmed with coveted with jewels; tiara of diamonds and necklace, collar and pendants of diamonds and pearls.

Miss Dorothy Whitney—White satin, with chiffon and lace trimmed with silver jets; a necklace of pearls and a dainty headdress of white wings tipped with silver.

Harry Williamson, of Hunterdon county, who has been spending several days here, has returned home.

James Patterson, of the Potter Printing Press Works, has gone to Boston, to erect several presses for his concern.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY

PRIVATE OWNERSHIP OF P. O.

To turn over the postal service of the United States to a private corporation, under Government regulation, is the surprising proposition of a Chicago millionaire publisher. The offer as made to the Postal Commission, only a day or two ago, will naturally attract unusual public attention, though it is not likely that anything will come of it for the present at least. Agitation in favor of municipal ownership of public utilities is growing day by day and unless there is a surprising change in public sentiment it is impossible to think that the Federal government will abandon what could be made a profitable business.

What the Chicago man proposes is that the postoffice business be transferred to a $50,000,000 private corporation under Government regulation. This concern in turn will reduce by one-half all postal rates, establish rural postal express, and apply strict business methods throughout. It will pay the Government rental for postoffice quarters, and charge it regular rates for its postal business. All sinecures, politics and the deficit are to be eliminated.

The most startling part of the extraordinary offer is the proposition to pay the Government all profits above seven per cent. on the capital. Such a proposition shows that business men of ability have confidence in their contention that the postoffice business of the United States can be put on a paying basis; something that Uncle Sam has not been able to do.

It was peculiarly fitting that Ben Tillman should have selected the Windy City as the place to deliver one of his tirades against the negro.

Havana heard Senator Knox suffering nervous prostration on account of Dryden's dying political ambitions.

You're all right, Mr. Perkins.

SCHOOL BOARD MEETING.

Only Routine Matters Transacted at the Regular Monthly Session.

The regular monthly meeting of the city Board of Education was held Monday but practically nothing beyond routine matters was transacted. The tax collector reported the collection of $8,807.28 and the custodian made it known that the balance on hand is $8,135.43. Superintendent Madison also reported that outside tuitions had paid in $615 during the fall term and that the revenue from this source for the year would probably be $2,400.

Henry Ives Cobb and Floyd Y. Perkins, architects, applied for permission to draw plans for the new school to be erected on Darrow avenue. The matter was referred. Former Mayor Alexander Gilkeit presented the High School a set of the National Encyclopedia, twelve volumes, bound in half Morocco. The bond of George J. Tobin, submitted for the faithful execution of his heating and ventilating contract at the High School, was returned, the work having proved satisfactory.

WALTER VAIL DEAD.

Fatal Injuries From Being Caught Between Cars.

Walter L. Vail, son of the late Mahlon Vail, of this city, and a cousin of A. C. Vail, of West Eighth street, died at his home in Los Angeles, Cal., Sunday morning from injuries received in a street car accident last Thursday, when he was crushed between two cars. Mr. Vail was the owner of Santa Rosa Island and was one of the early Southern California cattle kings, being a member of the firm of Vail & Gates. He was fifty-eight years old and leaves a wife and seven children, five sons and two daughters. He is survived by a sister, Miss Agnes Vail, of Park avenue. Mr. Vail was also a relative of the late Miss Catherine Webster and was one of those remembered in her will.

Union Christmas Service.

The four Sunday-schools connected with the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, including the home school, Hope, Warren and Bethel chapels, will unite in a Christmas service on Sunday afternoon, December 22, at 3 o'clock at the home church. Gifts for members of the pupils and teachers will about fill the edifice. Those wishing to enjoy the service should identify themselves with one of the schools now and thus be qualified for admission.

Mourning Five Dodge Roosters.

The Plainfield Y. M. C. A. team shot their second game in the league Saturday night. They were beaten by the Passaic five on the home field. The score was decisive but details are lacking at this end because the team manager and the members have dodged reporters ever since the game. The reporters are not mad, because they understand the five's feelings and sympathize with them.

CITY EMPLOYEES' RAISE

Ordinance Passed on Second Reading Gives Chiefs 14 Per Cent. Increase.

10 P. C. FOR THE MEN

Captaincy and Detective-Sergeancy Created in Police Department —Final Passage This Month.

Steps were taken at the December meeting of the Common Council, last Monday, to give policemen and firemen the raise in their salaries that they have been seeking for some time. The men had asked the Common Council to allow the voters to express their will in the matter of an increase in accordance with the new State law, but instead a new schedule of salaries based on an increase of ten per cent., in all cases, except those of the heads of the two departments, was presented, in the form of ordinances, last night, adopted on first and second readings and ordered advertised.

In each case, Councilman Buxton introduced an amendment affecting the regular men, which would give them an increase of fifteen per cent. He said that he did this with the understanding that if he could not get the fifteen per cent. increase he would withdraw the amendment on the caucus and vote for the ten per cent. increase. Mr. Daniel said he thought Mr. Buxton's action manifestly unfair, inasmuch as Councilman Mellick, chairman of the fire committee, was absent, while Councilman Gloak said that as much as the ten per cent. increase was unanimously decided upon, he would vote against making it fifteen per cent. Both members fought against the fifteen per cent. raise.

Mr. Tyler asked Chairman Frank Randolph, of the police committee, why it was thought advisable to create two new offices in the police department, that of captain and detective sergeant. The Fourth ward member explained that it would give the department more officers and would also prove an incentive to the men lower in the ranks to work up. Mr. Tyler added that when he was on the police committee he found that too many officers made it confusing and was not always satisfactory.

Mr. Rimdolph first introduced the ordinance increasing the salaries of the men in the police department, section three being amended to provide changes as follows:

Chief, $1,400; captain, $1,100; sergeant and detective sergeant, $68 per month for the first year, $74 per month for the second year, $79 per month for the fourth and fifth years, $85 per month for the sixth year and thereafter; doorman, $72 per month; roundsman and patrolmen, $66 per month for the first year, $72 per month for the second year, $77 per month for the third, fourth and fifth years, $83 per month for the sixth year and thereafter. The changes are to become effective January 1, 1907. The men in the department are to receive pay for the actual time in service, but it is left discretionary with the committee to reimburse an officer if he should be ill or incapacitated while on the performance of his duty. The men are also to provide themselves with such uniforms as the ordinance requires. As stated the increase amounts to ten per cent., except in the case of Chief Kiely, whose increase amounts to fourteen per cent.

Mr. Buxton's amendment related solely to the sergeant, detective sergeant, roundsmen and patrolmen. His schedule for the roundsmen and patrolmen was as follows: First year $68, second year $72, third, fourth and fifth years $72.50, sixth year and thereafter $80.50. His schedule for the sergeant and detective sergeant was as follows: First year $68, second year $72, third, fourth and fifth years $80.50, sixth year and thereafter $87.50.

When the question of adopting the amendment was proposed, Mr. Daniel wanted to refer the whole matter back to the committee until such time as all of the councilmen could have an opportunity to consider about it. Finally he withdrew his motion to refer it back and a vote was taken on the amendment, it being lost by a vote of five to three. Councilmen Buxton, Charles C. Randolph and Frank Randolph voted in favor while Councilmen Daniel, Gloak, Hibbard, Tyler and Kelley voted against it.

This ordinance being disposed of, Mr. Randolph offered the one increasing the salaries of the members of the fire department, in the absence of Chairman Mellick of that committee. These salaries are also to go into effect January 1, 1907, and the ordinance was amended to provide for the changes in salaries as follows: Chief, $1,100; first assistant chief, $1,000; three captains, each $924; engineer, $82.50; veterinary surgeon, $165 per year; men of the first class, those serving five years or more, $74.50 per month; second class those serving four years, $66; third class, those serving less than four years, $60.50; fourth class, those serving less than six months, $55, call men, to do so per cent. duty and furnish their own uniforms, $55 per year, to be paid twice a year, $27.50 in June and December. The call men must first sign a certificate agreeing to do 90 per cent. duty and to purchase their uniforms. Outside of the chief the increase amounts to ten per cent.

Mr. Buxton's amendment relating to all except the chief and his assistant, provided a salary of $976 for each captain, $200 for the veterinary surgeon, $100 for the engineer, $74.75 for the first class men, $69 for the second class, $63.25 for the third class and $57.50 for the fourth class. The call men were to receive $75 per year.

In reply to the attack made by Mr. Gloak in opposing the fifteen per cent. increase, Mr. Buxton said that at first Mr. Mellick favored an increase of twenty per cent., but afterward receded. He said that he favored the same increase, and when he found that it would be impossible to secure the twenty per cent. he suggested as a compromise the fifteen per cent., agreeing that if the fifteen per cent. did not go through he would vote for the ten per cent. raise.

Mr. Randolph stated that he favored more than ten per cent. increase, but learned that it would be impossible to get it, as a majority favored the per centage of increase decided upon in the caucus. Mr. Buxton introduced an amendment in the case of the firemen and it was defeated by the same vote as in the case of his amendment to the police ordinance, five to three.

Mr. Tyler said that he would vote for the adoption of the amendments on the first and second readings with the understanding that if after further consideration he decided that the amendments were unwise, he would be at liberty to vote against them. Mr. Tyler also requested the city clerk to forward each member of the Common Council a copy of the increase in salaries as adopted a few years ago. This will be done. At the request of Councilman Daniel the members took a six minutes' recess, which lasted for more than an hour. No further business was transacted when the members returned and they promptly adjourned. The recess was held to talk over some matters relative to closing up the year's business.

AMUSEMENTS.

"The Hypocrites" is in its fourth crowded month at the Hudson theatre. During its entire run there has been no chance in the big cast and the performances are as stirring and satisfying as they were during the first nights. The play has taken a firm hold here and there is no telling when it will reach the end of its stay at the Hudson. It is one of the biggest casts as well as most important that Mr. Froham has put forward in recent seasons. Leslie Faber, the young English actor who has the leading role, has become as established favorite here, and Richard Ward, J. E. Barnes and the others are also in high favor. For Thanksgiving week there will be matinees Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday.

John Drew will reach the 100th performance of "His House in Order" at the Empire theatre, New York, on December 3rd. He has produced this far in his triumph to a series of capacity audiences and has the gratification of knowing that himself and the Pinero play are still among the most popular attractions that New York theatregoers have. The performances are a constant delight to those who witness them. Mr. Drew being at his very best in the role of Hilary Jesson, and his leading lady, Margaret Illington, playing the part of his wife with all the delicacy, spirit and power that the part calls for. A special matinee will be given Thanksgiving day in addition to the regular Wednesday and Saturday performances.

MEN'S CLUB COMMITTEES.

Seventh-Day Baptist Society Also Adopts Constitution.

The Men's Club of the Seventh-Day Baptist church held a special meeting in the parlors of the church, Sunday, to complete organization. After adopting the constitution and by-laws, President Starr A. Burdick announced the following committees:

Membership—Asa F. Randolph, chairman; Ira N. West, Rolland Williams, William R. Mosher, N. O. Moore. Reception—William H. Rogers, chairman; E. A. Dunham, Geo. Clark, S. L. Williams, Arthur Spicer. Refreshments—Edwin Scovill, chairman; Starr A. Burdick, Arthur L. Titsworth, Dr. Marcus L. Clawson, Dr. O. B. Whitford. Refreshments—Frank J. Hubbard, chairman; Nathan E. Lewis, Nathan Wardner, Lynn Crandall, Lewis T. Titsworth. Religious Work—Lewis T. Rogers, chairman; Charles Neagle, Alexander W. Vars, Orra S. Rogers, Thomas B. Titsworth.

It was decided to hold the first regular meeting Sunday, December 16. Meetings will be held on the third Sunday in each month. After the transaction of business last night refreshments were served. The club now has a membership of thirty.

Edward Golden Marries.

Edward Golden, of Hopewell, and formerly an operator at the Western Union office in this city, and Miss Sarah Lindsley Day, daughter of Mrs Robert L. Day, of Bound Brook, were married in New York Thanksgiving Eve. They will reside at Bound Brook. Mr. Golden is employed as an operator in a broker's office in New York.

ELKS' MEMORIAL SERVICE

Eulogy by Rev. Dr. Glazebrook a Feature of Impressive Tribute to Departed Members.

THE THEATRE FILLED

Dean Rodman Pronounces Benediction—The Music of Very High Order

In the presence of a gathering that filled the lower floor and balcony of the New Plainfield theatre, behind the curtain of eternity. The programme was similar to those of previous years but it was made doubly impressive from the fact that for the first time since the lodge has been organized it was a memorial in the true sense, four brothers having passed away since last April.

The exercises were in charge of Exalted Ruler George O. Stevens and with him on the stage were the other officers of the lodge, as follows: Esteemed Leading Knight, Charles J. Fisk; esteemed loyal knight, Herbert Buxton; esteemed lecturing knight, Clarence E. Teel; secretary, Walter H. Freeman; treasurer, Lemuel B. Woodruff; chaplain, Frank Rowley; esquire, Carroll T. Runyon; inner guard, John Bowman; tiler, Edward C. Searing. The assisting artists were Townsend H. Fellows, baritone; Orville Ashton Fellows, pianist; William Paulding McNike, violincello; Chas. L. Van Baar, pianist.

Extending across the stage from either side was a bank of potted plants, palms and ferns while above, suspended from the proscenium, was a shield of purple velvet in which gleamed four tiny electric lights, each one representing an absent brother. As the roll of honored dead was called by Secretary Freeman, a light was extinguished, indicating that the member had been called to the great beyond. The departed brothers and the dates of their deaths were Daniel Detweiler, April 8; Herbert S. Taylor, April 16; Robert L. Thompson, June 24; Olin L. Jenkins, November 13.

A number by the trio, violin, 'cello and piano, "Aria from Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens, headed the programme, and was followed by the singing, responsive, of the lodge, the members occupying the front orchestra chairs. Mr. Fellows, whose excellent baritone voice was never heard to better advantage, rendered "Crossing" and prayer was offered by Rev. Herbert E. Rowley, after which the audience joined in singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Another number by the trio, "Adagio," Bottesini, led up to the memorial eulogy by Brother Rev. Dr. Ellis Glazebrook, D. D., of Elizabeth. He is a speaker of wide reputation and his eloquent address commanded the rapt attention of his audience throughout. He departed from the usual theme by devoting the greater part of it to "character" instead of direct reference to fraternity in Elkdom. He declared that character was of more value to mankind than mines of precious metals or great buildings and that the possessor of it was indeed fortunate. For those who had passed away since the members of No. 885 had last assembled in a lodge of sorrow he said he could speak of them as had Felix Adler at the bier of Dan Drew, "Successful, lasting personality and character."

Dr. Glazebrook was followed by Mr. Fellows who sang with much expression Lord Henry Somerset's "Echo." "Abide With Me" was sung by the audience and the following a trio number, selected, the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Rodman.

The memorial committee was composed of Samuel P. T. Wilbur, Herbert Buxton and William N. Runyon.

Church 75 Years Old.

The congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal church, of Somerville, is already formulating plans for a big celebration which will be held the middle of next month, which will be the seventy-fifth anniversary of the church. The celebration will last for several days and many prominent speakers, including some of the former pastors, are being secured for the event. Rev. Edwin N. Crasto, the present pastor, who has been in charge for five years, has tendered his resignation to take effect in the spring, and will spend a year in travel abroad.

Plainfield Petit Jurors.

Sheriff Lawrence III the Union County Court, today, selected the following Plainfielders as members of the petit jury for the January term of court: Augustus V. Searing, Jr., James Forristel, Harry C. Moulton, Lewis C. J. Randolph, Frederick R. Phillips, John P. Laire, Edward L. Smith, Frank Tunison, John Groendyke, Joseph Hagen, N. W. Pike, Julius H. Lantz, Albert Lederet, Theodore Gray, Charles Yeager, Peter Lautereoke, Clarence Mundy, Jr., McVoy, John Neagle, Herbert Langford, John Kloderling.

County Chairman "Silas" Smith, of this city, received the thirty-second degree in the Consistory, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite of Masonry, at Jersey City, Saturday night.

2 HURT AT CROSSING

Butcher in Hospital With Concussion of Brain as Result of Accident.

TRAIN HITS WAGON

Jacob Vertvelinsky Badly Injured but Samuel Oblisky Only Slightly Hurt—Crossing Unprotected.

Jacob Vertvelinsky, a butcher residing at 511 West Third street, is in the Muhlenberg Hospital, suffering from concussion of the brain, the result of an accident Saturday night at the Park avenue crossing of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, near Oak Tree. Vertvelinsky, accompanied by Samuel Oblisky, a boy, had been delivering meat on his country route, and was on his way home at the time.

At the time the butcher approached the crossing a high wind was blowing and it is believed that it prevented him from hearing an approaching fast westbound freight. The engine crashed into the rig midway between the wagon and the horse, wrecking the vehicle. The man and boy were hurled to one side of the track, and it was thought at first that Vertvelinsky was killed. The boy although badly scared and cut, quickly recovered his senses and hastened to where his employer lay. He found him unconscious. The train crew gave assistance to the injured man. Word of the accident was telephoned to Muhlenberg Hospital and arrangements were made to take him there. An examination showed that the butcher had sustained concussion of the brain and suffered minor cuts and bruises.

Oblsky was also taken to the hospital and after his injuries were attended to he went home. Vertvelinsky recovered consciousness yesterday and he is rapidly improving.

The force of the crash freed the horse from the wagon and it ran away. Sunday it was found in Vertvelinsky's stable in West Third street. The Lehigh's crossing at that point is unprotected.

The New Market Grange is arranging an anniversary dinner December 13.

WIDOW ASKS DAMAGES

Mrs. Patrick Kneeland Files Claim Against Pond Works Management.

LEGAL FIGHT EXPECTED

Company, It Is Said, Will Contend That Kneeland Had Full Authority Over Equipment to Be Used.

Responsibility for Patrick Kneeland's death, which occurred at the Pond Tool Works foundry two months ago, is charged by the counsel for his estate against the company, and a claim for damages has been presented. It is not believed that the liability company will be admitted, and Codington & Swackhamer, counsel for Mrs. Kneeland, who is her husband's executrix, are ready to bring suit.

The Pond management has turned its side of the case over to the indemnity company in which it is insured, and the lawyers are now negotiating with that company. From what has leaked out about the claim, it is believed that the court battle will be an interesting one. Kneeland was foreman of the men who moved the castings made in the foundry about and he himself fixed the chain about the piece that fell and killed him. It is believed the company will contend that he had full charge of the work involved in moving the casting and that it was his place to see to decide whether or not the sling was safely to be used. His estate will contend that he was not in full authority over the equipment, and that it was not his part to decide whether or not the chain was defective, but only to see that it was of the weight, fixing the transportation of the casting.

Hospital Rate Raised.

The managing committee of Muhlenberg Hospital has raised the rate to be charged ward patients, hereafter admitted, from $5 per week to $7 per week, on $1 per day. The increase is made on account of the increased cost of maintaining the hospital and in accordance with the rates charged by other hospitals of the same class.

E. H. BIRD, P. M.

Miss Addie Weaver, of Brooklyn, is visiting her father, Deputy Sheriff Peter Weaver, of this city, en route for Baltimore, Md., on Monday for a two months' visit at the home of her cousin, Mrs. Florence Jacobson.

The History Club met Monday afternoon at the home of Miss Laura Van Der Beek, on West High street. Papers were read by Mrs. C. G. Bateman, Mrs. Albert Case and Mrs. William A. Ackerman.

The following children have attended the kindergarten every day for six month: Margaret Duborough, Hazen Fry, Kingsley Mackie, Frederick Kleinkneet, Mabel Leay, Katherine O'Connell, Blanche Martin, Alma Wise, William Cole, Alfred De Lorenzo, Herman Eder, William Klein, Raymond Kleid, Lloyd Lorer, Emory Rowe, Lunetta Bowling, Ruth Stoaks, Charles Golan and Samuel Wolden.

A fair was held yesterday afternoon in W. C. T. U. Hall by the Queen Esther Circle of the Methodist church. It was continued last evening.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Edgar Griggs returned today from Catasauqua, Pa., where they had been guests of Mrs. Griggs' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Rhinehart.

BISHOP NEELY ASKS AID

Methodist Prelate Tells of His Work and Needs in South America.

NOW RAISING FUNDS

The Bishop Pictures the Country and His Aims to Congregations.

at First M. E. Services.

Bishop Thomas Neely, of Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, South America, who occupied the pulpit at the First M. E. church Sunday morning and evening, was listened to by large congregations at both services. In the morning at the commencement of the service, he received eight new members on probation at the request of the pastor, Rev. A. C. McCrea.

While the Bishop has great stress on the Lord's command to go into all parts of the earth, preaching the gospel and baptizing people in the name of Christ, he spoke more especially of South America, its size, conditions, educational advantages and the religious outlook. He said that the time had come when evangelical Protestantism must overcome Roman Catholicism there or the latter religion would overcome the former. He declared that Catholicism in South America is nothing like that to be found in this country.

Continuing Bishop Neely said in part:

"South America is not a country but a continent. There are eleven Republics and three European dependencies. The continent is 3,500 miles wide at the widest point and 4,500 miles long. Peru equals in size the United States, west of the Rock Mountains. Argentina is the size of Pennsylvania, Pennsylvania and Brazil is larger than the United States. There are many climates there; the tropical, semi-tropical, the temperate and a touch of the frigid. The soil is fertile and the forests vast. The continent abounds in products. There is gold and silver in every section, and it is rich in tin, copper, lead, petroleum and nitrates. It is accessible by all lines except those from this country. South America is getting ready for a great development, as indicated in Secretary of State Root's address on the imports and exports.

"There have been great changes in South America in the last few years and the religious influence on the part of Great Britain and America is going to make a new South America. I have one Italian preacher to work among the people, where I should have at least twenty-five. The political ideas of South America are American which means much. Speaking from an educational standpoint there is to be found great illiteracy among the people. In Brazil 84 per cent. of the people can neither read nor write, but there is great improvement through American efforts and the Methodist church missionaries.

"What is the religion of South America? There is Paganism and Romanism in the worst form and type, that which teaches that a man can be wicked all his life and then be prayed out of purgatory for a small sum. South America needs the touch of Protestantism. Romanism does not touch or benefit the people. The Catholics hold their missions for the conversion of Protestants, but no such missions are held for the conversion of Catholics. Germany is doing nothing in South America and while Great Britain is doing something it is not enough. The continent has special claims on the United States. It is near us, beside us and it is clearly an American question. We have the Monroe doctrine now let us have the mission doctrine."

In conclusion Bishop Neely spoke of the great need for churches and missions throughout South America and said that he could use $20,000 a year for the distribution of literature, $25,000 for theological and other schools, and $10,000 would go far toward building ten new churches.

He also spoke of the hopeful outlook at Panama, where a student from Drew Theological Seminary is in charge. He said that he had been promised $10,000 for this work if he could raise a similar amount and he is now doing his utmost to accomplish the task. A special appeal was made to the local congregation to double its contribution, of $1,000 to foreign work, it being understood that $1,000 would be given to Bishop Neely for his fund.

In the evening Bishop Neely, the founder and president of the Wesleyan Brotherhood, preached a sermon before the Brotherhood of that church on the subject of "Man." Bishop Neely spoke of the fact that nowadays church congregations and membership are made up of one-third men and two-thirds women. This he attributed largely to the practice of church and Sunday-school workers of devoting two-thirds attention to the feminine portion of the church and one-third to the men. He said that this order could be reversed easily and in fact the proper plan is taken of the boys in the Sunday-school they will get the habit of attending church and become useful members.

The Bishop declared that the services must be made attractive to men; there must be dignity in them. He held that men liked the dignified ritual of the lodge and they gather for an Elmore touring car.

in such meetings because they like to be among men. "A minister cannot resort to sensationalism in his sermons and expect to attract men to his church," declared the Bishop. "Once you get the men attending your church give them something to do, make them think that they have talents which will be of use in spreading the gospel." The Bishop laid great stress on the importance of giving strangers a hearty welcome to church services, providing them with comfortable seats and making them feel at home.

PLAINFIELD ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL TEAM WINS

DEFEAT OLD RIVALS FROM THE OCEANIC BY QUICK WORK.

By quick passing and a readiness to seize every advantage, the Plainfield Association football team defeated their old rivals of the steamship Oceanic Saturday afternoon. The score was 3 to 0. The game took place on the home grounds.

Both teams played fast from the start. While the wind was too high for accurate kicking the game was prettily played. Plainfield scored her first goal in the middle of the first half, Jameson sending the ball through for a goal after a clever pass by Jack Martin.

In the second half the Oceanics nearly scored. They got at Plainfield's goal and sent the ball in, and but for quick work by Morgan, the goal, who knocked the ball out just in the nick of time, they would at least have escaped a whitewashing.

The teams were well matched. Each visited the other's end and there were lively times at every stage of the play. Smeaton played a great game.

After the contest the visitors were entertained at supper at Cleveley's restaurant in the upstairs dining room. The committee in charge of the supper was made up of D. B. Martin, William Spalding, William Howes and William McGregor.

The line-up:

PLAINFIELD.	OCEANICS.
Morgan	Spellasy
goal.
Craig	G. Davis
Farrow	Murphy
backs.
McComb	Vowles
Bucklin	Bartholomew
McGregor	Lamb
half-backs.
J. Martin	Daniel
Boyd	Bowman
Jameson	Whitty
Sutton	Evans
Smeaton	Malony
forwards.

UNION PAINTERS PLAN FOR A STATE CARD

WAGE SCALE IN CRAFT HERE TO BE $3.50; 44 HOURS WORK.

The New Jersey Conference Board of the Painters, Paper Hangers and Decorators of America met in the Taylor building, this city, Sunday afternoon, for the purpose of discussing business pertaining to the craft. Seventy-five delegates, representing forty different locals in all parts of the State, were in attendance and the session proved to be one of the most helpful the board has ever conducted.

The subject of having a State card was thoroughly talked over, the idea being to obviate the necessity of members of different locals having to take out a clearance card when going from one locality to another. It appeared to be the solution of a difficult problem but definite action was deferred.

Another important matter taken up was the adoption of the wage scale of Local 486, of this city, which has been presented to the employers it asks for an increase of pay from $3 per day to $3.50 and a total of forty-four hours work for the week, the same to take effect May 1, 1907.

The local delegates appointed to the State convention are John E. Mathews, Fred M. Hale and Charles J. Trotter.

The committee from No. 486 who took charge of and entertained the delegates were Albert MacDonald, L. August Renstrom, Edward Hobby, William Mead, William Treat, Leslie Marsh and John Case.

J. E. Skiff's Annual Recital.

The annual song recital will be given by J. Edmund Skiff in the Y. M. C. A. hall Thursday night December 13. A programme so equally attractive as the one last year will be rendered. Mr. Skiff tenor, will be assisted by Miss Mae Jean Colt, of New Haven, Conn. She enjoys an enviable reputation in the New England States as a reader and has declined several offers to go on the stage. As accompanist Mr. Skiff will have the services of Mrs. Caia Aarup Greene, of New York, who so ably assisted him last year. The programme will include three manuscript songs by Mrs. Green's compositions.

Auto License Granted.

Among the licenses granted during the past week to owners of automobiles was one to Andrew C. Thompson, 312 West Front street, for an Elmore touring car.

CHARLES BUCHLER TELLS HIS SIDE OF THE STORY

WIFE DERANGED BY RELIGION, HE SAYS; HE ALWAYS SUPPORTED HER.

Charles Buchler, husband of the former Plainfield girl, whose appeal to the law in Montclair for an order compelling Buchler to support her was reported in the Daily Press last week, together with her story of alleged hardship, has written a letter to the Newark News in his own defence.

He declares that Mrs. Buchler became interested in a religious band known as the Christian Faith Society a number of years ago, and became mentally deranged. She neglected home and children, he declares, and finally he was compelled, on the advice of a physician, to have his wife put away. She was brought back from the asylum last May, he says, but she relapsed, became violent and assaulted him, after which she was returned to the asylum. She left there to go to an aunt's home in September.

Buchler says he has always paid for her care, both at the asylum and at the aunt's home. There was no suspicion on his part, he says, that anything was wrong until the complaint was filed. He is willing to do his duty and support Mrs. Buchler, but he feels it would be unfair to him and the children to have his wife back at home. She was advised to stay away from him, he declares, by a physician.

COLD WEATHER AND FROZEN HYDRANT BOTHER FIREMEN

EXPERIENCE ALL MANNER OF DIFFICULTIES AT EARLY MORNING BLAZE.

While the wind was blowing an embryonic gale and the thermometer kept flirting with the zero mark, the city fire department was called out at 6:30 this morning for a blaze at the home of Joseph Coniskie, located on Evona avenue, just off Third street. The firemen met with all sorts of difficulties beside the villainous weather from a mix-up in the alarm to a frozen hydrant but they did splendid work. The house was saved from destruction and a liberal estimate places the loss at $400.

What started the fire is unknown to Chief Doane and Coniskie. It evidently had its origin in the cooking stove in the kitchen and when discovered by the family was making its way up between the walls to the attic. An alarm was turned in from box 49 but it gave a jumble of numbers on the gong and those sent so that the department was unable to respond. Nearly ten minutes afterward 49 was again pulled by John Kriney and it came in without a hitch.

The first hydrant tried was at Evona and Hunter avenues and it was found frozen solid, the first time such a thing has occurred in the history of the department. The next nearest one was at Evona and Clinton avenues and it was all right, though 1,500 feet of hose had to be laid in. Proper pressure was secured by attaching the steamer.

The work of checking the fire had been progressing, however, as the chemical engine from the East End house was busy. Two tanks had been emptied when the hydrant stream was turned on and the flames were soon extinguished. It was so cold while the department was at work that the spray from the hose froze on the nozzle men and they were enveloped in ice from head to foot. The house is not badly damaged.

The loss is covered by insurance, both on the building and furniture. It was discovered early this morning by neighbors and the fire department was all right, though a false alarm was off color in spots and electricians had been at work on it. They got busy again the first thing this morning and located the trouble that caused box 49 to go wrong, it being due to a ground in the circuit.

HOLY CROSS VESTRY.

At the annual parish meeting of the Church of the Holy Cross held Monday, the election of wardens and vestrymen resulted as follows:

Wardens—Dr. J. H. Carman, Chas. L. Nichols; vestrymen, William L. Saunders, Frederic Harrington, Hiram Woodruff, C. E. Murray, J. W. Hegeman; delegates to Diocesan Convention, George P. Dupee, J. O. Stevens, Herbert Langford; alternates, William L. Saunders, Dr. J. H. Carman, C. E. Murray.

These committees were appointed by the rector, Rev. George A. Warner: Finance, Dr. J. H. Carman, William L. Saunders, Frederic Harrington; news and subscriptions, C. L. Nichols, Dr. J. H. Carman, Wm. L. Saunders; buildings and grounds, Hiram Woodruff, C. E. Murray, J. W. Hegeman; music, Frederic Harrington, J. W. Hegeman and C. E. Murray.

Miss Griscom Engaged.

The engagement of Miss Jean Whitelock Griscom to Raymond V. V. Miller was announced today at a luncheon given to Miss Griscom's young friends by her mother, Mrs. William Griscom, at their home on Sycamore avenue, North Plainfield. Mr. Miller is the son of Major and Mrs. W. D. W. Miller, of Plainfield.

MINISTER APPEALS TO LOCAL CONGREGATION TO AID IN REFORM MOVEMENT.

For the purpose of stimulating an interest in the reform work now being carried on in the Congo State, under the auspices of the Congo Reform Association, Rev. Everett Burr, formerly of this city, but now of Boston, spoke at the First Baptist church Sunday morning. The horrible practices in the Congo State were vividly pictured, showing how the natives are tortured and made to suffer almost indescribable persecutions.

The Congo Reform Association is the result of reports received that the native inhabitants were being subjected to the most inhuman treatment by officers bearing Leopold's Commission, and acting under his orders. The pressure of public sentiment forced the British Government in 1903 to make an investigation of the situation. This proved that the infamies were far worse than reported. Then followed the organization of the reform association in England and later in this country.

After the service Sunday morning, in accordance with suggestions, Dr. Chambliss appointed a committee of three, F. E. Kinsman, S. St. John McCutchen and W. A. Connor, to consider the matter and bring it before the church next Sunday. The purpose of the association is to have a petition presented to Congress and thus seek to put a stop to the inhuman treatment now existing. Other countries are also taking up the matter.

VICTOR HUGO AS THE SPOKESMAN FOR FRANCE

SUBJECT OF LECTURE BY DR. PAGE BEFORE MONDAY AFTERNOON CLUB.

The study of Victor Hugo as novelist dramatist and poet, which has occupied the members of the Monday Afternoon Club during the past three months, was concluded Monday with a charming lecture at the Casino given by Curtis Hidden Page, Ph. D., of Columbia University, on the subject, "Victor Hugo as Spokesman for France." Professor Page described in a forceful manner the conditions in the political life of France from the date of the Revolution in 1789; its effect on Victor Hugo's life and character and Victor Hugo's influence on its history and destiny.

His mother was a Royalist, but this great writer, born in 1802, developed high ideals for his country and the world and stood for equality, fraternity, the enlargement of civilization and the amelioration of suffering. Referring to poor men who had won high places, Victor Hugo said it was a greater thing for an aristocrat and royalist to become a democrat. Professor Page quoted Hugo as saying: "France deserved Austerlitz, but the Empire deserved Waterloo." He dwelt briefly on his exile because he opposed the plans of Napoleon Third and his return to Paris when that monarch lost his throne.

The speaker gave an evidence of Victor Hugo's political foresight in his clear understanding of the conditions in our own American nation. Before Sumter was fired upon, Hugo said he feared the dissolution of the union, but rejoiced at the prospect of the abolition of slavery. Later, he said that Spain should be driven from her North American possessions and Cuba should be free.

A high place was claimed by Professor Page for Victor Hugo as a novelist and dramatist, though in the former he was sometimes grotesque and excessive and in the latter was sometimes melodramatic, but as a poet in his own tongue he considered him perfect. At the close of the lecture, which held the close attention of a large audience, Professor Page read a couple of French poems by request.

Fred Work's Advancement

Fred Work, of Prospect place, who has been a train dispatcher in the New Jersey Central offices at Communipaw for several years, has been appointed chief dispatcher of the Lehigh and Hudson railroad. He will be located at Warwick, N. Y., and will enter upon his new duties once. The office is an important one and Mr. Work's selection was brought about by the ability he displayed while with the New Jersey Central. He has a host of local friends who, while regretting to see him leave Plainfield, are pleased at his advancement.

Planning a Congo Meeting.

F. E. Kinsman, who is specially interested in the work of the Congo State Reform Association, has secured the consent of Rev. Everett Burr to speak in this city at a public meeting to be held at some place to be decided upon. Mr. Burr occupied the pulpit at the First Baptist church Sunday morning, speaking on this subject, and those who then believed that it might be wise to hold a public meeting soon, when further light on the subject can be gained.

BIG HIT SCORED HERE BY "THE STUDENT KING"

VOCIFEROUS APPLAUSE FREQUENT AT THE NEW PLAINFIELD SATURDAY.

Direct from its successful runs in Boston and Philadelphia, Reginald DeKoven's latest light opera, "The Student King," as produced by Henry W. Savage, was presented at the New Plainfield theatre Saturday afternoon and night. With a cast and chorus of seventy-five people and a special orchestra it proved to be the most delightful offering that local playgoers have enjoyed since the new house opened. Aside from being the largest numerically, the company included several grand opera stars and comedians of wide reputation. The scenic mounting was magnificent and the costumes in each one of the three acts represented a small fortune.

Miss Lina Abarbanell, who headed the cast, came from Germany to sing for Herr Conried at the Metropolitan Opera House and is one of the few artiste's who have one equal success on the dramatic as well as the operatic stage. She is a decidedly vivacious prima donna and her singing was an revelation of delightful skill. The action of the play accords her an unusually large number of solos but it seemed as if the audiences could not hear her enough, so vociferous were the encores. The leading male role was taken by Henry Coote, a robust tenor, whose voice had great opportunities for display in the music alloted him. Alexander Clark was the principal comedian and he furnished the greater part of the fun. He moved in walk across the stage to get a laugh as he is so thin, his knees trembled beneath the weight of his body. Flavia Arcaro, Gustav von Seyffertitz, Ditmar Poppin, Thomas Leary, Eva Fallon and many other well known players were in the cast. The chorus included two score or more girls who sang as prettily as they looked.

While the attendances both matinée and night were large, they were not what could be expected at an opera so pretentious as "The Student King." The production was secured by Manager Counihan in competition with Elizabeth and Trenton and was worthy of standing room audiences. It opens at the Garden theatre, New York, Christmas night and will probably remain there until spring.

MRS. BERTHA MERRICK STILL RETAINS PIANO.

Mrs. Alice H. Sanford Loses Her Suit in the New Brunswick Court.

The action for damages instituted by Mrs. Alice H. Sanford against Henry Mierrick, Bertha Mierrick and Constable Robert L. Pierce, of New Market, occupied the attention of the district court, New Brunswick, practically all of Monday and a portion of the evening. After the jury had been out from 10 o'clock in the morning until "8:30 o'clock last night, it returned to court and announced through its foreman that it had failed to agree. Clarence L. Murphy, Esq., represented the plaintiff, while R. F. P. vonMindon, of New Market, and Former Judge Cowenhoven, of New Brunswick, represented the defendants.

Mrs. Sanford, Henry Mierrick and Bertha Mierrick, it is said, lived together at New Market. Mrs. Mierrick purchased a piano, but Mrs. Sanford claimed that under the terms of an agreement the instrument came into her possession and she took charge of it. Mrs. Mierrick secured a writ of attachment and recovered it. Then Mrs. Sanford replevined the property, which action was followed by a similar action on the part of Mrs. Mierrick, who replevined the piano. The case became so complicated that the only solution was through an action in the district court. Mrs. Sanford claimed $100 damages. As a result of the trial, Mrs. Mierrick is still in possession of the piano. Judge Hicks presided over the trial.

MEMBERS RECEIVED IN LOCAL CHURCHES

SOME ON PROBATION, OTHERS BY CONFESSION AND A NUMBER BY LETTER.

Twenty-two persons were received into Grace Methodist Episcopal church Sunday morning, by letter, on confession of faith, from probation and on probation, as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Frank Neidig, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Coons, Miss Florence Coons, Miss Edna Coons, Mrs. Fannie Felver, Miss Sarah McKenzick Wright, Miss Caroline J. Barnes, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Larsen, Mrs. Mary E. McMurtry, Mr. and Mrs. George S. Monck, Mrs. Grace Tomlinson, Mrs. David Bodine, Miss Nellie Messenger, Miss Annie Rupert, Herman Rupert, Mrs. Etta H. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Harned.

A beautiful sight and one that cheered the hearts of the pastor, Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, and his people Sunday morning, was the reception of eleven young persons into the membership of Trinity Reformed church. Ten of the number were from the Sunday-school.

Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, pastor, gave the right-hand-of-fellowship to fourteen new members at the communion service Sunday morning. All but a few were received on confession. Rev. Everett Burr, formerly of Plainfield, took charge of the communion service at the request of Dr. Chambliss.

PRINCETON'S 1,348 STUDENTS.

The University Catalogue to Be Issued Shortly.

Princton, Dec. 1.—The University Catalogue for the academic year 1906-1907 is now in the hands of the printer, and will be ready for distribution within a few weeks. The catalogue is to be similar to last year's as regards style, type, paper and number of pages. The general divisions are also the same.

The statistics from the catalogue sheet show a department in all departments of the university of 1,348, a decrease of 37 from last year. This year's freshman class shows a decrease of 63 under last year's entering class. The faculty has increased its number from 155 to 164. The graduate school shows a slight increase, while the number of special students is less than half that of last year. The classification by States show that the largest number of students are from Pennsylvania, which furnishes 320. New Jersey is second with 288, and New York third with 279. The remaining students are distributed among forty-one States and the British Isles, Canada, Japan, Cuba, Ceylon, Mexico, Africa and Turkey.

CHIEF'S NARROW ESCAPE

Doane's Rig Crashes into Coal Wagon While Speeding to a Fire.

DRIVER HURLED OUT

Fireman Kiederling Thrown From His Seat to the Road But Is Only Slightly Hurt.

In responding to a still alarm for a grass fire on Denmark road at 5:45 Friday night, Chief Doane's rig collided with a coal wagon being backed out of David Dunavan's yard on East Second street, near Richmond. Daniel Keiderling, the chief's driver, was hurled from his seat to the roadway but escaped with only a severe abrasion of the right leg and torn clothing. Chief Doane was severely jolted but remained in the wagon, afterward jumping out and assisting Keiderling to his feet.

Though the crash was a hard one the fire rig was but slightly damaged. The left tire on the left side was torn off and the cross bar of the shafts was broken, otherwise there were only a few scratches on the wheels. The coal wagon which belongs to Robert L. Cline, was turned halfway around by the force of the collision but it was practically unharmed. The horse became twisted in his harness and it was probably a fortunate thing as it bound him up so that he could hardly move. "Billy," the chief's horse, displayed the same intelligence as he has shown in various other matters and remained perfectly still. When examined afterward he was found to be without a scratch.

The chief and Keiderling returned to headquarters and on Dr. Pitts' recommendation, the latter was sent home. The injury to his leg is not serious but it will be very sore for several days.

In speaking of the accident, Chief Doane said that he was proceeding up East Second street and just beyond Washington told Keiderling to catch up to No. 2 hose wagon, just ahead, in order that he might give some instructions to Captain Dieli. The chief took a careful view of the road in front of him and saw nothing in the way. His rig had just pulled alongside of the other vehicle on the left, when the coal wagon loomed in front of them. They were upon it almost before Keiderling could pull on his reins, the driver, a colored man, having backed it very suddenly. The bells of both fire rigs were ringing as usual and their lamps were lighted, so that the negro could not have failed to see them had he taken the precaution to look up and down the street before he came out. He was unaware of their approach until just before the crash.

The still alarm was sent in by a woman living on Denmark road who feared that the grass would set fire to some nearby houses. Capt. Dieli continued on with No. 2 wagon after the crash and found the flames extending over a large area but easily kept away to cause any serious trouble. He was unable to get the wagon through because of sewer excavations but with a couple of men beat out the fire in the worst patch. A man in the neighborhood declared the flames had been started by people living in that section and that there was no cause for alarm.

Wires Caused Wilbur Blaze.

Louis Spence, electrical inspector for the Board of Underwriters middle department, in company with Chief Doane, yesterday, made a thorough inspection of Freedoler & Bro.'s T. Wilbur's home, damaged by the Wednesday night. At its conclusion Mr. Spence declared without hesitation that the blaze was started by electric light wires. He found that they had not been soldered at the joints but were covered with tape. This dried in time and smoldered from the heat of the current, causing sparks to drop down, thus causing a fire. Mr. Wilbur will have the house repaired as soon as the insurance is adjusted.

Stole Thanksgiving Dinner.

Thieves visited the cellar of the Misses Gill's boarding house in Central avenue and West Fifth streets on Thanksgiving Eve and carried off a quantity of vegetables and fruit. A member of the household went into the cellar at about 8:30 Wednesday night and discovered that the sum of sweet potatoes, turnips, onions, apples and grape fruit had disappeared. The family had been about the house that evening as usual, but had not heard or noticed anything out of the ordinary. Some of the cellar windows were unlocked and it is thought perhaps the burglars entered in this way.

Second Chamber Music Concert.

Joseph McIntyre announces his second chamber music concert to be given at the Casino on Friday night, December 7, at 8:30 o'clock. McIntyre is pianist, will be assisted by Vladimir Dubinsky, 'cellist, and Sigmund Culp, violinist, of the New York Symphony Orchestra, and Miss Edith Rogers, mezzo-soprano, of New York. Mr. Culp was heard at the first concert of the season and Mr. Dubinsky has appeared here at several concerts given by Mr. McIntyre.

Voorhees Huff, of Spooner avenue, has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Abram Tunison, of Somerville.

PERFECTLY SATISFIED.

"I don't wish to take up your time," the caller said, "unless you think it is likely I might interest you in the subject of life insurance."

"Well," replied the man to the desk, "I'll not deny that I have been thinking about it lately. Go ahead. I'll listen to you."

Whereupon the caller talked to him 45 minutes without a stop.

"And now," he said at last, "are you satisfied that our company is one of the best, and that our plan of doing business is thoroughly safe?"

"Yes."

"Have I convinced you that we furnish as good insurance as any other company, and at rates as cheap as you can get anywhere?"

"Yes; I am satisfied with what you say—perfectly satisfied."

"Well, don't you want to take out a policy with us?"

"No! Oh, no! I'm a life insurance agent myself. I thought I might be able to get some tips from you!"

BILL'S $1,000,000 FEE

Largest Fee Ever Paid as a Lawyer For Settling a Single Dispute.

FOR STEEL MERGER

Some Other Practitioners Who Received Large Sums—W. D. Guthrie Got $800,000.

What is said to be one of the largest single fees ever paid to a lawyer was the $1,000,000 which James B. Dill, of New Jersey, received for settling the disputes which arose between Andrew Carnegie and Henry C. Frick over the transfer of the properties merged in the United States Steel Corporation, says the New York Sun. Mr. Dill, however, as observed by the Van Norden Magazine, has now given up his stupendous corporation fees for the small annual salary of a judge.

A fee only $200,000 less than Mr. Dill's was paid to a New York lawyer, William D. Guthrie, who received $400,000 for drawing the will of Henry B. Plaut, owner of the Plaut system of steamships, railways and hotels. The Plaut estate was valued at $24,000,000, the widow's share of which was $8,000,000, and this having been left in trust she engaged the lawyer to bring suit for its release. His fee represented 10 per cent. of her share.

Joseph H. Choate, before his appointment as Ambassador to Great Britain, received $200,000 for a single argument before the United States Supreme Court, the effect of which was that the income tax law was declared unconstitutional. As Ambassador at London Mr. Choate's salary was $18,000.

Among other large fees of lawyers may be mentioned $100,000 received by John E. Parsons, a New York, for drawing a single deed, $10,000 charged by D. B. Hill for making a single argument in the Molineux case, $100,000 formerly received yearly by Chauncey M. Depew from the New York Central Railroad Company and $20,000 a year from the Equitable Life; more than $200,000 a year until recently earned by W. Bourke Cockran from consultation practice, and the many thousands of dollars paid to Samuel Untermeyer as counsel in the shipyard litigation and in recent insurance cases.

The fee of $30,000 and traveling expenses which was paid to Dr. Adolph Lorenz, of Vienna, to treat Lolita Armour for congenital hip dislocation was much less than has frequently been paid abroad by royalty. King Edward, when Prince of Wales, once paid a physician $50,000 for four weeks' services.

The fee of $1,000 which a New York dentist charged Prince Louis of Battenberg on the latter visiting this country with his fleet a year ago, was much commented upon. For a dentist's fee the sum was undoubtedly large, but as compared with some physician's fees it looks insignificant.

Probably the record for large fees of this class is held by Dr. Walter C. Browning, of Philadelphia, who sent to the executors of the estate of Senator C. L. Magee a bill for $190,000. Explaining his charge Mr. Browning said that his ordinary charge for consultation in his office is $20 an hour, and outside the office $40 an hour. These rates, he said, Senator Magee had voluntarily agreed to double.

Other Big Fees.

Baltimore, the seat of Johns Hopkins University, noted for its output of physicians, has contributed largely to the list of big fees for doctors. Prof. Howard A. Kelly, of Johns Hopkins Hospital, received $21,000 for twenty-one days' treatment of the wife of a mine owner.

Prof. A. McLane Tiffany, of the same city, was paid $10,000 for performing an operation on a New York patient, and Prof. J. W. Chambers received $5,000 for operating on a deputy warden who had been stabbed by a prisoner. A Chicago physician, Dr. C. T. Parks, charged $10,000 for a single operation.

In New York city there probably are four or five physicians whose practice, mostly with the wealthy, represents an annual income of $100,000 or more. Five or six others earn from $50,000 to $60,000, and about 200 make from $10,000 to $40,000.

The high water mark for presidents of railroad companies is about $50,000 at the present time, although L. F. Lorce received $100,000 as president of the Rock Island system. In some cases fees of these officials, however, the salary as president does not represent the total of their pay. Samuel Spencer receives not only $50,000 a year as president of the Southern Railroad, but has other emoluments from offices held in similar lines.

A remark credited to Milton H. Smith when he was president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad is that no railroad president can earn for his company more than $25,000 a year, and it is said that he refused a larger salary than that for himself. Charles M. Hays, who went from the Southern Pacific to the Grand Trunk and who initiated the Grand Trunk Pacific project, one of the greatest enterprises in railroad building on the continent, receives $25,000 a year.

The salaries of president of banks, even those in the largest cities, are as a rule very much less than the salaries of railroad presidents. James Stillman, president of the National City Bank, of New York, is paid only $25,000 a year.

The salary of Henry O. Havemeyer as head of the American Sugar Refining Company is $75,000 a year. William E. Corey, president of the United States Steel Corporation, receives $100,000 a year, and the chairman of the board of directors gets the same amount.

In contrast are the government salaries—$50,000 to the President, $8,000 to a Cabinet officer, $13,500 to Admiral Dewey, $1,000 to General Chaffee, Chief of Staff; $3,000 to a captain in the navy. Chief Justice Fuller, who was also last year and now receives $13,000.

The church pays its leading men no better than the State. A recent Congregational year book gave no instance of a preacher's salary above $5,000.

An Episcopalian bishop may receive from $3,000 to $12,500. Famous city parishes in relatively few cases pay clergymen as high as $10,000 a year, but the demands of charity upon such clergymen are heavy.

IT MADE NO DIFFERENCE.

How the Colonel Came to Make a Speech Cut Rates.

"Well, gentlemen, what can I do for you today?" queried the colonel as he entered his office after a brief absence and found three farmer looking men in possession.

"We are a committee from the county fair," explained one, "and we want to see about the address. You make 'em, don't you?"

"Oh, certainly!"

"What's your figger?"

"I delivered two county fair addresses last fall and received $50 each."

"Um! Too high."

"There was no fault found with my prices last year. It takes time to prepare one, you know, and then I must journey down and deliver it. The figure I named is a very reasonable one."

"Look here, colonel," said the chairman of the committee, after considering a bit, "have you got one of your old addresses on hand?"

"I believe so."

"And can't you put 'er in for twenty-five?"

"But some one might get on to it."

"We'll take all the chances of that. All the people who will listen to you will be old Mrs. Cosely who is as deaf as a post, and old Jim Shaw, who will take it for a Fourth of July oration anyhow, and you won't run the slightest risk. Won't this make a difference in your figgers?"

The colonel blushed and stammered and said he thought it would, and when the committee left they had his receipt for $30, and he agreed to be on time.—Chicago News.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Christmas McClure's contains some of the most varied, picturesque, and striking material which the magazine has ever gathered together in a single number. Perhaps together in a single lumber. Perhaps the most interesting single feature is an editorial article which tells of Mary Baker G. Eddy and a history of Christian Science is a movement on which all eyes are turned today, and the announcement that a true history of this great romantic movement and its leader is forthcoming, marks an excellent stroke of magazine policy. Another chapter of the Carl Schurz Deminiscences recalls his first journey to the new crude West, a visit in London, and his first hearing of Jenny Lind and of Wagner—a remarkable musical experience, described with great poetry of feeling. Lincoln Steffens relates the story of Judge Lindsey's splendid triumph in Denver, and C. P. Connolly tells how the Clark men failed in their attempt to handle the Supreme Court of Montana, and of the memorable scenes at the investigation of Clark's election in Washington.

Language Follows the Conquerer.

As trade follows the flag, so does language follow the conquerer who conquers with muscle or brain. In the century before the Christian era two languages, Latin and Greek, shared the world's riviling for business, Greek for ideas—and Cicero in his Letters dropped in the Greek phrase as a man writing in English today may express an idea in French, says a London exchange. Latin was the language of business—and missed it—for the outside world beat them with battleaxes and barbarous speech. If there is to be a universal language (we are not speaking of a universal code, such as Esperanto) it will be, not Latin, but a language of nuances and individualities), it must be the language of a conqderer. And it may not be worth while to spread death and disaster through a world that is taught at last to spell "diner" "dinner."

The Clever Nurse.

Grandmother—Why, nurse, whatever are you doing of to bring so young an infant into the open air on so cold and windy a day as this? Nurse—But you surely do not think that so small a child understans differences in temperature?—Il Mondo Umoristico.

Mrs. William Demarest, wife of the letter-carrier, is seriously ill at her home on Somerset street.

JIM WAS WISE.

An excited, middle-aged lady bounced into the local police station the other day and accosted the inspector on duty.

"Where's my Jim?" she demanded.

"Beg pardon, madam—dog, I presume?" said the officer.

"Don't you dare to presume nothing of the kind," snapped the lady. "Dog, indeed! No, sir, husband—my husband. He's missing, disappeared, decamped—"

"You don't say so!"

"But I'd have you to understand that I do say so, young man. How dare you sit there and flatly contradict a ratepayer—leastways, the lawful wife of one. I'll report you, sir. Do you hear that? I'll report you! Where's my husband?"

"My dear madam—"

"How dare you call me your dear madam? Do you think I come here to be insulted? I tell you my husband has decamped, and you sit there like a dummy! What do you think of that?"

"Well, madam," responded the police inspector, "I haven't the pleasure of your husband's acquaintance, but I should say he's a very wise man. Constable Blunt, show this lady out."

Revenge.

The reporter had been sent to get an interview out of the noted burglar who had been caught in the act and was behind the bars at the police station.

"The boys say you put up a pretty stiff fight, Bill," said the reporter. "I'd like to have your version of the affair. It ought to make a good story."

"It'll make a good story, all right," sullenly answered Bill, "but I'll see you in Pittsburg before I'll give it to your paper. It was in your society columns that I saw the item that the Thompsons had shut up their house and gone away for the summer—and they hadn't."—Chicago Tribune.

Naturally She Was Surprised.

"Why, papa," said the fair girl, "wasn't that singular?"

"Wasn't what singular?" the old gentleman asked, as he examined the railway tickets which he had just purchased.

Worked Before Eating.

"Do you ever take any exercise after a hearty meal, my man?" asked the lady at the back door, with an eye in the direction of her wood-pile.

HUNT CLUB'S BIG DAY

Rides From New York and Elsewhere Join in Hunt and Attend Breakfast.

CROWDS SEE THE CHASE

Jumpers in Fine Trim—Special Train Brings Riders to Baltusrol.

Thanksgiving Day was a gala one for the members and friends of the Watchung Hunt Club, the delightful weather attracting about 300 people to the Baltusrol Golf Club, for the hunt breakfast which was given by Mrs. Charles D. Freeman and Louis Keller. Elaborate preparations were made for the entertainment of the club and its guests, and the clubhouse was beautifully decorated appropriate to the season.

A special train on the Lehigh Valley Railroad from New York brought a large number of prominent people from the metropolis, including Mr. and Mrs. Reeve Merritt, cousins of President Roosevelt, who joined in the hunt.

After the hunt breakfast, the hounds were brought up in front of the clubhouse, and with the riders, their horses and the guests, there was presented an attractive picture. All roads leading to Baltusrol were crowded with horses and carriages and automobiles, and when the hunt was started, many followed in carriages and autos, while others were lined up along the course selected to watch the jumpers. There were a great many spills, but no one was injured.

The course selected is a sporty one, extending from Baltusrol to Scotch Plains, about eight miles. It runs along the mountains and there are numerous fences and deep ravines to jump. The hunt ended at the home of Mrs. Warren Ackerman in Scotch Plains.

Many of the horses did not take the jumps clear and clean, in fact the only horse that had a perfect record was Beau Brummel, ridden by Miss Mary Williams Connons, who has just come from England. Tom Vaughan, the other club whip, rode Pilot. Beau Brummel was recently brought to Plainfield from Virginia by Dr. M. O'M. Knott and considering that he is only four years old his performance is remarkable.

Among those in the party yesterday were the following:

Mr. and Mrs. Reeve Merritt, Mrs. A. C. Wilmerding, Mr. and Mrs. George R. Sheffields, Miss Belt, Yale Smith, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Shepard, Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Johnson, Miss Grace Ruggles, Mrs. Renshtaw Jones, the Misses Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. R. Hudson, Miss DeBarry, Mrs. Townsend Ashmore, Miss Ashmore, Mr. and Mrs. Beverley Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence, Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Darrell, Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Farrelly, Mr. and Mrs. Courtland VanRennelaer, Mr. and Mrs. John E. Roosevelt, Miss Beatrice Bonner, Gerald Bonner, Mr. and Mrs. Ashton Harvey, Miss Harvey, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. DINNER FOR YOUNG MEN.

Annual Y. M. C. A. Affair a Very Pleasant Affair.

England, Scotland and New England and the West were represented at the annual Thanksgiving dinner of the Y. M. C. A. to young men away from home. The traditional informality and bonhommie marked the affair, which was served at the Old Homestead, Washington avenue.

There were fifteen guests. One was from Newfoundland, one from Scotland, one from England, two from Illinois, four from Connecticut, four from Vermont, and one from New York State. The stories of "back home" and of the wanderings from there, which have always been the feature of the dinner, were unusually interesting. Secretary Kenneth Robbie, Physical Director Haydn W. Barrows and G. L. Eastman, who represented the association at the table, did their part in the reminiscing.

Announcement is made of the marriage on Wednesday night in Newark of Miss Lillian Ingerwise, formerly of this city, and John Ingerwiser, both of Newark. The couple are now spending their honeymoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Glaentzer, of New street.

LOSS BY FIRE, $1,500

ON THANKSGIVING EVE

Impossible to Put Out Fire With Chemical Engine and Two Streams of Water Were Put On.

The home of Freeholder S. P. T. Wilbur, located at 517 Westervelt avenue, was badly damaged by fire which broke out on the third floor shortly after 10 o'clock Wednesday night. It evidently originated in the servant's room from crossed electric light wires and had gotten under great headway before it was discovered. When the firemen arrived, an attempt was made to extinguish it with the chemical; stream, but later two lines of hose were laid in. As a result the lower floors were flooded and a heavy loss was occasioned by water. The department worked for over an hour before the last of the blaze was killed.

Mr. Wilbur was not at home during the evening and the only occupants of the house were Mrs. Wilbur, her daughter, Miss Louise Wilbur, and a friend, Mr. Tatham, of Newark. Mrs. Wilbur had gone to the third floor and was started by hearing a crash coming from some part of the house and immediately afterward smelling smoke. She called downstairs to have Mr. Tatham investigate and he hurried about but found nothing to explain. Mrs. Wilbur then opened the attic door and a volume of smoke poured out. Her cries brought Mr. Tatham upstairs and he made an effort to get to the third floor and succeeded to the extent of finding that it was ablaze from end to end. Mrs. Wilbur had in the meantime gone into the street and had given the alarm, box 17 being pulled by Walter McNaughton.

The firemen ran the chemical hose directly into the attic but they were soon beaten back by the thick volumes of smoke and the intense heat. Chief Doane ordered hydrant streams to be brought up. They were used with good effect and had it not been for the flooding the damage would have been comparatively small.

Mr. Wilbur was unable to estimate his loss today but Chief Doane puts it at about $1,500 complete, $500 being on personal effects, in either instance the loss being covered by insurance. The family lost nearly every bit of clothing and the servant girl suffered similarly. She had been away from the house all the evening, having gone to a ball at Saengerbund Hall.

The house will be repaired as soon as possible and in the meantime Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur and daughter will make their home with Mr. and Mrs. R. O. Howell at 53 Westervelt avenue.

MISS STEWART BRIDE OF DR. G. B. CORTRIGHT

REV. DR. SCHENCK PERFORMS CEREMONY IN TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH

The marriage of Miss Elsie N. Stewart, of Madison avenue, and Dr. Charles Bartles Cortright, son of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Cortright, Sr., of Newark, took place Saturday in Trinity Reformed church, in the presence of a large number of relatives, friends and acquaintances. Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of the church, officiates. Miss Anna Daley, of this city, is maid-of-honor, while the best man is William Terhune, of Brooklyn, an intimate friend of the groom. The ushers are James Allyn Cortright, of Newark, brother of the groom; LeRoy Woodhull, Irving Martin and Howard J. Runyon, Jr., of this city. James Large Stewart, of McKeesport, Pa., gives his sister in marriage. Miss Edith Sweets, the church organist, plays the wedding marches. After the ceremony a reception will be held at the home of the bride on Madison avenue, which will be attended by fifty relatives and intimate friends. The couple will take a short wedding journey and then take up their residence on Herkimer street, Brooklyn, where the groom has a home furnished.

The bride's gown is of white crepe de chine, trimmed in rich point lace, and she carries a shower bouquet of bride roses. The maid-of-honor's gown is of white silk, trimmed with lace, and she carries a bouquet of pink carnations.

The bride received a wealth of presents, including furniture, linen, cut-glass, silver and goldware and many other useful things.

For several years the bride was engaged here as a trained nurse. Her home before coming to this city was in Jacksonville, Pa. She was graduated from the Muhlenberg Hospital Training School in 1899 and continued to reside here. She was a favorite in a large circle of friends.

Dr. Cortright, who is now a practicing physician in Brooklyn, formerly resided in Newark. He is a graduate of Columbia College and the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York. He is a nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Stoll Woodhull, of West Front street, and has been a frequent visitor in Plainfield.

PLANK BREAKS; ROOFER KNOCKED SENSELESS

WORKMEN FALL WITH PART OF SCAFFOLD AT P. S. C. BARN.

A new spruce plank in a scaffold beneath the roof of the car barn being built for the P. S. C. at Dewey Park broke this morning, and Joseph Morstein and Edward Connor, of Elizabeth, fell the sixteen feet between floor and ceiling with it. Morstein escaped unconscious and Connor was badly bruised.

The men were at work hammering on roofing drop for the Elizabeth Cornice Works. The plank broke without warning, and from no apparent cause. Morstein struck his head against a rail as he landed in a heap on the ground, and when his fellows went to pick him up he was senseless and bleeding from a cut in his scalp. Connor was able to care for himself but he was put on a car with Morstein, and hurried to the trolley station here. Morstein regained his senses after a few minutes, and both men were taken to Dr. Albert Pitts' office on East Front street. The physician dressed their hurts and they were sent home.

PYTHIANS WILL ASK TO HAVE DISTRICTS MERGED

LODGES IN THIS CITY, SOMERVILLE AND BOUND BROOK BELIEVE IT BENEFICIAL

For the purpose of discussing the consolidation of districts 14 and 20, Knights of Pythias members from this city, Somerville and Bound Brook will be presented at a meeting in Pythian hall, Somerville, this evening. The meeting will be the first of two lines of hose were laid in. As a result the lower floors were flooded and a heavy loss was occasioned by water. The department worked for over an hour before the last of the blaze was killed.

H. S. PUPILS PRESENT WELL VARIED PROGRAM

ALL FOUR CLASSES CONTRIBUTE TO THE ENTERTAINMENT.

A reception and class entertainments given by the pupils of the Plainfield High School for the benefit of the Athletic Association were held in the High School on Thanksgiving Eve.

The freshmen presented "Madam Parley's War Works." Those who took part were: Miss Arline Brown, as Madam Jarley; the Misses Eleanore DeGroff, Bessy Alpaugh, Barbara Fleming, Louise Andrews, Katherine Phillips, Ruth McNiff, Paulina Spear and Ida Tier; Howard Runyon, Harold Schenck, James Major, Douglas Davis, Jerry Welsh and Russell Miller.

The minstrel show, given by the sophomore class, made a great hit. William Doane and Clyde Doane were typical end men, and Charles Lolzeaux made a good interlocker. The company was composed of Guion Fountain, John Linderbury, "Bug" Bogardus, Henry de Brigard, William Briggs, Clyde Doane and Charles Lolzeaux.

Solos were sung by Guion Fountain and Clyde Doane, the first being "Cheer Up Mary," and the other "Bill Simons." The entire company sang "Old Kentucky Home," "Cheyenne," and the class song, which was written by Miss Sadie Brouwer. Hits on the teachers and pupils of the school added interest to the affair.

The juniors gave a pantomime represented of "The Ballad of the Oyster Man." Those who took part in this were Miss Esther Crampton, Walter Caldwell and Arthur Titsworth. The shadow-work was cleverly arranged and the acting well done. Miss Elizabeth Pound was the reader.

Originality was the striking feature of the seniors' exhibit, which was one of freakish care and thoughtfulness in preparation, as apparent in the make-up and execution of each part. The different curiosities, and those who represented them were these: Fat Man, Robert Ryter; Lady, Sadie Faulks; Victim, Bertrum Leggett; The What Is It? Joseph Osgood; Missing Link, William Douglas; Snake Charmer, Paul Brakely; Trained Monkeys, Joseph VanDeventer and Weston Gavett; Bearded Lady, Stanley Fisher; Legless Man, Fred Smith; Peter Bughuns, the Giant, D. Taylor.

Miss Queenie Tillitson was the palmist and in the sound-proff, parents consulting room on the first floor she fortune-told to a long line.

The candy counter was in charge of Miss Mildred Berry. Before and after the entertainments dancing was enjoyed for a short time; music was furnished by Miss Mable Maxson, piano; Arthur Mosher, violin, and Percy Mygrant, cornet.

During the last three dances refreshments were served.

The committee in charge of the entertainment was Weston Gavette, chairman; Fred Smith and Rebecca Kyte. A good sum was cleared.

ALL THE FOLKS HAD A REAL GOOD TIME.

At the Pad and Pencil Club's Annual Country Dance.

Chin whiskers, overalls and crinkled boots, in an atmosphere replete with segments of cornshucks and the odor of elder, were plentious in Taylor's hall, North and Park streets, Wednesday night. The spirit behind them being right, and the fiddlers, the fellers who played the horn, and the perfessor who played the pianer, all being real good musicians, just the sort to make folks down New York, the fourth annual country dance of the Pad and Pencil Club proved to be an event long to be remembered in annals of our beautiful and thriving village.

The hall was decorated with cornshucks and pumpkins. There was a sufficiency of cornstalks, but the pumpkins bespoke a poor crop. Harry Hughes, who is the noblest farmer of them all, explained to the city folks who asked about this that most of the pumpkins planed last spring had turned into pies.

Cider was plentiful. That is, when the dance started. It wasn't so plentiful after a bit. The committee, made up of the genial Elisha Fuller Brooks, "Pip" Hedger and Chester Muir, tried a new departure and fixed up some grape-juice, but the folks didn't take to it much. Too darned highfalutin.

The dance lasted until the wee sma' hours of the morning, and everybody went home loud in their praises of the hosts. They were very complimentary over the music, which was furnished by eight pieces, well assorted, of the Plainfield Band. First Fiddler Sydney Reeves greatly credit for the way he kept the boys playing together.

Approaching Wedding.

Mrs. Ella J. Carney, of North Plainfield, has issued invitations to the marriage of her daughter, Miss Adelaide Carney, and Arthur Vermeule Austin, of this city. The event will be celebrated Wednesday night, December 7, at 8 o'clock at 817 West Sixth street, the new home of the bride and groom.

Miss Emma V. Fish, formerly of this city, but now of Syracuse, has been spending several days here with Miss Minnie G. Morse, of Franklin place. She will return to Syracuse

MRS. YERKES PASSES FOUR SCORE YEARS

MEMBERS OF HER LATE HUSBAND'S FLOCK BRING HER A TOKEN OF ESTEEM

The eightieth birthday of Mrs. David J. Yerkes, of Grove street, was marked Friday by more than eighty testimonials of love in the shape of letters and remembrances from friends and members of the congregation of the First Baptist church, who hold her in very tender regard, not only for her own worth but in memory of her husband's faithful service to the church for more than forty years.

Last night there was an informal gathering of the family to celebrate the birthday anniversary of Mrs. Yerkes, and unexpectedly a number of the members from the church, including Mr. and Mrs. C. W. McCutchen, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Chapman, Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Knox, Mr. and Mrs. L. V. Randolph, Alexander Gilbert and Rev. Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Chambliss, called and offered their congratulations.

During the festivities Dr. Chambliss read an original poem in honor of Mrs. Yerkes, after which he presented to her a small gold casket containing $80 in gold. The presentation was entirely a surprise to Mrs. Yerkes as was also the coming of the many friends, and she was overcome with feelings of appreciation.

Among the others present were Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Walter A. McGee, Mrs. Hannah Wilson, Miss Ida Yerkes, Miss Ida Yerkes, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Yerkes, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Connor, Mrs. Susan Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Wilson, all members of the family.

Mrs. Yerkes was born in a small village in Scotland, eighty years ago yesterday. In October, 1863, she came to Plainfield with her husband, Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, who in the previous August had received a call to become the pastor of the First Baptist church, where he preached for nearly fifty years. Since 1863 Mrs. Yerkes has always resided in this city. She has five daughters and one son. Her health is exceptionally good and she was able to enter heartily into the festivities of the occasion yesterday.

CHARITY CONFERENCE PLANS ARE MADE

HUGH F. FOX PRESIDED AT MEETING IN ELIZABETH YESTERDAY.

Preliminary plans for one of the largest charity and educational conferences ever held in this state were completed yesterday afternoon at a meeting of the State Charities Aid Association, held at the home of Mrs. E. E. Williamson, in Elizabeth. The conference will be held at Paterson February 22 and 23, when Dr. Henry S. Gaffield, of Princeton University, will be among the many prominent speakers.

The following were the delegates present: Hugh F. Fox, of this city, president; Mrs. F. C. Jacobson, secretary; Father Cronin, of East Nutley; Charles F. Curry, superintendent Insane Asylum; Camden; George Osborne, warden State prison; Dr. W. H. Murray, Stewart E. Hamilton, of Paterson; Dr. George B. Wight, State Commissioner of Charities; A. W. McDougal, of Newark; Judge Sweney, of Newark; Miss Jennie Hoover, of Paterson, and Mrs. E. E. Williamson.

LANTERN BETRAYS A RECKLESS AUTOMOBILIST

DROPS FROM MACHINE AFTER CRASH AND FLIGHT IS VAIN.

Tripped up by his own recklessness, the owner or chauffeur of automobile 5,963 N. J., will have to explain to W. E. Lowe, of Park avenue, or the courts, a smashup he brought about Thanksgiving Day night, and pay for the damage he did. Mr. Lowe doesn't know the owner of car 5,963—yet. He got the lantern that dropped from it, though.

The auto hit Mr. Lowe's closed carriage. The rig driven by Harvey Barber, colored, was turning from Ninth street to Park avenue, when the machine, going swiftly, shot toward it on the curve. The chauffeur made no effort to slow up, and his attempt to clear the carriage by a sharp turn failed. The auto struck a front wheel, glanced along the shafts and ripped the harness to pieces, and pretty nearly scared the horse to death. The rig was thrown against the curb. Instead of stopping, the chauffeur put on speed and disappeared in the darkness.

Barber got down from his seat to look over his carriage and quiet the horse. His eye was caught by something in the road-way and he went out to look at it. The object was an auto lamp, still warm and undoubtedly one that had been torn from the speeding machine as it struck the carriage. The number was on it. The language the chauffeur used when he discovered the lantern missing must have been scandalous.

FIRE DID $15,000 DAMAGE IN CRANFORD

FIRE DEPARTMENT HAD TO CALL ON DEPOSED VOLUNTEERS.

When the recently-organized paid fire department, of Cranford, was called out Thursday morning for the first time, to fight a fire at the Henry Cook livery stable, a frame structure at South avenue and High street, in that place, they were forced to ask the aid of the old volunteer department, in order to save a whole block from destruction. The firement put aside personal jealousies and worked together. They succeeded in preventing the flames from spreading to Cook's storage warehouse, a brick structure which contained $100,000 worth of furniture.

Damage to the extent of $15,000 was done. Of this Cook's loss was $10,000, with no insurance to cover it. Deitrich Krye's carpenter shop was totally destroyed, entailing a loss of $5,000. The blaze started in Krye's place, through some unknown cause. His shop was insured. The fire was the most serious which has occurred in Cranford in five years.

PARK CLUB PROGRAMME FOR BOWLING TOURNEY.

Ten Pin Contest Begins Dec. 7, While Cocked Hat Series Start on Dec. 6.

The bowling committee of the Park Club has announced its programme for the ten pin and cocked-hat tournaments which will begin early next month. A new plan will be tried this year, which, it is hoped, will make the game more interesting to all classes of players. The tournament will be divided into twelve periods, and each player may roll any other player one match each week. The system of handicapping will be similar to that used in medal play in golf, and the handicaps will be changed each week by a rule to equalize all players. Two prizes will be awarded, one for "medal play" and one for "match play." The ten pin tournament will begin Friday night, December 7, and will continue through the season. Four weeks' play will be given of the date for the last contest.

The cocked hat tournament will begin Thursday night, December 6, and will continue each Thursday night thereafter. Four weeks' play will also be given of the date for the last contest. Three games will be rolled each evening, and the player having the highest net score will be given three points, the second highest two points and the third highest one point.

The par score is fixed at 30, or 90 points for the evening. A player scoring less than 90 will be given a handicap of one-third of the difference between his net score and 90, to be added to the points won that evening. A player scoring more than 90 will be penalized in the same proportion. No handicap shall exceed 20 points. A prize will be awarded to the player having the greatest number of points at the end of the season. The bowling committee consists of Frederick O. Ball, J. Brognard Betts and Walter L. Longstreet.

Men's Club Committees.

President Samuel St. John McCutchen, of the Men's Club, of the First Baptist church, has appointed the following committees for the year:

Entertainment—Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, chairman; C. W. McCutchen, James D. MacNab, J. Herbert Case and Harold Serrell. Finance—Edward T. Wilson, chairman; A. W. Day, W. S. Armstrong, E. K. Hartley, M. Bonney, Howard M. Case, chairman; Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan, C. W. McCutchen, George H. Smith. Religious work—William A. Connor, chairman; Reuben Knox, E. J. Bonney, George F. Brown, George H. Batchelor. Reception—J. Henry Cease, chairman; Frank W. Jones, Dr. W. Kempton Browning, Harry H. Woodland. Membership—Dr. Norman H. Prosbaco, chairman; Dr. Douglas Drake, John G. MacLaughlin, W. D. Manning, Kenneth Robbie. Printing and press—Walter C. Dobbins, chairman; Daniel R. Douglass, Harry Joseph. Refreshment—Charles Lee, chairman; Dudley Miller, Ernest Powlison, George H. Batchelor, Charles E. Miles. Meetings are held the second Monday of each month, October to May, inclusive.

Pushed Child Into a Fire.

New York, Nov. 30.—Pushed into a bonfire yesterday by another boy, Harry Carlin, three years old, of No. 160 Moore street, is in St. Catherine Hospital, suffering from burns that may prove fatal. Police of the Stagg street station are searching for the offender. Filled with the holiday spirit, boys and girls, arrayed in fantastic costumes, built a bonfire in Moore street and Bushwick avenue. Attracted by the blaze and shouts, the Carlin boy made his way into the thick of the celebration. Little by little he got further toward the fire, and at last had a place in the front rank. It was then that a larger boy, either unwilling or unable to control, pushed little Harry directly into the flames. Panic followed, and the police and an ambulance were soon upon the scene. In the excitement attending the removal of the injured child the other boy escaped.

GEOLOGY REPORT IS REMARKABLE

WHAT LATEST ISSUE OF THIS STATE HAS TO PRESENT TO JERSEYMEN.

The annual report of the State geologist, Henry B. Kummel, has just come from the public printers, and it contains many highly interesting series of articles by specialists in the matters discussed. These reports have been of great value to the industrial and scientific interests of the State, and have come to be regarded as almost indispensable aids to even a moderate knowledge of our State's resources and adaptabilities. The present report is for the year 1905, but its printing has been relayed that it might incorporate some special reports of great importance, rather than have the information in them held back for nearly if not quite, a half year longer. Besides the administrative report of Mr. Kummel, there is a very carefully written paper on the "Changes Along the Jersey Coast," showing the action of the sea, the character and efficiency of the reclamation works, and the need of more thorough State supervision and direction in collating data and in the work of reclamation. This and the rest of the other reports is well illustrated with plates and drawings.

Then there is a "Brief Sketch of Fossil Plants" and "The Flora of the Cliffwood Clays," by Edward W. Berry. This account of the fossil plants and their value to the geologist is interesting as well as instructive to those who are fond of science for itself.

Mr. Kummel has written two of the remaining reports himself, one on "Trenton Limestone," and one on "The White Crystalline Limestones of Sussex and Warren Counties" and one on "The Mining Industry."

The increased use of limestone in the manufacture of Portland cement and the reduction of prices makes the first paper a valuable addition to our knowledge of the distribution and chemical character of this limestone. In connection with this report there is a very fine etached map of the State which shows the deposits clearly indicated on it.

Another map also accompanies a long and carefully prepared discussion of the "Peat Deposits of Northern New Jersey," by C. W. Parmlee and W. H. McCourt. Peat has something of the composition of bituminous coal and is produced in much the same way. It is used largely in Europe as a fuel, and its occurrence in many of the swamps of Northern New Jersey has led to its exploitation. Both as a fuel and as a filler for cattle, in which latter use it is scarcely equaled in value by any other product.

Y. M. C. A. UNIFORM AND EMBLEM REGULATIONS

PHYSICAL DEPARTMENT DECIDES FINALLY AND ISSUES RULES.

Colors, uniforms and emblems have been decided upon by the Physical Department of the Y. M. C. A. The regulations governing them were decided upon finally Friday, and the rules by which the department is to be guided in those matters were drawn up as follows:

The color of the Y. M. C. A. Physical Department shall be royal blue and white. The gymnasium uniform shall be blue shirt and gray turner pants (young men), white shirt and gray turner pants (business men). The basketball team shall be white shirt and blue turner pants, with white stripes and blue emblem. The basketball team and all competition athletics uniforms shall be blue shirt and white pants with blue stripes. The baseball team shall be gray shirt with blue trimmings. The emblem shall be a triangle with wing, with letter P on top line. The emblem shall be awarded by the Y. M. C. A. to those who have fulfilled the following conditions: Members of basketball team who have played 75 per cent. of scheduled games, one-half to be played in each game, at least. To members of baseball team who have played 76 per cent. of scheduled games, two-thirds to be played in a game. To members of football team who have played 60 per cent. of scheduled games. To leader who has 60 per cent. of class attendance during season October 1 to May 1. To winner of 1st, 2d or 3d place in a competitive athletic meet, with three or more associations. To winner of 1st, 2d or 3d place in gymnasium meet, with three or more associations. To winner of all-around (local) athletic championship. To winner of all-around (local) gymnastic championship."

Mrs. Garret Garretson, of this city, has returned from a visit with Abram Tunison, of Somerville.

Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Stevens, of East Orange; Mrs. J. T. Morris, of Boston; Mrs. Arthur Stevens, of this city, and A. G. Stevens, of New York, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Giddes, of Manning avenue, on Thanksgiving Day.

UNITED IN THANKSGIVING

Protestant Ministers and Their Flocks Throng Crescent Ave. Church.

IMPRESSIVE SERVICE

Rev. Hugh Black Preaches—Catholics and Episcopalians Hold Separate Services as Customary.

According to the custom which has been observed for many years, the various congregations of the city joined in a union Thanksgiving service at the Crescent Avenue church, Thursday morning. It was attended by one of the largest gatherings that have yet been noted, practically every seat in the body of the edifice being taken.

As in previous instances, the local ministers were invited to participate in the programme and many of them responded. The speaker for the day was Rev. Hugh Black, M. A., late of Free St. George's church, Edinburgh, Scotland, who recently accepted a call to become professor of practical theology at Union Seminary, New York.

With him on the platform were Dr. J. S. Zelle, of the Crescent Avenue church; Rev. Charles L. Goodrich, of the Congregational church; Rev. J. E. Herrington, of the First Presbyterian church; Dr. J. A. Chambliss, of the First Baptist church; Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, of Trinity Reformed church; Rev. J. W. Musson, of Faith chapel; Rev. L. R. Howard, of Hope chapel, and Rev. A. E. Finn, of the Park Avenue Baptist church.

Many of the clergymen took some part in the exercises, which were as follows: Anthem, reading of sentences of scripture and the Presbyterian proclamation, Dr. Zelle; invocation and the Lord's prayer, Rev. C. L. Goodrich; reading of the Psalter, Rev. L. R. Howard; reading of the scripture lesson, Rev. C. E. Herring; prayer by Dr. Chambliss; sermon, Rev. Hugh Black; general Thanksgiving, Dr. Schenck; offertory prayer, Rev. J. W. Musson. The offering was for the Plainfield Relief Association.

Rev. Hugh Black, who gave the sermon, is a man of magnetic speaking power and he has a forceful way of presenting his ideas. He took his text yesterday from Deuteronomy xi:21: "That your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which the Lord sware unto your fathers to give them, as the days of Heaven upon the earth."

In speaking, he dwelt particularly on the last phrase and said that throughout the Bible and the life of Christ there is always a looking forward to the days of Heaven upon the earth. The same is true of human nature as a whole, mankind always looking forward to a good time, holding the belief that the golden age is in the future and not the past. With special reference to Thanksgiving, Mr. Black acknowledged that the last year and previous years have been prosperous ones but declared that the people must rid themselves of the idea that Heaven will come on earth from material prosperity. Heaven, he said, is in the heart and we must be actuated by it.

Mr. Black is the author of a number of well known books and ranks high as a preacher. His best known work "Friendship" and another one recently published, "Listening to God," has gained wide prominence.

Two services were held at the Church of the Holy Cross Thursday morning, one at 7:30 and the morning prayer and sermon at 10:30 by Rev. George A. Warner, rector, with selections by the choir. The offertory, which was a large one, was given to the missionary fund of the parish.

Services were held at 7 and 10 o'clock at Grace church, yesterday morning, the rector, Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson, being in charge. At the 10 o'clock service, Rev. Mr. Stevenson preached the sermon and there was special music by the choir. The offering was received for The parish work.

Rev. A. S. Peck, rector, conducted special services at St. Stephen's church, yesterday morning, at 7 and 10:30, preaching a sermon at the last service. There was a special offering for the home for old and disabled clergymen, while the donations of fruits and vegetables were distributed among the poor of the parish.

There were two masses at St. Mary's church, yesterday morning, at 6:30 and 9 o'clock. Father Delehanty was in charge of the early mass and Father Schandel had charge of the mass at 7 o'clock and Father Miller the one at 8 o'clock.

Mefford Runyon's Barn Burned.

Mefford Runyon, one of the oldest residents of Stelton, sustained a loss of between $2,000 and $3,000 Wednesday night, when fire destroyed his barn, containing between thirty and forty tons of hay and farming implements. The fire, the origin of which is unknown, was discovered at 8 o'clock in the evening and it was impossible to save anything. The barn and contents were insured.

The Grove Street Mission meeting last night was largely attended. After a temperance discussion, a social hour was spent.

WOUNDS JEWELER AND FLEES WITH DIAMONDS

Robber Empties Revolver at Leo Slonim and Escapes After Being Thrown to the Floor.

FELLED MRS. SLONIM

Pretending to Be a Customer, This Got Jeweler Off His Guard in Store Near Midnight and Last Night.

Craft, nerve and desperation characterized the robbery effected by a hold-up mad at Leo Slonim's jewelry store, West Front street, at 11:45 o'clock Monday night. In making his getaway, which was beautifully successful and left the police with no trace of his trail, the crook shot the jeweler in the right arm. He took $350 worth of diamond rings with him.

The robbery was executed in the glare of holiday illumination, in the sight of Slonim's wife and his porter. In making his escape, after a short battle with the jeweler, the hold-up man knocked Mrs. Slonim down on the sidewalk.

The crook entered the store at 11:45 o'clock. Slonim and his wife, who with the porter, were in the store at the time, agree that he was young and blond, about five feet six inches tall, with fresh complexion and the features of a Swede or German. He wore a long gray cravenette coat, blue sweater with red collar, and black soft hat. He said he came from Westfield, and wanted to deal with Slonim because the jeweller had been recommended to him as a good man from whom to buy diamonds. Pleasant relations having thus been established, the jeweller started to show the stranger his stock.

The young man said he was a novice hand at buying jewelry, and he asked like it. He seemed torn by the conflicting charms of the rings, for an hour and a half fled without even the appearance of any decision as to choice. Mrs. Slonim grew tired, and threw out hints as to bedtime, but the jeweller did not like to hurry a young man struggling with the choice of his first diamond ring, and allowed the stranger to dally on.

At 11:45 o'clock, when the street was quiet, cleared of even the usual late homeward bowlers by the biting wind, the stranger was still debating as to his choice of a diamond. He asked to see the trayful of diamonds again, and Slonim took his finest assortment of rings from the window and placed it on the showcase. The stranger had a twenty-five dollar ring in his finger.

"Don't you want that one you have on?" asked Slonim.

The young man cast a quick look toward the street. He was standing within two steps of the door.

"Yes," he said suddenly; "I want this and all the rest of them."

He snatched for the tray with his left hand, and jerked a big revolver from his hidden pocket of his coat with the other. Slonim disregarded the weapon, and started around the corner of the counter. The crook snatched at least three rings, and threw as he sprang for the door. He fired two more shots, and the Slonim, blocking his escape by slamming an iron-barred guard gate over the door, closed with him. Slonim threw him, and wrested the revolver from his hand, but the crook freed the jeweller from him, scrambled to his feet and dashed out of the door.

In the meanwhile Mrs. Slonim, rushing through the back of the store, the hall had rushed to a side entrance on the street, shrieking "Police!" and "Murder!" She stepped out to the sidewalk to continue her cries just as the hold-up man dashed out of the store and turned in her direction. He knocked her down without hesitation and continued his flight. She turned as she fell and saw him disappear around the corner of Madison avenue in the direction of the railroad.

Her shrieks aroused the neighborhood, and attracted Patrolmen Moore and Flynn. The officers notified headquarters, from where word was sent to Chief Kiely, and every man on the force was put on the hunt for the crook.

Slonim was found to be suffering from a bullet wound in the right arm just under the shoulder. Dr. Kempton Browning, who was at the rooms of the Plainfield Social Club in the Babcock building across the street, took charge of him. The injury is not serious, although the weapon used was of forty-three calibre. One of the three shots had crashed through the glass of a high case behind the counter, and the third ripped through the floor at the side of the counter. This morning the doctor was undecided as to whether or not the ball was still in Slonim's arm, and arrangements were being made for X-ray examination.

Beside the revolver, the thief left his hat in the place. It was a meagrest kind of a clue, because the maker's name had been carefully cut from the sweatband. The police hunted for traces of the hold-up man all night without success. All the trolley lines and the railroad were covered between Bound Brook and Westfield, but no light young man wearing a cravenette coat and a blue sweater was spotted or heard of.

Chief Kiely said this morning that the complete effacement of the man puzzled him. He was not sure that the job was the work of a trained crook, but it looked like it. The revolver was the finest type of Colt, and the sort a Western robber likes to carry. The chief said he would not be surprised to learn that the crook was a Western hold-up man, forced temporarily, for some reason or other, out of his usual stamping grounds. All the boarding houses in the city were visited by policemen early this morning, and no trace of a stranger answering the thief's description could be found.

Mrs. Slonim said this morning that the value of the thief's hauld could not be stated until an inventory had been taken. It could only be said with certainty that he had the ring in his finger, and that two were secured when he snatched at the tray.

Mrs. Hannah Linke, wife of Frank Linke, whose liquor store is on the same block with the Slonim place, said this morning that she saw a man answering exactly the description of the Slonim robber pacing up and down before the jewelry store of Leo Silbert, up the street, late last Friday night. When Mrs. Silbert heard the description of the man seen by Mrs. Linke she declared it tallied in every particular, except as to the hat, with that of the crook who robbed her husband.

Dr. Du Bois Locates Here.

Dr. Francis E. Du Bois, of New York, has purchased the house No. 28 Washington avenue and will take up the practice of medicine in this city. Dr. Du Bois is a graduate of Princeton in the class of '99, and of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University in the class of 1902. He served two years on the staff of Roosevelt Hospital, New York. Mrs. Du Bois, who was Gertrude Van Cortlandt Parker, is a sister of A. McClean Parker, of West Seventh street.

All of the proposed improvements at the postoffice are completed, and the work is greatly facilitated in consequence.

At the New Plainfield theatre next Tuesday night George W. Monroe, the funniest of the legitimate, will break away from his accustomed woman's frills and feathers to dally with the light comedy role of Owen Moore, a promising, very promising, young lawyer in Charles Klein's musical farce-comedy, "The Lion and the Mouse," and other polite fads and fancies of the hour entitled "The Time of Your Life," but the break is only a temporary one for Mr. Monroe soon returns to skirts to raise a bedlum of fun for his audience and consternation for the arch deceivers of "divine woman" who have forced him from pantaloons to petticoats to perpetrate their "horrid deception." The star, the play and the supporting company are endorsed by Mayor Rhodes whose O. K. insures "The Time of Your Life" to all who see the performance.

Charles Heidt.

Charles Heidt, well known in this city, died suddenly Saturday afternoon at the home of his son, George Heidt, of Coontown. Apoplexy was the cause. He was seventy-six years old and had lived in this locality for a long time. The funeral will be held at the Coontown church Wednesday afternoon at 2:30.

P. H. S. Defeated.

The Stuyvesant High School basketball team of New York defeated the Plainfield High School team on the local floor Friday afternoon, by a score of 44 to 25. It was a fast game and one of the best yet seen at the high school. It was also marked by a noticeable absence of any questionable playing. William Stillman, captain of the Public School Basketball League, of New York, was referee, and gave entire satisfaction.

Attendants at Elizabeth Wedding.

Alexander Wolfgang Mack, of Somerville, was the best man and John B. Parmelee, of the same place, was an usher at the wedding on Saturday in Christ Episcopal church, Elizabeth, of Miss Alice Marguerite Schultze, daughter of the late Frederick Sidney, and Matilda Schultze and Henry M. Parmelee.

Mr. Daniel Sully seems to be surpassing his success of last season this year by playing "The Matchmaker" to very prosperous results. Reports coming from cities where he has played his two-year success this season more than confirm this assertion in that they treat of artistic prosperity of the triumphant nature. This is most gratifying to Mr. Sully's friends who saw him in "The Matchmaker" here during his last visit, for they so thoroughly enjoyed his performance as to be convinced of its entertaining propensities. Edward L. Bloom has surrounded Mr. Sully with a most pleasing company of players and offers them to be judged at the New Plainfield theatre Saturday afternoon and night by local amusement seekers. The performances will be under the auspices of Watchung Council, Knights of Columbus.

Mrs. Aaron A. Van der Veer and Miss Mina Higgins has returned from Easton, Pa., where they had been guests of Mrs. Charles Young.

City Pays a Bill of $92.55 For Protecting the Junk Until Next Election.

MR. DANIEL PROTESTS

One Bill for $36.35 for "Instruction" and Setting Machines Up—Routine Work of Council.

In the opinion of Councilman Leslie M. Daniel the voting machine is a rather expensive thing for Plainfield. At the December meeting of the Common Council, Monday, an insurance policy covering the insurance of the four voting machines used at the last election was presented. It was learned that the premium on this is $20.20. In addition there is an bill for $26 for storage and another bill for $36.35 for instruction and setting the machines up, making a total of $82.55. Mr. Daniel did not let the opportunity pass to express his disapproval of the expense. The insurance policy is for $2,000, each machine being valued at $500.

Edward McCarthy protested against being taxed for a dog he does not own and the matter was referred to the finance committee. Thomas M. Day and others petition for a crosswalk at Putnam and the east side of Carlton avenues, and the matter was referred to the street committee. A petition for three electric lights on West Eighth street, between Monroe avenue and the city line was referred to the light committee.

The request from Jacob Harz, of 324 Richmond street, for permission to move the building at that address to 320 Richmond street, was granted upon the motion of Councilman Frank Randolph, with the understanding that it meets with the approval of the building inspector.

Upon the motion of Chairman Daniel, of the finance committee, the offer of Mrs. Cornelia A. Gavett to purchase John Hoffnagle's land on West Third street and Clinton avenue, which was bought in by the city for taxes, for the sum of $191.51, was accepted.

The petition from the Plainfield Land Improvement Company and another one from A. D. Thompson, asking that the city connect Denmark road and Dixie Lane with the sanitary sewer, were referred to the street and sewer committee.

A lengthy communication was received from P. J. Harris in which he sets forth an error on the part of the city in assessing land owned by him, which has been assessed by Middlesex county and the taxes paid. The land in question is on the line dividing Union and Middlesex counties in the western part of the city. As this matter has been considered by the finance committee before, Mr. Daniel moved that it be referred to the corporation counsel for an opinion. This was done.

Upon the request of Warren B. Travell, of this city, who has the contract for installing the pumping station in connection with the building of the southside sanitary sewer, the time for filing the bond was extended to December 3, and on motion of Mr. Gloak, the time for filing the bond of Peter Morgan, of Poughkeepsie, who has the contract for building the sewer, was extended to December 17.

Clerk Horace G. Adams, of the district court, reported the receipts for the past month to be $82.05 and the balance $60.32, after paying expenses.

Mr. Gloak reported back the petition of Sydney T. Perrin, of West Seventh street, in which he complained about a street matter, which has been fixed, and the petition was filed.

Mr. Daniel offered a resolution which provided for the borrowing of $2,000 to meet the expense of sanitary sewer work in the West End and the East End of the city, and another resolution offered by the same member provided that the Mayor and city clerk be authorized to execute two street improvement bonds of $1,000 each, the same to be secured by notes.

On motion of Mr. Daniel the tax collector was instructed to return to J. W. Reinhart the sum of $54.07 in taxes paid by him in error, and a similar motion was adopted refunding to A. B. Davies the sum of $10.46 in taxes paid in error.

In connection with a previous petition from P. A. W. Taliany asking that Arlington avenue, between Fourth and Fifth streets be widened, Dr. J. B. Probasco, president of the Board of Education, communicated with the Common Council, last night, making a similar request. It is understood that the Taliamy brothers, as well as the Board of Education are willing to donate land for the purpose. Dr. Probasco requested that an ordinance providing for the widening be adopted after the city accepts the avenue. On motion of Mr. Gloak the petition was filed with the understanding that it will be taken up later on.

The Common Council adjourned to Monday night, December 17, to take up some matters in reference to the southside sewer and a third meeting will be held later to adopt on final reading the ordinances giving the firemen and policemen increase pay and to close up the business for the year.

Failure to number ballots as required by statute is held, in Montgomery vs. Henry (Ala.), 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 656, not to be fatal.

Failure to specify the time within which a contract for sale is to be performed is held, in Ullsperger vs. Meyer (Ill.), 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 221, not to defeat its specific performance.

Executing a note for another's debt is held, in Fort Jefferson Improvement company vs. Dupoyster (Ky.), 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, to be equivalent to a payment in cash for purposes of subrogation.

Claims of a nonresident corporation, in definite, tangible form, are held to be taxable in Monongahela River C. & C. company vs. Board of Assessors (La.), 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 637, similar property owned by a resident being subject to taxation.

A provision for liquidated damages in case of a breach of contract for exchange of lands is held, in Koch vs. Streuter (Ill.), 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 210, not to defeat a right for specific performance, where the provision was intended merely as security for performance.

WIDOWS.

It has been said "beware of widows." But that is unnecessary. For no man can really help himself.

All the perfect men now dead have married widows, thus forming a continuous contrast to the miserable specimens who still live.

It is generally considered unlucky to meet a widow on a dark plazza by the light of the moon. In many countries to be kissed by a widow means endless trouble.

Widows are frequently accompanied by children whose number is constantly liable to increase. They roam at large over the principal sections, and no man is safe when they are near.

Widows exist in all countries, thus *counterbalancing the matrimonial de*cadence which might otherwise result from timid men. Widows are clinging by temperament, and attach themselves readily to any object that can't help itself.—Life.

CHURCH AND CLERGY.

The Presbyterian church in the United States of America has now 1,158,662 members, a gain of 42,000 for the year.

The Rev. Gifford Dorey, who has been in the active ministry for nearly 60 years, is the oldest minister of the Wesleyan church of Great Britain.

The George Sealy memorial window is being put in place in Trinity church at Galveston. The window is 20 feet high, 9 feet wide and cost $7,000.

*A much loved Sunday school teach*er, who had taught her class since 1853, not missing a single Sunday, passed to her reward from Astoria, L. I., a short time ago.

The Rev. F. B. Meyer of London, England, will be 60 next spring, at which time he purposes to sever his connection with Christ church of that city, of which he is now pastor.

The Rev. L. L. Conrady, the Belgian priest in whose arms Father Damien breathed his last at the Hawaiian leper colony on the island of Molokai, is on his way to China, where he will establish similar colonies and spend the rest of his life.

Accordding to the year books of the denominations the per cent. of gain in members for the year 1905 was as follows: Baptists, two and three-tenths; Congregational, two and two-tenths; Presbyterians, two per cent.; Methodist Episcopal church, one and eight-tenths.

Methodism has at least one living follower who became identified with the church more than a century ago. Mrs. Mary Ramsey Lemons Wood recently celebrated her one hundred and nineteenth birthday at Hillsboro, Ore. She united with the Methodist church in 1799.

The Rev. Dr. William R. Forbush, who has won an international reputation through his success in establishing boys' clubs in this country, has left the Madison Avenue Reformed church, New York city, to accept a call to the Woodward Avenue Presbyterian church, in Detroit.

NOTES ABOUT BRIDGES.

The famous Niagara suspension bridge was begun in 1852 and completed in 1855. It is 245 feet above the water and 821 feet long.

The Forth bridge over the Firth of Forth, near Edinburgh, has two cantilever spans each 1,710 feet in length, the longest in the world. The total length of this structure is one and four-sevenths miles, and there was 51,000 tons of steel used in its construction.

One of the most peculiar bridges in the world is the tubular suspension bridge across Menai strait. This bridge consists of two lines of immense tubing, each 1,500 feet long, supported by three granite towers besides the shore abutments. This strange bridge is 100 feet above the sea, and weighs 11,000 tons.

There have been several London bridges. There was one at the end of the tenth century, and another in 1014 built of wood. In 1176 Colechurch began a stone bridge across the Thames, which was not finished until 1209. The new London bridge was begun in 1824 and completed in seven years at the cost of one and a half million dollars.

SHERRIFF IN POSSESSION

Agreement Allowing Telephone Company to Lay Conduit Between Plainfield and North Plainfield.

The meeting of the Somerset County Board of Chosen Freeholders held in the east chapel of the First Reformed church in Somerville yesterday was a brief one, yet much business was transacted. A doing of interest to Plainfielders was the presentation of an agreement between the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company and the Boards of Freeholders of Somerset and Union counties, which permits the company to lay a conduit for its wires on the Elm street bridge between Plainfield and North Plainfield. This agreement was ordered executed and the company paid each of the counties $20 for the permit.

The committee on the new jail made a report in which it stated that the sheriff was moving in and that the building is completed with the exception of a few minor details. When it is all finished it will formally turned over to the county. The purchaser of the old court house and jail, Hyman Klines, was notified to begin at once to remove the buildings.

A resolution was passed by the board which asserted that the confidence of the board in the building committee for the new jail and court house is unimpaired and declared that this method was taken to reassure the committee of the satisfactory service thus far rendered.

The State Road Commission has agreed to have the "elbow" removed from the North Branch road and $50 was ordered paid for the purchase of the necessary land.

Former Congressman Alvah A. Clark, counsel for the committee building the new jail and court house, was present before the board and made an address in relation to recent publications in one of the county newspapers touching the legality of the proceedings of the committee in the question of bonding the county for the payment of the cost of the new structures. Mr. Clark declared that the proceedings of the board and committee were within the law open and aboveboard, and that the taxpayers have always had the opportunity of attending the meetings of the Freeholders, which are always public. The records are also public and the clerk and collector are always ready and willing to give any information respecting the proceedings of the board.

The board adjourned to meet next Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock on the bridge at Mine Brook.

JAIL FOR "CONJUNCTION"

Gospel, Dice and a Revolver on Him When Arrested.

For twenty days, "Conjunction" Jones will not vex the police. He was arrested last night for flourishing a loaded revolver in a Second street saloon, and Judge Higgins sentenced him to jail for that length of time this morning.

"Conjunction" said he simply wanted to show the revolver. In his pockets, when searched, were found a copy of the Gospel of St. John and a dice.

Adjourned Council Meeting.

The Common Council will hold an adjourned meeting Monday night to pass on third reading the ordinance which provides for the purchase of land on Randolph road, where it is proposed to locate a pumping station for the southside sanitary sewer. At another meeting to be held before the close of the year the city business for the year will be closed up.

Netherwood Club Progressing.

The Netherwood Club, which was recently formed in the parish house of St. Stephen's church by the rector of Netherwood, is making rapid progress. The membership is increasing and plans for an active season are being made. The club meets twice a month at the parish house and enjoys the privileges offered.

New Rector at St. Paul's Church.

Rev. and Mrs. W. O. Jarvis, of Westfield, have moved to Liberty, N. Y., where Mr. Jarvis will have charge of the Episcopal church. Mr. Jarvis is succeeded at St. Paul's church, Westfield, by Rev. Sydney Cross, formerly curate of All Angels' church, 81st street and West End avenue, New York.

Plum for Matthews.

John J. Matthews, of Hunterdon county, an Assemblyman from Union county in 1887-1888, is said to be slated for clerk of the next House of Assembly.

MOURNED AS DEAD; HE'S ALIVE AND RICH

MAN DISAPPEARED THIRTY YEARS AGO NOW WANTS TO FIND RELATIVES.

The police of Elizabeth received yesterday a letter from a man who mysteriously disappeared from that city thirty years ago. It was supposed he had either met foul play or committed suicide.

In 1876 John P. F. Byrnes conducted a plumber's shop at Rahway avenue and Broad street, Elizabeth. It is not now known where he lived at that time. One day he was missing and all trace of him was lost. His mother tried to find him, but the police could find no trace of him. After waiting some time the man was mourned by his family and friends as dead.

The letter received yesterday from Byrnes asked that the family be looked up, as he wanted to know the present whereabouts of his mother, sister and brother. The writer intimated that he was well off and was anxious to take care of them if they could be found. He said his address is No. 137 Chestnut street, Long Beach, Cal. The letter was posted in San Francisco.

A policeman was detailed to search for the relatives, but found none of them. Only one person remembered Byrnes when he was in Elizabeth. That person is J. Madison Drake, who was Colonel of the Third Regiment. He said Byrnes was a member of Company I, of this regiment. The Colonel gave the police the information that Byrnes at once time conducted the plumbing shop at Rahway avenue and Broad street, but said he did not know the whereabouts of any of the man's family.

F. O. E.'S ELECT.

Daniel V. Force Now the Head of the Local Aerie.

Plainfield Aerie, No. 866, Fraternal Order of Eagles, met last night in its rooms in the New Plainfield Insurance building and elected the following officers to serve for the ensuing year: Past worthy president, Michael J. Higgins; worthy president, Daniel V. Force; worthy vice president, F. P. Abernest; worthy secretary, Horace G. Adams; worthy physician, Dr. A. H. Dundon; worthy trustees, John P. Kampf, Hugh Reilly, Thomas Kane. The officers will be installed at the first meeting in January.

At the meeting last night the trustees reported that they had secured a lease on Findlay's Hall on East Second street and that the rooms, rooms, and arrangements were being perfected to remove from the present quarters about April 1.

With the handsome furnishings Plainfield Aerie has there is no doubt but what it will have the finest lodge and club rooms in the State.

RYERSON SENTENCED.

Plainfielder Gets Two Years for Burglary.

Joseph Ryerson, who claimed Plainfield as his home, and who was indicted on a charge of robbing the home of Dr. Henry R. Cannon in Elizabeth, several months ago, was sentenced in the Union County Court this morning by Judge Atwater to two years in State Prison. At the time of his arrest he claimed to be a detective and when the police found him in Dr. Cannon's house he said that he was lookin for burglars.

John Kostic, of Elizabeth, who has already served a term in State Prison for wife-beating, was arraigned before Judge Atwater, this morning, and was sentenced to one year in State Prison on the same charge.

Samuel Collicus, indicted on a charge of selling liquor at Roselle without a license, was fined $100.

Elks' Xmas Entertainment.

A meeting of the Christmas entertainment committee of Plainfield Lodge, B. P. O. E., will be held at the Elk Club rooms tonight at 7:30 o'clock. In all probability the entertainment for the poor children of the city and borough, which is an annual affair of the Elks, will take place in Reform Hall on Saturday night, December 22. In addition to a regular programme of entertainment, the children will be provided with reminders of the festival.

Mr. and Mrs. Miles Surprised.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Miles, of Somerset street, were given a surprise party last night at the home of Mrs. Miles' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ackor, on Westervelt avenue. The affair was arranged by Miss Carolyn Coombs, of Linden avenue. There were about thirty-five young people present and the evening was spent in playing games, singing and instrumental music. At a late hour refreshments were served.

MISSING FOR SIX WEEKS

Boston Woman Prostrated Over Absence of Husband Who Started for Plainfield.

MAY BE DERANGED

Kough Was Unbalanced Mentally Sometime Ago—His Sister Formerly Lived Here.

In an effort to locate Dennis Keough, who has been missing from his home in Boston, Mass., for six weeks, the Boston papers and Keough's wife have enlisted the aid of the police and the postoffice here. Keough left Boston to visit his sister, Mrs. Bridget Garrity, who he supposed lived at her old home, 10 Arlington avenue. Nothing has been heard of him by the family since he started from Boston with a ticket for Plainfield and $3.25 in his pockets.

Mrs. Garrity moved, with her husband, from Arlington avenue to New Brunswick, six years ago. No correspondence had passed between the Garritys and the Keoughs in that time, and the Keoughs knew nothing of the change. When the weeks passed without word from her husband, Mrs. Keough wrote a registered letter to Mrs. Garrity here, and when the postoffice reported its inability to deliver she wrote to Chief Kiely and appealed for his help in locating either her husband or Mrs. Garrity. A few days later the Boston papers became interested in the case, and the "Post," of that city, asked Postmaster Bird to help find Mrs. Garrity.

Chief Kiely discovered the Garrity by chance. He was in New Brunswick a few days after Mrs. Keough's letter reached him, and saw Garrity, whom he knew, standing on a bridge. Mrs. Garrity had heard nothing of her brother for years. Chief Kiely forwarded that information to Mrs. Keough.

Keough suffered from mental trouble not long before he left Boston, losing his memory temporarily, and it is believed now that he suffered a relapse while on his way here and became so bewildered, even, as to blank mind. He cannot write. He was a temperate man, devoted to his wife, and she is breaking down with grief over his disappearance.

Keough is described as five feet seven inches in height, with reddish hair, sandy mustache, and a dimple in his chin. He wore a brown suit, red stockings, rubber-heeled shoes and a derby hat.

Chief Kiely has all his men seeking traces of the missing man about town. He may have come here, and lost his memory after wandering about the streets, in search of his sister's address. Mrs. Keough has written several letters to the Chief, and still has hope that he may be found, or traced, here.

ANCHOR LODGE ELECTS.

J. T. Sutphen Chosen Worshipful Master of Masons.

At a regular communication of Anchor Lodge, No. 149, last night, these officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Worshipful Master, J. T. Sutphen; senior warden, William Taylor; junior warden, James A. Dodd; senior deacon, E. Brewminger; junior deacon, A. J. Hamley; senior master of ceremonies, Robert Hall; junior master of ceremonies, A. A. Holly; senior steward, W. W. Wheelen; junior steward, Frank Stout; treasurer, T. A. Emmons; secretary, C. A. Rogers; trustees, Rev. E. M. Rodman, O. T. Waring and Frank Wynkoop; representative to Masonic Hall Association, S. B. Joseph; tyler, Casper Bolsterle, of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26.

Archdeacon on North Carolina.

Archdeacon Walter Hughson, who is a missionary in the mountain districts of North Carolina, addressed the Men's Club of Grace church Monday night, telling at some length of his interesting work. He described the moral, intellectual and social conditions of the people of the mountain districts of North Carolina, addressed of which he said were deplorable. He also touched upon polygamy, which is practiced more or less in that part of the country, and told of the many peculiar customs of the people. Notwithstanding these conditions, Archdeacon Hughson declared that the work is encouraging and much progress is made in promoting Christianity.

John H. McVey's Funeral.

The funeral of John H. McVey, who died at Red Bank Monday, will be held at his late home on West Front street, Friday afternoon at 2:30. Interment will be at Hillside cemetery.

VIVED IMPERSONATIONS OF JOSEPH JEFFERSON

GEORGE KIERNAN'S RECITAL OF "THE RIVALS" PLEASES LARGE AUDIENCE.

With all the accessories of scenery and costume to act a single part upon the stage that shall charm the audience with truth to life and reality, is the work of an artist. To act many parts, with neither scenery or costume to accentuate the characters represented, is greater art and requires greater skill. Ged. Kiernan, who appeared for the first time before a Plainfield audience last night at the Casino did not only this but recalled Joseph Jefferson, the best loved actor of his time, in his rendering of Bob Acres in "The Rivals." Before his recital, Mr. Kiernan said the old actor was to recreate the great actor's marvelous personality, but to recall it to memory by suggestion.

Sheridan's famous comedy, written more than a century and a quarter ago, has a variety of characters that on the stage make their appeal to human nature, and Mr. Kiernan last night held the close attention of his audience from the beginning to the close of the entertainment. Sir Anthony Absolute, with his fiery impetuosity, his son Jack in his dual part with Ensign Beverly, a manly young fellow deeply in love; Faulkner, the unreasonable and pessimistic lover; Lydia Languish; romantic and rebellious; Mrs. Malaprop, whose astonishing use of language is always convulsing; Sir Lucius O'Liger, the fighting hero, and David, the faithful and criticising servant, were all represented in quick succession with a skill that made one marvel as well as enjoy. It was in the acting of Bob Acres, a minor part until Jefferson made it famous, that Mr. Kiernan showed his greatest skill. The country man transformed into the good natured fop with curl papers and dancing steps, the inviting of the challenge at the instigation of Sir Lucius O'Trigger, and the oozing away of the poor man's courage in the duel scene were full of absorbing interest as given by Mr. Kiernan. A running ripple of laughter through the audience testified to the pleasure enjoyed as well as applause and recalls. It is not necessary for Mr. Kiernan to imitate Jefferson to please those who never heard the great actor find his representations full of charm.

On Tuesday evening, December 18, Mr. Kiernan will appear again at the Casino in the famous role of Rip Van Winkle, a representation that won for Jefferson the love and admiration of all who love the stage. We bespeak for Mr. Kiernan on that occasion an equally large and interested audience.

BOOTBLACKS UNION IS THE NEXT THING.

Shine Artists to Combine to Prevent Five Cent Jobs.

The spirit of unionism has invaded the ranks of the local bootblacks and steps have been taken by the leading "shiners" artists to band together for mutual protection from price cutters. A meeting has been called by scar Nelson, who wields a brush over the pedal extremities of West Enders in a Liberty street barber shop, and it will be held in his home Friday night. His chief supporters in the move are "Jim" Scott, Louis Randolph and George Ruggles and they are now busy preparing a scale of prices to be maintained. It is proposed to inflict a fine on those who are caught taking less than a fixed charge for the "slicking" up process.

The customary price for a polish is ten cents but of late competition has been so keen that many of the boothlacks have been doing it for a nickel. The projectors of the union argue that with the increased cost of materials there is no profit in the business at that rate and that is why they want ten cents as the standard.

Grossmann Exercises.

The usual Christmas exercises of the Grossmann School will be held on Saturday afternoon, December 22d, at 2:30 o'clock. The programme will consist of songs, recitations, tableaux, calisthenic exercises and the like. The under-lying idea will be to represent the historical development of Christmas from ancient times, the Christian conception of it, and how it has finally become the annual festival of the child in the family, in which loving attention is centered. Admission is by card only. Cards can be obtained by application to the school or at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

Mother's Meeting.

The Plainfield Mother's Association will meet at the High School on Friday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. An address will be made by Miss Chadbourne.

Song Recital.

Those who enjoy artistic singing will not fail to be present at the song recital given by Mr. Skiff at Y. M. C. A. Hall tomorrow evening.

SMITH CONTROLS PARTY

His Supremacy Over Davis Demonstrated by the Selection of Firth as Speaker.

CAUCUS IN TRENTON

Warren County Man To Be Head of Next Assembly—Result May Help Dryden.

The Democratic members-elect of the House of Assembly, who constitute a majority of that body, at Trenton in caucus yesterday to select a speaker and to apportion the House officers to the various counties. The caucus resulted in the choosing of Joseph H. Firth, of Warren county, for Speaker by a vote of 13 to 12 for Joseph A. Riordan, of Hudson county. This was a victory for ex-United States Senator James Smith, Jr., over Robert Davis, the Democratic leader of Hudson county.

Abram Kienert, of Passaic, was elected chairman of the caucus, which carries with it the House leadership. It is understood that ex-State Senator Lewis J. Martin, of Sussex, will be Speaker Firth's private secretary.

Another thing that was made evident as the result of the day's work was that, if there is a real, lasting compact between Smith and John F. Dryden, the former can deliver the goods and the latter can be re-elected United States Senator.

The caucus was called to order at 3:45 p. m. by Assemblyman Morris, of Sussex, who acted as chairman and leader last year. Edward H. Wright, Jr., of Essex, was made temporary secretary. The election of a permanent chairman was then in order. Kienert, of Passaic, was nominated by the Smith people, and Alexander, of Hudson, was the choice of the Davis following. By a rising vote Kienert was declared elected by a vote of 13 to 12. This was the first test vote, and showed how well Smith had his forces in hand.

Nominations for Speaker being called for, Joseph A. Riordan presented the name of Edward H. Wright, Jr., of Essex. He was liberally applauded. Simon Hahn, of Essex, named Joseph H. Firth, of Warren. Wright at once withdrew. Mr. Alexander said Hudson would return to its original candidate, Joseph A. Riordan, and presented his name.

The vote was then taken, and Firth was declared elected by a vote of 18 to 13. Firth received the solid vote of Essex, four votes from Passaic and a vote each from Hunterdon, Sussex and Warren. Riordan got the twelve votes of Hudson and one vote (Mertz) of Passaic county.

When the vote was announced Baker, of Hudson, created a sensation by moving that the Speaker-elect address the audience. This was greeted with laughter, for, although Mr. Firth was a member of the Legislature last year, he never said a word, and is said to be unable to make a speech of any kind.

Hudson is inclined to be sore over the result. The Davis men charge that Smith will destroy the party unless it is getting all its feet again. There is also a good deal of quiet talk about that a "game" is being played in connection with the United States Senatorship, and that, if the Dryden scheme fails, Smith hopes to land it for himself.

The various House offices were not filled by the selection of individuals, but were apportioned to the different counties as follows:

Essex county—Clerk of the House, assistant supervisor of bills, assistant journal clerk, four doorkeepers and three pages.

Hudson county—Assistant clerk of the House, journal clerk, supervisor of bills, sergeant-at-arms, assistant sergeant-at-arms, assistant supervisor of bills, four doorkeepers and two pages.

Passaic county—Speaker's assistant secretary, assistant sergeant-at-arms, bill clerk, assistant bill clerk, assistant clerk of the House, two doorkeepers and two pages.

Warren county—One doorkeeper and one page.

Hunterdon county—Assistant journal clerk, one doorkeeper and one page.

Sussex county—Speaker's secretary, assistant supervisor of bills and one page.

The individuals to fill these offices will be selected by the members from the various committees.

Funeral of Eleanor Harold Braider.

The funeral of Eleanor Harold Braider, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Braider, of East Front street, was held at the parents' home, yesterday afternoon. It was conducted by Rev. Charles E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church. Two selections were sung by a quartette composed of Mrs. Bender, Miss Nichol, Elmer D. Cutting and F. C. Iglehart. Interment was made at Hillside.

MISSIONARY SERVICE AND AFTERNOON TEA

SOCIAL HUMOR FOLLOWS CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH UNION MEETING.

The Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church held their annual union praise service yesterday afternoon, and, to mark it, they had Rev. J. E. McAfee, of New York, assistant secretary of the Board of Home Missions, make an address on mission work. The attendance was large. A tea followed the meeting.

Responsive readings and hymn singing were the opening numbers of the programme. They were led by the president of the Home Society, Mrs. I. C. Pierson, and one of the vice presidents of the Foreign Society, Mrs. John Gray Foster. Miss Hubbell sang a solo.

Rev. Mr. McAfee's address was on the spirit of missionary support. He urged his hearers to take part in the advancement of missions in a larger, finer spirit. To approach the work with heroism and not self-seeking.

While missionary work was like the casting of bread upon the waters, its returns were not for those who gave in a selfish spirit. Only by real giving, with the thought of self-sacrifice for the benefit of others behind it, could the profit of the work be secured. The returns lay in an enlarged spiritual vision, an enlarged self, and an enlargement of the ehoric spirit. He pleaded for a strong, virile interest in missions, and not something born of maudlin sentiment.

The social hour that closed the afternoon delightfully. The committee was made up of Mrs. L. N. Lovell, Mrs. G. H. Campbell and Mrs. F. L. Hyde. Mrs. Campbell and Mrs. Louis Kepler Hyde poured.

DR. BERG COMMANDER.

Winfield Scott Post, G. A. R., Elects Officers.

These officers were elected at a regular meeting of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., last night:

Commander, Dr. J. F. Berg; senior vice-commander, Andrew Cox; junior vice-commander, Frederick Wenzel; quartermaster, John R. Naylor; surgeon, Israel Compton; chaplain, Nathan C. Pennington; officer-of-the-day, R. Struthers; officer-of-the-guard, Edward Vandine; trustees, William C. Smith, William Hand and M. C. Dobbins; delegates to Department Encampment, Andrew Cox, John R. Naylor; alternates, Job Coddington and James Clarkson.

During the time that the next regular meeting will fall on Christmas Eve, it was decided to meet on Tuesday night, January 8, at which time there will be a public installation of officers. The Women's Relief Corps will install officers on Friday night and elect the same on Friday night, December 28, and arrangements will probably be made to install them the same night the post officers are installed. At the conclusion of the business last night, L. V. F. Randolph gave an excellent talk.

JUNIORS' BANQUET.

January 31 Announced as the Date and Casino the Place.

Plans for the annual banquet of the Junior Mechanics are rapidly taking shape. The date has been fixed for Thursday, January 31. It will be held at the Casino, as last year. Mrs. Lena Hellstrom will cater it.

Only one of the six speakers has been positively secured. He is State Council Secretary Miers, of Trenton, who will make a short statistical address on the state of the order. Two other speakers will respond to toasts on the order, and the remaining three will be assigned general topics.

N. P. H. S. Seniors' Play.

The senior class of the North Plainfield High School will hold its Christmas entertainment, Thursday, December 20, at the High School. Under the direction of Miss Stahlberger, they will present the comedy, "Ici On Parle Francais." Immediately after the play they will have their Christmas tree on which will hang a "telling" gift for each junior, each senior and each member of the High School faculty. Admission will be by card only.

Second Grace M. E. Entertainment.

The second in the series of winter entertainments arranged by the members of Grace M. E. church will be given in the church tomorrow night. It will be furnished by the Criterion Hand Bell Ringers, assisted by Miss Florence Allwood. The artists are well known in Plainfield, having appeared several times previously, and they never fail to please an audience.

Mrs. Carney's Funeral.

The funeral of Mrs. Catherine Carney, formerly of this city, who died at her home in Dunellen, Monday, will be held in St. Mary's church tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock, when a requiem mass will be offered. Interment will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

A MISSPENT LIFE ENDED

Wayward Girl's Body Saved From Potter's Field by Chief Kiely.

SHE DIED DESERTED

Mother Found In Nyack, N. Y., By Plainfield Police Head—Daughter's Sad Career.

Through the efforts of Chief of Police Kiely, the body of the girl known here five years ago as Evelyn O'Neil, who gained notoriety through acts that drew the attention of the police to her, has been saved from the Potter's Field in New York. She died in the Manhattan Hospital, of that city, and the body was taken to the morgue where it lay awaiting a claimant until a friend of the dead girl, remembering that she spoke of her mother in Nyack, wrote to Chief Kiely and started the police on a search that located the mother in the New York town.

The girl's death was the sombre climax to a misspent and unhappy life. She went completely wrong here, and fell into the hands of the police several times. The young man to whom she was engaged finally cast her off, and she ended her career here directly after that by attempting to commit suicide in the hallway of Henry Windham's cafe. She swallowed a very weak solution of carbolic acid, and the city physician had no trouble in saving her life. She was held under arrest and steps were taken to have her put away. Rev. Father Farley, who was connected with St. Mary's parish, interested himself in the case and through his influence Evelyn was placed in a house of refuge in Newark.

Plainfield heard nothing more of Evelyn until Chief Kiely received a letter from Michael Keeffe, of New York, who befriended the girl in the hospital. He wrote of the latter winning her release from the institution, asking for help in finding Evelyn's mother. Keeffe's letter tells a story of constant trouble for the girl. She married a man named Hunter, he says, who abandoned her, ill and care-worn, in a boarding house. Suffering from an incurable disease, the girl was taken to Bellevue Hospital, from where she was transferred to the Manhattan Hospital July 15. She lay there until she died, three weeks ago.

Keeffe had the body held to his order, and sought to find the girl's mother. Failing, he wrote, as a last resort to Chief Kiely. There was not much time left, the morgue authorities limiting the period in which the body could be held, but the chief, stirred by pity for the unfortunate Evelyn, worked swiftly and found the mother before the limit expired. The mother's name is McAvoy. She has relatives here.

The young man to whom Evelyn had been affianced here went all to pieces after the girl was taken away. He took to drinking heavily, and his life became a wreck.

MRS. M'CREA HEAD OF MISSION SOCIETY.

Pastor's Wife New President of Elizabeth District Foreign Society.

Officers were elected and interesting reports and addresses were the features of the annual meeting of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Elizabeth District held at the Fulton Street M. E. church, yesterday afternoon and evening. Owing to illness of the president, Mrs. A. C. McCrea, of this city, was unable to preside and Mrs. William Trewin, of Elizabeth, took her place.

These officers were elected for the coming year:

President, Mrs. A. C. McCrea, of Plainfield; first vice-president, Mrs. L. M. Winter, of Plainfield; second vice-president, Mrs. Isabelle Waldman, of Junction; third vice-president, Mrs. Andrew Henry, of Woodbridge; fourth vice-president, Mrs. W. R. Porter, of Princess Bay, S. I.; recording secretary, Mrs. R. L. White, of Westfield; secretary of literature, Miss Louise Karr, of Elizabeth.

There was the report of the general executive meeting and messages from the society's missionary, Miss Jennie V. Hughes, of Kinkiang, China. An intensely interesting address was given by Miss Estey, the society's missionary at Corea.

As a memorial to the conference secretary, Mrs. J. H. Knowles, a Bible Training School is to be founded, perhaps in China. It means $2,000 as a thank offering to be presented by the women of the Newark Conference by September 25, 1907. Mrs. Knowles, who has been conference secretary for twenty-eight years, knows of the intention and approves of it.

—The Sesame Club will meet tomorrow morning at the residence of Mrs. Ostrom, 748 Carlton avenue.

HAPPY AMONG HIS PINKS

Man Who Planted Three-Fourths of Local Shrubbery Has a Trust in Carnations.

TALKS ON DESTROYERS

Fears the Insects Will Kill All of Plainfield's Beautiful Trees Unless Something Is Done.

Outside, the chill winds of December and the brown, barren fields; inside, the warm, soft air of summer, laden with the perfume of flowers and the smell of fresh, live earth. Just the change from outdoors to the interior of the greenhouse of W. H. Forrestel, nurseryman and expert in pinks, on Belleview avenue.

All seasons are the same to Mr. Forrestel. Give him his greenhouse, some warmed over air, and the merriest beginning of a flower and he will make it grow for you though the heavens crack with cold, and the mercury freeze in its bulb. If the flower be a pink, so much the better. He knows pinks as other men know their a, b, cs; and the growing thereof even to making of new kinds, is an open book to him.

Mr. Forrestel is one of the clan of nurserymen and flower shepherds in this corner of the State. He has forgotten a lot that the pert and cocksure young sprigs think they have just discovered for themselves. People who must bear big names before they will take hold in a thing may know that Mr. Forrestel was the man who had charge of the landscape work on Cornelius Vanderbilt's Newport place, "The Breakers." That having been properly assimilated, it is readily agreed that Mr. Forrestel is not among the least of those who make barren hillsides and backyards to be terraces and Italian gardens.

When Mr. Forrestel came here in 1891, to take charge of the landscape work on C. J. Fish's place, he came directly from "The Breakers"—there was room for a citizen of his attainments. Only two places in the city were laid out, those of H. G. Runkle and W. H. Wadsworth. The others were decorated by—Nature's yards and front lawns. And the disconcerting fence was everywhere. Mr. Forrestel saw that Plainfield needed guiding as to landscape work, and as he needed the money a good guide could get, he cut down the trees that bound him to James W. Bowditch, of Boston, for whom he was working, and became an expert on his own account.

The guiding was a success. Everybody knows what Plainfield looks like now, and the difference between its present looks and what it must have looked like when Mr. Forrestel first saw it must be plain. Seventy-five per cent. of the shrubbery in the city was laid out by Mr. Forrestel. And the guiding has been profitable, which, of course, is of no importance at all. Such things will happen when a man does good work for people who appreciate it. Mr. Forrestel's business has grown so that he has been compelled to lease the old Stelle farm next to his place on Belleview avenue, to make room for his treelets, his shrubs and his posy beds. With the newly-leased farm he has a range of about fourteen acres in which to marshal growing things.

Mr. Forrestel's nursery stock is a general one. Not large, but complete. He has something of everything worth growing, from shade trees to currant bushes. His collection of evergreens is a joy of large dimensions to the lover of things verdant.

But if one wants to find the shortway to the Forrestel heart, he must say "Pink." Pinks have been Mr. Forrestel's real specialty for only about two years, but he is making up for lost time as a specialist. He has a greenhouse full of the shaggy blooms, and in his heart is the loving desire for the discovery of that unattainable pink—that pink of pinks for all time—which every true pink grower cherishes.

He thought he had it last year, in the production of a promising seedling, but the dream faded with the ragged, rowdy bursting of the flowers that promised so much. Still, he has undiminished hope yet, and to cheer him on there is the Mrs. Eugenia Baldwin-Brock, a cross between the Mandy and the Enchantress, which he has raised to the strength and standing of a permanent variety. Mrs. Baldcock is a winsome bloom, larger even than the famous Robert Craig and soft pink in hue. The Craig is also a child of the Manley and the Enchantress.

The greenhouses are warmed by a hot-water system, automatically regulated by a heat generator that is the only one of its kind in the city. A battery of sprayers and kill-'em-quicks stand ready to guard its tenants and the trees and shrubs outdoors from all manner of insects, be they ever so scaley.

As with all nurserymen, scales are the bugbear of most affright Mr. Forrestel. He is bloomy as to the future of every tree in Plainfield. Unless general and consistent spraying is done, he declares as an expert, there will be a horrid slaughter of trees by rapacious creatures all over the city. Speak to him about it, and he will read a roll of hard and soft scale, ash and tulip scales, not to mention the chestnut fungi, that is thoroughly calculated to wake on to feverish desire to see somebody do something to save the trees before it becomes a case of fighting an overwhelming scourge.

Mr. Forrestel believes the Council could take up the matter of tree protection. He has a plan that would kill two birds with one stone. Let the city appoint a man or a commission, he suggests, to mark certain trees to be saved, and then spray those trees. The unmarked to be left to die under the assaults of the scaley things. This would bring about a very necessary thinning of shade about town. And it would be rather a nice way to treat the visiting bugs, who can't help their appetites, although that feature of the plan is not one advanced by Mr. Forrestel. The idea of entertaining a bug as small probably horrify him. Mr. Forrestel so hates bugs that he reads all the bulletins on them and hunts up a method of quick death for every new kind he learns of. He took grim pride this week in the discovery of a new enemy insect, and his sound-hap shrubbery in Boston.

If the Myresa Flavescens Walk that is what they call the poor little exile—comes within reach of Mr. Forrestel he will smite it with a terrible "side" or "lie" of some kind and knock it into a cocked hat. Mr. Mr. Forrestel has a particular pet the way of a kill-'em-quick now. It is called "Downicide," and is guaranteed to slay at sight. It works like a charm in the greenhouse, and it does as well outdoors—Mr. Forrestel has still to try it in the open—but will discount the spray used on the trees early this year by a good deal. That spray smelled to heaven, and the stink made people wonder if the treeless city wasn't better than it was. Downicide—"downicide"—suggestive name; hints of a bug Downand-Out Club—has absolutely no odor. It is colorless, as well; but probably will get there just the same. As soon as he can, Mr. Forrestel will try it on the trees, and if it works right, the city will have Mr. Forrestel, an ideal spray, and a two and one-half horse-power sprayer ready to help in saving the trees from denudation and death.

COUNCILMANIC BUSINESS.

To Hold Adjourned Meeting Monday Night, December 17.

The Common Council will meet in adjourned session on Monday night, December 17, for the purpose of passing on third reading the ordinance which provides for the purchase of the land for the southside sewage pumping station. The ordinance has been passed on two readings. Another meeting will be held later in the month to make arrangements for the appropriation to buy the land.

The land desired by the city is owned by Clifton & Campbell and is located on Randolph road, near Arlington avenue. Owing to the lateness of the season the work on this sewer will not be started before next March, when it is hoped to push it through to an early completion. Peter Morgan, of Poughkeepsie, has the contract for the sewer work, and Warren B. Travell, of this city, the contract for installing the pumping station.

Senator a Machine Maker.

At a special meeting held Wednesday the improvement and Board of Trade took steps to form a local company for the manufacture of a typewriter to be sold at retail at $50. The New Jersey Central Railroad was the means of acquainting Senator Joseph R. Frelinghuysen with the G. M. A. Locke, the owner of the patents on this machine. The Senator has already subscribed for a liberal amount of the stock.

W. F. Oliver Loses a Thumb.

William F. Oliver, of East Fifth street, an employee of the Walter Scott Printing Machine Works, lost the first joint of his thumb, yesterday, the result of an accident at the works. He was testing a new planer and the thumb was cut off in a gear wheel. Mr. Oliver went to the hospital, had the injury attended to and returned home. He was detained from work for several days.

The Plainfield Savings Bank.

The marble blocks bearing the inscription "The Plainfield Savings Bank," formerly known as the Dime Savings Institution, were put in position at the bank building, yesterday, where extensive alterations are being made.

PLAINFIELD ELKS HAVE A BIG NIGHT

SONGS, MAGIC AND INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC FOLLOWED BY SUPPER.

The congeniality that marks all social affairs conducted by the Elks, was in evidence Wednesday when Plainfield Lodge, No. 885, held an "old fashioned" gathering in Findlay's Hall on East Second street. The "old fashioned" feature reposed in the fact that formality was dispensed with and everybody helped in making the session successful. More than 200 Elks and their friends were present and the programme extended beyond the midnight hour.

Exalted Ruler George O. Stevens was master of ceremonies and under his direction the various entertainers performed. The principal number was given by Professor Krueger, of New York, a clever sleight-of-hand artist, who amazed and delighted the gathering with feats of magic. He had an inexhaustible supply of tricks and gave many that are put on only by the best known illusionists. Messrs. Hawthorne and Barry, also of New York, played and sang and several delightful tenor solos were contributed by Herbert Schutt, formerly of the borough, but now a New Yorker. Songs were given by James Stewart, George O. Stevens, Tom Muir, Chief Kiely, W. J. Counihan and other 885 members, the entire gathering joining in the choruses. Paroubek's orchestra occupied seats on the platform and gave a splendid programme of selections, introducing popular airs and accompanying the soloists.

Shortly after midnight, a supper was served, caterer Thomas Timbo and an hour or more was devoted to general sociability.

The affair was arranged and conducted by a committee composed of Thomas Hanna, chairman; Herbert W. Stover, Harry B. MacDonald, Fred Sanford and Charles J. Ward.

AUTO ACCIDENT AGAIN.

W. E. Lowe Corrects the Statement by A. H. Chamberlain.

W. E. Lowe denies A. H. Chamberlain's statement, that he, Mr. Lowe, blamed his coachman for carelessness in connection with the crash between Mr. Chamberlain's auto and the Lowe carriage Thanksgiving Day. Mr. Lowe says that the time of the accident was going from home and had reached the corner of Ninth street," says Mr. Lowe in a statement. "After the accident he turned about, got out, examined the damage, picked up his hat, overcoat, lamp, (which in his hurry to get away he left behind him) and instead of going on his way returned home. I have never though that any blame was to be attached to my coachman. When Mr. Chamberlain called on me I told him that if he signaled, the coachman did not hear it. Neither did four persons in the immediate vicinity who saw the accident hear the signal. At the same time Mr. Chamberlain stated that he did not signal, and I told him that I would let it rest there, and that I had no complaint to make. The coachman certainly was not to blame if he did not hear the signal which Mr. Chamberlain says he gave."

U. V. U. SOCIAL.

Pleasing Programme at Antietam Command Meeting.

Antietam Command, Union Veteran Union, held a social in Pittis' hall last night. The attendance was large and included many friends of the organization from nearby places.

The programme rendered was as follows: Opening address, Col. Edward E. Townley; other addresses by Comrade William L. Bowman, John W. Goodwin, A. V. Lambert, J. W. McMunn, General John R. Naylor, S. S. Swackhamer and Comrade H. C. Drake; songs by Comrade William L. Bowman, Colonel Townley, and Comrade Stephen Seaman, of Elizabeth; recitations by Miss Corina Townley, Elsie Townley and Miss Adele von Ohl. Miss von Ohl, who was formerly a leading woman at the New York Hippodrome, earned great applause by her contributions, being a dramatic reciter of established reputation.

The committee which had charge of the social, consisted of Colonel Townley, J. W. Willett, Edward Vanderweg and John W. Wagner.

Commander Peary Was There.

Commander Robert E. Peary was a guest at the quarterly meeting and banquet of the New Jersey Commandery, Military Order Loyal Legion, held at Delconico's Wednesday night, and made a short address, referring to his last trip to the artic regions. The principal address was by Gen. Ringler, who led his brigade in taking Richmond during the Civil War. Another feature was a short illustrated sketch of the Civil War by Secretary Ellsworth, of the Century Company. The Plainfield members attending were Dr. W. Dr. Hubbell, De-Witt Hubbell, Dr. Frank S. Wells, Captain S. C. Peck, Captain M. C. Dobbins and Walter C. Dobbins.

Bank Election.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank for the election of nine directors to serve for the ensuing year will be held at the bank, 111 East Front street, Tuesday afternoon, January 8, from 1 to 2 o'clock.

HOLD-UP MAN CONFESSES

Jesse Tyrell Admits That He Pounced on Two Men in True Western Style.

HELD FOR GRAND JURY

Nabbed on Complaint of Kyle and Becker Who Say He Aimed Pistol at Their Heads Demanding Money.

In true Jesse James style, Jesse Tyrell, who claims South Plainfield as his home, held up Robert Kyle and George Becker on Park avenue, near the city line, Saturday, just after the pair alighted from a trolley car and proceeded to walk home. Tyrell called out: "Your money or your life!" At the same time he whipped out a revolver. The cold steel was placed so uncomfortably near Becker's face that he turned on his heels and ran for his life. Kyle had an inexhaustible supply of tricks and gave many that are put on only by the best known illusionists. Messrs. Hawthorne and Barry, also of New York, played and sang and several delightful tenor solos were contributed by Herbert Schutt, formerly of the borough, but now a New Yorker. The Larkin Company, of Buffalo, will give a free exhibition of its products and premiums at 159 East Front street, January 7 to 12 inclusive. This company is one of the largest in th ecountry and the exhibition here promises to be a fine one.

SAMUEL RANDOLPH DIES AFTER A WEEK'S ILLNESS

WAS THE MAN WHO HAD ASSISTED IN THE HANGING OF BRIDGET BURGAN.

Following an illness of about one week, Samuel F. Randolph, for many years a familiar figure in Plainfield, died at his home on West Fourth street, near Liberty, Thursday. He was born in Piscataway township in 1824 and had lived in this vicinity all his life. He served in the Civil War and was a member of the G. A. R. Surviving him are two sisters, the Misses Kate and Hannah Randolph, and one brother, James Randolph, of Dunellen.

Mr. Randolph was known all through Middlesex and Union counties as the man who had assisted in the hanging of Bridget Burgan, the New Market murderess, who was executed at New Brunswick thirty years ago. The woman killed the wife and child of Dr. Coriell because of jealousy and the case attracted widespread attention. Randolph was assistant to the Sheriff and adjusted the noose about her neck, afterwards keeping the rope. He had it in possession until he moved to his Fourth street home when a truckman used it to tie up some furniture and it got lost in the shuffle.

TEA AND SALE GIVEN FOR MISSIONARY CAUSE.

Under Auspices of First Baptist Church Young Women's Missionary Society.

The Young Women's Missionary Society of the First Baptist church held a tea and sale of candy, cake and kitchen utensils in the primary class room of the church, yesterday afternoon. There was a large attendance of members and friends of the church and the society had no trouble in disposing of everything offered for sale, the proceeds will be divided between foreign and home missions in the usual way.

The primary class room was very attractive in its decoration of red and the table from which tea was served was garnished with flowers and candelabra. Mrs. J. Peeke Reynolds and Miss May Shreve poured tea, and their assistants were Miss Elizabeth McGee, Miss Marguerite Serrell, Miss Helen Armstrong and Miss Alice Probasco.

Mrs. A. B. Probasco was in charge of the cake table, and she was assisted by Miss Helen Robins, Mrs. Charles Miles and Mrs. Frank Jones. At the candy table Mrs. W. B. Vail was in charge, assisted by Miss Pauline Denton, Miss Carolyn Coombs and Miss Katherine Rocap. The sale of kitchen utensils was in charge of Mrs. Kenneth Robbie and her assistant was Miss Mabelle Cubberly.

NO DEVELOPMENTS IN BUILDING TRADE DISPUTE.

Board of Arbitration Will Hold a Conference With T. H. Laury Today.

There are no developments since yesterday in the building trade dispute between the masons and the lathers which threatens to tie up building operations in the city and vicinity. A meeting of the Board of Arbitration has been called for this afternoon, when the matter may be settled. It is expected that Thos H. Laury, who has the mason contract for Dr. A. W. Anderson's new building on Watchung avenue, over which the trouble arose, will be present to tell his side of the story.

It is also likely that a representative from the Consolidated Engineering Company, of America, which is superintending the construction, will be present at the c onference. Owing to the extreme cold the workmen engaged on Dr. Anderson's building quit today forenoon.

CHARLES BOICE DEAD.

Dunellenite Succumbs With Little Warning, After Apparent Improvement.

Charles Boice, 57 years old, a bookkeeper, died at his home in Dunellen Friday night. His death was somewhat sudden.

Mr. Boice had been slightly ill for two days, but the doctor pronounced him improved yesterday and after supper, last night, he told his wife, as he settled down to read the papers, that he felt all right. Just before 9 o'clock he suffered a severe coughing spell and started to sink. He died, in bed, at about 9:10. It is supposed the coughing resulted in the rupture of a blood vessel. He leaves a wife, a daughter, Miss Edith Boice, and a son, Charles Boice.

CHRISTMAS SALE.

Congregational Church Girls Hold a Successful Affair.

The Girls' Mission Club held a Christmas sale Friday afternoon and evening at the Congregational church. It was well attended, and successful.

Miss Lulu Fuller was in general charge, and the attractions were under the direction of the following committees: Fancy articles, the Misses Edith Bentley, Jessie McIntosh and Ella Jarrett; grab-bag, the Misses Edith Robinson and Lillian Cronkite; cake, the Misses Ethel VanZandt, Laura Baker, Lillian Whiteall; ice cream, the Misses Bessie Miller and Catherine Rocap; candy, the Misses Margie Phillips, Maude Emmons and Myra Emmons.

WOMEN S.P.C.A. AGENTS is to Have Feminine Special Officers In Its Circle.

VOLUNTEERS SERVICE

Another Preliminary Meeting of S. P. C. A. Organizers—L. V. F. Randolph Will Probably Be President of the Organization.

For the protection of dumb beasts, society women of this city will take on the authority of special police officers and hold themselves in readiness to stop, personally, every case of cruelty or abuse that comes under their notice on their journeyings through the streets. The impending creation of women "specials" was made known Friday morning, after a meeting of the proposed S. P. C. A. organizers at Judge W. A. Codington's office in the Stirling.

The meeting was attended by a dozen women, virtually the same as those at the first gathering. Permanent organization was again deferred, but a week from today was fixed definitely as the date when the society will be regularly organized. It is expected that L. V. F. Randolph will be president. Mr. Randolph has been approached regarding his service as head of the society and it is understood he is willing to assume the duties of the position. Other officers will be chosen at the organization meeting.

Several of the women interested in the movement have volunteered their services as agents of the proposed association, and they will be accepted. Their names will not be made public at present, but their identies will become known after they receive their commissions. They will be invested with police power and full authority to make arrests in cruelty cases.

There will be several other agents. Chief of Police Kiely will be one, and probably head of the humane force. By reason of their positions, all the police officers will, of course, be agents in effect, particularly as Chief Kiely is much interested in the movement. The patrolmen, it is expected, will receive special instructions to watch for cases of cruelty or abuse, and to report them to the society.

The work will be engaged in just as soon as the S. P. C. A. is fully organized. The membership list will be opened next Friday and not less than 100 names are expected to go down in a short time. An executive committee of seven or nine will be appointed to push the society's work from the beginning.

FREEHOLDERS RECEIVE PICTURE OF THEMSELVES.

Incident of Union County Board's Meeting in Elizabeth Thursday.

An incident connected with the December meeting of the Union County Board of Freeholders, held at Elizabeth, Thursday, was the presentation of a large photograph of the freeholders' committee, architect, the late collector, Edward M. Wood, and Director J. Frank Hubbard, together with the present director, Benjamin King, who had charge of the work of building the new Court House. The photograph was presented by the surviving members in memory of those who have passed away and will be hung in the freeholders' room. Those in the group consist of the late Director J. Frank Hubbard and County Collector Edward M. Wood; Freeholders John Farrell, John Bruchlacher, Director Benjamin King and Architect S. S. Yackerman.

A resolution was adopted authorizing the building of wing walls on the West End avenue bridge at a total expense not to exceed $2,600, provided that Somerset county will stand its share of the cost.

An extension for one year's time was granted the Morris County Traction Company to complete its work under certain stringent conditions.

Two Great Cities Brought Close Together.

The New Jersey Central, following its usual progressive policy, has so ranged its Philadelphia service that every train will be a 2-hour train to and from Philadelphia, and there will be a train every hour, on the hour, from 7:00 a. m. until 6:00 p. m. on this schedule. There are also trains at 7:00, 8:00 and 9:00 p. m., and other trains at 6:30, 8:30, 11:30 a. m., 1:30, 5:30 p. m. and at 12:15 midnight. In addition to this service, there are trains to 24th and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia, at 1:30 a. m., 8:00 a. m., 10:00 a. m., 12:00 noon, 2:00 p. m., 4:00 p. m., 6:00 p. m. and 8:00 p. m. Parlor cars are operated on morning, noon and night trains and all of the hourly trains have the latest Pullman Parlor cars The New Jersey Central's road bed is conceded to be the acme of perfection. It is protected by block signals, and its equipment very much up to date. The new West Twenty-third Street Terminal in the heart of the business and theatre section has proved a most popular station for the traveling public, and its Liberty Street station, with its close proximity to the elevated, surface and subway stations likewise makes it convenient to approach.

MARTIN I. COOLEY DEAD

Plainfielder Expires Suddenly in His Temporary Apartments in New York.

FROM HEART TROUBLE

Lived Here for Thirty-Two Years and Was Well Known—Leaves Widow and Two Children.

With little more than a few moments' warning, death came suddenly at 12:30 Thursday to Martin I. Cooley, for many years a local resident. While in his apartments at the Hotel Chelsea, West Twenty-third street, New York, he was stricken with heart trouble and passed away almost before medical aid could be summoned. Mrs. Cooley and her sister, Mrs. Lask, of Washington, were with him at the time the end came.

Mr. Cooley had been indisposed for the past three or four years and a short time ago decided to give up his home on Rockview Terrace and seek another climate in the hope that it might prove beneficial. He had Cuba in mind, as his daughter, Mrs. Mason Patrick, has been there since leaving Muhlenberg hospital after an illness, and he and Mrs. Cooley had practically agreed upon the plans. They had been making their home at the Chelsea for about two weeks while the details were being arranged.

Mr. Cooley was at his office for a shore while Thursday and in the afternoon was met by several Plainfielders on Broadway. He was then in good spirits and to all appearances in about the same condition of health as he had been for six months or more. It was not until late at night that he complained of feeling very much indisposed and the fatal attack came shortly after.

Mr. Cooley was sixty-five years old and was one of the best known commission merchants in New York. His place of business is located at 88 Leonard street and the firm name now is Martin I. Cooley & Son, though it was only a few years ago that Gifford W. Cooley, the son, became a member. In his commercial life, Mr. Cooley was always regarded as a man of upright character and his word was his bond in transactions involving large sums of money. Because of his health not being of the best, he had not been active in the business of the firm in recent years, as a rule simply supervising.

Thirty-two years ago Mr. Cooley came to Plainfield and he purchased the house on Rockview terrace which he had occupied ever since. Though he was a good citizen and one who watched municipal affairs in a quiet way, he was not, generally, a public man. He was frequently asked to accept office but declined, yet his opinion in borough matters was always sought. He joined the First Baptist church directly after he moved here and his membership association numbered him as one of its most valued member. He was quiet, kind, genial and affable to a degree and there are scores in the city and borough who can attest to his unostentatious method of lending a helping hand.

Beside his widow, who was a Miss Webster, Mr. Cooley is survived only by his son Gifford and one daughter, Mrs. Patrick, the wife of Captain Patrick, of the regular army, now stationed at Cuba.

CLIPPING SOCIAL.

Affair at Grace M. E. Church Marked By Pleasing Programme.

A clipping social with many pleasant features was held in Grace M. E. church, last night, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society. A feature of the entertainment provided was a playlet, "Maidens, All Forlorn," in which appeared the Misses Reba Cline, Florence Smalley, Edith Major, Helen Parsons and Bessie Conroy. It was given under the direction of Miss Mabel Stevens. Piano selections were contributed by Miss Jenny Nelson and Miss Edna Sebring.

The clippings brought good prices and ice cream and cake were sold. The proceeds will be added to the treasury of the society.

New Bank's Safe.

The Dunellen bank will keep its books and funds in a $1,400 Manganese safe. The strong box has been received and will be installed as soon as the building is ready to receive it. The safe is divided into two parts; the larger compartments surrounding a core of drawers and boxes are for the storage of books and papers, while the inner, fireproof, the core is for the safe-guarding of the money, and is burglar proof.

Bachelors' Club Elect.

The Bachelor Club, one of the leading social organizations of Somerville, reorganized yesterday by electing the following officers: President, Job C. Kenyon; vice president, Thomas G. Winsor;; secretary, Andrian M. Beekman;, treasurer, T. D. McMurry; chamberlain, Chester A. Cawley.

A Card of Thanks.

The officers of the Children's Home desire most cordially to thank all the friends whose generous gifts made Thanksgiving Day such a happy one for the children.

BISHOP A "DISHONEST INTERLOCUTOR;" GIVES WRONG MEANING TO CHURCH DOCUMENTS

Father Bogan Rebukes Bishop Neely and Pardons Him For Sneering Reference to the Roman Catholics.

A VIGOROUS DEFENSE

Priest Works "the Deadly Parallel"

On Methodist Bishop Who Advocated Dignified Service.

A vigorous rejoinder is made today by Father B. M. Bogan, rector of St. Mary's church, to the attack filed by Bishop Thomas B. Neely, of South America, to the priest's defense of his faith which was prompted by the Methodist prelate's attack on its teachings. At the First M. E. church on Sunday, the bishop declared in an address that the Catholic church "teaches that a man can be wicked all his life and then be prayed out of Purgatory for a small sum." The report of the address was read by the priest in The Daily Press on Monday and he immediately denied the truth of the bishop's utterance and offered to give $100 to Muhlenberg hospital if the bishop would produce accredited documentary evidence to prove his assertion. Father Bogan's reply to the bishop was made in an open letter published on Tuesday. Yesterday, Bishop Neely accepted the challenge and in a lengthy argument made through the columns of this paper recited the proceedings of the Council of Trent as well as a number of other accredited documents to prove his case, the sum total of which the priest pay over the $100.

Father Bogan today makes that the following letter to the bishop's letter of yesterday:

"St. Mary's Rectory,
"Plainfield, N. J.,
"Dec. 8, 1906.

"Editor, The Daily Press:

"On Monday evening last I read an account of an address delivered in the First Methodist church, this city, on the previous evening, by a Methodist Bishop who had come among the people of his religious views to solicit money to be expended in missionary work in South America.

"In outlining the plan of campaign among the benighted people of South America, it may be presumed that the audience, which had the privilege to listen to him would have been interested in hearing a straightforward, zealous statement of doctrinal principles on which, by the aid of their money, he hoped to deliver the goods. In the report of the visit of the Rt. Rev. Collector, I find him advising that "the services must be made attractive to men; there must be dignity in them," and when he gave an exhibition of doctrinal inference and of sophistic bigotry that must have been a revelation of intellectual dignity to the men of his audience. In the diatribe that formed part of the treat, "dignified" and "attractive for men," the Rt. Rev. Collector blundered out a statement as offensive, so incendiary, so libellous, that as a priest and as a citizen, I resented it and asked for accredited documents proving that the Church had ever taught such an infamous doctrine. Now I am confronted with challenged documents, as proof of one of the most offensive statements: "That the Catholic church teaches that a man can be wicked all his life and then be prayed out of Purgatory for a small sum." In citing the documents required, the Rt. Rev. Collector shows a knowledge of Roman Catholic doctrine which does credit to his erudition. He does know what the Church teaches in the doctrine of Purgatory and the efficacy of prayers and alms deeds and pious practices for the souls detained there. With one or two exceptions his citations from accredited sources are correct. But the poor man pretends to read into them a meaning that the Church never took from them, and which has never been its doctrine nor its practice.

"A man may correctly cite the clause of Article 3 of the National Constitution 'the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment shall be by jury.' Does he to say that it is the practice of the State to order death by 'Lynch Law,' his citation, though correct, could not be held to defend his calumny against the State.

"The Constitution of the Catholic church correctly cited by the Rt. Rev. Bishop does teach that souls dying penitent and who die in the love of God really do suffer for a time in Purgatory that the slightest remnant of stain may be purified 'so as by fire,' for 'the slightest stain cannot enter into Heaven.' The Constitution of the Catholic church likewise ordains that the prayers of friends on earth may be offered and especially the official prayer of the sacrifice of the Mass, propitiating God to have mercy on those who died not 'wicked all their life,' but 'truly penitent, and in the love of God.' The Constitution of the Catholic church does teach that it has been a custom continuously observed from the days of the Maccabees in the Jewish Temple of old and from the earliest days of the new dispensation, and is therefore not a 'shrewd invention calculated to increase the revenue of the Roman church' to make an offering to the priest both in the Temple of Jerusalem and in the church today, that they may offer the sacrifice of atonement for a specified intention, namely, that God may have mercy on the souls of the penitent departed who died in the love of God.

"To cite this clause of the church's constitution and say that it defends the statement that the church teaches that 'a man can be wicked all his life and be prayed out of Purgatory for a small sum' is nothing less than calumny, so evidently distorted and untruthful is it.

"It is likewise a part of the church's constitution that out of Hell, to which those who are wicked all their are condemned, there is no redemption, and for them no prayer or sacrifice can be offered.

"But why take up privileged space to you so courteously put at my disposal. The Bishop has cited accredited documents it is true, but has proved himself a dishonest interlocutor, and an unfair controversialist.

"Picturing the fruitless remorse among the sorrows of Hell, to which are condemned all impenitent sinners, whether they be horse-thieves, drunkards, oh calumniators, the Book of Wisdom saith: "Then shall the just stand with great constancy against those who have afflicted them. "It's All Your Fault," by Edgar Selwyn, a farce pure and simple, with Charles J. Stine and Miss Olive Evans in two leading roles, is to be produced by Manager Edward R. Saltor at the New Plainfield theatre next Thursday night. This play has been described as being distinctively novel in construction, complications and situations. It is an ingenious farce, rapid in action, full of movement and abounding in witty lines that are not only funny in themselves but doubly so in connection with the situations which they apply. Even in the last act when matters are supposed to be brought to satisfactory conclusion, the author gives a deft turn that upsets all of one's calculation and arouses a new interest that only subsides as the curtain falls.

The task of constructing a clean, wholesome and entertaining farce of dramatic strength, which shall have all the requisite novelty that is demanded by the public, is no light one, and in presenting "The Governor's Pardon" at the New Plainfield theatre next Friday night the management feel they have accomplished everything that could be desired. The play is a novelty in itself, and in addition to this it contains a sufficiency of out of the way incidents and scenes to make it one of the most remarkable performances ever given on a stage. Hardly an idea or a device that has ever been employed before has been made use of, and it may safely be called the most completely different play of the year.

He'll Buy 1,333,333 Drinks.

South Norwalk, Conn., Dec. 10.—"Now I intend to have as many drinks as I have made in my lifetime," said Edward Bates, a darkeeper, yesterday, when informed that a wealthy aunt had died in Wallingford, leaving him her entire fortune, which is estimated at $200,000. "I'll be a bad boy as long as it lasts, all right," he added, "and then I can go back to making cocktails for others, I suppose. As long as it lasts, I won't make a drink, though."

New York, Dec. 10.—Now, up goes the price of cody. Meat, butter, eggs and all the real necessities of life appear to have climbed pretty near to the pinacle of high figure and the manufacturers of sweets say it is their turn. In some of the retail stores the price of chocolate and bonbons has been advanced twenty cents on the pound and the upward movement may not stop there.

DIAMOND DUST.

Unless President Ebbets, of the Brooklyn Baseball Club, changes his present plans he will sell First Baseman Jordan and Right Fielder Lumley to the New York National League club for $25,000 cash. This offer was made to Ebbets, it is said, some time ago, and the money looks so big that the Brooklyn magnate is now waver ing perceptibly. Manager Donovan, of the Brooklyn team, was summoned by Ebbets several days ago and was told that in all probability the New York Club's offer would be accepted. Donovan, so the story goes, became wagon under the collar and told Ebbets that if Jordan and Lumley were allowed to go he would send in his resignation. Ebbets argued with Donovan in vain. The manager declared that to sell Jordan and Lumley would be equivalent to killing the game in Brooklyn, where the interest began to revive last season to such an extent that the club made money and paid off a lot of indebtedness. Ebbets, it is reported, then informed Donovan that with part of his money he could get for the two Brooklyn stars he would be able to secure a couple of new men, or perhaps he could secure McGann and Browne from McGraw. But again Donovan put his foot down, declaring that the two ball men Captain Van Horne, '07; S. H. Robertson, '07, the manager; J. Brown, '07; L. M. Keefer; '07; H. Carey, '07; H. E. PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

The women of All Saints' Episcopal church held a most successful fair and bazaar Saturday afternoon and evening in the Casino at the Homestead. The several booths, filled with a tempting display of Christmas goods were all well patronized by the friends of the church who were out looking for Christmas presents. The proceeds of the fair will be turned into the church treasury for the purpose of helping to liquidate the debt.

Bill Edwards, the football umpire and one of the best officials of the game, was operated on in the Hahnemann Hospital, Philadelphia, on Thursday for appendicitis. The operation is said to have been successful. Edwards was captain of the Princeton eleven in 1899, which defeated Yale. The operation was performed by Dr. Van Tennup, also a Princeton graduate.

At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the athletic association of the New York University the varsity "N. Y. U." was awarded to ing that Jordan and Lumley must remain in Brooklyn or Ebbets could look for a new manager.

Although John I. Taylor, of the Boston Americans, talked matters over with Frank Farrell, owner of the New York Americans, Saturday, no aggrement was reached as to the probable exchange of players between the two clubs. In fact it looks now as if the proposed deal by which James Collins is to go to New York and Farrell to Boston will fall through. Farrell said that he did not believe Collins would ever be able to play his best game again and that as the New York club was well fixed for third baseme with Frank Farrell, the deal looked he felt like standing pat. There may be a deal, however, by which Pitcher Dineen, of Boston, will play in New York, Jack Chesbro going to the Hub. President Taylor is willing to trade Dineen for Chesbro even up, but the New York officials are not ready to talk business just now. Connie Mack, of the Philadelphia Americans, is expected to have a talk with Taylor, looking to the transfer of Collins to the Quaker team in exchange for Catcher Schreckengost. Mack has thirty-six players on his list and is willing to deal with anybody.

Would Abolish Grand Jury.

Ithaca, N. Y., Dec. 10.—In an address Saturday Dean Huffcut, of Cornell Law School, legal advesir to Governor Higgins, advocated abolition of grand juries. He also declared criminal trials are now subtle games with the Judge as umpire. He would return to the method of innocence and right of appeal.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 16.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—What truth has chiefly appealed to you from our Sabbath school lessons?—Matt. xiii, 32; Isa. lii, 13-15; liii, 12.

The Sabbath school lessons for the past year have been devoted to the life of Christ. The subject of the first lesson was an incident connected with His infancy, and the last subject will be His ascension. Looking back over the entire year, we may not be able to select one truth that impressed us most. If compelled to make a selection I am sure that with one accord we would choose the death of Christ. No truth, no fact, has ever appealed to the human mind and heart like this greatest fact in all human history—Christ's death for the world. It was not so much His death that appeals to us as the great truth that He died for us. "He was wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities." This is why His death stands out as the supreme event in His mission to this world. But we have studied not only the death of Christ, but also His entire life, and it all should appeal to us, for His death is only appreciated and fully understood through His entire life. We should be familiar with the life of Christ throughout, and in proper proportion it should all appeal to us. We should remember it and apply it to our lives.

After a year's study in the life of Christ:

1. We should remember Christ's life itself is the most wonderful life was ever lived. It is the world's only ideal life. Human nature is weak at its best, and when we see man's proneness to wander from God and his unfaithfulness to his fellow men it is no small thing to have at hand an unfailing life as a template that was without a flaw. Nor should we only remember it. It should be our ideal and our inspiration. We should not only admire His life and character, but should imitate them.

2. We should remember the works of Christ. He did not live an idle life by any means. He was ever going about doing good. But, above all, the marvelous works of Christ should appeal to us. Nor should we ever doubt that Christ performed miracles. In this day, when so many would do away with the supernatural, we must firmly stand our ground. All we know of Jesus Christ is told us in the Scriptures, and they declare that He performed miracles. If anything concerning the supernatural is false, can we accept that concerning the natural? If one man can strike out the miracles, cannot another with as much reason strike out the parables? If some one can say that one chapter should be omitted, cannot some one else say that another chapter should go? What is therefore the result? Simply that the Scriptures all stand or all fall. The records of the miracles of Christ are true, or we can believe nothing else written about Him, for His only historians record His miracles. And why should it be thought incredible that the Son of God did a few things that an ordinary man would not do? Could God make millions of eyes and not heal a few that had become diseased? Could God create a universe and not put new life into a single human arm that had become paralyzed? What absurdity! Between the miracles of Christ and by His miraculous ones be convinced of His deity.

3. We should remember the words of Christ. What gracious words fell from His lips—matchless parables on God's love and human duty—wonderful words of invitation to the erring and the fallen and words of comfort and good cheer to the weary, the bereaved and the discouraged! "Never man spake as He spake." Therefore let us treasure His words and be helped and comforted by them.

4. We should remember, above everything else, Christ's death for us. He died the innocent for the guilty, the just for the unjust, the righteous for the sinful. There were among the MESSAGE IN A NUTSHELL.

The recommendations made by President Roosevelt in his message to Congress briefly summarized are as follows:

A law prohibiting all corporations from contributing to the campaign expenses of any party; a law conferring upon the government the right of appeal in criminal cases on questions of law; that the crime of rape should always be punished with death, as is the case with murder; assault with intent to commit rape should be made a capital crime, at least in the discretion of the court, and provision should be made by which the punishment may follow immediately upon the heels of the offence; the number of hours of employment of railroad employes should be limited, with the aim of the general introduction of an eight-hour law; a thorough investigation of the conditions of child labor and of the labor of women in the United States; a more stringent employers' liability act than the one passed at the last session of Congress; provision for the compulsory investigation by a commission on conciliation and arbitration of disputes between employers and employees; legislation to provide for the withdrawal from sale or entry of all public lands containing, or in all probability containing, coal, in connection with the Packing House Inspection law to provide for putting a date on the label and for charging the cost of inspection to the packers; to provide for more complete governmental control of corporations to prevent the evils of excessive overcapitalization and to secure proper publicity; when next our system of taxation is revised the national government should impose a graded inheritance tax, if possible, a graduated income tax; a constitutional amendment which will relegate the whole question of marriage and divorce to the authority of the national congress which would give to it the power radically and efficiency with polygamy; the passage of an act for the developing of American shipping embodying the views expressed in the report made at the last session of Congress; legislation to carry out the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury for currency reform and the relief of stringency in the money market; a lower tariff or even the absolute free trade in Philippine products; American citizenship for the people of Porto Rico and the administration of the affairs of all insular possessions by one executive department; an act for the speedy naturalization of Filipinos who come here intending to become American citizens; that the criminal and civil statutes of the United States be so amended and added to as to enable the President acting for the United States government, which is responsible in our international relations, to enforce the rights of aliens under treaties; not an increase in the navy, but its maintenance at its present standard by replacing obsolete and outworn ships by new and good ones, and in both army and navy a principal of selection which will bring into the higher ranks fewer men and those at an earlier age.

The President says in regard to Cuba: "If the elections become a farce, and if the insurrection habit becomes confirmed in the island, it is absolutely out of the question that the island should continue independent; and the United States, which has assumed the sponsorship before the civilized world for Cuba's career as a nation, would again have to intervene and to see that the government was managed in such orderly fashion as to secure the safety of life and property."

THE CITY'S EYESORES.

When once Mayor-elect Fisk takes his office and the Common Council is reorganized on January 1, there will be much to occupy the time and serious efforts of the administration. Permanent pavements in the business section of the city are imperatively needed and so is the municipal collection and disposal of garbage and ashes. These improvements will cost considerable to inaugurate but they will mean a large saving in the end.

One great improvement that will not cost the city a penny but will do much towards beautifying the place is suggested to Mr. Fisk. We ask him to give his attention to the eyesores scattered about the streets, particularly in the business section. In the shape of great ugly poles upon which the P. S. C.'s wires are strung. These poles disfigure the streets and there is no earthly reason why the Commercial Council should not have ordered their removal long ago. No matter whether it be the P. S. C., the telephone company or other utility corporation, no concern should be permitted to mar the beauty of our thoroughfares by placing unsightly poles wherever and whenever they will. Almost in front of the handsome new building of the Plainfield Trust Company, for instance, is one of these unsightly looking objects supporting a network of wires. It completely disfigures the fine building and is a disgrace to the city.

We ask Mr. Fisk to lend his hearty support to a movement to compel the removal of these ugly poles. The place for the wires is underground. That fact is patent to him and to every other person in the community.

AN EPIC IN FIGURES.

"A veritable epic in figures, a triumphant song in statistics, is the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, which tells the story of the American farmer's marvelous store of riches won from the soil in the year just ended, reaching the astounding total of $6,794,000,000," according to a news dispatch from Washington. This exceeds the record-breaking product of last year by $324,000,000.

"The value of the farm products of the nation during the last twelve months would duplicate the entire railroad system of the United States. The average annual products of 1905 and 1906 would pay for every railroad in the world, including the entire equipment.

"The total value of the farm properties of the United States is estimated by Secretary Wilson's department at $28,000,000,000. This is an increase of $8,000,000,000 since 1900. It is more than twice the capitalization of all the railroads of the United States, and four and a half times their real estate and other investments. For the year the amounted to nearly three times the net earnings of all the railroads.

"Not only are the American farms the foundation of the domestic plenty that pervades the land, but they are the source of the nations credit abroad. The foreign balance due the United States on agricultural products for the fiscal year of 1906 is $423,000,000, while the balance on all other classes of exports is only $85,000,000.

"In the last seventeen years the American farmer has piled up the enormous credit of six billions of dollars, while the pampered manufacturer, with all the stimulus of protective tariffs and other Government favors, has a balance against him of $459,000,000.

"During the year 1906 the exports of agricultural products touched the high-water mark of $776,000,000, or $24,000,000 more than the exports of the previous record year, which was 1901."

Lincoln Square theatre, Broadway and 66th street. Telephone 5466 Columbus. Evenings 8:15; matinees, Wednesday and Saturday at 2:15. Guy Standing in Edward Peple's play, "The Love Route."

The New York press has seldom shown a more enthusiastic spirit than in its laudation of the great success which the Belasco metropolitan premiere of Mr. Belasco's production, "The Rose of the Rancho," at the Belasco theatre, New York, on the evening of Tuesday, November 27. Acton Davies, in the Evening Sun; David Belasco has made his annual production at the Belasco theatre and scored his annual success. In point of atmospheric charm, pictorial splendor and romance 'The Rose of the Rancho,' which he has written in collaboration with Richard Walton Tully, equals and in some respects excells all his previous productions, but the real sensation of the performance was the successful launching of his new and youngest star—a girl of 22, who less than a year ago was merely a hard-working little actress giving two performances a day in one of the popular stock companies, and after three short months' tuition, legitimately earned her right to rank as a Belasco star."

Hudson theatre. "The Hypocrites" is drawing so strongly at the Hudson theatre, 44th street, that Charles Frohman has cleared its path and give it a chance to run there through the entire season. Mr. Frohman has given it a remarkable cast, every member of which has been specially selected for his part, and the result is a performance that always evokes enthusiasm. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

Criterion theatre—The phenomenal success of Hattie Williams in "The Little Cherub," the dainty musical play, continues at the Criterion theatre, New York. Miss Williams and the "Cherub" are in their fifth month here playing to capacity audiences and with their popularity at such a high pitch that there is no telling when New York will be willing to let them go. It is also the funniest of the musical plays and likewise the daintiest. Miss Williams and her host of clever entertainers give a dazzling, dashing and delightful performance that lasts for over three hours. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

LITERARY.

The December National, from the cover, which is ornamented by one of Manning's striking heads, to the last page of the magazine, is attractive, and its contents unusually interesting. Among the contributors are Alfred Holbrook, "The Skating Season Has Opened," and a fine half-tone of the "U. S. Battleship Louisiana." "Affairs at Washington," by Joe Mitchell Chapple, is replete with those interesting things to which everyone wants to know about the national capital. "The Bright Side of Packingtown," by Mary Humphrey, dispels many illusions and shows that the great institutions and homes of this much discussed community are magnified by authors who have said that they are "unable to find one ray of sunshine to brighten the lives of these people, save such as they are able to get out of drunkenness."

Seldom if ever has a single issue of a magazine offered such a wealth and variety of good reading as is to be found in the Christmas Atlantic. The key note is struck at the very outset in a delightful and shrewdly-pointed essay, "Christmas and the Literature of Disillusion" by that most genial of the Autocrat's descendants, Samuel McChord Crothers. This is a wholesome, optimistic and withal seasonable protest that he makes, and is sure to find a wide echo. In a remarkable article on "New National Forces and the Old Law" Dean Bigelow, of Boston University Law School, points out the failure of our common law to meet modern crimes of combination, and asserts that some new weapon must be forged for the defense of society. Mrs. Wharton appears next in the high-water mark of fascinating account of automobile touring in France; and there is a picturesque article by Havelock Ellis, "The Spirit of Present-Day Spain," in which he tells of the transformation of that land of romance and of reminds from defeat and brings itself abreast of the present.

The Christmas number of The American Boy is a winner. From its two-color front cover, showing a lively skating scene, to the last word of the last page, it is replete with matter to stir the heart of a boy. Its principal features are a further chapter of the serials—"Plupy in Peace and War," by Judge Shute, "In Defense of His Flag," by Stratemeyer, "The Camp Fire of Mad Anthony," by Tomlinson, and "The Young Book Agent," by Alger. An extended biography of Benjamin Franklin Cooper, a description of how boys are punished in the chief schools of England are two noteworthy features. The departments relating to boy organizations, The American Boy Legion, Boys' Clubs, Curios and Curio Collecting; Amateur Photography; Mechanics and Electricty; prize essays and puzzles, are crammed full of good things. $1 a year. The Sprague Publishing Company, Detriot, Mich.

SOMERSET AGRICULTURISTS' ANNUAL MEETING SATURDAY.

Prof. Edward B. Voorhees and F. H. Castner to Be the Principal Speakers.

The fifteenth annual meeting of the Somerset County Board of Agriculture will be held in the old chapel of the First Reformed church, in Somerville Saturday next with two sessions. The morning session will be devoted to reports of the secretary and treasurer, the president's address, the election of officers and a general discussion of topics of interest to the members. There will be no annual dinner as heretofore.

In the afternoon there will be addresses by Prof. Edward B. Voorhees, of the State Agricultural Experiment Stations, on "Does Farming Pay? If Not, Why Not?" and by F. H. Castner, of Changewater, on "Poultry Raising."

MAY IRWIN TO RETURN.

Will Appear at Local Theatre in Connection With Charity Ball.

Following a week's hustling in order to secure an attraction that would in every way be satisfactory to the committee, Manager Counihan yesterday, contracted for the appearance of May Irwin and her company at the New Plainfield on New Year's Eve in connection with the charity ball. She will present her newest comedy, "Mrs. Wilson-Andrews," which was originally know as "Mrs. Wilson, That's All," and which is now running at the Bijou theatre, New York.

This was originally intended to have Nat Goodwin as the attraction for the theatre end of the affair but a change in his route compelled a cancellation. Manager Counihan and Harry L. Hall, of the ball committee, have since worked hard to get something nearly as good, if not better, and through Curt Eisfeldt's friendship for the theatre man, Miss Irwin cancelled a date at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., in order to come to Plainfield.

JOURNALISTIC OPINIONS

SENATOR KEAN ADMONISHED.

The waraing finger has been raised to Senator Kean. He is admonished, not directly, but by implication, that he would better watch what he's about, or the "regulars" will get him in 1911. It is intimated that next year a Governor is to be elected, and three years from next March Governor Stokes will be out of office, and there will be no constitutional provision prohibiting the Legislature from electing him to the United States Senate.

Very significant is this admonition, since it comes mainly from papers that are interested in Senator Dryden, and that are extraordinarily anxious for his re-election. They do not take into account the fact that at the last election this State went Republican by 1,374 plurality, but went anti-Dryden by somewhere between 10,000 and 12,000 plurality. They simply want Mr. Dryden re-elected, and they are not satisfied with cautioning Senator Kean once, but have iterated and reiterated this warning, as if they meant to have it sink in. In the case of re-inforced concrete or cement, it was believed to be clearly the work of masons, especially where both sides are to be plastered. However, if the masons want the lathers to do this work it is optional with them.

A member of the board of arbitration in speaking about the matter said that in the case of masons they are obliged to serve a long apprenticeship, and should be given preference in such work, while the lathers are not considered to be in the same class. One important fact is that the Masons' Union does not affiliate with the other trade unions and if the masons wanted to be arbitrary they could tie up a great deal of work. They do not recognize other unions and if the masons stop their part of the work such as the laying of foundations and plastering it would be impossible for the other trades to go on with their work.

However, there is no disposition on the part of the masons to be arbitrary and it is likely that whenever a similar question arises again there will be an amicably adjustment of any dispute between masons and lathers as to the execution of the particular kind of work to be done.

STRENGTHENING CHOIR.

New Voices to Be Heard at Trinity Services.

For some time, the music committee of Trinity Reformed church has been trying to obtain soprano and contralto soloists for the chorus choir. Sunday morning Miss Winifred Carroll, of the borough, contralto, and Miss Mary Moore, of Cranford, soprano, were given a trial and their voices were so pleasing to the large congregation that they were engaged for one year by the music committee and will enter upon their duties next Sunday, at which time F. S. Carter will also further strengthen the choir will his full, rich bass voice.

Miss Moore's rendering of "I Shall See Him Face to Face," was sweetly rendered with a great deal of expression, and Miss Carroll's rich, full contralto voice was fully shown as she sang Buck's "My Redeemer," as an offertory.

Hospital Directors.

The annual meeting of the Somerset Hospital was held Friday night, when Charles Schwed, George A. West, George Terrell, A. W. Mack and William W. Smalley were elected directors. The reports of the various departments indicated that they in general are in good condition. There is a balance in the treasury of $1,113, to say nothing of the recent bequest of $5,000, which will be used for the purpose of enlarging the hospital building. The chairman of the house committee, Mrs. Anna McWilliams, made a detailed report of the cost of running the institution.

Two New Shriners.

Peter A. Emmons, of the borough, and County Register of Deeds F. H. Smith ("Silent" Smith), of this city, were made shriners at a regular meeting of Salaam Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles Mystic Shrine, held at Newark, Saturday night. A number of shriners from this city were present.

MASONS AND LATHERS SETTLE THEIR DISPUTE

NO FURTHER TROUBLE EXPECTED OVER DR. ANDERSON'S BUILDING.

Further trouble between the masons and lathers is likely to be averted as the result of a conference Saturday afternoon. At that meeting W. C. Smith, of the Board of Arbitration; Titus H. Laury, who has the mason contract for Dr. Anderson's new building, over which the dispute arose; Dr. Anderson and a representative of the Consolidated Engineering Company of America, which is superintending the construction work, discussed the various points in dispute.

It was decided that the masons should not be arbitrary in the matter, but that the question of putting up expanded metal should be left to the discretion of the masons as to whether it should be done by the lathers or their men. In the case of re-inforced concrete or cement, it was believed to be clearly the work of masons, especially where both sides are to be plastered. However, if the masons want the lathers to do this work it is optional with them.

A member of the board of arbitration in speaking about the matter said that in the case of masons they are obliged to serve a long apprenticeship, and should be given preference in such work, while the lathers are not considered to be in the same class. One important fact is that the Masons' Union does not affiliate with the other trade unions and if the masons wanted to be arbitrary they could tie up a great deal of work. They do not recognize other unions and if the masons stop their part of the work such as the laying of foundations and plastering it would be impossible for the other trades to go on with their work.

However, there is no disposition on the part of the masons to be arbitrary and it is likely that whenever a similar question arises again there will be an amicably adjustment of any dispute between masons and lathers as to the execution of the particular kind of work to be done.

CROWLEY WANTED TO MOVE IN POLITE SOCIETY

GRATIFIED HIS DESIRE FOR A FEW MINUTES AT THE PARK CLUB.

After satisfying a burning thirst with borough red rye, John Crowley, of the city, became impressed with the idea, Saturday night, that he ought to move in polite society. Though he had on the same clothes he wears following his occupation as a hod carrier, the matter of attire didn't bother him any and he headed for the exclusive Park Club. He sallied into the hallway with the blase air of a member of the 400 and despite the objections of attendants, made his way to the billiard room.

The horrified young scions of Washington Park families stood aghast as Crowley saluated one and all familiarly and it was only when he challenged one of them to a bowling game that they roused up. Several of the boldest with the help of the attaches tried to eject the intruder but he had the strength of the Prudential emblem and indignantly stood his ground. In desperation, the police department was called on the telephone and Chief Marshall Weiss responded.

At the sight of teh officer, Crowley realized that the Park Club was a little out of his line and consented to exchange the billiard room for a police cell.

THIS FIRM "DISAPPOINTED BUT NOT DISCOURAGED."

Tack Up Sign When Fire Guts Place Which Was Opened Week Before.

"Disappointed but Not Discouraged," are the words on a large sign to be seen on the building of W. H. Hoskins & Co., 354 Broadway, New York, of which firm Frank A. Weeks, of West Seventh street, is a member. After spending five months in preparation to open business, which was done a week ago today, fire and water made an almost complete wreck of the building and contents on Wednesday night, two days after the opening, resulting in a loss of $70,000 to the firm and about $80,000 on the building. The stock was insured for $68,000 and the building for $83,000.

The firm deals in all sorts of supplies for business men and their offices, such as furniture, cabinets, safes, cutlery, blank books and a hundred-and-one articles for the novelty line. The cause of the fire is a mystery. It started on the fourth floor and was discovered by the night watchman. The firm had already expended $20,000 in making improvements. Before it opened its store in New York, one at 11 Gold street and another at 102 Fulton street. It will resume business on Broadway as soon as possible.

Mock Trial Cast.

The cast of the mock trial to be held by the juniors of the Y. M. C. A. Friday night has been filled. The members of it are as follows: H. W. Barrows, Harold Robins, Walter Caldwell, John Loizeaux, Charles Loizeaux, Fred Smith, Dudley Wilcox, Sherwood Parsons, G. Fountain, Stanley Robbins, Leslie Leland, Frank Wilcox, Stanley Karner, Hebber Cubberly, Paul Revere Collier, Clyde Doane, Leslie Bond, Lawrence Bromfield, G. Hartley, Frank Foster, Edgar Freeman, Frank Loizeaux, Arthur Bingman.

The Men's Club of the Seventh-Day Baptist church will meet at the church on Sunday.

Elaborate Christmas Programme.

The Christmas service of the Park Avenue Baptist church Sunday-school will be held Sunday afternoon, December 23, at 2:45 o'clock. In the plan proposed everyone in the church and school may participate. There will be donations of toys, dolls, games, books, clothing to be sent to the Children's Home for its Christmas festivities. On Thursday night, December 27, at 8 o'clock, the Christmas entertainment will be held. A novel programme, something different from the usual, has been arranged.

BREEM LET JOB GO BY

Didn't Want Borough Fire Lieutenancy and Complications Followed.

WEISS HELPED OUT

Rumor Has It That Card Playing Wasn't At the Bottom of Campbell's Resignation.

The resignation of William Campbell as lieutenant and driver in the borough fire department, Friday night, led to complications, Sunday, that threatened the efficiency of the service for a short time. Fred Breem had been appointed to fill the impending vacancy and was to have reported for duty as soon as his predecessor left the fire house. For some reason, however, Breem decided Saturday night that he didn't want the place and so informed Mayor Smalley, though for what reason or reasons has not been made known.

An effort was made to get some one to go on temporarily when Campbell quit but without success and as a last resort Sunday morning, Chief Marshal Weiss, of the police department, was put in command. He held the place until Sunday night, when Fred Emmons volunteered to help out until the Council appoints another man. This will not be done until the first of the new year.

Campbell's resignation has set the borough agog and there are well defined rumors that the order against card playing on the first floor of the fire house was not the real cause of his getting out. Mrs. Grundy, has been usually busy and one of her stories asserts that trouble has been brewing for several months that the card playing matter brought the thing to a head. Another insists that Mayor Smalley and Campbell have had a personal disagreement about something, the story being strengthened by the chief executive's attitude toward the resignation at Friday night's Council meeting. Though the two had been close friends for years, the Mayor said: "The freedom of Campbell has had about the house has made him feel his oats. It is up to the Council to act on the resignation and if I was a member of it I would vote to accept."

Whatever the trouble is, the borough is lining up on sides as it always does and there is no telling where the discussion will end. Campbell has nothing to say and the rest of the people directly interested don't care to be quoted.

DO YOUR SHOPPING NOW.

Or Before-December 13 by Telephone When You Can.

A movement is on foot to relieve as far as possible the overworked clerks and shops girls of the big department stores during the holiday rush. This movement has been started by the Consumers' League of New Jersey to relieve the shopping conditions as far as possible in the Newark stores.

Some stores are open from 8:30 a. m. to 11 p. m. for nearly two weeks preceding Christmas. These long hours are not made necessary by the greed of the shopkeepers, but by the habit into which the purchasing public has fallen of crowding their holiday shopping into the last few days.

The result is overwork and actual suffering on the part of salesmen, package girls, delivery boys, and messengers to a degree which can hardly be appreciated. To relieve these conditions as far as possible the adoption of the following rules is advised:

1—Shop early, not later than December 15th.

2—Shop early in the day.

3—Request that no packages be sent after 4 p. m.

4—Telephone your orders if possible.

This last is perhaps better than any of the other three, for if one telephones he is not only saving his own time, but the time of the clerks in the store, and is avoiding the crush and the inconvenience of mixing in the holiday crowd of buyers.

If these suggestions are pertinent to conditions in Plainfield, how much more applicable are they to conditions existing in our New York stores.

STEP TOWARD CENT POSTAGE.

Bill Asks One-Cent Rate for Each Ounce After First Up to 4 Pounds.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 12.—What amounts to an initial step toward one-cent postage is represented in a bill introduced yesterday by Senator Penrose regulating rates on packages. The plan was devised by ex-Postmaster Huidekoper, of Philadelphia. The bill provides that mailed packages up to four pounds shall be accepted as first-class matter on payment of 2 cents for the first ounce and 1 cents an ounce for each ounce in excess of one ounce.

Senator Penrose has gone carefully into the plan as proposed by Mr. Huidekoper and gives it enthusiastic indorsement.

—Joseph Savalonsky, the West Third street butcher, who was injured on the Park avenue crossing of the Lehigh Valley Railroad a couple of weeks ago, is improving rapidly and hopes to return home from the hospital soon.

ANOTHER REALTY BOOM

N. B. and W. L. Smalley Buy Stine Estate For Developing Purposes.

A VALUABLE TRACT

Consists of 109 Acres On Greenbrook Road Within the Borough Limits—Their Plans.

Extensive improvements, in addition of those already underway, are soon to be made in the western part of North Plainfield. The well-known John Stine farm, comprising 109 acres in all, adjoining the Buttfield estate and extending to Greenbrook road, has been purchased by Mayor Newton B. Smalley and his brother, William L. Smalley, Jr., of the borough. There are sixty acres on the north side, which will be taken by W. L. Smalley, Jr., and forty-nine acres on the south side to be taken by the Mayor.

The Stine homstead, one of the oldest dwellings in the borough, will be remodelled by W. L. Smalley, Jr., and he will make there upon its completion. This site is just seven minutes from the Grant Avenue Station of the New Jersey Central and is accessible to Plainfield.

This new deal will result in even greater improvements being made in that part of the borough which is known as Washington Heights, which is owned by C. W. McCutchen, W. J. Buttfield and Mayor N. B. Smalley. The work of laying West End avenue from a boulevard to a thoroughfare, a large force of men being engaged in macademozing the street. Later on the land will be cut up into building lots and handsome dwellings will be erected there.

The New Plainfield theatre will have for its attraction Saturday afternoon and night one of the most successful musical plays that has been presented in New York in many years, for on that occasion Alfred E. Aarons will bring his production of "His Honor, the Mayor," here for a return engagement. It comes from its summer run at the New York theatre and Wallack's in New York, where it enjoyed a season of success unprecedented in the theatrical history of the metropolis. In many respects the production will be given more elaborately than when seen here before as several new features are to be added, while all the principals who have done so much to assure its success will be retained.

COURT WARNS SMALL FIRMS.

Must File Certificates in Order to Recover Debts by Legal Processes.

According to a decision rendered by Judge Erwin, in the Second District Court in Jersey City, last Saturday, unincorporated concerns that have not filed with the county clerk, in the counties wherein they do business, certificates showing who constitutes the firms, cannot recover by legal proceedings any debts that may be due them.

This decision was based on a law passed by the Legislature. The act provides that any person or persons transacting business in this State under a company or firm name must file certificates showing the name of the firm and who compose it. The penalty for failing to do this is a $1,000 fine or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months. The failure to comply with this act also debars any such concern from all legal standing in court.

It was because of his failure to file a certificate that the plaintiff in the case at issue lost his suit. He was Wallace D. Patterson, of West Hoboken, who sued as the Consumers' Coal Company to recover $10 from Henry Brianski, for three tons of coal.

SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

The funeral of Mrs. Betty Steele Faber, who died at her home in Brooklyn after a long illness of typhoid fever, took place yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock at 242 Canal street, Brooklyn. She was the only daughter of Judge and Mrs. Hiram R. Steele, whose summer home is near here. She was married about a year ago and was prominent in the younger society set, having been a member of the Country Club and active in outdoor sports. Mrs. Steele has scarcely recovered from the shock of her mother's death, which took place very suddenly while Judge Steele and family were sight-seeing in the West. The burial of Mrs. Faber was in Greenwood cemetery in the family plot.

The prayer service last evening was unusually interesting, the eighteenth Psalm being the theme for consideration. Singing was entered into with more zest than usual and great interest was shown in the work.

The Board of Freeholders of Middlesex county has just paid out $9,-253.50, the cost of conducting the election.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Smith attended the funeral of Mrs. Betty Steele Faber, yesterday.

Alfred C. Quimbly, of Easton, Md., has been elected captain of the football team of St. John's College for the season of 1907. His position is fullback. Frank E. Caulk, also of Easton, was elected manager.

LONG HEARING ON THEFT OF TWELVE DOLLAR WATCH

REDDINGTON TOOK IT, AND PATRICK FOX IS INVOLVED IN THEFT.

With an admission of guilt before the court, Judge Runyon, sitting as an examining magistrate, devoted an hour and a half to a hearing in the theft of a $12 watch, Monday, in order to discover whether or not Patrick Fox, a Central Railroad flagman at Dunellen, had acted as crookedly as Michael Reddington, the thief. He was charged with having forced Reddington to hand the watch over to him. He was held, with Reddington, for the grand jury.

The watch was stolen from Carl Silbert, who has a jewelry shop at 219 West Front street, shortly after 6 o'clock Saturday evening. Reddington, with another man, said to be a Dunellen railroad fireman named Mahon, went into the shop with Fox, who wanted to buy a watch. While Silbert's back was turned, the three men left the place. When the jeweler turned, he missed the watch movement, and called to the trio to come back. They refused, and he reported the case to the police.

The trio were found in a Second street, saloon, and arrested as they came out. All of them denied having any knowledge of a stolen watch, and were released. Shortly before 10 o'clock, Fox returned to the jeweler's shop, and after apologizing for the trouble his visit had caused, he said he had found and sold Silbert he would help him recover the missing movement. He said he believed Reddington had it, because after they left police headquarters Reddington offered to sell him a watch for $5. Silbert communicated with the police, and Reddington and Fox were re-arrested. The other man was not sought because he was so drunk at the time of his examination that possible connection with the theft was scouted.

Reddington broke down under second examination and confessed to stealing the watch. Then he charged that Fox, who, he said, saw him take the watch, forced him to give it up under a threat to "squeal." He said Fox had him up for the watch in the shops from shop to shop, and gave him $1 a few minutes later at a saloon on Front street.

Reddington told that story in court, after Counsellor S. S. Swackhamer had opened in defense of Fox, in an effort to prove him entirely guiltless in the affair. Fox denied Reddington's story in toto. He said he couldn't swear that Reddington took the watch, that he did not demand it of him, and that he could not have said, on the strength of anything he knew, that Reddington had it until Reddington made the alleged offer to sell outside of police headquarters.

Mr. Swackhamer pleaded for the dismissal of the charge against his client on the ground that the only testimony in contradiction of his story was that of a self-confessed thief. He painted Fox as a hard-working, honest and temperate citizen. W. L. Hetfield, Jr., who represented Reddington, appeared also in the capacity of State attorney, and answered Mr. Swackhamer's argument. He said Fox was a sneaking squealer, who had sought to clear himself by betraying his companion. Judge Runyon said that if he were sitting as a city judge he would give both defendants a wide chance. He didn't believe either of them was a thief by nature, but that whatever each had done came more from rum than reasoning. As a magistrate, however, he could do nothing but hold them both for the grand jury. Bail, fixed at $1000, was furnished by both men. Reddington waived examination.

One of the notable events of the present local theatrical season will be the appearance of Miss Ethel Barrymore at the New Plainfield theatre next Monday night, when Charles Frohman will present her in J. M. Barrie's delightful three-act comedy, "Alice Sit-by-the-Fire," in which she appeared with great success for several months last season at the Criterion theatre in New York. The story of "Alice Sit-by-the-Fire" dwells chiefly upon a mother's love for her children, but in the course of the play there is not a little of Barrie's delightful satire upon the up-to-date style of play.

Scratch Kills Surgeon.

New York, Dec. 12.—Dr. Alfred Wild Gardner, forty-eight years old, died at his home, No. 325 West Eighty-ninth street, Sunday, of septic poisoning. Dr. Gardner scratched his hand during a surgical operation several weeks ago. Soon afterward the swelling of his arm convinced him, and so a diagnosis proved, that he had been inoculated with poison from the patient.

Miss Jennie Anderson, of Somerville, has returned home after a visit with friends here.

Miss French, of Somerset street, has been detained at home several days by a slight illness.

WATER CO. LOCATES OFFICE IN WESTFIELD

HEAD OFFICES OF MERGED CONCERNS TO BE KEPT IN THIS CITY.

The branch offices of the Plainfield-Union Water Company will be removed from Elizabeth to Westfield on January 1, quarters in the Love building in Broad street, at the latter place having been leased for the purpose. William E. Brown, of Elizabeth, will continue in the capacity of agent. The head office will remain in this city.

The Plainfield Water Supply Company, which supplies water to Plainfield and North Plainfield, and the Union Water Company, which supplied all towns between Plainfield and Elizabeth, were merged on Sept. 23 last. The name of the new corporation is the Plainfield-Union Water Company. The Union Company's supply was obtained from the Plainfield concern, the wells being in the Netherwood section. The stockholders were practically the same in both companies.

When the consolidation was effected William J. Whalan, secretary and treasurer of the Plainfield company, *was chosen to serve in the same ca*pacity in the new concern.

The change of the branch office from Elizabeth to Westfield is made for the convenience of its patrons.

DEFER CONGO PETITION

Action On Resolution to Congress is Postponed by First Baptists.

OPINION IS DIVIDED

Former Mayor Randolph Polats Out That Proposition Is An Unwise One—Incident Ended.

Because the proposed action did not meet with the unanimous consent of the members assembled, the resolutions offered at the First Baptist church Sunday morning, looking toward our Government's aid in ameliorating conditions in the Congo Free State, were not acted upon and are not likely to according to those in a position to know. The presentation of the resolutions by a committee consisting of F. E. Kinsman, B. St. John McCutchen and W. A. Connor, appointed a week before, followed an address given by Rev. Everett Burr, who is interested in the Congo Reform Association.

While from a humanitarian standpoint a majority of the members present agreed that this country should lend its aid to stop the cruel practices in the Congo Free State, others felt that this country should not meddle with the affairs in that State and that it would be unwise for any action to be taken. A week ago Thursday, no outward expression of disapproval of the plan was shown. The pastor, Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, appointed the committee of three to consider the plan and bring it before the church, yesterday, which was done after the morning sermon.

Mr. Kinsman, as chairman of the committee, presented a set of resolutions, and after a motion was made and seconded that they be adopted, L. V. F. Randolph made a few remarks, in which he explained that while he heartily agreed with a movement that would stop the cruel practices in the Congo Free State, he did not think it to be a matter in which this country should become involved. He said that Congress had no power at this time and he hoped that they would not be adopted.

As there were indications of a lively discussion pro and con concerning the resolutions, it was suggested that they be considered at a future time when they can be discussed at length. It was also brought out that at present time and place to discuss the matter at length.

At present there are about fifty Baptist missionaries who are not permitted to work in the Congo Free State, the reason, it is claimed, being that the German missionaries have the favor and influence of King Leopold who has put the ban on the American missionaries.

The resolutions presented at yesterday's service and which were tabled are as follows:

Resolved, That the First Baptist Church of Plainfield, New Jersey, regards with deep concern the intolerable conditions prevailing in the Congo Free State in this, a civilized age, apparently induced by greed of gain, and resulting in extreme oppression of an innocent and simple people by those selected by a concert of the Christian nation of the world to administer and govern that State.

That the people of this district are *peculiarly the wards of those na*tions, and can justly call upon their guardians for safety and protection, but extraordinary and unlawful excesses are practiced and conditions exist that these and undeserved penalties are inflicted upon them, and their condition is a reproach to the civilization and Christianity of the age.

It is the earnest feeling of this Church that the conditions in the Congo Free State should be ameliorated; that its people should be established and protected in the rights inherent to all mankind; that it is the duty of all enlightened men and women, and of the Christian governments of the world to take prompt and urgent measures toward such amelioration; that the government of the United States, as a leader in civilizing influences in the world, should take active steps in the premises.

That our representatives in Congress be asked to bring this matter to the attention of the State Department of the government, and to urge upon that Department an immediate effort to bring about needed reforms in the Congo Free State, and that to that end a copy of this resolution, signed by the pastor and clerk, be addressed and sent to each of the Hon. John Kean and Hon. J. F. Dryden, Senators of New Jersey, and Hon. Charles N. Fowler, Representative in Congress from this Congressional district.

F. E. KINSMAN,
B. ST. McCUTCHEN,
W. A. CONNOR.

It is said that the matter will be dropped.

FARMER JIM MARTINE AND THE FOURTH ESTATE

Grand Old Man of New Jersey's Democracy Gives Banquet in Honor of His Newspaper Friends.

LOVING CUP FOR HIM

To quote the words of Mayor-elect Charles J. Fisk, "Big-hearted, whole-souled," Jim Martine was in his element, Thursday. Next to a political contest there is nothing that pleases the sage of Cedar Brook more than to commune with newspapermen and last evening he was with forty of them. They came, at his request, from various parts of the Fifth Congressional District, in which he has waged many a hot campaign, and also Newark, and to show his appreciation for what they have done for him in his Congressional battles, dined them at the Hotel Kensington. He had left nothing undone to add to the pleasure of the occasion and it will long be cherished by every attendant and the host as one of the happiest times of their lives.

It was 8:30 when "Jim" (the newspapermen never call him by any other name) and his guests took their places at the tables. There were several short of forty and the number included some of the best known writers in the State. For an hour and a half their entire attention was devoted to the splendid menu and a few choice cigars were lighted as the "farmer orator" rapped for attention. He had decided to act as his own toastmaster and it was his intention to have the gathering settle back for a reminiscent discussion, as the members of the men who come before him knows of his political career.

He first called upon Charles C. McBride, editorial writer for the Newark Evening News, whose virile pen has supported "Jim" time and again. The two have been warm personal friends for years and, when Mr. McBride began talking it was to pay tribute to "Jim" for all the lovable traits he possesses. His integrity and ability were touched upon and with a smile on his face Mr. McBride said, "We love him because he's a newspaperman on the quiet; and what would the Republicans do if they didn't have him to prod at election time and the Democrats to put him up for office."

While he continued speaking, Mr. McBride quietly drew an object covered with tissue paper from beneath the table and when he had removed the wrapping, a handsome silver loving cup, rich in font and mood revealed. In the name of the Plainfield newspapermen, he presented it to "Jim," declaring that it was given as "a model of esteem and kindly appreciation to a farmer among farmers, a Democrat among Democrats and a noble citizen."

For at least once in his life, the "farmer orator" was visibly affected, but he quickly rallied and with his customary quick-wittedness made a fitting reply. He thanked the donors heartily and paid a high tribute to the newspapermen of the State, while again expressing his gratitude to the men connected with them for their interest in his behalf, irrespective of party affiliation. After that, the host called upon every one in the room and to a man they seized the opportunity to express in words the kind thoughts that were in the hearts for the upholder of Democratic principles, the nearly midnight before the affair terminated and by that time, from words, cheers and manner, there was no mistaking the regard that "Jim" Martine and the newspapermen of the Fifth Congressional District and Newark have for each other.

The guests who responded to Mr. Martine's invitation and attended the dinner were as follows: Charles C. McBride, State Editor A. L. Dunphy, Assistant State Editor Harry Hughes, Telegraph Editor Frank Higgins, Joseph Gunn and George E. Firstbrook, Newark Evening News; Alfred A. Zimmerman, New York World; Editor J. Madison Drake, Jr., Elizabeth Sunday Leader; Alfred A. Foote, Elizabeth Daily Journal; Editor Charles G. Adams, Morristown Express; Editor Alfred Lane, Summit Record; Editor J. W. Clift, Summit Herald; Editor Geo. P. Kelley, Cranford Citizen and Chronicle; Editor E. R. Collins, Westfield Farm Journal; Editor Henry J. Talford, Plainfield Evening Star; Business Manager Charles H. Frost, Editor W. W. Johnson, Business Manager John Gaffney, William Lambert, William Morrison, Chauncey F. Stout and John Nichol, Plainfield Courier-News; City Editor Ralph L. Morrow, Thomas M. Muir, Walter C. Dobbins, Archibald Hacquer, Corra Ryno, William R. Buckley and Edward C. Searing, Plainfield Daily Press; David J. Carney, free lance, Plainfield.

Messages were received by one of the newspaper workers from William Jennings Bryan and other Democratic leaders praising Martine for his services to the party. Some of these letters follow:

From William Jennings Bryan, twice Democratic candidate for President of the United States:

"I take great pleasure in sending a message of congratulation to Mr. Martine. He has for the past ten years been a loyal political supporter of Democratic principles—that long to my personal knowledge—and I rejoice in the splendid race he recently made for Congress.

"To come so near winning against such great odds was really to achieve a victory.

"Please present my compliments as well as my congratulations and say that I trust he may live to share in the political triumph to which he is so earnestly and ably contributing."

W. J. BRYAN.

From Charles C. Black, former Democratic candidate for Governor:

"Mr. Martine is one of the most lovable and attractive characters personally that I have ever met; courteous, warm-hearted, generous and magnetic; the more you know of him the more you are attracted to him.

"I would heardly add a word as to his attractiveness as a public speaker, because that is known by that wide circle of friends who have heard him and followed him on public questions.

"I think the personality, force and worth of the attractiveness, generous and warm-hearted nature that I wish to add my tribute as a friend to James E. Martine."

CHARLES C. BLACK.

From Congressman William Sulzer, an ex-newspaper worker:

"I am sorry I a most in my old job as correspondent to the Elizabeth Daily Journal so that I could be present, eat a good dinner, make a speech and listen to the best newspaper speech that I think of Brother Martine. But alas, I left dear old Union country in my early youth and became a lawyer in the city of New York, and finally drifted into Congress, where I was unable to remain for a long time to come, if I do not resign, or die, or get the bosses of New York to give me a chance to run for Governor.

"I have known James E. Martine for many years and can testify, of my own personal knowledge, to his sterling qualities as a man and as a citizen. He is loved and respected by all who know him and his name is a household word throughout the State which is honored by his citizenship. He is a forceful, eloquent, sag-shiney, optomistic, philosophical and a Democrat of the old school, who stands like a giant oak in the forest of fears and doubts withstanding the tempest and the storm. In language of the poet of Old Rip Van Winkle, made memorable by the pen of Washington Irving and the inimitable acting of Joseph Jefferson: 'Here's to James E. Martine, one of God's noblemen, may his shadow never grow less, may he live long and drink to the toast, and remember that, if I am not with you in the flesh I am with you in spirit."

WILLIAM SULZER.

From former United States Senator James Smith, Jr.:

"I in common with all Democrats I feel under obligation to Mr. Martine for his long unselfish and always zealous and effective service to the cause of Democracy. He has labored in all seasons and under all conditions, and undaunted by defeat, and ever with his eyes fixed upon the time sure to come, when sanity should reassert its compelling power to carry the State and Nation back to the old Democratic moorings and make the people truly the sovereign. His example of sterling Democratic manhood is an inspiration for the young voter. In his recent campaign in the Fifth Congressional District, as the Democratic candidate, he was confronted by a majority of more than 5,000 to overcome. His resources were limited but he reduced that majority to a fraction, and if he had been as well provided with the legitimate means for election as his opponent was he would have won handsomely. The Democratic party's defeat in his district as a moral victory. It was certainly a great tribute to him as a Democrat and as a citizen. * * * And two years hence, if the veteran Martine shall then accept the Congress nomination in his district, his election will be a question only of majority. * * * I express only the sentiment of all true Democrats when I say, 'May his shadow never grow less," and 'May he live long and prosper.'"

JAMES SMITH, JR.

From Congressman John Sharp Williams, minority leader in the House of Representatives:

"In all my rounds over the greater part of the United States, while engaged in the task and pleasure of preaching Democratic gospel, of the sound and fundamental sort, no dearer recollection of any more attractive and natural workers for it, remains in my mind than that of James E. Martine. He is one of those men with whom the fundamental, underlying idea of American Democracy, to wit: 'Equal opportunities for all, and special privileges for none, equal government and taxation for all, and special discriminations against none'—is a working-day religion.

"For forty years the old warhorse, Martine, has been talking Democratic principles and aidin Democratic candidates, expending time, nerve power and fortune in devotion to the greatest of all earthly causes. May God speed him to the goal of success, when he may add to the Scriptural words—'I have kept the faith and fought a good fight'—the consolatory sentence, 'I have won the fight.'"

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

From George B. McClellan, LL.D., Mayor of New York:

"I am very glad to join with the many other friends of Mr. Martine in hearty congratulations on his noteworthy achievement of November 6. It was one of the many things which have marked his service to the party to which we both have the honor to belong." GEO. B. McCLELLAN.

From former United States Senator Rufus Blodgett, Democratic candidate for Governor:

"Mr. Martine's career as a Democrat in this State has been familiar to me for many years. He is the kind of a man that the people like to vote for.

"When the dark days of the Democratic party have passed, as they undoubtedly will, I shall hope that Mr. Martine may again be called upon to serve the people as a candidate—this time for the office of Chief Executive of this State. When that time comes, if in the land of the living, I shall certainly be enrolled as one of his ardent supporters."

R. BLODGETT.

From Charles Joel Fisk, Mayor-elect (candidate of both parties) and opponent of Mr. Martine for the Mayoralty.

"A big-hearted whole-souled good fellow." CHARLES J. FISK.

SEVEN-CENT SUPPER.

Served by Women of Monroe Avenue M. E. Church.

Success crowned the seven-cent supper held by the Ladies' Aid Society of the Monroe Avenue Methodist Episcopal church Friday night. There was a good-sized attendance, and the menu was delightful.

Seven cents was the open sesame to everything of good cheer. The courses were seven cents apiece, and the articles at a sales table were all marked at that figure.

The committee in charge included Mrs. John Gaub, Mrs. Gunzelmin, Mrs. John Thompson, Mrs. Wenzel, Mrs. W. B. Latlee, Mrs. Nicholas Brouard, Miss Mary Brower. Miss Charlotte Aldrich and Miss Carrie Brower were in charge of the seven-cent table.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE "CURE" SEEMS TO FADE.

Luga Boy Apepars to Be Getting as Bad as the One Originally.

Frank Luga, of Suydam street, New Brunswick, who a few weeks ago rejoiced in the fact that his little son, who had been a cripple during his life, was growing much better under the influence of Christian Science treatment, is not so enthusiastic now over the benefits of such a treatment.

The boy had been taken in charge by Miss Christine Most, of this city, who took him to her home and so cured him that he was able to walk about and accompany her on trips to New York. Before the treatment the boy had been unable to walk at all.

Recently the child was brought back to his home here, and his father thought that the boy had been cured. But his condition at once became worse and today he is little if any better than when he entered the treatment. Miss Most is still interested in the case and makes two visits a week to New Brunswick to attend to the boy.

Freethinkers Threaten.

New York, Dec. 10.—Affairs are approaching an acute stage in the warfare that the Bohemian atheists are waging against Father Prout, of St. John's Catholic church, in East Seventy-second street, and against the Christians generally in the Bohemian colony. Father Prout Saturday received a "black hand" letter written in the Bohemian language, threatening to "settle" him with a "chunk of lead" if he did not desist from Christian instruction and his opposition to the teaching of atheism in the free thinkers' Bohemian school, in No. 321 East Seventy-third street. At his home last night the priest said he did not know how serious the threat might be, "and I don't care," said he, "I am ready to die for worse things than the truth."

Proceedings of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County.

[OFFICIAL.]

Regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union, N. J., held on Thursday, Nov. 1, 1906, at 2:30 p. m. All members present.

Minutes of the previous meeting (reading of bills being omitted) were on motion, approved as read.

COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

From Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., as follows, viz.:

Plainfield, N. J., Oct. 18, 1906.

Gentlemen: Mr. David Taylor, of Bound Brook, has placed in my hands for adjustment a claim against you for damages sustained by him by reason of his horse being injured by running the Washington avenue bridge, this city, on the 23d of Sept. last. One of the horse's front legs went through the bridge, which caused him to fall and injure his leg and body so that Mr. Taylor has been unable to use him since. The injuries are such that the horse will not be in the present condition he was prior to the accident. Kindly let me hear from you in reference to this matter, and oblige,

Yours truly,

WALTER L. HETFIELD, Jr.

Freeholder Wilbur stated that he had looked somewhat into the foregoing claim, and thought it could be settled for $25.

Freeholder Swain moved that the claim be referred with power, to Freeholders Wilbur and Westphal and to the county attorney, which was so ordered on roll call by a unanimous vote.

From B. D. Evans, Medical Director, N. J. State Hospital, as follows:

Morris Plains, N. J., Oct. 22, 1906.

I beg leave to call your attention to the fact that chapter 124 of the laws of 1906 makes it obligatory that the physicians in making certificates of persons alleged to be insane shall state in the body of such certificates the date upon which the examination is made, upon which such certificates are based; and this law further provides that the person certified to be insane must be committed to the asylum named in the commitment papers before the expiration of six days, that is, that the person certified to be insane must be taken to the institution named in the commitment papers within six days from the date of the examination upon which is based as of the certificates made by the certifying physicians.

It is therefore proper that your county should, without delay, prepare commitment blanks in accordance with the act above referred to. I beg leave to make the suggestion that a notice or notices be inserted in your local papers calling the attention of the general practitioners of medicine to this change in the law. The form of commitment that papers are in the hands of a large number of physicians, many of whom may not have learned of this change in the law.

Very truly and respectfully yours,

B. D. Evans, Medical Director.

On motion of Freeholder Gruener, received and referred to committee on lunacy.

From "The Morris County Traction Company," as follows, viz.:

Morristown, N. J., Oct. 31, 1906.

Gentlemen: We would like to have an extension of one year in which to complete the building of our line on Morris avenue, between Elm Row, Summit and Union, as we have been unable to complete the building of this line, owing to unavoidable delays. Hoping you will grant this request, we remain,

Very truly yours,

The Morris County Traction Co.,

Mo. Hoffman, Secretary.

Freeholder Krouse moved that the communication be referred to a special committee of five, said committee of five to report back to this board, which was so ordered without dissent.

The director appointed as the said committee Freeholders Krouse, Adams, Jensen, Meisel and Cladek.

From F. J. Hubbard, County Engineer, as follows, viz.:

Elizabeth, N. J., Oct. 31st, 1906.

S. P. T. Wilbur, Esq., Plainfield, N. J.

Dear sir: The Central Railroad of N. J. has planned to put in an additional track on the north side of their right of way at Berckman street, this city, and hence will be obliged to extend their bridge abutments and bridge seats to bring their abutment well into the county bridge over Cedar Brook, which, at this point crosses through under the bridge at 2 angles.

They have therefore contracted to extend the county bridge out to the north just the width of the present span and rebuild it to conform to the same lines and plan as the present bridge, which is a modern structure, and have specified that the contractor shall carry out the conforms in every particular to the present structure and to the satisfaction of the county, replacing the railing, sidewalk, concrete, etc., making all connections as at present. I have been in frequent consultation with the railroad engineers and the contractor and feel sure that the interests of the county will be fully protected in obtaining as good a job as they have at present.

Of course this will necessitate changing the course of the stream, but as such change will come on the Central's property, I do not know that the matter will be affected.

Very trul yours,

F. J. Hubbard, County Engineer.

On motion of Freeholder Cladek, received and referred to Freeholders Westphal and Wilbur, of Plainfield, and to County Engineer Hubbard.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

By the committee on claims and attorney on claim for damages, etc., by Fred Miller:

Gentlemen: Respecting the claim for damages of Fred Miller for injury to horse claimed to have been occasioned by reason of its breaking through the bridge on Claremont place, Cranford, N. J., we beg to say that we have investigated the same and are satisfied that the horse was injured by breaking through said bridge; we have also been to examine the horse, and find that the same has practically, to all appearances, recovered from said injury.

The horse in question was a heavy draught horse, and Mr. Miller claims that he has been deprived of its services for some three weeks, which he claims deprived him of the use of the team, whereby he was earning $5 a day. His claim, therefore, is not only for injury to horse, but for loss of use of the same. After conference with Mr. Miller, he has consented to accept $50 in full settlement thereof, and the undersigned committee would recommend payment of the same rather than have the county involved in litigation, and we would therefore respectfully ask the county collector be authorized to draw a warrant to the order of Mr. Miller for said sum of $50, and to take from him his full receipt and release therefore.

Respectfully submitted,

E. K. Adams, Henry Krouse, Committee.

W. R. Codington, County Attorney.

Freeholder Gruener moved that the report be received and recommendation accepted, which was so ordered on roll call by a unanimous vote.

By committee on North avenue bridge in Union township:

Gentlemen: Your committee on bridge on North avenue, with power, in Union township would respectfully report that they have examined the bridge and found it in bad order, and short in length, which made it dangerous, and they would report that they repaired and lengthened the same at a cost of $47.90.

Noah Woodruff, W. H. Swain, C. S. Chandler, Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Cady, the report was received and placed on file.

NEW BUSINESS.

The following resolution was presented and read:

Resolved, That the bill of the W. T. Kirk Co. for $613 for material furnished First street bridge, Westfield, be paid when properly audited by committee.

(Signed) Chas. A. Smith, E. K. Adams, Henry Krouse, Committee.

Freeholder Wahl moved the adoption of the resolution, and on roll call it was adopted unanimously.

The following resolution was presented and read:

Resolved, That a payment of $500 on account of the mason contract on the First street bridge, Westfield, be made when properly audited by the committee.

(Signed) Chas. A. Smith, E. K. Adams, Henry Krouse, Committee.

LIEUT. CAMPBELL QUITS

Leaves Borough Fire Department Because of Agitation Over Card Playing.

SO COUNCILMAN SAYS

Mayor Smalley Remarks That An Order Made Him "Feel His Oats."

Much to the surprise of nearly everyone present, Lieutenant William Campbell, who has been in the North Plainfield Fire Department since the paid system was inaugurated, tendered his resignation at Friday night's meeting of the Borough Council. There was no explanation as to his sudden move but the apparent reason came out later and the members voted to accept it. Immediately afterward Mayor Smalley appointed Fred Breem, formerly a driver in the city department, and his choice was ratified by the Council.

When the time came to vote on Lieutenant Campbell's resignation, Councilman Lee, who was formerly chairman of the fire committee, declared that he wanted to put in a good word for him. He stated that Campbell had served the borough faithfully and well, not only in the fire department, but as chief marshal in the police department, which position he held for many years.

"In regard to his action tonight," said Mr. Lee, "I don't know what prompted it. There was a conference in this room early in the week between Mayor Smalley and two members of the fire committee and the subject of playing cards on the first floor of the fire house, a practice that has been prevalent for some time, was discussed. It was the sense of the officials that it should be confined to the second floor and Chief Woolston was instructed to tell Lieutenant Campbell in an easy way. This was probably not done."

At this juncture, Chief Woolston secured permission from the Council to speak and declared that when he spoke to the lieutenant about the card-playing he had apparently taken no offense. When he resumed his seat, Mayor Smalley said:

"I want to reiterate what Councilman Lee said about Mr. Campbell's record and also to speak about the card playing. Doing it on the first floor is not in keeping with the dignity of a fire department and it should be confined to the proper room. No offense was meant when instructions were given to this effect. Campbell has been an efficient man but he has always had his own way about the house and this may have had a tendency to make him feel 'his oats." I am sorry he tendered his resignation on the spur of the moment but it is up to the Council to act and if I were a member of it I would vote to accept."

Councilman Lee said he had spoken to the lieutenant about the matter and tried to get him to withdraw the resignation but without success. When a vote was called, it was accepted unanimously.

Recently Breem, who will be Campbell's successor, was lieutenant and driver, was in the city fire department for eight years. He resigned two years ago to engage in the livery business on East Second street. He afterward retired from the field and recently began managing a similar business at Passaic. He was examined last week as an applicant for the borough police force and would have been appointed but for the resignation in the fire department. Among those Campbell will continue to act as assistant driver.

Walls Will Probably Be Built.

The proposition to build retaining walls on the West End avenue bridge will be submitted to the Somerset County Board of Freeholders by the bridge committee from the Union County Board, the latter body having agreed to stand half the expense. The matter will come up at the next meeting of the Somerset County Board. It is quite likely that the improvement will be made, as it is a necessity.

TENANT LIABLE TO A FINE

Occupant of Premises and Not Landlords Must Remove Snow and Ice.

SO SAYS MR. MARSH

Tenant May Be Fined But Cost of Work Must Be Counted in Taxes Against the Property Owner.

Corporation Counsel Marsh has quoted the law on the duty to remove snow and ice from sidewalks, at the request of the local board of assessors, made through Charles H. Hand.

Mr. Marsh says:

"Answering your inquiries regarding assessments for the cost of removal of snow and ice from sidewalks, I have to say that it is the duty of the tenant or occupant of a dwelling house to remove the snow and ice from the sidewalk, and for failure to perform that duty, he is liable to the penalty provided by the statute and city ordinance. The city, however, has a further remedy to enable it to collect such assessments. The statute provides that the cost of removing the snow and ice, as certified to by the street commissioner, shall be charged upon the books of the city against the lands, abutting upon or bordering the sidewalks, and makes such cost, with interest, a lien on the lands to be added to and to form a part of the taxes next to be assessed on the lands, and to be collected in the same manner as other taxes.

"The Board of Assessors, therefore, has no duty to perform with reference to such assessments."

Brownsville Probe.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 10.—Entering into the spirit of the Presidents intimation that the committee of inquisition of his dismissal of negro troops because of their alleged misconduct at Brownsville, Texas, the Senate today adopted two resolutions of inquiry. One, by Senator Penrose, is directed to the President, calling for the transmission of all despatches, letters, reports and other facts connected with the affair. The other, by Senator Forsker, directs production of any similar information in the possession of the Secretary of War.

Rats Get Woman a Divorce.

When a dwelling house is so infested with rats that they jump on the beds a wife is justified in insisting that her husband find forthwith a more cheerful home, and, if he fails, in leaving him, is the decision of Vice-Chancellor Stevenson, of the New Jersey Court of Chancery. Robert Stalee, of Jersey City, brought action for divorce against his wife for desertion. She filed a counter bill, and proved the rats incident and the refusal of her husband to move. She got her decree.

M. E. BISHOP ACCEPTS PRIEST'S CHALLENGE: CLAIMS THE $100 HE OFFERED FOR CHARITY

Dr. Neely Presents His Argument Through the Daily Press to Prove His Aspersions on Roman Catholic Teaching.

REPLY TO FR. BOGAN

Quotes Documents to Prove His Assertion That Church Teaches Wicked Man Can Buy His Way Through Purgatory.

Bishop Thomas B. Neely, Methodist Episcopal bishop of Buenos Ayres, South America, whose assertion that the Catholic church "teaches that a man can be wicked all his life and then be prayed out of purgatory for a small sum" brought forth an immediate offer from Father B. M. Bogan, the rector of St. Mary's church, to pay $100 to Muhlenberg Hospital provided the Methodist prelate would produce proper documentary evidence to prove his statements, has made answer in this paper today. In concluding his argument, the bishop asks that the $100 be paid over by the priest to the charity he named.

This paper received the following message today from Bishop Neely:

"In regard to Father Bogan's attack, permit me to say that I never attack the people called Roman Catholics, but as a Protestant I cannot agree with the errors of Romanism.

"Father Bogan criticises a remark attributed to me and offers one hundred dollars to the Muhlenberg Hospital if an accredited document can be found that teaches any such thing in relation to the doctrine of purgatory. I have not had time to read the report of my discourse and write this in haste as I am traveling from point to point. However, we note that it is the common understanding among Roman Catholics (first) that human sinners go into purgatory, second) that masses are said for their deliverance, (third) that money is paid to have masses said, (fourth) that it is asserted that these masses which are paid for with the money of this world help the souls in purgatory in the other world. This is the common understanding which presumably is based upon some supposed authority. But for Father Bogan's allusion to the common practice and the common understanding is not enough. It must be citation from a document and that must be authoritative. Does he mean that nothing but the original document hidden away in the Vatican at Rome will satisfy him?

"But beyond this common understanding which comes from the teaching and practice within the Roman church there is documentary evidence. There are authoritative documents which the Roman church has recognized and continues to recognize. We cite a few from among many:

"The Douay Catechism contains the following:

"Q. Whither go such as die in venial sin, or not having fully satisfied for the punishment due to their mortal sins? A. To purgatory, till they have made full satisfaction for them, and then to Heaven."

"The Council of Trent, an authoritative Roman Catholic Council, said: 'The Catholic church, instructed by the Holy Spirit from the sacred writings and the ancient tradition of the fathers, hath taught in holy councils, and lastly in this oecumenical council, that there is a purgatory.'

"It further says 'that the souls detained there are assisted by the suffrages of the faithful, but especially by the acceptable sacrifice of the mass.'

"The Council of Trent further declared:

"'If any one shall affirm that the sacrifice of the mass is only a service of praise and thanksgiving, or a bare commemoration of the sacrifice made on the cross, and not a propitiatory offering, or that it only benefits him who receives it, and ought not to be offered for the living and the dead, for sins, punishments, satisfactions, and other necessities; let him be accursed.'

"The Council of Trent was an authoritative council and its decisions are documentary proof that such ideas as the masses for dead sinners are taught by Roman Catholicism.

"Then the Creed of Pope Pius IV contains this:

"'I constantly hold that there is a purgatory, and that the souls therein detained are helped by the suffrages of the faithful.'

"The Council of Trent shows that the chief of these suffrages is the sacrifice of the mass and that the souls detained in purgatory are assisted by the acceptable sacrifice of the mass.

"It is well known that masses can be secured for the dead upon payment of money and that they have been secured many a time as every Roman Catholic knows.

"The Council of Trent said:

"'Let the bishops take care that the suffrages of the living faithful, viz., masses, prayers, alms, and other works of piety, which the faithful have been accustomed to perform for departed believers, be piously and religiously rendered, according to the institutes of the church; and whatever services are due to the dead, through the endowments of deceased persons, or in any other way, let them not be performed slightly, but diligently and carefully, by the priests and ministers of the church, and all others to whom the duty belongs.'

"This recognizes the saying masses for the dead and other service by the living for the dead through the endowments of deceased persons, as well as in other ways.

"That is to say the man before his decease can by his endowments purchase the right to these masses and services. Surely he is taught will help him after he is dead. He may die a sinner but leave his money to help him in and out of purgatory, and the living can give their money on the supposition or assertion that the masses and the services will help their dead friends who are in purgatory. The teaching is that a sinner's money can secure for him when he is dead what will help his soul after death, or the money of his friends will help him after death. As the Roman Catholic Dens said: 'Suffrages infallibly profit the souls for which they are made.' So a man may go on sinning imagining that he thus can be saved after death. This is not calculated to keep him from sinning, and, it may be asked, whether it does not give the rich man an unfair advantage over the poor man, for the rich can pay for a greater number of masses and other services. So the rich man may be taught that his legacy will be instrumental in saving his soul.

"This is in contrast with New Testament salvation through faith in Christ—a salvation that is 'without money and without price.'

"All this is the work of inventions calculated to increase the revenues of the Roman church.

"Even for the poor people Purgatorian Societies have been instituted, so that the members 'wishing to contribute to the relief of the suffering souls in purgatory shall pay one penny per week, which shall be appropriated to the procuring of masses to be offered up for the repose of the souls of the deceased parents, relations, and friends, of all the subscribers to the institution in particular, and the faithful departed in general' and the subscribers themselves after their decease were to receive similar benefits and thus they would be purified from sin and 'would not die.'

"The preamble to the Constitution of such a Purgatorian Society, recites that the object of the organization is to relieve 'the suffering souls in purgatory' and the 'shortening the duration of their sufferings by the most easy, cheap, and charitable, that is to say by paying their money into the coffers of the church, which is practically buying salvation. So a man can go on in life sustained by the notion that masses which have been paid for will help in the duration of his sufferings. Surely these are 'the most easy means imaginable.'

"How different are the simple means set forth in the New Testament: 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved,' and, 'By him, all that believe are justified from all things.'

"The 'easy means' which have been invented by men are not the Gospel means:

"We have cited a few of the documents. Did time permit much more proof could be presented. This, however, is sufficient to show what Romanism does teach as declared.

"Father Bogan should pass over his $100 to the hospital, where it will at least do the living good even if it does not help souls out of purgatory."

Pierce's Property Sales.

The following sales were made during November through the agency of Robert L. Pierce, of Dunellen: House and lot of Lewis Titsworth to Andrew Mullen; 4 lots of Lewis Titsworth to Abraham Nelson; 26 acres Mrs. E. A. English to C. E. Kelley & Co.; 4 houses and lot to Lincoln for occupancy by Mr. Kewark man; house and lot Mrs. Steib to Abraham Nelson; large building and land of estate of Nathan Vais to Alvah Gray; 35 acres of David Dunn estate to New York man.

Plainfielders Arrive in Mexico.

Word has been received that Miss Linda D. Butler, Mr. and Mrs. Bourgeois and their daughter, Miss Marie Bourgeois, formerly of Plainfield street, who sailed for Mexico in the steamship Merida November 18th, have arrived at Vera Cruz after a pleasant passage. They were welcomed by Miss Julia Bourgeois, who has been a resident of Mexico for a few years and, who, with twenty of her friends, escorted the travelers to their future home, near the city of Mexico.

BOROUGH SEWER MATTER IS NOT LYING DORMANT

W. J. BUTTFIELD STATES COMMISSION IS WORKING SLOWLY BUT SURELY.

In the regular order of business at Friday night's meeting of the Borough Council, Clerk Rowley read a communication from the sewer commission in reply to the letter sent it by the Board of Health, urging that something be done soon in regard to the installation of a system. It was stated by W. J. Buttfield that the committee is working on the matter and that in the opinion of Chairman Charles W. McCutchen undue haste might interfere with the ultimate consummation of their plans. The Board of Health will be informed of the committee's reply.

On a resolution offered by Councilman Smith, the council accepted the offer of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company to furnish power for the fire alarm system at $100 a year. At the present time it is secured from batteries and it has been found to be an expensive and unsatisfactory method. The change will be made at the first of the year.

On a resolution offered by Mr. McGee, $100 was appropriated to have the books of the collector and treasurer audited by an expert. The finance committee is to designate who shall do the work. A. R. Phillips was granted permission to erect a frame structure at 26 Grandview avenue to be used as a creamery and Frank Denckla was appointed a special marshal at the request of the Board of Health, in order that he might be authorized to act in connection with his health inspection work. The treasurer reported a balance on hand of $23,390.54.

The council will meet again on Friday night, December 21, in order to wind up all business for the year and receive the annual reports.

CHAMBER CONCERT AT THE CASINO

SECOND IN SERIES PROVES TO BE A DELIGHTFUL AFFAIR.

At the second in this year's series of McIntyre's chamber concerts at the Casino, it became evident that Mr. McIntyre has succeeded in the remarkably short period of two seasons in bringing together a trio of real charm, vigor and finish. Mr. Culp, who made his first Plainfield appearance this season, is a violinist who combines the authority and precision so essential in trio and quartet work with a fine suavity of tone. Mr. Dubinsky, the 'cellist, is by this time too well known and too well liked in Plainfield to need special mention. The same may be said of Mr. McIntyre at the piano. The instrumental soloist last Friday was Mr. Culp, who played the Sarasate arrangement of Faust airs with exquisite taste and feeling.

The singer at this concert, Miss Edith Rodgers, is a newcomer in Plainfield concerts, but after her performance of last evening there can be little doubt that she will be given opportunity to appear here again. Her voice is a mezzo-soprano of considerable strength and quality, and with a singular flexibility and facility for a voice of such power and color.

Mr. McIntyre himself did not appear as a soloist, confining himself to the piano work in the trios and to the accompaniments.

The program was as follows:

Arensky, Trio in D minor, for piano, violin and 'cello, Allegro Moderato, Scherzo, Elegia, Finale; songs, Robert Franz, (a) Süsse Sicherheit, (b) Es hat die Rose sich beklagt, (c) Im Herbste; accompanist, Amherst Webber, La Premiere; Vidal, Printemps Nouveau, violin; Sarasate, Faust Fantasie; songs, Somervell, Shepherds Cradle Song; (Old English) When Love is Kind; Mrs. H. A. Hedges, by request at the Spring-Louis Ganne, Serenade, for piano, violin and 'cello.

Voting Machines Costly.

North Plainfield is finding out that voting machines are expensive contrivances to have. At the Council meeting, last night, a bill of $17 was received from Robert Trewin for storing and exhibiting the two machines in the borough, $5 being for the latter item. Add to this the insurance, cartage and other expenses makes voting by them pretty costly.

Annual Meeting of Trust Company.

The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Plainfield Trust Company for the election of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of such other business as may be brought before it, will be held at its banking house on Park avenue, Tuesday afternoon, January 8, from 3 to 4 o'clock.

Death of James M. French.

James M. French, aged sixty-four years, well known in this city, died yesterday at his home in Westfield, after a long illness with kidney trouble. He leaves a widow and two daughters, the Misses Anna and Bessie French. The funeral services will be held at the late home, 255 Clark street, Westfield, tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. Interment will be in Fairview cemetery, Westfield.

HAIL HIM AS SENATOR MUST COVER ASH LOADS

Governor Accepts Masonic Brethren's Cheers as a Consolation Prize.

ENTHUSIASM IN ESSEX

If That Cheer Had Come From the Legislators It Might Have Meant Something, Said Mr. Stokes.

Governor Edward C. Stokes has found how at least one section of Essex county feels as to his choice for United States Senator. At the annual dinner of Hope Lodge, F. and A. M., of East Orange, held in the Woman's Club building, the Governor was cheered again and again as "the next Senator," and the Executive did not attempt to dodge the recognition, although he humorously remarked that he accepted the cheers as "a consolation prize."

Declaring that New Jersey had never had a better Governor, Justice J. Franklin Fort presented Mr. Stokes who, when the cheers had died away, said:

"If that last cheer I heard had come from the legislators in joint meeting assembled I might think it meant something, but coming from those who only cheer but have no vote, I accept it as it is meant, as a sort of consolation prize."

There were loud cheers of "No" at this declaration. Continuing, the Governor said:

"I came here under a false impression. Judge Dill secured my acceptance under the idea that this was a quiet smoker, a sort of Masonic Quaker meeting, and behold I am confronted with a set toast, surrounded by dignitaries of the Supreme Court, who earn their salaries by declaring unconstitutional the laws I have signed after great deliberation and after vain effort to accertain how the Court of Errors is going to guess."

The Governor talked of the notable men who had been allied with Masonry and of the Masonic spirit of equality. Continuing, he said:

"What is the Roosevelt square deal but Masonic teaching? What is the Roosevelt doctrine of sacredness and purity of the family life but Masonic doctrine? What is the Roosevelt conception of civic righteousness but applied Masonic law?

"We hear much of reform in these days. A true Mason is always a true reformer. The only difference is that he does not advertise his wares as a profession. He works out reforms modestly, quietly, consistently."

HOUSEHOLD TOPICS.

Try fine sandpaper on ivory handled knives that have yellowed with age. Neither ivory nor woden handles should ever be allowed to go into the water. They should be washed in the hands and immediately dried.

Keep a wet sponge in the cabinet with ivory curios or carvings. It will provide moisture that prevents cracking from drying out.

To cut new bread or cake without crumbling, heat the blade of the knife.

A pair of scissors is the best of utensils for freeing grapefruit of its tough fibre.

If the woman who has to prepare the clothes in the "wash" for ironing day will take the trouble to fold them carefully when they come from the line and will not crumple them into balls of wrinkles in the basket before the folding begins, she will find the time required for ironing reduced appreciably.

Handkerchief corners will meet more exactly if the handkerchiefs are folded with the first crease on a line with the width-wise threads of the linen.

A woman who has been a victim of dyspepsia for more than a year has been helped by sipping slowly a pint of cold (not iced) water while she is dressing in the morning. She drinks no liquid while she is eating.

Miss Sophie Barlow Engaged.

Miss Sophie Barlow, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Barlow, of Prospect place, gave a charming tea this afternoon in honor of Miss Katherine Hartshorne, of Freehold, who is her guest. At the social function was also announced the engagement of Miss Barlow to Edward H. Hobbie, son of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Hobbie, of Watchung avenue. There were sixty young people at the tea, most of whom were from the city and borough.

Attended Society Wedding.

Rev. George A. Warner, rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, attended brilliant society wedding at Orange, last night, when Miss Josephine Drake, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lauren J. Drake, and David M. Boyd, both of that place, were married at Grace Episcopal church. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Charles T. Walkley, rector. A large reception followed at the home of the bride's parents.

Junior Banquet to Seniors.

The pupils of the senior and junior classes of the Plainfield High School are planning for the annual Christmas festivities, when the juniors will give a banquet to the seniors. The committee from the juniors consists of Miss Frances Foster, Percy Mygrant, Harold Robins, Miss Esther Crampton and Walter Caldwell.

POLICEMEN GET ORDERS

Police Move Against Nuisance Resulting From Ashmen's Carelessness.

Will Watch For Violations or Ordinance Covering the Wagons, and Act On Every One Detected.

*Appreciable lessening in the quan*tity of dust and dirt that flies about the streets when the ash wagons is looked for as the result of an order issued by Chief Kiely regarding the enforcement of the ordinance governing ash wagons. Every ashman, according to the police head, will be compelled to obey the law that calls for a complete covering of the wagon in such wise as to prevent the escape of any of the contents.

The announcement of the ash-covering crusade was made at the hearing of Richard Johnson, colored, driver of an ash-cart, who was arrested Friday for violating the ordinance. Chief Kiely interrupted Johnson's attempted explanation to say that he had seen the wagon himself and, that it was unprotected.

"Few, if any, of the wagons are properly covered," said the chief, "and it is time something was done to bring about a change. As it is now, the average load goes through the streets dropping piles of ashes and dirt allong the roadway, and on a day like yesterday great quantities of dust are blown about. The city hires men to keep the streets clean, and it is not fair, to make no other point, that they should be up and down the streets dirtying them at every turn of their wheels.

"I have instructed all the officers to watch the ashmen, and every case of ordinance violation will be promptly acted upon. We had a number of complaints regarding the wagons, and will go after the men good and hard."

I know that ashmen break the law," said Judge Runyon. "I have seen wagon after wagon very poorly protected.

"The law is explicit on the subject," continued the Judge, "and admits, of no half-way measures or makeshifts on the part of the ashmen. It calls for a cover of ash or wood that will 'entirely prevent' the escape of any part of the loads."

Johnson was released under suspended sentence, but he had to promise to cover his wagon properly.

C. M. DOLLIVER TO BE NEXT BOROUGH RECORDER

MAYOR SMALLEY WILL APPOINT HIM AT THE FIRST OF THE YEAR.

Mayor N. B. Smalley announced at the regular monthly meeting of the Borough Council, Friday night, that Charles M. Dolliver would be the next borough recorder. He stated that it had been his intention to make the appointment this month but that something had interfered and it would be done directly after the first of the year. The office has been filled by the Mayor since last December, when Thomas Doud resigned.

Mr. Dolliver is one of the city's best known young lawyers and is in every way fitted for the position. There have been many applicants for it since the Mayor assumed the duties temporarily but the chief executive was unable to make a selection and he continued to dispense justice. By so doing he has saved the borough $200 this year as that is the salary that goes with the office at present.

A. O. U. W. Elects.

Columbia Lodge, No. 58, A. O. U. W., last night elected these officers: Master workman, Stephen H. Schlef; foreman, Joseph D. Moon; guide, John Calder; recorder, Robert Loughlin; financier, Frank Putnam; receiver, Henry Lisfke; inside watchman, John G. Bicknell; outside watchman, Michael Kohler; representatives to Supreme Lodge, V. W. Nash, Sr., and J. W. A. Bauersachs; alternates, Henry Nischwitz and John G. Bicknell; trustee, R. V. Kenney.

"Facial expression," said the thoughtful looking man," is not confined to human beings by any means. For instance, some time ago I went to call on a friend of mine, who was not at home. However, a dog of his was there. I looked at the dog a moment, and he returned my look. Then something in the dog's face seemed to take hold of me and simply root me to the spot. It was his teeth!"—Chicago News.

Fourth Estate Was Solid.

It wasn't because Farmer Orator Marsh-a-field didn't have the newspapermen of the Fifth Congressional District with him that he failed to land that job in Washington. The pen is mightier than the sword, but sometimes it gets broken on the ballot box.—Newark Evening News.

From J. W. Johnson's.

The handsome silver loving cup given by the newspapermen of Plainfield to James E. Mintzer at his banquet Thursday night came from the silver house of J. W. Johnson, 22 John street, New York. It is considered a work of art.

YOUNG WOMEN GIVE A SUPPER FOR MISSIONS

TRINITY BAND'S MENU PATRONIZED BY UNUSUALLY LARGE CROWD.

The members of the Young Women's Mission Band of Trinity Reformed church, in arranging a supper for the cause of foreign and home missions, were well rewarded, Thursday, the affair being liberally patronized. The lecture room of the church, where the supper was served, presented a holiday appearance in its attractive decorations of red and green, arranged with crepe paper. The paper was used in profusion and with striking effect. In addition there was a booth in the center of the room, of the red and green colors, where fancy and useful articles and candy were sold. This booth was the clever work of William Olmsted. There was also a cake table, prettily decorated. In the main room were a number of tables where supper was served. These were garnished with effective decorations. The menu was an exceptionally good one and generous portions were served. This was the menu: Bouillion, croquets, cream potatoes, chicken salad, cold slaw, pie, coffee.

An extra attraction and one that helped to make the evening one of great pleasure, was the excellent programme of music rendered by Charles Suhr's orchestra. The musicians were very generous and played frequently during the hours of the supper from 6 to 9 o'clock.

Miss Lillian A. Force, the president of the Band, and an efficient committee of which Mrs. F. S. Cutter was the chairman, had supervision of the affair. The members of the kitchen committee consisted of Mrs. Leonard Smith, Mrs. Corra Kyzo, Miss Mabel Wilson, Mrs. Peter B. Hodge and Mrs. Harry F. Crawford.

Those in charge of the fancy and candy booth were Mrs. William Olmsted, Mrs. Theodore Mantz, Miss Achsa Holmes, Miss Cora Laire and Miss Cora Miller had charge of the cake table.

The women presiding at the supper tables were Mrs. George Mantz, Mrs. F. S. Cutter, Mrs. Anna Leggett, Mrs. H. C. Wentworth, Mrs. William Alleger, Mrs. H. W. Marshall, and they were ably assisted by these waitresses: Miss Margaret Leggett, Miss Helen Smith, Miss Cora Gano, Miss Alice Vroom, Miss Mamie Davenport, Miss Ruth Gano, Miss Hazel Martin, Miss Jessie Hockridge, Miss Edna Cole, Miss Ida VanArsdale, Miss Rose Kling, Miss Marie Kling, Miss Edna Ditts and Miss Anna Bodine.

The attractive menu cards were the artistic work of Miss Elizabeth Randall and were much admired. The patronage was greater than anticipated and before the supper hour was over everything was sold out. The committee regretted that it was unable to serve a complete supper to those coming late, but had to content themselves with doing the best possible under the circumstances. Over 200 suppers were served.

HUGE LIGHTNING PLANT

The P. S. C.'s Central Light and Power Plant Has Grown to Mammoth Proportions.

SUPPLIES MANY TOWNS

Plainfield, Dunellen, Bound Brook, Somerville and Other Places Supplied from Metuchen.

Although it is not generally known, there is located in Metuchen borough one of the most modern electric plants in the country, and it is said, one of the three largest plants in New Jersey. This is the mammoth station of the Public Service Corporation, situated on Durham avenue, along the Lehigh Valley Railroad tracks.

The huge plant was erected in 1899 on the McAdams farm near Dismal Swamp. The ground is low at this point and there is plenty of water suitable for boiling purposes. The water supply system alone is a big thing and it means a saving of many thousands of dollars. The water is taken from brooks converted into steam, the stream put through the condensers and then the hot water flows through a canal to the lower end of a lake and is cooled off by this process and used over again. This system works better in winter than in summer as the water holds heat longer in warm weather. An effort is being made to overcome the difficulty by drilling wells, in order that there may be plenty of cold water in summer.

In 1904 the Public Service Corporation took the Central Electric to its mighty bosom.

The original plant of the General Electric was contained in a three-story brick structure, 100x100 feet, in which were two 800 horse Corliss engines. When Public Service took charge a fifty foot extension was added, a main building and two 1,500 horse steam turbines were installed, making a plant three times larger in generating capacity and even now it is plain to be seen that the capacity of the plant will have to be further increased in the near future. It takes five 750 horse power boilers to run the plant. This new and larger station will be required to its full capacity to take care of the December and January business. On account of the rapid development of the power and lighting business in the towns operated from Metuchen a lot of new machinery has been ordered in anticipation of the greater increase for 1907 and 1908.

The power stations which formerly existed in Plainfield, Rahway, Carteret, Bound Brook, Somerville, Raritan and New Brunswick and Perth Amboy have all been closed down during the last few years, and in these towns there are substations with receivers to convert the electricity generated in Metuchen.

The principal towns lighted from Metuchen are New Brunswick, Perth Amboy, Sewaren, Woodbridge, Port Reading, Chrome, Carteret, Rahway, Westfield, Plainfield, Dunellen, New Market, Bound Brook, Somerville, Raritan, Highland Park and Metuchen.

In addition to furnishing electricity for lighting and power for these towns and smaller places not named, power is furnished for operating the Perth Amboy trolley cars, which formerly received power from the Raritan Copper Works. The street railway systems of Rahway, Somerville, Bound Brook and Raritan are also operated from Metuchen, and Bound Brook, Somerville and Raritan system was formerly operated from Metuchen.

All of these towns and sub-stations are connected by an independent telephone line with an exchange at the Metuchen Station. Jersey City and Newark are also included in the system.

The New York Daily Tribune.

Of course, a great deal depends on your own taste in the matter of newspapers. The Tribune is written by intelligent gentlemen, for intelligent gentlemen. If that it not what you want, try something else. If you want a publication that serves up so much gore and so many thrills in every issue, and do not care whether what you read is true or not, why, it is money thrown away to buy The Tribune. If, however, you are looking for a daily history of the world, carefully collated and sifted and presented in the most attractive form that the facts and the laws of good taste will permit, you cannot make any mistake in reading The Tribune every day. But The Daily Tribune is more than a continuous history. It is, as it has been for over sixty years, the great exponent of progressive national thought, and fills a larger place in American history than any other newspaper. It contains special articles on nearly every subject which interests intelligent and clean-minded people, to say nothing of the illuminating and instructive editorial articles and reviews of books, music, art and the drama. Just by way of knowing the best of life, why don't you invest $1 and get The Daily and Sunday Tribune by mail for a month? With The Sunday Tribune goes a handsome Illustrated Supplement and a Magazine, with colored covers, equal to anything sold for ten cents.

REVENGE ON HIS WIDOW

Neighbors Suspect That Her Barn Was Fired by Late Husband's Enemy.

WAS NEAR THE SCENE

Mrs. Augusta Blackford's Barn, Grain and Poultry Destroyed by Alleged Incendiary.

Vengefully fled, it is said, the barn on Mrs. Augusta Blackford's place, on the New Dover road, Oak Tree, was burned down Monday night. Hay, corn and fodder stored in the barn were destroyed, and a third fowls lost their lives. A cow was rescued.

The fire was discovered at 7 o'clock. The barn was all ablaze inside at that time, and no chance to save it from destruction remained. Neighbors gathered about as the flames consumed the structure, but they could do nothing.

There is no doubt in the minds of Mrs. Blackford and her neighbors that the barn was set afire. Suspicion points strongly to a shiftless man of the neighborhood, who is said to have harbored a grudge against Mrs. Blackford's dead husband for some time. It is said this man was seen near the barn just after the fire broke out in its full intensity, and that he hung about the scene with ill-concealed pleasure as it burned.

"WILDCAT" HITS FREIGHT, ITS ENGINEER IS HURT.

Says He Saw Signals but Couldn't Stop His Engine—Caboose Burned.

A rear-end collision on the New Jersey Central Railroad west of Whitehouse Station at about seven o'clock Sunday morning, caused traffic to be blocked for about five hours. Engine No. 178, which was pulling only a caboose, and running eastbound at great speed around the curve at the base of Pickell's mountain, crashed into the extra Allentown fast freight, wrecking two cars and the caboose of the latter, and badly damaging No. 178. The caboose took fire from its stove and burned; as did also the woodwork on the damaged locomotive.

Engineer Mundy of No. 178 said he knew the signals were set against him, but could not hold his engine on the down grade. He was struck in the stomach by a flying timber and very severely injured. He was taken to his home at Elizabethport. Some of the crew of the freight, who were in the caboose, were thrown sprawling, but escaped with only a few cuts and bruises.

Passengers were transferred. The wrecking train and crew were rushed to the scene and soon began the work of clearing away the debris, which was over both tracks.

SENATOR FRELINGHUYSEN TALKS TO SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

Judge Schenck Presides at Meeting of Somerset County School Boards Association.

The quarterly meeting of the Somerset County School Board Association was held Saturday in the First Reformed church in Somerville and was very largely attended by members of the boards of education of the different townships and boroughs of the county. Judge Louis H. Schenck, of Neshanic Station, the president, was in the chair, and John F. Reger, the county prosecutor, was secretary of the meeting.

The chief address was made by Dr. J. H. Hulsart, who is principal of the public schools of Dover. He is an interesting speaker and his remarks were highly appreciated. Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen was present and spoke as usual, instructively, about the school law. Assistant State Superintendent J. Brognard Betts and County Superintendent Krebs were also speakers. A banquet was served at Hotel Cawley.

RUDOLPH BOURGEOIS.

Former Plainfielder Succumbed to Fever in New Mexico.

Rudolph Bourgeois, formerly of this city, but late of New Mexico, died there on Saturday, December 1, following an illness from bilious fever. Word of his death came from his sister, Miss Marie Bourgeois, in a letter to Mrs. Charles Conover, of Elmwood place, received this morning. Mr. Bourgeois was married in Plainfield, December 31, 1905, and he and his wife left here last April to join his sister in New Mexico. A few weeks ago his parents, another sister and Miss Linda Butler left here to join the other members of the family in New Mexico, and Mr. Bourgeois died two weeks after their arrival.

Mr. Bourgeois was twenty-six years of age and was the youngest of three brothers and two sisters. His wife is left without a living relative. He was an expert machinist and one of three superintendents of a large machine shop in New Mexico.

Post-Scout Coming.

Capt. Jack Crawford, the poet-scout, will appear at the Y. M. C. A. in the fourth Star Course entertainment, New Year's Day night. Capt. Crawford has just signed a contract to appear at the world's fair in Ireland, next year, for two months.

HEART TROUBLE PROVES FATAL TO JOHN H. M'VEY

DIED YESTERDAY AT RED BANK WHERE HE HAD BEEN FOR A WEEK.

John H. McVey, the well-known local restaurateur, died Monday at the home of relatives in Red Bank. He had been ailing for several months with heart trouble and went to that place a week ago Tuesday in the hope that the nearness to the ocean would benefit him. To all appearances he was improving but he suddenly became worse Sunday and death followed quickly.

Mr. McVey was sixty-four years old and came to this city from Goshen, N. Y., in 1886. He opened the restaurant on North avenue, now known as the Belmont and at one time, especially during the bicycle craze in the middles' 90's when it was the L. A. W. headquarters, it was one of the best known dining places in the State. He secured a building directly across the street as a hotel annex and conducted the two places jointly until about six years ago when he sold the business and went to Red Bank to live. He returned to Plainfield last spring and traded the North avenue property for the hotel on West Front street just below Clinton avenue, erected by George Sieber, of Staten Island, for John Goff. He had been living there up to the time he went to Red Bank because of his health.

Mr. McVey leaves a wife and three daughters, one of the latter being by a former marriage. She resides in Brooklyn. The other daughters are the Misses Catherine and Ella McVey, who live here. He also leaves a brother, a resident of Morristown.

NEW GYMNASIUM CLASS.

Organized At Hope Chapel; Walter Cahoone Is the Director.

The Hope chapel gymnasium, which has been used only by the junior members of late is to be reserved for the use of a Men's Gymnasium Club on Tuesday evenings.

Negotiations to control the granting of this privilege have been posted, and in part, as follows: Members must be eighteen years of age or over: They may be of two kinds, regular or associate. The former includes those who already members of the church or Sunday-school at Hope chapel and are required to pay dues of seventy-five cents a quarter. Associate members may be received from outside the chapel membership but must be introduced by a regular member and present the names of two regular members as references. Their dues will be a dollar and twenty-five cents a quarter.

The organization is to be conducted under the control of the official committee of the chapel appointed by the Session of the Crescent Avenue church, which committee is as follows: G. H. Condict, chairman; H. R. Munger, I. W. Travell, and L. R. Howard. Walter Cahoone is to be physical director and is in absolute charge under the official committee. Anyone desiring to join at once will be met tomorrow night by the committee and physical director and his application acted upon immediately. Those making applications with it, must be handed in on or before the Sunday of the same week.

HORSE STEPS ON LIVE WIRE AND FALLS DEAD.

Electric Light Wire Fallen in Roadway Unseen by Coachman.

Shocked by a live electric light wire which had fallen in the roadway on Webster place, a horse, one of a valuable team owned by S. D. Lounsbury, of East Seventh street, was killed about o'Monday night. The rig, in charge of the coachman, Henry Patterson, was on its way to get Mrs. Lounsbury, who was making a call on Webster place, and failed to see the wire which law in the road, until the horse on the off-side struck it.

The wire became entangled about the forefeet of the animal and the heavy electric current caused almost instant death. The horse fell and despite quick work on the part of the coachman, could not be revived to save him. Mr. Lounsbury was informed of the accident and he has communicated with the Public Service Corporation concerning it. The other horse was uninjured.

MARTIN I. COOLEY'S FUNERAL.

Dr. Taylor, President of Vassar College, Among the Attendants.

With an exceedingly simple service, the funeral of Martin I. Cooley was held at his late home on Rockview terrace, Saturday afternoon. It was attended by a large gathering of former business associates and distinguished men, among the latter being James M. Taylor, D. D., president of Vassar College, who was a lifelong friend of Mr. Cooley. Dr. Chamblin, pastor of the church of which he was a member for over thirty years, officiated. The floral tributes were numerous and very handsome.

Interment was made in Hillside cemetery, the honorary pall bearers being Charles W. McCutchen, J. C. Peck, Henry McGee, A. M. Selter, R. Henry Depew, George Dupee, E. J. Chaffee, E. J. Wasing and A. W. Kleinecke.

SENATOR LODGE ASKS FOR CONGO INQUIRY

RESOLUTION INTRODUCED IN THE SENATE FOR ACTION BY U. S.

Senator Lodge introduced in the Senate Monday the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Whereas, The reports of inhuman treatment inflicted upon the native inhabitants of the Congo Free State have been of such a nature and so well sustained as to draw the attention of the civilized world and to excite the compassion of the people of the United States; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate of the United States the time has come when the affairs of the Congo Free State should be made the subject of international inquiry, and the Senate respectfully advises the President that in any steps he may deem it wise to take in co-operation with or in aid of any of the powers signatory to the treaty of Berlin, which shall seek to ameliorate the conditions of the Congo Free State and reduce the evils now existent there, he will receive its cordial support."

The indications are that the Committee on Foreign Relations may act favorably on the resolution.

Those opposed to the Lodge resolution, or at least to hasty action at this time, assert that the agitation of the subject is due to allegations contained in a petition bearing the signatures of thirty-two missionaries, of whom sixteen are women, the wives of other signers. It is further maintained that a statement, signed by four hundred missionaries, sets forth facts in direct opposition to those alleged by the thirty-two, the greater number asserting that cruelty is comparatively rare and the alleged atrocities are greatly exaggerated.

PICTURED MEXICO.

Rev. C. E. Herring Gives An Illustrated Lecture.

Despite the stormy night about thirty members of the Men's Club of the First Baptist church enjoyed a trip, Monday, through Mexico, as illustrated by Rev. C. E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church. The lecture was similar to the one given at the Camera Club rooms. The views were taken by Mr. Herring and in his very entertaining way he described many interesting incidents in connection with his journey. He showed some of the old churches of Mexico and told of the forms of worship there.

The views were divided between those of the busy centers of the large cities and the country districts showing modern and primitive forms of living. In addition to the lecture further enjoyment was afforded by Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan and Vincent of Sokol, piano and violin.

MRS. B. R. WESTERN.

Former Well-known Resident of the Borough Dies at Her Home in Brooklyn.

Mrs. Isabella Hull Western, wife of Benjamin R. Western, a former prominent resident of the borough, died Sunday at her home, 25 East Sixteenth street, Flatbush, Brooklyn. She had been ill about six months. Mrs. Western was sixty-four years old and while living on Washington avenue, North Plainfield, was one of the foremost workers in the Church of the Holy Cross. She leaves three daughters and three sons. They are Mrs. Edwin B. Knowles, of Bridgeport, Conn.; Mrs. Charles W. Smith, of Flatbush, a resident of the borough; Miss Fannie M. Western and Percival R. Western, who live at home; William H. Western, of Sycamore avenue, the borough, and Chas. C. Western, of Norwood avenue.

MOTHER AND CHILDREN OVERCOME BY COAL GAS.

Daughter Struggles to Window and Sounds Alarm by Ringing Bell.

Mrs. Kate Clark and son Leon, of Whitehouse Station, who had been visiting friends in this city, having returned to their home last Friday, narrowly escaped death this morning from coal gas. They, with Mrs. Clark's daughter, Marguerite, fourteen years old, were overcome by the gas which escaped from the register in their bedroom, which was connected with a base burner in the dining room. Leon awoke complaining of a severe headache. His sister arose to get him a bottle of camphor. She fell twice to the floor and realizing something was wrong she grabbed a bell and after a struggle reached a window, which she was able to raise sufficiently to ring to the neighbors for help. Assistance soon arrived and a physician was summoned and now the family is recovered. Mrs. Clark and her children had a similar experience about ten years ago.

Valuable Robe Taken.

While Arthur Murphy, of Watchung avenue, was calling on his parents, *Rev. and Mrs. T. Logan Mur*phy, of the New Madison, last night, some one stole a valuable robe from his automobile, which was left standing on Madison avenue. A search was made for the robe without success and finally Mr. Murphy reported the loss to the police.

G. L. RECORD INDICTED FOR CRIMINAL LIBEL

AFTERMATH OF RECENT PRIMARY CANDIDACY FOR U. S. SENATOR.

The Hudson County Grand Jury at Jersey City yesterday returned forty-three indictments, among them being two against Corporation Counsel George L. Record and Police Justice Frank J. Higgins, of the First Criminal Court, both members of Mayor Fagan's cabinet. Mr. Record is indicted on a charge of criminal libel, also Justice Higgins.

During the primaries preceding the last election, Mr. Record, who had announced himself a candidate for United States Senator, made a speech from the rear end of a truck, in front of the Jersey City City Hall, in which he charged the Secretary of State, Samuel Dickinson, Republican leader of Hudson county, with being a paid agent of the Pullman Car Corporation and one who sought political patronage for that company.

Colonel Dickinson resented Record's speech, and threatened a suit for damages. The matter was referred to the Grand Jury. Judge Higgins is implicated because he obtained copies of Record's speech and handed them out among certain newspaper reporters.

WOMEN SUFFRAGISTS HAVE BUSY SESSION

REPORTS READ AT INTERESTING MEETING YESTERDAY.

Papers relative to leading women suffragists, the advancement of the movement as well as short articles on the cause of the Child Labor laws, together with reports from the delegates to the meeting of the State Federation of Women's Clubs at Trenton, were the features of the meeting of the Equal Suffrage League of Plainfield and North Plainfield, held Monday at the home of Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, of East Seventh street.

Mrs. Tomlinson read a sketch of the life and works of Miss Susan B. Anthony, and this was followed with short articles and the success of the suffrage movement in Colorado and Wyoming and the discussion of the cause of child labor, and its improved conditions throughout the country. Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Mrs. Isaac L. Miller, Miss Ann Murphy and Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, who were the delegates to the State Federation of Women's Clubs at Orange, presented brief reports of that meeting.

Among the speakers there were *Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, Mrs. An*toinette Brown Blackwell and Henry B. Blackwell, who was the husband of Lucy Stone. After the meeting tea was served and a social half-hour enjoyed.

Y. M. C. A. ANNUAL.

Big Meeting and Dinner to Be Held Next Month.

Although the date is still to be fixed upon, plans for the annual meeting of the Y. M. C. A. are being pushed vigorously. The usual dinner will mark the session and there will be an address by a speaker of prominence to follow.

Dinner and meeting will be held in the association building. The committee in charge of the arrangements, which is made up of J. E. Kimball, chairman; G. M. Rittenhouse, C. M. Thorpe, F. A. Weekes and Duncan W. Taylor, will meet Thursday night. The affair will take place early next month. If the committee plans reach full fruition, it will be the biggest of its kind ever held by the Y. M. C. A. here.

PARK CLUB AFFAIRS.

Preparations for the holiday events at the Park Club are well under way. The Christmas dance will be held Thursday, December 27, and the Junior dance on New Year's Eve.

At the usual New Year's reception, from 3 to 6 o'clock, a short play will be presented by the Comedy Club. The playlet is entitled "Sarah's Young Man."

The week following, on Thursday, January 10, an illustrated lecture on the Yellowstone Park will be delivered at the club by E. C. Culver, who lives at the park. The views shown will be photographed by the official picture-taker of the park. They will be unusually complete and handsome.

Judge's Conscientious Scruples.

Judge Connett, of Hunterdon county, tried an appeal case in Somerville Saturday for Judge Schenck because the latter had been, in times past, counsel for both of the contesting parties, who haled from his home town of Neshanic, and did not want to sit in judgment over their dispute. The suit was the case of Lemuel Hoagland vs. Mary F. Van Winkle and was to recover $69.70 on an account. Mrs. VanWinkle admitted the owed part of the money, but disputed two of the principal items. Judge Connett reversed the verdict of the justice and decided that the plaintiff could not recover. George E. Pace, of East Millstone, was counsel for the plaintiff and Beekman & Vasseller, of Somerville, appeared for the defense.

DISCLAIMS KNOWLEDGE OF DRYDEN PETITION

BALL DOESN'T KNOW HIS AGENTS ARE ACTIVE IN SENATORIAL FIGHT.

That there has been and is a movement to secure signature to a petition being circulated throughout the State favoring the re-election of Senator John F. Dryden, appears to be a fact. That the Prudential Insurance Company is behind the effort is denied by Superintendent Charles E. Ball, who is in charge of the local office of the Prudential Insurance Company.

In a conversation with a reporter for The Daily Press, Mr. Ball said today, that he had been out of the city on a two weeks vacation and that he returned home yesterday. Since then he had learned that during his absence a petition was put in him, and who disclaimed any connection with the Prudential Insurance Company, called at the local office and, he says, had left several blanks in the form of petitions, the heading of which urged the re-election of Senator Dryden. Assistant Superintendent Bittenbender was in charge of the office while Mr. Ball was away and he informed the latter upon his return of the visit of the man who appeared to be working in the interest of Mr. Dryden. It is said.

Mr. Ball declares that from his own personal knowledge he knows of no effort being made by his agents to secure signatures to such petitions as described and furthermore says he does not believe that the Prudential Insurance Company is interested in the re-election of Mr. Dryden to the extent of circulating petitions throughout the State in an effort to get the signatures of policyholders of the company. He says that if there is such a movement he knows nothing about it.

DID DUNN HAVE RIGHT TO ROSE'S MULE TEAM?

Swap Leads To a Case In Tort in the District Court.

Martin A. Rose's suit in tort against David Dunn, for cost of a team of mules, was the only one tried in the District Court this morning. It was heard before a twelve-man jury.

The case resulted from an agreement between Rose and Dunn, by which the former was to turn over a pair of mules and $175 in exchange for a team of horses owned by the latter, hinges on the terms of the agreement. Rose contends that Dunn was to have had the horses examined by a veterinary and that the trade was not to conclude until the veterinary had passed on them. Dunn denies that clause of the agreement.

A few days after the trade agreement, Dunn, it was testified this morning, took the mules from Rose's place, telling Rose that he had a customer for them. Since then, Rose asserting, he has received neither mules, horses nor money.

His contention is that, lacking the veterinary examination, the trade did not stand, and he is entitled either to the mules or the money for them. The team, it is said, has been sold.

Dunn's contention was that the trade did not depend on an examination by a veterinary and that it was Rose's part, as soon as he took the mules, to get the horses and pay over the money.

The case went to the jury at 12 o'clock.

The jury returned a verdict for $100 for the plaintiff. E. J. Blatz represented Rose and S. S. Swackhamer the defendant.

JERSEY TEACHERS TO HOLD MEETINGS DEC. 26 TO 28.

State Association's Annual Session Will Be Held at Atlantic City.

The annual meeting of the New Jersey State Teachers' Association will be held December 26 to 28, at Atlantic City. Governor Stokes is expected to address the meeting on Wednesday afternoon, December 26. On Wednesday evening the teachers will attend a reception at the Marlborough-Blenheim Hotel.

The programme arranges six sessions, as follows: On Wednesday afternoon and evening, on Thursday morning, afternoon and evening, and on Friday morning. The music will be one of the features. Humorous speeches will be made, including the address of welcome by Henry P. Miller. Each department will meet in separate rooms, discuss conditions, hear reports, transact business and elect its officers.

On Friday morning a general session will be held, at which the reports of various committees will be read. Before adjournment, the election and installation of officers will be held.

HOTEL TAX PROTEST.

J. A. Staats Thinks Iroquois Property Is Rated Too High.

Through his counsel, W. L. Hetfield, Jr., J. A. Staats, owner of the Hotel Iroquois, has petitioned the Union County Equalization Tax Board for a reduction of the assessment on the property. He contends that the assessment is much higher a foot than that on surrounding property.

The Iroquois lot is assessed at $194.25 a foot; there are eighty-seven feet. The building itself is assessed at $18,000.

Y. M. C. A. FIVE BUMPED VERY HARD IN NEWARK

SLAUGHTERED BY AN AWAKENED TEAM—SECONDS ALSO LOST.

Bubbling with a wholesale infusion of young blood, the Plainfield five in the Y. M. C. A. basketball league went to Newark, Saturday night, to make up for the game lost to Passaic the week before. What they did was to give the Newarks a beautiful and hurriedly-seized chance to break the hoodoo and win their first victory; also they furnished the mark at which the Newarks shot a total of points within one of the record at the Newark gymnasium. Score, 54 to 11.

Newark showed a complete reversal of form, and the game was the best that has been played on their floor this season. They made the first goal, and the hoodoo under which the home team seemed to play this season was broken.

If the Plainfield men had possessed greater accuracy at this point in shooting goals, they might have won the game right there, for their team work at times in the first half completely baffled the home players, and they often had what amounted to a chance to throw, but did not seem able to avail themselves of their opportunities.

Plainfield started in fast, and the ball was in Newark territory most of the time in the first half, but the Newarkers managed to keep their record spotless, except for one tally that was made against them in the last few minutes of play.

Newark's play in the second half was little short of cyclonic. When ten minutes of play had passed in the second half, the scare stood 30 points for Newark, and the crowd began to call for a total of a half-century. It seemed almost impossible of accomplishment in the short period of play left, but the Newarkers started in with a vim that took their opponents well-nigh off their feet. Before five minutes of play had passed, the desired sum was reached.

Throughout the game the play was comparatively clean. There was a minimum of holding, and the offenses were not of such a character as to spoil the effect of the play.

The score:

Newark.		Plainfield.
Stiers		Aalholm
	right forward
Vreeland,
Van Rensselaer	Thompson
	left forward
Chase, Vreeland		Collier centre
Pollard		Jacot
	right guard
Spaulding		Schoonmaker
	left guard

Score at end of first half—Newark, 14; Plainfield, 8. Final score —Newark, 54; Plainfield, 11. Goals from field—Stiers, 6; Van Rensselaer, 3; Vreeland, 15; Chase, Pollard, Thompson, 3; Jacot. Free throws— Pollard 2; Jacot. Referee—Stillman, Trinity. Timers—Guest, Newark; Anson, Plainfield. Time of halves —20 minute.

One point awarded Plainfield for* Newark foul.

The game between the junior fives of the two associations was not such a runaway contest as the first. In the first half it looked as though the Newark lads entirely outclassed the visitors, but in the second period of play the Plainfield juniors scored within one of as many points as did the Newarkers. The line-up:

Newark Junior.		Plainfield Junior.
Greenlief		Rumsey
	right forward
Haylor		Templin
	left forward
Seidlee		Gavett
	centre
Kerr, Brown		Lolzeaux
	right guard
Seidler		Gavett
	left guard

Score at end of first half—Newark, 16; Plainfield, 8. Final score— Newark, 28; Plainfield, 17. Goals from field—Greenlief, 2; Haylor, Seidler, 2; Kerr, 2; Brown, 4; Austin, 2; Rumsey, Templin, Lolzeaux, 4; Gavett. Free throws—Seidler, Austin, Rumsey, 3. Referee—Stillman, Trinity. Timers—Guest, Newark; Anson, Plainfield. Time of halves—15 minute.

DECOY LETTER CAUGHT WOMAN SHOPLIFTER.

Police Say She Is One of Cleverest in the Business in This Country.

County Detective Galatian, of Elizabeth, went to New York City yesterday and with the assistance of Detective Sergeants Heath and Spencer caught Agnes Duschan, who is accused of having stolen $200 worth of jewelry from the store of Rudolph Brunner, in Westfield.

According to the police the woman is one of the cleverest shoplifters in the country. She was found through decoy letters sent by Detective Galatian to relatives of hers in Leipsic, Germany. The detective was in correspondence with these relatives for some time before he could get the desired information as to where he could find her.

She was taken to Elizabeth and will be tried in the Court of Common Pleas.

BIGLOW NEW CAPTAIN OF YALE'S ELEVEN

FORMER PLAINFIELDER CHOSEN ON SECRET BALLOT TO SUCCEED MORSE

Lucius Horatio Biglow, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Lucius H. Biglow, Jr., formerly of this city, but now of Montclair, and a member of the Junior academic class, was last night elected captain of the Yale University football team on secret ballot, which was made unanimous as soon as the result was announced. He played right tackle this fall and filled the same position on last year's eleven, but in freshman year was a guard.

Biglow is a strategist by nature, and this will figure in his handling of a team upon the gridiron and in his control of men under him. He is quiet, unassuming and effective. He began his preparation for college at John Leal's School and later went to Lawrenceville, where he played guard on the school team for four years. He is 21 years old, six feet two inches in height and weighs 198 pounds.

Captain Biglow was the logical successor of Morse. He won the West Point game by a kick from placement at the thirty-yard line from an angle which was most difficult to overcome. At Princeton he prevented an almost certain kick for a goal, and many believe that he won the Harvard game by his brilliant dash through the line and blocking of Wendell's kick from the twenty-yard line.

Early this fall when Biglow returned for practise with the eleven he announced to his friends and to John Kennedy, of the crew, that he would not row again. He was No. 8 in the varsity boat last year, and was slated for the captaincy of the navy one year hence. He explained that he had time but for one sport, and had decided on football.

Suppressed excitement has reigned among the football men for a week, no one actually knowing what the outcome of the ballot would be. It has been persistently rumored that some of the Yale advisers and coaches favored Tad Jones, and another unstable element entered into the situation when it was remembered that ten of the men eligible to vote were Sheff students and six of the academic department. Biglow is in the academic department and Jones in Sheff. The question was, would this influence sway votes? It was stated last night by one of the 'varsity squad that the choice of Biglow was unanimous.

LABORING MAN'S PREACHER.

That Is What Dr. Morgan, Who Will Speak Here Sunday, Is.

The coming of Rev. Dr. W. H. Morgan, of the Central M. E. church, Newark, who will speak at the Y. M. C. A. theatre meeting next Sunday night, is of unusual interest to labor union men. Dr. Morgan is known in Newark as a friend of interest in the advancement of workingmen. He was the arbitrator between the bosses and the men in the recent big strike of the bricklayers there.

Dr. Morgan, now one of the best known and successful ministers in the State, is a striking example of the self-made man. Until he was twenty-three years of age, he could neither read nor write, but despite the long time he had lost in improving himself, he forged ahead, and he applied himself to the task of self-betterment by remarkable strides. His ability as a speaker is in keeping with the interest attaching to his career.

State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman will preside over the meeting. The Crescent Avenue church choir will sing.

MAGIC AND HUMOR.

Unconventional Performance by Ausbach; Woman Gets Bunny.

*Weather had its effect on the at*tendance at the Star Course entertainment in Y. M. C. A., Monday, but not on the character of the performance. The slim audience enjoyed a rare programme of magic and music, and the seat-holders who stayed away missed an hour and three-quarters of entertainment that would have repaid a journey through a rain twice as bad.

Ausbach, the sleight-of-hand performer, was original and amusing to a noteworthy degree. The assistants he impressed from the audience entered into the spirit of the occasion, and furnished jokes on their own account. Asa F. Randolph had considerable fun with the professor of legerdemain. Ausbach won the heart of one woman by giving her, as a souvenir of the evening, a velvety little bunny which he discovered under the lining of her husband's derby hat.

The musical numbers were rendered by Fred and William Van Eps, on the banjo and the mandolin respectively, with their usual skill and art.

Only Routine Matters.

Owing to the very stormy night there was a small attendance at the regular meeting of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, at the Casino, last night. Only matters of a routine nature were considered. It being decided to defer other things of more importance until another time when more members can attend.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

FOWLER DRAFTED BILL

Fifth District's Congressman Father of Measure Providing for Elastic Currency.

AMENDED OF COURSE

Agreement Reached Yesterday By Committee On Banking and Currency On Credit Currency Bill.

The House committee on banking and currency, after a long session at Washington yesterday, reached an agreement on a form of bill which is intended to provide an elastic currency. The measure can hardly be said to conform to the ideas advanced by Secretary Shaw in his hearing before the committee. It may be introduced today. It is based largely upon the recommendations of the Bankers' Association, which the Secretary of the Treasury declared unscientific and insufficient and which, in his opinion, would not meet the situation.

The measure was originally drafted by Chairman Charles N. Fowler, of the Fifth, New Jersey, Congressional District, but has been amended. The principal change made is one imposing a tax of 5 per cent instead of 2½ per cent., upon the issue of credit notes.

The commission also changed the last section, where the limitation was entirely removed, and it is now provided in the bill that the banks which are desirous of taking out new circulation may reduce their present bond secured circulation to 62½ per cent. of their capital.

The bill provides that any national banking association which has been in business one year and has a surplus fund equal to 20 per cent. of its capital may take out for issue and circulation without deposit of government bonds notes to be known as "national bank guaranteed credit notes." The amount may be equal to 40 per cent. of the amount of its national bank notes at any time outstanding, but shall not exceed 25 per cent. of the bank's capital. The tax imposed is 1½ per cent. each half year.

Under the terms of the bill national banks may take out a further amount of credit notes equal to 12½ per cent. of their capital, but shall pay an annual tax of 5 per cent. upon the average amount of such notes in circulation. The tax imposed is to be used as a guarantee fund to redeem the notes of failed banks.

The total amount of notes issued by any banking association, including guaranteed credit notes, shall not exceed the amount of paid up capital. The comptroller is to designate certain convenient cities for current daily redemption of credit notes.

The last section of the bill provides that a bank "desiring to take out national guaranteed credit notes and having notes outstanding in excess of 62½ per cent. of its paid up capital, to secure the payment of which United States bonds have been deposited may upon the deposit of lawful money redeem such excess without reference to the limitation of $3,000,000 each month, as prescribed in the existing National Bank law."

Jerusalem Lodge Elects.

Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M., at a regular communication, last night, elected these officers: Worshipful Master, Robert Reif; junior warden, William G. Hutchcroft; chaplains, Rev. George Hauser, Rev. Joseph O. McKelvey; treasurer, Clarence Goss; secretary, Garret T. Dunham; trustees, R. A. Meeker, L. B. Woolston, Charles A. Lee; representative to Masonic Hall Association, Frederick J. Pope; tyler, Kaspar Bolsterle. The appointive officers will be announced at the installation in January.

Justice Mundy's Court.

The Natural Carbonic Gas Company, of New York, secured a verdict of $82.40 against the Plainfield Suburban Water Company, in Justice Mundy's court yesterday, on a note. Preparations had been made for a Rubbers defense, but the defendant's lawyers learned at the last minute that the plaintiff's case was too strong to be fought and abandoned the battle. H. C. Runyon was the plaintiff's lawyer.

Dr. Cadman Is Forty-Two.

Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, pastor of the Central Congregational church, Brooklyn, who is to speak here at a Y. M. C. A. theatre meeting January 12, celebrated his forty-second birthday yesterday. He has been pastor of the Central church six years, during which time the church has raised $584,673 and has increased rapidly in membership.

LAWYERS EXCHANGE THRUSTS IN CIVIL COURT

JUDGE NEWCORN RAPS FOR ORDER AND ENFORCES PEACE.

Sharp passagers between the lawyers marked the trial of the contract case of Louis C. Morel against Charles E. Drake, in the District Court yesterday afternoon. It was one of the liveliest hearings of the court's short history.

Morel sued to recover for plumbing work done on Drake's house, West Fourth street. John P. Owens, lawyer for Morel, expected only a straight contract defense, and he was put out when W. L. Hetfield, Jr., counsel for the defendant, put in a claim for recoupment as an offset. Drake contended that Morel's work was so faulty as to damage the house and put him to expense.

Mr. Hetfield withdrew the recoupment claim after a passage at arms, but later on in the case Judge Newcorn suggested that the case would be cleared up better if the claim were allowed to remain in. Against Mr. Owens' protest, the claim was again incorporated in the defense. Mr. Owens took exception to the court's ruling, and the exception was granted.

The exchange of shafts over the return of the recoupment claim into the case was warm.

"The whole trouble with you," observed Mr. Hetfield pleasantly, "is that the recoupment surprised you, and you pulled like a stuck pig."

"Well, we'll go on with the case," retorted Mr. Owens with a snort, "and I'll yell louder."

The scandalized court rapped for order, and there was peace for a while. A few minutes later the clashing attorneys brought another judicial rebuke on themselves by arguing questions of evidence over their table.

"Gentlemen," said the judge softly, "you might submit those questions to the court." Sudden peace again fell.

The hearing was long and exhaustive. Judge Newcorn reserved his decision.

BIG CROWD ATTENDS THE HOUSE WARMING

SOMERSET CLUB'S AFFAIR STARTS OFF WITH EVERY ELEMENT OF SUCCESS.

With a blaze of lights and plenty of good music and congeniality, the Somerset Club's housewarming opened last night. It is being conducted in the organization's rooms at Somerset street and Manning avenue and will continue until Saturday night. Visitors were plentiful and the affair started off with every element of success.

An executive committee composed of John Schroope, Captain William H. Smith, Fred Kohler and Peter Emmons, together with a corps of assistants "received" the guests and made them feel at home. They found lots to hold their interest, not the least of which are the handsome decorations, which have transformed the main room into a veritable fairyland. Suhr's orchestra dispensed popular airs all evening and there were several informal vocal solos and speeches.

The basement of the building has been made into a "rathskeller" and it did a thriving business in the retailing of sweet cider and soft drinks. There are articles displayed for sale upstairs and in some respects the housewarming resembles a fair. Various entertainment features are to be given for the remainder of the nights.

Beside the executive committee, the members of the club who are in charge are the following: Finance committee, H. M. Cook, E. P. T. Smith, Henry Zimmerman; house committee, Robert Trewin, W. Juillard, George Ball and L. C. Kline; advertising, W. L. Smalley, Jr., John Wirth; music, Grover Schuck, John Dond and William McCullough.

Rush in Tax Office.

During the past few days Tax Collector John W. Murray, Jr., has been enjoying a regular holiday rush that would cheer the heart of any merchant in the city. Everybody is anxious to pay his or her taxes before they become delinquent, which will be after 12 o'clock midnight tonight. On Monday the receipts amounted to $40,000 and it is believed that today's returns will exceed them by $10,000. Tomorrow will be a very heavy day at the tax office and Mr. Murray has arranged to have it open until late in the evening to give everyone a chance to settle.

BIG LAND BOOM HELD UP

Reclaimers of Hackensack Meadows Cannot Secure Necessary Riparian Rights.

A MARSHY TRACT NOW

Riparian Leasehold Not Enough, Says Wilbur C. Fisk—What Improvement Would Mean.

Unless there is a decided change in the present attitude regarding riparian rights and privileges in New Jersey, the immediate development of hundreds of acres of marshy wastes, now unfit for any purpose whatever and consequently of no practical value, may have to be postponed if not altogether abandoned, according to the men who have interested capital in the big real estate operating on the Hackensack meadows. The tract in question covers more than 3,500 acres; principally between the Hackensack and Passaic rivers. It is more than four miles in length from north to south and is three miles wide in one part. Were the authorities to grant the promoters of the huge real estate undertaking the riparian rights which they seek, the claim is made that it would mean much for the interests of Northern Jersey. On the other hand, should these rights be withheld, the men interested declare that a good part of this great territory may remain unclaimed for many years to come.

Some four or five years ago, the first steps were taken towards the development of the meadows. Since the N. J. Terminal Dock and Improvement Co. came into the control of this property, for which they planned a great future, the work has been going on steadily. Thousands of dollars have been expended in filling in the sunken lands. Naturally the progress has been slow for the work is attended with many difficulties. Up to the present time, however, approximately 150 acres have been reclaimed. This leaves 3,350 yet to be filled in. The work is now at a standstill, the energies of those interested being bent at present in the direction of obtaining what they claim to be but proper recognition from the Riparian Commission and the riparian investigators. Wilbur C. Fisk, a director of the company, appeared before the riparian probers at Trenton the other day and outlined in detail the purposes of the promoters. He declared among other things that the present attitude of the State in withholding the grant of riparian rights has placed an almost insurmountable difficulty to his firm and that unless such rights could be granted it would be almost impossible to bring the tract to the use for which it is intended when reclaimed. A riparian leasehold, he argued, would be of little benefit. In his opinion, he said, it was necessary for the owners to acquire legal title in order to realize success for their big undertaking.

The plan is to make the entire marshy meadows available for factory sites. It is claimed that as such they would have almost unsurpassed advantage and in a very short time would be entirely occupied by industrial plants. Seventy-five per cent. of the trunk line traffic to and from New York pass over these meadows. The Erie, the Lackawanna, the Pennsylvania and the Jersey Central all have lines running through them. Fuel and other supplies could be had by boat, which would make the location doubly attractive. The water front on the Passaic extends approximately two miles and on the Hackensack almost four miles. At the present time, the meadows are two feet below high water mark. But when the land is reclaimed, its surface will be three feet above that water mark. Up to the present time, the dirt used for refilling purposes has been brought largely from Bay Ridge. A part, however, has come from a basin which the developers found necessary to dig in the Passaic river.

To a Daily Press man, Wilbur Fisk yesterday explained what the improvement would mean to the State and why in his opinion so much importance is attached to the riparian rights. He declared that while he had the utmost faith in the riparian board of investigators, he believed it is unjust to his firm and to the people at large to tie up the work by delay in passing the riparian titles.

"In their present condition," said Mr. Fisk, "the meadows are of very little value. They cannot be used for any purpose that would increase the revenues of the State or furnish employment to the people. In fact they are a menace to health and a decided drawback to material progress. Should we be accorded the privilege of buying the necessary riparian rights and thus be able to make the section marketable for the purpose for which we intend it, within but a

SITE OF 1784 CONGRESS HALL FOUND IN TRENTON

CONTINENTAL LAWMAKERS MET IN A HOUSE THAT RENTED FOR £150.

Dr. Carlos E. Godfrey, of the Adjutant General's office at Trenton, has notified Gov. Stokes that he is ready to prove that he has discovered the site of the building in which the Continental Congress sat in Trenton. Mr. Godfrey states that the site is now occupied by the building of the Mechanics' National Bank, of which, oddly enough, Gov. Stokes is president.

The Continental Congress sat in Trenton from Nov. 1 to Dec. 24, 1784, but there has long been a dispute as to the building in which the sessions were held. Various historians have differed absolutely, the old Court House, the present site of the Trenton Banking Company, the Blazing Star Tavern, also known as Witt's City Tavern, being mentioned. In Trenton there has always been much debate among old residents as to the location of what was formerly the early seat of the National Capital. Now, Dr. Godfrey asserts in writing to Gov. Stokes that he has the original lease of the building and papers to verify all his contentions. He suggests that if Gov. Stokes is too busy to give personal attention to the matter, an officer of the bank be appointed to go over the papers, so that arrangements may be made for the erection of a commemorative tablet.

Dr. Godfrey says that he had great difficulty in locating the site. Authorities differed on many points, and much of the research he indulged in led him nowhere. Finally he ascertained that Samuel Henry owned and lived in a house that afterward became the City Tavern, situated on the southwest corner of State and Warren streets. An announcement in an old newspaper that Jacob Bergen was to open a tavern in the house owned by Henry, and the will of Samuel Henry, deceased, afterward, led him in the right direction, and he discovered the lease.

The three men mentioned in the lease were the committee appointed to arrange for the reception of the Continental Congress. Lafayette took his friend Powell of Congress to the house indicated on Dec. 14, 1784, and Washington held a reception there in 1789, while en route to New York to take the oath of office as President.

PLANS FOR TROLLEY DEFERS 'BUS SCHEME

STAGE LINE IN MEANTIME BETWEEN PLAINFIELD AND SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

Persistent reports that trolley lines are to be constructed for service between South Plainfield and this city have given pause to the promoters of the proposed automobile 'bus line between the two points. The promoters, who live in South Plainfield, have heard that land is actually being surveyed for a line to run through Bound Brook, New Market, Samptown, South Plainfield, Metuchen and Perthfield, and that are being circulated again that the 'bus line will be unnecessary.

Whether trolley or automobile line, some change from existing conditions is certainly necessary, the South Plainfielders protest. The route followed by South Plainfield school children in getting to school in Plainfield is instanced in connection with the agitation for better facilities. The children travel by the Lehigh Railroad to Bound Brook, and change there to the Central Railroad for the second stage of a backward journey to Plainfield. They travel a distance of sixteen miles by railroad to reach a city only two and a half miles away in a direct line.

It is reported that a stage line will be run between the two places during the winter, to furnished relief pending the completion of the new system of transportation facilities until it developes whether the people are to have a trolley line or a motor line.

Funeral of Lewis Ward.

The funeral of Lewis Ward was held last night at the home of his daughter, Mrs. V. P. Davis, of Richmond street. It was conducted by Rev. Charles E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church. Interment was made today at Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Dr. W. Kempton Browning who was elected chief ranger of Court Watchung, I. O. F., a week ago, resigned last night, owing to a pressure of other duties. In his place William Throne was elected. The installation will be held Tuesday night, January 8. Several applications for membership were received and the applicants will be initiated later.

Franklin and Somerset Councils, Jr. O. U. A. M., will work the Orient Degree on several candidates tonight.

REAR END TRAIN CRASH

Empty West Bound Coaler Strikes Local Freight Opposite Netherwood Station.

ENGINEER AT FAULT

Mistook Signals Displayed for Another Track For Those of His Own—No One Hurt.

Mistaking the signals set for another track for those of his own, Engineer Anthony Henry, of the New Jersey Central, sent a heavy coal train at high speed into the rear of the local freight train opposite the Netherwood station at 5:10 Wednesday morning. A crash followed that aroused all the sleepers in the vicinity, and beside badly wrecking Henry's engine, demolished two loaded freight cars and five steel gondolas. They were hurled in all directions, tearing up the main west bound track for a distance of 150 feet and blocked the west bound freight track. Although the wrecking crew with a steam derrick was quickly on the scene it was after 12 o'clock this noon before regular traffic was resumed.

Henry had charged of a west bound coal train but contrary to his custom, was instructed to take the west bound passenger track. He was following the local freight, known as No. 69, which was also on the passenger track and which stopped near the Berckman street yard entrance to cross over after the morning mail train had passed. The latter train always takes the outside track so that it can leave off baggage cars at

SURVEY ON TROLLEY LINE TO SOUTH PLAINFIELD

Work Has Begun on Proposed New Route Between Plainfield and Bound Brook.

THROUGH NEW MARKET

Fast Freight and Passenger Service Proposed Between Bound Brook and Princeton.

Surveys were begun this week for a system of trolley lines which will eventually connect Bound Brook by the way of New Market and South Plainfield with Plainfield. Means of travel through this section has been needed for a long time. Another route selected is through Chimney Rock and Martinsville to Bernardsville. It is also proposed to have a line in operation from Bound Brook that will connect New Brunswick and Princeton; the idea being to have the road to Princeton built for fast service and both freight and express matter in addition to passengers will be carried.

The surveying is under the direction of Engineer G. E. Haviland, who represents wealthy New York capitalists. They have no connection with the Public Service Corporation.

For a long time there has been a need of a trolley between this city, South Plainfield and New Market, and efforts have repeatedly been made to get the Public Service Corporation to build such a line. For various reason the company has never made a move to do anything toward improving this section of the State. New independent capitalists intend to do something.

The exact route for the road from Bound Brook to Princeton has not been definitely settled upon. It will probably follow the Millstone river through East Millstone, Blackwells, Griggstown and Rocky Hill, although there is a possibility the route from South Bound Brook through Middlebush and Franklin Park may be chosen.

As a bridge to cross the Raritan and the railroad tracks would be necessary if the latter route is selected, and as the cost of building such a bridge would be over $100,000, it is not thought this route will be selected. The exact route for the line from Bound Brook to New Market, South Plainfield and Plainfield has not yet been decided, but will be within a short time.

TWO TEAMS COMPETE IN BOWLING TOURNEY

SICKNESS OF ONE MAN CAUSES POSTPONEMENT OF OTHER MATCH.

But four teams took part in the tourney at McLaughlin's last night, one of the other bowlers being sick causing the postponement of one match. In those rolled, Conklin and Mullen lost three straight to Woolston and Cunningham and McLaughlin and Causebrook went down in defeat three times at the hands of Maltby and Theirs. High score, 216, was made by Sam. Cunningham, while John McLaughlin turned the lowest, 125. The bowling of Mullen and Conklin was disappointing as they are classed high, despite the fact that they are the youngest of the bowlers. Both got splits repeatedly and frequently missed good chances for spares:

The scores:
Conklin	157	148	145
Mullen	146	137	160
	303	285	305
vs.
Cunningham	154	167	216
Woolston	194	171	177

McLaughlin	133	125	156
Causebrook	218	180	185
	351	305	335
vs.

Mrs. Blackwell Buried.

Mrs. Emily Blackwell, wife of Stephen W. Blackwell, passed away in New York Thursday, after an illness of six weeks from typhoid fever. She was a daughter of J. Ross Lake, proprietor of the TenEyck House in Somerville, and before her illness had just returned from an extended trip in Europe. Mrs. Blackwell was twenty-four years old. The funeral was held Saturday at the residence of her father-in-law, former Assemblyman Jonathan H. Blackwell, in Trenton. She had been married for six years, and had many friends in Somerville, Flemington, Plainfield and Pennington.

MOCK TRIAL WAS A PRONOUNCED SUCCESS

Y. M. C. A. BOYS DID WELL IN THEIR PRODUCTION.

All the success that Boys' Secretary Barrows and his youthful assistants hoped for attended the presentation of the mock trial by the Y. M. C. A. juniors Friday night. The production was humorous all the way through, and not a hitch attended its progress.

The audience was large and appreciative. There was much laughter and applause; even the performers giggled at times.

The cast was as follows:

Justice McWiseman, Haydn W. Barrows; clerk of court, Harold Robins; Simon Talker (plaintiff's attorney), Walter Caldwell; Claude Meeker (defendant's attorney), John Loiseaux; Mrs. Euphonia Slimdiet (plaintiff), Chas. Loizeaux; Algernon Rhymewords (defendant), Fred Smith; Mrs. Underthumb, Charles Loizeaux; Jack Everhard, Dudley Wilcox. Witnesses for plaintiff: Prof. Longbeard, Sherwood Parsons; Stagestruck Walktheboards, G. Fountain. Witnesses for defendant—Alfred Dainty-foot, Stanley Robins; Count Pokerianno Pickemuppo, David Thickston; Dr. Threechances, Stanley Parsons; Alphonso de Bon Soir, Leslie Leland; J. Gilleman, Francis Wilcox; Joseph Thinkmuch, Lenox S. Karner. Jurors—R. There, John Schofield; Asbestos Johnson, Egbert Bogardus; Clarence Fitznoodle, Leslie Bond; Mike Att, G. Hartley; Heiney Higglebigglebergerger, E. Freeman; I. Ambere, A. Bingoman; A. Wright, Russell Cooper; Arthur Freesqueeh, Francis Foster; Thos. Stout—Lawrence Bromfield; Hy Jumper, Chauncey Murphy; Levi Brokestein, Fred Loizeaux; Otto Short, Carll Strong. Rejected jurors—A. Ryler, Lenox S. Karner; Chung Ling, Sherwood Parsons; Bill Tufton's Son, Leslie Leland; James Welldone, Francis Wilcox; Hen Underthumb, Stanley Robins.

The production was well staged. Credit for its success belongs to Mr. Barrows, who directed the cast and did pretty much everything else to bring the trial into shape.

BROKE THE RECORD IN TOURNAMENT OPENING

TWO MEN PASS Y. M. C. A. MARK FOR STANDING BROAD JUMP.

The all-around championship athletic tournament had a great start at the Y. M. C. A. last night. Two men broke the record in the standing broad jump, the event run off, one equalled it, and four went over last year's mark.

W. P. Banks won the event by 9 feet 5¼ inches, a good jump in any company. F. O. Bristol, who hung up the mark in 1898, made 9 feet 1 inch. Last night, Burgess, the second man, jumped 9 feet 2¼ inches, and Lueder equalled Bristol's mark.

Viebrock, Rumsey, Slocum and Watrous passed last year's mark of 8 feet 5 inches, a new mark and one that deserved quick oblivion.

The entrants last night numbered seventeen. There are nineteen men entered for the two standing broad jumps, which will be run off next Thursday night. The high score of the three leaders is as follows: Banks, 82 points; Burgess, 79; Lueder, 74.

FLOSSY'S PLAYDAYS.

Delightful Child's Book By Mrs. Florence Howe Hall.

"Flossy's Playdays," a child's story, by Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, of this city, is a recent publication by Dana Estes & Co., of Boston. It is the story of a small girl and written for small people, but grown-ups will find it interesting.

The child atmosphere is maintained on every page, and to older people the story is like a call to dormant memories. The book is very probably autobiographical. If it is, Mrs. Hall was a very human child. Flossy's playdays were of the time when small girls wore pantalettes and some of them had their hair "shingled." Pantalettes and shingling have passed from the ken of the juvenile mind, and the kind of young persons who wore the one and endured the other has passed with them. The more matured youngsters of today will probably be vastly amused at the things that interested Flossy and her sister Julia, and at the things in which they found pleasure.

Preparing to Build New School.

Frank J. Hubbard, civil engineer, has completed a survey of the lot on Darrow avenue, purchased by the Board of Education and upon which it is expected the work on a new public school to take the place of the Washington School property sold to St. Mary's church. The lot has a frontage of 210 feet on Darrow avenue and a frontage of 280 feet on Essex street. It is the intention of the board to commence the erection of the new school early in the spring.

PRETTY YOUNG WOMAN HANDY WITH HER FISTS

Wife of Amateur Boxer Answers an Offensive Note with a Knockout Blow.

New York.—In a certain office building in this city is a cigar stand in the lower hallway, presided over by a young woman. She to-day is telling the young and the old men of the building, occupants of the various offices and daily acquaintances, how a young woman, a pretty blonde and wife of an amateur champion boxer, knocked out a fresh young man known to them all, whose father is a broker in the building.

The knockout took place the other day after the closing of the stock exchange. The fair cigar counter attendant and the amateur champion's wife, who is the actress Julia Morrison, were conversing over the counter. They are friends. The broker's son, tall, handsome, but presuming, stopped to purchase a perfecto. On a finger of his right hand sparkled a brilliant, diamond in a rare setting. The blonde gazed at the ring and admired it, saying so to her friend, as the young man lighted his cigar and turned away.

He overheard the whispered utterance and smiled upon the blonde.

Back Went His Head Before Her Right Fist.

Presently he returned, purchased half a dozen cigars and then nodded familiarly to the blonde young woman. As he leaped upon the counter he received a note into her hand and hurried away. The language was couched in such a manner as to be particularly offensive, and just as the blonde finished reading the epistle the broker's son reappeared.

He smiled. The blonde young woman smiled falsely. Encouraged by the cordial response to his smile he walked close up to her and began to speak in a low tone, when back went his head and off came his hat as the right fist of the young woman shot full into his face. Another blow was planted on the knockout point of the jaw sent the young man sprawling, his head striking the edge of an iron cuspidor and out he went.

"I guess that will hold that fellow for a while," she said. Several men and two women stenographers of the building stopped on their way out to compliment the young woman.

The young man Miss Morrison struck threatened to cause her arrest, but a few minutes later the father stepped to the cigar stand, grasped Miss Morrison's hand and said:

"You were quite right. My son, I am sorry to say, acted like a pup, and you gave him only a part of what he deserved. There will be no trouble for you, I assure you, and if you wish it I will make him come to you here and publicly apologize."

STRANGELY LED TO BABY'S BODY

Parents of Drowned Child Impelled by Mysterious Force.

Clinton, Ia.—Guided by some strange power, Mr. and Mrs. James Donohue, of this city, journeyed to a wild spot on the shore of the Mississippi river, and there found the body of their baby daughter, for which parties of men had been dragging the river for several days. The child was knocked from the deck of their houseboat and drowned and all efforts to recover the body had been unsuccessful.

The mysterious force led the grief-stricken parents to arise at five o'clock in the morning, although they had made no plans to do so. Without saying a word to each other they got into a skiff and the man began rowing down the stream. In silence they continued for two miles until they reached Beaver island. On the upper side of the island stands a great cottonwood tree, whose branches rise high above the other foliage on the shore. Straight for the tree the skiff went, and when its bow touched the bank it grated over which extend into the water, father and mother turned, to see the little dress of the baby caught on a jagged root. Just under the surface the body lay on the sand.

Another thing which has aroused the curiosity of students of the mysterious is the fact that the body was found on the third anniversary of the baby's birth.

The raft spider gets its name from its habit of building a raft of dry leaves and other light materials, fastened together by threads of silk, in order to pursue its prey in water.

HARROWING RIDE IN A RUNAWAY AIRSHIP

AERONAUT TELLS OF VOYAGE ABOVE LAKE MICHIGAN.

CLOTHES FROZE TO BODY.

Capt. William Matteray Gives Graphic Account of Unwelcome Trip—Single Misstep Meant Plunge Into Eternity.

Gaylord, Mich.—Dressed in a natty, gray flannel yachting suit, Capt. William Matteray was seen the other morning at Wolverine shortly before he started off in search of his airship, the Columbia, which he left anchored to some trees in a big swamp 15 miles east of Wolverine. His experience, both while on board the disabled ship and after landing, will be enough to fill a book. He was nearly drowned three different times, encountered wild animals after making the landing, slept in the dense forest, miles from any human inhabitant, lost himself in the woods after wakening and wandered around all day before he finally reached a place where he could be directed back to civilization.

Capt. Matteray was 25 years old on the day he started his famous trip. He is a native of Paris, France, where he got his early training. He has been a resident of Cincinnati by the air route. Has exhibited in the east and middle states and as far west as the Iowa cities. He gives a graphic description of his adventure.

"The crowd was so great at the fair grounds, I at first did not care to make the trip, on account of the high winds which I could see by the traveling clouds. The crowd, which had come over 100 miles to see the big ship, which had been on exhibition for two days, began to talk fake, and I saw no way out of it. I started to make the trip between 5:30 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon, and in about two minutes after she got under way I ran into the high winds which threw the gasoline out of kilter. I was already over Green Bay. I got there so fast that landing was impossible. It began to get dark; I tried to land again, but got into the water. I threw out some ballast and rose above the clouds. The next time I tried to land it was in a big lake. I think it was Lake Michigan. I could see nothing but water.

"I had thrown the engine out shortly after I started, as I wished to save the lighter ballast to make a landing if I got a good chance.

"The next time when I arose I got into the higher atmosphere and my wet clothes froze to my body, the big gas bag was dripping, and as soon as we struck the higher air it was covered with a thick coating of ice. I expected to get killed any moment, but made up my mind I would stick till the finish, but was going to cut the ropes from the frame work of the ship and float with the gas bag if the worst came. The frame work was so frail that one misstep would have thrown me out into space.

"I was hungry and thirsty from being in the high air and nearly frozen and became exhausted, so I made a net out of the landing rope across the frame of the ship, tied myself to it and fell asleep. I must have slept a long time and was awakened by the basket striking on a tree. I untied myself, made a lasso out of the drag rope and after striking several trees finally got the rope over one and fastened it, climbing down to the ground and pulled the ship with me. Unfastening the canvas rudder I made a bed of it at the foot of the tree and went to sleep.

"I was awakened in the night by a big black bear which came sniffing around, but he did not attempt to do any harm. I saw all kinds of wild animals and dozens of deer, which would give a stare at the big thing in the air and run away in alarm.

"I arose in the morning and walked around for four hours, covering about ten miles, and found myself at the starting point. Took another start and late yesterday arrived here in an exhausted condition. I am now going after the ship."

Capt. Matteray has been sailing the air for 15 years and has had several narrow escapes.

THE TWIN COMMUNITIES

Fanwood and Scotch Plains Pictured as Ideal Places for Suburban Residences.

DELIGHTFUL SPOTS

So Says Miss Mary C. Barrows in the Current Number of Jersey Central's Monthly Magazine.

Such a mite of a place is Fanwood—only a glimpse of a pretty park, a house or two and many trees as one flashes by in the Plainfield express. Substitute fonts for fleeting impressions, however, and Fanwood is found to be a village of some fifty inhabitants scattered among uncounted trees, trees that are the pride of teh inhabitants and the admiration of all; a post office and library, housed in a handsome edifice, and the station which is also the telegraph and express office. The one general store of the place hides discreetly beyond the track in the shadow of a bridge.

There isn't a pretentious house in Fanwood, but neither is there a shabby one. They are all comfortable, pretty, homelike houses, with stretches of lawn, and the trees so thick, even at the station, that one seems to be always in the woods. The town has its own water supply and in the State of New Jersey, piped down from the crystal springs of Netherwood, less than two miles distant, and modern science has provided most satisfactory for the disposition of isolated house sewerage. There is gas and electric light service, likewise the service of the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker—for those desiring candles—from Plainfield.

Fanwood is situated on high, rolling ground and is at all seasons of the year a beautiful and healthful place of residence. The woods that surround the town afford an effective wind break in winter and the locality is still further protected from cold northern and westerly winds by the ridge that must be found in Watchung mountains, that lies about a mile and a half distant from the town. Nestling at the foot of this ridge, and about a mile from Fanwood, with which it is connected by a broad, level highway, is the ancient and picturesque village of Scotch Plains. The first settlement was made here in 1684 by Scotch pioneers.

The residents of Fanwood and Scotch Plains attend the same churches, send their children to the same school and use the same railroad station. Fanwood is directly on the line of the Central Railroad of New Jersey and is preferred as a place of residence by the commuter who wishes to live within five minutes of the station. Others, tempted by the lower rents that prevail in Scotch Plains locate there, finding the fifteen minutes walk between home and station an agreeable form of exercise in pleasant weather and on unpleasant days avail themselves of the trolley that passes through Scotch Plains and which in ten minutes puts one down at the railroad station of Plainfield where fast expresses make the run to New York in fifty minutes.

For the New York business man, tired of fat life, wishes to secure for himself and family the comforts and economies of a suburban home with ample grounds for flowerbeds and kitchen gardens, Fanwood and Scotch Plains afford opportunities unsurpassed by any town within an hour's ride of New York. In addition to the natural advantages and the municipal improvements already mentioned—water, gas, electric lights, ample fire and police protection, schools, library, churches, etc.—this locality possesses many attractions in the way of picturesque resorts of easy access, that make it a delightful place of residence. From here stretch in every direction miles of perfect roads for pedestrians, auto enthusiast and lover of horses. There is plenty of tennis close at hand, and within easy reach good golf links and other country club privileges. Best of all, from the commuter's point of view, there are plenty of fast trains to and from the city every day.

Year by year increasing numbers of people, weary of New York's hurry and noise, are finding that a real country home is an easy and practicability of commuting. The same Watchung mountains, homes with charming glimpses of hills and valleys, quite as alluring as the tempting farms offered in the more distant New England country, yet so near. Wall street, the business district that the trip affords barely time for the perusal of the daily paper.

Jerusalem Lodge Election.

The annual communication of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M., will be held Tuesday night, December 13, when officers will be elected. As the first regular communication of the New Year falls on a legal holiday, January 1, that communication will be ommitted and a special communication has been called for Wednesday night, January 2, for the purpose of installing the new officers. The installation ceremonies will be conducted by Right Worshipful Brother Theodore B. Townley, of Elizabeth.

PLEADS FOR OUR ALIENS

Gov. Stokes Says It is Duty of State to Enlighten Foreigners Within Its Borders.

DEFENDS THE POPE

Declares that Ignorant Given Opportunity Surpass Native in Earnestness of Effort.

Representatives from every county in the State of New Jersey were present at the banquet of the committee appointed last winter by Governor Stokes to investigate the condition of the foreign-born residents of the State which was held at the Princeton Inn Friday night. After the banquet, which was a very elaborate function, several interesting speeches on the results of individual investigation were delivered.

Governor Stokes was the first to speak, followed by Justice Fort, of the Supreme Court, and Miss J. M. Campbell, the chairman of the commission. Inspector Walthorn, of Ellis Island, made an interesting address.

After referring to the fact that most of the immigrants come to this country ignorant of the English language and the laws of the United States, and that many of them represent what has been found in the old world, Governor Stokes said:

"It must not be forgotten that whatever may be the character of these new wards of ours, they represent the courage and daring of their race. It requires bravery of the highest type to leave the land of nativity to begin life anew in a foreign land. This very element of courage and ambition is worthy of the highest cultivation and training.

"The dangerous element in a community is always the ignorant class. As a member of the Court of Pardons I have learned that many of the crimes committed among the immigrant colonies in our State are due to ignorance of our laws and institutions. For this unfortunte condition a remedy must be found.

"It is our duty to prepare these wayfarers for the citizenship they crave by teaching them reverence for the principles of good government, by inculcating a spirit of pride in the preservation of American institutions. The unsuspecting are credulous, are often preyed upon by rogues and wronged and defrauded. They are thus given a false notion of American character and American life.

"Give the ignorant alien an opportunity to increase his knowledge, and he far surpasses our native population in earnestness of effort. He is eager to take advantage of education opportunities for his children. The percentage of illiteracy of foreign-born parents is small, compared to that of the illiterate children of native parentage.

"New Jersey has a great opportunity and a great responsibility in this connection. Let her set an example for other States to follow by taking up the immigration problem in a rational and systematic way. The establishment of schools for the training of these new wards of ours in the duties of American citizenship, in the history of American institutions, must fall in abundance a harvest of intelligence and patriotism that will redound to the credit of the State and the nation."

PITNEY TO RETIRE FROM THE BENCH

VICE-CHANCELLOR WILL RESIGN ON EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY.

It was announced in Newark yesterday that Vice Chancellor Henry C. Pitney, who will be eighty years old on January 19 next, is to retire from the bench next spring. The bench and bar of the State are arranging a dinner in honor of the jurist, to take place on the evening of his birthday, at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Vice Chancellor Pitney is now serving his third term. He was appointed in 1889 by Chancellor McGill, having acted as advisory master in chancery for many years before that. In 1896 he was appointed by Chancellor Magie to succeed himself, and upon the expiration of that term, in April, 1903, Chancellor Magie reappointed him. In April he will have been eighteen years on the bench.

The vice chancellor was born in Mendham in 1827. The Pitneys have lived in Morris county nearly two hundred years. His father was Mahlon Pitney, after whom Justice Mahlon Pitney, a son of the vice chancellor, was named. His grandfather was also Mahlon Pitney, a soldier in the Revolutionary War. Vice Chancellor Pitney was graduated from Princeton with the class of '48, and was admitted to the bar in 1851. In 1862 he was appointed prosecutor of the pleas of Morris county, in which position he served for five years.

Ike Richards, of Somerset street, pays highest prices for second-hand clothing.

BISHOP BLAMES MASONRY

Diocesan Head Declares Trouble in France Was Caused by Secret Order.

DEFENDS THE POPE

Bishop O'Connor Says Freemasons Have Worked For Years For Separation of Church and State.

Bishop J. J. O'Connor, of the Newark Catholic diocese, gave out Friday an interview in which he declared that Freemasonry was the cause of the troubles through which the Catholics in France are passing today.

"Inspired by hatred for the Catholic church, French Freemasonry is wholly responsible, I believe, for the crisis which France and the church must face," said Bishop O'Connor.

"Freemasons in that country have worked for separation or church and State for several years, aiming at the destruction of Christianity. They made no secret of the fact, but took oaths to use all influence to bring about separation, not neglecting in the meanwhile to maintain the rights of supremacy of the State over the church.

"The Vatican and French clergy would be entirely satisfied to have church and State separated as it is in this country, but the French Government had a hidden motive. Liberty was not to be given, but, instead, strangulation. The government said: 'You may go on independently, but you cannot do this and that,' and the limitations as to what they could do were so closely defined that Freemasons could, as trustees of the church associations, prescribe even the form of services in the church if they saw fit.

"It is, therefore, apparent that the American people have been misled in entertaining the thought that separation in France would provide the admirable conditions existing here.

"The government, to bring about the separation, steals the church property, and tells the people they may use the buildings if a sort of 'board of trustees' is organized to take the place of the bishop. This power is given the board to engage pastors, agree upon the form of service, and practically dictate how the church shall be run. This, on the face of it, is in direct opposition to the established rule of the Catholic church, whose services are always the same in all parts of the world. Therefore, the objection of the Holy Father to the so-called association law is based upon the laws of the church, which would not allow him to act otherwise.

"Yes, it has been charged that the trouble is due to the French clergy becoming members of the Royalist party, but, then, the fact that several joined one or other parties in France is no reason why a privilege like we have here of joining the Republican or Democratic party.

"There is no reason to believe the church would be better off under a monarchy than under the present form of government. The clergy have not been conspiring. Even cordial relations between the French church and Rome are not enjoined because the concordat subordinated these relations to the surveillance of the State. No bull, no announcement from Rome, no decree of a council, even of a general council, could be published in France, no nuncio legate, etc., could exercise his authority without authorization from the government.

"A bishop was allowed to journey to Rome or go outside his diocese unless he had first obtained permission to do so. How, then, could the bishops or priests meet and plan anything working toward the overthrow of government? That injustice will be righted before long."

The Rev. William H. Morgan, Grand Chaplain F. and A. M., of New Jersey, when asked for a statement concerning adverse criticism of Freemasons for mixing in the alleged interest in church troubles in France, said last night:

"I can say for New Jersey that the Masonic Grand Lodge, known as the Grand Orient of France, has not been recognized for more than a century as a regular Masonic organization."

Members of the Grand Orient were listed as clandestine Masons after the French Revolution of 1792.

WAR ON LUNCH WAGONS.

Effort to Have Them Classified as Buildings—Test Case Begun.

The authorities of Montclair are making an effort to abolish all owl lunch wagons in the town, and in order to accomplish the purpose have sought the aid of the courts to have the wagons declared "buildings," erected contrary to the local building code.

A test case was begun before Judge Ten Eyck in the Court of Common Pleas and argument on a writ of certiorari served. Thomas Amend, the defendant, was not allowed to place his wagon on the street, and found no one willing to lease him a suitable site for it. He accomplished his purpose, however, by buying a building lot and placing his wagon thereon.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Bergman, formerly of Iowa, who have been visiting relatives here, took possession of their new home at Westfield today.

PLAINFIELD LIBRARY NOTES

Fiction at the Public Library.

"Wondrous strong are the spells of fiction."—Longfellow.

As long as some books read fiction all the time and all people read it some of the time, the circulation statistics of libraries are bound to show a preponderance in its favor. The popular demand last year was evidenced by a circulation of 47 per cent. of which has since been called the "small change of literature." Parenthetically it may be said that this is not a comparatively large percentage, in fact the proportion of non-fiction circulated in Plainfield is cause for congratulation in the serious minded. Yet it is evident that the bulk alone of this class of reading is in the nature of a problem, to every librarian, whose difficult duty it is to make each dollar do the work of ten.

There are probably few people now who think that a book goes direct from the shelves of the book store to those of a Public Library, though not many know, even yet, what is involved in the additions of each new title, or what might be called the life history of a library book. In the case of a book of fiction this life history is much shorter than that of any other class. There is first its selection, involving the reading of many critical reviews; the ordering, cataloguing and the various other necessary records, its examination after each issuing, its frequent repair, its temporary withdrawal for rebinding, its further repair when after much circulation the paste brush must be often used, its final withdrawal from circulation, when its condition warrants its honorable discharge from further duty. In its history it perhaps has been issued from about 75 to 300 times, the number depending both upon the quality of the paper and binding, and upon the care it received from borrowers. Then arises the question as to the wisdom of replacing. Is it of sufficient permanent value to warrant a replacing copy, or are the claims of a newer book stronger? Some writers like Marion Crawford, Canon Doyle, Mrs. Barr and to go farther back, Wilkie Collins, Charles Reade and others hold their own against the newer writers, and wear out with a regularity that is very pleasing to the publisher than to the librarian. These of course must be replaced as well as those of the standard story tellers as, Thackeray, Scott, Dickens, Jane Austen, Trollope, George Elliot, and Hawthorne, for these are regular though not so frantic as for the "six best sellers." This summer considerably over 100 books were permanently withdrawn from the adult fiction, and about 75 from the juvenile departments because of their being worn out entirely or rebound to pieces, and there are many more in both departments, which cannot last much longer. Among these are some of ephemeral interest, which are dismissed without regret and with no thought of replacing, others of Conan Doyle, Weyman, Crawford, Dickens, Mrs. Barr, Mrs. Oliphant, Thomas Hardy, etc., will need to be replaced. In the main the list of withdrawals occasioned by wearing out is very creditable to Plainfield readers.

The number of temporary withdrawals for rebinding is about double that of the permanent withdrawals. The highly glazed paper and poor binding used by most publishers, far more than careless handling by borrowers, or time is responsible for it and binding materials, is responsible for the increase in size of binding bills, which more and more curtail the book fund.

In the matter of replacements many of the library's friends have helped by giving from time to time the novel, the book of short stories or out-grown juvenile books to the library. Sometimes these are the newer books, but more often some of the older writers of which many duplicates are on hand. The number of those who thus aid us is comparatively small, and so often people say "I did not know you cared for gifts of that kind," that we take this opportunity of letting more of our friends know of our needs in this direction. There are in almost every household, stories which have been read, but whose chief function now is to gather dust upon the shelves, why not turn these over to the Public Library, where they will be of use? Then in books in the work of providing wholesome reading for its growing circle of childreaders. Whether the gift is one volume or 100 it will be duly acknowledged. The librarian will be glad to give further particulars to any interested.

Annotated List of Books in the Public Library on Carpentry and Wood work.

(For the teacher, but may, in most instances be used by more advanced pupils.)

Exercises in wood working, by I. Sickees. Illustrated.

Prepared for manual training classes. Has excellent clear illustrations for each exercise. The exercises are on he use of the chisel, the gouge, the hammer, the jackplane, rip-saw, sharpening tools, etc., etc.

Exercises in wood working for handicraft classes, by W. C. Nawin.

Loose plates, which may be fastened on the black board or bulletin board. . . . (Using clip without teeth, so that no marks are left on the plate). These give simple exercises in sawing, planing, joining, turning, pattern-making, etc.

Grammar of wood work, a graduated system, by W. E. Deyerdon. Illustrated.

Embodies the experience gained in the practical working of the wood-work department of the Whitechapel Craft-school. The series is confined to exercises and the drawings made to scale, (half an inch to the inch.)

Manual training, wood-work, etc., a handbook for teachers, by G. Ricks. Plentifully illustrated.

Chapters on timber, its seasoning, etc., upon tools and bench work, with a great number of exercises and careful drawings to illustrate them.

"The new education," manual training, wood-work, by R. Wake. Illustrated. .

For the teacher. Contains 1st, 2d and 3d years courses. Gives general method, drawing and bench work, object lessons upon tools and timber.

Theory of educational sloyd, lectures by O. Salomon.

*For the teacher only. Gives mod*els with tools needed, exercises, drawing, approximate time necessary and educational value.

Woodwork, by S. Barter. Illustrated.

Intended for the teacher, but could be used by pupils to advantage. Has chapters on drawing, tools, bench work, timber, etc.

Woodworker's handy book, by P. N. Hasluck. Illustrated.

Intended more for teacher than pupil, but has chapters on woods, how to buy them, how to tell defects, about saws, and planes, sharpening tools, etc.

List of circulating books in the Public Library on Pattern Making and Casting. Business and trades bulletin.

Machinery pattern making, containing full size profiles of gear teeth, etc., by P. S. Dingey. Illustrated.

Modern moulding and pattern making, by J. P. Mullin; illustrated.

A practical treatise upon patternshop and foundry work, with a large collection of rules and tables for every-day use in the drawing-office, pattern-shop and foundry.

New metal worker pattern book, by C. W. Kittredge; illustrated.

This is now a practically new treatise on the problems occurring in sheet metal work, containing 218 problems and an elaborate explanation of the principles of pattern cutting.

Principles of pattern making, by J. H.; illustrated.

For apprentices and students in technical schools, by a foreman pattern maker and including a glossary of pattern making and moulding.

Castings: "

American foundry practice, by T. D. West; illustrated.

Treats of loam, dry and green and moulding, also a practical treatise upon the management of cupolas and the melting of iron.

Casting and founding, by W. T. Brannt; in his "Metal Worker's Handy-book."

Casting and founding, by E. and F. N. Spon, in their "Mechanics' Own Book."

Iron Founder, by S. Bolland; illustrated.

Comprehensive treatise on moulding, coremaking, loam, dry sand and green sand moulding, also crystallization, shrinkage and contraction of casting, &c.

Iron founder supplement, by S. Bolland; illustrated.

Complete exposition of the art of casting in iron, the erection and management of cupolas, reverberatory furnaces, &c., also the founding of patterns &c. of taking casts, pattern modelling.

Modern foundry practice, by J. Sharp; illustrated.

Deals with the green-sand, dry-sand and loam moulding processes, the materials used, also detailed descriptions of the machinery and other appliances employed, with practical examples and rules.

Modern moulding and pattern-making, by J. P. Hullin; illustrated.

Practical treatise upon pattern-making in the pattern-shop, and also upon foundry work, with rules and tables for every-day use.

Moulder's textbook, part 2 of "American Foundry Practice," by T. D. West.

Best methods and original rules for obtaining good, sound, clean castings, &c., construction of cranes and cupolas, and the melting of iron and scrap-steel in iron foundries.

P. H. S. GIRLS DEFEAT THE NEWARK H. S. GIRLS.

In Well Played Game Local Team Wins by Score of 17 to 10.

The girls' basketball team from the Newark High School was defeated in a game yesterday with the girls' team of the Plainfield High School by a score of 17 to 10. The game was played on the Plainfield High School court and was a credit to both teams.

The Misses G. Moody, B. Fleming and E. Crampton, of Plainfield High School, played exceptionally well, making the greater number of points for their team. A notable feature of the game was the well directed and effective passes made by Miss Minnie Line, of P. H. S. Of the Newark girls, the Misses Coe and Barclay played especially well. The line-up:

P. H. S.	N. H. S.
Lyman	Coe
Moody	Stanley
forwards
Guttridge	Peltz
jumping center
Line	Barclay, Theileman side center
Alpaugh	Whitfield
Crampton	Clark (Capt.)
guards

Referees, Miss Perry and Miss Patrick; linesmen, Miss Winn and Miss Andrews; timer, Miss Weeks. Time of halves, fifteen minutes.

Metallic Sympathy.

On the death of the Duke of Wellington the bells of Trim, near Dangan castle, his father's seat in Ireland, for which when a young man Wellington had sat in the Irish parliament, rang a muffled peal, when the tenor, beautifully toned bell, suddenly broke. It was found by a curious coincidence to have been cast in 1769, the year of the duke's birth.

Ingenious Plainsfolders.

Among those who secured patent rights this week were H. H. Sutro and L. M. Booth, of this city, on an apparatus for treating liquids, and H. B. Wiggin's Sons Company, also of this city, on certain woven fabrics.

DRIVES MEN INSANE.

Mysterious Problems in Nature Which Have Wrecked Many Minds.

A scientist who has been traveling in Africa in search of an answer to some questions concerning rainfall gives as his opinion that the expression of imperturbable calm on the face of the Sphinx arises from the fact that she has never tried to find the answers to the riddles of nature, which have sent many men to their graves.

What is gravity? is one of them. Hundreds of men have gone insane trying to answer it, says the Chicago Chronicle. Some, in fact, have gone so far as to try to disprove the theory entirely. An English naval captain wrote a book on this subject and sent *it to all the learned societies in Eu*rope.

Why cannot force be created by human power? Trying to accomplish this has bankrupt the end of many a worthy man. Perpetual motion will be an accomplished fact if we can discover how force is made. Keeley, with his motor, who claimed to have discovered perpetual motion, was a swindler. Some have claimed his ingenious counterfeit of perpetual motion. If this discovery could be made it would revolutionize the world.

What source of heat supply has the planet Mars? Here is another riddle. Our earth gets much more heat from the sun than does Mars, yet that planet has a beautifully mild climate. Astronomers have watched the ice cap thawing on Mars, and they have proved that water flows and clouds rise. This shows that Mars has heat. But if not supplied by the sun, from what source does it come?

Where the tide is born is another of nature's secrets. On the Isthmus of Panama, on the southern Pacific, there is every day at 12 midday and two in the afternoon high tide. Why, no one is able to explain. A scientist has been able to turn gold into silver, but no one so far has been able to make a magnet which will attract gold. Could this be accomplished its enormous value could scarcely be realized, for it would make it possible to work rock from which no known process has been able to attract gold in paying quantities.

PIGS MILKING COWS.

The Farmer Tells of Wonders That Beat the City Man.

"Strange things happen in the city," said the pallid boarder.

"Strange things happen in the country, too, be gum," the farmer interjected.

The city man, rocking on the porch in the twilight over his cheap cigar, had had the floor for half an hour. Now, it was the farmer's turn.

"Strange things, eh?" said the old man resumed. "Milkin', frinstance. O' course ye've heerd o' snakes milkin' cows, hangin' and danglin' from under, while the cows, skairt, cavorted all over the kentry? O' course, ye've heerd o' that, but did ye ever hear, Mr. Clay, o' pigs milkin' cows?"

"No, can't say as I have," the other answered languidly.

"It's bin done," said the farmer. "It's bin done to me, mob done it. It was done only last month. My black an' tan sow fur birth to a litter o' nine pigs, an', blast my buttons if them pigs, as soon as they got to be a month or two old, wouldn't milk my cows reg'lar.

"At noon, when the cows laid down in the shade, the little pigs would come up an' drink all their milk. The cows didn't mind. The milk was no good to them, so o' course, they didn't keer who got it."

All from the Same Cask.

William Jennings Bryan, during his sojourn in London, dined with some Americans at the Savoy, in the cafe overlooking the Thames embankment.

The talk turned to wine, and Mr. Bryan said:

"It is of advantage in France to know good wine, and it is also of advantage to know French.

"Three friends of mine, traveling in the French provinces, thought at dinner they would go a little higher than the vin ordinaire included in their three-franc table d'hote, and accordingly one ordered a bottle of margaux. The second ordered pontet canet. The third ordered haut brion.

"The waiter, suitably impressed with these orders, retired. But he incautiously, as he retired, left the door open, and thus it was that my three stupefied friends heard him give their order in these terms:

"'Baptiste, three bottles of the red.'"

Ins and Outs.

Bronzed by foreign suns, he entered the office of his colleague. But the cashier's chair was vacant.

"Is Mr. Smith out?" he asked, anxiously. "I am an old friend of his."

"No, sir," returned the clerk. "Mr. Smith is not out. He won't be out for 16 years."

Here the clerk smiled grimly.

"The firm is out, though," he went on, "one hundred thousand just."

Versatile Youth.

"That new clerk of yours is rather versatile, isn't he?" said the drummer.

"That's what," replied the village merchant. "He makes three or four different kinds of a fool of himself every day."

Something for Nothing.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Dec. 23: "Lessons of the Manger." (Christmas Topic.)

By REV. WALTER J. YATES, D. D.

Luke ii. 7-20.—The world's exclusion of Jesus.—Verse 7. The lowly sign of the child Christ.—Verse 12. The manifestation of the child Christ.—Verse 16.

There was no place for them in the inn, not because any one intended to crowd them out as a matter of malice or ill will. Simply this—every one was busy about his own concerns and was ignorant of the nature of this family, their conditions and needs.

*So it is at the present time. Multi*tudes are indifferent to the claims of Christ upon them because they are busy about other concerns and have never been brought to think on religious matters. Their minds are preoccupied. They have no room for Him to take up with other things. They are not hostile to religion—they are simply not thinking of it, but of other matters. They have no room for Christ because full of matters of a different nature.

Why is it that Christmas, every one thought is given by the vast majority to those things connected with Christ, from whom it takes all its significance? There is hurry and bustle and a multitude of things doing, joy and present *making and giving, greetings and con*gratulations. Watch the flow of the tides of affairs and then tell yourself how much after all there is of Christ in the Christmas which most people know best. There is a place for the thought of and done there is no time or room for Him. Wait until Lent or some revival time and then will we think of Christ, but on Christmas, who ever thinks of that as a religious season?

Where shall we find Christ now? It was a strange thing for the Lord of all worlds to make His bed in a manger. The wise men from the east sought Him in the place which seems most unlikely—in the palace of the king. But He was not there. There was nothing in that palace or the persons living there which was like Him. He was Prince of Peace, but peace never found a lodging place where a Herod lived, and to Christ would find no home where such a king abode. He came to earth to save the poor in heart and bring victory to the lowliest of the human race. Why, then, should He find lodging anywhere other than among the lowly? His was safest also. If born in the palace, He might have suffered the fate of some of the best of the king's sons, the very fate which Herod tried to inflict on Jesus when he ordered the slaughter of the babes of Bethlehem. He was safest in the manger bed than in the king's arms.

This is also a sign to us at the present time. Would you find the things of Christ you must seek them not so much among the great as in spirit of the world as among the lowly and meek. Do you understand this? Many do not and never will penetrate the mystery. They will still be wondering why they may not find the sweet and perfect peace in the higher heights and in the busy marts of men and in the world's own way.

There are births for which the nations wait in eager expectancy and which are heralded by roar of cannon and bonfires and by shouts of joy and delirious joy. There are pomp and ceremony, careful public attestation of legitimacy, scrupulous care, soft garments, gems and all earthly glory and circumstances. And in so many cases it is all needed for the poor thing which comes into existence, for he has no glory or power in himself. But in this case what need, what place for earthly trumpetings, what need of human attestation, what time for shoutings and high rejoicings? There is no hall in hour or his abiding place. He owns all. He made all. He comes to call all, but His kingdom is not like these others. Earth's wealth shall be poured out for Him as never for any king. Earth's power shall be used as men never before saw monarch live. He shall claim and receive homage such as no other one ever did or shall receive. He shall come into His own and shall reign supreme, but not as the Herods and Caesars. The manger is His sign.

Have you read His sign and found Him?

The Reach of Influence.

Did it ever occur to you that the most wonderful things in the world are the things that you cannot see? You never saw the perfume of a rose, but a rose cannot be in a room without your knowing it full well. You do not see the zephyr that stirs the leaves in the orchard trees or the gale that sends forward the storm on its wild career, *but nothing is so vital, nothing so pow*erful as the air, whether it be in gentle zephyr or storm. Not a single atmosphere infolds us alike in the valley, on the plain or on the mountain top, but we do not see it. The intangible things, things so slight *yet so real that, al*though they defy touch, they interweave themselves into the tissues of our being, are, after all, the things that are strongest and most enduring.

Years after the Empress Josephine had left her palace at Malmaison the rooms were full of a certain delicate fragrance which had pervaded her clothing and her furniture. Hundreds of years have passed since Shakespeare and Milton laid down their pens, but the words they wrote are throbbing with life today. You cannot handle a word, but the wide earth has nothing so imperishable.—Forward.

Lasting Service.

We often do more good by our sympathy than by our labors and render to the world a more lasting service by absence of jealousy and recognition of merit than we could ever render by the striking of blows, personal and political.—Dora Farrar.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic for the Week Beginning Dec. 23.

By REV. R. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—How can we carry the Christmas spirit through 1907?—Luke ii, 8-20.

The celebration of the birth of Christ is necessarily limited to but the day of the year, which we call Christmas day. But the spirit of Christmas should be manifested upon every day of the year. To do this it is necessary, first of all, to understand just what the spirit of Christmas is. There are many things that characterize the Christmas season, but if we were called upon to name the one that is most prominent the majority of Christians would undoubtedly decide in favor of joy. Christmas is, above all, a joyous season. The spirit of joy has characterized the day of Christ's birth from the very beginning. It was the keynote of the announcement of the angel of the Lord to the shepherds on the first Christmas morning. "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy." And what reason for great joy! "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Which sang the whole world sing at Christmas:

Joy to the world, the Lord is come;
Let earth receive her King;
Let every heart prepare Him room
And heaven and nature sing.

Of all the seasons of the year the Christmas season is the most joyous of all. Joy is the dominating spirit of the season.

This spirit of joy at Christmas is manifested in different ways. (1) It is manifested in expressions of gratitude to God. With the angelic chorus the world sings "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." Perhaps at no other time is God so abundantly praised as at Christmas time. At that time as seldom at any other we remember God's great gift to the world, and the sentiment of the people finds its thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift." But gratitude to God is not to be limited to any one day of the year, however important that day may be. It should characterize every day of the year. Every day we should praise and bless His holy name and not only for the daily blessings of life, but every day there should be in our hearts that spirit of joy that will lead us to thank Him for the gift of His Son. (2) It is manifested in the kindly attitude of men toward their fellow men. Being joyful ourselves, we are anxious to impart this joy to others. The result is joyful greetings, the outclking of the glad hand, the hearty smile, unusual kindness and expression of good will. But these are also things that should not be reserved for but one season of the year. There are always those about us who need our assistance. Kind words of cheer, deeds of kindness and appreciated every day of the year. The spirit of joy should be a factor in our lives every day. Indeed, the Christmas spirit will accomplish greater results and prove a greater blessing only the coming days of joy than at a particular holiday season. Then all are more or less able to find joy for themselves. But it is mostly when amid the daily routine of life, with its duties and burdens, that we need the sympathy, the kindly greeting and assistance of our fellow men. Let us not forget this fact. Let us be kind and helpful upon all occasions, and thus manifest the Christmas spirit throughout the new year upon which we shall soon enter.

But how may we carry this spirit through the year? By remembering the goodness of God to us in the gift of His Son. It is this that fills us with the spirit of joy at the Christmas season, and why should it not have the same effect at other times? It undoubtedly would, but the trouble is that we forget it. But let us forget it no longer. When an opportunity comes to us to say a kind word, to speak a word of good cheer to some one in trouble, in sorrow or in discouragement, let us remember the great gift of God to us and give ourselves in good deeds, in kind words and in heartfelt sympathy to others.

Worth Fighting For.

I stood some days ago in the shade of a church where the shadow of Christian Endeavor lingers, but where the spirit of it is only an empty name. The church needed a Christian Endeavor house cleaning—or a Christian Endeavor revival, and the bringing of this to pass ought to be our inspiration rather than the recounting of our easily won victories. Pessimistic do you say? Not at all. I stand today the greatest Christian Endeavor optimist I ever have been, but as my heart goes out to God in thankfulness for His rich blessing on our efforts in these latter years I cannot help reminding myself that we are not doing nearly so well as we ought, nor nearly so well as we might. The battles of Christian Endeavor are too easy today. It does not require hardship enough in winning to toughen our muscles and train our power of endurance. For many of us some "adverse winds" would prove blessings in disguise. I want to strike a keynote for the days ahead. A new society in every eligible church without one now; a new society in every society in existence today; a new purpose for loyalty to Jesus Christ in all Christian Endeavor and a new year of effort beyond anything we ever have known before. And if we shall strike this keynote and march away to the battle with winning determination I have no fear but that we shall put some of the old time fighting spirit into our work.—John R. Clements.

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

EFFORT TO RECLAIM LAND

Important National Movement Begun in Portugal—Natural Advantages Awaiting Development in Mexican State.

LISBON, PORTUGAL.

Portugal has started in on a system of land reclamation which, if as successful as it promises to be, must result in similar movements in various parts of Europe.

In the south of Portugal a serious attempt is being made with some chance of success to bring back into cultivation a large tract of land. This country being essentially agricultural, any steps to reclaim land that has gone out of cultivation, estimated at 4,314,000 hectares (about 10,000,000 acres), or 44 per cent. of the total area of Portugal, are a move in the right direction.

Some energetic members of society in the district of Serpa, in combination with the municipal authorities, have set to work upon 100,000 acres, dividing it up into allotments of 15 acres each and letting it at a nominal rent, calculated according to the estimated value of the land, which has, as it were, four classifications, the highest quit rent being placed at $3.20 and the lowest at 40 cents per allotment, free of local rates and taxes for ten years.

Quite a heterogeneous mixture of settlers has already taken possession of their tenements. Carpenters, masons, doctors, chemists, barbers, seamstresses, tailors, and even beggars, figure in the list.

One of the chief difficulties to be overcome before making the allotments was to deal with the proprietary rights of bee keepers, who centuries ago had certain privileges conferred upon them whereby they did a thriving trade in honey and wax. This trade has, in some cases, unsuccessfully, owing to the destruction of the floral produce of the land, chiefly by firing when portions thereof were cleared for wheat and other cereals. Matters have been amicably settled with the bee keepers and an embryo agriculturists. The success of the scheme as far as it has gone has stirred the ambition of the residents in a large part of the north of Portugal, where a project on similar lines is being set on foot to bring back into cultivation something like half a million acres.

BAD TEETH OF SCHOOL CHILDREN.

FRANKFORT, GERMANY.

The result of an examination of the teeth of the pupils of the school in Hochfelde is very suggestive. Of the 1,020 children examined 482 were boys and 538 girls. The boys had 12,826 defective teeth and only 2,116 sound ones. Only 19 of the boys had perfect sets of teeth. Of the girls, 397 sets were unfit for chewing food, with 192 boys disturbances in their general condition were observed, due to decayed teeth. Of the teeth of the girls 15,747 were found defective and only 2,189 sound. Only 16 girls had perfect sets of teeth; 206 girls were suffering in their general condition in consequence of decayed teeth.

The total result showed that 90 per cent. of all the teeth examined were defective; only 35 out of 1,020 children had sound sets of teeth. In 396 children a poor bodily constitution was due to poor teeth. The result shows that caries, or decay of the teeth, has extremely noxious consequences.

This region is rich in resources and full of promise.

The State of Veracruz is now of great interest to foreigners and will be for years to come. It includes both temperate and tropical zones and extends from the gulf coast to a mountain elevation of 10,099 feet. Thus soil and climate are varied. The markets of Jalapa, 4,600 feet high, have in season apples, peaches, pears, quinces, plums, grapes, oranges, lemons, figs, melons, etc., of the temperate zone, and mangos, zapotes, chirimollas, papayas, breadfruit, cocoanuts, nanches, pineapples, coffee, etc., of the tropics.

THE PEOPLE'S LOBBY.

The People's Lobby, which has been organized at Washington, D. C., has for its object the passage of laws of benefit to the people. At the same time the new bureau will keep tabs on the trusts lobbyists and will work to defeat any bill detrimental to the masses. In short, the Lobby is going to be the watch dog of Congress and judging from the calibre of the men associated in the laudable enterprise it is going to be a great big success.

In the future, if you want to know just how Congressman Fowler or Senators Kean and Dryden voted during the discussion of any measure, all you will have to do is to consult the People's Lobby. You won't have to wade through proceedings of Congress as contained in the day old Record and neither will you have to accept the word of some more or less partisan newspaper. The Lobby will have all the facts down in black and white, and all you will have to do is let your wishes be known to it. The records will speak for themselves.

Mr. Isaac Hayes Hillis, one of the active heads of this unique lobby, Samuel Mervin says in the current number of Success:

"These records will be made up of facts, not of opinions. In so far as they can be made so, the full public responsibility of Senators and Representatives for the work of Congress and its committees, the reports will be based wholly on their public acts. The People's Lobby is not interested in personal or political gossip. But every State and district has a right to scrutinize the work of its representatives in Congress, as has an employer to scrutinize the work of his employees. There is nothing in the slightest degree personal about this. No honest man can object to a record, compiled thoroughly and accurately from official sources, of his public acts—of precisely what he has said and how he has voted on every question that has arisen during his term of office, all brought together in concise form and stated in unconcomitingly simple terms. It should be seen, from this, that the People's Lobby is starting out without the slightest trace of antagonism to the Congress. These records will be an inestimable help to the upright independent Congressman—and it is with regret that we believe the average of the records will probably hurt him."

OUR ALIEN WARDS.

Governor Stokes' plea for New Jersey's alien wards is one that will command the attention and commendation with the vast importance of the great work entrusted to the commission before which he spoke. As he rightly says: "The dangerous element in a community is always the ignorant class." It is an accepted fact that to a very large degree this particular class is almost entirely composed of people of foreign birth and ideas. In some communities it represents a large percentage of the total population.

Given the opportunity to become enlightened on American institutions, laws and ideals, this class would undoubtedly make up a fine type of citizenship and therefore a very desirable element in the community. But left untaught and untrained, the atmosphere creates in them a spirit of rebellion against all forms of law and order. In their own darkness they do not know and do not understand.

So long as the State government holds out no chance for these people to become intelligent citizens it will not be doing its full duty. In fact, the State is partially to blame for offenses that such alien wards commit sheerly through ignorance. The solution of the grave condition of affairs is to be found only in education, and Governor Stokes sounds the keynote when he says:

"New Jersey has a great responsibility; let her set the example by taking up this problem systematically. The establishment of schools for the training of these new wards of ours in the duties of American citizenship must needs produce a harvest of intelligence and patriotism that will redound to the credit of the State and the nation."

WHERE'S OUR CONFRESSMAN?

The spanking that the Fifth district Republican voters gave Congressman Martine at the polls every time James E. Martine "poached" on him for playing "hookey," seems to have been deserved. The Congressman, however, is back at his old tricks it appears from reports from Washington. On Saturday he did not answer roll call and according to a newspaper batch he "was absent as usual" when the vote was taken on the salary increase bill.

A SQUARE DEAL MAYOR.

His frank and welcome address before the Common Council Monday will win for Mayor-elect Fisk nothing but words of praise and will insure for him the reasonable confidence of the people that he will discharge the duties of his office with fidelity and to the very best of his ability. In his own peculiar way he briefly outlined what he would expect from the city fathers and what they could expect from him. When he had finished, the convention was brought home to every man within the range of his voice, no matter what his factional tendencies might be, that the new Mayor is most sincere in his purpose to be guided in his public acts solely by what he considers the best for all the people.

That Mr. Fisk will have nothing to do with petty jealousies or narrow self-seeking interests, he demonstrated most clearly. He made it plain that while he desired the support of the Common Council, under no circumstances would he look with favor upon any "Big Six" or majority clique. Each member of that body in his opinion should aim to serve the people as a whole and should not be swayed at any time pick plums for others than those whom they deem to be essentially qualified. As he stated, there are many important matters to come up next year and a good working Council is absolutely necessary.

The suggestions made that the Common Council create two new committees, one to watch the bills introduced at Trenton and the other to properly adjust assessments and equalize values, should be very popular approval. Frequently measures are introduced in the Legislature that seriously affect Plainfield and on one or two occasions the city fathers have found themselves embarrassed by hasty passage. To avoid such unexpected troubles, the proposed committee is suggested. The purpose of the other committee is to correct the present unsatisfactory conditions in tax matters, something of great importance to this city.

Mr. Fisk is out for "the square deal" and we feel confident that the taxpayers will get it under his administration.

AMUSEMENTS.

Not during the past ten years of theatrical history has there been such an unqualified success on Broadway as that which Bonita and Will Winn Woman and Song Company made at the New Circle theatre, where they are playing an unlimited engagement. The attraction is one of Mortimer M. Theise's offerings, and has been proclaimed by the New York press as among the best of his many attractions. Every dramatic critic voiced the entertainment in the most praiseworthy terms. Miss Bonita, who is unquestionably the most beautiful, as well as accomplished star, appears to wonderful advantage in the stellar roles. She possesses a remarkable voice and delivers her many musical selections with the style and dignity which has so long characterized her work. Her songs are the talk of the town and her clever impersonations of several of the most prominent actresses has created for herself a most enviable position in the theatrical world. The title of the satire in which Bonita and her company appears is styled "Going Into Vaudeville," in which all of the most popular actors and actresses are satirized. It certainly is a revelation in the amusement field, and judging from present indications, it will relieve both financially as well as artistically any of past or present New York reviews.

All records for attendance and financial receipts at any indoor place of amusement have just been broken by the New York Hippodrome with its double production of "Pioneer Days" and "Neptune's Daughter." The opening day of the sale, the advance receipts taken in at night box offices amounted to $91,000. The first night house, with many invited guests present, figured a total of $5,412.50. The next day was Thanksgiving and the total of the two receipts were $5,627, and at the night performance $5,639.50, making the remarkable total of $11,266.50. This record has never been equalled in any other amusement place, and it exceeds the best record for a day's receipts ever known at the Hippodrome. At the matinee Friday, November 30, nearly 1,000 people were turned away, unable to obtain tickets, and the receipts, with one dollar as the highest price, amounted to $4,478. The indications are that "Neptune's Daughter" and "Pioneer Days" will play to absolute capacity for many weeks to come, and as that means gross receipts of $60,000 a week, it can easily be seen that Messrs. Shubert & Anderson have a gold mine in the Hippodrome, instead of the white elephant some people thought they had.

Anna Held, more delicately lovely, chic and special than ever, with beauty enhanced and delicious individuality accentuated, is greeted with admiration and cheer in welcome, after her long desertion of America, and is delightful in the silliest every evening at the Broadway theatre, New York, in her new musical play, "The Parisian Model." It is a brilliant, dazzling and tuneful romp, all white of dance, melody and revolving figures. Max Hoffman, the composer, has supplied some of the prettiest, whistly music for the entertainment and Harry B. Smith has written some of the cleverest songs heard in years. Costume after costume and set after set are shown until the riot of color and glitter of jet palls on the onlooker and fairly bewilders him, and so much has been shown that when the time arrives for the last scene, the skating picture, it seems a foregone conclusion that no further surprise can be in store. But it comes. All the characters are transferred to a Skating Rink, or, to speak correctly, a "Palais de patinage." The setting is highly attractive itself, being brilliantly lighted, and without, the streets of Paris can be seen in moonlight glamor. "The Parisian Model" is the cleverest musical play seen on Broadway in years. Regular matinees are given at the Broadway theatre on Saturdays only during the Anna Held engagement with additional matinees on Christmas and New Year's Day.

ANOTHER SMOKER FOR COLLEGE MEN

EXPECTED THAT 350 WILL GATHER AT AFFAIR TO BE HELD JAN. 24.

The insistence on the part of college graduates as well as undergraduates in this city for another "university smoker," similar to the one conducted a year ago, has been so strong that plans are now underway for the second smoker to be held at the Casino on Thursday night, January 24. Of course, every college man in the city is expected to be present and the affair is for his Alma Mater. Last year's affair was considered a success, but the committee expects to make the one in January more elaborate and earnestly requests the support of every college man in Plainfield and North Plainfield.

There were at the time of the last smoker 450 college men in Plainfield, representing fifty-seven colleges and universities, and 225 men attended the affair. The committee is counting upon at least 350 men at the coming smoker and is making preparations for that number.

The entertainment will include several vaudeville sketches, while not the least enjoyable will be the singing of college songs by a quartette from Yale and another one from Princeton. Artists from New York will furnish the vaudeville part of the entertainment.

Everyone agreed last year that the smoker was one of the best things ever held in Plainfield, bringing together as it did a bunch of jolly good fellows, and all those who were present then are looking forward with much pleasure to the second event. These were at least fifty college men who did not attend the first smoker, who have signified their intention to be at the forthcoming one.

Return postal cards were sent out on Saturday and the committee hopes that every man who receives one will be present on January 24. Those should be a college man in town who does not receive a card he is requested to communicate with any member of the committee, which is composed of S. St. John McCutchen, William N. Runyon, Joseph M. Shellabarger, Owen H. Fleming, William L. Saunders, Dr. F. C. Ard, Harry L. Hall, William C. Kinney and Archibald Cox.

The Casino will again be decorated with the various college colors and in other ways made attractive. Last year colors from every college represented were displayed with excellent taste and it is proposed to do the same thing at the next smoker.

HOPE FAIR CLOSES.

Net Proceeds Will Probably Reach a Total of $250.

The three-night fair conducted by the members of Hope chapel in the Sunday-school rooms came to a successful close Saturday night. Nearly all the articles on the various tables were disposed of and those that remained were auctioned off by David Bowden. Between the hours of 6 and 8 a supper was served by the women and it was enjoyed by a large number of diners. The proceeds from the fair will probably reach $250 and the amount will be added to the organ fund, the instrument to be installed as a memorial to Henry C. Squires.

The executive committee which arranged and had charge of the affair comprised Mrs. Robert Hanglitter, Mrs. M. W. Clarke, Mrs. L. R. Howard, Mrs. Gertrude Rittenhouse, Miss Laura Hanglitter, David Bowden and Robert Slorah.

HE WAS TWENTY-THREE.

So Frederick Liewald's Friends Came To Cheer Him Up.

Frederick Liewald, of Cushing road, became twenty-three years old Saturday. To detract his mind from the gloom attached to the figure, friends to the number of thirty-five "dropped in" on him suddenly Saturday night and filled the house with joyful noises. The treatment was successful.

Cards and round games were played, and a number of handsome prizes were won. Refreshments were served. Miss Emma Liewald arranged the affair.

EVENING RECEPTION.

... and Mrs. Robert Gow Mark the Former's Birthday.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gow, of Lee place, formally entertained on Saturday night in honor of the former's birthday. The guests numbered twenty-five. Mrs. George Whitley assisted the hostess in receiving. The dining room and library were decorated in red and green.

Military whist was the feature of the evening. Supper was served after the play.

OLD HOTEL MAINTAINS TWO-CENTURY RECORD

BOAST OF "NEVER CLOSED" IS KEPT GOOD WHILE BUILDING IS MOVED.

The Somerset Hotel, in Somerville, one of the oldest and most famous hostelleries in New Jersey, which is credited with doing business for nearly 200 years without ever closing its doors, fully sustained its reputation in this line during last week by continuing in operation while it was raised from its foundations and moved 300 feet up the street.

The process of running the hotel while it was elevated on stilts was unique. Colonel "Phil" Early, the proprietor, threw a gangplank from the barroom door to the street, and the liquid refreshment end of his business never slackened for an hour, despite the fact that it was considered dangerous to walk the plank under all conditions.

One hundred years ago this ancient inn was famous as a halfway house on the Old York road, between New York City and Easton, Pa., and was known to the traveler as the "stage house." It was a noted gathering place for politicians and statesmen, and it has been the scene of many historical banquets.

George Fritts, once proprietor of the hotel, a generation before, states that at a great political gathering at the hotel, the late John I. Blair, who was a Republican candidate for Governor, handed over $40,000 to a political leader to carry the district for him.

Very little of this money, it is said, got into circulation, and Blair was defeated. When Blair visited the town some time later he pointed knowingly to a big business building which had been erected by the politician to whom he had intrusted the $40,000, and remarked: "Fritts, there is one of the monuments to my late political folly."

HOPE FIVE WON.

Defeated the Stirling Quintet By Score of 40 to 10.

The Hope chapel basketball team defeated the Stirling five, Friday night, by a score of 40 to 10. The game was easier for Hope in the second half than in the first. It was played cleanly.

SUSPECT COMMITTED.

Alleged Hold-Up Man Faces Conviction, Police Chief Says.

George Saeger, charged with being the hold-up man who robbed and shot Leo Slonim, was committed to the county jail, Tuesday morning, by Judge Hunt, to await the action of the grand jury. He repeated his declaration of his innocence and waived examination.

Chief Kiely has strengthened his case against the suspect, and is confident of convicting him. Saeger will be taken to the Elizabeth jail this afternoon. He says he has no money for a lawyer and will ask the court to assign one.

The American Magazine Has Changed Hands

For Six Years it was Leslie's Popular Monthly.

Ida M. Tarbell, who wrote Lincoln and the famous "Story of Rockefeller," William Allen White, the well-known Kansas editor, F. P. Dunne, creator of "Mr. Dooley;" Ray Stannard Baker, and Lincoln Steffens are under the leadership of John S. Phillips, now editing The American Magazine.

Never before has such a brilliant group been gathered together, and they are not only contributing themselves, but are filling the magazine with the very best novels and short stories and great timely articles by other famous writers and beautiful pictures by great artists.

A Great Bargain.

The regular price for the twelve numbers of The American Magazine is $1.20—little enough as it is, but for a limited time you can get the November and December, 1906, numbers, with a full year's subscription for 1907, for a dollar, or

CRUSADE AGAINST CITY STORING GROUNDS

STREET COMMISSIONER GAVETT WILL HAVE THEM TIDIED UP.

Street Commissioner Gavett has inaugurated a crusade against the unsightly city storing grounds and before the first of the year the two that have been used principally for a long time will be in presentable shape. They are located at Sixth street and Arlington avenue and Plainfield avenue and West Third street. The former is to be abandoned entirely and the lot that has been an eyesore for years through piles of stone, pipe and whatnot, will be a credit to the neighborhood.

*The lot at Third street and Plain*field avenue will not be given up but a gang of men will work on it until it has been made as spick and span as is possible under the circumstances. The material taken from these places will be stored well down in the West End and on Randolph road near where the new southside sewer pumping station is to be built. Another municipal storing site, located on the north side of Midway avenue, is also to receive attention and as long as it is used will be kept in good shape. Mr. Gavett has wanted to undertake the work of cleaning up for many months but has been prevented because of having no place to put the material.

The city dumping grounds are receiving the joint attention of the Board of Health and Mr. Gavett and hereafter will be carefully watched. Several of the smaller ones are to be discontinued and notices warning people not to use them will be posted. One of these notices is to be put up at Arlington avenue and Sixth street to make sure that no slips in a lot of refuse after the city gets the present lot out.

P. H. S. BASKETBALL TEAM DEFEATED BY THE LAURELS.

Local Five Crippled by the Absence of Four of Its Best Players.

The Plainfield High School basketball team played the Laurels, in Bound Brook, Saturday night, and were defeated by a score of 21-18. The game was close and interesting throughout, in spite of the fact that the P. H. S. team was crippled by the absence of four of its regular men, leaving only one first team man. Captain Doane, Line, Snyder and Freeman were unable to play. In the first half P. H. S. led in the score but fell behind in the second. Caldwell of P. H. S. upheld his reputation and played his usual good game. Hawk, of the Laurels, played a steady game and showed up well for his team. Points were made by, Morris, 5, Gavett 6, Caldwell 7, Hawk, 16, Rugen, 4. The line-up:

P. H. S.	LAURELS.
Morris	Bowlby, Shan
Gavett	Monihan

Referee, John Lolzeaux; umpire, Trumble; timer, Leggett; scorer, Rugen.

Audacious Hunters.

White Robert and Lewis Arnold, sons of Charles Arnold, of Liberty street, were on their father's farm on Greenbrook road, Saturday, they requested a couple of hunters, who were shooting about promiscuously, to leave the premises. For reply, the men shot over the heads of the boys and also hurled stones at them. The matter was reported to Mr. Arnold and his employes and they started to look for them but fortunately *for the hunters, they had disappear*ed from the neighborhood.

DRAFT OF CONSTITUTION READ AT ORGANIZATION MEETING IN NEWARK.

The organization meeting of "The People's Lobby of New Jersey," held Friday night at Achtel-Stetter's, in Newark, brought together men of all parties and men who never had a party. A constitution was adopted and officers elected to serve for the coming year. Edwin G. Adams presided, and E. A. Whittier acted as secretary. The Rev. Adolph Roeder, of the New Jersey State Civic Federation, sat at the right of the presiding officer.

After the constitution was adopted the following were elected officers: Colonel Alexander D. Wordyde, of Middlesex, president; Henry H. Dawson, of Essex, treasurer; Edwin Whittier, secretary. Governing committee: Adolph Roeder, Simon Northrup, Herman B. Walker, Edwin G. Adams and Henry Hines, of Essex; Albert Howe and John H. Lippincott, of Hudson; James A. Blauvelt, of Passaic; Walter Linberger, of Somerset, and Samuel Merwin, W. M. Atkinson, Thomas M. Debevoise, William J. Wood, C. VanWhitbek and W. F. Groves, of Union.

Alden Freeman, as chairman of the committee on constitution, submitted a draft of the document, which was adopted with a few amendments.

The first article states the name as "The People's Lobby of New Jersey." The second article reads:

"The functions of the People's Lobby shall include:

"The collection and dissemination of information regarding legislation and the action of members of the Legislature thereon.

2. The keeping of an accurate record of the official acts and votes of members of the State Legislature, together with other information pertinent to their official records; and from time to time the making public of these records, and securing for them the widest possible publicity.

3. The initiation and support of legislation in the interests of the people and opposition to legislation inimical to the interests of the people."

Article III, provides that the membership shall consist of a general committee composed of citizens of New Jersey acceptable to the governing committee, which shall have power to expel members and make standing rules. The latter committee, by Article IV., hereafter shall be elected by the members from each county and shall control the Lobby. By Article V., the members from each county shall organize a county branch. Article VII. vests the management of the Lobby's work in an executive committee, consisting of the president and the secretary of the governing committee as ex-officio members, and of five others, who shall be elected from and by the governing committee.

Article VIII. provides for nominations for offices and fixes the annual meeting for the second Thursday in December. Article IX. provides for amendments and Article X. the annual dues at $3.

After the adoption of the constitution, the president-elect spoke briefly, saying: "I am not unmindful of the honor or the responsibility the position involves, and am grateful for the honor. The time has arrived when the political history of the State should be laid before the people, and information of the work done by their representatives given to them. The People's Lobby is in existence to see that no vicious legislation is passed. The time when the politicians look to a boss for instructions has passed and the word of the people must be respected."

Surprised William Hart.

Edward E. Apgar, of this city, attended a surprise party given to William Hart at his home in Gladstone, Saturday night. The affair was given in honor of Mr. Hart's thirty-seventh birthday anniversary. There were about thirty-five guests. Mr. Hart was a formed resident of this city, residing on West Sixth street.

The New York Tribune Almanac.

Of course, it is possible to worry through life without keeping a Tribune Almanac on hand for reference, but it is worth while—does it pay? For 25 cents a year this publication supplies you with a really marvellous amount of information, and the man who has it is an authority in his neighborhood. He doesn't have to be "guessing" or "supposing" as to election pluralities, the names of Cabinet Ministers, Senators, Congressmen, Governors or Judges. He doesn't have to depend upon his memory when anything comes up about the big events of the preceding year or in relation to our army or navy, or sporting records, or, in fact, almost anything else of record worth knowing. If you have never examined The Tribune Almanac just invest a quarter for one, and see how well pleased you'll be. The 1907 issue will be on sale January 1, and may be had from your newsdealer, through your local paper or direct from The Tribune office, New York.

Mrs. Frank Quass will lead the Christian Endeavor Society meeting at the Park Avenue Baptist church Friday night.

FARMERS OPPOSE DRYDEN

Somerset Board of Agriculture Requests County Representatives to Vote Against Him

THEY PASS RESOLUTION

Wm. H. Rogers Fathered Resolution Which Went Through Unanimously—Why They Are Against Him.

Farmers from every township and borough of Somerset county gathered in the east chapel of the First Reformed church in Somerville Saturday morning and afternoon to attend the fifteenth annual meeting of the Somerset County Board of Agriculture, which was pronounced one of the most interesting sessions held in years. Judge Louis H. Schenck, the president, was in charge. He called the meeting to order and the reports of the secretary and treasurer was read. It indicated that the organization is in excellent standing. A balance of $65.54 was in the treasury.

At this point there was a general discussion on topics of interest, a question box being used for better effect. Adjournment was then taken until 2 p. m. No board dinner was served this year.

At the afternoon session the association got down to business. Senator Garret F. Dryden with a sharp stick and without a great amount of discussion the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, Hon. John F. Dryden by his vote in opposition to the bill imposing a tax on alcoholic beverages, which is sold in opposition to butter, in spite of the request from numerous agricultural societies that he should support said bill, and his opposition to the free alcohol bill, has shown his lack of interest in the welfare of the farmers; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Senator and Member of Assembly from this county be and are hereby requested to vote against the reelection of Hon. John F. Dryden for United States Senate." This resolution was introduced by W. H. Rogers, of Warren township.

President Schenck delivered his annual address and officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

President, Abram A. Cortelyou; vice president, Bernhard Meyer; secretary and treasurer, Arthur P. Sutphin. Board of directors—Bedminster, C. Martyn Wyckoff, William C. Lane; Bernards, George S. Voorhees, Frederick C. Sutro; Branchburg, S. D. Opie and James H. VanDyke; Bridgewater, John F. Schmadeke, Bernhard Meyer; Franklin, A. V. D. Polhemus, George B. Randolph; Hillsborough, John Groendyke, Jacob D. Cook; Montgomery, Charles Cook, Heuston Labaw; North Plainfield, Charles F. Debele, Hubert P. Phillips; Warren, W. H. Rogers, Mark Stultz.

Representatives to State Board of Agriculture, John Groendyke (one year), and Hubert B. Phillips (two years); alternate for both, Harry S. VanNuys.

Representatives to the State Horticultural society, Arthur P. Randolph and William J. Logan (two years).

Mr. Cortelyou, the new president, was escorted to the chair. He made a speech in which he said he would do everything possible to promote the interests of the agriculturist. Mr. Cortelyou is the president of the Holstein-Friesian Association of America and one of the leading breeders of that kind of cattle in this country. His home is in Somerville and his farm near Millstone.

The principal address of the afternoon was delivered by Prof. Edward B. Voorhees, of the State Agricultural Experiment Stations, who had for his topic, "Does Farming Pay?" If Not, Why Not?" He declared that it is his belief that farming does pay. He declared that agricultural pursuits could be made more successful than they really are by education, and said that every farmer should send his boy to New Brunswick to take the short courses in agriculture.

F. H. Castner, of Changewater, who was to speak on "Poultry Raising," was unable to be present.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS AT SOLEMN VESPER SERVICE.

Conducted at St. Mary's Church Last Night by Rev. Father Smith, of Elizabeth.

Watchung Council, Knights of Columbus, attired in full regalia, and Division No. 4, A. O. H., attended a solemn vesper service at St. Mary's church parlor Sunday was addressed by Rev. Father Smith, of Holy Rosary church, Elizabeth, assisted by Rev. Father Charles Smith, of Westfield, as deacon, and Rev. Father Delehanty, of St. Mary's, as sub-deacon. The sermon was delivered by Rev. Father Corcoran, of St. Patrick's church, Elizabeth.

The service was an impressive one and was attended by many people beside the organization members. An augmented choir rendered vesper psalms and during the solemn benediction the congregation and choir of twenty-eight boys rendered benediction hymns.

WORK FOR LEGISLATURE

Senator Colby Sees Promise of Much Good in Bi-Partisan Law-Making Body.

HE SPEAKS ON SENATORSHIP

He Will Urge Formation of Legislative Reference Department—Favors Civil Service in New Jersey.

State Senator Everett Colby yesterday issued the following statement of what he believed would be the principal tasks for the New Jersey Legislature to carry out at the coming session:

"The composition of the next Legislature is such as to warrant the hope that much good legislation may be passed, and it undoubtedly will be, if partisanship does not play too conspicuous a part. If both parties claim that while he is not their ally and endeavor to discredit the motives of the other, a splendid opportunity to establish a high water mark for advanced and sound legislation will be lost to the people of the State. Barring results from the Legislature of 1907 due to partisan politics and petty jealousies would be a calamity the public would have every reason to resent, and it would, therefore, seem the part of wisdom for us, when we settle down to work, to remember that we represent the whole State, and not a party or faction.

The danger with the present complexion of the Legislature is not so much that good legislation will not pass as in the probability that what is passed will lack uniformity and consistency; and in this connection it would be well, I think, if greater pains were taken to draw all bills along lines consistent with the general principles of government based upon accurate knowledge of the subject under discussion. Many of the bills we pass are drawn hastily, to meet political contingencies or by corporation attorneys for their clients, and not 1 per cent. of the bills are actually drawn by the members themselves.

Just at this time, when legislation of the most radical character is so often suggested as a remedy for this or that evil, it would seem unwise to advance measures that were not thoroughly understood by the members of the Legislature themselves, and for which no one could be held directly responsible by the people. To correct this tendency and place directly upon the representatives themselves the responsibility for legislation, I believe a "legislative reference department" should be created along the lines of the one in the State Capitol of Wisconsin. It is the duty of those in charge of the department to accumulate data on all public questions; so that, when the constituency of a representative requests him to introduce a bill, he does not have to get some friend or attorney, inexperienced perhaps in this particular line of work, to draft it for him, but goes directly to the reference bureau, finds the history of all such legislation, what the law on the subject is and has been and what its effect has been. Working out his own ideas in the provisions of the bill, it is, if he so desires, put into correct form by the bureau. Legislation is this way is drawn along sound lines and has some semblance of a scholarly and scientific basis. I shall try to get the Legislature to authorize the formation of such a department.

I shall seek also to have the Legislature pass the Civil Service bill, which places under Civil Service regulations all public officials in State, county and city, except those elected by the people, those appointed by the Governor with confirmation by the Senate, school superintendents and principals, election officers of cities and counties. This measure, to my mind, is most important as a companion bill to the direct primary, for while the convention lends itself readily to the manipulation of party bosses, the removal from politics will be a great step toward popular government; yet even the direct primary can be used by the leaders of reform movements, which experience has taught will remain politically immaterial for more than a few years, and who soon learn to make use of the very methods they condemned. The officeholder, being the first to feel the pressure of political influence should therefore be protected in the fulfillment of his duty by law.

There seems reason to believe that a bill providing for the expression of popular choice for the party candidate for United States Senator will pass this winter. There is probably no question before the people of the country which is meeting with such favorable response. As is well known, the House of Representatives have five times passed a resolution in favor of a change, and once the measure has been reported by a Senate committee. Thirty-one States have passed resolutions calling for the popular election of this branch of Congress. Of the thirty vacancies which will occur in the Senate of 1907 fifteen had in September last already been filled by methods similar to the one proposed in my bill of last winter. Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia has either a direct primary or a party rule for the nomination of Senators. Idahoe, South Dakota and Nebraska will have candidates nominated in conventions, while in New Jersey, Iowa, Washington and Maryland movements are being conducted in the interest of some law providing for a popular choice. So it would seem that within the next ten or fifteen years fully 50 per cent. of the Senators of the United States will be chosen by the people.

I shall stand also for the local assessment of the main stem property by railroads, the law which shall provide for the taxation of franchises at their value, and a lobby bill similar to that introduced last year. The law providing for the appointment of county tax boards will undoubtedly receive careful consideration and be amended to meet the defects that were found to exist.

WHEN'S A WAGON NOT A WAGON, EH?

CORPORATION COUNSEL MAY BE CALLED UPON TO TELL COUNCIL.

When Corporation Counsel Marsh's attention was called Monday to litigation in Montclair over lunch-wagons being classed as buildings, he declined to express any opinion. He said that he would prefer to express no opinion at this time inasmuch as there might be a possibility of a similar situation of affairs occurring here. "It would not be proper for me to give my views in this way, when there is any likelihood that the city may seek advice on the subject," said he.

Montclair's recorder held not long since that a lunch-wagon on private property, whether it was on wheels or not so long as it was in a permanent location, was a building. The case was argued on appeal in the Essex county court on Saturday and a decision will be given by Judge Ten-Eyck within a few days. The corporation counsel of Montclair in his argument contended that the wheels on the structure were only a subterfuge to defeat the building regulations and inasmuch as the vehicle was fitted up and used as a store or restaurant it should be classed as real estate. The object is have the "wagons" removed.

Building Inspector Doane said Monday that the outcome of the Montclair case would be of interest here. He added that he had never been called upon to act against the lunch wagons and that should he be summoned to act he would be guided by the advice of the corporation counsel. He thinks that there is much merit in the contention made by the Montclair authorities.

No Xmas Entertainment.

On account of the serious illness of Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck, the Christmas entertainment of the Sunday-school of Trinity Reformed church which was to have been held on Thursday night, December 27, has been given up. The exercises of the Primary and Junior departments which were planned for next Sunday night have also been abandoned. The regular Christmas service in the morning and evening with special music by the choir and orchestra will take place as usual. A sermon at the morning service and an address to the school at the evening service will be delivered by one of the city pastors. Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis has consented to take charge of the morning service.

In Dr. Schenck's Pulpit.

Rev. George B. Shaw, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, who occupied Rev. Dr. Cornelius Schenck's pulpit in Trinity Reformed church yesterday morning and evening, delivered two strong sermons. In the morning he dwelt on the subject of God making everything beautiful, the theme being suggested in Ecclesiastes 3-11. At the evening service Mr. Shaw delivered an equally interesting sermon on the conversion of St. Paul, as described in the twenty-second chapter of Acts and a part of the tenth verse, "What Shall I Do, Lord." His recital from memory of the Scriptures between Isaiah 52 and Acts 26, at both services, was both remarkable and effective.

Christmas Tree at "Home."

The Christmas committee of the Children's Home asks for the "tree," gifts for twenty-two children ranging from three to thirteen years—twelve girls and ten boys. Boots, shoes and rubbers are much needed. Many handkerchiefs, gloves and mittens, knee pants for the boys from four to eleven years, gingham and calling cards, books, toys and games suggest themselves to all lovers of children. Money or checks may be sent to Miss Serrell, 122 Plainfield avenue, or to Mrs. Horace Kimball, 326 Central avenue. All the articles will be gladly received at the home of Jackson and Westervelt avenues.

Frightened Thieves Away.

When the family of Louis H. Dubois, of 1104 Putnam avenue, returned home from New York Saturday night they found one of the lower windows forced and the trail of a burglar all over the lower floor. Nothing was missing, and it is supposed the crook was frightened off by the family's return. The police were notified.

Yet he loosens his pursestrings quite often—

IROQUOIS APPEAL HEARD

County Board Reserves Decision on Protested Valuation of Hotel.

PROPERTIES COMPARED

Hotel Man's Counsel Cites Assessments On Marsh and Codington Buildings to Show Alleged Discrimination.

The appeal of J. A. Staats, owner of the Hotel Iroquois, from the assessment on he property, was heard by the Union County Board of Taxation Monday morning. After listening to arguments by W. L. Hetfield, Jr., counsel for Mr. Staats, the board reserved decision.

For the purpose of showing how the property had been discriminated against, Mr. Hetfield made comparisons between it and nearby buildings. The Iroquois property is assessed at $35,000, of which $18,000 is placed on the building.

Mr. Hetfield argued that the building itself was erected fifty years ago, and is not up-to-date; and, further, that the income derived from it was not by any means 10 per cent. of the valuation.

In comparison, Mr. Hetfield cited the Marsh building and the Codington building. They were modern in construction, Mr. Hetfield pointed out, and neither of them had been valued in proportion to the Iroquois. Mr. Hetfield submitted the fact that Mr. Staats had only $8,500 insurance on the building, and that was all he could recover if it burned down.

Continuing, Mr. Hetfield cited previous assessments, which had reached $18,000. Of this, $5,000 had been taken off by the commissioners of appeal. Now the valuation had been more than double.

The Board asked Mr. Hetfield about the hotel stable. It was explained that the building was only a frame shed, covered with corrugated iron.

The Board made formal announcement that the appeal would be taken under advisement. The city's side of the case was submitted by Corporation Counsel Marsh last Monday. Mr. Marsh is the owner of one of the buildings cited in comparison by Mr. Hetfield. He stated to the Board, and repeated after the meeting, that the comparisons were not made for the purpose of intimating that the other properties should be advanced, but merely as the line of argument called for such. The Board decided for such comparison to show whereon the appellant based his claim for reduction.

TICKETS SELL RAPIDLY FOR THE CHARITY BALL.

Signs Point to a Great Rush in Business and Committee Is Elated.

Tickets for the charity ball and entertainment are selling rapidly and the prospects are that there will be a full house at the theatre and at the Casino on New Year's. Word was received today from her manager, that Miss May Irwin will bring the cast and scenery now on at the Bijou, where "Mrs. Wilson-Andrews" is doing an immense business. The committee is also elated over the way the tickets are selling.

Just as soon as the performance is over, the scene of the festivity will be transferred to the Casino, where the ball will be held. Austin's full orchestra will furnish the music. Already, Major Maze Edwards, the Casino's manager, is making plans for the decorations which promise to be unusually elaborate. The supper will be served at midnight.

The price of tickets is but $5, admitting the bearers to the theatre, the Casino and the dining halls.

The executive committee has made the request that returns for tickets be made as promptly as possible. By so doing matters will be greatly expedited in several ways, especially in the theatre end, as after December 22 the tickets for "Mrs. Wilson-Andrews" must go on sale as usual. The committee has made special arrangements for the carriage service, both at the theatre before and after the performance, and also at the Casino. Frank Hedden and a corps of men will exercise supervision and the former has a plan whereby ten four to six carriages can be taken care of at once.

Funeral of Justice Mosher.

The funeral of Justice Joseph Elias Mosher was held at the home of his son, William B. Mosher, of New street, Sunday afternoon. It was conducted by Rev. George B. Shaw, pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, assisted by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, and was largely attended. Interment was made in Hillside cemetery, the pall bearers being Edward Mosher, of Rutherford; Henry Mosher, Charles Dunham, Arthur Mosher, William B. Mosher and Joseph Hawkins.

Park Avenue Property Sold.

Mrs. Elizabeth A. Parse has sold to Jens Hanson, of Plainfield avenue, her plot of ground on the southside of Park avenue, adjoining Cedar brook, 250 feet frontage. Mr. Hanson intends building several houses on the tract. The deal was made through M. F. Gano.

PLANTING AND REAPING IN SPIRITUAL WORLD

DR. MORGAN TELLS OF THE STRONG LAW OF REPRODUCTION.

Speaking on the theme, "As Ye Sow," Rev. Dr. W. H. Morgan, of the Central Methodist church, Newark, told the audience at the Y. M. C. A. theatre service Sunday with dramatic emphasis, that the natural law that like produces like was as strong in the spiritual world as it was in the physical.

The men who said the law did not apply in the spiritual world, Dr. Morgan said, did not know what they were talking about. If there was any difference in the force of the application of that law in the two realms, he believed it was more supreme, more imperial, in the spiritual than in the physical world.

Pardon did not take away the results of sin, continued the speaker. "Whatsoever ye sow, that also shall ye reap," was always carried out. Pardon, to apply on oneself in a future life, came from the wide mercy of God, of His one great law went on just the same, and the consequences of seed-time were found at the harvest-time as inevitably in the spiritual world as in the physical world.

No young man should be allowed to sow wild oats, said Dr. Morgan. Wild oats could only bring a crop of wild oats. Evil deeds always brought evil results. The illness of the French Stage was the result of the immutable law. In the days of the Terror the people had sought to pluck God from His heaven, they had put a premium on atheism and unbelief. They had sown damnation and they reaped destruction, and were reaping it yet.

It was pleasant, the speaker said in closing, to turn to the other side of the shield. The law worked as inevitably for good as for evil. Sow kindness and receive kindness; sow justice and receive justice; sow brotherly love and receive brotherly love. "He that soweth for the spirit shall reap life everlasting."

The meeting was well attended considering the weather. E. H. Ackerman presided and the Crescent Avenue church choir sang.

MR. BURDICK TELLS OF FOREIGN LANDS

INFANTRYMAN ADDRESSES SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST MEN'S CLUB.

The first regular monthly meeting of the Men's Club of the Seventh-Day Baptist church held in the church parlor last night was addressed by Albert Burdick, regimental sergeant- major of the First U. S. Infantry, who gave an instructive talk on the soldier's life in foreign ports. He also referred to the life and customs of the people in Cuba at which he stopped on a trip from New York to Manila and back by way of San Francisco.

The first port at which Mr. Burdick landed was Gibraltar. In a comprehensive manner he explained the situation of the batteries and showed why it is such a superb fortification. In Malta Mr. Burdick visited the famous St. John's cathedral, which contains priceless tapestry woven of silver and golden threads in the sixteenth, fifteenth and some even as far back as the fourteenth century. Port Said, declared Mr. Burdick, far surpasses any city he has ever seen for its filthiness and wickedness.

Mr. Burdick described his journey to Aden and Colombo, where at the latter place he found cinnaman groves in profusion. The modern European tea houses, he said, were in strong contrast to the ancient and picturesque temples which strangers were forbidden to enter.

After a brief account of Singapore and Manila the speaker told of the novel way in which natives unload coal at Nagasaki, Japan. They form a line of men, boys and women, the other children, some of whom are not over five years old. Baskets of coal are sent from the ship down the line, passed from one to another, emptied at the foot, and the empty baskets sent back on the children's line. This, he said, is kept up night and day until the work is accomplished and it is surprising how short a time it takes. The most pleasing sight Mr. Burdick saw while on the trip, he said, was the Block fog that rolled him as they passed in at the Golden Gate at San Francisco.

After Mr. Burdick's talk progressive jack straws was played for a short time. Starr A. Burdick, president of the club, succeeded in winning the prize. Refreshments were served.

Bound Brook School Tax.

According to County School Superintendent H. C. Krebs, Bound Brook Borough raised $12.6¥ per each school child this year. As the total number of pupils is placed at 537, the total sum raised amounts to $6,500. In other tables it is shown that each person there pays .53 per $100 district school tax and that the amount received from the State this year for each pupil enrolled at the public school there will be $1.29.

BIG LAND BOOM HELD UP

few years employment would be given to thousands of men. In addition to taxes on the factories, a considerable sum would go to the State every year in the shape of taxes on the houses and other buildings which would necessarily have to be erected Communities would spring up as with them would come a prosperity of no mean proportion.

"Consequently, I argue," continued Mr. Fisk, "that it would redound to the benefit of the whole State to treat us fairly; it would mean something from nothing. For what the State would grant us now, ultimately it would get a thousand fold return. The possible receipts from riparian leases would be trifling in comparison with the taxes which would flow into its coffers from the new-born manufacturing district. New Jersey is becoming populous every day, yet there in its Hackensack meadows it has a waste land. This land can be reclaimed and put to substantial purpose, provided the State does only what is right and just by the men who are willing to develop it. We do not want any leaseholds for they would detract from the marketable quality of our property. A manufacturer will not locate where he will constantly be subjected to the necessity of bidding for renewal of his riparian lease. When such an agreement with the State should expire, he might find the more money is exacted for a renewal he will put up and go, or that another has put in a higher bid for such privileges. The factory owner wants to be secured from any such risks when he gets his deed to the property just as much as he to when he puts considerable into its development. I hope that the riparian board will look at the matter in this light and see its way clear to sell us what we must have and what we are willing to pay for—riparian rights to our own property."

Christmas Tree Entertainment.

Miss Sara Curry, of the Little Missionary Day Nursery, No. 92 St. Mark's place, New York city, gives 300 children their Christmas tree entertainment on Friday evening at the Seventh Street church, No. 22 East Seventh street, New York city. Friends of the work are all cordially invited. Miss Curry wishes to extend her thanks to the friends for their generous support in helping her to provide for 625 family Thanksgiving dinners. T. D. Bunn, of Westfield, was kindly provided the electric lights on the tree for the past three years, notified Miss Curry he would continue his service again this year.

Mrs. Waldo Richards Entertains.

Mrs. Waldo Richards, of Boston, appeared before a large assemblage of society people Saturday night at the home of Mrs. J. E. Corlies, of Central avenue, giving a number of her best recitations. Mrs. Richards is well-known in this work throughout the Oranges, Morristown and in Boston and she was given a flattering reception. Afterward Mrs. Corlies served refreshments.

CHARITY BALL DETAILS

Committees Hard at Work Preparing For the New Year's Night Social Function.

TICKETS NOW OUT

Theatrical Performance in Connection a New Feature-Several Others Promised.

Details are rapidly being completed for the annual charity ball to be held New Year's Eve and it is predicted that as a social function it will far exceed anything of the kind ever given in Plainfield. In connection with the ball to be held at the Casino it has been arranged to have May frwin appear at the New Plainfield theatre in "Mrs. Wilson Andrews," one of the season's greatest successes.

While the charity balls in past years have always been a success those in charge feel that they ought to give the people more for their money, hence the scheme for the theatre performance. The tickets will cost $5 each and this will entitle the bearer to admission to the theatre performance, the ball and the supper with all the attendant privileges.

The appearance of May Irwin should result in a full house at the theatre. She has an exceptional company of twenty people, all of them among the best known of metropolitan stage folk. During the performance Miss Irwin sings four songs which have become famous. The first is "Cherry," the second "Honora Doolin," the third "Moses Andrews Jackson," and the fourth "Moonshine."

Arrangements have been completed for the perfect handling of carriages at the theatre and the Casino. Frank Bedden will be in charge.

At the Casino there will be two orchestras under the direction of Austin, and in addition there will be the Eureka Trio, which will furnish vocal and instrumental music during the serving of supper. The supper will be served in the basement of the Casino, the bowling alleys being cleared to provide for numerous small tables. Local florists will decorate the Casino. Mrs. Lena Heistrom will be the caterer. The committee has arranged for a novel method of ushering in the New Year which does not ready to explain at present. The committee on tickets worked until a late hour Wednesday night in sending them out.

The executive committee, comprising the chairmen of all the other committees, is as follows: Dr. F. C. Ard, chairman; William C. Kinney, Thos. R. Van Boskerck, Harry L. Hall and Lewis G. Timpson.

The other committees follow: Finance—Wm. C. Kinney, chairman; Charles J. Fisk, Howard W. Beebe, Lewis E. Waring, George A. Beaton. Ball committees—Lewis G. Timpson, chairman; Evans Tracy, W. Bruce, W. B. Fisher, Orville H. Fleming, A. B. Laing. Theatre—Harry L. Hall, chairman; William J. Counihan and Thomas M. Muir. Supper—Thomas R. VanBoskerck, chairman; Joseph M. Shellabarger, Howard Huntington, George T. Vanderkerck.

Dancing will be started at the Casino at the usual hour and those not wishing to attend the performance at the theatre can await them-selves at it. Supper will be served during the entire evening.

WOMEN'S RELIEF CORPS ELECT.

Officers for the Ensuing Year Chosen Last Night.

Winfield Scott Relief Corps, No. 10, auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., elected these officers Friday for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. John Manley; senior vice president, Miss Virginia De-Vise; junior vice president, Mrs. Andrew Cox; treasurer, Mrs. Caspar Bokstedt; chaplain, Miss May E. Howlett; conductor, Mrs. Sadie Baglin; guard, Mrs. John Naylor; delegate at large, Mrs. Frederick Wensel; first delegate, Miss May Smith; second delegate, Miss May E. Howlett; alternate delegate at large, Mrs. Mattie Gibbon; first alternate, Mrs. John Naylor; second alternate, Mrs. Irving Cubberly. The appointed officers will be announced at the joint installation with the Post officers on January 8.

It was announced last night that the profits from the New England supper amounted to $20.77 and this will be given to Post No. 73, G. A. R., for whose benefit the supper was arranged.

Three Recitals.

Miss Carolyn Beebe and Edward Dethier, of New York, will give three sonata recitals in Plainfield this winter. The first one will be at the home of Mrs. John B. Dumont, Wednesday afternoon, January 2, the second on Wednesday morning, January 16, at the home of Mrs. George P. Mellick and the third one will be at the home of Mrs. Albert H. Atterbury near the end of January.

Former Plainfielder's Success.

The Rockville (Conn.) Journal, of which Charles Greer, formerly of Plainfield is the editor, appears this week in holiday attire. The paper is well edited, up-to-date and is a credit to the editor.

THEIR OWN HOME THE SCENE OF WEDDING

MISS ADELAIDE CARNEY BECOMES THE BRIDE OF ARTHUR AUSTIN.

In the home her fiance had built and furnished, at 817 West Sixth street, Miss Adelaide Carney was married to Arthur Vermeule Austin, Wednesday, Rev. Dr. C. W. Parsons, of Grace M. E. church, pastor of the bride, performed the ceremony in the presence of 150 guests.

The house was charmingly decorated with cut flowers and palms, pink and white predominating in the color scheme. In the parlor, where the ceremony was performed, the floral effect was particularly pretty.

Dr. Parsons, like the words of union at 8:30 o'clock. The bridal party, which included ushers, flower girl and page, entered into the room to a wedding march played by Alfred Theime, of New York.

Miss Carney was attended by Miss Tina Voehl, as maid-of-honor. The best man was William Ford, of New York. Frank Merrill and Benjamin Schuck were the ushers. The page was Elsworth Runyon, and the flower girl was Lucille Fritts.

The bride's gown was white crepe de chine de Meteo, trimmed with Irish baby lace. She wore a veil, caught up with a spray of orange blossoms, and a diamond brooch, the gift of the bridegroom. The maid-of-honor was gowned in crepe de sole, trimmed with satin ribbon and baby lace. The bride carried white roses and the maid-of-honor pink ones. The flower girl was dressed in white point d'esprit over taffeta. The page wore a black velvet suit, with a collar of Irish lace.

The bridegroom's gifts to the best man and the ushers were the conventional scarf pins. The bride gave her maid-of-honor a stickpin; the flower girl and page received signet rings. The bride received an unusually large number of gifts.

A reception followed the ceremony, and a supper was served by a caterer. Mr. and Mrs. Austin started on a short honeymoon trip last night.

Mrs. Austin is the daughter of Mrs. Eliza Carney and the late John H. Carney. She has been a prominent worker in Grace M. E. church for several years. Mr. Austin has lived here practically all his life. He is employed by a big New York commercial house.

"THE PEOPLE'S LOBBY" ORGANIZED IN NEWARK.

Plainfielders on Board of Governors to Influence Legislation.

Former Assemblyman Robert J. Fordyce has been elected president of "The People's Lobby," a non-partisan organization formed in Newark, which Walter Lindsay, of the borough, was chosen as the Somerset county representative on the board of governors and eGorge Merwin, of this city, as one of the representatives from Union county.

Fordyce says: "The People's Lobby," is to use its efforts and influence for the passage of such legislation as will benefit the State and to discourage all legislations considered a detriment. "The People's Lobby" will be represented throughout the session of the Legislature by persons well acquainted with affairs at Trenton. Last night's meeting was attended by about sixty representative men from the Northern part of New Jersey.

A HISTORY CORPORATION.

Plainfielder an Incorporator in New Historical Society.

Bernard A. Devine, of West Eighth street and Grant avenue, is one of the incorporators of the National Historical and Biographical Society, incorporated yesterday in New York, "to perpetuate history of the United States and the memory of the men who have assisted in the establishment and preservation of its great interests; to advance historic research and to sustain interest in the perpetuation of many historic events, men, places and scenes in Colonial and Revolutionary periods of the country."

The other incorporators are Edmund R. Luce, Bloomfield; Frank J. Barthels, Montclair; Mrs. Lucretie V. Jenkins and Sarah O. Lund, of New York City.

Court Plainfield Election.

Court Plainfield, No. 1144, I. O. F., elected the following officers for the ensuing year at last night's meeting: Court deputy, Charles J. McCarthy; court physicians, Dr. H. H. Lowrie, Dr. A. Mackenzie and Dr. C. A. Geeswein; junior past chief ranger, Louis Feiring; chief ranger, James T. McCarthy; vice chief ranger, Henry Hansen; recording secretary, James Patterson; financial secretary, F. Wilbert; treasurer, Edward J. McCue; orator, J. E. Elliott; senior woodward, Henry Kearns; junior woodward, Alfred Gudgeon; senior beadle, Kalmon Rottberg; junior beadle, Thomas Fitzgerald; trustees, Louis Feiring and Dr. H. H. Lowrie; finance committee, J. E. Elliott and Henry Hansen; court organizer, Edward J. McCue. Following the election a smoker was enjoyed, during which vocal selections were rendered by Thomas Roddy, Peter Galbraith and Frank Reinhardt.

LITERARY.

The Popular Science Monthly for December contains the following articles: "The Bogsiolds," by President David Starr Jordan and George Archibald Clark; "The Development of the Telephone Service," by Fred DeLand; "The Jews: A Study of Race and Environment," by Dr. Maurice Fishberg; "Physical Degeneracy or Race Suicide," by Sidney Webb; "Waterway Defences of the Atlantic Coast," by William J. Roe; "The Simplification of French Spelling," by Professor Brander Matthews; "The Value of Science," by Professor H. Poincare; "Vesuvius in the Early Middle Ages," by Dr. Charles R. Eastman; "The New Engineering Building of the University of Pennsylvania," by Julien Gordon (Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger) contributes the leading story to the January Smart Set, and the year 1907 begins auspiciously for that brilliant periodical. Mrs. Cruger calls her novelette "Broken Statues," and in her piece of work has come from her pen. She knows the world thoroughly, and her people are real human beings. The greater part of the scenes are laid on shipboard, and the author finds opportunity to enrich her story with many touches of exquisite humor. Few writers of the day have such a wide audience as Jack London, and in his story, "When God Laughs," in this number of The Smart Set, he tells why. It is perhaps his most powerful tale. The story is remarkable in many ways.

Recreation for December—The second instalment of Ernest Russell's forceful series, "The Sons of the Setters," running in this well edited magazine, is a remarkably good essay on the genesis of the prioneer spirit. Mr. Russell ably delineates how the Yankee and pioneer "built upon piles of their own driving," to quote Thoreau, and succeeds admirably in convincing the reader that the poverty of the settlers had its compensations, both in their own lives and in shaping the national character. "The Christmas Dance at Jimmy Friday's," by Sid Howard, a story of the lumber woods, is sure to touch the heart of every one possessed of the Santa Claus spirit. In "Dutch Corners Store," by Roscoe Bermbaugh, a reliable writer tells in a quaintly humorous manner the story of a smash-up at a love-feast, which is an event in a little Pennsylvania community.

The beautiful cover of the December Good Housekeeping, in red, gold, yellow and blue, by Cuhman Parker, strikes the keynote of the richness and warmth of the contents within and Christmas warmth and sympathy, from the frontpiece in colors by Blanche Ostertag, and opening poem, In the Children's Room, by Arthur Stringer, with its colored drawings by Oliver Herford, belated to the Christmas festivities, gifts, dinners and candies at the close. A novel feature is the story with photographs, of "The Mistletoe Bough," the old English poem. A little Christmas Service for the family circle, by Mary Lindsay, (words and music), is contributed by Florence Morse Kingsley, the novelist. A series of drawings in color, by Maud Tousey, portray us Americans "As We Celebrate" the supreme holiday of the year. Isabel McCulloch-Williams writes interestingly, and with the aid of photographs, of "Tea Rooms as Conducted in New York," and Miss Claire M. Coburn of "The Art of the Silversmith," charming pictures showing arts and crafts silver.

Within are short and interesting extracts from articles appearing in the various issues of the Popular Mechanical World Magazine. They are especially prepared for the use of Literary and Exchange Editors. We shall be glad to grant permission to reprint entire articles, with illustrations, should any paper care to do so. We shall thank you for calling this offer to the attention of your Sunday editor. Please send a marked copy of your paper containing anything from The Technical World Magazine to the Sunday Editor, Chicago, Ill. When not marked copies or clippings are sent us, we shall assume that an exchange with The Technical World Magazine is no longer desired.

Revival Services Successful.

The series of two weeks' revival services in the Reformed and Methodist churches at Raritan will come to a close Sunday evening, when Rev. Dr. William H. Morgan, of Newark, will preach the sermon. His brother, Rev. John W. Morgan, also of Newark, has been conducting the services and has had much success in winning souls. Last night the upper south room, people and older ones as well have confessed their faith and it is expected that before the services are completed fully as many more will go to the altar. After meetings are being held every night this week. Last week Rev. Dr. Morgan and his brother were in Somerville and Raritan for a month over 100 people were converted.

Miss Katherine Hartshorne, of Freehold, has been visiting Miss Sophia Barlow, of Prospect place.

George F. Odlorne, of Madison avenue, who has been detained at home by illness, is much improved.

William R. Codington, of the law firm of Codington & Swackhamer, is detained at his home on Sandford avenue by illness.

Mrs. Caperton, of Fire Creek, W. Va., who recently came north with her daughter, is visiting her parents, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Chambliss, of Central avenue.

COLBY ON LIQUOR LAW

State Senator Says High License is the Most Effective Remedy at Hand.

REVIEWS LEGISLATION

Prohibition Is a Failure In His Opinion—Advocate Strict Supervision by the State.

In an address made at the anniversary exercises of a Newark hospital, Friday, State Senator Everett Colby advocated high license and spoke on the liquor question generally:

"It is clear to my mind that the abuse of alcohol has become a public evil, and, therefore, subject to State regulation and supervision through the exercise of the police power. But what is the remedy at law? That the State has a right to enforce laws which regulate any traffic that is detrimental to the community, goes without saying, and this is not denied by those who oppose excise legislation.

"All manner of legislation has been tried in this country, dating back to 1641, and from a study of the different classes of legislation I am convinced that State supervision, with high license and closing on Sunday, is most useful. Absolute prohibition has been a failure. Out of seventeen States that have tried prohibition only four retain the law on the statute book, and of those only one makes any pretense of enforcing it. Restriction and control seem, therefore, to be the only means of dealing with the question.

"In my opinion, however, no successful legislation will ever be enacted until we stop looking on the problem as an issue by itself, disconnected and disassociated from the other problems of society. It should be made but one phase of a movement toward legislation to remove, as far as possible, the causes which are found in our social order, and in the conditions under which we live.

"If the facts prove that the liquor traffic is a public evil, frame legislation that experience has proven to be best to restrict and control it, and then enforce the law; but at the same time be careful that all legislation is such that those who obey a repressive statute have promise that obedience means equality under other laws that grant freedom and opportunity.

"To repress one class that the property of another class may be enhanced in value, is un-American. If child labor laws tend to encouragement among the poor to obey the law or restraint when they feel that in the increased wealth, order and decency which they may come to the community as a result of its enforcement they too will share in a fair interest. Every special privilege that is granted by State or municipality makes excise legislation an absurdity, while the President's policy, demanding absolute equality before the law, makes possible its enforcement.

"But whatever legislation is passed, you will not eradicate the evil effects of drink any more speedily than you will the evils of corporate greed. Both are diminished in proportion to the degree with which the laws are enforced and the progress made in removing the cause. Enforce the liquor law to the limit, but make an equal effort to abolish special privilege and exemption; to abolish hours of labor; to enforce child labor laws and place fair liabilities on employers.

"When this is done, when you are working with equal enthusiasm for those upon whom fall the more heavily the burdens of unrepresented, then you need not feel ashamed of your opinion or fear to enforce the law."

ANOTHER AFTERNOON TRAIN FROM TRENTON.

Reading's Service Bettered by Addition of a 4:50 Express Due Here at 5:40.

J. B. Betts, of North Plainfield, who is assistant to State Superintendent of Schools C. L. Heisler, at Trenton, has been successful in his efforts to secure better train service between Trenton and Plainfield. When a change was made in the timetable a few weeks ago, the Reading Railroad company took off the stops of several fast trains at Trenton Junction and it was impossible to get in or out of the capitol city between the hours of 2 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. Betts interested himself in the matter at once. He drafted a petition which was signed by every lawyer in Plainfield, asking for relief. As a result the Reading re-arranged its time-table and there is now a fast train which leaves Trenton at 4:50 in the afternoon, reaching Plainfield at 5:40. It is still impossible to reach Trenton from Plainfield in the afternoon between the hours mentioned.

Edward B. Maynard, of North avenue, is detained at home by illness.

Peter Wright, formerly of Plainfield, but now of New York, has been visiting friends here.

William LaRue, of East Second street, has entirely recovered from an attack of appendicitis.

Mrs. A. D. Edgar, of East Front street, has been detained at home during the past week by illness.

FIRST MEET OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL A. A.

COMMITTEE ARRANGES FOR FOUR CLASSES; OTHER DETAILS OF PLAN.

Plans are rapidly taking shape for the first meet of the Sunday-school athletic league. It will be held at the Y. M. C. A. January 18 has been tentatively fixed as the date by the temporary meet committee in charge of the arrangements. This date may be changed, but the meet will be held some night in the same week. Handsome prizes will be hung up. There will be an attractive trophy, to go to the school scoring the most points. The usual individual prizes will be offered.

Entrants will be divided into four classes, as follows: Juniors, up to 95 pounds; boys, up to 105 pounds; intermediates, up to 120 pounds; seniors, 121 pounds and over. Large lists will probably be turned in.

There will probably be three events in each class. The temporary committee in charge is made up of G. L. Lutman, John McClymont and H. W. Barrows.

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF ENDEAVOR SOCIETY.

Celebration of An Interesting Character at Seventh-Day Baptist Church.

The fifteenth anniversary of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church was held Saturday Christian Endeavor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church was held Saturday evening, when the members of the society, had charge of the services. Reports of the junior, intermediate and senior societies were read by the recording secretary, Miss Marie Rogers. The seniors reported an increase of five new members in the last year, making now a total of 105, including both active and honorary. Miss Mildred Green, superintendent of the intermediate society, reported that during the past year they have carried on their work with marked success. The report submitted by Miss Ida L. Spicer, superintendent of the junior society, showed that two of their members have been baptised and joined the church.

The Rev. W. W. Casselberry, of Dunellen, made an address. He took for his text a part of the third verse of the second chapter of Paul's first letter to Timothy: "As a good soldier of Jesus Christ." He showed that the qualities which characterize a good soldier in this world are also true of a good soldier of the cross. He compared them, saying they are strong; are volunteers; have stability and reliability, enthusiasm and endurance, and are watchful. He said that if every member of the society would acquire these qualities they would soon accomplish even better results than that for which they are striving, and be true soldiers of the Lord.

Stuffed Rabbit.

Skin and clean a good rabbit; wash and dry it thoroughly. To make the stuffing, put two ounces of oatmeal or breadcrumbs into a basin; add plenty of salt and pepper, a teaspoonful of finely chopped parsley and one of chopped onion, three ounces of butter; mix well together, gather in a lump and place in the rabbit; the nsew up and truss it firmly, with the head between the shoulders and the feet tucked close to the sides. Melt one tablespoonful of butter in a pan; when hot, put in the rabbit; brown it well, turning it frequently. Add one cup of boiling water, one carrot, two small onions, a blade of mace, salt and pepper. Stew slowly till cooked. Put the rabbit on a hot dish; strain a small quantity of the gravy over the rabbit. Send the rest to the table in a tureen.

Jerusalem Chapter Elects.

Jerusalem Chapter, No. 24, R. A. M., at a regular convocation, last night, elected these officers for the ensuing year: High priest, Albert Pangborn; king, J. Hervey Doane; scribe, Alonzo F. Brokaw; treasurer, Henry Leffler; secretary, Garret T. Dunham; captain of the host, Stephen B. Joseph; principal sojourner, Ephraim Vail; royal arch captain, Edward Nelson; representative to Masonic Hall Association, Henry Woodland; trustees, W. W. Covington, B. Frank Coriell and C. H. Rugg. The installation will take place on Thursday night, December 27.

Let There Be Light.

The installation of two arc gas lamps in front of John Johnston's store in the Babcock building, lights up a particularly dark spot at night and is a great improvement. If two similar lamps could be located in front of the postoffice it would be a decided convenience to patrons of the office, it is said. The corner of Madison avenue and Front street has never been well lighted at night.

Belated Wedding Announcement.

Announcement has just been made of the marriage on November 21 of Sergeant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Sergeant, of East Second street, and Hugh B. Paterson, of Albany, N. Y. The ceremony was performed at the parsonage of Trinity church, Elizabeth, on June 24, by Rev. J. P. Atkinson. The witnesses were Thomas J. Burns and Miss Ethel L. Gulberg. The young couple kept the matter a secret until yesterday, when they made it known. They are making their home in this city.

SCOTCH PLAINS WELCOMES GOLD MEDAL MINSTRELS

LOCAL BLACKFACE TROUPE AGAIN PLAYS TO CROWDED HOUSE.

Scotch Plains and the surrounding countryside turned out in full force again Wednesday for the annual appearance of Muir's Gold Medal Minstrel troupe at Excelsior hall. The show provided by the Plainfield company has become an expected event in the village each season and a capacity crowd is always in attendance to greet it. The local contingent was added to by a large number from Plainfield, last night, and the result was the putting out of the S. R. O. sign.

The show was the best the Gold Medals have yet given at the Plains and the audience was convulsed with laughter all through the programme and after a statement of the situation by Mr. Fisk, two committees, consisting of five members each, one to draft a plan and arrange for incorporation of a club and the other to secure subscriptions, were appointed. The committees will meet at the Casino, Wednesday night, December 19, to report, and another general meeting of those interested will be held soon after the holidays to undertake the work of organization at once.

The sentiment expressed by the majority of those present last night was that Plainfield needs an up-to-date club for men, where all the privileges of such an organization can be enjoyed as in any one of the numerous New York organizations.

Alexander Gilbert was one of the first to approve the plan to form such a club and he offered to give $1,000 of twenty to give $1,000 to secure the property. The idea is to purchase the property and then allow others to become members by paying the annual dues.

While a number agreed with Mr. Gilbert there were others who desired that bonds be issued in the denomination of $100 or $200, it being argued that not many could afford $1,000. C. A. Marsh expressed the opinion that it would be well to make the bonds of $500 denomination, he being willing to take one at that figure. Information furnished to Mr. Fisk by Major Maze Edwards, it was shown that the receipts at the Casino during the past year were more than sufficient to keep up the place and it was agreed that if it was so desired, these receipts could be increased.

Mr. Fisk mentioned the various clubs and organizations which have been meeting at the Casino. These include the Monday Afternoon Club, the Hartridge School gymnasium, Mrs. Davenport's dancing class, Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital, members of the Plainfield club car, Plainfield Riding and Driving Club, Oshkosh Club, Plainfield Operatic Club, Watchung Hunt Club. In addition, there are numerous bowling clubs and the Casino is frequently used for concerts and for general meeting place. If a club is formed, such as outlined last night, it might be impossible for all of these clubs to meet there. Some satisfactory arrangements, however, might be made whereby they could.

Mr. Gilbert suggested that a committee be appointed for the purpose of deciding what kind of a club to have and to arrange for incorporation. Then the subscription committees could go ahead and do its work, having some definite plan to present.

A lengthy telegram was received at the meeting from George A. Beaton, who is in Washington. He deplored the possibility of tearing down the Casino and clubhouse and offered to be one of two or more to take the property over and form a club.

It was suggested by Mr. Fisk that the name of the new club, if formed, be called the Watchung Club, and the idea was generally thought to be an excellent one.

The committee to draft by-laws and a plan for organization, together with the details of incorporation, as appointed by Mr. Fisk is as follows: Joseph M. Shellabarger, C. H. Darsh, William T. Kaufman, Lewis E. Waring and George S. Ring. Mr. Fisk also appointed the following subscription committee: George A. Beaton, H. G. Runkle, Jabez C. Gilbert, Charles J. Fisk and William C. Kinney.

The mortgage on the property is held by the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York, and Mr. Fisk stated that since he had been in control, the mortgage had been reduced to $42,500 and that the matter of transfer the property from Mr. Fisk to a new organization were discussed and will be taken into consideration by the committee before its report is presented.

The Casino and clubhouse property is in excellent condition, yet the expenditure of some money would be needed to make it the home of such a club as proposed.

The following persons were present at last Wednesday's meeting: Charles J. Fisk, Craig A. Marsh, Alexander Gilbert, Jabez Gilbert, Charles F. Abbott, E. E. Runyon, F. L. C. Martin, Daniel Runkle, John T. Baker, Benjamin Wood, James Dodd, George Schoonmaker, George S. Ring, W. deLa R. Anderson, Edward M. VanBuren, Col. C. B. Bellowes, H. Coombe, J. W. Reinhart, W. C. Kinney, Dr. F. C. Ard, Harry Lovell and Boardman Tyler.

NEW MEN'S CLUB PLANNED

The Project Fully Discussed at Meeting of Prominent Citizens Last Night.

COMMITTEES APPOINTED

Promoters Will Incorporate and Probably Take Over the Casino Property As a Permanent Home.

That Plainfield is to have a first-class men's club is practically assured and the Casino will undoubtedly be its home. In answer to invitations sent out by Charles J. Fisk, who controls the property at Arlington avenue and Seventh street, a large number of prominent citizens gathered at the Casino Wednesday and after a statement of the situation by Mr. Fisk, two committees, consisting of five members each, one to draft a plan and arrange for incorporation of a club and the other to secure subscriptions, were appointed. The committees will meet at the Casino, Wednesday night, December 19, to report, and another general meeting of those interested will be held soon after the holidays to undertake the work of organization at once.

Another Arrest.

Another arrest was made Wednesday by Officer Hoffman, when he took into custody Frank Hall, of Somerville, who was charged with intoxication. Hall was arraigned before Recorder Runk and was fined $5 and costs.

"Can't you see?" he said. "We've found a fit in the north there is. We'll have to go south!"

Merely stopping long enough to eat another dog, the party started in the general direction of the South Pole.—Chicago Record Herald.

FIRE DESTROYS HOME OF GEO. WOOD'S GRANDMOTHER

House in Coontown Figured Conspicuously in Murder Trial Two Years Ago.

MAN'S NARROW ESCAPE

Leonard Marks Saves His Life by Jumping from Second Story Window—Mrs. Pollock Away.

Fire destroyed the Mrs. Sarah Pollock homestead, located on the road between Warrenville and Mt. Horeb, between 1 and 2 Friday morning, and Leonard Marks, an old man employed on the place as a woodchopper, just escaped with his life by jumping out of the second-story window. The homestead was completely destroyed, the loss being about $2,000. Neighbors were aroused by the big blaze, but by the time they reached the scene there was no hope of saving the structure.

The homestead was owned by Mrs. Sarah Pollock, grandmother of Geo. Wood, who killed George Williams, the Watchung grocer. She was not at home at the time of the fire, being called to Woodbridge by the serious illness of her brother. She was notified this morning by telegraph of the disaster.

As far as can be learned the fire started in the kitchen from a defective chimney. That part of the old house had probably been burning a half hour, when Marks was awakened by the smoke which had penetrated a room overhead, where he was sleeping. A hurried investigation on his part disclosed the fact that the whole rear of the dwelling was in a blaze. Marks attempted to leave the house by a back stairs, but when he opened the door he found the passageway shut off by smoke and flames. He then made his way to a window and jumped out, landing safely on the ground, a distance of fifteen or twenty feet.

By this time the whole house was in flames and within an hour was reduced to ashes. The greatest loss to Marks is that of his winter supplies, including wollen vegetables of all kinds and pork which he had stored away. Mr. Pollock owned three houses in the vicinity and she allowed Marks to occupy the homestead for the care and keeping. The neighbors are now interesting themselves in his behalf and will render him substantial assistance.

Death of J. Lowenstein.

The sudden death of J. Lowenstein, formerly connected with the Grossmann School on Watchung, occurred at White Plains last week. Last year he founded a school at White Plains for nervous children, and it was very successful. His wife and daughter were preparing to join him, when death intervened. A few days before his death he visited Mrs. John Koch, of Berckman street, and the Drs. Moldenke at Watchung. Mr. Lowenstein was an earnest and indefatigable worker in a field of broad learning and a true philanthropist. The funeral services were held at White Plains on Monday, December 1. Those who attended from here were Dr. M. P. Grossmann, Waldemar H. Grossmann, Dr. and Mrs. Richard Moldenke, Dr. and Mrs. Carl Moldenke and Mrs. Koch.

Mulford Agency Sales.

Real estate affairs here still continue active as is evidenced by the following changes made through the Mulford agency of North avenue: William H. Stevens has purchased E. S. F. Randolph's new house corner of Evergreen and Edgewood avenues, and has taken possession. Bertha Hochberger, of East Fifth street, has purchased 35 and 353 East Third street, also 306 and 308 Monroe avenue. Mr. Mitchell o, Jersey City, has purchased of Chamberlain & Hance a new house on Watchung avenues near Woodland and will soon take possession. William H. Abbott has purchased a lot on Madison avenue near Ninth street of T. J. Mumford, and has commenced to erect a house which will be ready for the market next spring. Clifford D. Manning and John F. McIntyre have purchased a tract of land from Isaac W. Rushmore, corner of Grant avenue and Eighth street, adjoining Mr. Burrows', and will erect this winter two handsome houses on some, having every modern improvement and will be ready for the market next spring. William T. Kaufman has purchased of A. O. Negley thirty feet adjoining his property and will make extensive improvements to his dwelling and stable. David Nash has rented the Gardner house, corner of Grove street and Linden avenue. Paul W. Eller, of New York, has rented John Rafferty's house, 419 Grant avenue. W. A. Carlisle, of New York, has rented 41 Mountain avenue.

REVOLT IS STARTED TO OUST J. H. FIRTH

MOVEMENT TO MAKE HIM WITHDRAW AS CAUCUS NOMINEE FOR SPEAKER.

Several Hudson county, N. J., Democrats who are not interested in the factional quarrel between Robert Davis and former Senator James Smith, but who have the interest of the party at heart, have started a movement having for its purpose the withdrawal of Assemblyman Joseph H. Firth from the Speakership contest.

Democrats throughout the State will be asked to lend their aid to the movement, and it is the intention to hold a series of meetings in Passaic, Essex and other counties to protest against the selection of the Warren county Assemblyman.

When Hudson county Democrats, especially the members of Assembly, read inthe papers yesterday that the man whom former Senator Smith forced on the Democratic caucus for Speaker had been fined $500 for keeping a disorderly house they were astounded. It was the universal opinion that Firth as Speaker would lose the Democratic party thousands of votes in the State and in the Gubernatorial contest next fall.

Several of the Hudson Assemblymen did not conceal their disgust, and the talk was that if Smith perists in the desire to make Firth Speaker, there will be trouble.

The opinion was expressed that if Senator Smith put the Warren man in the race, in the hope of causing a split, the members of the Essex delegation whom he controls would, in case Hudson bolted Firth, have an excuse for casting their votes for Dryden for Senator.

It was a similar situation that defeated Leon Abbett for Senator at the time Rufus Blodgett was chosen.

PROSPECTS FOR THE NEXT HORSE SHOW.

Waring Pleased Over the Outlook—Improving Grounds.

Lewis E. Waring, of West Seventh street, who recently returned from visiting several important horse shows, where he acted as one of the judges, has heard nothing but words of praise concerning the Plainfield Riding and Driving Club, and a majority of the exhibitors who have been here during the past two shows, have assured him that they will return next June.

The club has been making a big addition to the show at its show grounds at an expense of about $4,000. This will make it possible to accommodate seventy more horses. Last year the stable were not adequate to provide for the large number of entries and the club decided that an addition was an absolute necessity.

It is perhaps unfortunate that during the week of the show next year, there will be a big show in London, which will attract many American horses. However, the local club was unable to get a better date than the one already fixed and besides the officers have been assured of a majority of the entries received last year so that it will really not make a great difference. W. K. Vanderbilt promised to bring his horses here last year, but found at the last minute that it was impossible. Although C. W. Watson intends sending many of his best horses abroad he will probably be represented here.

The Plainfield show following as it does the one in Philadelphia makes it possible to secure a great many fine entries and now that exhibitors are better acquainted with local conditions they are more anxious than ever to come here each year.

HAND BELL RINGERS PLEASED.

Large Audience Greets the Quartette at Grace M. E. Entertainment.

The second of the series of entertainments planned by Grace M. E. church was given last night before a very large audience. It was furnished by the Criterion Hand Bell Ringers, who, in addition to playing a many unique instruments, provided a reader, Miss Florence Allwood, and a soprano soloist, Miss Evelyn Navilus. Both of the latter pleased with their numbers and were longly applauded. The musicians extracted harmony from bottles, bells, glasses and many other instruments, playing difficult selections on all of them.

The next and concluding entertainment will be given on January 22 and will be furnished by the Metropolitan Male Quartette.

Hunt Club May Return Here.

While it is a source of regret to some Plainfielders that the Watchung Hunt Club was obliged to go so far away from the city to find a club home, the proposition was really one of the best that could be made and was accepted. Charles D. Freeman, who owns the farm and farm-house used by the club, gives the club the use of the property for two years at the nominal rental of $1 a year. The farm-house has been remodelled and is in every way adapted for club purposes. It is thought that should a new club be formed at the Casino the Watchung Hunt Club may return here and enjoy its privileges.

LUSARDI ARRESTED ON A NEWARK CAPIAS

ISSUED IN A BREACH OF PROMISE SUIT FOR $10,000.

Antonio Lusardi, Jr., fruit dealer, was arrested on a capias warrant, Thursday, in a suit for $10,000 for breach of promise instituted against him by Ethel Emery, seventeen years old, of Newark, through her father, Watson Emery. He furnished $4,000 bail before Supreme Court Commissioner W. S. Angleman, and was released pending the trial.

The capias was issued by Judge Raymond, of the Newark District Court, as a supreme court commissioner. It was served by Deputy Sheriff Peter Weaver at Lusardi's house. Judge Raymond fixed the bond at $2,000 and Mr. Angleman, as directed by the law in such cases, doubled it.

Lusardi was not held at the station house long. Judge William Newcorn, his lawyer, had bondsmen on hand, soon after his arrest. Christian Gloekler and Alex. Lusardi are the bondsmen.

Watson Emery, the girl's father, recently secured a verdict for $3,000 for the alienation of his wife's affections from David Taylor, then a Lincoln hotel keeper. Mr. Emery has since returned to her husband.

JACK TOWNLEY ENDS 4 YEARS SERVICE IN NAVY.

Gets Honorable Discharge After Seeing Much of the World.

Jack Townley, brother of Captain William Townley, of the fire department, returned to his home here Wednesday morning, after a service of four years in Uncle Sam's Navy. He is in the best of health. During the past year he has been attached as a seaman on the Scorpion and has been located at San Domingo, where Uncle Sam has had trouble with the natives. His time was out on November 14, but owing to continued trouble he was held another month. He was honorably discharged at Boston on December 11. Tuesday afternoon he left Boston and arrived here Wednesday morning.

When Mr. Townley entered the navy four years ago he enlisted at Newport, where he remained on the training ship and served his time as an apprentice. He was afterwards assigned to the gunboat Castine and he made a long trip to South Africa. It was while on this trip that he was made a seaman. Little over a year ago he was transferred to the Scorpion where he remained until his discharge.

It was arranged that when President Roosevelt visit Panama the Scorpion should serve as a despatch boat, but the Presidents stay was so short that plans were changed. Mr. Townley is now given three months in which to decide whether he wants to go back to the navy or not. If he goes back he will receive pay for the three months just as though his service was continuous. Mr. Townley is twenty-one years of age and in the last four years has seen a great part of the world.

Rodman; warden, D. W. Littell, Jr.; sentry, Abram Devine; trustee, A. W. Kleinecke; representative to Grand Council, Armstrong Mulford; alternate, Robert H. Lowry.

Applications for membership received last night and two new members will be elected at the next meeting. The new officers will be installed at the meeting in January.

SNEAK THIEF WORKS QUIETLY IN THE NEW MADISON.

Gains Entrance to Mrs. Strader's Apartments and Gets Quantity of Her Jewelry.

In looking for some jewelry at her home in the New Madison Thursday, Mrs. A. K. Strader discovered that a sneak thief had been in the apartments and taken the greater part of a case filled with ornaments. Among the articles missed were two gold watches, a gold bracelet, a gold locket and an opal ring belonging to her daughter, Miss Madeline Strader, and also a sterling silver pocketbook and a silver watch. The robbery was evidently committed some time during the afternoon when no one was at home.

The matter was reported to the police, but as yet no clue to the thief has been discovered.

K. of C. Election.

Watchung Council, Knights of Columbus, has elected these officers for the ensuing year: Grand knight, Arthur A. Cannon; deputy grand knight, Michael D. O'Keefe; chancellor, Robert McCormack; financial secretary, John J. Hines; recording secretary, Richard Birmingham; warden, William Shaffer; inside guard, John Carty; outside guard, David Doyle; advocate, Francis J. Blatz; lecturer, Andrew E. Kenney; trustees, Patrick Traynor, John C. Traynor and John J. Kenney.

HOW HIGH BRIDGE WAS NAMED

AN INTERESTING HISSORY OF THE OLD CENTRAL RAILROAD BRIDGE.

High Bridge gets its name from the old Central Railroad bridge which spans the river just east of that town. The bridge is not now visible, having been buried more than forty years. The work of creating an embankment there, thus covering up the bridge, was a gigantic undertaking. The High Bridge Gazette has an interesting article on the old bridge, accompanied with a picture of the original structure. The Gazette says:

"When the survey of the Central Railroad was made it was found that it would be necessary to cross the valley of the South Branch of the Raritan river here at right angles. There was no way to avoid it, and while many plans were considered it was finally decided to construct an immense bridge across the valley, which was done.

"Silas Dillon has the contract for constructing the road from Somerville to Easton and the construction of this bridge was one of the worst problems he had to deal with, as it was necessarily slow work, and was a very tedious and hazardous undertaking. The workers were not easily discouraged, however, and in a few years the immense structure was completed. From the start it was known as 'the high bridge' and in a short time the name fell naturally on the town.

"Some idea of the size of this structure can be gathered from the fact that it was 1,300 feet, or very nearly a quarter of a mile long. When completed the top of the rail was 120 above the level of the water in the river. This of course was the highest point. The eight immense piers, which were constructed of cut stone, were imposing, as the ones nearest the river were nearly one hundred feet high. The bridge proper rested on these piers and was constructed of wood, with iron bolts and straps. This structure was twenty feet high. The cost of the entire bridge was $200,000.

"It was thought that this structure would last for a long time, but when the trains began running over it in 1852 it soon became apparent that something else would soon have to be done. Owing to the length of the bridge and the distance between the piers the bridge rolled like the waves of the ocean when a train passed over it. The engine would sag between the piers and rise again as it passed over a pier, making the bridge appear to be very unsafe.

"At first the building of a stone bridge was considered, but it was finally decided to fill the valley with an earthen embankment, building an arch for the stream and for the road to pass through. This work was begun in 1859, but did not get fairly under way for years. So it took over five years to do the work. The bridge, piers and all were buried by the dirt as it was dumped on them, and nothing was saved from the structure. It is estimated that $60,000 worth of iron was buried. The cost of filling in the valley was $500,000, the two arches alon gcosting $80,000. Sidney Dillon also had the contract for filling in the valley.

"The first steam shovels ever seen in this section were used in the work. One dug on the Hoffman farm, on one side of the railroad, and the other dug on the Fox farm on the other side. Whole fields were dug away and the immense holes they left are still visible. There were two "pony" engines to draw the loaded dirt cars from the shovels to the bridge, where they were dumped, after which they were returned to be filled again.

"Great trouble was experienced not only in constructing the bridge but also in filling in. It was not an unusual thing for one of the cars or the 'pony' engines taking a tumble. When the engines went over, a track had to be laid to get them up again.

"Several accidents are reported in connection with the structure. One very foggy morning a passenger train from Easton started to cross the bridge at about the same time that a freight train started from the other end. As there was practically only one track a collision was inevitable, and the two engines met in the middle of the bridge. Both trains were running very slowly an neither the engines nor the cars left the rails. William Rex, who died a few years ago at Junction, was the engineer of the freight train. He had a leg broken by the collision.

"While the bride was building an Irishman fell from the top of one of the piers, a distance of ninety feet, and landed on his head. His head was pushed into the hard ground to his shoulders, but he was not killed. In six weeks he was back at work again. One night in 1859 a man named Owen McGahran fell from the bridge and was killed, and another was caught on the bridge by one of the 'pony' engines and cut to pieces, but these were the only serious accidents reported."

DIED IN HIS BATHROOM NEW LAW MAKES COUNTY TAX BOARD THE ASSESSOR

Justice of the Peace J. P. Mosher Expired While Alone.

A MARRYING SQUIRE

He Had Been a Local Justice for Many Years—Borne in New Market Seventy-four Years Ago.

Though he had been ill for more than two weeks and his case was considered helpless, death came suddenly this morning to Joseph E. Mosher, for eighteen years a local justice of the peace and one of the city's best known residents. He had been ailing for a year or more with Bright's disease but it was only a short time ago that he gave up conducting business and took to his bed at the home of his son, William R. Mosher, of New street. Early this morning he was feeling unusually better and at 9:30, while no one was about, he got up to go to the bathroom. While there heart failure developed and he fell to the floor. The noise brought a member of the family to the room who found that life was extinct.

Mr. Mosher was born at New Market on June 23, 1832, but almost his entire life was spent in Plainfield. His father owned and lived for many years in a property on Exchange alley, in those days known as Mosher's alley. He was a tailor by trade and for twenty-two years was in the employ of Christian Scheptin, when his clothing factor on West Front street was one of the largest in New Jersey. In the latter years of his service, he delivered the unfinished garments to home workers as far as Whitehouse, collecting them afterward and shipping them back to Plainfield.

Eighteen years ago he opened a cigar store on North avenue, where Tinnick's restaurant is now located and soon afterward was elected justice of the peace. He continued to hold the office until the time of his death and from the outset was known familiarly to everyone as "Judge." He was of a genial, sunny disposition and his court was the principal one for petty cases for a long time. When he left North avenue, he located in the First National Bank bouilding but for the past few years his office has been in the Marsh building. He was known as a "marrying 'squire," having united many couples.

Mr. Mosher was a member of the Seventh-Day Baptist church and a regular attendant. He leaves two sons, Edward M. Mosher and William R. Mosher, both of Plainfield.

APPRECIATIVE AUDIENCE GREETS J. EDMUND SKIFF.

In Recital He Is Assisted by Miss Colton and Mrs. Greene.

It was an enthusiastic and appreciative audience that gathered last Thursday in the Y. M. C. A. Hall to listen to a recital given by Edmund Skiff, tenor, with the assistance of Miss Mae Jean Colt, reader, and Mrs. Cala Aarup Greene at the piano. Mr. Skiff has never been heard to better advantage than in the seventeen songs which he gave last evening. The programme which called for much resource and insight into the author's meaning, but Mr. Skiff adapted himself exceedingly well to the various changes and sang with feeling and expression.

The hits of the evening were the three songs of the last group entitled "Bliss," "An Explanation," compositions by Mrs. Greene, and Lohr's "A Little Irish Girl." The four Indian love lyrics, however, gave him more opportunity for show of dramatic art and expression.

Miss Colt was an exceedingly able assistant. She is a dainty little body, but an actress. She not only reads her lines well, but goes to the heart of her hearers. She is as attractive a reader as a Plainfield audience has heard in a long time.

To Mrs. Greene belongs great credit for her superb accompanying. She was a tower of strength as an assistant to Mr. Skiff in his songs. The evening was altogether a delightful one and the hall should have been filled to its capacity.

A. O. U. W. ELECTION.

R. W. Ellis New Chief of Central Lodge.

Central Lodge, No. 48, Ancient Order United Workmen, elected these officers last night for the ensuing year:

Past master workman, Theodore J. Mason; master workman, Robert W. Ellis; foreman, Wm. Newcorn; overseer, John Galbraith; guide, L. J. Spicer; inside watchman, Edward Mosher; outside watchman, W. H. Lunger; recorder, Harvey R. Thorn; financier, William Newcorn; receiver, Theodore J. Mason; trustees, three years, Clark T. Rogers; representative to Grand Lodge, William Newcorn, Theodore J. Mason; alternates, Harvey R. Thorn, L. J. Spicer; medical examiners, Dr. M. J. Whitford and Dr. W. J. Nelson. The officers will be installed on Thursday night, January 10, by Deputy E. A. Sherwood, of Newark. After the business last night the members enjoyed a smoker.

POOR MEMORIES NO HELP TO PANHANDLERS

BENTFORD AND MOORE WERE IDENTIFIED AND HAD TO PAY FINES.

When Robert Cook opened the door of his house on Crescent avenue early Thursday in response to the ringing of the bell, two men, one tall and thin and the other short and fat, pushed by him into the hall. The tall one asked for fifty cents. Mr. Cook didn't like the look of things, and handed over the fifty cents in a hurry to get rid of the pair. As soon as they were out of the house he telephoned to the police.

Patrolman Overbaugh went out after the pair. He had Mr. Cook's description of them, and when he saw Andrew Bentford, of Cottage place, who is tall and thin, and Robert Moore, one of Bentfords' recent ac*quaintances, who is rotund*, eating a sandwich on Seventh street, a block from the Cook house, his sleuthing instinct awoke. The sandwiches bespoke handout, and Overbaugh placed the pair under arrest on the chance that they were the Cook panhandlers. Bentford was drunk and Moore not far from it.

In court Friday they denied with much wealth of detail and circumstance that they had panhandled, or that they had been at Cook's house at all. The sandwiches, Moore assured Judge Runyon, were purchased at a lovely restaurant. They wouldn't even recognize the possibility of their having gone to Cook's house under the influence of a skate and subsequently losing recollection of the visit. They were positive they hadn't asked Mr. Cook for fifty cents.

"Well," said the magistrate pleasantly, "we will send for Mr. Cook. If he identifies you it will cost you each $5 to get away. If he doesn't, you may go for nothing."

Mr. Cook was telephoned to headquarters by telephone. While waiting for him, the police were kept busy shooing Mrs. Maggie Bentford, the aged and bent mother of Andrew, away from the station house.

Mr. Cook identified the prisoners without hesitation. Moore managed to get his fine from his wife, who works in town, and Bentford was given until Saturday to pay.

Y. M. C. A. DINNER PLANS.

Date in Doubt, Pending Choice of a Speaker.

Plans for the annual dinner and meeting of the Y. M. C. A. are progressing. The committee met last night and further steps toward the affair were taken.

The chief speaker has not yet been secured, and until he is the date will be held open. It is customary to allow the speaker to pick the date most agreeable to him. It is not unlikely that two speakers of prominence will be secured.

In addition to the speeches President Gavett's annual report will be heard at the dinner.

The dinner is to be more elaborate than usual. It will be served in the large hall, by Mrs. Henry Johnson, who catered last year. The subscription has been raised to $1, and lowater will flow freely.

The annual election will follow the dinner. Six directors are to be named.

REQUIEM HIGH MASS FOR P. E. CHURCH BISHOP.

Bishop Potter As Celebrant Assisted By Bp. Scarborough at Bp. Seymour's Funeral.

Many men of prominent in the financial district in New York left the noisy exchanges at 11 a. m. Thursday to attend the solemn and impressive funeral services for Bishop George F. Seymour in old Trinity church. For the second time in the history of the edifice the requiem high mass was celebrated there, the other occasion being the funeral of Bishop Horatio Potter. The celebrant of the requiem high mass yesterday was Bishop Henry C. Potter. He was assisted by the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, who read the lesson; Bishop Scarborough, of New Jersey, who read the epistle, and Bishop Whitehead, of Pittsburg, who read the gos*pel.*

Other prelates of the Protestant Episcopal church who were present in their vestments were Bishop Coadjutor Greer, of New York; Bishop Olmsted, who succeeds Bishop Seymour at Springfield, Ill.; Bishop Burgess, of Long Island; Bishop Lyons, of Newark; Bishop Darlington, of Harrisburg; Bishop Talbot, of Central Pennsylvania; Bishop Worthington, of Nebraska; Bishop Grisnold, of Kansas, and Bishop Vinton, of Western Massachusetts. Nearly all the rectors of Episcopal churches in New York were at the funeral, wearing their vestments, and with them were nearly two hundred of their assist*ants, clergymen from nearby cities.*

Death of Daniel J. Runyon.

Daniel J. Runyon, well-known to many of the older citizens as a former resident of Plainfield, died on Wednesday, December 5, at his home in Centre Moriches, L. I., aged sixty-one years. He was engaged in the drug business. Mr. Runyon was a son of the late Reuna Runyon and lived for many years at West Front street and Elmwood place.

So Says the Union County Board in Its Report to Governor Stokes.

THE WORK DIFFICULT

If Increases Had Not Been Made in Rate, Much Property Would Have Paid Less Actually Than a Year Ago.

The report of the Union County Board of Taxes to Governor Stokes made by the chairman, follows:

My Dear Sir:

At your request I send you herewith copy of the statement which I read to you October 23d, setting forth in part the work of the Union County Board of Taxation.

"We assume that you are interested in knowing something of the detail of the work of the board, and also, the methods by which it arrived at certain conclusions; together with the results of the first year's assessments in Union county.

"Where personal interests are so much involved throughout the community, as in the question of taxation, the execution of the new law must, of necessity, cause more or less friction.

"We found at the outset that the requirements under which thirty-thirty-eight assessors were acting was completely the basis upon which they were to arrive at values would be acompanied by misunderstandings. We know our work is likely to be criticised; but we are conscious of having tried to apply the law impartially and justly. We find, moreover, that we have the sympathy and forbearance of a large body of fair-minded men, who have expressed themselves as not expecting final results in the first year, but who believe strongly in the methods for which the new law stands, and we have had strong expressions to this effect from leading lawyers and real estate men in the county, irrespective of party.

"Our board had no previous year's books from which it could arrive at even comparative values, so was forced to examine thirty-eight books in seven weeks and fix a fair valuation for the county. It was necessary for the board to work day and night to reach the conclusions it has. Some of its methods may interest you.

"Finding that gas and water companies were assessed an under ground mains at different rates in the various localities, the board with the aid of an expert fixed a uniform rate and notified all assessors to conform to this rate.

"Again the question of value of many industrial plants received our attention. Local assessors found it difficult to get figures from the companies, and it was difficult to arrive at an intelligent conclusion. An expert, disinterested builder, was employed, and his conclusions were used in reaching figures.

"The total assessment for the county is $106,259,437. Last year's assessment was $55,260,709,—an increase of 92 per cent. over last year. What is the result to the taxpayer?

"There has not been time to give the new law a fair test, and besides the State School Tax has been increased over $10,000, and the county tax $46,000, besides which most of the municipalities have increased their budgets. These amounts were difficult to absorb in making up the rates and make the satisfactory showing we wished for. As it is, the rates are as follows, compared with last year:

"Clark township, $1.28, 78c; Cranford, $2.36, $1.37; Elizabeth, $2.86, $1.46; Fanwood township, $2.08, $1.52; Fanwood borough, $2.59, $1.59; Garwood borough, $2.42, $1.23; Linden township, $1.26, 65c; Linden borough, $1.92, $1.03; Mountainside borough, $1.36; New Providence borough, $2.24, $1.20; Plainfield, $2.48, $1.35; Rahway, $2.78, $2.12; Roselle borough, $2.52, $1.48; Roselle Park, $2.48, $1.17; Springfield township, $1.45; *Summit, $2.34; $1.64; Union town*ship, $1.60, $1.06; Westfield, $2.30, $1.78.

"If it had not been for the increases noted a large proportion of the taxpayers would have paid less actual taxes than last year; a fair proportion will not pay any more this year, and many pay less.

"Perhaps the framers of the law under which we are working did not realize it, but as a matter of fact, the board practically makes these county boards the assessors for the county. To review the assessors' books intelligently, the board has to have a comprehensive knowledge of values in all the districts; and this we have done to the best of our ability in the short time which has elapsed since our appointment.

"It seems to us that it would be wise to call together gentlemen interested in real estate together with the assessors in the different municipalities, and go over the land values with them, thus getting a concensus of opinion which will assist us in establishing a basis upon which the assessors work."

MAYOR-ELECT ADDRESSING COMMON COUNCIL SOUNDS KEYNOTE OF HIS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Fisk Tells Them They Represent No Faction and Must Have No Cliques.

OFFERS SUGGESTIONS

"Don't Let Us Have a 'Big Six,'" He Declares—Advises As to Some Needful Committees.

By an unanimous vote of the members, Mayor-elect Charles Joel Fisk appeared on the floor of the Common Council chamber to address that body Monday. In a very short space of time, Mr. Fisk outlined his policies as the chief executive during the coming year. He bluntly told the city fathers what he would expect from them and what they could expect from him. In addition, he offered several suggestions regarding needed committees in the Common Council. Mr. Fisk's remarks follow:

"I thank you for the courtesy extended to address you as members of the incoming Common Council. There are one or two things that come to me now and of which I would like to speak to you. No man is here to represent any particular faction. We have all been elected on the same ticket and are expected to represent the citizens of Plainfield. I trust that no petty jealousy will interfere with you in organizing for the city's best interests.

"There are certain committees of long standing, the finance, street and sewer, fire and building, lights and trees, alms and public affairs, all of which are important. The finance committee is to care for the licenses, and in the main its business is of short duration. I would suggest that that committee be consolidated with the police committee.

"I would also suggest that you straighten out our assessments and taxes which are far from being equalized. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction in this respect and I think that the matter should be thoroughly investigated. When we know that we are right, we can make others do right. The county and State boards of taxation are with us in this matter. They will join with us and help us in getting the right amount of county taxes.

"We don't want any society or the Plainfield Protective Association to come and tell us what we ought to do, and I would suggest that we have a committee to look into the assessment and tax matter which might be called a 'tax committee.' Another committee is needed. From time to time things are creeping into legislation affecting the various cities. The State committee does not allow special legislation, the laws being intended to affect all cities of the certain class alike. Some one with an axe to grind slips in a bill and later it 'pops' up and we find that we must act in accordance with it. I would appoint a committee to be known as a 'legislative committee,' or 'laws and ordinance committee,' to watch all State legislation and city affairs, and I would suggest co-operation with the corporation counsel. He is always willing to render assistance, but cannot be expected to look after every little detail. If we call his attention to various things as they reach us he will gladly give assistance.

"Another suggestion I would make is that the finance committee, which has no provision for a board of estimate, it always being the rule of each committee to get all that it can in the way of appropriation, be composed of the chairmen of the street, police, fire and building, light and trees, with the chairman of the finance committee, to co-operate in securing a fair apportionment of the moneys to be divided, and I would also suggest that the Mayor and city treasurer be members ex-officio of that committee, to aid in making up the estimate.

"In the organization of the Common Council you know your business and I do not wish to suggest to you who your president shall be or even the chairman of the various committees. Of course, the president appoints his committees, but in your caucus don't say 'I'll vote for your chairman if you will vote for mine.' Don't tie the president down. Trust your president, and if you find that you cannot do so, put some one in the chair that you can trust.

Charity Ball Offerings

The Charity Ball to be held at the Casino New Year's Eve will combine a lot of entertainment. Before the ball, the possessor of a ticket may see May-irwin in "Mrs. Wilson-Blake" at the theatre, and after the dance—or while it is going on—he may enjoy a delightful supper. If he doesn't dance, the ticketholder will find the dance a show place well worth a visit and a stay.

DEMOCRATIC PRIMARIES FOR CO. COMMITTEEMEN

NINE NEW MEMBERS CHOSEN LAST NIGHT WITHOUT ANY OPPOSITION.

Democratic primaries were held Monday night for the purpose of selecting one member of the Democratic county committee from each election district in the city. This action was necessary because the representatives were not chosen at the time the primaries were held in the fall. At the request of the chairman of the county committee the date for the primaries were fixed for last night.

The First, Third and Fourth wards met at the rooms of the Grover Protective Association at Park and North avenue, and the Second ward primary was held at the Bryant Public School. The result follows:

First ward—First district, John P. Owens; Second district, Walter L. Hetfield.

Second ward—First district, Joseph Harrigan; Second district, J. V. S. Dirs.

Third ward—First district, Albert H. Atterbury; Second district, Michael O'Keefe.

Fourth ward—First district, Stephen H. Schleif; Second district, Edward J. McCue; Third district, George E. Firstbrook.

MARTINE NOT OUT FOR GOVERNORSHIP

SAYS HE'S THROUGH WITH JOB OF RUNNING FOR OFFICE.

James E. Martine is not a candidate for the Democratic Gubernatorial nomination and he does not sanction the boomsgiven him by the press about the State. This fact he made plain in a talk with a Daily Press reporter today. The "farmer-orator" tells the same old story. He had enough of chasing rain-bows and is through with it. The gubernatorial chair has no attractions for him, he says, although he confesses that he always had a hankering after the Congressional berth.

"As I have repeatedly said," declared Mr. Martine, "it has been the ambition of my life to go to Washington. As for the Governorship, I have no special liking for the office. In the convention which nominated Mr. Seymour four years ago my name was presented by my friends in Union county, but of course I had no show of getting the nomination. I did not say that I would care for the position even if it were offered me. I have spent my life fighting for Democracy and have been defeated in many battles. But my devotion has never been altered by defeat. I expect to work on the rest of my days for the success of my party's principles, principles which are my religion. As for running for office again, I never expect to do it."

Mr. Martine's boom for the gubernatorial nomination was really started in a letter written by former United States Senator Rufus Blodgett on the occasion of the "farmer-orator's" dinner to the newspaper men of the Fifth Congressional district. Since then it has been taken up by several newspapers and one or two papers have endorsed him.

"Rip Van Winkle" Tonight.

Admirers of the late Joseph Jefferson,—and their name is legion—should avail themselves of the opportunity to hear Mr. George Kiernan read the play made famous by the great actor, "Rip VanWinkle," at the Casino tonight. Mr. Kiernan received the highest praise from Mr. Jefferson for his artistic and truthful interpretation of the several characters of the play and to the title role, "couched" to a point of perfection. Those who heard Mr. Kiernan in "The Rivals" last week were highly impressed by his excellence as a dramatic reader, and will be more than repaid by attendance tonight.

Trinity Commandery Will Attend.

Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. T., will attend a stated conclave of Jersey Commandery, No. 19, K. T., at East Orange, Friday night, when Washington Commandery, No. 4, of Hartford, Conn., will confer the Order of Malta on Governor Edward C. Stokes. The Women's Club building at East Orange has been secured for the occasion. The members of Trinity Commandery will leave Plainfield Friday night on the 5:33-train. Sir Knight W. A. Pinto is chairman of the committee of arrangements for the trip. The Order of Malta will be conferred in full form.

A Surprise Party.

A number of Plainfield friends gave a surprise party Friday evening at the home of Miss Bickler in Cranford. Music and games were the features. Refreshments were served at midnight. There were 20 people present from Plainfield. The party was arranged by Miss Florence Pearson.

BUSH OUT OF FIRE DEPT. RULE FOR FREEHOLDERS

Common Council Accepts Resignation of Fireman Injured While Driving Hose Wagon.

COUNCILMANIC ROUTINE

Request For a Change Made in Building Ordinance—Warrant of $78,183.04 For County and State Tax.

Harry C. Bush, who was seriously injured several months ago, while driving to a fire, tendered his resignation as a regular member of the fire department at the meeting of the Common Council, Monday, and it was accepted. Mr. Bush's injuries were of such a character that at one time it was thought he would not recover. While his condition is much improved he is not physically strong enough to return to duty and probably never will be.

Tax Collector J. W. Murray presented a renewal of his bond and it was ordered filed.

D. S. Alpaugh, of East Sixth and Sycamore streets, renewed his request of a year ago for electric lights on Sycamore street, and it took the same course as in the first instance, being referred to the incoming Common Council.

The Plainfield Water Supply Company notified the Common Council that two hydrants had been located as directed, one at College place and West Fifth street and the other at College place and West Ninth street.

C. M. Meeker, who has a contract with the city for macadamizing certain streets, and being unable to complete the job on time, asked for an extension of time until April 30, 1907, and it was granted in accordance with a resolution offered by Mr. Gloak, chairman of the street committee.

Street Commissioner Gavett reported that eleven sewer permits were granted during the past month and the amount together with a sum previously received, making $28.50, had been deposited with the city treasurer.

Mr. Daniel offered a resolution authorizing City Treasurer W. F. Arnold to draw a warrant for $78,183.04, Plainfield's share of the State and county tax, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. Gloak moved that the checks of Warren B. Travell and Peter Morgan, successful bidders for sewer extension work here, be returned to them, as their bonds have been filed with the city clerk. The motion was adopted.

Councilman Frank Randolph presented a letter for Councilman Mellick, who is detained at home by illness, which the latter has received from W. R. Codington, Esq., representing several builders in the city. The letter complained of the stringent rules of the building ordinance which compel builders to secure permission from the Common Council to use cement flues with a mixture. They desire that the building inspector be given power to grant permission for its use. The matter was referred to the incoming Common Council.

A bill of Geo. J. Tobin amounting to $170 for work done at the Industrial Home and which was held up at a previous meeting until it could be investigated, was reported correct by Councilman C. C. Randolph and later was ordered paid.

Mr. Hibbard, chairman of the light committee, reported that the Public Service Corporation had located four lights as ordered.

On the motion of Mr. Gloak the sound-deadening sewer ordinance was adopted on third reading.

As is customary at this time the chairman of each committee referred petitions in his possession to the incoming Common Council, later to be referred to the proper committees. The Common Council will hold a special meeting probably on Friday night, December 28, when the year's business will be closed, preparatory to the new Common Council meeting on New Year's night to organize for 1907.

Fanwood Concern.

Certificate of incorporation has been filed in the office of the Union County Clerk by the Eastern Exploration Company, the principal office of which is in Fanwood. The objects for which the corporation is formed are to work, prospect or develop lands and mineral lands of every kind. The total authorized capital stock is $500,000, divided into 5,000 shares at a par value of $100 each. The incorporators are Charles Stranahan of Fanwood; Charles Edward Pichler and Johann Wilhelm Fischer, of New York City.

Boys' Star Course.

The first entertainment in the junior star course will be presented at the Y. M. C. A. December 28. Rosani, manipulator and juggler, will be the entertainer.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Townsend, of North Plainfield, are being congratulated as grandparents, a son having been born to their son, William Townsend. The young man and his mother are doing well.

Harry C. Bush, formerly a member of the fire department, who was injured while driving to a fire several months ago, improves slowly. He is able to be about the house and take short walks.

RULE FOR FREEHOLDERS

County Board Must Be Organized on Jan. 1 Under New Law.

CODINGTON'S OPINION

Special Meeting On December 27—Director King Is Likely to Succeed Himself.

Major Benjamin King, director of the Board of Freeholder, said yesterday that beginning next year there would be a new system followed in the organization of the Board in accordance with a law passed at the last Legislature. This law provides for the organization of certain bodies at the beginning of the year, and County Attorney W. R. Codington, of this city, has construed the law to include the Board of Freeholders.

There will be a special meeting of the Board of Freeholders held probably on the last Thursday of this month, December 27, to wind up the affairs of the year, and to listen to a report from County Collector Nathan R. Leavitt . On January 1, 1907, the Board will meet to organize.

Heretofore the fiscal year of the Board of Freeholders ended in May, and at that time the county collector made his annual report, and the new board was organized. Now the fiscal year will end on the last day in December and the board will organize the first day in January. Mr. Leavitt will have a semi-annual report to make this time, as six months ago the late County Collector, Edward M. Wood, made his annual report.

The only thing to be done at the meeting January 1, will be the election of a director, and the regular routine of organization. Then the meeting will be adjourned to the first Thursday in January. The indications are that Director King will succeed himself as the head of the county board.

When the law regulating the time of meeting of various bodies came up for consideration, there was a difference of opinion as to whether the Board of Freeholders would be included, and would have to change their periods of meeting and their fiscal year. The question came to County Attorney Codington. It was his oral opinion that the Board was included. He will submit a written report on the subject to the board.

AN ODD FATALITY FOLLOWS A FAMILY

THREE GENERATIONS KILLED IN RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.

Robert J. Pierson, of Somerville, employed as a bridge builder on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, was struck by a Blue Line flyer on the Newark Bay drawbridge at 1 o'clock Monday afternoon and instantly killed. His body was hurled into the bay.

This makes the seventh man killed on the drawbridge during the work of construction. The Pierson family has experienced a strange fatality, as three generations have been killed on the railroad.

Pierson's grandfather, Henry Pierson, a farmer, was killed a few years ago while crossing the Lehigh Valley Railroad tracks at South Somerville in his carriage. John Pierson, the father of the dead man, while engaged in constructing the block system of the Central Railroad of New Jersey five years ago, was riding on a handcar which was run down by a fast freight. All the men on the car escaped but Pierson, who was instantly killed.

The dead man belonged to the carpenter gang bossed by Enoch Giles, of this city.

Digby Bell in the big laughing hit, "The Education of Mr. Pipp," makes a return engagement to the New Plainfield Centre December 27. The comedian, eminent among America's laugh makers, visits this city after a 200 night run in New York city, and successful engagements in Chicago, Boston and other cities. Chicago thought so well of Digby Bell's "Mr. Pipp" that a return engagement was demanded, the second eclipsing the first. The play is now in its third season. Augustus Thomas is credited with evolving a most delightful comedy from Charles Dana Gibson's humorous drawings of the same title. Digby Bell's performance of "Mr. Pipp" is declared a masterpiece of drollery and fine artistic acting.

One of the great attractions for holiday shoppers are the windows at "The White Store," on West Front street, just filled with seasonable goods. But don't imagine that all of the goods are in the window. The store is over-running with bargains of all kinds and there is no better place to trade than at this store. This firm is always abreast of the times. Trading stamps given with all purchases.

A son has arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron M. Higgins, of Liberty street.

Herbert Brooks, of the borough, continues to improve from an operation for appendicitis.

A BRIDE AWAITED HIM

Young Lusardi Takes as His Wife Girl Whose Father Demanded $10,000.

MARRIED BY SQUIRE

Miss Emery Came From Newark to Wed—Lusardi Had Been Arrested On Capias.

When Antonio Lusardi, Jr., returned to his fruit store Monday, from a trip to New York for Christmas trees, he found a bride awaiting him. Miss Ethel Emery, of Newark, whose father instituted a suit for $10,000 against Mr. Lusardi, for an alleged breach of promise, last week, was there. Mr. Lusardi, who has declared all along that he was desirous of marrying Miss Emery, made good his declaration without delay. Miss Emery having declared formally that she was eighteen years old, which her father has claimed she is not, Mr. Lusardi took her to Justice Hezekiah Hand's home, where they were wedded.

In bringing the suit against Mr. Lusardi, the girl's father acted vigorously. He had a capias issued by a Newark Supreme Court commissioner, and on that Mr. Lusardi was arrested here, and placed under bonds for $4,000, to appear in defense of the action.

Mr. Lusardi said this morning that he made no arrangements with Miss Emery for a meeting Monday. She came of her own volition, it was said, because she had faith in his declaration that he desired to marry her. She arrived in Plainfield in the afternoon, after Lusardi had gone to the city. She was welcomed by her fiancee's mother, and, chaperoned by the latter, she met him at his place of business when he returned shortly after 9 o'clock in the evening.

Mr. Lusardi urged her to marry him immediately if her age was not a bar to the step. She said she had passed her eighteenth birthday, and, fortified by legal advice, Mr. Lusardi took Miss Emery to Justice Hand's house, on East Sixth street, at once. Before the ceremony Miss Emery made formal declaration to the justice that she was of legal age. The marriage was witnessed by Richard Higgins and Miss Pauline Sutterline, friends of the young people. After the ceremony Mr. Lusardi took his bride to the home of the Voehl flats, East Front street, where they will live, with his mother.

At his place of business this morning, Mr. Lusardi looked as happy as a bridegroom is supposed to be.

"I always intended to marry my wife," he said, "and I am delighted that I have been able to win her. She is the handsomest and finest little girl in the world. Not that I like her, you understand," he protested ingenuously; "anybody would say so." He beamed with conscious pride.

The marriage of Miss Emery to Mr. Lusardi cuts the basis from under the suit. If the bride's declaration as to her age is not disproved. A girl of eighteen can marry without the consent of her parents.

Ralph Stuart who comes here Christmas Day, matinee and night, will be remembered as an actor of pleasing personality with a magnetism that unconsciously attracts afterward him. He will present his greatest success, "By Right of Sword," a play dealing with the Russians and Nihilism, and he will portray the part of Richard Hamilton, an American gentleman. Mr. Stuart has been induced to make a brief tour of "By Right of Sword" before he commences rehearsals in "The Spoilers," a dramatic venture under the direction and management of Daniel Frohman, one of the best known theatrical managers in this country. Mr. Stuart will have the leading part.

Miss Mary Dunham, of West Front street, has been visiting friends at Raritan.

Miss Clara Long, of Park avenue, who has been visiting relatives at Somerville, has returned home.

Arthur Denton, of Brown University, is expected home the last of the week to spend the holiday season here.

Walter Hamilton, of the borough, has secured a temporary position as clerk at the postoffice during the holiday rush.

Miss Katherine Hartshorne, of Freehold, who has been visiting Miss Sophia Barlow, of Prospect place, has returned home.

William J. Kitchen, who is a travelling salesman for the Butterick Company, is spending a few days at his home in this city.

Mr. and Mrs. John Atkinson Thayer, of Virginia, are visiting Mrs. Thayer's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Richart, of Belvidere avenue.

—Employes of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company are engaged putting wires underground on West Front street and making new house connections.

—William L. Smalley, Jr., who recently purchased the Stine homestead near Greenbrook road, North Plainfield, is busily engaged in having the dwelling remodelled and put in first-class shape. He expects to occupy the place next spring.

BOROUGH SCHOOL BOARD DISCUSSES HEAT MATTERS

ROOMS IN TWO BUILDINGS HAVE BEEN AFFECTED BY THE COLD.

The question of proper heating in both the Watchung and Somerset street schools, occupied the attention of the borough Board of Education for the greater part of the meeting Monday. It was reported by Mr. Townsend that rooms 22 and 24 in the old part of the Somerset structure could not be kept at the proper temperature in cold weather and declared that two more radiators should be installed. On motion it was decided to have them put in at a cost of $100. The heating in the building otherwise, that is, the original part, is to undergo a thorough inspection by a competent man.

Mr. Townsend also reported that two rooms in the Watchung school, located on the north and west sides of the building, could not be kept warm even under a forced draught if consumed a half a ton of coal a day. He suggested as a remedy that double windows be installed and the board accepted the proposition. Fourteen such windows will be needed and a carpenter will be secured to furnish estimates.

Mr. Townsend, for the finance committee, reported that after paying the past month's warrants, there would be a balance of $7,200 and he made a motion that notes of the board amounting to $6,700 be taken up. The members received favorably. Mr. Miller also explained that another installment of $17,000 from taxes would be received at the first of the year and that the board would not be cramped.

The report of the building and grounds committee relative to additional lavatories in the Somerset street building was received and discussed at some length.

PROFESSOR HARPER ON SAINTE-BEUVE

TELLS MONDAY AFTERNOON CLUB HOW HE OUTGREW ROMANTICISM.

Prof. George McLean Harper, of Princeton University, again lectured before the Monday Afternoon Club Monday, at the Casino. For a better understanding of Hugo and other leaders of the French romantic school, and of the laws governing the ideal in art, he spoke on the "safe and sane" attitude of Sainte-Beuve, (1804-1869). A French critic and near-poet.

The lecturer devoted some time to reducing the somewhat conflicting ideas of the authorities on the subject as to what was really meant by the terms "classicism and "romantic." Having evicted the conception that the classic, broadly speaking, was anything of established and recognized excellent in Art, Prof. Harper sketched Sainte-Beuve's recantation of the tenets of romanticism and his adoption of the classicists' views. He had seen the dangers and the excessiveness of the romantic school, and became the sanest critic of his day. Sainte-Beuve, the lecturer said, was not personally rancorous in his criticisms, nor jealous, as had sometimes been charged. He developed after leaving journalism to enter the scholastic life, to take a Catholic view of the whole subject. He became completely cured of romanticism, and came to see how his contemporary literary workers of that school had wasted their toil and their talents on useless and extravagantly builded works. He felt that they should have striven for fewer and grander works.

GIVING OUT.

The Struggle Discourages Many a Citizen of Plainfield.

Around all day with an aching back;
Can't rest at night;
Enough to make any one "give out."

Doan's Kidney Pills will give renewed life.

They will cure the backache;
Cure every kidney ill.

Here is Plainfield proof that this is so:

Mrs. W. W. Mills, of 86 Summit avenue, Plainfield, N. J., says: "I am willing to reiterate my former statement about the merits of Doan's Kidney Pills, feeling that some other person may be benefitted thereby. I had suffered with a severe pain in the small of my back and across the hips, and if I did any lifting or stooping my back became lame and sore. I used plasters but they only helped me for the time being. I was feeling unusually bad when my attention was called to Doan's Kidney Pills and they were so highly recommended for troubles like mine that I procured a box at L. W. Randolph's drug store. In a few days I felt their good effect, and when I had finished taking them I was relieved in every way. I am glad to recommend this reliable remedy."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

OPPOSE CONSOLIDATION

Some, City Fathers Against Merger of Municipalities Without Co. Line Change.

POWERS ENLARGED

Commissioners Instructed to Investigate Subject With Annexation As Well As Consolidation.

The first official opposition to the proposed consolidation of Plainfield and North Plainfield on the part of the Common Council was withdrawn Monday, when Councilman Daniel put himself on record as against the plan unless it provides for a change of the county lines. The matter has been held in abeyance for some time. North Plainfield, at the suggestion of the Board of Trade, made the first move toward consolidation, and then the Common Council followed suit.

Mr. Daniel was not present at some of the earlier meetings when the matter was discussed, and he took the opportunity last night to put himself on record as against the proposition without a change of county lines. It was not until his amendment, giving the joint committee the power to thoroughly investigate the proposed act of consolidation with a view to changing county lines that the resolution offered by Mr. Buxton was adopted.

At a previous meeting former Mayor Alexander Gilbert communicated with the Common Council on the subject, he having been selected as one of the commissioners to act for Plainfield. At that time he cited the fact that he believed that the commission should have full power to investigate the subject, and he said that if the Common Council would consent to give the commission the desired authority he would agree to serve, otherwise he would not.

It was with a view to giving the commission the authority asked for that Mr. Buxton introduced a resolution, which was adopted after amended by Mr. Daniel. The latter member said that he believed Mr. Gilbert must have had in mind the somewhat limited powers accorded the commission when he wrote to the Common Council and his desire must have been for more authority.

Mr. Tyler expressed himself in accord with Mr. Daniel's views and objected to adopting the resolution in its original form. After much discussion, more or less of a technical character, and during which Mr. Daniel asked if the reports and all the resolutions and communications bearing on the subject, which were previously presented, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas, At the suggestion of the Board of Trade a committee, consisting of representatives from the Board of Trade, from the Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield, and from the Common Council of the City of Plainfield, was appointed to consider the subject of the consolidation of Plainfield and North Plainfield under one municipal government, and

"Whereas, Resolutions and recommendations adopted by the said committee were received by this Council and the recommendations of the committee were adopted, and

"Whereas, Alexander Gilbert and Floyd T. Woodhull were appointed commissioners on consolidation, and

"Whereas, Mr. Gilbert under date of October the 22d has expressed his willingness to serve as such commissioner provided the powers expressed in the resolutions appointing said commissioners be enlarged as hereinafter provided;

"Resolved, That this Council does hereby authorize and request the commissioners appointed as aforesaid to fully inquire into and examine into the advantages and disadvantages of the proposed consolidation in accordance with the recommendations of the joint commission of the Board of Trade, the Mayor and Common Council of North Plainfield and the Common Council, of Plainfield, or otherwise and with or without change of county lines; and the plans and methods by which such consolidation might be brought about and to report thereon, with their opinion in the premises as soon as convenient may be."

You may need a sanitary plumber. If so don't forget that A. H. Enander, 26 Watchung avenue, is an expert and does good work.

Don't forget John Winzenreid, of Lee place, when you want anything moved. He is a reliable trucker and employs only the best help.

There are many different grades of coal, but the kind sold by Boice, Runyon & Co., of Park avenue, is the best. Prompt deliveries to all parts of the city.

Former Judge W. R. Codington, of Sandford avenue, is able to be at his office, following a severe illness, which detained him at home several days.

Former Letter-Carrier Edward T. Dunn, of the borough, underwent an operation recently in St. Michael's Hospital, Newark, for the removal of a cataract from the eye. The operation was successful and it is believed that Mr. Dunn will have the sight of the eye restored. The other eye, which is similarly affected, will be operated upon later.

SOMERSET COURT OPENS

December Term Begins With Justice Garretson and Judge Schenck on the Bench.

THE ILLARIO CASE UP

Taking Testimony On Rule For New Trial in Manslaughter Case—Judge Lloyd to Sit at Somerville.

The December term of the Somerset county courts opened in Somerville at 10:30 yesterday with Justice Garretson and Judge Schenck presiding. There was a large attendance of lawyers and the calendar, which is not a very heavy one this term, was gone over.

The cases of interest to Plainfielders are:

Supreme—Lester Pach against H. M. Herbert & Co.; Malcolm MacLear, Dungan & Reger. Gilbert A. VanDoren against Elias Bodewieser; Beekman & Vasselier, Edward A. Kenney. Faile Scour against D., L. & W. R. R. Co.; William A. Kearns, Borden D. Whiting. William J. Kearns against D., L. & W. R. R. Co.; Wm. J. Kearns, Borden D. Whiting. John Danko against D., L. & W. R. R. Co.; Wm. J. Kearns, Borden D. Whiting. Peter S. Halstead against D., L. & W. R. R. Co.; Wm. J. Kearns, Borden D. Whiting. Joseph Westercraft against Charles G. Ornbston. Vreeland, King, Wilson & Lindabury; Lindabury, Depue & Faulks. Wm. C. Carman against Peggy Koechlein; Charles T. Cowenhoven; Dungan & Reger.

Circuit—Lojis B. Shahreauw against Ballantine & VanFleet; Beekman & Vosselier; Clark & Case and Dungan & Reger. Dora Dater against Wilhelmina Weissad; Horace Codington; Dungan & Reger. Lizzie C. Pope against Henry Conner; John A. Freeh; Charles A. Rathbun. Ada D. Clayton against John B. Dunster; H. V. Osborne; Clark & Case. David Binat against Frank Bergen; F. A. Pope; Frank Bergen-prose; Horace Codington against George H. Fairchild; Clarence Garretson; Francis J. Blatz.

Common Pleas—Mary Apgar against Frank Chesson; Beekman & Vasselier; Dungan & Reger.

Justice—Schenck—Frank VanWinkle ads. John D. Bonnell; Justice Satphen; Beekman & Vosselier; H. Burdette Herr. Anna J. Maist ads. James Dehl; Justice Enright; Edward S. Allen; Praut & Praut. Mary J. Spencer vs. John W. Mundy; Justice Kitchen; Horace Codington; F. A. Pope. Pasquale Tulis ads. Philip W. Munday; Justice Cooper; Beekman & Vosseller; Horace Codington. Frank T. Rice ads. Joel Codington; Justice Kitchen; Horace Codington. Horace Codington. Albert Voorhees ads. Henry S. Van Nuys; Justice Suthpen; Frederick A. Pope; Dungan & Reger.

The Grand Jury summoned contained the following members from North Plainfield: William D. Debele, George H. Schmidt, Frank Mobus, John F. Mundy, William H. Rogers and George W. Winans.

The rule to show cause why a new trial should not be granted Alex Illorindis Ilario, who was convicted of manslaughter in the killing of Alexander De Poolo at the home of Mrs. Jane Warwick in Somerville on June 2 last, was returnable today, and Justice Garretson began hearing testimony. The main argument for a new trial is based in the constables taking the jury to the scene of the crime during the progress of the trial without the consent of the justice.

Justice Garretson, owing to a press of court work in other ends of his district, has summoned Judge Lloyd, of Camden, who was recently appointed, for the purpose of trying the Supreme and Circuit cases ready for trial.

Former Senator L. A. Thompson is foreman of the Grand Jury and among the other members of the jury is Rev. Charles Fiske, rector of St. John's church, Somerville.

Attained His Majority.

In honor of the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday a party was given to Chris. Utzinger at his home on Grandview avenue, Monday night. The affair was arranged by his brother, Albert Utzinger. The evening was spent in playing games, vocal and instrumental music and at a late hour refreshments were served.

Grace Church School Observance.

The main Sunday-school entertainment of Grace P. E. church will be held at the parish house this afternoon and evening from 3 o'clock until 9. The infant class will be entertained Friday afternoon. A carol service will be held Friday.

Prison Evangelist.

A prison evangelist will be the speaker at the Y. M. C. A. men's meeting Sunday afternoon. He is Thomas Elgar, of New York. His topic will be "Trumpet Blasts from Prisons North and South."

CRANFORD WITHOLDS PART OF COUNTY TAX

CONTENDS THAT IN COMPARISON WITH ROSELLE IT HAS BEEN OVER-ASSESSED

There was a stir in the office of the County Board of Taxation Monday morning when it became known that Cranford had decided to withhold a portion of its share of the county tax and appeal to the State Board of Equalization of Taxes for what they call fair play.

The total amount due from Cranford is $16,709.62. The town has paid to County Collector Learyt $14,244; but will refuse to pay the balance, $2,466.63.

The reason of this is that they have examined the work of the assessors who sized up the property of their neighbors in Roselle and have come to the conclusion that they have been over assessed while the people of Roselle have not had their property assessed to the full value. In other words, they claim that Roselle has not been assessed dollar for dollar with what according to true situations and they mean to know why or kick up a rumpus.

It was supposed that they would wait until the State Board came to Elizabeth next month, but it was stated that Cranford believes it is time matters were brought to a head as there has been a great deal of grumbling and next Thursday has been set as the day on which they will present their grievances at Trenton.

The action of Cranford has upset the peaceful calculations of the board which has been happy since the conclusion of its labors in hearing appeals over the fact that they had done so well without any great trouble. Every other township and municipality has paid in its share of the county burden of taxes, and now it seems to the board exasperating to have little Cranford step out of line and threaten no end of trouble.

POOR BOYS DINE.

Y. M. C. A. Juniors Give Their Annual Dinner to Humbler Youths.

Small boys of humble fortune to the number of forty were the guests of the Y. M. C. A. Junior Department at a Christmas dinner Tuesday. The dinner is an annual event.

It was served in the small hall, at six o'clock. The hall was prettily decorated with holly and greens. The dinner was served by members of the Boys' Department and Boys' Secretary Hoyt B. Barrows sat at the head of the table.

The dinner was not formal. It was designed to make small boys who have not, ordinarily, too many joys, feel some of the Christmas joyousness. They were filled to repletion with turkey and "fixins," mince pie, ice cream and cake, and when it was all over each boy departed with a big orange. Before the dinner party broke up the hall was photographed.

SECT ASKS PROTECTION.

"Peetwashers" Services Disturbed By Irreverence.

Elder Trent, head of the Church of God and Saints of Christ, colored, which is known to the man on the street as "The Peetwashers," has applied to Chief Kiely for the protection of his services from annoyance by irreverent and noisy visitors at the Sunday night services in Reform Hall. The officer on the post has been told to watch over the saints and see that their religious observances are not disturbed.

The saint who brought the complaint to headquarters told Chief Kiely that the sect was growing here. There are two white members, according to the messenger—Mrs. Sarah Sullivan, of West Fourth street, and Ashwell Copeland. The sect has a white bishop in Kansas.

Juniors Could Not Elect.

Owing to the fact that Monday night was Christmas Eve it was impossible to get a quorum out at the meeting of Plainfield Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., and hence the officers could not be elected. The nominations were made a week previous with the intention of electing this week. The matter was deferred for one week, but as next Monday night will be New Year's Eve there is little prospect of holding an election then and another adjournment may be necessary.

A Stubborn Chimney Fire.

A still alarm was received at fire headquarters at 9:15 Monday night for a chimney blaze at the home of Lewis Timpson on East Sixth street. It proved to be one of the most stubborn of this kind the department has had in a long time and nine extinguishers were used in putting it out. The damage was slight.

Christmas Tree at the Home.

The usual Christmas tree will be lighted at the Children's Home on Jackson and Westervelt avenues, the borough, Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

HUSBAND'S DEATH SOON FOLLOWED BY HIS WIFE'S

MRS. DANIEL BAKER LIVED BUT FEW HOURS AFTER HER COMPANION.

Faithful and loving companions in life for more than fifty years, death came but a few hours apart to Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Baker, numbered among Scotch Plains' oldest and best known residents. Both were taken ill a short time ago from the infirmities of old age and despite the fact that their casese were almost hopeless from the start, they cheered each other with comforting words and admonitions that the sickness would only be temporary. Mr. Baker passed away Sunday morning but the fact was kept from his helpmate who was then barely clinging to life.

His funeral was set for Christmas morning but Monday night the summons came to Mrs. Baker and it was postponed so that a service could be held jointly. It was conducted at Cole's undertaking rooms by Rev. L. R. Howard, pastor of Hope chapel, Scotch Plains, and was attended by many friends from this city and the Plains. Interment followed in the Plainfield avenue cemetery.

Mr. Baker was in his seventy-fifth year and was known all over Union county. His wife was Miss Susannah Murray and was eighty-one years old. Everybody in Scotch Plains knew both and they had a wide acquaintance in this city. They leave no near relatives beyond a sister of Mrs. Baker.

HAPPY FAMILY REUNIONS ON CHRISTMAS DAY.

Holiday the Occasion or Many Gatherings in City and Borough.

According to the annual custom there were a number of family reunions held throughout the city and borough, Tuesday, and the celebration of the day was principally confined to home affairs.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Dolliver, of Fairview avenue, entertained their relatives at a Christmas dinner and family re-union, yesterday. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Reber, parents of Mrs. Dolliver, and their family. There were twelve at dinner.

Among the pleasant family reunions yesterday was one at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Juan Babcock, on Clinton avenue. They entertained Mrs. Phillips and daughters, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Phillips and son, of West Front street; Mr. and Mrs. Daniel R. Douglass and children, of the borough.

Mr. and Mrs. James Trimmer, of Fourth avenue, entertained at a family re-union, yesterday, sixteen members being present, including Mr. and Mrs. William Wyman, of East Front street; Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey F. Colthar, of Duer street; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Runyon, of Manning avenue; Mr. and Mrs. John Van Horn, of Somerset street, together with their children.

BOY'S SUDDEN DEATH.

C. Harold Hunter Passes Away on Christmas Morn.

C. Harold Hunter, the fourteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Hunter, died at the home of his parents on West Fourth street at two o'clock Tuesday morning. His death was unexpected as he had been sick only two days with a cold. He was afflicted with a small carbuncle on the back of his neck which suddenly developed a form of blood poisoning. Dr. Murray was called and it was planned to remove him to the hospital but he grew weak so quickly it could not be done. He sank rapidly Monday night despite the efforts of Dr. Murray and other physicians who sought to check the trouble.

Harold was a pupil at the Irving school and also a member of Hope chapel. He was an unusually bright boy and his death came as a great shock to his many young acquaintances. He leaves three brothers and three sisters, one of the latter being Miss Gertrude Hunter who graduated from the Plainfield High School last June with first honors.

The funeral will be held at Hope chapel this afternoon at two o'clock and interment will be at Hillside cemetery.

Entertained Senior Class.

Principal and Mrs. I. W. Travell gave a reception to the senior class of the Plainfield High School Saturday night. It was held in the High School auditorium and proved to be a delightful affair. Dancing was enjoyed; music being furnished by Miss Mabel Masson, piano, and Percy Mygrant, cornet. Refreshments were served.

Restricted Admission.

On account of lack of room the Sunday-school entertainment of Warren chapel, this evening at eight o'clock, will be only for the congregation and Sunday-school. Free tickets may be had from J. W. Gavett.

MANY WENT TO CHURCH

Episcopal and Catholic Christmas Services Were Largely Attended.

MASS BEFORE DAWN

Seven Services at St. Mary's, Beginning With Solemn Celebration at 5:30—Father Bogan's Christmas Message.

Christmas Day was observed in all the Roman Catholic and Protestant Episcopal churches with the services prescribed by their laws. Two or more services were held; at St. Mary's church the masses numbered seven. Special musical programmes were rendered and the churches were bright with Christmas decorations. The congregations were large.

St. Mary's.

Seven masses were celebrated at St. Mary's R. C. church Tuesday morning. The first, a solemn celebration, was at 5:30 o'clock; the others were held at 7:00, 7:30, 8:00, 8:30, 9:30 and at 10:30 o'clock. The masses were largely attended; it is estimated that the total number of worshippers was 2,800.

The augmented church choir of thirty-two voices and the chancel choir of twenty-five voices sang at the 5:30, 9:30 and the 10:30 masses. The church was splendid. The church was strikingly decorated with Christmas greens.

At the early mass, Rev. Father Bogan, the pastor, was the celebrant; Rev. Father Henry J. Rache, of Jersey City, was deacon; Rev. Father Sciolla was subdeacon; and Rev. Father Delahanty was master of ceremonies.

Father Bogan preached formal sermons at the 5:30, 9:30 and 10:30 o'clock services. Among other things, he said:

"To the mind that meets no mystery in religious considerations, or, meeting it, rejects it because it falls not with human reason thereof, Christmas Day has no significance. It is a day of mere friendly intercourse and kindly greetings, a day born of fancy and adopted by custom, devoted to pleasure and joyful family gathering. To him who sees beyond the mere festivity, and studies the reason for Christmas joy, the world of mystery unfolds, and God makes known, not in uncanny but eminently human way, the reason of His birth among men. It becomes for him a day hallowed by sacred commemorations; a day of promise fulfilled.

"What is the fact commemorated? Man was created by Almighty God in rectitude, justice, and consequently in power. He was made little less than the angels, he was crowned with honor and with glory; but he fell from God, and lost all his graces, the innocence, the justice in which he had been created, and in order to restore to him to all he has lost, God becomes man, takes to Himself our humanity, and unites it to Himself in His own Divine Person. In looking for a proof of the fitness that God should become man we ground our argument on the infinite goodness of God; for there is nothing in the nature of any person or thing is fitting for it, as it is fitting that man should reason because intellect belongs to his nature. Now, it is in the very nature of goodness that it should communicate itself to there; therefore, it is in the very nature of supreme goodness that it should communicate itself in a supreme, that is, in a most intimate manner. The extraordinary dignity thus conferred on mankind, arises out of the personal union of our nature with the Divine Nature in Him. To the Christian believer, seeing in this day the commemoration of the most important fact in human history, there is above and beyond a most commendable significance, that we may draw from him an act of faith and humility.

"The angels' song above His crib, as we hear it through the ages, tells us of 'Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace to men of good will.' The world today sings the song in a different strain. It sings 'Peace and good will to men,' but the justice of God as seen in the economy of redemption demands that the will of man be attuned to the will of God, and therefore 'peace on earth to men of good will.'

St. Stephen's.

Both services at St. Stephen's P. E. church Tuesday were well attended. The early celebration was at 7:30, matins and the high celebration at 10:30 o'clock. The church was decorated with holly, ropings of evergreens, and with shields on which emblems of the faith were drawn in gold.

Rev. Arthur Searing Peck, the rector, preached a sermon on the first Christmas song of the angels, from the text: Ezekial 32:37, "A very lovely song." The music was elaborate; a heavy offertory anthem was the feature of the programme.

CHILDREN RECEIVE GIFTS FROM THE LOCAL ELKS

475 LITTLE ONES THE GUESTS OF PLAINFIELD LODGE.

Plainfield Lodge, No. 885, B. P. O. E., made Christmas a happy day for nearly 500 of the city's children by entertaining them at Reform hall and presenting them with useful gifts, Monday afternoon. The big-hearted Elks conduct an affair of this nature every year and the last was attended by more little ones than ever before. Exactly 475 girls and boys enjoyed the lodge's beneficence and the beaming faces showed the pleasure they felt.

The lodge was assisted in distributing tickets of admission by Miss Holly, of the Plainfield Relief Association, who saw to it that they went where they would be most needed. When the children first gathered in the hall at 3 o'clock they were treated to an entertainment provided by professional talent. There was a ventriloquist, who imitated a lot of things, a funny musical team, a Punch and Judy show and "Yogi, the mysterious," a sleight-of-hand performer with an abundance of puzzling tricks. After that every one of the attendants was presented with two pairs of stockings, a pair of warm mittens and a cap. As they passed out they were also given a box of candy and an orange, the best that could be bought.

The committee from the lodge which arranged and supervised the affair comprised Fred Sandford, chairman; H. C. VanEmbrough, John J. Kenney, Maze Edwards and Chas. C. Burnett.

SALVATION ARMY GAVE 100 CHRISTMAS DINNERS.

Worthy Undertaking Helped to Make the Day Bright for Many Poor Families.

One hundred poor and deserving families of the city and borough were provided with generous Christmas dinners, Tuesday, through the medium of the Salvation Army. For several days the officers of the local corps were engaged in collecting and receiving contributions with which to supply the dinners and people generally were liberal in their donations. Each one of the hundred baskets contained a chicken, bread, butter, coffee, vegetables, pie and some knick-knacks.

The deserving families were reached chiefly through Overseer-of-the-Poor Alex Ayres. In some instances the families called for their orders while in other the baskets were sent to the various homes. All were greatly received and the army was thanked for the provisions furnished. On New Year's Eve there will be a Christmas and New Year celebration at the army barracks with a Christmas tree.

HOUSE DAMAGED BY FIRE.

Blaze Originated in Blind Flue and Caused Total Loss of $200.

An alarm from box 84 shortly after 4 o'clock Monday afternoon called the city fire department to the home of Woodruff Titsworth at 227 Grant avenue where a blaze had been started from a stove-pipe leading into a blind flue. It had spread through the flooring of the second story and up the one of the side walls. Lines of hose were laid in but they were not used as the West End chemical engine coped with the flames successfully.

The damage to the house is placed at $150 with an additional loss of $50 on furniture. The house is occupied jointly by Mr. Titsworth and his daughter, Mrs. Randolph.

Christmas Dinner at the Home.

Although the regular Christmas festivities will not be held at the Children's Home until Friday afternoon when the tree will be lighted, the twenty little members of the family there enjoyed a fine Christmas dinner yesterday and nearly everyone received a useful present. All are looking forward with much pleasure to the celebration on Friday when there will be a general distribution of gifts. The tree will be lighted at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Well Known Scotchman Dead.

J. C. Low, a native of Dundee, Scotland, the founder of Clan Gordon in Elizabeth and for over forty years employed by the Singer Sewing Machine Company, of Elizabethport, died yesterday at his home, 241 Inslee place, Elizabeth, from a complication of diseases. He was well-known throughout Union county and had many friends in this city.

Funeral of Alfred Cocks.

The funeral of Alfred Cocks, the former well known Plainfielder, was held at his late home, No. 17 East Park street, Newark, this morning. It was attended by a number of local friends. Interment will be in Greenwood cemetery, Brooklyn, at the convenience of the family.

POLITICS WILL DIVIDE MEMBER IN ASSEMBLY

INNOVATION IN THE SEATING OF OF THE LEGISLATORS TO TRENTON.

An innovation in the seating of the members of the House of Assembly will go into effect with the opening of the Legislature. There will be thirty Democrats on the floor and twenty-nine Republicans and a Democratic speaker in the chair.

The thirty Democrats will sit on one side of the centre aisle of the Assembly chamber—to the right of the speaker—and the twenty-nine Republicans will sit on the left. The thirtieth desk on the Republican side of the chamber will be given to the Democratic speaker, although it is not expected that he will use it.

Heretofore the Democrats and the Republicans have been scattered about the house rather promiscuously, although an effort has always been made to keep the county delegations together.

With the lines so sharply drawn between the rival factions it is expected that there will be numerous and spectacular displays of political fireworks shot from one side of the house to the other. The Democratic speaker, Edgar E. Lethbridge, of Essex, will have his hands full in keeping the calm state from the shoals and quicksands. Assemblyman Alfred N. Barber, of Mercer, will doubtless be the Republican floor leader. He would have been made speaker had the Republicans remained in control.

The Democratic leader will be Abram Kienert, of Passaic. Between Mr. Kienert and Mr. Barber there will doubtless be many lively tilts. There are other good speakers for both the Republican and the Democratic sides of the house including Mr. Perkins, the Republican leader of last winter; Mr. Elvins, Republican, of Atlantic; Dr. Crouthers, Republican, of Middlesex, and Democratic Assemblymen-elect Riordan, Alexander and Smulty, of Hudson.

The Democrats have already outlined enough to their programme for the session to give an inkling of what they intend to do. They will attack the appropriation of $250,000 for the proposed new normal school in North Jersey; the annual appropriation for the State Tuberculosis sanitarium at Glen Gardner, and endeavor to bring about a radical change in the methods of imposing taxes on the railroad property, by assessing all local rates for local benefit.

VETERAN DAIRYMAN RESCUED WHILE HOUSE WAS IN FLAMES

Orlando Van Arsdale Falls Down Stairs, Breaks Three Ribs and Is Otherwise Injured.

Fire destroyed the home of Orlando VanArsdale, a veteran dairyman at East Somerville, at an early hour this morning. Mr. VanArsdale, who was asleep on the second floor, fell down stairs in his efforts to get out of the house, fractured three ribs, received other internal injuries and his condition is critical.

The fire started from the kitchen range, which was close to the woodwork, and before the fire department arrived the flames had spread throughout the first and second floors. The dwelling, which was sold one and was owned by W. C. Voyle, was practically all fire and water and the contents destroyed. It was while groping about seeking an exit from the burning building that Mr. Van Arsdale stumbled and fell. He was afterwards rescued from the flames by neighbors.

FORMER PLAINFIELDER DEAD.

Mrs. William Reese Passes Away While Visiting Relatives.

Mrs. Minnie Reese, wife of William Reese, of Easton, Pa., and daughter of Jesse A. Oakley, the architect of Elizabeth, died Tuesday at the home of her sister, Mrs. Charles E. Bishop on Chilton street, Elizabeth, while visiting there. Death was due to Bright's disease.

Mrs. Reese was thirty-one years of age and was born in Plainfield. She had been a resident of Easton during the past six years, her husband being engaged in business there. The funeral services will be held from the home of Mrs. Bishop on Clinton place, Elizabeth, Friday afternoon and the interment will be in Evergreen cemetery that city.

At Brooklyn Gathering.

A pleasant family reunion was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore L. Harding, 125 Madison street, Brooklyn, N. Y., Tuesday, at which A. L. Force and family, of Duer street, were present. Gifts were exchanged, and with music and games a happy Christmas was enjoyed by all.

Fred Ford Parsons, of Chicago, has been visiting his parents, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. C. W. Parsons, of Park place.

Separation Learned Through Engagement Announcment of Mrs. Rowland Cox, Jr. TO WED F. B. HARRISON Husband, Former Plainfield, Secretly Obtained Annulment of Marriage Ties—She Was Mary Judson.

A report comes from Cannes, France, today that Francis Burton Harrison, whose wife was killed in an automobile crash in Long Island City, in November, 1905, is to marry Mrs. Mabel Judson Cox, divorced wife of Dr. Rowland Cox, Jr., of New York, and formerly of this city. Both are at Cannes. It is said the wedding will take place early in 1907.

The news makes public for the first time the fact that Dr. and Mrs. Cox were divorced. It is confirmed by relatives of Mr. Cox.

So secret was the trouble of the Coxes kept that no hint was obtainable as to who was the plaintiff and who the defendant in the suit.

But it is a fact that the custody of their only child was awarded to Dr. Cox, who has offices at No. 47 West Forty-fourth street, New York.

After having been separated from her husband for several months, Mrs. Cox went abroad six weeks ago with her mother and sister, shortly after the decree had been granted.

Mrs. Cox was noted for her beauty when she was married in the Second Presbyterian church, Brooklyn, to Dr. Cox, December 11, 1901. Her father, Henry I. Judson, is a wealthy resident of Brooklyn, and their home, No. 116 Willow street, is in the fashionable Heights district.

Reports of domestic disagreement were heard about two years ago. Dr. Cox took a house in Madison avenue soon after the marriage, and he and his wife were active socially.

Francis Burton Harrison, whose mother gained fame in the literary world as a lawyer and vice-president of a wealthy realty company. He was born in 1873 and was graduated from Yale in 1895.

He had just entered the practice of the law in New York when the war with Spain began, and he enlisted as a private in Troop A, New York Volunteer Cavalry. He was afterward made captain of volunteers and continued in the service till 1899.

He was elected to the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Thirteenth district, and upon the expiration of his term resigned to accept the Democratic nomination for Lieutenant-Governor on the ticket headed by D. Cady Herrick, and was defeated.

He married in San Francisco June 7, 1900, Miss Mary Crocker, daughter of the late Charles F. Crocker, and they had two children, daughters. Mrs. Harrison was killed when an automobile overturned in Thompson avenue, Long Island City, the car striking her neck and breaking it.

When her will was admitted to probate her estate was valued at $3,082,000, and this she directed should be divided equally among her husband and her two children.

Mr. Harrison went abroad several weeks ago and was repofted recently as registered in the hotel in Cannes where Mrs. Cox and her mother and sister were then staying.

"My plans are mature and I cannot talk on the matter," said Dr. Rowland B. Cox when he was asked about the reported engagement. Dr. Cox would make no comment whatever.

Christmas at St. Joseph's Church.

The annual Christmas festival held under the auspices of the Sunday-school of St. Joseph's church, Sunday afternoon, was enjoyed by a large number of children and older members of the school. Rev. William H. Miller, pastor of the church, had charge of the celebration. A feature was an address of welcome by Edmund Kenney; then followed the usual good time with distribution of gifts to all the children and the serving of ice cream and cake to all.

Tea for Mrs. F. M. Shepard.

Mrs. William E. Lowe, of Park avenue, has issued invitations to a reception and tea which she will give on the afternoon of Wednesday, January 2, for her daughter, Mrs. Frederick Mead Shepard, of Madison, Wis. The affair is given for the purpose of affording Mrs. Shepard an opportunity to meet some of her friends before returning to Madison. She is spending the holiday season with her parents.

Midnight Mass at St. Joseph's.

The customary midnight mass at St. Joseph's church Christmas Eve was largely attended Christmas Eve by the parish who thronged the edifice on Jackson avenue. Rev. William H. Miller, the pastor, celebrated the mass.

Frank W. Runyon, of Madison avenue, who has been detained at home by a serious illness, is able to be out again.

NEW MADISON BUILDING SUFFERS $10,000 DAMAGE FROM BLAZE OF UNKNOWN ORIGIN

Starting in Basement at the Northern End Sweeps Through Three Apartments Above It.

TENANTS DRIVEN OUT

Woman In Delicate Health Carried From Third Floor by Firemen —Entire City Department Works Three Hours.

Breaking out in the extreme northern end of the structure, fire spread through three apartments in the handsome New Madison building on Madison avenue, Wednesday, causing a loss that will reach probably $10,000. The flames made their way with great rapidity from the basement straight up to the third floor, and only by dint of hard and well directed work on the part of the city department, were prevented from getting into other flats separated only by a hall wall. The families of Rolph Davison, James Hubbard and Frank Hedden, located on the first, second and third floors, respectively, were burned out, the furniture in each instance being almost a total loss. Two alarms were turned in for the blaze and the city's entire force of firemen was kept busy for three hours.

The origin of the blaze is a mystery to Chief Doane and the people concerned, as a thorough investigation conducted as soon as possible gave not the slightest hint. It began in a section of the basement beneath the Davison apartment, which overlooks Green brook. The family was at dinner at 7:30 last night when someone smelled smoke and Mr. Davison found there was a blaze in some escaping gathered a few bold ed Fire Headquarters by telephone and Captain Daley, with the chemical engine and No. 2 horse wagon, responded.

The captain had no sooner opened a rear basement door when he discovered the interior to be a mass of flame and smoke. He immediately directed one of his men to turn in an alarm from box 12, bringing another hose wagon, the steamer and the hook and ladder truck. Chief Doane arrived in the meantime and took charge of the fight, sending in every line of hose that could be connected up. The nozzle men were beaten back repeatedly by belching flames, but they stuck to their task and had a half dozen streams in the seat of the trouble in a very short time.

Fearing that the fire would soon over into the adjoining three apartments, the chief afterward sent in a second alarm from box 42, calling out the West End apparatus and the remainder of the call men. With the additional help, the battle against the flames were renewed with vigor and an hour after the first call it was gotten under full control. Owing to the construction of the building, however, it was after 10 o'clock before the various floors were gone over and the last spark extinguished.

At almost the first alarm, the tenants in the affected apartments with one exception gathered a few belongings and left the building. Mrs. Frank Hedden, who resided on the top floor and who is in delicate health, refused to go out, even after she had been told that she was in danger. Before she fully realized the fact herself, the front stairs were impassable and she and her stepdaughter, Miss Olive Hedden, had to be carried down the rear fire escape by Captains Fehring and Addis. She was taken to the home of her father-in-law, Mrs. Jacob Blimm, jr., who also resides in the New Madison.

The building has in all four sections of six apartments each, a fire wall standing between the sections. The fire was in the last section known as apartments 22, 23 and 24. Across the hall from these are Nos. 19, 20 and 21, occupied by Albert Lederer, James Ferguson and Miss Elizabeth White. The flames did not get across to them and the only damage they sustained was the thick smoke and which can be very easily remedied. In Nos. 22, 23 and 24 the ruin was wrought principally in the parlor and middle rooms, the interior practically being gutted. In the rear of the apartments, directly between each three, is a dumb-waiter shaft that extends from the first to the top floor. The flames were kept out of this otherwise it would have been almost impossible to have saved Nos. 19, 20 and 21.

William M. Stillman, the owner of the building, was at the fire from within half an hour after the start and he said this morning that he was very well satisfied with the manner in which the department worked. He declared the chief and his men were entitled to great credit for keeping the blaze away from the remaining apartments of the section and that it was remarkable how they were prevented from getting into the dumbwaiter shaft. Asked as to what he considered the amount of damage to the building, Mr. Stillman said:

"It will be at least $5,000 and there is a possibility that it may reach almost twice that figure."

Of the tenants, the greatest loss will fall upon Frank Hedden. His apartment was handsomely fitted up but he did not carry any form of insurance. Almost everything was destroyed, the exception being a few trinkets that were hurriedly caught up. Mr. Davison will also lose heavily as, though he was insured, his wife possessed many valuble oriental rugs, tapestries and bric-a-brac gathered by her father in trips around the world. It will be impossible to replace them and the money value does not begin to estimate their worth to the owner. Mr. Hubbard is also fully protected by insurance but in neither instance can the losers give any figures. There is a probability, however, that the personal loss will aggregate several thousand dollars.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Lederer were in New York when the fire broke out in the basement but the children were at home with only a servant, only a young colored girl. The latter acted very coolly during the excitement and kept her presence of mind throughout. She wrapped the children up in overcoats and shawls, took to a neighbor's, afterward returning and watching the apartment. She kept at her post until the return of Mr. and Mrs. Lederer at 10:30.

While the fire was in progress in the New Madison building, an alarm was turned in from box 17 for a chimney blaze at the home of Edward Jones on Elm street. Realizing that the city department might be handicapped in responding, Chief Woolston ordered out the borough apparatus but it was not needed. Captain Townley and a hose wagon hurried to the scene and stopped the trouble with an extinguisher.

While the firemen were fighting the blaze, they were subjected to danger from falling glass and several of them were severely cut. Chief Doane received several bad gashes in the right arm and this morning was compelled to have them dressed by a physician. Ferdinand Rockfellow, one of the drivers, was also cut so badly he had to call in a drug store for treatment last night.

COMING COLLEGE SMOKER WILL BE LARGELY ATTENDED.

From Number of Acceptances to Invitations the Casino's Capacity Will Be Taxed.

From present indications it looks as if this year's all-college men's smoker will surpass last year's as far as attendance and manner of entertainment are concerned. During the first three days after the notices were sent out over 150 replies were sent in, the majority of them being acceptances. It looks now as if the Casino would be taxed to its utmost. As regards entertainment the committee can promise many novelties this year which it is not at liberty at present to divulge. Those who have not done so are urged to reply at once to Owen H. Fleming, 1012 Park avenue, whether or not they expect to help whoop it up for their Alma Mater on Thursday night, January 24.

There will be plenty of good lively music, instrumental and vocal, at the smoker and the committee has promised to have a quartette from Princeton and one from Yale. Those who were present at the last smoker will remember what a rivalry there was among the men representing various colleges and the singing of favorite college s ongs was one of the most enjoyable features of the occasion.

BACK FROM COBALT.

Dr. Moldenke Hal Hard Journey To New Mining Field.

Dr. Richard Moldenke has just returned from a trip to the Cobalt mines in Northern Canada. His journey to that place was one of hardship. He tells of getting up in the morning with the thermometer 30 degrees below zero, and, after bundling up in furs, blankets and extra clothing driving fifteen or twenty miles over snow-packed roads, to make a report of each of these mines. Wolves and bears abounded in the dense forests through which he passed, and the driver went heavily armed on this account.

Dr. Moldenke brought back some beautiful specimens of silver ore almost in a pure state.

'65 P. H. S. Reunion.

Last year's graduating class of the Plainfield High School held a reunion in the high school library yester, day afternoon. The class debt was paid in full, and arrangements were made to hold a reception in the high school during the Easter vacation. For this purpose the following committee was appointed: Joseph Gavett, chairman; the Misses Bertha Hill, Sadie Coyle, Ethel Murray, Abraham Lincoln Rubinstein, Leslie Palmer, and Benjamin Herman.

WANTS NO LICENSE FOR NEW NETHERWOOD

MRS. TRUELL'S HOTEL WILL BE RUN THE SAME AS INN AND COURT.

The extensive work of remodelling the Netherwood Hotel, which was recently purchased by Mrs. J. R. Truell, is progressing rapidly and the new owner fully believes that she will be able to open the resort for the reception of guests on May 1 of next year. William C. Smith has the contract for the mason work and Charles Dutscher the contract for heating. Mrs. Truell proposes to have an entirely new system of heating and there will be heat in every one of the 244 rooms. It is also probable that an independent lighting system will be installed.

It having always been Mrs. Truell's policy not to serve liquors at either Truell Court or the Inn, she will adopt the same rule at the hotel. She will not apply to have a bar there and she is confident that the hotel can be made a success without one. In speaking of the matter she said that several persons told her that she could not successfully conduct the Court or Inn without liquor, but she believes that she has refuted the theory, she is equally as confident about the hotel venture.

One decided improvement about the interior will be the finishing of wood-work. Everything will be painted white and white shades and curtains will be used. Several improvements are also being made in the ball-room, allowing more room. Just off the main entrance a small room has been provided with an open fire-place and in other ways made cozy. Extensive improvements will also be made in the dining room.

The mason is also putting in extra pillars in the basement and second floor to make the building as strong as possible, and all the brick work is being done over.

In the way of exterior improvements Mrs. Truell has had a number of trees cut down, which will allow more light about the hotel and will make the approach more attractive. The changes are made entirely in accordance with Mrs. Truell's ideas and she is giving much attention to details.

It is the new owner's intention to personally manage the hotel, and to that end she will have only first-class experienced help, but she will give her personal attention to the management. The opening of the hotel will not interfere in any way with Truell Court or Truell Inn and these places will be continued as at present.

COMPLAINANTS IN WILL CASE SIGNED RELEASES.

Further Hearing in Alleged Suppression of Document by McKirgan Adjourned to January 2.

Before Judge Atwater in the Union County Orphans' Court at Elizabeth Wednesday an application was made by Albert C. Pedrick, of Newark, on behalf of his clients, Thomas M. Smith and Carrie A. Topping, both of this city, and Lydia M. Woodruff, of Summit, to compel Elmer L. McKirgan, also of Summit, to produce a will of his father, the late Lewis McKirgan, which it was alleged, he had in his possession with the intion of suppressing it.

The accused lawyer, through his counsel, Alfred DeCosta, of Summit, produced sworn releases signed a year ago by the three persons named in the complaint. These persons were in court, but Judge Atwater did not think it necessary to call them. He declared that they had no standing in the Orphans' Court unless execution of the releases were cleared or disproved by the opposing counsel.

Mr. Pedrick took an exception to this ruling. Judge Atwater allowed it.

The judge said that before he rendered a decision in the matter, however, he would give each side two weeks in which to file briefs.

McKirgan was placed on the witness stand for examination, but after his counsel, Mr. DeCosta, read some decisions in similar cases, notably one by Vice-Chancellor Stevens, which Mr. DeCosta claimed sustained his contention, Judge Atwater decided not to let the cross-examination of Mr. McKirgan proceed any further and that the further hearing of the case would be adjourned until Wednesday, January 2.

Randolph Homestead Sold.

Louis Sahm, a well-to-do New York business man, has purchased the Randolph homestead, owned and occupied by the late Sylvester D. Randolph, and located on West Eighth street. The deal was made by Elston M. French. It is Mr. Sahm's intention to improve the place and use is as a summer home. There is a frontage of 200 feet and an equal number of feet in depth, comprising about one acre of land, and includes the homestead, barns and numerous outbuildings. Mrs. Randolph has about decided to build a new home for her occupancy, but has not yet selected a site.

J. L. Darby Farm Sold.

The John L. Darby farm of 250 acres located at Alton, has been sold to Mr. Widdoson, formerly of England, and he will make his home there early next month.

PIONEERS OF PLAINFIELD

Websters Among Earliest of Settlers in This Vicinity.

OLD HOMESTEAD SITE Mainly Instrumental in Laying Out the Road That Has Become Watchung Ave.—Genealogical Lore.

Among the earliest pioneers who settled in this vicinity on these "plain fields" and established permanent homes here, were members of the Webster family. In the list of first landholders of this name in Woodbridge township when title was taken in 1666, was Nathaniel Webster, of Newbury, Mass. In 1668, when Piscataway township was settled, one name of Robert Webster appeared on the official roll of freeholders. These were of English ancestry and identified with the Anglican church.

The Webster line, for consideration in this article, was connected from the first with the Society of Friends and was of Scotch origin. William Webster, its founder, emigrated to East Jersey at the time of the persecution in Europe of nonconformists and dissenters. He located a few miles southeast of Plainfield about 1685, and raised a large family, most of whom, with their descendants, have been exemplary members of the Friends faith. William Webster was a scrupulous student in his religious convictions. For this reason he strenuously opposed contributing towards the support of the Puritan preacher in Woodbridge, and took the first step in this colony towards resisting a public taxation to pay the minister's salary. The transaction is thus referred to in the old Town book of the year 1695:

"William Webster, pretending that it is contrary to his conscience to pay anything toward the maintenance of a plainter, Captain John Bishop hath engaged in open town-meeting to free the said Webster from the said charge and to pay the said Webster's part so long as the said Bishop shall live."

The original family of this Scotch Friend consisted of his five sons, William, Jr., mentioned further on; Benjamin, b. 1709, m. Rachel Skinner; Joseph, b. 1711, m. Elizabeth Shotwell; Moses and Aaron. The daughters of the emigrant settler were Mary, Hannah, Sarah and Rachel.

The oldest son of this worthy sire, as just stated, was William Webster, Jr., born 1692, married 1717 to Susannah Cowperthwait. He set up housekeeping about 1718-20 in Plainfield on a farm through which Cedar brook ran then as now. This pioneer home was located on the southeasterly side of the stream, near where Prospect avenue crosses the brook. The house is built on one of the earliest dwellings in existing city limits.

Part of this original building is still standing, and is occupied by the Martinez. It might be recorded also that in the dwelling is some of the timber and foundation material that entered into the construction of a previous habitation of one of the still more primitive pioneers who temporarily dwelt on the same plantation in 1684.

In this early eighteenth century home were born eleven children and here the Webster homestead remained for several generations. There were three sons and eight daughters, who lived to mature years. The oldest child was John Webster, born 1718, died 1800; William, b. 1723; Hugh, b. 1730, died 1815. Seven of the girls lived to marry: Grace, Rachel, Susannah, Martha, Mary, Sarah and Elizabeth. They formed marriage relations with the Shotwells, Hamptons, Thorns and Marshs.

The oldest son, John, was his father's assistant on the plantation of a large acreage in 1750, the year of the father's death. Up to this time there was no public road near by and the front of the dwelling house had a southern exposure. The Websters were mainly instrumental in laying out and opening a road way running east and west on the northerly side of the house. This highway, then and for half a century afterward, was known as the road to Rahway. About 1811 it was named Peace street, later Broadway and now Watchung avenue. At the time the road was first opened the front of the old homestead was changed from the south to the north side, in order to face the new public highway.

About the time of the opening of this Rahway road, the Websters erected a grist mill on the bank of Green brook at the head of this thoroughfare. The mill continued to grind the grain of farmers for miles around being located just below and near the present dam at Tiet's pond, until 1782, when it was moved to the mountain road, now Somerset street, and known for years as Franch's mill.

The families mentioned were all among the founders of the early Friends' meetings at Woodbridge and Rahway. In 1728 an effort was made by the Websters, Laings and others to start a meeting in the vicinity of Plainfield. The first Plainfield meeting house was completed and occupied for worship in 1731-6. The small house was located in the woods of Short Hills on lands given by John Laing, about a mile from the eastern city limits. This little building served the quiet congregation until 1787-8, when the present house was erected, where it still stands, near the depot.

The youngest brother of John Webster, occupant of the old homestead until his death in 1800, was Hugh Webster, born 1730, married 1753 to Sarah Marsh, died 1815. He owned a large farm at the northwest of the primitive plantation of his father and grandfather, lying in the present first and second wards of the city. All, born in Plainfield, consisted of seven sons and five daughters: William, John, Samuel, Hugh, Isaac, Marsh and Joseph. The last was grandfather of Catherine R. Webster, who recently died, the sole inheritor of his estate. The five daughters were Mary, married Edward Fitz Randolph; Martha, married Thomas Laing; Susannah, married Samuel Pound; Sarah, who died young; and Anna, married Joseph Laing.

In another article will be given the descendants of Joseph Webster, ancestor of the late Miss Kate Webster.

O. R. L.

LITERARY.

There have been of late so few magazine contributions from Theodore Roosevelt that his essay on "The Ancient Irish Sagas" in the January Century will be the notable magazine feature of the month. Mr. Roosevelt ranks the wealth of poems and tales in the ancient Celtic, and especially in the ancient Erse manuscripts, already of much interest to scholars—as a treasure-house of literature of much importance and value. He desires to see popularized this literature—"a body of prose and poetry of great and well-nigh unique literary merit." From this point, which in some respects can be matched only by the Norse sagas, and which has some striking beauties the like of which are not to be found even in these Norse sagas"—and to this end urges that, where possible, chairs of Celtic should be established in America's leading universities. J. C. Leyendecker's best illustrative work, it is promised, will accompany Mr. Roosevelt's article.

Scribner's Magazine has completed its twentieth year, and opens its forty-first volume with Henry van Dyke's delightful outdoor article, "A Plea for Vacation." Dr. van Dyke believes that "No vacation is perfect without a holiday in it," and this is one of a series of "Days Off" that he is writing for the Magazine. This particular "day off" was in the southern part of the Maine woods, on occasion of it was a canoe trip down a little river. Schoonover contributes a number of illustrations, some of them in color. The fiction event of the year is undoubtedly the beginning of Mr. Churton's novel, "The Fruit of the Tree," a novel of large plan and seriousness, dealing with a vital question and, incidentally, portraying certain phases of American life with a vividness and truth that characterized "The Inner Shrine." In this story the characters move in a wider social range, and some of the conditions affecting them are industrial and have to do with the betterment of factory life. The main interest, however, is in the part of the people as influenced by modern thought.

If the special holiday number of The Metropolitan Magazine is to be taken as a fair example of this periodical for the next year, its readers have a splendid literary and artistic treat to which to look forward. "Christmas and New Year in Mexico," by Gilbert Cunningham Terry, is illustrated in an original and striking manner. "The Christmas Baby," by James Francis Cooke, is a good old-fashioned sort of a holiday story which warms your heart and fills you with the spirit of Christmas. "The Fairy Godmother," by Leonard Merrick, is a sentimental story of New Year's, told with the deft charm of this well-known writer. Among the more serious features of the number are "The Passing of the Moonshiners," by David A. Bates, of the Internal Revenue Service, which shows the splendid work the Internal Revenue Officers are accomplishing, in constant danger of their lives, for the protection of the revenue taxes.

DR. MORRIS RESIGNS.

Will Leave Newark Church After Long Pastorate.

After having previously refused to accept the resignation of the pastor, Rev. Dr. John Morris, the consistory of Trinity Reformed church, on East Park street, Newark, has assented to his request. Dr. Morris is well known here, where he has preached in Trinity Reformed church. He has accepted a call to Piermont, N. Y. Dr. Morris has been pastor of Trinity Reformed church, Newark, thirteen years.

For some time he has felt that he would like to go to a smaller field, and last month handed in his resignation. After persistent effort the pastor's congregation finally consented to accept his resignation, to take effect January 15.

Holy Name Election.

The following officers have been elected by the Holy Name Society of St. Joseph's R. C. church, North Plainfield: President, Robert McCormack; vice president, A. E. Kenney; secretary, William McCullough; treasurer, Thomas Meany. They will be installed at the January meeting of the society. Rev. Father Miller, rector of the church, has been re-elected chaplain.

DEFENDS SUPT. BAXTER

Head of Borough Schools Is Vigorous in His Support.

POLITICS LED TO ATTACK

Mr. Baxter Himself Told New Market Friends That Friday—He Doesn't Fear Loss of His Official Head.

Vigorous defense of State School Superintendent Charles J. Baxter, who has been assailed in some quarters as unfit for reappointment, was voiced Saturday by H. C. Krebs, superintendent of the borough schools and of the Somerset county schools, this morning. To a reporter who asked Mr. Krebs what he thought of Mr. Baxter and his administration of the State superintendency, Mr. Krebs said:

"The insinuations against Mr. Baxter are not only untrue, but exceedingly unkind, and are resented by those who know the man and the facts. Mr. Baxter has never done anything to secure appointment, reappointment, or increase of salary. His modesty in this respect is so well known that his friends have always in the past taken the necessary steps in his interests, knowing that he would do absolutely nothing himself except to attend most effectively to his duties.

"I believe that ninety-nine per cent. of the school men want to see Mr. Baxter reappointed. He has done a great work in developing the high schools of the State. He has courageously stood up for the right of every child in the State to receive a high school education. He has been most helpful in his counsel to school officers. In fact, there are no complaints except from some people who are not satisfied because Mr. Baxter has declined to allow politics to enter into the educational affairs of the State, and from a few other people who would like to be appointed State Superintendent themselves and therefore needs must raise an issue.

"The school men of the State do not want to experiment with a new man. They know the efficiency and the loyalty of Mr. Baxter, and wish to see him retained for at least another term."

Mr. Baxter spoke of the attacks on him to friends he met at the New Market school dedication yesterday. He said the trouble was caused by a clique of politicians who found they could not use him, and never would be able to. He spoke as if he had little doubt of reappointment.

Miss Madeline Reed, of Wellsley College, is spending the holiday vacation at her home on Myrtle avenue.

Arthur Denton, of Brown University, is home for the holiday vacation.

Leonard Randolph, of Newark, has been visiting relatives in town for a few days.

Rev. Phil. A. Parsons, of the Christian church, left last night for Hamilton, Ohio, where he will spend the holidays at his old home.

J. R. Truell, of Central avenue, who recently underwent an operation in Boston, is convalescing rapidly. He expects to return home soon.

Mrs. Sarah A. Moore, of Orchard place, who has been critically ill with pneumonia, shows slight signs of improvement. Dr. Tomlinson is the attending physician.

Rev. Dr. Herbert Welch, president of Ohio Wesleyan University, who preached at the First M. E. church, yesterday morning, is visiting Mr. and Mrs. James R. Joy, of the borough. He is accompanied by Mrs. Welch.

Church Club Play.

The men's organization of St. Stephen's P. E. church is to present a play at the parish house on New Year's night. The title of the production is "The Haunted House." It is planned on an ambitious scale, and the organization expects to make the occasion noteworthy.

Appointed Administrator.

Will F. Williams, of Westervelt avenue, has been appointed by the Orphans' Court of Somerset county, executor of the estate of William Laing, of Duer street, who died last spring, without a will.

William Hand & Sons, of East Second street, are reliable truckers and can be depended upon to do your work satisfactorily.

Hotel life may not be exactly what home life is, but the Kensington Hotel comes as near being like home as any hotel ever does or can.

You will have no trouble selecting a suitable Christmas gift if you trade at the Plainfield Art Store, Y. M. C. A. building. There are countless things there that would make any one happy.

Start a bank account and give the book to your wife as a Christmas gift. She will be pleased, and you will have the sense of having made a sensible present. The account should be started at the City National Bank.

The increasing patronage of the A. and P. store, West Front street, means simply that Plainfield housewives appreciate good service and liberal treatment. The A. and P. stock is always fresh and of the finest quality.

DEDICATED THE SCHOOL

New Structure at New Market Acclaimed by the Populace.

C. J. BAXTER WAS THERE

State Superintendent Made the Dedicatory Address—Flags and a Dictionary Presented—The Programme.

The new $12,000 brick school house was dedicated at New Market Friday afternoon, and the village took a holiday to attend the exercises. South Plainfield and the more rural parts of Piscataway township were well represented in the audience. It was a regular old-time affair, so body able to get out to it stayed at home. Even very small children, whose interest in the school lies in a dark and dismal future were there.

The programme was impressive. Its length was twenty numbers, and some extras. It included five addresses—one of them by State Superintendent Charles J. Baxter—orchestral selections, vocal solos, choruses, recitations, and presentations. New Market waited long, and fought valiantly at the polls, for its new schoolhouse, and it felt that the structure must have a great send-off.

The exercises were held in the school assembly room. The back of the platform was draped with the 12x18-foot flag presented to the school by the village Juniors and Daughters of Liberty. A smaller flag, for stormy day use, stood at the platform's side. The brand new Emerson piano, which is to be paid for by popular subscription, stood before the platform, and a handsome Webster's dictionary, unabridged and unreformed, rested on the piano top.

The programme was as follows:

PART I—Selection, orchestra; prayer, Rev. C. W. F. Attlee; address, Rev. H. N. Jordan; selection, orchestra; dedicatory address, State Superintendent C. J. Baxter; waltz song, "Carmena," H. L. Wilson, Miss Lulu M. Corson; address, County Superintendent H. Brewster Willis; address, D. J. Perrine, president Board of Education; song, "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean," chorus; recitation, "Advantages of Education," Hilda Johnson; recitation, "A Liberal Education," Emile Nelson.

PART II—Song, "The Year's at the Spring," H. A. Beach, Miss Lulu Belle Corson; recitation, "Education," Lester Nelson; address, Rev. Frank Fletcher; selection, orchestra; recitation, "The National Flag," Grace Burdick; presentation of flag, Miss Irene Day; acceptance by President of Board of Education; song, "Star Spangled Banner," audience and chorus; "America," audience and chorus; benediction, Rev. Frank Fletcher.

In his dedicatory address State Superintendent Baxter quoted interestingly from educational reports, noting among other things that the average cost of New Jersey's schoolhouses is $1,123. He congratulated the school board and the community on the new school, which he would have thought cost much more than $12,000 if he hadn't known the sum expended on it. Credit was due to the school board, he said, and thanks.

The formal words of dedication were said in closing his address. Bringing the audience to their feet, Mr. Baxter said, with impressiveness:

"Let us dedicate this building to truth, industry, honor, and education."

County Superintendent Brewster Willis gave some county statistics. In connection with them he said teaching is the noblest work. D. J. Perrine, president of the board, concurred with Mr. Willis in his address. He intimated that the board would make provision in the next budget for an increase of salaries.

Rev. H. N. Jordan and Rev. Frank Fletcher, pastors of the Seventh-Day and First Baptist churches, respectively, spoke briefly. Both commended the school board and voiced the pride of the township in the new school. Miss Irene Day spoke briefly in presenting the flag on behalf of Friendship Council, No. 81, Jr. O. U. A. M., and Lakeside Council, No. 35, D. of L. The audience joined the chorus of school-girls in singing the Star Spangled Banner when Miss Day finished.

Just before the exercises closed, it was announced that Mr. and Mrs. Morris Eiseman, of New York, who have property interests in New Market and take great interest in the advancement of the village, had each made a gift toward the equipment of the school. Mrs. Eiseman gave the dictionary on the piano and Mr. Eiseman gave $10 toward the payment on the piano.

D. J. Perrine, president; G. W. Harris, vice president; E. S. Vechte, secretary; Frank Bieler, John Geary, A. G. Nelson, H. J. Piddington, A. R. Tappen, J. F. TenEyck.

The orchestra was composed of Mrs. T. F. Petit, piano; Mrs. Charles S. Day, Miss Minnie K. Naylor, violin; T. F. Petit, flute; W. W. Kimball, trombone. Mrs. E. Fitzhugh Alkinson was accompanist.

The school will be ready for the reception of the pupils on January 2. The building has not yet been formally accepted, but it will be as soon as one or two minor contracts have been completed.

P.H.S. XMAS EXERCISES

Presentation of Prizes Including Daily Press Silver Cup Evoked Interest.

"ROAST" OF THE JUNIORS

Luncheon Served by Third Year Class For Seniors and Faculty—Gifts Exchanged.

The Christmas exercises of the Plainfield High School, held Friday in the auditorium, were in every way a success. The gallery was well filled with visitors and the appreciation of the programme was shown by frequent and sustained applause.

One feature was a complete surprise to all, as it was not announced until Principal I. W. Traver explained that a neat sum remained from the contributions after purchasing the Sir Galahad picture. This money, together with the ten dollars which the State allows to be spent for the school each year, was sufficient to buy a second picture. Professor Cleora Armstrong Cahill had painted the one which received the second largest number of votes by the students when the other picture was chosen. It was presented in the name of the school by Miss Mildred Berry, and Howard Doughty, president of the senior class, made the speech of acceptance.

The presentation of prizes was as follows:

The handsome silver cup offered by The Daily Press for the class championship in the field meet went to the class of 1907. The individual championship medal offered by the High School Athletic Association was presented to Chauncey Murphy. The individual cross prize offered by The Courier News went to these people: For 100-yard dash, first prize, Murphy; second, Douglas; third, Fisher. Standing broad jump, Murphy, Fisher and Douglas. Running high jump, Todd, Miles and Caldwell. Pole vault, Murphy, Brakely and Taylor. The 440-yard run, Douglas, Brakely and Todd. Shot put, Douglas, Caldwell and Fisher. The 60-yard dash, Edgar Freeman, first; Alfred Miller and Alfred Reeker. Running broad jump, Murphy, Brakely and Douglas. Hammer throw, Douglas, Fisher and Brakeley. The 220-yard dash, Murphy, Douglas and Fisher. The 880-yard run, Murphy, Todd and Brakeley.

The prize for the tug-of-war went to the juniors. Joseph Van Deventer, who won the tennis tournament in singles, was presented with a medal in the form of a watch fob. William Briggs and Fred Martin won the prize for doubles in tennis.

As has been the custom for a number of years, after the formal programme was concluded, the seniors took charge of and proceeded to "roast" every member of the junior class. The seniors went on the stage in a body and the juniors were called up one at a time. Joseph Van Deventer and Weston Gavett, dressed as monkeys, pushed a large wagon through the stage and up on the stage. They took their part well and seemed perfectly natural. William D. Taylor, arrayed as an Italian fruit vender, followed the cart, playing a hand organ. When all were on the platform the juniors were called up one at a time, and handed a lemon from the cart. The lemons consisted of Christmas presents, and while they were being undone an appropriate poem was read, expounding the characteristics of each victim. The presents were supposed to either aid or remedy the point brought forth in the poem. Some were fair, hard but all took their "roast" in a good natured way, and made a point that makes an affair of that kind a perfect success. The poems were written by members of the senior class and read by William Osgood.

At the close of the exercises the juniors served a spread to the faculty and the senior class. The menu: Potato salad, olives, pickles, sandwiches, ice cream, cake and candy. Louis de Bigard was head waiter. For the remainder of the afternoon dancing was enjoyed in the auditorium.

The junior class Christmas committee was composed of the president, Walter Caldwell, Harold Robbins, Percy Mygrant, Francis Foster, Donald Cummings, Miss Elizabeth Pound and Miss Esther Crampton.

The sophomore and freshmen classes also exchanged gifts. The former presented the lower class with cards bearing a highly colored picture of a lemon and an appropriate verse, also highly colored. The freshmen gave the sophomores tin horns with a verse attached. This was written by Miss Margaret Leggett, and the other by Miss Sadie Brower.

P. H. S. Boys Lark.

"Eat, drink, and be merry"—that was the purpose for which the boys of the senior class of the Plainfield High School assembled in the gymnasium last night. "Rough-house" held away for a while, and everybody got his share. They played basketball; had a war dance, tug-of-war, acrobatic stunts, and Oriental dances. After an ample feast in the lunch room the boys proceeded to the auditorium, and with William Douglass at the piano they "let voices resound."

CLASS JOLLIFICATION AT THE SEMINARY.

Juniors Entertain Seniors at the School and Give Them Presents.

An informal evening of Christmas jollification in which seniors and juniors took part was passed at the Seminary last Friday when the members of the junior class gave a reception to the seniors. Informally planned, the affair was a brilliant social success. The members of both classes attended in costumes and masques and the assembly room, where the exercises were held, was tastefully decorated with the Christmas colors in combination with holly.

Commemorative of the season, gifts were distributed by the juniors to the members of the senior class. The presents were hanging in stockings, one for each senior, and were presided over by Miss Catherine Thomas, as Santa Claus. The gifts were appropriate to the individual girls and each was accompanied by a verse of poetry, containing "slams" and "lemons" for the recipient. The president of the junior class, Miss Marjorie Carpenter, presented the gifts as each senior's name was called by Santa.

Following the distribution of gifts, which caused much merriment, masques were removed and the juniors received their senior guests at an informal collation. At the close of the evening's programme, there was a dance participated in by the members of both classes and the invited guests.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL EXERCISES.

Christmas Celebration by St. Mary's Children Yesterday Afternoon.

Before a large gathering of parents and friends, the children of St. Mary's parochial school held their Christmas exercises yesterday afternoon in the auditorium of the school. The programme was much enjoyed. It consisted of an opening address by Frank Casey; recitations by Frank McInierney, Margaret Higgins, Margaret Brown, Bernard O'Sullivan, Mary Frawley, May Leahy, Bernard Hanrahan, Gerald Sullivan; choruses by the boys of the school and by the kindergarten, and a Christmas bell drill by forty of the largest girls. Rev. Fathers Bogan and Delahanty received flowers and other gifts from the pupils. Both spoke in felicitious vein.

CLOSED BOROUGH'S YEAR

Council Meets to Receive Annual Reports and Finish 1906 Business.

CHAS. A LEE RETIRES

Thanked By Mayor Smalley for His Faithful Service of Six Years and Nine Months.

For the purpose of receiving reports and closing up accounts so that it could enter upon the new year free and clear, the Borough Council held a special meeting, Friday, making the last one for 1906. The session also marked the retirement of Charles A. Lee who has been a member of the body for nearly seven years and he was formally bade "farewell" by Mayor Smalley and the other councilmen.

Among reports submitted was one from Mayor Smalley as acting recorder which detailed affairs in the police department for the past year as follows: Total number of arrests 215; amount of fines collected $566.-50; committed to county jail 12, committed to the borough jail 9, sentence suspended on 14. This report was supplemented by one from Chief Marshal Weiss in which he stated that the large number of arrests was due to the increase in foreign population and the newcomers' unfamiliarity with the laws. He stated, however, that as soon as they got acquainted they became law-abiding citizens and occasioned no trouble. The order in the borough at the present time he declared to be excellent.

Howard Woolston, chief of the fire department, submitted this report: Number of alarms for the year, 34, divided as follows: Regular 11, still 12, false 1. Value of property saved, $3,250. The special alrms were for the Park Club on July 4 when supervision was exercised during a pyrotechnic display, a haystack fire at the Watchung springs on November 19, this being outside of the borough limits, and for box 17 in this city last Wednesday night. The causes were divided in this manner: Grass 5, chimney 8, oil stove 2, lamps 2, children and matches 2, unknown 2, incendiary and 13 set by fire. Value of property saved $1,255.23.

Fred Becker, overseer of the poor, reported that his total receipts for the year, including balance left over, had been $1,326.76, and that he had disbursed $1,254.23. The clerk's and counsel's salaries cannot be made up until after the first of the year as a number of accounts remain to be included.

In the regular order of business, Mr. Lee asked that a resolution be passed defining the powers and expenditures of the borough during the end of the consolidation committee. He explained that the joint body had been handicapped in this respect and that the action he requested had been taken by the Plainfield council. On motion from the Mayor, Mr. Lee presented a resolution covering the needs and it was passed. Mr. Lee was made a member of the committee because of his connection with the council and he will continue to serve in the capacity as a clause in the county permits him.

Thomas Moran, Catherine Moran and other property owners petitioned for a fire box and hydrant at Watchung avenue and Regent street and Thomas Deter made application for a hydrant on Watchung avenue near in the fire department. Fred Emmons was appointed a call man to act as driver until a permanent man is secured and Mr. McGee reported auditing the books of the overseers of the poor and finding them correct. The resignation of Fred Breem as lieutenant in the fire department was received and accepted. He was appointed at the last meeting but afterward declined to serve.

When Mr. Lee's retirement from the council was suggested, Mayor Smalley took occasion to address him direct and among other things he said: "On the part of those you have represented in the council I want to thank you. I know what it means to serve as you have and realize the trying times and criticism it brings and when a man gives his services without pay as you have he deserves a hearty vote of thanks and I for one want to extend mine. I am very sorry that you are to retire and I hope the time will come when you will return to us and again take up the burden."

In reply Mr. Lee said: "I have been in the council six years and nine months and the work has been a pleasure, while I have also enjoyed the companionship of yourself and others. There have been times when I was criticised harshly but I realized that it was impossible to serve everyone agreeably and held to the purpose I thought was right. I retire with the best wishes for those who remain in the council and also yourself."

Mr. Lee will be succeeded by B. R. Waldron.

Spending Their Money.

The cabinet of the boys' department of the Y. M. C. A. held a meeting Thursday afternoon and decided how the proceeds of the mock trial would be expended. Four new game tables, a combination board, new chess sets, repairs to the Balletto & Hompath and has had a success- ful practice.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Lesson Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 30.

By REV. S. H. DOYLE.

Topic.—Reaching faith.—Phil. iii, 12-14.

There are times and seasons in our lives when we cannot but take a view of life and be filled with desire at least to make the future better than the past. One of these times is at the beginning of a new year. It is undoubtedly the season of all seasons when the heart of man is most inclined to make an effort to improve upon his past life. Some may consciously make definite resolutions to accomplish this result, and others, while they may have wearied of the resolution habit, yet perhaps even unconsciously do feel the desire as a new year approaches to make it the very best year of their lives. And it is most reasonable to have such feelings and desires. Any year of life may be our last year, and how natural that we should want our last year to be our best, both temporarily and spiritually.

The apostle Paul in the familiar words selected for our topical reference seems, as it were, to be taking stock of his life—of just how he stood in his relation to God and to life—and no words in Scripture are more suggestive for such an occasion as a new year, than these words of the apostle written to the Philippians. He reviews the situation in his own life, and sets before us the supreme aim of his life. His attitude toward the future is one of absolute forgetfulness of progress as he desires to do he sets but one aim before him and with all energy reaches forth to the goal before him. His description of his aim and his reasons for it and methods by which it is to be attained, are worthy of our most careful consideration of the subject. "Reaching forth," especially as applied to this season of the year.

1. Paul was led to desire future advancement for the reason that he had not yet attained to all that he felt he had in view. "Not as though I had already attained or were already perfect." This should be our supreme reason for reaching forth, for desiring to improve upon 1906 in 1907. We have not yet reached perfection. We cannot say, "There is nothing beyond." With the best of us there is still room for improvement. No matter to what Christian experiences we may have attained, there are still richer and higher experiences beyond. Let us ask before how faithfully we may have served our Master, there is still the possibility of more and improved work for Christ. Regardless of the high standard of our personal lives, they can be improved. Let us not be satisfied with our present attainments, but let us determine to do better and be better in the coming year than ever before.

2. In Paul's desire to improve upon the past he determined to forget it. "Forgetting those things which are behind," he reached forth. The remembrance of the past may hinder present and future progress. We may be depressed by its weaknesses. The recollection of its sins may lead us to commit them again. Forget the past. Make the new start and let the past bury the past. Reach forward to the future.

3. Paul had a single, definite aim before him. "This one thing I do * * * I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Many fail to have success or success in anything, and not less so in the moral and spiritual life. And what a goal Paul selected toward which to aim! His one ambition was not gold or fame or pleasure or power, but the salvation of souls. He would live for the supreme aim of our lives, and everything else should be subordinated to it. "For what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

The Endeavor Badge in Greece.

Several of the foreign countries now have their Christian Endeavor badges.

GREEK BADGE.

In the streets of Athens may sometimes be seen a young man on service bearing the letter Z. This is the Greek Christian Endeavor badge, a symbol for that is becoming more widely known every year in the land of Socrates and Demosthenes.—The Irish Endeavorer.

A Greater Mission.

This is the white heat enthusiasm General Secretary Von Ogden Vogt puts into the closing paragraph of his account of a recent Christian Endeavor town in the Mississippi valley:

"The more of this great western half of the Mississipi valley I get over the more I marvel at the greatness and promise of our land. I get into a regular 'wild white horses champ and foam' mood when I think of it—the vast possibilities. Institutions that we the youth of today will develop before we are old. Truly let us pray for strength of mind and heart and will to know what a chance we have and to seize it like men. Christian Endeavor is alert in this vast region. It will have a greater and greater mission."

Told In Figures.

General Secretary Von Ogden Vogt's latest report contains these noteworthy figures: The total number of societies enrolled June 1, 1906, was 67,416. The number of June 1, 1905, was 66,228, the net gain for the past year being 1,188.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Dec. 30.—Our Purposes For 1906. Have They Been Accomplished?

By REV. WALTER I. YATES, D. D.

As to growth and grace.—II Pet. iii, 18. Perseverance in the observances of the quiet hour.—Matt. vi, 6. Faithfulness in the Lord's supper.—I Corinthians xi-Cor. vi, 1. Fidelity in Christian stewardship.—I Pet. iv, 10. Diligence in Bible study.—Acts xvii, 11. Love for souls.—Prov. xi, 30. Col. i, 28.

The year is past. Mistakes have been made by all of us. Some things have been done which we regret and would gladly undo, but we are not going back over that track, and they will remain forever out of our power can undo them. "It is useless to cry over spilled milk." We boys learned that on the old farm years back. You learned it in different words in the city streets where you had your early training. It is useless to brood over the things we regret, but it is wise at the close of the run to look over the field and see where we tripped and note what threw us. We cannot play that game over, but we can go over and see where we lost it, and then we shall be better fixed to lose no more, or at least not to lose them by the same mistakes.

Now as to growth. It is easy to step on the scales and see at what figure we tip them. Most of us know our normal weight and the point below which is danger of safety. Most men know something as to their height and the weight that is proper for it. In the distance jump, the speed in running and many other like things. How many know their power in moral and religious things, the resisting strength against certain temptations, their point in any cause requiring spiritual force?

In our best colleges and in many schools of lower grade every student at entrance is examined carefully by a physician and the measures and records every item of importance regarding the bodily condition and notes in what particulars the student is below the normal average for his age. It is only possible to do this in spiritual things, but it certainly is possible for us to know our capacity and attainments and our deficiences far better than most people ever do know them.

Some teachers of religion dislike all self-examination or will have as little of it as possible, thinking such exercise of soul is apt to make one morbid, oversensitive and moody. There is danger that if too much time is spent in introspection and anxiety as to one's inner condition that one may become morbid, spiritual condition from too much concentration of thought on self. But it is a mistake no less serious to never take time for self examination of any kind.

There is no great progress possible except as we stop now and then to out where we are. We must at intervals note our condition and see where it falls below the standard of healthy religious experience. We must clearly apprehend the points in which we are deficient as well as those where we have unusual strength.

It is more agreeable to our feelings to cultivate those points in which we easily excel, but prudence and due regard for harmonious development dictate that we give particular attention to our deficiences. We need well rounded development and not oneside dness.

This being so, why not sit down at the close of the year and honestly investigate your condition? Find out not only what you are doing, but how quite if you are making advancement and, if you are doing so, is it sufficiently rapid considering the circumstances in which you are placed?

No one ever gained a virtue into be ing. If you want to get over to get somewhere, you will need to get up and start. Are you started? Then climb up on some hill by the roadside occasionally and look over the path you have come. If it looks to be hot the best possible road ahead and over if you cannot find the best possible road to the next turn in advance.

We ought to grow and grow in grace as well as in ability to do. Will you not make the coming year better than the past has been? Show how you can do so and are resolved to put your best endeavors into the work for Christ and yourself?

Something to Be Thankful For.

Thank God every morning when you get up that you have something to do that day which must be done, whether you like it or not. Being forced to work and forced to earn your own will prove a blessing to you temperance, self control, diligence, strength of will, content and a hundred virtues which the idle will never know.—Charles Kingsley.

Constituents of Life.

Life is made up not of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things, in which smiles and kindness and small obligations given habitually are what win and preserve the heart and secure comfort.—Sir Humphry Davy.

An Autumn Song.

My Father is painting the landscape
In colors of gold and red;
The valleys, the hills and the mountains
Are beautiful everywhere.
He touches the trees in the forest,
And the leaves clap their hands in delight;
His colors He takes from the sunshine,
And His brush is the frost of the night.

On a bright early morning behold Him
As the sun o'er the mountains doth shine
And the birds sing their anthems to praise him
Mid the beauties of nature sublime.
He changes the green into crimson
With the brown and the yellow and red;
His love is so great for His children
The view is for them to behold.

Oh, the wonderful love of the Father,
How tender and sweet it must be!
He lovingly cares for His children,
Though unmindful of Him they may be.
He sends them the rain and the sunshine,
And the seed time and harvest are sure,
His bow in the heavens reminds Him
Of His promise to man evermore.

—William Watt.

FOR THE GENTLER SEX

Graceful Hands.

It is next to impossible to make the hands slender. You can make *them graceful by indulging in cer*tain Delsarte exercises, stretching the fingers to the utmost and closing the hand slowly and gracefully. You can also keep your hands soft and white by using a pure soap and cosmetic jelly. If, in addition, the nails are beautifully manicured, the extra plumpness will not matter so very much. The main thing is to have the hands white and soft, the nails polished and clean and to move the hands gracefully. All these delightful conditions can be cultivated.

Towels.

Much to the comfort of the aver*age man and the sensible woman*, the fringed damask towel is being supplanted, or at least supplemented, by the hemstitched huckaback. To many persons huckaback affords just the right degree of roughness and resistance to be agreeable, while it also absorbs moisure rather more rapidly. For the dower chest of the bride nothing is prettier than huckaback towels embroidered or hemstitched usually in old blue, old pink, white or a color that matches the decorative scheme of some particular room.

Timbales of Cooked Rabbit.

Grease well one dozen small tim*bale molds; sprinkle with chopped* tongue and chopped mushrooms. Mix in a basin six ounces chopped cooked rabbit, one cup of brown sauce, one tablespoonful of bread crumbs, salt, cayenne, one raw egg, and the lined molds; cover with greased paper and steam for twenty minutes. Serve with brown sauce, flavored with red current jelly and a little sherry wine.

For the Complexion.

One writer on the care of the complexion says that no astringent toniic equals cold rain water or cistern water. Dip the soft linen rag into the water, slap the face gently with it for five minutes every morning and see what happens. It stimulates the circulation, she says, and the activity of the circulation is precisely that which produces the clearness and brilliancy of skin so much desired.

Shelf Paper.

"If paper is used on your closet shelves," says an expert in domestic science, "teach your waitress to put on three thickness at once. It is as easy to cut three layers as one. They can be removed then one at a time as they become soiled, a few dishes being removed and replaced as the paper is rolled away, and it requires much less time than to remove all the dishes and put on new paper."

To Keep Colors from Running.

To prevent blue from running into a white garment, dissolve a teaspoonful of copperas in a pailful of soft water, and a piece of lime the size of an acorn and soak the garments in this water two hours before washing. To keep colors from running in washing black cotton, put a teaspoonful of black pepper in the first water.

To Keep Clothes White.

In putting away white clothes from one season to another, to keep them from yellowing, wrap them in a made of an old sheet, wash clean, dip in strong bluing water and dry. It should be very blue. Then put clean clothes in bag loosely and hang in a dark closet. Clothes will keep white for years by this method.

To Clean Bronzes.

First rub the bronze well with a dry cloth to remove every particle of dust. After dusting, wash well in strong white soapsuds and ammonia. Alnse clean and polish with rotten stone and a tiny bit of oil. Then rub off every trace of the oil. Never let any kind of acid touch the bronze, as it will eat it.

Cabbage Stumps.

Why do we throw away tender cabbage stumps? Why do we throw away apple peelings and apple cores? Apple cores and peelings make a splendid jelly, but it is well to get rid of most of the pips. Cabbage stumps when young are a valuable addition to stews. They should be sliced.

To Clean a White Felt Hat.

Make a soft paste of magnesia and cold water. Apply with a flannel. Let it get thoroughly dry and then brush with a fairly stiff brush till the powder is removed, and the hat will look like new.

Ebony Brushes.

The backs and handles of ebony brushes should be rubbed over with a little boiled linseed oil after washing and then rubbed with a soft duster till every vestige of oil is removed.

Washing Linoleum.

Never use either soap or brush when washing linoleum. Use instead warm water with a soft cloth or flannel; rinse with water and skim milk and wipe dry with a soft cloth.

To Keep Chimneys Clean.

When the lamp chimneys are cleaned a paper cone set over each one will prevent the accumulation of dust and greasy vapor that is apt to collect on them before evening.

For Softening the Skin.

Pure glycerine is too strong for the majority of skins. Diluted with three parts of aqua pura or rose water, it will be found soothing and softening to nearly all skins.

ON THE RIGHT TRACK.

Many expressions of approval have been given what might be called the pre-inaugural speech delivered by Mayor-elect Fisk to the members of the incoming Common Council the other night. "Good wholesome advice," is the way the Newark Evening News, for example, sums it up, adding that if it is followed, the Common Council will become one of the most successful in New Jersey.

In commenting on the subject, the Newark paper said:

"There are two seasons of the year when the atmosphere is rife with erudite advice on how to manage affairs. The one is in June, when commencement orators explain the only methods by which universal goodness to be obtained, and the other is about where about the beginning of the year, when Governors, Mayors and other high executive officers tell their respective legislative bodies how to do what is right.

"In neither season is the advice taken to heart. In neither is it acted on to any noteworthy degree. The ones to whom it is given either forget it or have so much other business on hand that they haven't time to devote to it, and the less elaborate essays brought to their attention when schools close or when courts organize. And yet the advice is good, and in some cases it is eminently practical and salutary. If it were followed to certainty it would result in great and permanent advantage to the people at large and in great credit to those entrusted with the management of affairs.

"Reference might be made to the messages of the Presidents to Congress, to the Governors' annual messages to the Legislatures, to the Mayors' messages to councils of different years, all showing what good things were suggested and how poorly they were carried out. Or selections might be made from Governor Stokes' advice with reference to the treatment of intelligent, independent voters, or from Governor-elect Hughes' suggestions as to the regulation of public service corporations. But there is a later and a simpler instance of official advice from which an important lesson may be learned.

"The Mayor-elect of Plainfield, Charles A. Fisk, declined to take part in the caucus of local Republicans in committmen elect, but made them a little speech in which he said, among other things: 'Don't tie your predecessor down by any conditions of your vote. If you can't trust him elect him. Don't bother the municipal council. Don't have any 'Big Six,' but let all work to one end and for the city's good. Don't try to use your office to pull any one's chestnuts out of the fire. Work with me for the city's interests, irrespective of personal feelings.'

"That was good advice and there was enough of it, if followed, to make Plainfield's City Council one of the most popular and successful of municipal bodies in the State. When Abraham Lincoln was elected President he chose for 'the great Cabinet' those who were continually trying to get the ground from under his feet and to make him look ridiculous. And they were, in his judgment, the very best men the nation could afford, for the positions to which he had called them, and he did everything he could for the nation's best interests, irrespective of personal feelings."

THE STELTON CROSSING.

There should be no delay on the part of the Pennsylvania Railroad in placing proper safe-guards at Stelton crossing to prevent the repetition of such terrible accidents as occurred on Tuesday night. Only one perfectly effective way to do so suggests itself that being by elevating the tracks. The cost of such an improvement, however, might possibly be too great in the eyes of the company, and therefore the next best thing would be to place a gatekeeper on guard by night as well as by day. As half a dozen persons have met death on the crossing in high time that something be done at once.

The retirement of Charles A. Lee as a member of the North Plainfield Council should not go unnoticed. It is fitting that some word of recognition should be given the valuable services he has rendered the people of the borough. For nearly seven years, Mr. Lee has served his fellow citizens as a member of that body and that he did so in a conscientious, faithful and very able manner no one will deny. On one or two occasions he has opposed the ideas and suggestions of some of his colleagues regarding municipal policies in a manner that was not for him the highest admiration of even those with whom he has disagreed. He retires with a most creditable record, one thoroughly appreciated by those who have followed his career.

The strenuous life was emulated in the career of Chaplain McCabe.

AMUSEMENTS.

At the Bijou theatre in New York, May Irwin has scored an old time success in her new George V. Hobart play. Owing to legal complications the title of the play has been in doubt for the past few days. At first it was known as "Mrs. Wilson, That's All," but a certain firm, manufacturers of a certain brand of bar supplies, objected and threatened injunction proceedings; and rather than be haled to court Miss Irwin dropped the "That's All" and announced her play as "Mrs. Wilson." Later, however, the name Andrews was added to the title and it is now advertised as "Mrs. Wilson Andrews." The critics have most generally united in declaring that Miss Irwin's new vehicle gives her splendid opportunity for the display of her talents as a fun maker and all her old time admirers have been out in full force. Her new Jersey Commandery, No. 19, K. T., of East Orange, Friday. The work was executed in full form by Washington Commandery, No. 1, K. T., of Hartford, Conn., in the presence of Sir Knights from Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut, Delaware and this State. There was a delegation of just thirty-five Sir Knights from Trinity Commandery. Washington Commandery has the reputation for excellence in conferring degrees and this was fully sustained last night.

Governor Stokes was the honored guest of Jersey Commandery in receiving the degree, and it was through the courtesy of the commandery that Mayor-elect Charles Jos. Fisk, Major Mahlon Edwards, former Councilman William Starr Bullock, Stephen B. Joseph and former Councilman J. Stephen Higham, of Trinity Commandery, were permitted to receive the degree.

The conclave was held in the Women's Club building, East Orange, and the hall was crowded to the limit. The greater part of the evening was taken up in conferring the Order of Malta. Afterward Jersey Commandery entertained the Sir Knights at a banquet. Sir Knight W. A. Pinto was the chairman of the committee having charge of the transportation for members of Trinity Commandery.

A class of nearly two hundred members of various commanderies of New Jersey presented themselves in company with Governor Stokes for similar honors.

What took place within the walls of the asylum while the ceremonies were in progress is not course a secret book, for the Knights Templars' work is as secret and its secrecy is as zealously guarded from allen eyes and ears as that of any other branch of Freemasonry, and no more than the least hint ofthe solemnity and impressiveness of the ceremonies in the asylum is ever divulged. That the order stands for Christian brotherhood and that its membership embraces the flower of the Christian manhood of this and other States is everywhere recognized.

Among those present in the Washington Commandery and officers of visiting grand commanderies were entertained at dinner at the Orange Club at 6 o'clock.

About one hundred Sir Knights were at the tables. Governor Stokes occupied the seat of honor, at the right of Eminent Commander James B. Dill. The diners received, by standing, Sir Knight General Ballington Booth, of the Volunteers of America, associate prelate of Jersey Commandery, and the Rev. John Carver at the dinner. From the club house the guests were escorted to the asylum by the officers of Jersey Commandery.

At the asylum Right Eminent Commander Garman, of the New Jersey Grand Commandery, was formally received by the assembled Sir Knights and assumed charge of the conclave.

May Irwin will be seen at the New Plainfield theatre next Monday night in a new play by George V. Hobart called "Mrs. Wilson-Andrews," with which she has been entertaining New Yorkers for the past two months at the Bijou theatre. It is said that the new offering is of a more legitimate character than those which she has had in the past, but still gives a character of the kind in which she revels. The part played by the star herself is that of a society woman with a liking for bridge whist, the fondness for which gets her into all sorts of trouble.

Narrowly Escaped Asphyxiation.

While roasting peanuts in their father's new store at Scotch Plains, Saturday, Walter and Robert Ianson, sons of Frank Ianson, narrowly escaped asphyxiation from charcoal fumes. They were in a rear room by themselves and the father was attracted by the sudden cessation of the roasters' turning and a heavy fall. Rushing in he found Walter unconscious and Robert nearly so from the effects of the fumes. He threw the windows open and by adopting other methods brought the boys around. Both suffered severe nausea but no other ill effects.

A Home Wedding.

A quiet wedding was celebrated at the home of W. C. Applegate, of East Seventh street, Saturday night at 8 o'clock when Miss Mary Snyder, of this city, was made the wife of Herman Greiwe, of Newark. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Parsons, of Grace M. E. church, and was witnessed by a gathering of relatives and friends. A reception followed during which a supper was served. Mr. and Mrs. Greiwe will make their home in Newark.

MADE KNIGHTS OF MALTA

Governor Stokes, Mayor-Elect Fisk Among 200 Presenting Themselves.

Five Plainfielders Knighted in Templars' Highest Degree—Commander Dill Toastmaster At Banquet.

The Order of Malta was conferred on Governor Edward C. Stokes, two hundred others included, and five members of Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. BOYCOTT UNLIKELY HERE

Knights of Columbus will Not Take Drastic Action Against French Goods.

FEELING IS BITTER

The State Organization, However, May Follow the Example of Order in Massachusetts.

Although it is considered probable that the State Council of the Knights of Columbus will follow the action of the Massachusetts State Council and declare a boycott on all goods manufactured in France, it is not likely that the local societies affiliated with the Catholic church will make formal and recorded expression on the battle between the State and Church in France. Members high in both the Knights of Columbus and Holy Name Societies in this city said this morning that they did not expect any action by their organizations. Sympathy was expressed with the French Catholics, and the French Government was denounced as unjust and tyrannical, but it was the opinion of those interviewed that the Plainfield organizations would not feel it to be proper or worth while to pass formal resolutions. If the members felt strongly enough on the subject to express their views of French make in their possession, they would as readily ban the products of French manufacture, it was argued, without a formal boycott resolution as with it.

State Deputy Charles J. Barrett, of the K. of C., in discussing the situation in the country and State, said:

"The sympathy of all members of the Knights of Columbus, not only in New Jersey, but throughout the world, is with the Church. So far no time has been set for a discussion regarding the advisability of placing a boycott upon French goods."

Another prominent K. of C. man said: "The action of the Massachusetts Knights is in accord with the general feeling among Catholics throughout the country who have been made acquainted with the true condition of affairs through the medium of a free press. A demonstration by American Catholics and a vigorous protest would probably avail much. The merchants of France would soon awaken to the fact that the Government had injured their interests.

"It is to be deplored that the innocent clergy of France are being persecuted. It should be remembered that the Catholics of this country did more than all others to establish the greatness of France as a nation in America. Let France liberate the Catholic church and American Catholics will be satisfied. Catholics, not French Freemasons, made France, and it will be the most disastrous for the people of France to express sincere regret that they allowed the present situation to be brought about."

SCOTCH PLAINS PEOPLE ENJOY XMAS PROGRAMME.

"Santa's Substitutes" Attracts Last Congregation at Baptist Church.

"Santa's Substitutes," a Christmas cantata, attracted a large congregation to the Scotch Plains Baptist church, Saturday night, the entertainment being given by the Sunday-school. The Christmas sketch convinced all the little folks that there is but one Santa Claus and that even Mrs. Santa Claus is not able to take his place. When Santa was critically ill and Mrs. Santa called Dr. Westcott to leave his bed, Mrs. Santa decided to take his place, after vainly trying to get a substitute. Her attempt was a complete failure, even with the help of fairies and the brownies, which were added to her misery by mixing up the presents so that no one received what they expected.

Finally, Old Santa, contrary to the wish of his doctor, left his bed and arrived in time to save the day for the little ones and made everyone happy. Santa and well as Jack Frost was impersonated by L. D. H. Gilmour, and Miss Louise Mygrant took the part of Mrs. Santa. Captain H. B. Sanders was the sand-man, Miss Elsie Cook, the old woman who lived in a shoe, Howard Gilmore was Ananias Bond, Charles R. Vincent was the grandpa and Mrs. C. R. Vincent was Aunt Maria.

Other parts of the programme included a cornet solo by W. S. Mygrant. Much credit is due Mrs. Chas. R. Vincent and her assistants for the excellent entertainment and the drilling of the children. After the cantata presents were distributed to young and old. Superintendent Charles R. Vincent was remembered by a handsome volume by one of the well-known authors and the pastor, Rev. T. Moore-Smith was surprised with a purse of $100 as an evidence of esteem and appreciation.

Tendered Surprise Party.

Henry Jaeger, of West Third street, was tendered a surprise party by twenty-five of his friends, Saturday night. Games, dancing and music were features of an informal programme at the close of which refreshments were served. The affair was arranged by Miss Annie Jaeger and Miss Mary Thomas.

ELECTION ERROR STANDS

State Board Can't Go Behind Returns For Voting Machine Mistake.

THE RAHWAY MUDDLE

Election Officers of Fourth Ward, in That Place, May Be Authorized to Correct Martine's Vote.

Attorney-General McCarter has submitted an opinion to Governor Stokes, as chairman of the State Board of Canvassers, advising him that in his judgment the functions of that body are purely ministerial, and that, therefore, the board cannot go beyond the returns submitted to it. The opinon was asked for to determine whether the board could correct the obvious mistakes made in the Fourth ward of the city of Rahway, where James E. Martine, the Democratic candidate for Congress, received more votes than there were names on the poll book.

The attorney-general has found authority, however, by which the board may refer the returns back to the election officers for correction, and this course will undoubtedly be pursued. Mr. McCarter in his opinion to the Governor says:

"The question has been submitted to me whether or not the State Board of Canvassers is justified in inspecting the voting machine in question and correcting the obvious error that has been made in the returns. I have examined the subject with considerable care, and, contrary to my first impression, have reached the conclusion that it is well settled in this State that the duties of the County Board of Canvassers are purely ministerial, and that in examining the returns submitted to them and announcing the result, they have no right to go behind such returns and ascertain if they are, in fact, correct. The duties of the State Board of Canvassers are imposed by the Legislature in practically identical language with those of the county board, and I apprehend, therefore, that the same rule governs them. I think, however, that when an obvious error exists, such as is here found, the board has the right and is charged with the duty of having improper returns amended so that the true state of affairs can be presented to them."

JUSTICE CLARK FOUND UNCONSCIOUS ON ROADSIDE.

Well-known Scotch Plains Resident Believed to Have Been Waylaid and Robbed.

Joseph Clark, the well-known justice of the peace of Scotch Plains, who was stricken with paralysis Wednesday night while walking home, is improving slowly. He fell on Front street, where he laid for over an hour before assistance reached him. Mr. Clark's failure to return home on time caused his family much anxiety, and his son, Clinton B. Clark, started out to look for him. The aged man was found lying on the street unconscious and helpless and at first was thought to be the victim of foul play owing to a bruise on the head. The affair was kept quiet for a few days while an investigation was carried on.

Dr. Westcott is convinced that Justice Clark's injuries were due to his fall, yet when he left home he had several dollars in his pocket and when found he did not have a cent. There was a supposition that some one of Mr. Clark's enemies may have way-laid and robbed him.

Golden Wedding Anniversaries.

Mr. and Mrs. John Ross, of East Sixth street, will celebrate the golden anniversary of their wedding on Monday, January 7, at the home of their son, Lewis Ross, on East Seventh street. On January 1 they will attend the golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Benwood in Piscataway. They were guests at the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Benwood fifty years ago.

BOTH Y. M. C. A. FIVES LOST TO ORANGE TEAMS

DISASTER ON FOREIGN FLOORS FOLLOWS THE LOCAL PENNANT CHASERS.

The Y. M. C. A. basketball teams lost two games Saturday night to the Orange Y. M. C. A. in the Orange Y. M. C. A. The first team lost by a score of 53 to 40. The second team by a score of 51 to 26.

In the contest with the first teams it was truly a fight for blood. Both fives exhibited excellent team work. Throughout the first period of play it was a case of nip-and-tuck on both sides. As fast as Orange would cage the ball the Plainfield boys would follow suit with one for them.

Throughout the second half of play Orange succeeded in maintaining a lead. Several times it looked as though the visitors would overcome this, but the home team held to its slight advantage until the end of the contest. The line-up:

ORANGE.	PLAINFIELD.
Hand ..... right forward	Denton
Schroder ..... left forward	Collier
Wachenfeld ..... center	Scull
Poeller ..... right guard	Schoonmaker

Score at end of first half—Orange 27, Plainfield 20. Final score—Orange 53, Plainfield 40. Goals from field—Hand 11, Schroder 7, Wachenfeld 5, Poeller 1, Denton 2, Collier 5, Scull 3, Schoonmaker 4, Jacot 1. Free throws—Schroder 4, Denton 7, Collier 2, Jacot 1. Referee—Morse. Umpire—Short. Time of halves—20m. and 15m.

The second team defeated Plainfield in easy fashion. The home team outclassed their opponents at every point of the game. The Plainfield boys put up a hard struggle, but it of the contest. The line-up:

Orange Juniors.	Plainfield Juniors.
Austin ..... right forward	Collier
Leimer ..... left forward	Gilmore
Poeller ..... center	Aaholm
Freiday ..... right guard	Loizeaux

Score at end of first half—Orange 35, Plainfield 16. Final score—Orange 51, Plainfield 26. Goals from field—Austin 4, Poeller 13, George 2, Collier 5, Gilmore, Aaholm 2, *Loizeaux 4. Free throws—Leimer 3, Collier, Aaholm. Referee—Short. Umpire—Morse. Time of halves—20m. and 15m.

Standing of the teams:

	Won.	Lost.	P. C.
Orange	4	1	.800
Hudson City	4	1	.800
Montclair	3	1	.750
Newark	2	3	.400
Orange	2	3	.222
Plainfield	1	3	.205
Rahway	0	3	.000

P. H. S. FIVE TROUNCED BY MONTCLAIR BOYS.

Game On Local Court Saturday Resulted in Victory For Visitors Score Being 44-11.

A defeat for the Plainfield High School basketball team by the score of 44 to 11 was the result of the game on the local court between the Montclair High School, played Saturday afternoon on the Plainfield High School court. In spite of the one-sided score it was a well played game; and clean, there being but few fouls made on either side.

The Montclair team surpassed the P. H. S. in passes and gave one of the best exhibitions of team work witnessed in the High School this year. Caldwell and Morris played well for P. H. S.

The local line-up:

J. Gavett, Morris, forwards; Caldwell, center; Bogardus, Fountain, guards.

Referee, J. Loizeaux; timer, B. Leggett.

All the sunshine of the south, all the chivalry of its gentlemen, all the beauty of its women, in truth, the whole atmosphere of the Old Dominion scented South is in "Under Southern Skies," which will be at the New Plainfield theatre New Year's, afternoon and night. The art of Lottie Blair Parker is a natural one, as witness her "Way Down East." This art, she has brought to bear in "Under Southern Skies" with remarkable success.

The marriage of Miss Nellie Walcott, only daughter of James Walcott, to "The Man of Her Choice," will take place at the New Plainfield theatre January 3. True love never does run smooth, and there is likely to be very lively times before the actual ceremony is performed on the stage, as Nellie's father is very much opposed to the match, and is likely to make trouble, so be on hand early if you want to be in on all that goes on.

Miss Janet Linnett, of Newark, has returned home after a visit with Miss Bessie Bond, of East Front street.

George Endicott, of Park avenue, a student at Lawrenceville Academy, is spending the holiday season at home.

CHRISTMAS CELEBRATED IN THE LOCAL CHURCHES

Protestant Denominations in City and Borough Observe the Day of Christ's Nativity.

WITH ELABORATE MUSIC

Special Services Morning and Evening—Children's Exercises in Many of the Churches.

Services commemorating Christ's nativity were held in the various Protestant churches of Plainfield and North Plainfield on Sunday. There were also appropriate exercises for the children in many of the churches.

Grace M. E.

Rev. Dr. Charles W. Parsons preached a Christmas sermon in Grace Methodist Episcopal church Sunday morning. The texts were: St. Matthew 1:23, "Emanuel, God with us;" and St. Luke 2:7, "There was no room for them in the inn." He said in part:

"Christmas—the world's jubilee—its boundaries this round globe swing in its courses, and beyond that for the throbbing air pulses with the glad acclaim, and beyond that, for heaven's arches ring. Wherever the name of Jesus has been spoken, in all lands, under all skies, in country wide and city full, happy human voices join the angel chorus, 'Glory to God in the Highest, and on Earth Peace Good Will to Men.'

"Two armies lay face to face on the continent of Europe. The eve of battle was on them but that eve was Christmas eve. By solemn compact hostilities were suspended, guards dismissed, pickets called in, and for that night differences were forgotten, anamosities laid aside, and an allegiance stronger even than love of country prevailed. And the world is wise when it remembers its history making days—in the country and in the church.

"Passion week, every week of it—and the glad Easter Sunday morning, but especially that day that dawned with song-burst and angel jubilee over Bethlehem's plains. And this great initial day ought to have greatest observance, for today to you people this morning, you whose homes for the weeks past have been full of plots and counterplots, the very aid electric and full of secrecy, I say to you one and all, your homes are what they are; your hearts are warm, your gifts and receivings many and varied because of the infinite Gift of God to this world.

"Is He indeed received with genuine welcome? He was not then. Think of it—and how sad the thought, although He was Emanuel, God with us, actually 'The Word made flesh to dwell among us' and 'The day spring from on high to give light to them that sit in darkness.' Yet 'there was no room for them in the inn.'

"When the saintly young Jewess stood at the door seeking admission the keeper bruskly waved her aside. Sad was it, inhuman, said yet the inn-keeper then did only what an inn keeper would do today. He turned them away who held and know them: their appearance was against them; they were very ordinary people in every day garb. They were poor. So the gates closed.

"But do you say, 'ah so bad, too bad, it wouldn't do such a thing.' I am not so sure that you have not done it. You know what it is; the old inn-keeper did not. If womanhood had not then been lifted from the dust, motherhood crowned and children glorified as Jesus called that, and that was His birth-night.

"Now there is some room for Him, it ought to be completed. Jesus has certainly gained full admission into the thinking of the world. And the doors of the hearts of many men swing wide open to Him in. Everybody is confident in Him, and no one criticeizes Him, and that can be said of no other. All men who believe at all, believe Him to have been the gift of God to man, and ninety-nine one-hundredths of all who call themselves Christians, believe Him to be Divine.

Dr. Parsons closed by saying: 'To you, Jesus gave Himself on the first Christmas day; to Him, will you give yourself on this last Christmas day. On this morning with 1900-19-40-50 other souls invited, will you not let the love of Christ so win you. His love so charm you, His blood so cleanse you, that this shall be the glad hour, and the holy place of your complete reconciliation to Him.'

The Sunday-school of Grace M. E. church held its exercises in the afternoon. Superintendent W. J. Conroy was in charge. There was a large attendance.

The programme included recitations by Mildred Harding, Elmer Coons, Fred Tomlinson, Grace Conover, Samuel Bodine, Hilda Story, Norman Conover, Evelyn Nelson, Russell Story, Mary VanWinkle, Bertha Pulver, Wilbur Bolen and Bessie Taylor; an exercise by eight girls, led by Clara Bodenheimer; songs by the infant class and by the school. The pastor, Rev. Dr. C. W. Parsons, spoke.

The decoration of the church was unusually pretty. Cedars, holly and evergreens were used.

Rev. Thomas Houston, the blind evangelist, spoke and sang at the evening service. He interested and impressed a large audience. His singing was remarkable for its beauty; his voice is appreciably better than that of the ordinary public speaker.

He spoke mainly, on the value of the religion of Christ and its importance to everybody. It was the duty of all people to accept the gift of salvation from Christ, who had given so much for them.

First Baptist.

There were two special services at the First Baptist church, one in the morning and the second in the afternoon at 3 o'clock, the latter in charge of the Sunday-school. The church was appropriately decorated with green roping, while over the organ was displayed a large star of evergreens, brilliantly lighted with small incandescent lights. In the absence of the pastor, Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, who is detained at home with an attack of laryngitis, was a disappointment, but his place was ably taken by Rev. J. W. Musson, of Faith Chapel, who preached an impressive Christmas sermon.

The choir under the direction of Howard Case, organist, rendered a number of special selections, some taken from the Christmas programme given Thursday night of last week. They included, "Say, Where Is He Born," Mendelssohn; "Sing We Noel," Gaul; "O Thou That Tellest," from the "Messiah," contralto solo, Miss Gertrude Hinz, and chorus; and the offertory, "In Bethlehem's Ancient City," West, soprano solo, Miss Lohella C. Harris. The other solo parts were taken by William Holmes, baritone, and George Smith, tenor.

The programme in the afternoon was in charge of the superintendent of the school, George H. Batchelor. It opened with a prelude, "Hymn to St. Cecile," Gounod, organ, violin and piano. There were these carols by the school: "See Amid the Winter's Flaky Snow," "The Heavenly Babe," "Shine on Bethlehem's Star," and "Christmas Carol." "A Bethlehem Baby" was sung by Ruth Johnson, Anna Sherwin, Mildred Wise, Dorothy Lee and Elmira Gordon Dobbins. There was also an anthem by the choir, "The Angels and the Shepherds," an offertory selection, violin solo, "Romance," Rubenstein, by Miss Florence Wohlfert, the offering being for the Day Nursery. Other interesting features were the fellowship exercise a Junior supplemental drill and a selection, "I Wonder," by the Primary department. Mrs. J. A. Powlinson, superintendent of the primary department had charge of the programme given by the children. There was no evening service at the church.

Special Christmas services were held all day at the First M. E. church, the music by the vested choir under the direction of J. Edmund Skiff being a feature. The church was appropriately decorated, as was also Vincent chapel, where the Sunday-school held its exercises in the afternoon and the morning by Dr. Herbert Welch, president of Ohio Wesleyan University, preached a Christmas sermon. The choir rendered these numbers:

"Sing O Heavens," Tours; "There Were Shepherds," Buck; "Bethlehem," Coombs, solo, Miss Bertha van Nuis Willis, and "Glory to God," Veazie.

In the evening the programme was almost entirely musical, these numbers being given: "Glory to God," Simpson; "Bethlehem," Bartlett; "Rejoice Greatly," from the "Messiah," Handel, solo, Miss Willis; "There Were Shepherds," Gaul; "Nazareth," Gounod, solo, Miss Mesick. In addition the pastor, Rev. A. C. McCrea, gave a short talk which was appropriate to the day.

The afternoon was devoted to Christmas exercises by the children in the Sunday-school, under the direction of James R. Joy, superintendent. There were carols, recitations and exercises by the young people, the programme being as follows:

Park Avenue Baptist.

An elaborate programme was enjoyed at the Park Avenue Baptist church throughout the day. The church and Sunday-school were lavishly decorated with Christmas greens and holly. In the morning the choir rendered special music and the pastor, Rev. A. E. Finn, preached a sermon appropriate to the occasion.

The principal service was in the afternoon under the auspices of the Sunday-school, of which George B. Hall is the superintendent. An orchestra, consisting of G. W. Moy, Ernest Higham, Miss Arline Brown, Miss Marjorie Brown, violins; Whitney C. Frazee, cornet, and Miss Mary Clark, pianist, accompanied all the music.

The programme opened with a coral by the school, "What Say the Bells;" and "Glory to God," followed by a recitation, "A Christmas Carol," Marielle Dunham; song, "The Bells Are Merrily Ringing," primary department; carol, "Shining," school; recitation, "What Makes Us Celebrate Christmas," Clara Hadley; song, "Happy Snow Flakes," primary department; carol, "All in the Silent Night," school; "The Christmas Story," junior department; solo and quartette, "The Birthday of a King," Charles Lewis, Miss Cora B. Brokaw, Miss Florence G. Hawkins and Roland C. Treadwell; carol, "Glad Tidings of Great Joy," school; recitation, "Our Gift," Cornelia Smith, Sarah Johnson, Gladys Hadley and Sarah Winkler; carol, "The Babe, Bethlehem Lullaby," intermediates; recitation, "The Guest Comes," Arline Brown; carol, "The Christmas Spirit," school.

There were also remarks by Superintendent George E. Hall in which he spoke of the offering to be received for the Day Nursery. This amounted to $20.25. In response to the appeal a large number of toys, games, books, etc., were donated for the Children's Home. Those who assisted the superintendent in arranging the programme consisted of Miss Elmira C. Runyon, Miss Charlotte Tennant, and Mrs. Harry C. Runyon.

In the evening the pastor, Rev. Mr. Finn, preached a Christmas sermon, his subject being "The Three Aspects of the Nativity." There was also special music by the choir.

Trinity Reformed.

Because of the illness of Dr. Schenck, the day's programme at Trinity Reformed church was not as elaborate as in former years but the spirit of the Christmas tide observed and the services were attended by large congregations. In the morning the choir, composed of Miss Ethel Moore, soprano; Miss Winifred Carroll, contralto; E. D. Young, tenor, and Fred L. Cutler, bass, sang special anthems and Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis delivered an impressive Christmas sermon. His text was "Peace on Earth," Luke 2:14, and had for its main thought the origin of Christmas and the Christmas tree. Choirmaster A. L. Titsworth had full charge of the musical programme which added greatly to the appropriateness of the occasion.

The evening service was in charge of the Sunday-school, Superintendent F. E. Smith conducting. With W. C. Leek leading and assisted by the Vivo Trio, M. A. Korff, violin, and the Messrs. Spear, violin and piano, the school sang carols from Adam Gelbel's "Songs of the Ages." Miss L. A. Force acted as accompanist. The singing was very hearty and greatly enjoyed by everyone. Special numbers were rendered by the choir and Rev. Walter T. Griffin, a favorite with the Sunday-school in general and the younger element in particular, gave an address that had the close attention of the entire gathering. His subject was "Where Is He," the question asked by the three kings.

Congregational Church.

Most of the forenoon and part of the afternoon were devoted to Christmas observance at the Congregational church Sunday. The Sunday-school observance followed almost immediately after the morning service at noon. There was no evening service. The church was decorated with ropings of evergreens, with hemlock boughs and with palms. The congregation was large.

Rev. Dr. Wm. Goodrich, the pastor, preached a message of Christmas cheer from the familiar text from St. Luke, "I bring good tiding to all people." He dwelt on the universality of the Christian religion; the Christmas tidings were fitted to the people of all the world.

The church choir sang special numbers with splendid effect. Mrs. Thomas B. McDonald sang a solo, W. Paulding DeNike, 'cellist, assisted in the music.

Carols were the feature of the Sunday-school service. The Sunday-school choir sang finely. E. C. Martin, violin, and Miss Alice Morgan, piano, played a duet. Mr. Goodrich gave a report talk.

First M. E.

There was a carol by the girls in Mrs. Judd Stewart and in the Junior department there were recitations by Vera Stiles, Alice Joy and Harry Staats and songs by Edward Crone, Violet Sutton, Lillian Apgar and Harold Crane. The choir's selection by the primary department followed and a recitation by Douglass Stewart. In the beginners' department there were recitations by Carlton More, Elizabeth Hicks and Frank Bowley, Jr., and by Charlotte Skiff and recitations by Jay Squire, Ella Vail, Roswell Ewart, Alfred Littell, Dorothy Plum, Loren Pope, Alice Beekman, Lois Beekman and the programme closed with a song by Frank Rowley, Jr.

Crescent Avenue and Chapels.

The Sunday schools of the Crescent Avenue church and its chapels, Hope, Warren and Bethel, held a union service at Crescent Avenue church, yesterday afternoon, similar to those conducted in recent years at Easter. The attendance was very large and the exercises were entered into with a hearty Christmas spirit. They were opened by prayer from Rev. F. D. Tilden, of Bethel chapel, followed by responsive readings conducted at various times by Superintendent H. C. Cochran, of the Crescent Avenue school; Superintendent Parvin, of Warren chapel, and Superintendent H. R. Munger, of Hope chapel. Miss Stanley, of the church choir, rendered a solo and an appropriate Christmas address was made by Dr. Zelie. Rev. Joseph O. McKelvey, of Warren chapel, offered prayer and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. Zelie.

At all three of the chapels, the pastors preached special sermons yesterday morning and last night and the congregations sang carols.

Monroe M. E. Church.

The Sunday-school exercises took the place of the morning service at the Monroe Avenue church yesterday. Carols were the great feature of the programme; song filled the church church from the opening of the exercises to their close.

The decorations were striking. Two large Christmas trees, flanked the platform; there was a floral bell, as well, and a fine display of evergreens.

The programme included recitations by Fred van Orden of the kindergarten department; Marion Stine, of the primary department; Miss May Stafford, Madeline Pennington and Edith Swartz, of the main school. Rev. E. E. Roberson, the pastor, gave a short talk. He was to have delivered an illustrated Christmas discourse, but the programme consumed so much time the talk was omitted.

Faith Chapel.

Under the direction of L. W. Randolph, superintendent, the Sunday-school at Faith chapel enjoyed a special Christmas programme, Sunday afternoon. The selections follow:

Song, "Hail to the King," school; Scripture lesson, Frank Stuart, assistant superintendent; prayer, Rev. J. W. Musson; welcome, Chris. Myers; violin solos, Clarence Lawrence, accompanied on the piano by Miss Elsie May Dunavan; recitations, "If I Had Been a Bethlehem Child," Bessie Agnew; "Our Gifts," Lillian Ryno, May Messinger, Beatrice Overbaugh, Bessie Griffin; "What Do I Want For Christmas?" Helen Myers; "Christmas at Home," David Myers; "Christmas Wish," John Peterson; "Happy Day," the Misses Bicknell. There were also carols by the primary department and the school and a feature was a vocal solo by Miss Emily Conger.

First Presbyterian Church.

The musical feature of the morning service at the First Presbyterian church Sunday was a solo by Miss Etta Raybert. In the evening, E. D. Cutting and Miss Nichol sang solos. The Sunday-school held a carol service, under the direction of F. C. Iglehart, in the afternoon.

HOT FIGHT ON FOR SENATE PRESIDENCY

RACE CLOSE BETWEEN HILLERY AND MINCH—CAUCUS THURSDAY NIGHT.

Political interest centres this week in the caucus of the Republican ma*jority of the Senate, which is to be* held Thursday evening at the home of Chas. Minch, in Bloomfield, N. J. At that time will be decided the fight between Senator Thomas J. Hillery, of Morris county, and Senator Bloomfield H. Minch, of Cumberland county, for the office of president for the coming session.

At the present time the contest is close. Both Mr. Hillery and Mr. Minch are confident of winning. The chances of each seem to be about even, with possibly a slight advantage in favor of Minch.

Senator Hillery is the logical candidate, and he would have been elected without doubt if the Northern counties of the State had not gone Democratic in the last election. Their defection leaves Mr. Hillery with less support than he would otherwise have, and on the p rinciple that to the victors belong the spoils, South Jersey, which remained loyal to the Republicans, claims the office. The friends of Hillery pledged to him last winter when he was made floor leader, a position which entailed much hard work during all of the session.

The Senate leadership will probably go to South Jersey. Senator J. Boyd Avis, of Gloucester, will, it is believed, be chosen for this position. It is not likely that the United States Senatorial situation will be discussed at the caucus.

SOMERSET CLUB FAIR NETTED HUNDRED DOLLARS.

Week's Affair Proved to Be a Greater Success Than Anticipated.

The Somerset Club week's fair was one of the most successful undertakings ever held in North Plainfield and the crowning glory came on Saturday night when it was announced that $100 had been realized as a result of the efforts of the members. The blind musician furnished the entertainment on Saturday night and there was lots else to give entertainment to the crowd that visited the clubhouse.

Edward Bimble got the $25 rug and William C. Smith the $7 one. Miss Helen Smalley received the lace curtains. There were numerous other minor awards. During the evening, Captain Smith conducted a five minute auction, which netted quite a sum. The general committee consisted of Captain W. C. Smith, John Shroppe and Fred Folket.

First National Bank Changes.

Adelbert Vail, one of the oldest employees of the First National Bank, having been engaged there as bookkeeper for over twenty years, has resigned his position and taken a similar one with Clifton & Camp*bell, of Park avenue.* His place at the bank has been taken by Harry B. Joseph, and the latter's place is filled by Howard Boss, formerly of the electric department of the Public Service Corporation.

LARDER RAIDED BY CROOK

Negro Thief Took All the Sunday Dinner of the Kaufmans.

CAPTURED AND ESCAPED

Policeman Nabbed Him As He Came Out of the House, But Shot In Vain As He Fled.

Patrolman Payne, patrolling West Seventh sereet at 1:25 o'clock Sunday morning, heard a door slam. The sound seemed to come from No. 531, occupied by W. T. Kaufman. Payne looked at No. 531, and as he looked a figure with a package under its arm hurried down the steps.

Payne got busy. The figure proved to be a light colored negro, a little under medium neight, about 27 years old. He had a pasteboard box under his arm. Payne took him to a street lamp and looked in the box. The contents caused the cop to open his eyes. They were:

One roast of meat, 12 pounds; two strips of bacon, a whole Taylor's ham, three packets of print butter, and thirty-six pats of butter.

The negro said the cook had given them to him. He said she was a friend of his. Payne decided the friendship needed investigation and took the negro to the alarm box to get Sergeant Kiely. The man had spoken plausibly, and gave no intimation of flight, so Payne took no hold on him as he reached for the box pull. When the cop was on the point of yanking the alarm, the negro took to his heels.

Payne gave chase, but the fugitive gained. The officer drew his revolver and after warning the negro to halt, fired. He sent four shots after the fugitive, and thinks one took effect, but the negro kept on and escaped.

Payne took the box of food to the Kaufman house. Mr. Kaufman recognized the roast and the rest of the things as the family's Sunday dinner. The negro had cleaned everything out of the larder except a few pieces of cold meat. The cook denied all knowledge of him, and the family believed her. She has been with them for sixteen years. The larder thief gained entrance through a side door.

WATCH OUT FOR THE SECOND STORY THIEF.

This Is His Season—Robbed a Front Street House Last Night.

When H. R. Horthrup and his family returned to their home at 434 East Front street, last night, after an absence of two hours, they found jewelry and money, valued all together at $215, missing. A front window showed how an uninvited visitor had made his entrance.

The theft was reported to the police. They could find no clue to the crook. The job looked like a regulation bit of second-story work, professional model.

Chief Kiely issued a warning to householders against second story men this morning, in connection with his statement on the case. This is *the season when second story and up*stairs thieves, porch climbers and the kindred varieties of crooks do most love to operate. Their favorite hours are suppertime and church time. A good protection against crooks while at supper is a little dog with sharp ears and a strident bark, in the upper part of the house.

Robert Pierson's Funeral.

The funeral of Robert Pierson, twenty-five years old, the Jersey Central bridge builder, who was killed on the Newark Bay draw, was held at his late home on South Bridge street in Somerville, yesterday afternoon, and was attended by a host of sorrowing relatives and friends. Rev. Dr. E. A. Woods, pastor of the First Baptist church, officiated, and burial was in the new cemetery. The body, which was found on Friday, was taken to Maxwell's morgue in Somerville that night. Pierson had been struck by the flyer on the shoulder. He was a member of the Red Men, who attended the funeral in a body.

TROLLEY HITS WAGON DRIVER HURLED OUT.

Accident of a Type Getting Commonplace with P. S. C. Trolleys.

An eastbound main line trolley car ran down one of the business wagons of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company on East Second street, Saturday afternoon about 4 o'clock, completely smashing the wagon and scattering the groceries over the street. Walter Swalm, the driver, was thrown out receiving severe injuries. The horse was uninjured.

Mr. Swalm had just left groceries at a house and was driving east on Second street, when the trolley suddenly bore down upon him. He declares that the motorman did not ring his bell and that he did not know of the presence of the car until it struck the rig. The wagon was a new one and had just been put into service. Mr. Swalm is now confined to his home, his injuries consisting of cuts and bruises, and is under the care of a physician.

MISS CASEY A HEROINE

Rescues Small Child From Under Hoofs of a Team.

AS MOTHER LOOKS ON

Child In Her Arms Made Her Helpless In the Face of the Other Little One's Danger.

With a child in her arms and another clinging to her skirts, Mrs. William Jamieson, of New York, was walking down West Front street at 6 o'clock Sunday night. At New St., the toddler saw something on the other side of the street that attracted it. The child let go the mother's skirt, and started across the roadway.

As it reached the middle of the street, a carriage driver at reckless speed approched. The child was directly in its path. Either the driver did not see the toddler or the horses were beyond control; whatever the cause the horses did not swerve an inch from their path. It looked for an instant as if a tragedy was about to take place, but Miss Lizzie Casey, heroine, of New street, stepped into the arena of events.

She saw the child's danger as she was walking by, and acted swiftly. She sprang into the street, and snatched the child back. She got it out of harm's way just as the team, still galloping hard, rushed by. Mrs. Jamieson, choking with fright, could barely thank her.

STOKES MAY ATTEND.

Says Only An Affair of State Will Keep Him from American Banquet.

The American banquet committee, which is making the arrangements for the local junior councils' affair ton be held at the Casino, met at Lawyer Harry C. Runyon's office Saturday night, for the purpose of discussing speakers. *A letter was re*ceived from Governor Stokes in which he stated that he had made a note of the date and that an important matter of State would be the only thing to prevent his attending. The committee expects to announce the toastmaster within a few days.

The tickets for the banquet are now on sale and may be procured from members of the committee. From present indications the affair will be more elaborate in every way than was last year's banquet and a big attendance is anticipated.

NEW JERSEY'S GEOLOGY

Annual Report of the State Geologist for Last Year Just Issued.

CHANGES ON THE COAST

Fossil Plants, Limestones and Other Subjects Treated in the Report.

The annual report of the State Geologist for 1905 has recently been published. In addition to the administrative report, which recounts briefly the operations of the survey and which was issued early in the year for the use of the Legislature, it contains a number of papers of more than ordinary interest.

"Changes along the New Jersey Coast" is the title of an article by Prof. Lewis M. Haupt, an eminent hydraulic engineer, in which the successive changes of coast line, particularly along the inlets between Sandy Hook and Cape May, are traced in detail. The work of the waves and currents in shifting the sands is analyzed, and some suggestions are made as to protective measures necessary to prevent the encroachments of the sea. A number of maps showing the position of inlets at different periods, and half-tone illustrations of the features along the shore, add much in making the report of interest.

In Part II., Edward W. Berry gives a brief sketch of fossil plants, traces the development of plant life during the different geological periods, and, pointing out the significant features of their floras, briefly discusses in detail the flora found in the clays near Cliffwood, in Monmouth county, and describes a number of new species. This paper, although somewhat technical in character, possesses some features of interest to all interested in botany.

A report upon "The Chemical Composition of the White Crystalline Limestones," making Part III. of the report, is published at opportune time. The demand for a high-stone high in carbonate of lime is comparatively free from silica and magnesia has directed attention to our extensive deposits of white limestone, particularly those near Franklin Furnace, in Sussex county. The Geological Survey has made a large number of analyses of these limestones, both from the quarries which are already opened and also from other localities which seem worthy of development. Through the courtesy of companies already established in the district other analyses have been obtained. This report is accompanied by a map showing the location of the white limestone and the points from which samples were taken, and will be of great value to all persons interested in the occurrence of high-grade limestones.

The question of portable water is a vital one to city life, particularly to that portion of the State whose natural source of supply is to be found in the Upper Passaic Valley. For this reason, the possibility of establishing a huge storage reservoir in this valley by the erection of a dam at Little Falls has been carefully investigated by the Survey, and C. Vermeule in his report discusses the questions involved. He shows that by a dam at Little Falls having a length of 6,000 feet it will be possible to create a lake in the low land along the river having an area at normal level of over 30,000 acres and a maximum depth of 28 feet. Such a lake would have storage capacity to furnish 396,000,000 gallons daily, even during the dry season. Of this 100,000,000 gallons should be allowed to run off through the stream channel being used to furnish power at Little Falls, Paterson and Passaic, and to flush the lower stream in order that it may be maintained in a wholesome condition. There would be left 296,000,000 gallons daily available as a water-supply, an amount sufficient to supply growing demands of the metropolitan district of the State for the next thirty-five years. Until so needed the surplus water would be available for sale as power. The storage afforded by the proposed lake would be ample to provide for even the greatest floods which have ever occured upon the river.

Mr. Vermeule's report contains a carefully worked-out statement as to the probable cost of such an improvement, and points out that if undertaken at all, it should be carried out as a public trust under the control of the State. A large map showing in detail the position of the lake and companies the report.

The peat deposits of the State are treated in a carefully prepared paper by C. W. Parmelee and W. E. Meyer. Court. All the swamps in the northern portion of the State were examined, many samples collected, and a long series of tests made to determine the availability of the peat for fuel, fertiliser purposes and other uses. The paper contains also a general discussion of the various uses to which peat has been put in different countries.

Notes upon the mineral industries of the State, showing that during the year the production of iron ore will exceed 500,000 long tons, and of zinc ore over 323,000 tons, conclude the volume.

The report can be obtained by making application to the State Geologist, at Trenton, N. J., and sending 6 cents to cover the cost of mailing. If the separate papers can be had by sending 5 cents each for postage.

McCLURE'S FOR 1907.

In the January number of McClure's will begin the Life of Mary Baker G. Eddy and the History of the Christian Science Movement. For the first time a complete, impartial and true story of Mrs. Eddy and Christian Science is to be had—it will run throughout the year. Georgine Milmine has written the story—for nearly three years she has pursued her study of the subjects. Five other writers of McClure's staff have worked with her to make this story accurate, fair, unbiased and complete. In view of the fact that for some months the press has been full of diverse and conflicting news and statements regarding Mrs. Eddy, it is evident that accurate knowledge concerning her is difficult to obtain in a short time. Consequently McClure's long and thorough preparation of its series will give us for the first time a true history and account of her and her cult.

Carl Schurz's Reminiscences of a long life will be continued. An indication of the timeliness of these reminiscences and the reawakened national interest in Carl Schurz to which they have contributed, are the great Carl Schurz Memorial Meetings held recently in the cities, and the memorial movement started which proposes to raise $250,000, and to erect a Carl Schurz memorial as a tribute to his great service to the progress of our country. William Allen White, Samuel Hopkins Adams, Burton J. Hendrick and George Kibbe Turner will also contribute to McClure's powerful articles on present day topics, conditions and men of national interest. These writers are big men and the work of each one aside from that which also interests is a compelling, wholesome factor in the regeneration which these United States are now undergoing. George Kennan, who won his spurs by his remarkable series on Siberia and Russia's exile system, has been added to McClure's staff. The results of his recent investigations and work will appear at an early date. Ellen Terry contributes an intimate history of the English drama of our day. This writing teems with anecdotes of the long time friend of the great actors whom she know intimately. From these droll, amusing and interesting happenings we can understand why these men and women of genius became loved and famous. In short story readers products of all McClure's fiction favorites will appear and a large number of writers who have "hit" recently. Such well known names as Joseph Conrad, Mary Stewart Cutting, Perceval Gibbon, Viola Roseboro, O. Henry, Alice MacGowan, Hamlin Garland, Woodrow and Helen R. Martin give promise of as good stories of various sorts as any reader could wish. Illustrators of note and merit will also contribute their share and add to the author productions and enhance the writings and stories by scores of pictures and illustrations in every issue.

PENSION ROLL WIDOWS

Last Revolutionary Widow Died Only One Month Ago.

COSTLY TO THE U. S

Young Women Marry Old Veterans, Grass Widows Seek Pensions.

ath at Plymouth Union, Vt., on ember 11 of Mrs. Esther Damon, the last of the widows of Revolutionary soldiers, directs attention to the fact that if the widows of Civil War veterans attain as great longevity as the widows of those who served in the Revolutionary Army the government will still be paying pensions to them in the year of our Lord 1987, says a dispatch from Washington.

As for the widows of the veterans of the Spanish-American War, no official of the Pension Bureau has been bold enough to attempt to compute when this roll of pensioners may end. But it will certainly be somewhere after the beginning of the next century.

In 1899 there were four widows of Revolutionary soldiers living. In 1906 there were 1,000.

Three daughters of Revolutionary soldiers still survive on the pension rolls, all of whom were pensioned by special act of Congress. They are Sarah C. Hurlbutt, aged 88, of Little March, Pa., daughter of Elijah Rhoda, living at Thompson, aged 85, of Woodbury, Conn., daughter of Thaddeus Thompson, and Phebe M. Palmeter, aged 85, of Talette, N. Y., daughter of Johathan Wooley. The daughter of a Revolutionary soldier who had attained the age of 90, Mary Jane Lynn, of Williamsport, Pa., died on February 19 last.

The last of the survivors of the War of 1812 died on May 13, 1905, but widows of these veterans are still on the pension rolls to the number of 666, although 116 died last year. Hiram Cronk, of New York, was the last of the survivors of the War of 1812, and he was buried with considerable ceremony.

The widows of Mexican War veterans now on the pension rolls outnumber the veteran pensioners nearly two to one, there being 7,488 of the former and 3,984 of the latter.

The survivors of the Civil War outnumber the widows who are drawing pensions on account of that war more than two to one, there being 566,453 soldiers and sailors of the Civil War pensioned and 252,047 widows of veterans of that war. But the number of soldier pensioners is rapidly decreasing, the net decrease last year amounting to 18,155, while the number of widow pensioners on the pension rolls was increased last year by 536. It will not be many years at this rate before the Civil War widows outnumber the Civil War veterans on the pension rolls. One reason for the increase in the ratio of widows to soldiers who die as pensioners leave widows who, until the soldier's death, have no pensionable status, but as soon as the soldier dies his widow goes upon the pension payrolls either under the general law or under the act of June, 1890.

One can readily see that a woman who draws a pension as the widow of a soldier of the Revolutionary War or the War of 1812 must have married one of those accountant-ages is being pensioned when she was young and the soldier very old.

A century and a quarter has passed since the close of the Revolutionary War and nearly a century has passed since the close of 1812. Admitting that a Revolutionary soldier was 18 at the close of the war, he would be at least 135 years old if he were on the pension rolls today. By the same calculation a soldier pensioned on the War of 1812 would be past the century mark.

Until Congress passed the act of March 3, 1899, it was quite common for young women to wed old veterans and then promptly desert them, and so when the veteran died make application for pension as a soldier's widow. The act of March 3, 1899, was passed to correct this growing evil.

There is a section in the pension office under the direct control of the law division which has come to be styled the grass widows' division. It has to do with the application of women who say they are the deserted wives of soldiers and who make claim under the law to an allowance of one-half the soldier's pension.

It was stated at the bureau that the Commissioner of Pensions has had more trouble on account of soldiers who have deserted their wives after having secured a pension and left them destitute than on account of women who have married soldiers with a view to securing a widow's pension.

There are many cases in which a veteran has surrendered his pension to the government rather than permit his wife, from whom he was living apart, to share his pension with him. For a time it was the habit of some of the pensioners to deprive their wives of half their pension money by refusing to draw the money, allowing it to accumulate until such time as the wife died or was divorced.

The commissioner put a stop to *this practice by construing the stat*ute so as to enable him to pay the wife her share of the accrued pension, regardless of whether the veteran husband drew his share or not. Other veterans have deserted their wives and afterward caused false information to be given that they were dead.

WHAT JERSEY DOES FOR ITS CITIZENS

IT DOES MORE THAN MOST STATES AND IMPOSES LIGHTER BURDENS.

"One of the attractions that helps to bring residents and industrial establishments to New Jersey," said a prominent manufacturer of the State the other day, "and one that seems to have escaped the attention of the press, is found in the fact that while the State does more for its citizens than do most States, the burdens which it imposes on them are lighter than in almost any one of its fellow members of the Union. A distinguished Western statesman recently visited us and pointed out some of our shortcomings in the pathway of progress. An examination of recent figures indicate, however, that New Jersey is really in advance of States that are pointed out as noteworthy examples of progress.

"For instance, the State of Wisconsin, which Senator La Follette thinks is the banner State in matters, is compelled to levy State taxes upon the people. In the State of New Jersey there has been no levy of taxes on the people since 1884. Wisconsin, with its State tax, paid only $1,118,000 for educational purposes last year, while New Jersey without any State tax paid $1,116,000.

"New Jersey's railroad taxes for several years past have been $5,000,000 annually, whereas Winsconsin, with its new railroad tax law, last year collected only $2,600,000 under it. The increase in railroad taxes in Wisconsin last year was only 33 per cent., whereas the increase in New Jersey as a result of New Jersey's tax law is 300 per cent.

"I doubt if there is another State in the country that can show a State treasury balance of $3,000,000. Wisconsin can boast of only $2,000,000. The State treasury balance of New Jersey would be greater every year by a million or two but for the fact that the laws of our prosperous little State provides for the expenditure of the surplus in ticular it has one item alone by public works. In this latter parmeans of which New Jersey can give valuable lessons to its rival States. I refer to the 1,200 miles of fine macadam roads in New Jersey which have been built from the State funds in addition to the enormously valuable public State institutions for which New Jersey is famed. Wisconsin has built almost no roads. It has no State institutions so spacious as these facts are true of almost all the group of States adjacent to Wisconsin.

"New Jersey on the whole hand possesses the finest school system of any in the country, except, perhaps, that of Massachusetts, which it equals. Its merchant transportation system is admitted to excel that of New England and the most prosperous of the Western States."

FACTS IN FEW LINES.

J. I. C. Clark, now acting as press agent for the Standard Oil Company and all its vast allied interests, has long been a leading newspaper man in New York. So successful thus far have been his efforts that other men of less affairs who heretofore have scoffed at friends for employing press agents are now casting about for publicity experts to attach to their permanent staffs.

Some time ago the ameer of Afghanistan forbade the import into his country of carpets colored with aniline dyes. The dunbar of Kashmir has now decided to charge the high duty of 45 per cent. on all aniline dyes at the frontier and at a certain distance within the frontier to confiscate and at once destroy them. By this measure it is hoped the beautiful arts for which the vale of Kashmir is famous will be preserved from deterioration.

Vermont's retiring governor, Farmer Bell, went out of office as firm a believer in capital punishment as he went in. "During my term," he said in his valedictory message, "it became my duty to see that this law was carried into effect. In the general discussion of the subject which occasioned in the state as well as elsewhere I have been deeply impressed with the fact that Vermont has more regard for the dignity of law than for sickly sentimentality."

The milk producing industry was discussed at length. It was the consensus of opinion that the price of that commodity should be advanced, as there was little or no profit in its production, especially during the greater portion of the year when there is no pasturage. It was maintained that the local producer was at a decided disadvantage as compared with such corporations as Borden's, as their dairies could not be examined by local boards. Agitation was advocated looking to the abatement of milk adulteration by so-called "preservatives."

MR. BIRD IN PROPOSED POSTMASTERS' ASSN.

FIRST CONVENTION TO BE HELD IN TRENTON NEXT MONTH.

The postmasters of the first-class offices of the State, including E. H. Bird, of this city, have appointed Postmaster Alexander C. Yard, of Trenton, and Postmaster Harry Bacharach, of Atlantic City, to call a meeting in January to form a State organization. The meeting will take place in Trenton. It is also left to Mr. Yard and Mr. Bacharach whether or not to include the postmasters of the second-class offices.

Several weeks ago when a committee of postmasters went to Washington to confer with Congressman Gardner, referred to the clerk's bill now before Congress, it was decided than an organization of this kind would be to the best interest of the postmasters and of the service. The convention will probably be called about the middle of January.

The cities of the first-class are: Atlantic City, Bayonne, Camden, East Orange, Elizabeth, Hoboken, Jersey City, Montclair, Newark, New Brunswick, Orange, Passaic, Paterson, Plainfield, Trenton.

ENTERTAINMENT BY ST. FAITH'S GUILD.

Novel Feature On Programme of St. Stephen's Church Affair; Those Who Took Part.

Humor, music and good cheer that drove all recollection of the joyless weather away marked the entertainment and sociable of St. Faith's Guild, of St. Stephen's P. E. church, at the parish house, Thursday. The programme was vastly enjoyed by a good-sized audience.

The chief feature of the programme was "Aunt Jerusha Dow's Album." Aunt Jerusha, who is Miss Emily Lacey in everyday life, told the audience of the pictures in her album, which was in a Brobdingnagian frame behind her on the stage. As the leaves turned, the pictures stood forth, lifelike and amusing. The album "leaves" were filled by the following, in clever costume:

Mrs. Andrew Adelman, F. W. J. Brook, Edward Bremble, Miss Hilda Bennett, Clara Gulberg, Ethel Gulberg, Helen Brook, Frederick Brook, George Dobbs, Herbert Dobbs, Miss Christianson, Victor A. Gorlin, Miss Edith Lacey, Alfred Lacey, William Bennett, Miss Thapman, Eleanor Gulberg, Miss Mary Jane Tygard, Charles Frederickson, Harry Christianson, Herbert Guinn, George Lund, Miss Theresa Kahrman, Lewis Clarke, Mrs. Herbert Guinn and Miss Christine Sorensen.

Between "Aunt Jerusha" there were recitations by Mrs. Guinn and Miss Bennett; songs by Miss Kahrmann, Miss Blanche Gahagen, Miss Sorensen and Miss Lacey; Mr. Gorlin rendered mandolin selections and Miss Chapman played the piano. Refreshments were served.

Mrs. Adelmann, as president of the Guild, was chairman of a committee of the whole in arranging the affair. The proceeds will go into the Guild treasury.

An Epworth League Social.

The members of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church enjoyed the monthly entertainment and social in Vincent chapel, last night, and although the attendance was not large, those present had a good time. A play, all sorts of games, including "Pit," vocal selections, stage coach, Santa Claus and many others. Miss Sayre had charge of the entertainment, planning the programme. After the programme, the social committee, of which Miss Helen Whitney is the chairman, served refreshments, which included charlotte rousse made by Miss Whitney.

OD YEAR FOR THE STATES FARMERS

BOARD OF AGRICULTURE REPORTS ONLY ONE FAILURE.

Cyrus B. Crane, in his annual report, says that the past season had been one of signal prosperity to the farmed; that the weather conditions had been such as to make possible the harvesting of exceptionally large crops. But one failure had to be recorded, he said, and that was the attempt to follow the advice of Professor E. B. Voorhees, of the New Brunswick Experiment Station, who advocated making alfalfa a staple product of the farm. Mr. Crane pointed out as the possible causes of the failure, of experimenting with this valuable fodder the neglect of the proper soil preparation and the lack of the necessary bacteria. As a means of making farming more profitable, reducing the cost of fertilization by the growing of nitrogenous crops, such as clover, etc., the manipulation of the materials at hand in a more intensive manner and a more efficient management of all adjuncts of the farm, were advocated.

In the matter of taxation, it was charged that the farmer was forced to pay more than his just share of the cost of government, while many corporate interests escaped paying their proportionate burden. A more stringent automobile law, efficiently enforced, especially in rural districts, was favored. Mr. Crane spoke of the revival of the custom of holding annual fairs, stating that the exhibit of last fall was a creditable one, and that with a strong fair organization, as has been proved, a good showing may be looked for next fall.

Secretary Justus W. Dobbins gave a report of the meetings of the year inclusive of the Farmers Institute held in the Verona Methodist church. Treasurer Charles E. Camp read his report, which showed that all indebtedness had been paid off, leaving a balance of $15.82.

Dr. Joseph B. Ward, one of the board of directors of the State Agricultural College, stated that he had just come from a visit to New Brunswick and had spent considerable time discussing the work of special training for the prospective farmer with President W. H. S. Demarest and Dr. Edward B. Voorhees, of Rutgers College. He found that the short course in agriculture recently established and now offered for the first time in the history of New Jersey. *The courses are general agri*culture, dairy farming and fruit growing and market gardening. All courses will begin January 3 of next year. Tuition is free to all residents of the State and no entrance examination will be required.

There are but twenty applicants as yet, he declared, and of this number only seven have matriculated. Mr. DeCamp, who is a member of the executive committee of the State Board of Agriculture, said that the only opposition that voiced itself in the Legislature to the establishing of these courses was the belief that the farming community would not patronize them. The State appropriated, he affirmed, $24,000 for buildings and land and $6,000 for instruction, and it was up to the people to show its appreciation of the advantages offered.

Austin E. Hedden made a report of teh meeting of the State Board of Agriculture held recently at Trenton.

ADVERTISING PHILOSOPHY.

You wouldn't plant a sapling in the spring and expect your entire house shaded the following summer.

Neither does a wise merchant insert a 2-inch ad for one day and expect to sell out his entire stock the following 24 hours.

Shade follows growth. Dollars follow judicious advertising.

A Daily Press ad is read just before the people go shopping—that means something.

Originality in advertising is all right, but it must be sensible.

Attracting attention doesn't necessarily sell goods—a black snake in an orchard will make us open our eyes, but very few of us care to carry it home.

You can't fail to advertise, but be sensible always. Use The Daily Press.

If your goods are worth selling, they are worth advertising—"keeping everlastingly at it" brings success.

If you have something to sell, let the people know it with a Daily Press ad.

If you are in doubt as to how to advertise, let our ad man call and offer suggestions.

A Happy Hunting Ground For Gift Seekers—Van Horn's.

The happy hunter of gifts will find many a useful suggestion in the marvellously varied stocks of Amos H. Van Horn, Ltd., (73 Market street, Newark, N. J.,) commonly known as "Everybody's Store." Passing from floor to floor, one sees nothing but thoroughly practical gifts for folk of all ages, and the most inviting feature of it all is the uniform moderateness of prices. The rugs, lamps, pictures, dining room, prior and bedroom furniture, victor talking machines, phonographs and others seem to be of the very latest tyle, calculated to appeal to all tastes. The unique system of this house in the matter of accommodating terms is praiseworthy indeed, proving a most acceptable boon to many at a time when ready cash is often a scarce commodity.

LOWERS HOTEL VALUATION

Victory For J. A. Staats In Appeal to County Tax Board.

ASSESSMENT DOWN $3,000

Board Acted After Hearing Arguments For and Against Reduction By Counsel On Both Sides.

Official notification that his appeal for a reduction of the assessment on the Hotel Iroquois building had been granted was received by J. A. Staats this morning from the County Board of Taxation. The assessment is cut down by $3,000.

The reduction is practically a complete victory for Mr. Staats. The amount taken off is satisfactory. The fight for a lower valuation was virtually won on the building, and Mr. Staats feels that his contentions have been substantiated practically in full. Although the assessment on the ground was protested, that protest was not strongly pressed.

The first valuation was $18,000. Mr. Staats contended that the valuation on the property was not in proportion of that placed on nearby holdings. To show the grounds for his claim of discrimination he made comparison between the Iroquois and the Morris building and the Codington building. The city and Mr. Staats were both represented by counsel at the hearing on the appeal. Corporation Counsel Marsh argued for Assessor VanEmburgh's valuation and Walter L. Hetfield presented Mr. Staats' case.

"We are pleased over the board's action," said Mr. Hetfield this morning. "The reduction is perfectly satisfactory."

What Scribner's Magazine Is Doing For Its Readers.

Not long ago William Dean White wrote of Scribner's:

"Between the magazines that are using the lever of their circulation to pry the world, and those which have nothing of current interest later than 1812, there lies a fine pathway for some magazine for people who are now on earth who are not excited about the proximity of the demolition bow-wows to the orbit of this sad old earth, and in that path Scribner's Magazine seems rewarding walking in solitary state. Its fiction is particularly sane and wholesome. It lacks the Miss Nancy pucker of the fiction of the magazines of prunes and prisms, and holds the vigor of the fiction of the more strenuous magazines without the unwholesome rawboned. Scribner's is a great and good magazine and should be in every American home."

This commendation is well borne out by the announcement which the publishers of this magazine make of some of the contents for the coming year.

There will be a series of articles by Henry van Dyke, entitled, "Days Off," which will appeal to all lovers of out-of-door life—and who in these days is not? Papers by Sidney Lee, entitled the "Call of the West" to the Englishmen of Elizabeth's time, of very special interest in relation to the early settlement of America; two articles by the Confederate General E. P. Alexander, one on the "Battle of Bull Run," the other on "The Movement against Petersburg;" "Townsend Eureka in an Automobile" will be described by the brilliant writer, Henry Norman; Thomas F. Millard will write on "Present Conditions in the Far East;" the remarkable "Voyage of the Dry-dock Dewey" will be described by the artist, W. A. Aylward, on the flagship admiral of St. John, the Divine, now in process of construction in New York city, will be the subject of an article by Mr. Grant La Farge, one of the architects.; Such articles as these will give the magazine character and interest for every thoughtful reader.

The fiction in the magazine promises to be of the highest ypte and of much more than ordinary interest, as the mention of a few names will indicate.

Scribner's will have stories by Rebecca Harding Davis, J. B. Connolly, Arthur Cosslett Smith, John Fox, Jr., Thomas Nelson Page, Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews, F. Hopkinson Smith, and many others.

Scribner's has always been beautifully illustrated and has for years furnished the standard for color printing.

ON THE JERSEY CENTRAL.

First Commuter—Well, conductor, I see you've lost your general passenger agent, Burt.

Conductor—Yes; but we haven't lost Hope.

Second Commuter—

Our greatest good, and what we least can

Is Hope; the last of all our evils, feat.

Conductor—Where there is no Hope there can be no endeavor.

Third Commuter—

Hope tells a flattering tale

Delusive, vain and hallow.

Ah! Last and first of evils,

Last disappointment follow.

Conductor—Second Commuter—

Behind the cloud the starlight lurks,

Through winter comes summer's fall:

For Baer, who loveth all his works,

Has left his Hope with all.

And so I see Hope is to be the new general passenger agent of the Central. Everybody is punning him, and some are punishing.

In mending household linen the most satisfactory way to do is to mend it before it is sent to the laundry, not when it returns, starched and ready for use once more.

NO TIES FOR ACKERMAN

Union County Senator Will Not Go Into Caucus With Unit Rule Agreement.

PERKINS IS WITH HIM

Plainfield Legislator's Reason is That His Constituents Are Against Dryden—What Wolf Says.

"It is the troubles of the Democratic over the organization of the next House of Assembly have been holding the centre of the political stage in this State during the past week the contest over the re-election of John F. Dryden to the United States Senate has been going on without any abatement, and even if the action has been mostly behind the scenes. The Dryden men keep up their claim that he will be elected and the Senator's opponents confidently assert that such a result is growing more improbable every day.

Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, of Union, is the latest to announce that he will not be bound by the Republican caucus if it should nominate Mr. Dryden. It was understood that the Union Senator had declared he could not see how he would be bound by the unmistakable public wish of the county that some Republican other than Mr. Dryden be sent to the United States Senate, if he should go into a caucus and after opposing Mr. Dryden's renomination should at the joint meeting cast his vote for the Senator's re-election.

Mr. Ackerman was asked the direct question yesterday if he had said he would not be bound by the Republican caucus if it should nominate Mr. Dryden.

"I have not made up my mind whether I will enter the caucus or not," replied the Union Senator. "But if I do, it will be with the understanding that I am not to be bound by the vote of the caucus.

"A caucus for the nomination of a United States Senator," added Mr. Ackerman, "is, to my mind, altogether different from a caucus for the nomination of members of the Senate or House. The former I consider, is the conduit of the will of the people, and in it we should be governed entirely by the wishes of our constituents. Now there can be no manner of doubt that the sentiment in Union county is very strong against the re-election of Mr. Dryden, and for that reason am opposed to him. I want it distinctly understood that my opposition is not based on any personal grounds, but is simply and only due to the fact that the public sentiment of my county is undoubtedly opposed to his re-election. Every day I am receiving letters from citizens in all grades of life telling me how disastrous to the future success of the Republican party his return to the Senate would be, while others oppose him on account of his connection with the Public Service and other corporations.

"Although I have received a large number of letters expressing opposition to Mr. Dryden, and asking me to vote against him, I have not received a single communication in his favor or asking me to vote for him. Besides these written communications I have been down to the county of the citizens of my county on the subject, and they, too, almost invariably expressed opposition to Mr. Dryden's re-election. Besides this the farmers of Union have declared against him on account of his votes on the oleomargarine and denatured alcohol bills.

"It is not a new thing for Representatives of Union County in the Legislature to vote against a caucus nominee for United States Senator when the majority of the people of the county are opposed to that nominee. In the Senatorial election of 1887 William H. Corbin and William Chamberlain, Assemblymen from Union, voted against General William J. Sewell, who was the candidate of the Republican party.

"The question of abiding by the decision of the caucus was put directly to Randolph Perkins, also of Union, the leader of the House last year, at his office in Jersey City yesterday. Mr. Perkins was averse to talking on the subject, saying that he thought he would do better if he said nothing at all. It was well known, he continued, that he was opposed to the re-election of Mr. Dryden because there was no mistaking the sentiment against Mr. Dryden's re-election in Union county. When pressed for a definite reply to the question whether he would be bound by the action of the caucus, Mr. Perkins finally said:

"If I go into the caucus, take part in its proceedings and vote for the nomination of a United States Senator, I shall abide by the decision of that caucus."

The particular emphasis which Mr. Perkins laid on the word "if" at once suggested the question whether he intended to go into the caucus and he replied that he had not yet made up his mind.

Owing to the fact that there is no one in the House delegation who will place Mr. Dryden's name before the caucus, it has been reported that he would be nominated by Senator Joseph Frelinghuysen, of Somerset, because he lives in that county half of the year. When Mr. Frelinghuysen was asked what truth there was in that report he declined to discuss it. Neither would he say what position he would take upon the senatorial question, further than that he was pledged to no candidate. The public sentiment upon the question in his county was equally divided, he said, and no more of his constituents had spoken to him against Mr. Dryden than had spoken in his favor. As far as Mr. Frelinghuysen could judge there was no great preponderance of opposition to Mr. Dryden among the farmers of his county. The Senator and Assemblyman from Somerset, he also said, would agree on the Senatorial question.

Mr. Frelinghuysen was the Governor's military aide up to a short time ago, when he resigned on account of the press of business matters. He has always been considered one of Mr. Stokes' warmest supporters, but when he was asked what he thought of the Governor as a Senatorial candidate, he said Mr. Stokes would not do at all, because of the constitutional prohibition. Mr. Frelinghuysen could not see, he said, how any member of the Legislature, who had taken a solemn oath to uphold the Constitution, could vote for Governor Stokes for United States Senator in the face of the clause of that document which explicitly declares that the Governor shall not be elected to any office during his incumbency of the executive chair.

The men who are opposing Mr. Dryden say that they know of enough members of the Legislature who have declared themselves against him to prevent his securing the required majority of the joint meeting, provided the dissenters are not bound by the action of the caucus. Dryden's opponents are counting on Senators Wakelee, of Bergen; Colby, of Essex, and Ackerman, of Union, and Assemblymen Bahrle and Divine, of Bergen; Perkins and Tillman, of Union; Drake and Crowther, of Middlesex; Thompson, of Mercer, and Taylor, of Ocean, eleven in all, as men who will not support the junior Senator for another term.

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR THE BUSINESS MAN

ELBERT HUBBARD SAYS HE IS AHEAD OF THE PROFESSIONAL MEN.

Elbert Hubbard, the lecturer and searcher after soul stuff and things, spoke to the pupils and teachers of the Plainfield Business College Thursday morning. Mr. Hubbard talked for an hour and a half about East Aurora, Elbert Hubbard, the Brotherhood of Man, and the Psychological Impulse.

He scored his usual success. The talk was punctuated with witticisms and near-epigrams, and he had no reason to complain of the degree of cleverness with which his talk was followed.

Among other things, Mr. Hubbard said the business man had it on all professional men, because he ministered to the necessities of humanity. All the budding business persons before him applauded.

Mr. Hubbard came to the school at 11 was said this morning, because he had heard of it as an institution that taught business principles and methods in the way required by modern business. He said highly complimentary things of the school and its work.

It was announced that Mr. Hubbard would return to Plainfield under the auspices of the school, and deliver a public lecture. Mr. Hubbard has no press agent.

OLD COURT HOUSE MUST BE REMOVED

SOMERSET FREEHOLDERS DEMAND THAT KLINE CARRY OUT CONTRACT.

A special meeting of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders was held Wednesday in Bernards township. The bridge near the schoolhouse at Miller Brook was awarded to the contract price, $716, for the superstructure, was ordered paid the W. T. Kirk Co., of this city, and $169.51, balance due on the masonry, and $27.75 for extra fillings were ordered paid. John C. Conrad, of Basking Ridge.

On Mr. Fitzgerald's motion Counsellor French was authorized to notify Hyman Kline to proceed at once to tear down and remove the old court house and jail according to his agreement. The monthly meeting the secretary was ordered to give a similar notice to Mr. Kline, but the latter paid no attention to it. There may be litigation over the matter, as Mr. Kline claims he has lost the sale of the building through the delay in their being turned over to him.

Clerk Suthpen was authorized to notify M. P. Lane, the probation officer, to present at the next meeting a statement of the fines paid him, with a list of the defendants in his charge.

The committee on buildings and grounds was authorized to construct a walk from the present court house (the chapel) to the new county jail.

Miss Jennie Anderson, of Somerville, has returned home after a visit here.

XMAS AT THE SCHOOLS

Appropriate Exercises in Most of the Public and Private Schools Today.

DR. ZELIE A SPEAKER

Talks To Pupils At Plainfield High School—Xmas Tree At Hartridge—In City and Borough.

Exercises appropriate to Christmas were held in the majority of public and private schools Friday. In one or two instances, an address was the principal feature but in the majority carols and recitations were the attractive parts of the programmes.

Christmastide was appropriately celebrated yesterday and this morning at the Hartridge School on East Seventh street. Yesterday morning the pupils in the kindergarten had a Christmas tree and it was also an opportunity for the children to present to their parents gifts of their own making. This morning the programme was divided into two parts. The first consisted of the rendition of sacred music and poems. Gounod's "Nazareth," and the old Christmas carol, "God Rest Ye, Merry Gentlemen, Let Nothing You Dismay," and "Adestes Fideles". In the second part there were humorous recitations, secular music and essays by the children. The academic and elementary departments met together in the elementary department and the programme lasted about an hour and a half.

Presentations, an address by Rev. Dr. John Sheridan Zelie, of the Crescent Avenue church, anthems and recitations made up the programme of the Christmas exercises of the Plainfield High School Friday morning. The programme was as follows:

Anthem, "Christians, Awake! Salute the Happy Morn," Schneckey; recitation, "The End of the Play," by W. M. Thackeray, Walter E. Knowlton; recitation, "Christmas at Santa Clara," written by J. DeLancey Ferguson, spoken by Helen Johnson; presentation of P. H. S. insignia; presentation of prizes won in the tennis tournament, (a) singles, (b) doubles; presentation of prizes won in the fall field meet, (a) individual ribbon prizes offered by the Courier-News, (b) class cup offered by The Daily Press, (c) individual championship medal offered by the P. H. S. A. A.; presentation of a photograph of Abbey's painting, "Sir Galahad Taking His Vow," M. Elizabeth Pound, William Osgood; anthem, "There Were Shepherds," Schneckey; recitation, "Christmas Song, "Christmas Hymn," Buck; address, Dr. John Sheridan Zeslie; anthem, "The First Christmas;" the senior-junior exercises.

Dr. Zelie spoke of the high spirit that men are beginning to realize must enter into their lives, and of the futility of human life when it has lost the favor of God and man. Christmas, Dr. Zelie said, was the time when Tennyson measured and took account of his advance in life, and of his trend of thought and attitude toward truth and his fellow man. It should be all men-time of test. The Christmas spirit, the speaker said, was the only spirit that should actuate the worker. Work was hard enough at best, but if it was carried on in a spirit of slavishness and hatred and revolt it was something awful. The working world needed the Christmas spirit, and everyone who worked.

An elaborate programme was employed at the Bryant Public School Friday morning. There were carols by the school, songs by boys of the fifth grade, a lullaby by girls of the fifth grade, recitations by Dorothy Van Winkle, Harold Whitford, Frances Conner, Genevieve Hope, Estelle Blauvelt; song by Leonard Lewis, vocal duett by Lyle Smith and Leonard Lewis. The programme was closed with an exercise, "Christmas with Mother Goose," in which the following took part:

Mother Goose, Elizabeth Hammann; Old Woman, Lavinia Fulmer; children in the shoe, Jane Stout, Margaret Keenan, Monroe Gullberg, William Chamberlain and Harold Seal; Bo-Peep, Ruby Taylor; Little Boy Blue, William Wheelan; Simple Simon, Harold Pfiefer; Miss Muffet, Gertrude Blimm; Humpty-Dumpty, Theodore Vail; Jack be Nimble, Geo. Walsh. William Chamberlain also sang a solo. The exercises were in charge of Miss Griffin, principal of the school.

Under the direction of Miss Bullock, principal of the Franklin Public School, an attractive programme was presented Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. These carols were sung by the pupils:

What Say the Bells? O, Little Town of Bethlehem, All in the Silent Night, Hark! the Herald Angels Sing, Thou Didst Leave Thy Throne, Glory to God, The Christmas Spirit, Star of Bethlehem, Shining, Glad Tidings of Great Joy. In addition there was a vocal solo, He Loved Us So, by Edward Crope, chorus by the school, The First Christmas Gift, song by ten girls, reading of Christmas Story, by Miss Bullock, Star of Bethlehem, Bethlehem's Lullaby, by chorus of twenty-five voices.

Exercises were held at the Linden Public School Friday morning. Owing to the fact that there is no assembly hall at this school the children were obliged to hold their exercises in the various class-rooms. The programmes were of a simple character, consisting of recitations and the singing of carols.

Miss Humpstone, principal of the Washington Public School, assisted by the teachers, a Christmas play, entitled "The Real Santa Claus," was the pupils. There were also several recitations, songs, a piano solo by Ernest Stevens, the singing of a lullaby by the pupils of the fourth and fifth grades. Today noon the children in the lower grades opened a Christmas tree, together with songs and recitations.

NEW IDEA MUST TRIUMPH

Colby Says Its Mission Will End When Its Principles are Crowned With Victory.

NECESSARY REFORMS

Political Machines, Bosses and Political Fetishes are Doomed Declares Leader of the Colbyites.

"What of the future of the new idea movement," State Senator Everett Colby was asked, Wednesday. "Will it continue?"

"Most assuredly — without the slightest doubt," he replied. "Its mission can never be ended until the reforms it started out to accomplish have been won. It will go on, gathering strength and power, until its principles are crowned with triumph. It may be over the wrecks of machines and bosses and ancient political fetishes, but it will go on."

"What do you regard, specifically, as the fundamental reform principles of the New Idea movement to which you allude?" Mr. Colby.

"First," replied, "to give the people of the State an opportunity to indicate by primary their choice of a United States Senator.

"Second, the assessment and taxation of public service franchises at their full value, at the full local rate.

"Third, a rule in both houses of the Legislature requiring the reporting by committees of all bills referred to them, so as to bring them under the review and judgment of the entire house.

"Fourth, a civil service law that will protect trained, experienced and capable officials from removal for partisan reasons.

"Fifth, the direct primary, by which the voter will record his choice of candidates without the intervention of conventions.

"These I regard as important reforms for which the people want. They are progressive and in line with the best political thought of our time. No sound argument can be urged against any of them, and their adoption by the Legislature at the approaching session would crown that body with honor and with the plaudits of an approving people."

O. G. Waring and John Bushnell Must Testify in Cases Against Standard Oil.

SERVED WITH NOTICE

Plainfielders Officers of Subsidiary Companies of Oil Trust— Hunt for Evidence.

Orville G. Waring, son of Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Waring, of Park avenue, treasurer of the Home Seymour Company, and John Bushnell, of Central avenue, secretary of the National Fuel Company, both subsidiary companies of the Standard Oil Company, are among those in New Jersey who have been served with notices by the United States Marshal in this State to appear as witnesses in the suits against the Standard Oil Company brought by the Federal Government.

There is considerable activity just now on the part of the Government in bringing suits against the Standard Oil Company, the first of which will be tried in St. Louis on Monday, January 7. In its efforts to bring the company to justice the Government seeks to reach every branch and department of the big corporation. This is evidenced by the fact that the activity is responsible for service made by the marshal against the officers of subsidiary companies in New Jersey.

Others who have been served with similar notice include Charles G. Black, of Bayonne, agent of the Colonia Oil Company; Charles G. Black, of Bayonne, agent of the Union Tank Line Company; F. W. Edwards, of Bayonne, agent of the Platt Washburn Refining Company; the Bayonne Tidewater Pipe Company and the Bayonne Tidewater Oil Company.

Miss Hall Opens a Studio.

Miss Caroline Minturn Hall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Prescott Hall, of Madison avenue, a talented artist, has opened a studio in the Babcock building.

N.P.H.S. SENIORS PRESENT "ICI ON PARLE FRANCAIS"

MEMBERS OF THE CAST SCORE INDIVIDUAL HITS.

The senior class of the borough High School clung to custom, Thursday, by entertaining fellow students and friends with a class play. It was given in the assembly hall before an attendance of nearly 300 young people.

The play was decidedly Frenchy in its origin and action and was entitled "Ici on Parle Francais." The characters were taken as follows: "Mr. Springgins," Arthur Dunning; "Francais Dubois," Frank Webster; "Major Rattan," Tone Overton; "Mrs. Springgins," Miss Edith Ganun; "Angeline Springgins," Miss Myra Emmons; "Mrs. Major Rattan," Miss Florence Smalley; "Anna Maria," (a maid), Miss Lavina Hand. Action in the play was plentiful and every member of the cast took opportunity of it to display artistic ability. Arthur Dunning was "right at home" in his part and he had a splendid opposite in Miss Emmons, who gave a character impersonation in "Angeline Springgins" that was a breezy as a spring zephyr from the Watchung mountains. Frank Webster took the part of "Francais Dubois" as though he had just stepped from the Bois de Boulogne and other participants scored individual hits. Following the play the members of the class held their regular exercises during which the usual presents intended only for fun were handed out. Lemons were plentiful.

The class play was produced under the direction of Miss Stahlberger, who drilled the participants and is entitled to much credit for their success.

NEW MADISON FIRE LOSS SETTLED FOR $3,470

ADJUSTMENT SHOWS FIRST ESTIMATE OF DAMAGE WAS TOO HIGH.

Following a careful estimate of the damage by expert adjusters, William M. Stillman Friday accepted $3,470 from the insurance companies in payment for the damage sustained by the New Madison building Wednesday night. The figure is well below the loss first given out and shows that the blaze was not near so serious as at first supposed. Mr. Stillman thought yesterday after he had inspected the affected apartments that the entire interior of the three would have to be rebuilt and placed the damage at from $5,000 to $10,000. He has contractors examining the place at the same time the adjusters were at work and the figure he accepted balance with their estimates for reconstruction.

Steps will be taken at once to have the three apartments rebuilt as they were before the fire and the tenants will be able to return in a couple of months.

The task of adjusting the loss to Messrs. Davison, Hubbard and Hedden, who were burned out, is now going on but it will be several days before any figures can be arrived at. The largest amount was sustained by Mr. Davison but he was safely protected by insurance as was Mr. Hubbard. The one victim of the fire who refuses to shake hands with fortune is Frank Hedden as he had no insurance at all.

Chief Doane is still at a loss to account for the origin of the blaze as a continued investigation has brought nothing. The only thing that seems plausible is the theory that some one was in the basement during the afternoon or evening and dropped a lighted match in one of the storerooms built for the tenants. They are constructed of pine slats and when once started, would convey flames to the flooring very quickly.

CONTINENTAL CHAPTER ELECTS

Proposes to Erect a Monument at Washington Rock.

The Continental Chapter, Daughters American Revolution, has elected these officers for the coming year: Regent, Mrs. Florence Howe Hall; vice regents, Mrs. David H. Rowland, Miss Mary Brown; treasurer, Mrs. N. W. Currie; secretary, Mrs. George H. Campbell; registrar, Miss Addie Dietrich; Board of Directors, Miss Harriet Manning, Miss Sarah Manning, Mrs. C. W. McCutchen and Mrs. Anna Leggett.

The treasurer reports a balance of $400 on hand and it is proposed to erect a suitable monument to mark the historic Washington Rock. About $300 will be required for this purpose. At the meeting it was also reported that $50 was the net profit from the tea held in the spring.

Junior Star Course.

Bookings for the Y. M. C. A. boys' department star course have been completed. The list is as follows: December 28, Kosani, manipulator and juggler; January 31, Archie Leon French, impersonator and novelty entertainer; February 28, Harry Bryant, ventriloquist, impersonator and humorist; April 11, G. E. Garretson, novelty musical artist. All the entertainments will take place in the evening.

D. C. SMALLEY AND THE RAILROAD IN A SWAP

HE GIVES EAST THIRD STREET LOT FOR SLICE OF PARK AVENUE.

Deeds were filed, Thursday, completing an exchange of property between David C. Smalley, of Smalley Bros., and the Central Railroad. The properties swapped are the old "Flannery hall" lot at East Third and Church streets, and the lot on Park avenue, below the station approach, on which Justice V. W. Nash's office stood. The consideration named is $1. There may be another, but as to that the records speak not.

When Mr. Smalley acquired the East Third street lot and had the city close up the short street back of it, it was announced that he intended to build thereon a sausage manufactory. Rumors of the exchange arose, but Mr. Smalley emphatically denied that he contemplated any such deal. He declared that he had no idea of parting with his East Third street property when the reporter told him the terms of the deal for which a deed was filed yesterday.

It is said now that the railroad intends to use the switch at Church street for the storing of the express car during the day. At present the car is in the way at the side of the North Avenue station.

MR. MURRAY COLLECTS $175,000 IN TAXES

APPROXIMATELY $50,000 YET TO BE COLLECTED AS DELINQUENT.

The disposition of most taxpayers to settle their bills before they are delinquent, resulted in unusual receipts at the office of Tax Collector John W. Murray, Jr., Thursyad. There was approximately $75,000 received by Mr. Murray, making in all about $175,000 paid in up to and including December 20, the day taxes are due. This leaves between $50,000 and $60,000 to be collected, but as there has been a large amount of tax exonerations by mail which Mr. Murray has not been able to credit it, this sum will be greatly reduced.

Mr. Murray kept his office open last night until a late hour to accommodate citizens and in consequence many dropped into to pay their bills. The collector is well pleased with this year's returns and he does not believe that the delinquent list will be a large one.

FINE CHRISTMAS MUSIC AT FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

Excellent Programme Rendered By Trained Soloists and Chorus.

A small but appreciative audience enjoyed the Christmas musical service at the First Baptist church, Thursday, and there is no doubt that it will be repeated. The programme consisted of old and new Christmas carols, a selection from an unfinished oratorio, "Christus," by Mendelssohn; a contralto solo and chorus from the "Messiah," together with the beautiful cantata, "The Story of Bethlehem," by John W. West.

The opening number was a prelude, violin and organ, "Aria," Bach, by Howard Case, organist, and Miss Florence Wohlfert, violinist. Then followed the rendition of "Say, Where Is He Born?" Mendelssohn, from the unfinished oratorio, "Christus." Miss Louella C. Harris, soprano soloist, sang the first part, and there was a pleasing duet by William Holmes, baritone, and George Smith, tenor, concluding with a part for the entire chorus. The next numbers were two old Bohemian carols arranged by Carl Reidel. The first was "The Angels and the Shepherds," and the second, "Let All Men Sing." "Sing We Noel," French carol from 16th Century, arranged by H. B. Gaul, was divided between the chorus and the women's voices. The next selection comprised three English carols, "Carols for Christmas Eve," Ousely; "Good King Wenceslas," and "Sweet Christmas Bells," made up of solo parts by Miss Harris, Miss Gertrude Hinz, contralto, William Holmes and George Smith and the chorus. This part of the programme was concluded with the rendition of the selection from the "Messiah," in which Miss Hinz sang the solo part, assisted by the chorus.

The second part of the programme was given up to the presentation of the cantata, "The Story of Bethlehem." This charming Christmas work was given in true style. The principal solo work was by Miss Harris, William Holmes, George Smith and Miss Hinz, interspersed with duets, trios and quartette parts.

The work of the soloists was up to the usual high standard, under the direction of Edward J. Fitzhugh, who assisted Howard Case, as organist. The soloists were Miss Louella C. Harris, soprano; Mrs. Robert Giddes, mezzo-soprano; George Smith, tenor; William Holmes, baritone; George Taylor, bass, and Miss Florence Wohlfert was the assisting artist.

ASK HELP FOR P. O. MEN

Board of Trade Requests Congressmen to Aid Passage of Salary Bill.

PASS THE RESOLUTION

Annual Dinner Committee Appointed—Ship Subsidy, Almanac and Trolley Line Also Considered.

By an unanimous vote, the Plainfield Board of Trade Thursday passed a resolution requesting Congressmen Charles N. Fowler, of the Fifth district, and Congressman Ira W. Wood, of the Fourth district, to use their efforts to secure the passage of the bill to increase the pay of letter-carriers and postal clerks. Postmaster Silas H. Bird was on hand to champion the cause of the men who are said to be underpaid for the work they do, and he made a neat little speech explaining concisely why Congress should act.

The Board also took the preliminary steps towards holding the annual dinner, a committee being appointed by President Woolston to arrange for the affair. Mayor-elect Charles J. Fisk was elected as chairman. The other members of the committee are former Mayor William L. Saunders, former Mayor Alexander Gilbert, former Police Commissioner H. W. Marshall and former Sheriff B. Frank Coriell. It is quite probable that the banquet will be somewhat in the nature of January or the fore part of February. The Casino will be the place.

Several other matters were considered, among them being the proposition to give support to Messrs. St. John, Stout and Zimmerman, who are getting out an almanac containing among other things an excellent account of the Plainfield of today. The much talked of trolley line connecting Plainfield with South Plainfield was also considered and was the scheme in Congress for ship subsidy. In the almanac matter, President Woolston was empowered to investigate and report at the next meeting. Nothing was done regarding the other two subjects, although both will come into further at the January meeting.

Secretary Frank H. Smith brought up the proposition to secure the aid of Congressmen Wood and Fowler in the postal clerks and carriers effort to get more pay. He read several letters from boards of trade and chambers of commerce urging action on the part of Congress, chief among which was a letter from the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, which started the movement two years ago. The resolution of the local board was read by Mr. Smith and quickly seconded by W. A. Woodruff. Before its passage, however, Mr. Bird explained its object.

The highest that a carrier can ever hope to get at the Plainfield postoffice, he said, was $850. When he became too old or too ill to work he has no means of support. As for the clerk, the best paid one in the local office gets only $1,400 and several others $1,000. Such pay, he pointed out, was barely sufficient for a man to exist on and that because corporations and individual employers were paying wages greatly in excess of the Government's scales, it had become well nigh impossible for him to get any more good men or to hold his present force. So critical had the situation become, he added, that in one Western town the entire postoffice force had quit in one day and the postmaster was compelled to pick new men from the streets to do the work temporarily. Under present conditions, the law is such that the present office is greatly crippled at this season of the year. More carriers are needed but the postmaster is powerless to appoint them. Good pay brings good men, concluded Mr. Bird, and without them the service becomes wretched.

TEMPLARS WERE STALLED.

Started for Big Conclave in Auto; Machine Betrayed Them.

Five members of Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. T., including Robert Rusmore, eminent commander, failed to attend the stated conclave of Jersey Commandery, No. 19, K. T., at East Orange, Friday night, when Washington Commandery, No. 1, of Hartford, Conn., conferred the Order of Malta on Governor E. C. Stokes and several Sir Knights from this city, because they depended upon an automobile to get them there.

Mr. Rushmore, accompanied by L. B. Woolston, Henry Woodland, B. Frank Coriell and H. W. Marshall, left here in Mr. Rushmore's automobile, intending to reach East Orange in record-breaking time. Everything went well until the party struck the Springfield road, where the auto swerved and landed in a ditch. The wheels and lamps were all mud and the auto could not be moved.

The services of a farmer were sought and with the aid of a horse the machine was gotten out of the mud. An examination disclosed a punctured tire and all hope of reaching East Orange was given up. The farmer towed the car to Plainfield and it was well on toward midnight when the Sir Knights reached their homes.

DEMOCRAT'S VOTE NECESSARY FOR DRYDEN TO WIN

Defection of Four Men Leaves Him One Short of Enough Republican Votes to Insure His Election.

WILL MR. FIRTH HELP?

Colby(Ackerman, Fake and Taylor Will Not Be Bound By Any Caucus to Vote for Dryden.

What little there is stirring today on the Senatorship has chiefly to do with the opposition to Senator Dryden. The fact that Senator Ackerman, of Union, and Assemblyman Taylor, of Ocean, have declared that under no circumstances will they support the present Senator or go into a caucus on the Senatorship, if it is to be binding, has furnished a mild sensation. There are now four Republicans who refuse to support Dryden or go into a caucus on the Senatorship which would carry a binding ballot. The fours are Senator Colby of Essex, Senator Ackerman, of Union; Assemblyman Fake, of Bergen, and Assemblyman Taylor, of Ocean. The positive defection of these men leaves Dryden one short of Republican votes enough to elect him. James Smith can now come to his friend's assistance and, it is said, have Fire cast the vote for Dryden that, it is alleged, he said he would like to cast when he thought he was going to be Speaker.

While a Republican at large, Senator Colby promises to maintain his independence, and should he join with the Democrats on any question that may require a two-thirds vote it would be interesting. Every Republican Senator will have to vote "aye" to pass a measure under such circumstances. Besides, Colby may not prove to be the only independent Republican in the Senate. Senator Ackerman, of Union, has developed decidedly independent views, and Freilinghuysen, of Somerset, and Wakelee, of Bergen, do not hesitate to express independent views and vote accordingly without regard to party ties.

It is generally taken for granted that the leadership of the House fight lie between Randolph Perkins, of Elton, last year's Assembly leader, and Alfred N. Barber, of Mercer, who was prominent in the debates of the last session.

Although the action of the Democratic leaders in nominating Joseph H. Firth, of Warren, for Speaker of the House, and then trying to push up the blunder by naming Edgar S. Lethbridge, of Essex, has hurt the party prospects, there are a number of sanguine people who think the Democrats can elect the next Governor. Already half a dozen boons have been launched for the nomination.

New Rural P. O. Delivery.

Ward has been received from Washington, D. C., which states that a third rural free delivery route is to be established from Somerville post office on Saturday, February 16, to serve 112 families and 504 persons. It will run from Somerville to North Branch by way of the poor farm, thence to the old Millstone, Lamington and so back to the county seat. Application has also been made for a route to cover the Frankfort and South Branch sections. If this is established it will be known as route number four.

$110,000 For Jesuits.

Milwaukee, Wis., Dec. 26.—Announcement was made yesterday of a gift of $110,000, which is to defray the expense of the construction and equipment of a new home for Marquette College, to be erected at Grand avenue and Eleventh street, the donors being Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Johnston, of this city, in conjunction with their son, the Rev. Robert Emory Johnston, S. J., of Florrissant, Mo. The trustees of the college have offered to change the name of Marquette to Johnston College, but the Johnstons prefer it should continue to bear the name of the famous missionary.

Beats on Ye Editor.

Several sensational stories have appeared in the New York papers during the past week concerning the Bound Brooks. While the stories were not without foundation they were written in such a manner as to throw discredit upon these communities. It is such kind of stories that do our towns a deal of harm and the writer of them, whoever he may be, should be suppressed.—Bound Brook Centre-Record.

Mr. and Mrs. John Emmons, of Jersey City, have returned home after a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Walter C. Dobbins, of West End avenue.

Rev. Dr. and Mrs. C. W. Pastos, of Park place, spent Christmas day with their daughter, Mrs. J. H. B. Conger, of Newark, at a family reunion.

JUDGE RUNYON HONORED BY SUNDAY-SCHOOL CLASS

YOUNG MEN OF HOPE CHAPEL TENDER HIM A RECEPTION.

Judge William N. Runyon's Sunday-school class at Hope chapel, composed of young men, tendered him a reception in the new primary room, Saturday night. A feature of the affair was an elaborate supper, covers being laid for twenty. At its conclusion Rev. L. R. Howard assumed charge of the proceedings and after making an address called on John H. Cose, Thomas M. Muir and James Penny for others. When Mr. Penny concluded speaking, in behalf of the class, he presented the judge with a handsome Morris chair as an expression of the esteem in which he is held by the members. The judge responded with a timely talk and a social time followed.

The affair was arranged by a committee from the class composed of Ben Evans, Wallace Morton and Charles Vincent.

No Xmas Joy for Him.

New York, Dec. 26.—Grieving because Christmas brought to him no joy, Willis B. Knowlton, fifty-seven years old, a wealthy bachelman, with neither friends nor relatives in this country, ended his life some time Christmas Eve by turning on the gas in his furnished room, at No. 102 Park avenue, Brooklyn. He was found dead in a chair yesterday noon by his employer, George H. Hart, a laundryman, of the same address.

Feigned Death to Save Life.

New York, Dec. 26.—Bringing their domestic troubles to a tragic end on Christmas eve, after he had vainly sought a reconciliation, John J. O'Rourke, a prosperous electrician, after firing two bullets into his wife's head and believing her dead, placed her on a couch and shot and killed himself in their home, at No. 76 Dennington avenue, Brooklyn Hills. Mrs. O'Rourke, who is twenty-five years old, ignorant that her husband had shot himself, for more than two hours feigned death, fearing that he might shoot again if she betrayed any signs of life, before she escaped from the house early yesterday morning. Policeman Roberts, a neighbor, who heard her outcry a few minutes later and found her half conscious in a doorway, had the woman removed to St. Mary's Hospital, Jamaica, where it was last night said that she would recover. Neither of the bullets that entered the woman's head penetrated the brain.

Monkey With a Jag.

New York, Dec. 26.—If other animals in the Central Park Zoo celebrated Christmas in the convivial manner than Jethro, one of the most valuable monkeys in the cage, "Bill" Snyder, keeper, is not aware of the fact. Jethro was hilariously intoxicated and he didn't care who knew it. In some way unknown to the attendants a flask of whiskey got into the case in which Jethro lives. Jethro saw it first and, seeing, came and conquered. Unscrewing the cap in human manner he quickly drained the last drop of its half pint of what did not make Milwaukee famous. Ten minutes later Jethro's fellow monkeys were treated to one of the most effective exhibitions of "roughhouse" that ever occurred in their cage. For Jethro cuts capers looked like the execution of a football tackle back formation. Snyder heard the noise and, hurrying to the scene of trouble soon put an end to it by having Jethro removed to a small cage by himself, he was left to sleep off what those who have descended from him vulgarly call a jag.

Rioting Negroes Entrenched.

Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 26.—A long distance telephone message from Scoobo, Miss., says that seven persons have been killed in a race clash in that vicinity. Railroad men who have just arrived from Scooba report a fresh clash between the races. Several are reported killed. This report, however, has not been confirmed. Under instructions of Governor Vardaman twenty-five members of the local military company boarded an engine and left at ten o'clock for Scooba. Additional troops will be sent on a special train if order can not be made ready. It was reported that a body of negroes had fortified themselves two miles from Wahalak and announced they will resist any effort to dislodge them.

Canned Exports Decrease.

Washington, D. C., Dec. —In a special report on the foreign trade in American meats the Bureau of Manufacturers shows a decided decrease in the volume of canned goods marketed abroad. The value of canned meats exported in the first nine months of 1906 was $5,397,137. These figures increased to $7,289,252 months of 1904 was $5,397,137, for the same period of 1905, but for the first nine months of 1906 the figures have shrunk to $4,532,749. Notably with the United Kingdom the loss was due to the prejudice aroused by the disclosure of bad packing house conditions here and by the exaggeration of these disclosures by the sensational press of England.

Dropped Off a Freight Train For a Drink at Watson's.

RAN INTO COP'S ARMS

Chance and the Need of a Warm Beacer Ends Escaped Prisoner's Stretch of Freedom.

Liberty was the price Lewis Milligan, alias "Sticks," who escaped from the city jail in August, paid for a drink of whiskey Saturday afternoon. He was recaptured as he left Michael Watson's saloon to where he had slipped from a freight train for a warming glass, by Patrolman Vanderweg.

Milligan escaped from the station house, where he was being held to await commitment to the Reformatory at Rahway, for breaking his parole. He had been placed in charge of the probation officer for holding up and robbing a boy at the freight station. He got out by reaching through the bars of his cell and taking the jail keys from the lock of the cell door, where they had been forgotten by an officer. He was hampered by a wooden leg, and managed to step out and away unobserved, by a back door, and kept himself successfully concealed in a nearby barn until the search for him had passed up along the trolley line toward Scotch Plains. An hour later he heard the slow freight approaching he slipped out and limped to the railroad at Church street. He boarded a slow train there and rode to Graceland, near Westfield, where he got aboard a westbound Reading fast freight. He made his way to Scranton.

He travelled up and down the road after that, but he cut Plainfield out of his stopping-off places. Saturday, he was on his way back from New York to Pennsylvania, with two pals, when he saw the police station, and with his companions went down to the saloon. That was at 5:30 o'clock.

Patrolman Martin Vanderweg, who lives in the neighborhood, was going by the saloon door in citizens' clothes when Milligan and his pals came out. The officer recognized "Sticks," and placed him under arrest. His companions took to their heels and escaped. Milligan used to fight policemen on occasion, but he has outgrown the need and he made no trouble for Vanderweg.

Judge Runyon committed him to the county jail this morning to await action by the Probation Officer, and he was taken to Elizabeth by Detective McCarthy. He wished Judge Runyon and Chief Kiely a merry Christmas as he went out.

Life Story Like Novel.

Philadelphia, Dec. 26.—Breaking the silence of years Mr. Elizabeth Miller, mother of Ida May Miller Kuehn, the "lost Philadelphia heiress," yesterday told for the first time a remarkable story of seventeen years' incarceration in an insane asylum, of inhumanities she suffered at the hands of her husband, of estate juggling, missing property and of an alleged conspiracy which has deprived her of approximately $100,000. She declares she was never out of her mind although she spent seventeen years in an asylum in Norristown, Pa. Her husband sent her there, she says, because he wanted to get her out of the way, and other persons interested in keeping her silent tried to keep her in the asylum after the death of her husband. Possessed of a fortune under the terms of her husband's will she has received only $200, she says, since his death, and has had to work and save to get along, receiving no aid from relatives. There is nothing about her to suggest insanity. On the contrary, she talks fluently and gives every evidence of a strong, alert mentality.

Baby Talks At Nine Months.

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 26.—Although she is but nine months old, Eugenie Barbara Jacques, of No. 5,189A Fairmont Avenue, is able to talk and talk plainly. Every word she says can be distinctly understood, and the child apparently exercises reason in using her words, as seldom are any of them ever used in the wrong place. Physicians who have examined the little darling say that her mental faculties are as well developed as a child of three years, and say that her talking is nothing short of marvellous.

Negro Troopers Terrorize.

Leavenworth, Kan., Dec. 26.—As the result of a riot on an electric car bound for Fort Leavenworth from this city Monday night, in which the instigators were members of a squadron of the Ninth Cavalry, negro troops, Private Cole, of Troop F, is in the fort guard house and a search is being made for a dozen of his companions. Colonel C. B. Hall, of the Eighteenth Infantry, asserts, however, that the fight was but a minor one, such as occurs on the streets cars very frequently. The city police and electric line officials report otherwise.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

Court Dunellen, I. O. F., has elected the following officers: Past chief ranger, Benjamin C. Carpenter; chief ranger, Magnus Johnson; recording secretary, Harry Bodwell; financial secretary, William Wyckoff; treasurer, John H. L. Peters; orator, William Guest; senior woodward, Henry Kirchner, Jr.; junior woodward, Percy Abbott; senior beadle, Louis L. Block; junior beadle, A. Gallagher; physician, Dr. P. W. Brakeley; court deputy, Lewis Schneider; trustees, Theodore W. Day, William Gallagher; auditors, J. Travis Suthpen, L. T. Titsworth.

The chairman of the light committee has received several complaints of "dead" lamps on the New Market road.

Joseph Winkler, of Newark, spent a part of the last week with his mother, Mrs. Rachel Winkler.

The organization of a borough improvement society is being talked of in some quarters.

The Presbyterian prayer meeting will be held tomorrow night, instead of tonight.

John Doud has purchased the cigar and tobacco business of W. R. Gulick.

Joseph Maier's liquor license for the Park Hotel has been renewed for a year.

The C. E. Kelly Co. is building a storage house. It will hold 300 tons of hay.

Gas service has been installed in Mrs. Flanders' store on North avenue.

Mrs. L. Bogue is planning to move to Jersey City for the winter.

Mrs. Rachel Fulton has returned from a visit to Turfville.

L. L. Block has decided to remain in his present store.

G. T. Schenck has had city water put in his store.

PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

Funeral services of Daniel Baker, who died at his home on Terrill road Sunday morning after a lingering illness, were held from Cole's undertaking parlors yesterday morning at 10 o'clock. Interment was made in the Plainfield avenue cemetery. The deceased was the last of the old time drivers and trappers in this section, following the occupation until a few years ago, when his advancing years compelled him to abandon the trail. Dan, as he was always called by the older residents, could always tell when there was a fox on the mountain side. He would trips with his dogs and gun made him familiar with every foot of mountain ground in this section and his services as a guide to the amateur sportsman was much sought after, and made his name well known as one of the oldtime characters of this section of the State. Since his retirement several years ago he has lived quietly at his home on Terrill road.

A family reunion was held yesterday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Clark, of Front street, all the children being present but the eldest board. Owing to the serious illness of Mr. Clark the reunion was observed in a quiet manner. Beside the immediate family, the children present were Mr. and Mrs. Cass Achenson, Mr. Mataweu; Mr. and Mrs. Peter Smith, of Lincoln; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Clawson, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick K. Clark and Mr. and Mrs. George A. Clark, of the Plains.

The Christmas exercises of the Methodist Sunday-school held Christmas Eve in the church, was one of the most beautiful and happiest of the school's Christmas celebrations. The church was filled with the members and their friends, who gathered to enjoy the event with them. A pleasing programme of recitations, carols and responsive reading was rendered, after which Santa Claus paid his annual visit and helped distribute the many presents for both young and old.

One thing the young people could enjoy yesterday was good skating, the zero weather of the past few days having covered the several lakes with a thick coating of ice for several inches thick. Many indulged in the sport notwithstanding the cold weather.

The Plains residents all looked happy yesterday and we take this as an indication that everyone had a merry Christmas, and it is the majority of cases received what they were looking for.

The Owl Club's dance Monday night in the Fanwood fire house was well attended and everyone had a good time, dancing being continued until a late hour.

Miss Marion Johnston, of Westfield avenue, has been visiting her cousin, Miss Ruth Johnston, of South avenue, Netherwood.

Mrs. Isaac Oliver, of Kearny, has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Robert Walpole, of Front street, over Christmas.

Miss Mary Westcott is around again after an illness of several weeks, which detained her at home.

PERSONAL.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Cottrell, of Central avenue, are entertaining relatives from out of town.

Miss Kearns, of East Fifth street, is spending the holidays at her former home in Baltimore.

Alvah Baird, of North Branch, who has been spending several days in town, has returned home.

James Ellis, one of the foremen for the Public Service Corporation, is ill at the hospital with typhoid fever.

Miss Alberta Waterbury, formerly a teacher in the North Plainfield High School, spent Christmas Day with friends here.

Miss Bessie Dunham, a student at the Normal School, Westfield, Mass., is spending the holidays at her home on Madison avenue.

Mrs. Erickson Perkins, of Rochester, is spending the holidays with her mother, Mrs. Stephen A. Clinan, of Watching avenue.

Otto and Frank Linke, Jr., of West Second street, are home from St. Laurent Academy, Montreal, Can., for the holiday season.

Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey Weightman, of Philadelphia, spent Christmas with Mrs. Weightman's mother, Mrs. Rowland Cox, of West Seventh street.

Miss Mabel Jenkins, formerly of this city, but now a teacher in the public school at Alleghany City, Pa., is visiting her mother on East Sixth street during the holidays.

Boardman Mosher, of Alfred, N. Y., and John P. Mosher, of Rochester, N. Y., are spending the holiday season with the latter's daughter, Mrs. George P. Homan, of Plainfield avenue.

RIPARIAN BOARD MAKES REPORT.

Governor Stokes has received from the State Board of Riparian commissioners its annual report for the year. The document shows that the amount of business done by the commission during the year is greater than for any in the past five years, with the exception of 1905; and in addition to the business done, conveyances, the prices for which have been accepted by applicants, to the amount of over a quarter of a million dollars, are held in abeyance pending the conclusion and report of the committee appointed by the Legislature to investigate the subject of disposing of the State's riparian lands.

The summary of cash receipts to the State and the sources of the income show that from grants $74,861.02 was received; from leases $32,532; from licenses $820; from conversions $84,738.30, and rentals on leases $29,676.96, making a total for the last fiscal year of $222,627.38.

During the year the board made 109 grants, 8 leases, 7 licenses and 19 conversions.

Somerset Bar Dinner.

The annual dinner of the Somerset County Bar Association was held Saturday at George Schenck's county hotel in Somerville. There were about fifty guests and an elaborate repast was served. Hon. Wm. V. Steele, who is president of the association, presided, and addresses were made by former Assemblyman Sam'l S. Swackhamer, of North Plainfield; Willard K. Wolbert, of New Brunswick, Vice Chancellor James J. Bergen, Judge Louis H. Schenck and former Congressman Alvah A. Clark, of Somerville.

CHRISTIAN FIELD.

The Christmas entertainment will be held at the Congregational church Friday night at 7:30 o'clock.

The Young People's Association meeting at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church will be omitted on Friday night.

Rev. Dr. and Mrs. J. S. Zelie will be "at home" at the parsonage, 813 Park avenue, New Year's Day afternoon from 4 to 7 o'clock.

The officers of the Faith chapel Sunday-school have arranged an elaborate programme for the annual Christmas entertainment Friday night.

Ike Richards, of Somerset street, buys second-hand clothing and pays highest prices.

If you contemplate building consult Titus H. Laury, of East Front street. He will give you a right estimate.

If M. F. Gano, of Park avenue, cannot please you with his large list of desirable real estate to buy, sell or exchange, no one can.

James Harper, of Manning avenue, is an expert plumber and he also promptly attends to all kinds of jobbing. His work is the best.

R. L. Cline, successor to C. H. Rugg & Co., coal dealers, sells the best Lehigh coal and keeps his coal well protected from the elements. When you buy of him you receive full satisfaction.

In Somerset Criminal Court.

In the Somerset County Courts on Saturday, Judge Dickson and Arthur Jones, charged with assault on George Coombs at Harlingen, were arraigned on allegation and pleaded guilty. Judge Schenck will sentence them next Friday. Andrew Beno, who had pleaded guilty to stealing a boat, the property of William H. Arkenburgh, at Raritan, was fined $10 and placed in charge of the Probation Officer for one year.

MANY WENT TO CHURCH

Holy Cross.

Three services were held at Holy Cross P. E. church yesterday. Communion was celebrated at 6 o'clock and at 8 o'clock a. m., and morning prayer and communion at 11 o'clock. Anthems marked the musical programme at the latter service. Rev. George A. Warner, the rector, preached on the simplicity of the Christmas religious idea. The church was prettily decorated with holly, evergreens and copings.

Grace P. E.

Beginning at 7 o'clock, Grace P. E. church observed Christmas with three morning services. Communion was celebrated at 7 and 8 o'clock, and morning prayer and communion at 10:30 o'clock. The congregations were large. The altar and sanctuary were strikingly decorated with holly, greens, poinsettia and white calla lilies.

Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson, the rector, preached on the power of the divine life. The musical programme at the main service was elaborate, Arthur Chamberlain, William Tallamy and Mrs. Theodore Mantz sang solo parts.

Jap Veterans in Honolulu.

Honolulu, T. H., Dec. 26.—Whatever may be the sentiment of the mainland relative to the existing Japanese war scare and the recommendation of the President that the Japanese be admitted to citizenship, the people of the Hawaiian Islands regard the present situation as exceedingly grave; and, furthermore, view with favor the proposed feature of Hawaii in event of the President's recommendation being enacted by Congress. Notwithstanding denials from Washington, the rumor still prevails here that two regiments of Japanese veterans, all officered from a colonel down, are in and about Honolulu, waiting the signal to take possession of this city. No outward evidence of such military organization is given, but the secret agents of the United States government have obtained details which served them to cable the information to Washington. The members of these regiments are working in various capacities in and about the city. A very significant fact has been observed about the character of the Japanese who have been coming to Honolulu lately from Japan. It has been noticed that the recent arrivals have been a hardier and better set up class of men than those who formerly have come here. Many have been seen wearing their war medals, and this display of war records has been especially noted by observers.

Thoroughgoing Burglars.

New York, Dec. 26.—Burglars stupefied the entire family of Matthew P. Murray at Freeport, L. I., with chloroform, early yesterday morning, and carried away about $3,000 worth of jewelry, silverware and clothing, besides eating a large Christmas cake that had been left on the dining room table. Before entering the house they cut the telephone wires on the outside. They then forced an entrance to get in through side windows by melting the glass, and finally cut the lock out of the front door, and went in that way. All told the loot must have made a bulky bundle, and it is suspected that it was carried away in an automobile, as no trains or trolley cars pass through Freeport within several hours of the time the burglary is supposed to have been committed.

Shovels Himself to Death.

New York, Dec. 26.—Down in the engine room of the Hotel Astor, several stories under ground, the men tried tests of strength yesterday afternoon. John Faulkner, forty years old, of No. 400 West Fortieth street, a coal passer, tried to break the record. He sent an incredible number of shovelfuls into the furnace in record time. Back weighed forty pounds and was shot across a wide space. But Faulkner did not last long. Accompanying one of the full body swings that sends forty pounds of coal across many feet of space, came a cry of distress. The man straightened up, and toppled over backward; Before Dr. Paulding, the hotel physician, got to the man he was dead. Heart disease was given as the cause of death.

Platt Will Resign.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 26.—Senator Thomas C. Platt, of New York, is serving his last year in Congress. It is known to his intimate friends that Mr. Platt plans to resign soon after the end of the present Congress on March 4, 1907, and some of these have been in mortal dread lest the fact should become generally known. It is possible the Senator will declare his intention not to resign, but his intention has been expressed several times and it has been communicated to President Roosevelt.

Her 102d Christmas.

New York, Dec. 26.—Enjoying the anniversary of her one hundred and second birthday, Mrs. Jane Eliza Hemmings, once a slave, smoked her pipe, the only recreation she can find in life at the almhouse. She is totally blind and partly deaf. The last twenty years she has been an inmate of the public institution in Flatbush and is the oldest person who had ever been in charge. Next to her in age is another negro patient one hundred years old.

The offering at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church on Sunday will be for Muhlenberg Hospital.

UNKNOWN DRUNK DROWNS HIMSELF IN ELIZABETH JAIL.

Puts His Head in a Pail of Water and Is Found Dead This Morning.

An unknown drunken man was picked up on the streets in Elizabeth, yesterday, and locked up at headquarters to sober up. Being in no condition to even tell his name, the police decided to wait until today to get his pedigree. When his cell was opened this morning, the officer in charge was shocked to find that the man was dead.

Investigation proved that the stranger had committed suicide and in a strange manner. During the night he had removed his coat, wrapped it about his head and stuck his head in a pail of water and thus drowned himself. A search was made through the man's clothes but nothing was discovered that would disclose his identity. The man was fairly well dressed, but showed signs of having been on a spree for several days.

Entombed Miner Saved.

Bakersville, Cal., Dec. 26.—Lindsay B. Hicks, the miner delivered late Saturday night from a thirty days' imprisonment in the wrecked tunnel of the Edison company, was able to tell the story of his experiences. Now that he has been brought back to earth, alive and but little the worse for his fearful entombment, he realizes fully the miraculous character of his escape and the self-sacrifice of the men who toiled day and night to snatch him back from what seemed certain death. Aside from its being a story of wonderful rescue and dramatic rescues on record, it affords an interesting study for the psychologist. Terribly tragic at times and suggesting the crying out of a soul against the tortures of the damned, Hicks yet found excuse for humor and jesting in the situation. It is well, says his physician, that he tried to cultivate this mental attitude as much as possible, else he might have become a raving maniac long before the rescuing party came within reach. Although his mental faculties are sound, Hicks seems like a man who has lapsed back to childhood, frightened at the dark, and looking out on the world with wondering eyes. His physician says it is a temporary depression growing out of the long strain and the utter joy of the victim over his deliverance.

Killed Wife for a Cent.

Chicago, Ill., Dec. 26.—Because his wife had only four cents when he demanded six cents, which would have been rich, a teamster, fifty-five years old, yesterday shot her to death and then committed suicide. The tragedy occurred in a bedroom adjoining a kitchen where two daughters of Mrs. Woodrich were sitting. The husband wanted a nickel to buy beer. Mrs. Woodrich searched the house and, finding only four cents, offered them to her husband. He struck the coins from her hand and after venting his rage verbally followed her into the bedroom and as she turned he turned the weapon upon himself.

Monument to Leo XIII.

Rome, Dec. 26.—The work of erecting a monument to Pope Leo XIII. inside the Church of St. John Lateran is proceeding rapidly. A large statue flanking the monument and representing Religion has already been placed in position. The monument will be ready at the end of January. Nothing, however, has been decided about the removal of the remains of Pope Leo, Pope Pius being desirous of avoiding disturbances similar to those attending the funeral of Pious IX., when the coffin bearing his body was almost thrown into the Tiber.

Indians to Organize Bank.

Hastings, Okla., Dec. 26.—A party of Chickasaw Indians from the vicinity of Durant passed through here on their way to the county site of Randlett. Col. Sol McLisk, who is reputed to be one of the wealthiest Indians of his nation, leads the party and explains their mission. They expect to organize a banking, trust and real estate company, with a capital stock of about half a million dollars. All the stockholders are to be Indians, and the business will be transacted by Indians. All the members of the party are well dressed and speak good English.

Saving Souls at 101.

Honolulu, Dec. 26.—A remarkable case of longevity was celebrated here on Christmas day, when "Mother" Parker, one of the first missionaries to these islands, became 101 years of age. Her mind is still very active and bright concerning her extreme age and her health is in some respects better than it was some years ago. She was born in Brandford, Conn., December 25, 1805, and came to these islands in 1823 with her husband. Both were missionaries. She has lived in Hawaii seventy-three years and been a missionary sixty-five years among the native Hawaiians.

—Mr. and Mrs. Albert Lederer, who were obliged to leave their apartment in the New Madison on account of the fire, are now living temporarily on West Ninth street. Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Swallow, who lost their household effects in the New Madison fire, are living for the present in Netherwood.

Mrs. Sarah Moore, of Orchard place, is convalescing from an attack of pneumonia.

Mrs. W. E. Smith entertained out of town friends at Christmas dinner.
